Cumprindo a comissão dada ao seu predecessor Elias, o profeta Eliseu foi a Damasco e disse a Hazael que este substituiria a Ben-Hadade II como rei da Síria. (1Rs 19:15; 2Rs 8:7-13) Antes da morte de Ben-Hadade, Damasco havia sido o ponto focal da resistência síria à expansão do Império Assírio, que estava determinado a dominar as terras às margens do Mediterrâneo. Como entroncamento vital na rota principal da Mesopotâmia para o Mediterrâneo, Damasco era o alvo principal. Encabeçando uma coalizão de reinos vizinhos, Damasco resistiu com algum êxito a uma série de ataques de Salmaneser III, da Assíria. Uma das inscrições de Salmaneser registra a tomada do trono sírio por Hazael. Depois dum grande confronto, Salmaneser encurralou Hazael em Damasco, sitiou a cidade, mas não conseguiu tomá-la.

Hazael, como rei de Damasco, continuou uma política de agressão contra Israel. (2Rs 10:32) Estendendo o poder damasceno até a cidade filisteia de Gate, invadiu até mesmo Judá, intimidando o Rei Jeoás (898-859 AEC), de modo que o rei de Judá pagou um enorme tributo para poupar Jerusalém dum ataque sírio. (2Rs 12:17, 18; 13:3, 22; 2Cr 24:23, 24) Sob o sucessor de Hazael, Ben-Hadade III, aliviou-se o jugo de Damasco sobre o território de Israel quando Jeoás, de Israel (c. 859-845 AEC) infligiu três derrotas à Síria. (2Rs 13:24, 25) Daí, Jeroboão II, de Israel (c. 844-804 AEC), penetrou bem fundo na Síria, até "a entrada de Hamate" e "restaurou Damasco e Hamate a Judá, em Israel". (2Rs 14:23-28) Entende-se, em geral, que isto significa que fez destes reinos tributários, similar à condição deles sob Salomão. — 1Rs 4:21.

Julgamentos de Jeová contra Damasco. Todavia, um século mais tarde, Damasco aparece novamente na condição de "a cabeça da Síria". (Is 7:8) Durante o reinado do Rei Acaz, de Judá (761-746 AEC), Rezim, de Damasco, coligado com Peca, de Israel, irrompeu através de Judá até Elate, no golfo de ʽAqaba. Isto amedrontou tanto o Rei Acaz, que ele enviou um suborno a Tiglate-Pileser III, da Assíria, pedindo-lhe que desviasse de Judá a pressão síria. Com presteza, o assírio atacou Damasco, capturou-a, matou Rezim e exilou muitos dos damascenos. (2Rs 16:5-9; 2Cr 28:5, 16) Assim se cumpriram as profecias de Jeová dadas por meio de Isaías e de Amós (Is 8:4; 10:5, 8, 9; Am 1:3-5), todavia, Acaz, indo a Damasco para se encontrar com Tiglate-Pileser (e provavelmente prestar-lhe homenagem), insensatamente mandou fazer uma cópia do altar damasceno destinado à adoração falsa, que viu ali, e mais tarde sacrificou sobre ele aos "deuses de Damasco". — 2Rs 16:10-13; 2Cr 28:23.

Depois disso, Damasco nunca mais foi uma ameaça para Israel. Embora militarmente fraca, a cidade parece que recobrou sua força comercial, conforme indicado pela profecia de Ezequiel. (Ez 27:18) Mas Damasco, outrora tão altamente louvada, também estava destinada a sofrer aflição, conforme predito por Jeremias, em resultado da má notícia vinda de Hamate e Arpade, na Síria setentrional, notícia provavelmente relacionada com a conquista cruel dos reinos arameus pelo avanço dos exércitos babilônicos de Nabucodonosor. (Je 49:23-27) Damasco, a joia do deserto, não escaparia dos efeitos desta conquista. Ainda mais tarde, Damasco é incluída na pronúncia adversa feita por meio do profeta de Jeová, Zacarias, cuja profecia foi escrita em 518 AEC. Esta profecia provavelmente teve seu cumprimento no tempo de Alexandre, o Grande, que ocupou a Síria e a Fenícia após a sua vitória na batalha de Isso, em 333 AEC. — Za 9:1-4.

Durante o período selêucida, Damasco foi substituída por Antioquia como capital provincial síria. O Rei Aretas III, do reino nabateu árabe, capturou a cidade em 85 AEC. Roma conquistou toda a Síria em 64-63 AEC, e Damasco continuou como cidade romana até 33 EC. Foi alistada por Plínio (historiador romano do primeiro século EC) como uma das dez cidades originais de Decápolis.

No primeiro século EC. Quando Saulo de Tarso rumou para Damasco, na sua campanha de perseguir os cristãos, a cidade tinha diversas sinagogas judaicas. (At 9:1, 2) Evidentemente, fazia então parte do domínio do rei nabateu Aretas IV e era regida por um governador designado. (2Co 11:32, 33) Após a sua conversão, o cegado Saulo foi conduzido a uma casa na rua chamada Direita. (Veja DIREITA.) Paulo (Saulo) pregou por algum tempo nas sinagogas de Damasco, mas uma trama para assassiná-lo tornou necessário que fugisse de noite por uma abertura na muralha da cidade. — At 9:11, 17-25; 26:20; Gál 1:16, 17.

DANÁ. Cidade situada na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:49) Sua localização exata é hoje desconhecida.

DANÇA. Execução rítmica de movimentos do corpo, em geral acompanhada por música, variando desde um ritmo lento até um frenesi violento. A dança é uma expressão exterior das emoções e atitudes da pessoa, muitas vezes as de alegria e êxtase, e raras vezes de ódio e de vingança (conforme exibido nas danças de guerra). As emoções e os sentimentos expressos na dança são realçados por trajes apropriadamente coloridos ou por acessórios simbólicos.

A arte da dança é de origem muito antiga, e desde os tempos mais primitivos tem sido usada por quase todas as raças como meio de expressão emocional, especialmente na adoração. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas ocorrem diversas expressões traduzidas por "dançar", "dança de rodas", "dançar em rodas" e 'saltitar'. O verbo hebraico hhul, que basicamente significa "rodopiar; girar", também é traduzido por "dançar". (Jz 21:21; veja Je 30:23; La 4:6.) Dois substantivos que significam "dança; dança de rodas", derivam deste verbo, a saber, ma·hhól (Je 31:4; Sal 150:4) e mehho·láh. — Cân 6:13; Jz 21:21.

Danças de Vitória e de Festa. Dançarinos expressaram seu sincero louvor e agradecimento a Jeová depois que Israel presenciou a demonstração inspiradora de fé do poder de Jeová, ao destruir os egípcios. Assim, enquanto os homens se juntavam a Moisés num cântico de vitória, Miriã liderava as mulheres em danças ao acompanhamento de pandeiros. (Êx 15:1, 20, 21) Outra dança de vitória motivada por profundos sentimentos religiosos foi a da filha de Jefté, que saiu para se juntar ao pai em louvar a Jeová, por este ter entregue os amonitas na mão dele. (Jz 11:34) As mulheres de Israel, dançando ao som de alaúdes e de pandeiros, aclamaram a volta de Saul e Davi após a vitória de Jeová sobre os filisteus. (1Sa 18:6, 7; 21:11; 29:5) A dança fazia parte de certas festividades anuais relacionadas com a adoração de Jeová. (Jz 21:19-21, 23) Os Salmos também endossam a dança como meio de honrar e louvar a Jeová. "Louvai a Jah! . . . Louvem eles seu nome com danças. Entoem-lhe melodias com o pandeiro e com a harpa." "Louvai-o com o pandeiro e com a dança de rodas." — Sal 149:1, 3; 150:4.

Foi uma grandiosa ocasião quando a Arca do Pacto finalmente chegou a Jerusalém, especialmente para o Rei Davi, que deu vazão às suas emoções numa bem vigorosa dança. "E Davi estava dançando diante de Jeová, com todo o seu poder, . . . pulando e dançando diante de Jeová." (2Sa 6:14-17) Na passagem paralela, Davi é descrito como "saltitando". — 1Cr 15:29.

A dança tinha também significado religioso entre o povo das nações pagãs. As procissões na antiga Babilônia e em outras nações usualmente eram de natureza religiosa, e muitas vezes realizavam-se danças de cortejo como parte do acontecimento. As danças na Grécia usualmente encenavam alguma lenda relacionada com os seus deuses, os quais também eram representados dançando. Danças de fertilidade destinavam-se a estimular as paixões sexuais tanto dos participantes como dos espectadores. Os cananeus realizavam danças de roda ao redor dos seus ídolos e postes sagrados honrando as forças de fertilidade da natureza. A adoração de Baal estava associada com danças frenéticas, desenfreadas. No tempo de Elias houve tal demonstração por parte dos sacerdotes de Baal, os quais, no decorrer da dança demoníaca, cortaram-se com facas, ao passo que continuaram "a mancar em volta" do altar. (1Rs 18:26-29) Outras traduções dizem que "rodeavam manquejando" (VB),

"dançavam dobrando o joelho" (BJ; BV), "dançavam com genuflexões" (BMD). Quando os israelitas fizeram o bezerro de ouro, eles também se entregaram a uma forma de dança pagã diante do ídolo, merecendo assim a condenação de Jeová. — Êx 32:6, 17-19.

Outras Menções Bíblicas de Dança. Em Israel dançava-se na maior parte em grupo, especialmente as mulheres. Quando homens participavam da dança, faziam isso em grupos separados; pelo visto, os sexos não se misturavam nas danças. As danças eram feitas tanto em cortejo como em roda (Jz 21:21; 2Sa 6:14-16), mas esses tipos de dança não as tornavam parecidas às danças de cortejo ou de roda dos pagãos. Os motivos e objetivos das próprias danças, a finalidade anunciada das danças, os movimentos dos corpos dançantes e as ideias transmitidas por eles aos espectadores são as coisas importantes a considerar e a comparar para se determinar semelhanças nos modelos de dança.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra or·khé·o·mai é traduzida por "dançar". De acordo com W. E. Vine, "é provável que originalmente significasse levantar, como que os pés; daí, pular com movimento regular". (An Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words [Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Novo Testamento], 1962, Vol. 1, p. 266) Herodes agradou-se tanto da dança de Salomé na festa de aniversário natalício dele, que lhe concedeu o pedido e mandou decapitar João, o Batizador. (Mt 14:6-11; Mr 6:21-28; veja SALOMÉ N.º 2.) Jesus Cristo comparou a sua geração às criancinhas que ele observava brincar e dançar na feira. (Mt 11:16-19; Lu 7:31-35) Na ilustração de Jesus a respeito do filho pródigo, porém, usa-se uma palavra grega diferente, kho·rós, da qual deriva a palavra portuguesa "coro", no sentido de um conjunto de dançarinos. Esta palavra grega tem referência a um grupo de dançarinos, evidentemente a um conjunto de dançarinos contratado como diversão para tal ocasião festiva. — Lu 15:25.

DANIEL

[Meu Juiz É Deus].

1. Segundo filho de Davi, que lhe nasceu em Hébron de Abigail. (1Cr 3:1) É chamado Quileabe em 2 Samuel 3:3. Em vista do assassínio do primogênito, Amnom, ele podia pensar em ser candidato ao reinado após Davi, mas não se faz nenhuma menção duma usurpação, sugerindo que ele respeitava a designação de Salomão por Deus, ou então que faleceu antes de seu pai.

2. Destacado profeta de Jeová, da tribo de Judá. Escritor do livro que leva seu nome. Muito pouco se sabe sobre os primeiros anos da sua vida, mas ele conta que foi levado para Babilônia, provavelmente como príncipe adolescente, junto com outros de descendência real e os nobres. (Da 1:3-6) Isto ocorreu no terceiro ano de Jeoiaquim (como rei tributário de Babilônia), ano que começou na primavera de 618 AEC. (Da 1:1) Após a morte inglória de Jeoiaquim, Joaquim, seu filho, governou por alguns meses antes de se render. Logo cedo em 617 AEC, Joaquim e outros dos "principais homens", bem como o jovem Daniel (2Rs 24:15), foram levados ao cativeiro por Nabucodonosor.

Sob Domínio Babilônico. Ao passo que muitos dos exilados foram estabelecidos junto ao rio Quebar, fora da cidade de Babilônia, Daniel e seus três companheiros foram escolhidos para receber treinamento especial na escrita e na língua dos caldeus, a fim de prepará-los para serviço governamental. Segundo o costume, receberam nomes babilônicos, sendo Beltessazar o de Daniel, em harmonia com o nome do deus de Nabucodonosor. (Da 1:7; 4:8; veja BELTESSAZAR.) Não querendo poluir-se com os alimentos aquinhoados, que poderiam incluir alguns proibidos pela Lei mosaica ou estar aviltados por ritos pagãos, ele pediu que a alimentação deles fosse limitada a legumes e água. Jeová Deus deu-lhes "conhecimento e perspicácia em toda a escrita e sabedoria; e o próprio Daniel tinha entendimento de toda sorte de visões e sonhos". (Da 1:17) Quando examinados pelo rei, ao fim de três anos, achou-se que eles eram "dez vezes melhores do que todos os sacerdotes-magos e os conjuradores que havia em todo o seu domínio real". — Da 1:20.

Daniel continuou no serviço da corte até a queda de Babilônia. Em Daniel, capítulo 1, versículo 19, declara-se que seus três companheiros também "continuaram de pé perante o rei" (de Babilônia). Não se declara se chegaram a ocupar este cargo até a queda de Babilônia, mas Daniel o fez; e depois ele ficou na corte persa até pelo menos o terceiro ano de Ciro. — Da 10:1.

Os sonhos de Nabucodonosor. No segundo ano de Nabucodonosor (provavelmente contado a partir da derrubada de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC), ele teve um sonho que 'agitou o seu espírito'. Visto que todos os sábios eram incapazes de revelá-lo, Daniel apresentou-se ao rei e não somente lhe contou o sonho, por revelação divina, mas também o interpretou, assim salvando da execução a si mesmo e os outros sábios. Isto induziu Nabucodonosor a fazer de Daniel "governante de todo o distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia e prefeito supremo sobre todos os sábios de Babilônia". (Da 2:48) Seus três companheiros receberam altos cargos fora da corte, ao passo que Daniel serviu na corte do rei.

Não se sabe ao certo por que Daniel não estava também envolvido na questão da integridade com que se confrontaram seus companheiros, Sadraque, Mesaque e Abednego, quando mandados adorar a imagem de ouro erigida na planície de Dura. (Da 3) A Bíblia não comenta este assunto. O proceder anterior de Daniel, bem como sua posterior lealdade a Deus, mesmo sob risco de vida, conforme descrita no capítulo 6, dão plena certeza de que, se é que esteve presente, e em quaisquer circunstâncias, Daniel não transigiu por se curvar diante da imagem. Também, a Palavra de Jeová expressa Sua aprovação de Daniel como alguém plenamente devotado, alistando-o ao lado de Noé e de Jó. — Ez 14:14, 20; Mt 24:15; He 11:32, 33.

Mais tarde, Daniel interpretou o sonho de Nabucodonosor a respeito da imensa árvore que foi cortada e que depois se permitiu que brotasse de novo, como representando o próprio grande monarca babilônico (no primeiro cumprimento desta profecia). (Da 4:20-22) Nabucodonosor ficaria demente por sete anos e depois recuperaria a sua sanidade e seu reino. Nabucodonosor confirmou o cumprimento nele mesmo do sonho divinamente enviado, porque achou próprio divulgar a ocorrência em todo o seu domínio. — Da 4:1, 2.

Visões. Durante o primeiro e o terceiro ano de Belsazar, Daniel recebeu duas visões (Da caps. 7, 8), nas quais diversos animais representavam potências mundiais sucessivas, levando ao tempo em que estas seriam forçosamente dissolvidas e em que o domínio celestial seria dado a "alguém semelhante a um filho de homem". (Da 7:11-14) Não há certeza sobre se Daniel realmente estava em Susã quando recebeu a visão registrada no capítulo 8, ou se ele viu a si mesmo ali em visão. Parece que por muitos anos após a morte de Nabucodonosor Daniel foi pouco usado, se é que foi, como conselheiro, de modo que a rainha (provavelmente a rainha-mãe) achou necessário trazê-lo à atenção de Belsazar quando nenhum dos sábios foi capaz de interpretar a ominosa escrita à mão na parede do palácio, por ocasião da festa ruidosa e blasfema de Belsazar. Conforme prometido, 'proclamaram a respeito de Daniel que ele se tornaria o terceiro governante no reino', sendo Nabonido o primeiro e seu filho, Belsazar, o segundo governante. Naquela mesma noite, a cidade caiu diante dos medos e dos persas, e Belsazar foi morto. — Da 5:1, 10-31.

Sob Domínio Medo-Persa. Durante o reinado de Dario, o Medo, Daniel era um dos três altos funcionários designados sobre os 120 sátrapas que governavam o reino. Sobressaindo extraordinariamente no serviço governamental por causa do favor divino, Daniel estava prestes a ser promovido sobre todo o reino, quando a inveja e o ciúme induziram os outros funcionários a tramar a sua execução. A lei que induziram o rei a decretar tinha de envolver a adoração de Deus por Daniel, visto que não podiam achar outra falta nele. O rei agiu com relutância na execução da lei, a qual, segundo o costume, não podia ser alterada, no entanto, lançou Daniel na cova dos leões. Por causa da firme integridade e fé de Daniel, Jeová enviou Seu anjo para libertá-lo da boca dos leões. Dario executou então justiça nos conspiradores, mandando que fossem destruídos pelos mesmos leões. — Da 6.

No primeiro ano de Dario, Daniel discerniu a aproximação do fim dos 70 anos de desolação de Jerusalém, de acordo com os escritos de Jeremias. (Je 25:11, 12) Daniel admitiu humildemente os pecados do seu povo e orou para que Jeová fizesse Sua face brilhar sobre o santuário desolado em Jerusalém. (Da 9:1, 2, 17) Ele foi favorecido com uma revelação por meio de Gabriel, que lhe deu a profecia das 70 semanas, indicando com precisão o ano da chegada do Messias. Daniel teve a felicidade de viver para ver o retorno dos judeus sob Zorobabel, em 537 AEC, mas não se declara que os tenha acompanhado. No terceiro ano de Ciro (536 AEC), Daniel recebeu uma visão dum anjo, o qual, na sua missão de visitar Daniel, tivera de lutar com o príncipe da Pérsia. O anjo passou a revelar o que havia de 'sobrevir ao povo de Daniel na parte final dos dias, porque era uma visão ainda para dias vindouros'. (Da 10:14) Começando com os reis da Pérsia, ele registrou história com antecedência. A profecia revelava que o cenário mundial passaria a ser dominado por duas principais potências políticas, opostas, chamadas de "o rei do norte" e "o rei do sul", situação que prevaleceria até Miguel pôr-se de pé, a que se seguiria um tempo de grande aflição. — Da caps. 11, 12.

É possível que Daniel não vivesse ainda muito tempo depois do terceiro ano de Ciro. Se ele era adolescente quando foi levado a Babilônia, em 617 AEC, então tinha quase 100 anos de idade quando recebeu a visão registrada nos capítulos 10 a 12. A declaração do anjo a Daniel: "Quanto a ti mesmo, vai para o fim; e descansarás, porém, no fim dos dias erguer-te-ás para receber a tua sorte", parece indicar que sua vida estava chegando ao fim, tendo ele a certeza de ser ressuscitado. — Da 12:13.

Daniel Como Escritor. Daniel é mencionado por Cristo (Mt 24:15) e se alude a ele em Hebreus 11:33. Os críticos não podem argumentar com êxito que um ou mais escritores posteriores, do tempo dos macabeus, tiveram algo que ver com a escrita de todo ou de partes do livro canônico de Daniel. Entretanto, três adições chamadas de "Cântico dos Três Jovens", "Susana e os Anciãos" e "A Destruição de Bel e do Dragão" são apócrifos e foram escritos posteriormente. Estes e outros escritos que afirmam ter Daniel por escritor, ou que apresentam extraordinárias façanhas ou ensinos dele, são mais do domínio das fábulas, girando em torno da grande fama de Daniel, e não são dignos de confiança. — Veja APÓCRIFOS; também DANIEL, LIVRO DE.

3. Sacerdote da casa levítica de Itamar, que acompanhou Esdras a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC. (Esd 8:2) Possivelmente é o mesmo sacerdote, ou seu descendente, que assinou o contrato de confissão durante a governadoria de Neemias (Ne 10:6), mas não era o próprio profeta Daniel, que era da tribo de Judá. — Da 1:6.

DANIEL, LIVRO DE. Livro profético colocado nas Bíblias em português entre os profetas maiores, logo depois de Ezequiel. Esta é a ordem seguida na Septuaginta grega e na Vulgata latina. No cânon hebraico, Daniel está entre os "Escritos" ou "Hagiógrafos".

Escritor. Que Daniel foi o escritor é evidenciado pelo próprio livro. Este relata: "No primeiro ano de Belsazar, rei de Babilônia, o próprio Daniel teve um sonho e visões da sua cabeça, sobre a sua cama. Naquele tempo ele anotou o próprio sonho. Fez o relato completo dos assuntos." (Da 7:1) Ser ele o escritor é também evidente de os capítulos 7 a 12 terem sido escritos na primeira pessoa.

Os capítulos 1 a 6 são escritos na terceira pessoa, mas isso não argumenta contra terem sido escritos por Daniel. Ele assumiu a posição de observador que relatava o que acontecia a ele e a outros. Outro escritor bíblico, Jeremias, faz isso frequentemente. (Veja Je 20:1-6; 21:1-3; e caps. 26, 36.) Também Jeremias escreve na primeira pessoa. — Je 1, 13, 15, 18; veja DANIEL N.º 2.

Cenário e Tempo da Escrita. O cenário do livro é Babilônia, com uma das visões ocorrendo em Susã, junto ao rio Ulai. Não está claro se Daniel estava mesmo em Susã ou se estava ali de modo visionário. A escrita foi completada por volta de 536 AEC, e o livro abrange o período de 618 a cerca de 536 AEC. — Da 8:1, 2.

Autenticidade. Alguns críticos questionam a autenticidade de Daniel, adotando a posição de um filósofo pagão e inimigo do cristianismo, do terceiro século, Porfírio, que afirmava que o livro de Daniel foi forjado por um judeu palestino do tempo de Antíoco Epifânio. Este forjador, teorizava ele, tomou eventos passados e os fez parecer profecias. A genuinidade do livro de Daniel, porém, nunca foi seriamente questionada, desde aquele tempo até o princípio do século 18. A aceitação do próprio Jesus Cristo da profecia de Daniel é evidência ainda mais significativa da autenticidade do livro. — Mt 24:15; Da 11:31.

Historicidade. Diversos manuscritos de partes do livro de Daniel foram encontrados nas cavernas do Mar Morto. O manuscrito mais antigo data da primeira metade do primeiro século AEC; o livro de Daniel era uma parte aceita das Escrituras naquele tempo e era tão bem conhecido aos judeus, que já se haviam feito muitas cópias dele. Que era reconhecido como livro canônico daquele tempo é apoiado pelo escritor do livro apócrifo, mas histórico, de Primeiro Macabeus (2:59, 60), que faz referência ao livramento de Daniel da cova dos leões, e àquele dos três hebreus da fornalha ardente.

Dispomos também do testemunho do historiador judeu Josefo, que declara que as profecias de Daniel foram mostradas a Alexandre, o Grande, quando entrou em Jerusalém. Isto ocorreu por volta de 332 AEC, mais de 150 anos antes do período macabeu. Josefo diz a respeito deste evento: "Quando lhe foi mostrado o livro de Daniel, onde Daniel declarava que um dos gregos destruiria o império dos persas, ele supôs ser ele próprio a pessoa indicada." (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XI, 337 [viii, 5]) A história relata também que Alexandre concedeu grandes favores aos judeus, e crê-se que isto se deu por causa do que Daniel disse sobre ele na profecia.

Língua. Daniel 1:1–2:4a e 8:1–12:13 foram escritos em hebraico, ao passo que Daniel 2:4b–7:28 foi escrito em aramaico. A respeito do vocabulário usado na parte aramaica de Daniel, The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional; Vol. 1, p. 860) diz: "Examinando-se o vocabulário aramaico de Daniel, podem-se atestar logo nove décimos dele à base de inscrições semíticas ocidentais, ou de papiros do 5.º séc. A.C., ou anteriores. As palavras remanescentes foram encontradas em fontes tais como o aramaico nabateu ou palmireno, que são posteriores ao 5.º séc. A.C. Embora seja pelo menos teoricamente possível que este pequeno restante do vocabulário se tenha originado repentinamente após o 5.º séc. A.C., pode-se igualmente argumentar a favor desde uma forma escrita do 5.º século A.C. até uma anterior forma oral. A explanação bem mais provável, porém, é que o décimo faltante não representa nada mais sério do que uma lacuna no nosso conhecimento atual da situação linguística, que podemos confiantemente esperar ser preenchida no decorrer do tempo." — Editada por G. Bromiley, 1979.

Há algumas palavras chamadas persas em Daniel, mas, em vista dos frequentes contatos dos judeus com babilônios, medos, persas e outros, isto não é incomum. Além disso, a maioria dos nomes estrangeiros usados por Daniel são nomes de altos funcionários, artigos de vestimenta, termos jurídi-

DESTAQUES DE DANIEL

Profecias sobre a ascensão e a queda de governos humanos, desde a antiga Babilônia até que o Reino de Deus esmague a todos eles e assuma o governo do mundo.

Escrito por Daniel, que estava em Babilônia a partir de 617 AEC, até depois que os exilados judeus retornaram a Jerusalém, em 537 AEC.

Daniel e três companheiros dele, exilados em Babilônia, demonstram integridade para com Jeová.

Enquanto são preparados para servir na corte de Nabucodonosor, abstêm-se do vinho e das iguarias dele; Deus os favorece com conhecimento e perspicácia. (1:1-21)

Sadraque, Mesaque e Abednego negam-se a participar na adoração da gigantesca imagem de Nabucodonosor; dizem firmemente ao rei irado que não adorarão os deuses dele; ele manda que sejam amarrados e lançados na fornalha superaquecida; anjo liberta-os ilesos. (3:1-30)

Altos funcionários ciumentos tramam contra Daniel; apesar de um interdito proibi-lo, este continua a orar ao seu Deus e não procura esconder isso; ele é lançado na cova dos leões; anjo liberta-o ileso. (6:1-28)

Sonhos e visões proféticos apontam para o Reino de Deus nas mãos do Seu Messias.

Uma imensa estátua é esmagada por uma pedra cortada, sem mãos, dum monte; a estátua retrata a sucessão de potências mundiais começando com Babilônia e terminando com todas elas serem esmiuçadas e substituídas pelo Reino de Deus. (2:1-49)

Uma enorme árvore é cortada e enfaixada por sete tempos; cumpre-se inicialmente quando o rei fica demente e vive como animal, por sete anos, até que reconhece que o Altíssimo é Governante no reino da humanidade, e que Ele dá o domínio a quem quiser. (4:1-37)

Uma escrita à mão aparece na parede quando Belsazar usa vasos do templo de Jeová para brindar seus deuses ídolos; Daniel é chamado, censura destemidamente o rei, explica a escrita, dizendo-lhe que o reino dele foi entregue aos medos e aos persas. (5:1-31)

A marcha das potências mundiais é retratada por leão, urso, leopardo, animal atemorizante com dez chifres, e por um chifre pequeno saindo da cabeça deste último animal; daí, o Antigo de Dias dá o domínio sobre todos os povos a alguém semelhante a um filho de homem. (7:1-28)

Carneiro, bode e chifre pequeno representam potências mundiais que sucedem a Babilônia; chifre pequeno desafia o Príncipe do exército dos céus, depois é quebrado sem mão. (8:1-27)

Setenta semanas (de anos); depois de 7 + 62 semanas, o Messias há de aparecer e depois ser decepado; pacto (abraâmico) a ser mantido em vigor, por uma semana, exclusivamente para com os judeus. (9:1-27)

Luta entre o rei do norte e o rei do sul, Miguel põe-se de pé como libertador, e eventos que se seguem. (10:1–12:13) cos e coisas assim, para os quais o hebraico ou o aramaico daquele tempo evidentemente não tinham adequados termos correspondentes. Daniel escreveu para os do seu povo, que se encontravam na maior parte em Babilônia, e muitos deles estavam na época espalhados em outros lugares. Portanto, escreveu numa linguagem entendida por eles.

Doutrinal. Alguns críticos objetam a que Daniel aluda à ressurreição. (Da 12:13) Eles presumem que se trata duma doutrina desenvolvida mais tarde, ou adotada duma crença pagã, mas a referência em Daniel está de acordo com o restante das Escrituras Hebraicas, que contêm declarações de crença na ressurreição. (Jó 14:13, 15; Sal 16:10) Houve também casos reais de ressurreição. (1Rs 17:21, 22; 2Rs 4:22-37; 13:20, 21) E em nada menos do que a autoridade do apóstolo Paulo temos a declaração de que Abraão tinha fé na ressurreição dos mortos (He 11:17-19) e que também outros servos fiéis de Deus, da antiguidade, aguardavam a ressurreição. (He 11:13, 35-40; Ro 4:16, 17) O próprio Jesus disse: "Mas, que os mortos são levantados, até mesmo Moisés expôs, no relato sobre o espinheiro, quando ele chama Jeová de 'o Deus de Abraão, e o Deus de Isaque, e o Deus de Jacó'." — Lu 20:37.

Aqueles que afirmam que o livro realmente não é profético, mas foi escrito depois da ocorrência dos eventos, teriam de avançar o tempo da escrita para depois dos dias do ministério de Jesus na Terra, porque o nono capítulo admitidamente contém uma profecia a respeito do aparecimento e do sacrifício do Messias. (Da 9:25-27) Também, a profecia prossegue e relata a história dos reinos que estariam governando até o "tempo do fim", quando seriam destruídos pelo Reino de Deus nas mãos do Seu Messias. — Da 7:9-14, 25-27; 2:44; 11:35, 40.

Valor do Livro. Daniel é notável no seu registro de períodos proféticos: As 69 semanas (de anos) desde o decreto da reconstrução de Jerusalém até a vinda do Messias; os eventos a ocorrer dentro da 70.ª semana, e a destruição de Jerusalém logo depois (Da 9:24-27); os "sete tempos", que Jesus chamou de "os tempos designados das nações" e indicou que ainda vigoravam no tempo em que ele estava na Terra, os quais terminariam num tempo muito posterior (Da 4:25; Lu 21:24); os períodos de 1.290, 1.335 e 2.300 dias; e "um tempo designado, tempos designados e uma metade". Todas estas profecias a respeito de tempos são vitais para o entendimento dos tratos de Deus com o seu povo. — Da 12:7, 11, 12; 8:14; veja SETENTA SEMANAS; TEMPOS DESIGNADOS DAS NAÇÕES.

Daniel fornece-nos também pormenores sobre a ascensão e a queda de potências mundiais, desde o tempo da antiga Babilônia até o tempo em que o Reino de Deus as esmagará, eliminando-as para sempre. A profecia chama atenção para o Reino de Deus, nas mãos do Seu Rei designado e dos "santos" associados deste, como o governo que durará para sempre, para a bênção de todos os que servem a Deus. — Da 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27.

A interpretação inspirada do anjo a respeito da profecia referente a animais representando potências mundiais (Da 7:3-7, 17, 23; 8:20, 21) é de grande ajuda para o entendimento dos simbolismos das feras em Revelação (Apocalipse). — Re 13:1-18; veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

O registro de Daniel sobre a libertação dos seus três companheiros da fornalha ardente, por se negarem a se curvar diante da grande imagem de ouro, erigida por Nabucodonosor (Da 3), é um relato sobre o estabelecimento legal do direito dos adoradores de Jeová, de dar devoção exclusiva a Ele, no domínio da primeira potência mundial durante os "tempos dos gentios". Ajuda também os cristãos a discernir que sua sujeição às autoridades superiores, conforme mencionada em Romanos 13:1, é relativa, o que está também em harmonia com a atuação dos apóstolos em Atos 4:19, 20, e 5:29. Fortalece os cristãos na sua posição de neutralidade com respeito aos assuntos das nações, revelando que sua neutralidade pode causar-lhes dificuldades, mas, quer Deus os liberte naquela ocasião, quer mesmo permita que sejam mortos por causa da sua integridade, a posição dos cristãos é que adorarão e servirão apenas a Jeová Deus. — Da 3:16-18.

DANITAS. Veja DÃ N.º 2.

DARA, DARDA. Descendente de Judá por meio de Zerá (1Cr 2:4, 6); sua sabedoria, embora grande, não era igual à de Salomão. — 1Rs 4:31; veja MAOL.

DAR À LUZ FILHOS. Privilégio concedido pelo Criador exclusivamente às mulheres, para o que ele as projetou e dotou de modo especial. O mandato edênico dado ao primeiro casal humano e mais tarde repetido aos sobreviventes do Dilúvio incluía conceber e dar à luz filhos. (Gên 1:28; 9:7) Todavia, por causa do pecado e da desobediência, Jeová disse a Eva, relacionado com dar à luz: "Aumentarei grandemente a dor da tua gravidez; em dores de parto darás à luz filhos." — Gên 3:16; veja DORES DE PARTO; NASCIMENTO.

A respeito de dar à luz e ser mãe, o apóstolo Paulo recomendou que as viúvas mais jovens, que talvez ficassem muito perturbadas se os seus instintos maternais não fossem satisfeitos, se casassem e tivessem filhos, em vez de passar seu tempo andando por aí como "tagarelas e intrometidas nos assuntos dos outros". (1Ti 5:11-15) A respeito das mulheres na congregação cristã, Paulo disse que ficarão "a salvo por dar à luz filhos, desde que continuem na fé, e no amor, e na santificação junto com bom juízo". — 1Ti 2:15.

DARCOM. Homem cujos descendentes estavam representados entre "os filhos dos servos de Salomão" que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:1, 2, 55, 56; Ne 7:6, 7, 57, 58.

DARDO. Veja ARMAS, ARMADURA.

DARICO. Moeda persa de ouro, que pesava 8,4 g, e assim com o valor atual de US$ 94,50. O anverso do darico cunhado durante dois séculos, a partir da última parte do sexto século AEC, retrata um rei ajoelhado em uma perna, com uma lança na mão direita e um arco na esquerda. O outro lado mostra a impressão oblonga feita quando a moeda foi cunhada. Em 1 Crônicas 29:7, uma das cifras da contribuição para o templo, durante o reinado de Davi, é declarada em termos de daricos, embora o darico persa fosse desconhecido no tempo de Davi. Evidentemente, o escritor de Crônicas converteu a cifra original em termos então atuais e conhecidos aos seus leitores. — Esd 8:27.

Darico de ouro.

DARIO. No registro bíblico, o nome é aplicado a três reis, um medo e os outros dois persas. Alguns acham possível que "Dario" talvez tivesse sido usado, pelo menos no caso de Dario, o medo, como título ou nome no trono, em vez de como nome pessoal.

1. Dario, o medo, sucessor no reino do rei caldeu Belsazar, após a conquista de Babilônia pelas forças de Ciro, o persa, época em que Dario tinha cerca de 62 anos de idade. (Da 5:30, 31) Ele é adicionalmente identificado como "filho de Assuero, da descendência dos medos". — Da 9:1.

Na sua qualidade administrativa, Dario designou 120 sátrapas para servirem no domínio, e nomeou também três altos funcionários que, atuando nos interesses do rei, tinham jurisdição sobre os sátrapas. O principal ponto visado por este arranjo talvez fosse mesmo financeiro, visto que a coleta de tarifas e tributos para os cofres reais era um dos principais deveres dos sátrapas. (Veja Esd 4:13.) Um membro do triunvirato de altos funcionários designados era Daniel, que se distinguiu tanto dos outros funcionários e sátrapas, que Dario pensou em fazê-lo primeiro-ministro. Evidentemente por inveja, embora talvez também por ressentimento da restrição sem dúvida imposta pela integridade de Daniel à corrupção e ao suborno, os outros dois altos funcionários, coligados com os sátrapas, arquitetaram uma armadilha legal. Comparecendo em conjunto perante o rei, submeteram à assinatura dele um edito, ostensivamente apoiado pelo grupo inteiro dos altos funcionários governamentais (não se mencionando, porém, Daniel). O edito proibia por 30 dias fazer "petição a qualquer deus ou homem", a não ser a Dario. A pena proposta seria lançar o infrator na cova dos leões. O decreto parecia em tudo servir para firmar Dario, um estrangeiro, na sua recém-adquirida posição de rei do domínio, e de ser uma expressão de lealdade e apoio por parte dos funcionários governamentais que promoviam isso. — Da 6:1-3, 6-8.

Dario assinou o decreto e logo se confrontou com o resultado, que devia ter-lhe revelado o objetivo oculto atrás do edito. Por continuar a orar a Jeová Deus, Daniel, como primeiro infrator do edito (veja At 5:29), foi lançado na cova dos leões, apesar dos esforços sinceros de Dario de achar um meio de contornar o estatuto imutável. Dario expressou confiança no poder do Deus de Daniel, de preservá-lo, e, depois de uma noite de insônia e de jejum, apressou-se em ir até a cova dos leões e alegrou-se de encontrar Daniel ainda vivo e ileso. O rei, então, não somente mandou que os acusadores de Daniel e as famílias deles fossem lançados na cova dos leões, em justiça retributiva, mas também mandou em todo o domínio fazer uma proclamação no sentido de que "em todo o domínio do meu reino as pessoas tremam e temam diante do Deus de Daniel". — Da 6:9-27.

Os registros históricos mostram que, desde tempos antigos, os reis mesopotâmios eram encarados como divinos, e que se lhes rendia adoração. Muitos comentadores julgam que a restrição quanto a fazer 'petições', especificada no edito de Dario, referia-se inteiramente a petições de natureza religiosa, não se aplicando a pedidos de natureza geral. A existência duma "cova de leões" em Babilônia está em conformidade com o testemunho de inscrições antigas, que mostram que governantes orientais frequentemente tinham coleções de animais selvagens. A obra Soncino Books of the Bible (Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino; Daniel, Esdras e Neemias, p. 49), comentando isso, declara: "Sabe-se que os persas herdaram dos reis assírios o costume de manter tais animais em seus jardins zoológicos." — Editada por A. Cohen, Londres, 1951.

Depois do capítulo 6 de Daniel, a única menção adicional de Dario é com respeito a acontecimentos no seu "primeiro ano" de governo. Foi durante aquele ano que Daniel 'compreendeu' o limite de 70 anos da desolação de Judá, e recebeu a revelação a respeito das 70 semanas proféticas e da vinda do Messias. (Da 9:1, 2, 24-27) O anjo que trouxe a Daniel a visão que retratava os empenhos do "rei do norte" e do "rei do sul", revelou também que ele já havia anteriormente atuado como fortalecedor angélico e baluarte durante o primeiro ano de Dario, o medo. (Da 11:1, 6) Os comentadores, em geral, entendem que o anjo prestou este serviço a Dario, mas parece mais provável que tal auxílio tenha sido dado a Miguel, mencionado no versículo precedente (Da 10:21) como tendo lutado ao lado deste específico mensageiro angélico. De modo que havia cooperação e colaboração angélica na luta contra o demoníaco 'príncipe da Pérsia', que se esforçara a frustrar o cumprimento dos propósitos de Jeová. — Da 10:13, 14.

Identificação de Dario, o Medo. Ainda não se encontrou nenhuma referência a "Dario, o medo", em qualquer inscrição não bíblica, nem é ele mencionado por antigos historiadores seculares, anteriores a Josefo (historiador judaico do primeiro século EC). Isto tem servido de base ou pretexto para muitos críticos tacharem Dario, o medo, de personagem fictício.

Alguns peritos apresentam Cambises (II) como constituído "Rei de Babilônia" por seu pai Ciro, logo depois da conquista de Babilônia. Embora Cambises, evidentemente, representasse seu pai anualmente na festividade do "Ano-Novo" em Babilônia, parece ter residido em Sipar o restante do tempo. Pesquisas baseadas no estudo de textos cuneiformes indicam que Cambises, evidentemente, só assumiu o título de "Rei de Babilônia" em 1.º de nisã de 530 AEC ao ser feito corregente de Ciro, que então empreendia a campanha que resultou na sua morte. Os empenhos de associar Dario com o filho de Ciro, Cambises II, não concordam com Dario ter

"cerca de sessenta e dois anos de idade" por ocasião da queda de Babilônia. — Da 5:31.

A opinião de que Dario talvez fosse outro nome do próprio Ciro não se harmoniza com Dario ter sido medo e "da descendência dos medos", esta última expressão indicando que seu pai, Assuero, era medo. Ciro, definitivamente, é chamado de "persa", e embora sua mãe talvez fosse meda, conforme alguns historiadores afirmam, seu pai, de acordo com o Cilindro de Ciro, foi Cambises I, persa. — Da 9:1; 6:28.

Outros identificariam Dario com um suposto "tio" de Ciro, apresentado pelo historiador grego Xenofonte como "Ciaxares, filho de Astíages". Xenofonte conta que Ciaxares sucedeu ao trono de Astíages, rei medo, mas que Ciaxares, mais tarde, entregou tanto a sua filha como toda a Média ao seu sobrinho Ciro. (Ciropedia, I; VIII; Clássicos Jackson, Vol. I, pp. 36, 320, 321.) Tanto Heródoto como Ctésias (historiadores gregos mais ou menos contemporâneos de Xenofonte), porém, apresentam relatos que contradizem o de Xenofonte, e Heródoto afirma que Astíages morreu sem filho varão. A Crônica de Nabonido mostra que Ciro obteve o reinado sobre os medos por capturar Astíages. Além disso, esta identificação de Dario com Ciaxares II exigiria presumir que Astíages também era conhecido como Assuero, visto que Dario, o medo, era "filho de Assuero". (Da 9:1) De modo que este conceito não tem confirmação.

Quem realmente era Dario, o medo?

Mais recentemente, diversas obras de referência têm favorecido a identificação de Dario com Gubaru (comumente identificado com o Gobrias mencionado na Ciropedia de Xenofonte), que se tornou governador de Babilônia após a conquista desta cidade pelos medo-persas. Basicamente, a evidência que apresentam é a seguinte:

O antigo texto cuneiforme conhecido como a Crônica de Nabonido, relatando a queda de Babilônia, diz que Ugbaru, "governador de Gutium, e o exército de Ciro, entraram em Babilônia sem batalha". Daí, depois de relatar a entrada de Ciro na cidade, 17 dias mais tarde, a inscrição declara que Gubaru, "seu governador, empossou (sub-)governadores em Babilônia". (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 306; compare isso com Darius the Mede [Dario, o Medo], de J. C. Whitcomb, 1959, p. 17.) Note que os nomes "Ugbaru" e "Gubaru" não são iguais. Embora pareçam similares, no estilo de escrita cuneiforme o sinal para a primeira sílaba do nome de Ugbaru é bem diferente daquele de Gubaru. A Crônica declara que Ugbaru, governador de Gutium, morreu poucas semanas depois da conquista. Outros textos cuneiformes mostram que Gubaru continuou vivo e serviu durante 14 anos como governador, não somente da cidade de Babilônia, mas da inteira região de Babilônia, bem como da "Região além do Rio", que incluía a Síria, a Fenícia e a Palestina, até a fronteira do Egito. De modo que Gubaru era governante duma região que se estendia por todo o Crescente Fértil, basicamente a mesma área que a do Império Babilônico. Dario, o medo, deve ser lembrado, é mencionado como sendo "constituído rei sobre o reino dos caldeus" (Da 5:31; 9:1), mas não como "rei da Pérsia", forma usual de se mencionar o Rei Ciro. (Da 10:1; Esd 1:1, 2; 3:7; 4:3) De modo que a região governada por Gubaru pelo menos parece ser a mesma que a governada por Dario.

Visto que Gubaru em parte alguma é chamado "Dario", faz-se a sugestão de que "Dario" era seu título ou nome no trono. W. F. Albright declara: "Parece-me altamente provável que Gobrias [Gubaru] realmente assumiu a dignidade real, junto com o nome 'Dario', talvez um antigo título real iraniano, enquanto Ciro estava ausente numa campanha oriental." (Journal of Biblical Literature [Revista de Literatura Bíblica], 1921, Vol. XL, p. 112, n. 19) Em resposta à objeção de que as tabuinhas cuneiformes em parte alguma falam de Gubaru como "rei", os que favorecem a identificação de Gubaru com o Rei Dario apontam para o fato de que o título de rei tampouco é aplicado a Belsazar, nas tabuinhas cuneiformes, todavia, o documento cuneiforme conhecido como "Relato Versificado de Nabonido" declara definitivamente que Nabonido 'confiou o reinado' ao seu filho.

Neste sentido, o Professor Whitcomb salienta que, segundo a Crônica de Nabonido, Gubaru, como governador distrital de Ciro, "designou . . . (governadores distritais) em Babilônia", assim como Daniel 6:1, 2, mostra que Dario "estabeleceu sobre o reino cento e vinte sátrapas". Whitcomb, por isso, afirma que Gubaru, como governador de governadores, provavelmente era chamado de rei pelos seus subordinados. (Darius the Mede, pp. 31-33) E, referindo-se à região extensa sobre a qual Gubaru (Gobrias) exercia domínio, A. T. Olmstead diz: "Sobre toda esta vasta extensão de terras férteis, Gobrias [Gubaru] governava quase que como monarca independente." — History of the Persian Empire (História do Império Persa), 1948, p. 56.

Em harmonia com o acima, alguns peritos acham provável que Dario, o medo, na realidade fosse vice-rei que governava o reino dos caldeus, mas como subordinado a Ciro, monarca supremo do Império Persa. A. T. Olmstead observa: "Nos seus tratos com os seus súditos babilônios, Ciro era 'rei de Babilônia, rei de terras'. Por assim insistir que a antiga linhagem de monarcas permanecia ininterrupta, ele bajulou a vaidade deles, granjeou a sua lealdade . . . Mas era Gobrias, o sátrapa, quem representava a autoridade real após a partida do rei." (History of the Persian Empire, p. 71) Aqueles que afirmam que o Dario bíblico foi de fato tal vice-governante apontam para o fato de que se diz que Dario "recebeu o reino" e que ele foi "constituído rei sobre o reino dos caldeus" como evidência de que ele, de fato, estava subordinado a um monarca superior. — Da 5:31; 9:1; compare isso com 7:27, onde diz que o "Supremo", Jeová Deus, entrega o Reino aos "santos".

Ao passo que, em muitos sentidos, as informações disponíveis a respeito de Gubaru parecem ser paralelas àquelas a respeito de Dario, e embora Dario talvez tenha sido vice-rei sob Ciro, esta identificação ainda assim não pode ser considerada conclusiva. Os registros históricos não nos falam sobre a nacionalidade de Gubaru, nem a sua ascendência, para assim indicar se era "medo" e "filho de Assuero". Não mostram que tinha autoridade régia a ponto de poder fazer uma proclamação ou um edito da natureza descrita em Daniel 6:6-9. Adicionalmente, o registro bíblico parece indicar que o governo de Dario sobre Babilônia não durou muito, e que Ciro, depois, assumiu o reinado sobre Babilônia, embora seja possível que governassem simultaneamente, e que Daniel fez menção especial apenas do ano em que Dario passou a ter destaque em Babilônia. (Da 6:28; 9:1; 2Cr 36:20-23) Gubaru continuou no seu posto por 14 anos.

Por que a identificação histórica é incerta. A verdade do relato da Bíblia, naturalmente, não depende da confirmação de fontes seculares. Os numerosos casos em que pessoas ou eventos registrados na Bíblia, anteriormente rejeitados pelos críticos como 'não históricos', por fim demonstraram, além de refutação, ser históricos, devem proteger os estudantes da Palavra de Deus contra dar indevida importância a críticas adversas. (Veja BELSAZAR; SARGÃO.) As centenas de milhares de tabuinhas cuneiformes descobertas no Oriente Médio ainda apresentam uma história bem imperfeita, com várias lacunas e espaços em branco. Quanto a outras fontes, os antigos historiadores seculares, de cujos escritos restam cópias (embora não raro em forma fragmentária), eram poucos, a maioria deles gregos, e eles estavam distantes dos eventos registrados no livro de Daniel por um, dois ou mais séculos.

Um motivo muito mais convincente, porém, para a falta de informações a respeito de Dario nos registros babilônicos é fornecido pelo próprio livro de Daniel. Ele mostra que Dario designou Daniel para um alto cargo no governo, para o grande desgosto de outros altos funcionários. A trama deles contra Daniel fracassou, e Dario executou os acusadores de Daniel e as famílias deles, o que provavelmente provocou a hostilidade dos demais funcionários. A proclamação de Dario, ordenando que todos no reino 'temessem diante do Deus de Daniel', inevitavelmente deve ter causado profunda dessatisfação e ressentimento entre os poderosos clérigos babilônios. Visto que os escribas seguramente estavam sob a direção desses elementos, não seria nada de estranhar que os registros fossem posteriormente alterados e a evidência a respeito dele eliminada. Sabe-se de ações similares tomadas na história daqueles tempos.

A forma dupla de governo medo-persa apresentada na Bíblia, portanto, precisa ser devidamente tomada em consideração. (Da 5:28; 8:3, 4, 20) Embora a história secular dê preponderante destaque a Ciro e os persas, o registro bíblico mostra que os medos continuavam num aparente arranjo de parceria com os persas, e as leis continuavam a ser aquelas "dos medos e dos persas". (Da 6:8; Est 1:19) Os medos desempenharam o papel principal na derrubada de Babilônia. (Is 13:17-19) Note, também, que Jeremias (51:11) predisse que os "reis [plural] dos medos" estariam entre os que atacariam Babilônia. É bem possível que Dario tenha sido um desses reis.

2. Dario Histaspes, também chamado Dario, o Grande, ou Dario I (persa). É considerado um dos governantes destacados do Império Persa. Dario descreve a si mesmo como "filho de Histaspes, aquemênida, persa, filho dum persa, ariano, de descendência ariana". (History of the Persian Empire, pp. 122, 123) Deste modo reivindicava ter ascendência real do mesmo ancestral que Ciro, o Grande, embora dum ramo familiar diferente do de Ciro.

Depois da morte de Cambises II em 522 AEC, ocorrida enquanto retornava do Egito, o trono persa foi ocupado durante curto período por seu irmão Bardiia (ou possivelmente por um mago chamado Gaumata). Dario, auxiliado por seis outros nobres persas, matou o ocupante do trono e o obteve para si mesmo. A versão de Dario disso é apresentada em três idiomas na imensa inscrição que havia mandado gravar nos penhascos escarpados em Behistun, defronte duma planície atravessada pela principal rota de caravanas de Bagdá a Teerã. Segundo a inscrição, Gaumata era usurpador, fazendo-se passar pelo irmão de Cambises, que havia sido morto. A maioria dos peritos modernos aceita este relato (permeada de repetidas afirmações feitas por Dario de que "é verdade e não mentiras") como basicamente factual, ao passo que alguns creem que Dario era um "monumental mentiroso" e que a evidência o aponta como o verdadeiro usurpador. Qualquer que seja o caso, Dario viu-se confrontado com um império em revolta ao assumir o reinado, e pensa-se que gastou os dois anos seguintes em subjugar os elementos insurretos em todo o domínio. O Egito, que se libertara do jugo persa, foi reconquistado por Dario em cerca de 519-518 AEC. Depois disso, ele estendeu os limites imperiais até a Índia, no L, e até a Trácia e a Macedônia, no O. É conhecido também por sua eficiente reorganização da estrutura administrativa em todo o império, pela criação dum código de leis imperial, chamado Estatuto dos Bons Regulamentos, e por ter reaberto o canal ligando o rio Nilo do Egito ao Mar Vermelho.

É especialmente com respeito à reconstrução do templo em Jerusalém que Dario Histaspes consta no registro bíblico. O alicerce do templo foi lançado em 536 AEC, mas a obra de reconstrução foi proibida em 522 AEC e "continuou parada até o segundo ano do reinado de Dario" (520 AEC). (Esd 4:4, 5, 24) Durante esse ano, os profetas Ageu e Zacarias incitaram os judeus a recomeçarem a construção, e a obra foi empreendida novamente. (Esd 5:1, 2; Ag 1:1, 14, 15; Za 1:1) Isto resultou numa investigação e no envio duma carta de Tatenai, o governador que representava os interesses imperiais na região ao O do Eufrates, e de outros altos funcionários, ao rei persa Dario. A carta informava-o sobre a obra de construção, expondo a reivindicação dos judeus quanto à legalidade do projeto e solicitando uma investigação nos arquivos reais, para ver se existia evidência escrita para confirmar essa reivindicação. (Esd 5:3-17) A declaração judaica, que contrastava as ações do caldeu Nabucodonosor, como o destruidor do templo, com as do persa Ciro, como aquele que autorizou sua reconstrução, deve ter exercido um efeito apropriado e oportuno sobre Dario, visto que nos primeiros anos do seu reinado teve de subjugar duas revoltas de rebeldes que assumiram o nome de Nabucodonosor (chamados de Nabucodonosor III e Nabucodonosor IV pelos historiadores), afirmando ser filhos de Nabonido e empenhando-se em tornar Babilônia independente do Império Persa.

A pesquisa oficial nos registros dos arquivos de Ecbátana, antiga capital meda, resultou na descoberta do documento de Ciro. Em vista disso, Dario mandou ordens ao governador Tatenai para que ele e os outros altos funcionários não somente deixassem de interferir na obra do templo, mas também fornecessem fundos para a construção, da "tesouraria real do imposto de além do Rio", bem como animais e outras coisas necessárias para as ofertas sacrificiais. Quem violasse a ordem do rei devia ser pregado numa estaca e sua casa 'tornada latrina pública'. — Esd 6:1-12.

Com esta cooperação oficial e contínuo encorajamento profético (Za 7:1; 8:1-9, 20-23), a obra do templo prosseguiu até ser completada com bom êxito no "terceiro dia do mês lunar de adar, isto é, no sexto ano do reinado de Dario" (Esd 6:13-15; por volta de 6 de março de 515 AEC). Visto que as inscrições de Dario indicam ter sido ele um devoto adorador de Auramazda (ou Ahura Mazda), é evidente que sua ação, embora servindo ao propósito de Jeová Deus, e, sem dúvida, sob Sua direção, foi basicamente tomada por respeito à natureza irrevogável das leis medo-persas e em harmonia com uma política de tolerância exercida pelo governo de Dario, encontrando-se evidência de tal tolerância em algumas de suas inscrições.

Campanhas Posteriores na Grécia. Perto da virada do século, várias cidades gregas da Jônia revoltaram-se contra a dominação persa, e, embora seu levante fosse subjugado, Dario decidiu punir Atenas e Erétria por terem ajudado as cidades rebeldes. Isto levou a uma invasão persa da Grécia, resultando, porém, na derrota das forças de Dario na batalha de Maratona, em 490 AEC. Embora Dario fizesse cuidadosa preparação para outra campanha contra a Grécia, não pôde executá-la antes da sua morte em 486 AEC. Foi sucedido por seu filho, Xerxes.

3. Neemias 12:22 menciona o registro dos cabeças de casas paternas levitas "nos dias de Eliasibe, Joiada e Joanã, e Jadua . . . até o reinado de Dario, o persa". Visto que Eliasibe era sumo sacerdote na época do retorno de Neemias a Jerusalém (Ne 3:1), e visto que, por ocasião da segunda visita de Neemias a esta cidade (após o 32.º ano de Artaxerxes [443 AEC]), Joiada tinha um filho casado (Ne 13:28), é provável que o "Dario" mencionado fosse Dario Oco (também chamado Noto), que governou de 423 a 405 AEC.

Uma carta encontrada entre os Papiros Elefantinos, reconhecida como datando dos últimos anos do quinto século AEC, refere-se a "Joanã" como sumo sacerdote em Jerusalém naquela época.

DAR MEIA-VOLTA. Veja ARREPENDIMENTO.

DATÃ. Filho de Eliabe, da tribo de Rubem, e irmão de Abirão e Nemuel. Datã e Abirão apoiaram o levita Corá na sua rebelião contra a autoridade de Moisés e Arão, e, na realidade, desafiaram as promessas de Jeová, por referir-se ao Egito como "terra que manava leite e mel". Por causa da rebelião deles, Datã e Abirão, bem como os da sua casa, pereceram quando o solo os tragou. — Núm 16:1-35; 26:7-11; De 11:6; Sal 106:17; veja ABIRÃO N.º 1.

DAVI [provavelmente: Amado]. Na Tradução do Novo Mundo, este nome ocorre 1.079 vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas, inclusive 75 vezes no cabeçalho de 73 salmos, e 59 vezes nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Dentre todos os personagens das Escrituras Hebraicas, apenas Moisés e Abraão são mencionados com mais frequência por escritores cristãos da Bíblia. Nos 1.138 lugares em que ocorre o nome Davi, a referência é apenas a uma só pessoa, o segundo rei de Israel, ou àquele de quem Davi, às vezes, era quadro típico: "Jesus Cristo, filho de Davi." — Mt 1:1.

Este pastor, músico, poeta, soldado, estadista, profeta e rei destaca-se nas Escrituras Hebraicas com muita proeminência. Tratava-se de um lutador intrépido no campo de batalha, que demonstrou perseverança sob adversidades, um líder e comandante dotado de forte e inquebrantável coragem, não obstante, suficientemente humilde para reconhecer seus erros e arrepender-se de seus graves pecados, homem capaz de mostrar terna compaixão e misericórdia, amante da verdade e da justiça, e, acima de tudo, alguém com fé e confiança implícitas em seu Deus, Jeová.

Davi, descendente de Boaz e Rute, tinha uma ascendência que remontava a Judá, por intermédio de Peres. (Ru 4:18-22; Mt 1:3-6) Este caçula dentre os oito filhos homens de Jessé também tinha duas irmãs ou meias-irmãs. (1Sa 16:10, 11; 17:12; 1Cr 2:16) Um dos irmãos de Davi evidentemente morreu sem ter filhos e foi assim omitido em registros genealógicos posteriores. (1Cr 2:13-16) O nome da mãe de Davi não é fornecido. Alguns têm sugerido que sua mãe foi Naás, mas é mais provável que Naás tenha sido o pai das meias-irmãs de Davi. — 2Sa 17:25; veja NAÁS N.º 2.

Belém, situada a cerca de 9 km ao SSO de Jerusalém, era a cidade natal de Davi, a cidade onde haviam morado seus antepassados Jessé, Obede e Boaz, e que, às vezes, era chamada de "cidade de Davi" (Lu 2:4, 11; Jo 7:42), mas que não deve ser confundida com a "Cidade de Davi", isto é, Sião, em Jerusalém. — 2Sa 5:7.

Como Jovem. Deparamo-nos com Davi pela primeira vez quando cuidava das ovelhas de seu pai, num campo perto de Belém, o que nos faz lembrar que foi também num campo perto de Belém que pastores, mais de um milênio depois, ficaram espantados de serem escolhidos para ouvir o anjo de Jeová anunciar o nascimento de Jesus. (Lu 2:8-14) Samuel, enviado por Deus à casa de Jessé, a fim de ungir um dos filhos deste para ser o futuro rei, rejeitou os sete irmãos mais velhos de Davi, dizendo: "Jeová não escolheu a estes." Por fim, foram buscar Davi do campo. Pairava uma atmosfera de suspense quando ele entrou — "ruivo, rapaz de belos olhos e bem-parecido" — pois até então ninguém sabia por que Samuel tinha vindo. "Levanta-te", ordenou Jeová a Samuel, "unge-o, pois é este"! Davi foi aquele de quem Jeová disse: "Achei Davi, filho de Jessé, homem agradável ao meu coração, que fará todas as coisas que desejo." — 1Sa 16:1-13; 13:14; At 13:22.

Os anos que Davi passou como jovem pastor de ovelhas exerceram profunda influência no resto de sua vida. A vida ao ar livre preparou-o para viver qual fugitivo, quando, mais tarde na vida, fugia da ira de Saul. Também adquiriu perícia em atirar pedras de funda, e desenvolveu perseverança, coragem e disposição de procurar e socorrer as ovelhas que se separaram do rebanho, não hesitando em matar um urso ou um leão, quando necessário. — 1Sa 17:34-36.

Mas, apesar de sua intrepidez qual guerreiro, Davi será também lembrado como exímio harpista e como compositor de cânticos, habilidades que talvez adquirisse nas longas horas gastas cuidando das ovelhas. Davi tinha também a reputação de ser inventor de instrumentos musicais. (2Cr 7:6; 29:26, 27; Am 6:5) O amor de Davi por Jeová elevou seus versos líricos muito acima do nível comum de simples entretenimento e fez deles obras-primas clássicas, dedicadas à adoração e ao louvor de Jeová. Os cabeçalhos de nada menos que 73 salmos indicam que Davi foi o seu compositor, mas ainda outros salmos são em outras partes atribuídos a Davi. (Compare Sal 2:1 com At 4:25; Sal 95:7, 8 com He 4:7.) Alguns, como por exemplo os Salmos 8, 19, 23, 29, bem provavelmente refletem as experiências de Davi qual pastor.

Todo este treinamento enquanto cuidava das ovelhas preparou Davi para o papel maior de pastorear o povo de Jeová, conforme está escrito: "[Jeová] escolheu a Davi, seu servo, e tomou-o dos redis do rebanho. De andar atrás das fêmeas lactantes Ele o trouxe para ser pastor de Jacó, seu povo, e de Israel, sua herança." (Sal 78:70, 71; 2Sa 7:8) Todavia, quando Davi deixou as ovelhas de seu pai pela primeira vez, não foi para assumir o reinado. Antes, serviu como músico da corte, à recomendação de um conselheiro de Saul, que descreveu Davi como não apenas "perito em tocar", mas também como "homem poderoso, valente, e homem de guerra, e conversador inteligente, e homem de bom porte, e Jeová está com ele". (1Sa 16:18) De modo que Davi se tornou o harpista para o perturbado Saul, bem como seu escudeiro. — 1Sa 16:19-23.

Mais tarde, por motivos não revelados, Davi voltou à casa de seu pai por um período indeterminado. Ao levar provisões para seus irmãos no exército de Saul, que nessa ocasião se encontrava num impasse com os filisteus, ele ficou enfurecido ao ver e ouvir Golias vituperar a Jeová. "Quem é este filisteu incircunciso [para] que venha escarnecer das fileiras combatentes do Deus vivente?" perguntou Davi. (1Sa 17:26) "Jeová", acrescentou, "que me livrou da pata do leão e da pata do urso, ele é quem me livrará da mão deste filisteu". (1Sa 17:37) Concedida a permissão, o matador do leão e do urso aproximou-se de Golias com as palavras: "Eu chego a ti com o nome de Jeová dos exércitos, o Deus das fileiras combatentes de Israel, de quem escarneceste." Subitamente, Davi atirou a pedra com a funda e abateu o campeão inimigo. Daí, com a espada do próprio Golias, Davi decapitou-o e retornou ao acampamento com os troféus de guerra: a cabeça e a espada do gigante. — 1Sa 17:45-54; GRAVURA, Vol. 1, p. 745.

É digno de nota que a Septuaginta, conforme aparece no manuscrito grego Vaticano 1209, do quarto século, omite 1 Samuel 17:55 até a palavra "filisteus", em 18:6a. Por isso, a versão Moffatt coloca todos esses versículos, exceto o último, entre colchetes duplos, chamando-os de "ou acréscimos editoriais, ou interpolações posteriores". Todavia, existe evidência que favorece a versão do texto massorético. — Veja SAMUEL, LIVROS DE (Trechos Que Faltam na Septuaginta Grega).

Como Fugitivo. (MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 746) Esses acontecimentos em rápida sucessão projetaram Davi da obscuridade do ermo para a notoriedade pública aos olhos de todo o Israel. Encarregado dos homens de guerra, Davi foi saudado com danças e regozijo ao retornar duma expedição vitoriosa contra os filisteus, sendo a canção em voga naqueles dias: "Saul golpeou os seus milhares, e Davi as suas dezenas de milhares." (1Sa 18:5-7) "Todo o Israel e Judá amavam a Davi", e o próprio filho de Saul, Jonatã, fez com ele um pacto vitalício de amor e de amizade mútua, cujos benefícios estenderam-se ao filho de Jonatã, Mefibosete, e ao seu neto, Mica. — 1Sa 18:1-4, 16; 20:1-42; 23:18; 2Sa 9:1-13.

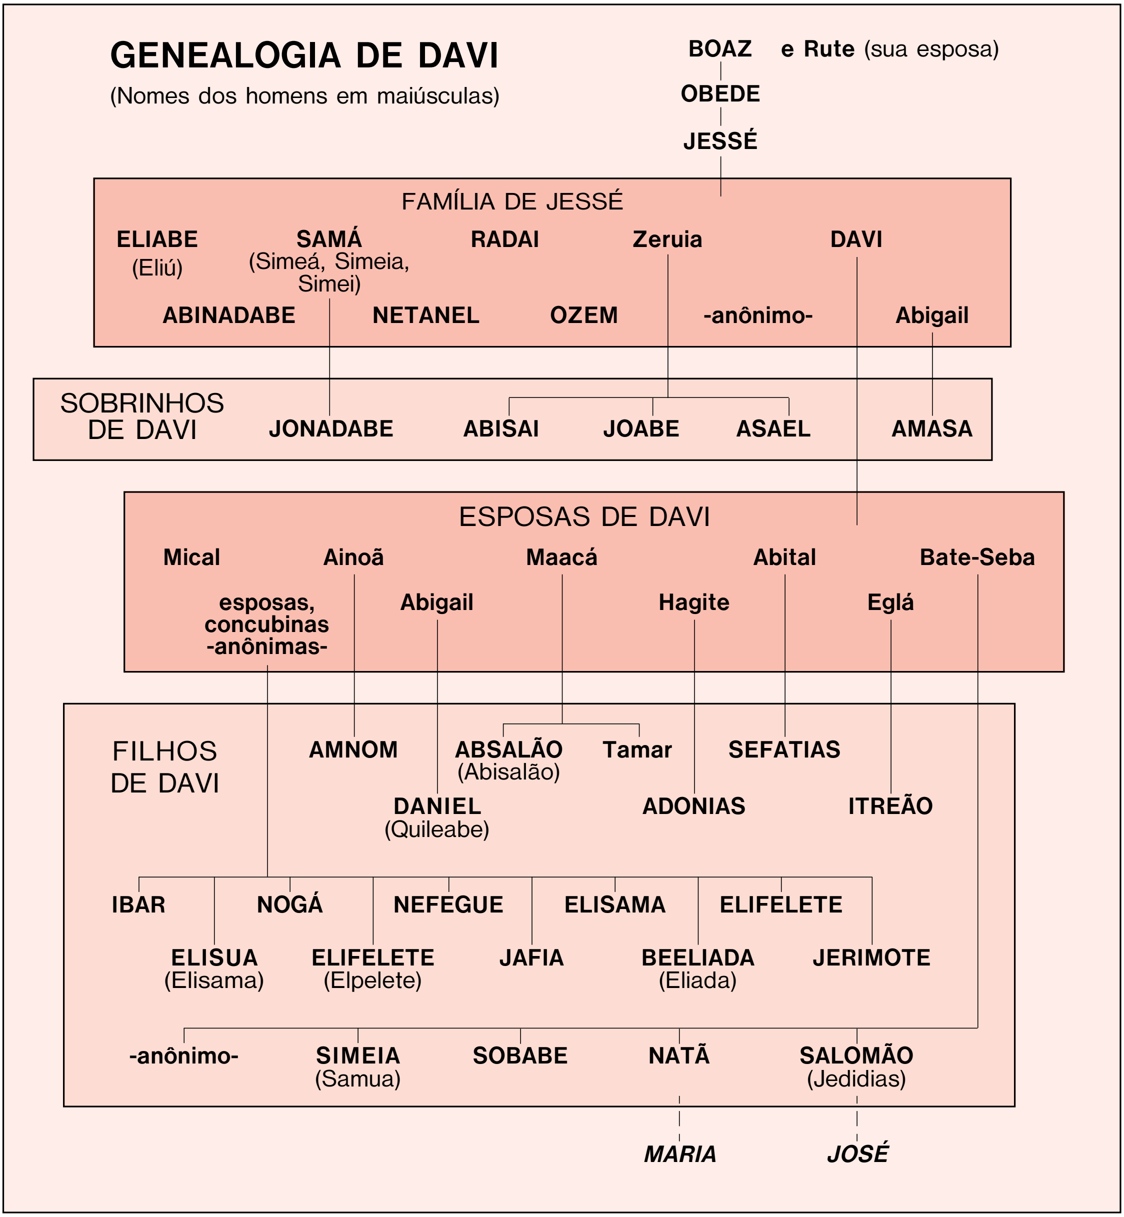
Esta popularidade provocou inveja em Saul, que 'daquele dia em diante olhava continuamente com suspeita para Davi'. Duas vezes, quando Davi tocava música como em ocasiões anteriores, Saul atirou uma lança com a intenção de cravá-lo na parede, e em ambos os casos Jeová o livrou. Saul prometera dar sua filha a quem quer que matasse Golias, mas agora relutava em dá-la a Davi. Por fim, Saul concordou com o casamento de uma segunda filha, contanto que Davi lhe trouxesse "cem prepúcios dos filisteus", uma exigência desarrazoada, que Saul calculava significaria a morte de Davi. O corajoso Davi, entretanto, dobrou o dote, ofertando a Saul 200 prepúcios e casou-se com Mical. De modo que agora dois dos filhos de Saul haviam feito amorosamente pactos com Davi, circunstâncias que fizeram com que Saul o odiasse ainda mais. (1Sa 18:9-29) Quando Davi novamente tocava na presença de Saul, o rei pela terceira vez tentou cravá-lo na parede com a lança. Protegido pela escuridão da noite, Davi fugiu, vendo Saul de novo apenas em circunstâncias diferentes e bem estranhas. — 1Sa 19:10.

Nos vários anos seguintes, Davi viveu qual foragido, fugindo constantemente de um lugar a outro, implacavelmente perseguido por um rei obstinado e iníquo, decidido a matá-lo. De início, Davi refugiou-se junto ao profeta Samuel, em Ramá (1Sa 19:18-24), mas, quando este lugar deixou de ser esconderijo, rumou para a cidade filisteia de Gate, parando em caminho para encontrar-se com o sumo sacerdote Aimeleque, em Nobe, onde obteve a espada de Golias. (1Sa 21:1-9; 22:9-23; Mt 12:3, 4) No entanto, foi apenas por fingir-se de demente, fazendo cruzinhas no portão, como uma criança, e deixando a saliva escorrer sobre a barba, que conseguiu escapar de Gate. (1Sa 21:10-15) Baseado nesta experiência, Davi compôs os Salmos 34 e 56. Em seguida fugiu para a caverna de Adulão, onde sua família e cerca de 400 homens desafortunados e aflitos juntaram-se a ele. O Salmo 57 ou o 142, ou ambos, talvez sejam comemorativos de sua estada nessa caverna. Davi prosseguiu movimentando-se — dali para Mispé, em Moabe, e então de volta para a floresta de Herete, em Judá. (1Sa 22:1-5) Enquanto morava em Queila, ficou sabendo que Saul se preparava para atacar, ao que ele e seus homens, que agora somavam cerca de 600, partiram para o ermo de Zife. Saul continuou a perseguição, num lugar após outro, do ermo de Zife, em Horesa, até o ermo de Maom. Quando Saul estava prestes a agarrar a sua presa, veio a notícia de um ataque filisteu, de modo que Saul abandonou a perseguição por algum tempo, possibilitando que o fugitivo escapasse para En-Gedi. (1Sa 23:1-29) Belos salmos, louvando a Jeová por prover o escape milagroso (18, 59, 63, 70), originaram-se de experiências similares.

Em En-Gedi, Saul entrou numa caverna para satisfazer uma necessidade natural. Davi, que estava escondido nos fundos da caverna, aproximou-se furtivamente e cortou a aba da veste de Saul, mas poupou-lhe a vida, dizendo ser inconcebível da sua parte ferir o rei, "pois ele é o ungido de Jeová". — 1Sa 24:1-22.

Após a morte de Samuel. Após a morte de Samuel, ainda na condição de exilado, Davi passou a morar no ermo de Parã. (Veja PARÃ.) Ali, ele e seus homens demonstraram bondade para com um rico criador de gado, Nabal, cujo serviço era realizado em Carmelo, ao S de Hébron, apenas para serem repelidos por este ingrato. O raciocínio rápido da esposa de Nabal, Abigail, conteve Davi de exterminar os varões da família, mas Nabal foi golpeado por Jeová e morreu. Depois disso, Davi casou-se com a viúva, de modo que agora, além de Ainoã, de Jezreel, Davi tinha mais outra esposa, Abigail, de Carmelo; durante a longa ausência de Davi, Saul havia dado Mical a outro homem. — 1Sa 25:1-44; 27:3.

Pela segunda vez, Davi refugiou-se no ermo de Zife, e a caçada recomeçou. Davi comparou Saul e seus 3.000 homens aos que saem à procura duma



"única pulga, assim como se vai no encalço da perdiz sobre os montes". Certa noite, Davi e Abisai entraram furtivamente no acampamento adormecido de Saul e tiraram dali a lança e a bilha de água dele. Abisai queria matar Saul, mas Davi poupou a vida de Saul pela segunda vez, dizendo que, do ponto de vista de Jeová, era-lhe inconcebível estender a mão contra o ungido de Deus. (1Sa 26:1-25) Esta foi a última ocasião em que Davi viu seu adversário.

Davi fixou-se em Ziclague, em território filisteu, fora do alcance de Saul, por um período de 16 meses. Numerosos homens poderosos desertaram das forças de Saul e juntaram-se aos exilados em Ziclague, tornando possível que Davi fizesse incursões em cidades inimigas de Israel, ao S, deste modo consolidando as fronteiras de Judá e fortalecendo sua posição futura qual rei. (1Sa 27:12; 1Cr 12:1-7, 19-22) Quando os filisteus se prepararam para atacar as forças de Saul, o Rei Aquis, pensando que Davi fosse "mau cheiro entre o seu povo de Israel", convidou-o para juntar-se a ele. Todavia, os outros senhores do eixo rejeitaram Davi como risco para a segurança. (1Sa 29:1-11) Na batalha que culminou no monte Gilboa, morreram Saul e três de seus filhos, Jonatã inclusive. — 1Sa 31:1-7.

No ínterim, os amalequitas pilharam e incendiaram Ziclague, levando consigo todas as mulheres e crianças. As forças de Davi foram imediatamente no seu encalço, alcançaram os saqueadores e recuperaram as suas esposas e os seus filhos, e todos os bens. (1Sa 30:1-31) Três dias mais tarde, um amalequita trouxe o diadema e o bracelete de Saul, jactando-se enganosamente de que matara o rei ferido, esperando receber uma recompensa. Embora tivesse mentido sobre o assunto, Davi mandou matá-lo por ter afirmado 'que entregou o ungido de Jeová à morte'. — 2Sa 1:1-16; 1Sa 31:4, 5.

Como Rei. (MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 746) A notícia trágica da morte de Saul afligiu muito a Davi. Que o seu arqui-inimigo estava morto não o atingiu tanto como o fato de que caíra o ungido de Jeová. Em lamentação, Davi compôs uma endecha, intitulada "O Arco". Nela ele lamenta que seu pior inimigo e seu melhor amigo haviam caído juntos em batalha — "Saul e Jonatã, os amáveis e os agradáveis durante a sua vida, e não foram separados na sua morte". — 2Sa 1:17-27.

Davi mudou-se então para Hébron, onde, à idade de 30 anos, os anciãos de Judá o ungiram rei sobre a tribo deles, em 1077 AEC. O filho de Saul, Is-Bosete, foi constituído rei sobre as outras tribos. Cerca de dois anos mais tarde, porém, Is-Bosete foi assassinado, seus agressores levando a cabeça dele a Davi, esperando receber uma recompensa, mas eles também foram mortos, assim como fora o pretenso matador de Saul. (2Sa 2:1-4, 8-10; 4:5-12) Isto pavimentou o caminho para que as tribos que até então haviam apoiado o filho de Saul se juntassem a Judá, e, com o tempo, juntou-se uma força de 340.822, e Davi foi constituído rei de todo o Israel. — 2Sa 5:1-3; 1Cr 11:1-3; 12:23-40.

Governo em Jerusalém. Davi governou sete anos e meio em Hébron, antes de mudar sua capital, sob a direção de Jeová, para a capturada fortaleza jebusita, Jerusalém. Ali construiu a Cidade de Davi, em Sião, e continuou a governar por mais 33 anos. (2Sa 5:4-10; 1Cr 11:4-9; 2Cr 6:6) Enquanto morava em Hébron, o Rei Davi tomou mais esposas, fez com que Mical lhe fosse devolvida, e gerou numerosos filhos e filhas. (2Sa 3:2-5, 13-16; 1Cr 3:1-4) Depois de mudar-se para Jerusalém, Davi tomou ainda mais esposas e concubinas, as quais, por sua vez, lhe deram mais filhos. — 2Sa 5:13-16; 1Cr 3:5-9; 14:3-7.

Quando os filisteus souberam que Davi era rei de todo o Israel, vieram para depô-lo. Como no passado (1Sa 23:2, 4, 10-12; 30:8), Davi indagou a Jeová quanto a se devia subir contra eles. "Sobe", foi a resposta, e Jeová lançou-se com tal sobrepujante destruição sobre o inimigo, que Davi chamou o lugar de Baal-Perazim, que significa "Senhor [Dono] das Rupturas". Num novo confronto, a estratégia de Jeová mudou, e ele ordenou a Davi contornar os filisteus e golpeá-los pela retaguarda. — 2Sa 5:17-25; 1Cr 14:8-17.

Davi tentou trazer a Arca do Pacto para Jerusalém, mas isto falhou quando Uzá tocou nela e foi golpeado. (2Sa 6:2-10; 1Cr 13:1-14) Uns três meses mais tarde, com preparativos cuidadosos, que incluíam a santificação dos sacerdotes e dos levitas, e certificando-se de que a Arca fosse carregada nos ombros deles, em vez de ser colocada numa carroça, como da primeira vez, ela foi levada para Jerusalém. Davi, trajado de modo simples, externou sua alegria e entusiasmo nessa importante ocasião, "pulando e dançando diante de Jeová". Mas a sua esposa Mical censurou a Davi, dizendo que ele se comportara "assim como um dos homens inanes". Por causa desta queixa injustificada, Mical "não veio a ter nenhum filho até o dia da sua morte". — 2Sa 6:11-23; 1Cr 15:1-29.

Davi também tomou medidas para expandir a adoração de Jeová na nova localização da Arca por designar porteiros e músicos, e por providenciar que fossem feitas "ofertas queimadas . . . constantemente, de manhã e à noitinha". (1Cr 16:1-6, 37-43) Ademais, Davi pensou em construir um templo-palácio de cedro para abrigar a Arca, em lugar da sua tenda. Mas Davi não recebeu permissão para construir tal casa, pois Deus disse: "Derramaste sangue em grande quantidade e travaste grandes guerras. Não construirás uma casa ao meu nome, porque derramaste diante de mim grande quantidade de sangue na terra." (1Cr 22:8; 28:3) No entanto, Jeová fez um pacto com ele, prometendo que o reinado permaneceria para sempre na sua família, e, em conexão com este pacto, Deus assegurou-lhe que seu filho Salomão, cujo nome deriva duma raiz que significa "paz", construiria o templo. — 2Sa 7:1-16, 25-29; 1Cr 17:1-27; 2Cr 6:7-9; Sal 89:3, 4, 35, 36.

Foi, portanto, em harmonia com este pacto do reino que Jeová permitiu que Davi expandisse seu domínio territorial desde o rio do Egito até o Eufrates, consolidando suas fronteiras, conservando a paz com o rei de Tiro, combatendo e conquistando inimigos por todos os lados — filisteus, sírios, moabitas, edomitas, amalequitas e amonitas. (2Sa 8:1-14; 10:6-19; 1Rs 5:3; 1Cr 13:5; 14:1, 2; 18:1–20:8) Essas vitórias, concedidas por Deus, fizeram de Davi um governante muito poderoso. (1Cr 14:17) Contudo, Davi sempre estava cônscio de que esta posição não fora adquirida por conquista ou por herança, mas provinha de Jeová, que o colocara no trono desta teocracia típica. — 1Cr 10:14; 29:10-13.

Pecados trazem calamidades. Durante a campanha contínua contra os amonitas, ocorreu um dos mais tristes episódios da vida de Davi. Tudo começou quando o rei, ao observar do seu terraço a bela Bate-Seba banhar-se, entreteve desejos errados. (Tg 1:14, 15) Depois de saber que o marido dela, Urias, havia ido participar na guerra, Davi providenciou que a mulher fosse trazida ao seu palácio, onde teve relações sexuais com ela. Com o tempo, o rei foi informado de que ela estava grávida. Sem dúvida, temendo que Bate-Seba fosse publicamente exposta e morta por conduta imoral, Davi imediatamente avisou o exército para que Urias se apresentasse a ele em Jerusalém, na esperança de que Urias passasse a noite com sua esposa. Mas, embora Davi o tivesse embebedado, Urias recusou-se a dormir com Bate-Seba. Em desespero, Davi o enviou de volta às tropas, com instruções secretas ao comandante Joabe para que Urias fosse destacado para as linhas de frente, onde certamente seria morto. A trama deu certo. Urias morreu em batalha, sua viúva guardou o costumeiro período de luto, e então Davi casou-se com a viúva antes que o povo da cidade soubesse que ela estava grávida. — 2Sa 11:1-27.

Todavia, Jeová estava atento, e expôs todo este caso repreensível. Se Jeová tivesse permitido que o caso envolvendo Davi e Bate-Seba fosse tratado por juízes humanos, sob a Lei mosaica, ambos os transgressores teriam sido mortos, e, naturalmente, a prole do seu adultério, ainda por nascer, teria morrido junto com a mãe. (De 5:18; 22:22) No entanto, Jeová mesmo tratou do caso e teve misericórdia com Davi, por causa do pacto do Reino (2Sa 7:11-16), sem dúvida, porque o próprio Davi mostrara misericórdia (1Sa 24:4-7; compare isso com Tg 2:13) e por causa do arrependimento que Deus observava por parte dos transgressores. (Sal 51:1-4) Mas, eles não ficaram livres de toda punição. Pela boca do profeta Natã, Jeová pronunciou: "Eis que suscito contra ti uma calamidade provinda da tua própria casa." — 2Sa 12:1-12.

E assim veio a ser. O filho adulterino nascido a Bate-Seba logo morreu, embora Davi jejuasse e chorasse sete dias por causa do filho doente. (2Sa 12:15-23) Em seguida, o filho primogênito de Davi, Amnom, violentou sua própria meia-irmã Tamar e foi posteriormente assassinado pelo irmão dela, para o pesar do pai deste. (2Sa 13:1-33) Mais tarde, Absalão, o terceiro e amado filho de Davi, não apenas tentou usurpar o trono, mas abertamente desprezou e publicamente desonrou seu pai por ter relações sexuais com as concubinas de Davi. (2Sa 15:1–16:22) Por fim, a humilhação chegou ao clímax quando a guerra civil mergulhou o país numa luta de filho contra pai, resultando na morte de Absalão, contrário aos desejos de Davi e para o seu grande pesar. (2Sa 17:1–18:33) Enquanto fugia de Absalão, Davi compôs o Salmo 3, no qual diz: "A salvação pertence a Jeová." — Sal 3:8.

Mas, apesar de todas as suas falhas e pecados graves, Davi sempre mostrou a condição correta de coração por se arrepender e por implorar o perdão de Jeová. Isto foi demonstrado no caso que envolveu Bate-Seba, depois do qual Davi escreveu o Salmo 51, declarando: "Em erro fui dado à luz . . . em pecado me concebeu minha mãe." (Sal 51:5) Outro exemplo em que Davi humildemente confessou seus pecados foi quando Satanás o incitou a fazer um censo dos homens habilitados para as forças militares. — 2Sa 24:1-17; 1Cr 21:1-17; 27:24; veja REGISTRO.

Compra do lugar para o templo. Quando terminou a pestilência resultante do erro do rei nesse último exemplo, Davi comprou a eira de Ornã, e, como sacrifício a Jeová, ofereceu o gado bovino junto com o trenó usado na debulha. Foi neste local que Salomão mais tarde construiu o magnífico templo. (2Sa 24:18-25; 1Cr 21:18-30; 2Cr 3:1) Davi sempre acalentou no coração o desejo de construir esse templo, e, embora isso não lhe fosse permitido, foi-lhe concedido constituir uma grande força-tarefa para talhar pedras e reunir materiais que incluíam 100.000 talentos de ouro (US$ 38.535.000.000) e 1.000.000 de talentos de prata (US$ 6.606.000.000), e cobre e ferro em quantidade impossível de se calcular. (1Cr 22:2-16) De sua fortuna pessoal, Davi contribuiu ouro de Ofir e prata refinada no valor de mais de US$ 1.202.000.000. Davi forneceu também os planos arquitetônicos, recebidos por inspiração, e organizou as dezenas de milhares de levitas em suas muitas turmas de serviço, incluindo um grande coro de cantores e de músicos. — 1Cr 23:1-29:19; 2Cr 8:14; 23:18; 29:25; Esd 3:10.

Fim do reinado. Nos dias finais da vida de Davi, o rei, já com 70 anos, confinado ao leito, continuou a colher a calamidade na sua família. Seu quarto filho, Adonias, sem o conhecimento ou o consentimento de seu pai, e, pior, sem a aprovação de Jeová, tentou constituir-se rei. Quando esta notícia chegou a Davi, ele agiu rapidamente para que seu filho Salomão, o escolhido de Jeová, fosse empossado oficialmente como rei e se sentasse no trono. (1Rs 1:5-48; 1Cr 28:5; 29:20-25; 2Cr 1:8) Davi aconselhou então Salomão a andar nos caminhos de Jeová, a guardar os Seus estatutos e os Seus mandamentos, a agir com circunspeção em tudo, pois assim haveria de prosperar. — 1Rs 2:1-9.

Após um reinado de 40 anos, Davi morreu e foi sepultado na Cidade de Davi, tendo-se mostrado digno de ser incluído na lista honrosa, feita por Paulo, das testemunhas que se notabilizaram pela fé. (1Rs 2:10, 11; 1Cr 29:26-30; At 13:36; He 11:32) Ao citar o Salmo 110, Jesus disse que Davi o escrevera "por inspiração". (Mt 22:43, 44; Mr 12:36) Os apóstolos e outros escritores bíblicos frequentemente reconheceram Davi como profeta inspirado de Deus. — Compare Sal 16:8 com At 2:25; Sal 32:1, 2, com Ro 4:6-8; Sal 41:9 com Jo 13:18; Sal 69:22, 23, com Ro 11:9, 10; Sal 69:25 e 109:8 com At 1:16, 20.

Pictórico. Os profetas frequentemente se referiam a Davi e à sua casa real, às vezes em conexão com os últimos reis de Israel que se sentaram no "trono de Davi" (Je 13:13; 22:2, 30; 29:16; 36:30), e às vezes num sentido profético. (Je 17:25; 22:4; Am 9:11; Za 12:7-12) Em certas profecias messiânicas focaliza-se a atenção no pacto do reino que Jeová fez com Davi. Por exemplo, Isaías diz que aquele chamado "Maravilhoso Conselheiro, Deus Poderoso, Pai Eterno, Príncipe da Paz", será firmemente estabelecido no "trono de Davi" por tempo indefinido. (Is 9:6, 7; veja também 16:5.) Jeremias assemelhou o Messias a "um renovo justo" que Jeová 'suscitaria a Davi'. (Je 23:5, 6; 33:15-17) Por meio de Ezequiel, Jeová fala do Pastor messiânico como "meu servo Davi". — Ez 34:23, 24; 37:24, 25.

Ao informar Maria de que ela teria um filho chamado Jesus, o anjo declarou que "Jeová Deus lhe dará o trono de Davi, seu pai". (Lu 1:32) "Jesus Cristo, filho de Davi", era o herdeiro tanto legal como natural do trono de Davi. (Mt 1:1, 17; Lu 3:23-31) Paulo disse que Jesus era o descendente de Davi segundo a carne. (Ro 1:3; 2Ti 2:8) O povo comum também identificou Jesus como o "Filho de Davi". (Mt 9:27; 12:23; 15:22; 21:9, 15; Mr 10:47, 48; Lu 18:38, 39) Era importante estabelecer isso, pois, conforme os fariseus admitiram, o Messias seria filho de Davi. (Mt 22:42) O próprio ressuscitado Jesus também deu testemunho, dizendo: "Eu, Jesus, . . . sou a raiz e a descendência de Davi." — Re 22:16; também Re 3:7; 5:5.

DAVI, CIDADE DE.

Nome dado à "fortaleza de Sião" após ter sido capturada dos jebuseus. (2Sa 5:6-9) Entende-se que este lugar seja o espigão ou cumeeira longa e estreita que se estende do monte Moriá para o S. De modo que ficava situada ao S do lugar onde mais tarde foi construído o templo por Salomão. Atualmente é um estreito planalto sulino bem mais baixo do que o monte Moriá. Nesta área foram realizadas extensas operações de pedreira, especialmente durante o reinado do Imperador Adriano e a construção da cidade romana Aelia Capitolina, por volta de 135 EC. Assim, evidentemente, nos tempos antigos, sua altitude era mais comparável à do monte Moriá, embora ainda ficasse abaixo da elevação do lugar do templo. — FOTOS, Vol. 1, p. 747, e Vol. 2, p. 947.

Este lugar era muito apropriado para uma "fortaleza", visto que era protegido em três lados por vales profundos, ao O pelo vale de Tiropeom e ao L pelo do Cédron, que se une ao vale de Hinom, na extremidade S do espigão. (1Cr 11:7) A cidade exigia mais proteção apenas ao N, e ali a cumeeira estreitava-se ainda mais, fazendo com que um ataque fosse extremamente difícil. O limite setentrional desta "Cidade de Davi" ainda não foi definitivamente estabelecido, embora alguns peritos sugiram como provável o acima mencionado estreitamento. Com o passar dos séculos, entulho encheu grandemente os vales, a ponto de tornar menos evidente a posição estratégica e inexpugnável deste lugar. Calcula-se que a área total da antiga Cidade de Davi tenha sido de 4 a 6 hectares.

No vale do Cédron, perto do sopé do lado oriental do espigão em que se encontrava a fortaleza, há uma fonte chamada Giom. (1Rs 1:33) Escavações arqueológicas indicam que, em tempos antigos, cortara-se um túnel que dava para um poço de mina através da rocha, tornando possível o acesso à fonte sem sair das muralhas da cidade. Sugeriu-se que foi por subir por este poço que Joabe e seus homens conseguiram penetrar na fortaleza e tomá-la. — 2Sa 5:8; 1Cr 11:5, 6.

O nome "Cidade de Davi" resultou de Davi estabelecer ali a sua residência real, depois de governar por sete anos e meio em Hébron. Ali, com contribuições de Hirão, de Tiro, foi construída a "casa de cedros" de Davi. (2Sa 5:5, 9, 11; 7:2) Davi fez trazer a Arca do Pacto da casa de Obede-Edom para a Cidade de Davi, podendo sua esposa, Mical, ver da janela da casa de Davi a chegada do cortejo. (2Sa 6:10-16; 1Cr 15:1, 29) Ao falecer, o rei foi sepultado nesta cidade, costume seguido com muitos outros monarcas da linhagem de Davi. — 1Rs 2:10.

Do Reinado de Salomão em Diante. Salomão transferiu a Arca para o recém-construído templo no planalto mais espaçoso ao N da Cidade de Davi. A expressão de que 'fizeram a Arca do Pacto de Jeová subir da Cidade de Davi' mostra que a área do templo ficava numa elevação maior, sendo o monte Moriá mais alto do que o espigão meridional. (1Rs 8:1) Depois de se casar com a filha de Faraó, Salomão a estabeleceu na Cidade de Davi. (1Rs 3:1) Mas, ao terminar uma residência nova, mais perto da área do templo, ele a mudou da Cidade de Davi, porque esta era encarada como sagrada, visto a Arca ter ficado ali. (1Rs 9:24; 2Cr 8:11) Salomão fez construções adicionais na Cidade de Davi, e Ezequias fez ali trabalhos de conserto em preparação para o ataque do assírio Senaqueribe. (1Rs 11:27; 2Cr 32:5) Ezequias desviou também as águas da fonte de Giom, trazendo-as para o lado O da Cidade de Davi, evidentemente, por cortar um túnel através da rocha, descoberto estar ligado com o reservatório de água de Siloé, na encosta SO do espigão. (2Cr 32:30) Seu filho e sucessor, Manassés, construiu uma muralha externa ao longo da encosta oriental do lado do vale do Cédron. — 2Cr 33:14.

Dos textos acima é evidente que, embora a área de Jerusalém se expandisse no decorrer do tempo, a Cidade de Davi continuou a ser um setor separado. Isto perdurou mesmo depois do retorno do exílio babilônico, mencionando-se certos aspectos da cidade em conexão com as turmas do conserto das muralhas da cidade. (Ne 3:15, 16) A "Escadaria da Cidade de Davi" evidentemente levava da extremidade sul da cidade para baixo. (Ne 12:37) Escavações feitas ali revelaram partes de tal escadaria, e um lance de degraus cortados toscamente na rocha neste ponto desce morro abaixo.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o termo "cidade de Davi" é aplicado a Belém, lugar de nascimento de Davi e de Jesus. — Lu 2:4, 11; Jo 7:42; veja JERUSALÉM.

DEBIR [Mais Recôndito; Mais Retirado].

1. Rei de Eglom, um dos quatro pequenos reinos aliados com o rei de Jerusalém para atacar a cidade de Gibeão por ter feito paz com Josué. (Jos 10:1-5) Render-se Gibeão a Josué causou temor, visto que provavelmente enfraqueceu qualquer frente unida contra Israel (Jos 9:1, 2), e ao mesmo tempo, pelo visto, deu a Josué maior mobilidade entre as partes setentrional e meridional da Terra da Promessa, permitindo a conquista do país setor por setor. O sítio de Gibeão fez com que o exército de Josué viesse em socorro dela, e, ajudado por milagres, Josué derrotou as forças militares cananeias, obrigando Debir e os outros reis a refugiar-se numa caverna. Ali ficaram encurralados até serem mais tarde executados. — Jos 10:6-27.

2. Cidade real cananeia (Jos 10:38, 39), também conhecida como Quiriate-Sefer e Quiriate-Sana. (Jos 15:15, 49; Jz 1:11) Ficava na herança de Judá, mas tornou-se uma cidade levítica dos coatitas. — Jos 21:9, 15; 1Cr 6:54, 58.

Existem aparentemente dois relatos a respeito da primeira conquista de Debir por Israel, como parte das operações militares de Josué. O primeiro relato registra simplesmente a aniquilação da população de Debir. (Jos 10:38, 39) O segundo, em Josué 11:21-23, é provavelmente uma recapitulação da mesma conquista (visto que o versículo 18 se refere aos "muitos dias que Josué travou guerra com todos estes reis"), ao mesmo tempo fornecendo a informação adicional de que Josué "decepou os anaquins . . . de Debir" e de outras cidades. Esta informação suplementar talvez tenha sido incluída para mostrar que mesmo os anaquins, de elevada estatura, que haviam infundido tanto medo no coração dos espias de Israel mais de 40 anos antes (Núm 13:28, 31-33; De 9:2), não se mostraram invulneráveis.

Não obstante, parece que os anaquins se estabeleceram novamente na cidade de Debir, talvez vindo da costa filisteia (Jos 11:22), enquanto Israel estava temporariamente no seu campo em Gilgal ou enquanto guerreava no N. (Jos 10:43-11:15) Embora as campanhas iniciais de Josué tivessem servido para subjugar a resistência unificada das forças inimigas na terra de Canaã, demolindo rapidamente todas as principais fortalezas, evidentemente este tipo de campanha militar não permitia o estabelecimento de guarnições para garantir a posse de todas as cidades destruídas. Assim, fez-se uma segunda conquista ou "operação de limpeza" em Debir, por Otniel, a quem, por ter-se distinguido na conquista da cidade, foi dada como esposa Acsa, a filha do veterano guerreiro Calebe. — Jos 15:13-19; Jz 1:11-15.

Não se pode determinar com exatidão quando, na história de Israel, ocorreu esta segunda conquista. O livro de Juízes começa com a frase "depois da morte de Josué", e então segue o relato da captura de Debir, por Calebe. (Jz 1:11-15) Isto, de acordo com alguns, faria com que a conquista de Debir, por Judá, fosse um acontecimento posterior à morte de Josué e significaria que o relato similar, encontrado em Josué 15:13-19, fosse um acréscimo posterior ao livro que leva o nome de Josué. Contudo, outros consideram Juízes 1:1 apenas qual introdução formal para ligá-lo ao livro de Josué, argumentando que dificilmente Calebe esperaria anos, até que Josué morresse, para só depois desalojar os anaquins da sua propriedade prometida. Assim, consideram o relato de Juízes como repetição do fornecido em Josué.

Peritos bíblicos apresentaram diversas sugestões a respeito da localização de Debir na região montanhosa de Judá. No passado, foi identificada com Tell Beit Mirsim, a uns 20 km ao OSO de Hébron. Todavia, agora é identificada com Khirbet Rabud, a uns 13 km ao SO de Hébron.

O nome antigo de Debir, Quiriate-Sefer (Jos 15:15; Jz 1:11), significa "Cidade do Livro". Isso tem levado alguns a conjecturar que Debir era o centro cananeu de aprendizado religioso e jurídico, e o lugar onde se guardavam registros públicos.

3. Lugar "na baixada de Acor", que aparece na lista das fronteiras de Judá. (Jos 15:7) Embora se desconheça sua localização exata, alguns geógrafos acreditam que o nome sobreviveu em Thogheret ed-Debr, ao SO de Jericó, e no uádi Debr, mais perto da localização aproximada do vale de Acor.

4. Lugar na fronteira de Gade, em Gileade. (Jos 13:26) Esta Debir costuma ser considerada a mesma que Lo-Debar, onde ficava o lar de Maquir (que hospedou Mefibosete, e, posteriormente, Davi). (2Sa 9:4-6; 17:27-29) Alguns procuram identificar Debir em Gade com Umm ed-Dabar, a 16 km ao S do mar da Galileia.

DÉBORA [Abelha].

1. Ama de Rebeca. Quando Rebeca deixou a casa de seu pai, Betuel, a fim de ir para a Palestina e casar-se com Isaque, Débora a acompanhou. (Gên 24:59) Depois de anos de serviço na casa de Isaque, Débora veio a achar-se na casa de Jacó, talvez depois da morte de Rebeca. Evidentemente uns 125 anos depois do casamento de Rebeca com Isaque, Débora faleceu e foi sepultada sob uma grande árvore, em Betel. O nome dado a essa árvore (Alom-Bacute, que significa "Árvore Maciça de Choro") indica quão amada ela se tornara para Jacó e sua família. — Gên 35:8.

2. Profetisa em Israel; esposa de Lapidote. (Jz 4:4) Não há evidência de que Lapidote e Baraque fossem a mesma pessoa, conforme alguns sugerem. A associação entre Débora e Baraque deu-se meramente por causa do seu interesse comum em libertar Israel da opressão cananeia. Débora morava sob uma palmeira situada na região montanhosa de Efraim, entre Ramá e Betel; "os filhos de Israel subiam até ela para julgamento". — Jz 4:5.

Jeová usou Débora para convocar Baraque de Quedes-Naftali e informá-lo do propósito de Deus, de usar 10.000 homens para derrotar o enorme exército do rei cananeu Jabim, sob o comando de seu chefe do exército, Sísera. Baraque tinha a promessa de Jeová de que Ele entregaria o inimigo nas suas mãos. Mas, além disso, ao juntar as tropas e conduzi-las ao monte Tabor, ele fez questão da presença de Débora como representante de Deus, embora ela fosse mulher. Débora mostrou-se disposta a deixar o seu lugar de maior segurança e a acompanhar Baraque. No entanto, ela profetizou que 'a coisa que embelezaria' a vitória seria de uma mulher. Essas palavras cumpriram-se quando a mulher Jael matou Sísera. — Jz 4:6-10, 17-22.

Débora e Baraque entoaram juntos um cântico no dia da vitória. Parte do cântico está escrito na primeira pessoa, indicando que foi Débora quem o compôs, em parte, se não integralmente. (Jz 5:7) Era costumeiro as mulheres comemorarem vitórias com cânticos e danças. (Êx 15:20, 21; Jz 11:34; 1Sa 18:6, 7; Sal 68:11) O cântico dá a Jeová todo o crédito e o louvor pela vitória em favor do seu povo. Acrescenta consideráveis informações à narrativa que o precede, e, para se obter um quadro completo, os dois devem ser considerados juntos. Após descrever o poder e a majestade de Jeová, e lembrar a condição de Israel antes da luta de Baraque, elogia as tribos que atenderam à convocação e indaga sobre outras que não o fizeram. Acrescenta vividamente alguns detalhes a respeito da batalha e da derrota dos cananeus, do ato corajoso de Jael de matar Sísera, e o desapontamento da mãe de Sísera, que esperou em vão os despojos e os escravos tomados a Israel, a serem trazidos após a esperada vitória de seu filho, Sísera. — Jz 5.

DEBULHA. Processo de separar os grãos das hastes e da palha. Se os respigadores tinham uma quantidade pequena para debulhar, ou se os grãos eram pequenos, como o cominho, ou se a debulha era feita secretamente em tempos perigosos, usava-se uma vara ou mangual para bater no cereal manualmente, no chão ou num lagar de vinho. — Jz 6:11; Ru 2:17; Is 28:27.

O local para as operações normais de debulha, no entanto, era a eira. Situada em geral num lugar mais alto, exposto ao vento, consistia numa área circular plana, com até 15 m de diâmetro, feita de pedra ou de terra batida. As eiras que não eram de propriedade particular muitas vezes eram agrupadas, perto de uma vila, para uso comum. Os feixes de cevada ou de trigo, os principais cereais da Palestina, eram espalhados no chão (atualmente, em geral, numa profundidade de 30 a 45 cm). O calcar de touros ou de outros animais, ao andarem constantemente em círculos na eira, gradualmente quebrava a palha e soltava os grãos da palha. Os animais não eram açaimados enquanto pisavam os grãos. — De 25:4; Os 10:11; 1Co 9:9, 10.

Instrumentos de debulha puxados por animais aceleravam o processo e faziam um serviço mais cabal do que o feito só com os cascos de animais. (Is 41:15; Am 1:3) Modelos usados em tempos mais modernos são de um pesado trenó, largo e chato, com dentes afiados de pedra ou de ferro fixados na face inferior, ou então de grades que arrastam pesados rolos cilíndricos com facas para cortar e quebrar as hastes do cereal. Tais trenós e instrumentos rolantes cobriam uma faixa adicional a cada volta, e o peso adicional do operador em cima deles aumentava sua eficiência. — Compare isso com Is 28:28.

Após o cereal ter sido bem debulhado e revirado várias vezes durante esse processo, os grãos eram joeirados. — Veja JOEIRAR.

Visto que seu espaço era aberto e plano, muitas vezes as eiras eram usadas para outras finalidades. Os ritos de pranto por Jacó foram realizados na eira de Atade, perto do Jordão. (Gên 50:10, 11) Sob a direção de Jeová, Davi comprou a eira de Araúna (Ornã), construiu ali um altar e ofereceu um sacrifício a Jeová. (2Sa 24:16-25; 1Cr 21:15-28) Mais tarde esta eira tornou-se o lugar do templo de Salomão. (2Cr 3:1) Quando Jeosafá e Acabe conferenciaram a respeito de guerrear contra a Síria, seus tronos foram colocados numa eira à entrada do portão de Samaria. — 1Rs 22:10.

Uso Figurado. Em sentido figurado, o tratamento que as hastes de cereais recebem na eira é um símbolo bem apropriado de como os inimigos de Jeová serão golpeados e despedaçados. (Is 41:15; Je 51:33; Miq 4:12, 13; Hab 3:12) A debulha ilustra também o tratamento esmagador que os homens às vezes impingem a outros. (2Rs 13:7) Ou, a separação do trigo da palha pode retratar a separação dos justos dos iníquos, por meio do julgamento de Jeová. (Mt 3:12) Em ainda outro sentido, uma debulha longa e abundante denota prosperidade e a bênção de Jeová. — Le 26:5; Jl 2:24.

DECÁLOGO. Veja DEZ PALAVRAS.

DECAPITAÇÃO. Modalidade de pena capital não prescrita na Lei mosaica. Tratava-se duma forma de execução existente na maioria das nações. Em Israel, quando se realizava uma decapitação, ocorria usualmente depois de a pessoa ter sido morta, e em geral era feita para trazer a morte da pessoa à atenção do público como vitupério ou como aviso de julgamento, ou advertência.

Faraó 'levantou a cabeça de cima do' chefe dos padeiros, evidentemente decapitando-o. (Gên 40:19) Davi, depois de abater Golias com uma pedra de funda, tomou a espada de Golias e "entregou-o definitivamente à morte" por decapitá-lo diante dos exércitos de Israel e dos filisteus. Isto causou grande medo no exército filisteu e resultou numa debandada geral. (1Sa 17:51, 52) Os filisteus cortaram a cabeça de Saul após a morte dele, depois prenderam seu cadáver, junto com os de seus filhos, à muralha da cidade de Bete-Sã. (1Sa 31:9, 12) Recabe e Baaná, homens iníquos, mataram o filho de Saul, Is-Bosete, e decapitaram-no, para levar a cabeça dele a Davi, pensando granjear o favor de Davi. Davi mandou matá-los por isso. (2Sa 4:5-12) O povo da cidade de Abel de Bete-Maacá, a fim de salvar a sua cidade, acatou o conselho duma mulher sábia e decepou a cabeça de Seba, filho de Bicri, lançando-a por cima do muro para Joabe. Não se declara se Seba foi morto antes de ser decapitado. (2Sa 20:15, 21, 22) Os homens mais idosos e de destaque de Samaria mataram os 70 filhos de Acabe e enviaram as cabeças deles em cestas a Jeú, em Jezreel, onde foram expostas em duas pilhas junto ao portão da cidade, como evidência do cumprimento do julgamento de Jeová declarado por meio de Elias. — 2Rs 10:6-10; 1Rs 21:20-22.

A Bíblia registra que Herodes Ântipas mandou que João, o Batizador, fosse decapitado na prisão a pedido da filha de Herodias. (Mt 14:8-11; Mr 6:24-28; Lu 9:9) João, numa visão, viu "as almas dos executados com o machado, pelo testemunho que deram de Jesus e por terem falado a respeito de Deus". — Re 20:4; veja CRIME E PUNIÇÃO.

DECÁPOLIS [Região das Dez Cidades]. Coalizão ou confederação de dez cidades (do grego dé·ka, que significa "dez", e pó·lis, "cidade"). O nome aplicava-se também à região na qual se concentrava a maioria dessas cidades. — Mt 4:25.

Depois da conquista de Alexandre, o Grande (Magno), por volta de 332 AEC, estabeleceram-se colônias gregas na Síria e na Palestina, evidentemente povoadas por veteranos dos exércitos de Alexandre, aos quais seguiram depois imigrantes de língua grega. Em muitos casos, essas colônias se desenvolveram no lugar de anteriores cidades judaicas, ao passo que outras foram construídas em lugares novos, especialmente a L do rio Jordão. Floresceram durante o domínio dos selêucidas da Síria e dos ptolomeus do Egito, mas o surgimento do estado macabeu-judaico (a partir de c. 168 AEC) pôs em grande perigo a sua posição relativamente independente. Embora as populações dessas cidades, sem dúvida, incluíssem muitos judeus, ainda assim elas eram centros de cultura e organização gregas, e por isso estavam em desarmonia com os objetivos macabeus. Quando Pompeu conquistou e reorganizou a Palestina, em 65 AEC, estas cidades helenísticas receberam proteção romana e condição favorecida. Permitiu-se-lhes cunhar suas próprias moedas, e, em grande parte, exercer um governo autônomo, embora ainda devessem lealdade a Roma e ao governo provincial sírio, e se requeresse delas pagar impostos e fornecer homens para o serviço militar.

Formação da Liga. Provavelmente em alguma época entre a conquista feita por Pompeu e a morte de Herodes, o Grande (c. 1 AEC), dez dessas cidades helenísticas juntaram-se na federação livre conhecida como Decápolis. O objetivo por trás dessa união parece ter sido o interesse mútuo em estreitas relações comerciais e também a proteção contra forças anti-helenísticas na Palestina ou contra agressivas tribos nômades nas regiões desérticas ao L. O termo “Decápolis” aparece pela primeira vez nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs e nos escritos de Josefo e de Plínio, o Velho (ambos do primeiro século da EC). Plínio, embora admitindo que algumas diferenças de opinião já existiam, alistou as seguintes cidades como figurando entre as dez originais: Damasco, Filadélfia, Rafana, Citópolis, Gadara, Hipo (Hipos), Díom, Pela, Galasa (Gerasa) e Canata. (Natural History [História Natural], V, XVI, 74) Dessas, só Citópolis (Bete-Seã) ficava ao O do Jordão; por causa da posição estratégica do vale de Esdrelom (Jezreel), este servia de ligação importante com a costa e os portos marítimos do Mediterrâneo. Damasco, bem ao N, na Síria, evidentemente foi incluída por causa de sua importância qual centro comercial. Filadélfia (antiga Rabá, moderna ʽAmman) era a mais meridional das dez cidades, situada a apenas c. 40 km a NE da extremidade setentrional do Mar Morto. As demais cidades ficavam na região fértil de Gileade ou na vizinha Basã. Crê-se que a maioria delas ficava junto a estradas principais daquela região, ou perto delas. Canata é, provavelmente, a Quenate de Números 32:42.

No segundo século da EC, Ptolomeu mencionou 18 cidades como fazendo parte de “Decápolis”, o que pode indicar que o nome passou a ser usado em sentido geral e que o número de cidades variava. Alguns peritos incluiriam Abila, alistada por Ptolomeu, em lugar de Rafana, entre as dez originais. De qualquer modo, parece evidente que a região de Decápolis não tinha limites bem definidos e que a autoridade das cidades de Decápolis não se estendia a todo o território intermediário, mas limitava-se apenas ao distrito de cada cidade específica.

O Ministério de Jesus e Decápolis. Embora pessoas de Decápolis estivessem entre as multidões que afluíram para ouvir o ensino de Jesus na Galileia (Mt 4:25), não existe menção específica de ele ter devotado tempo a qualquer uma de suas cidades helenísticas. Jesus realmente entrou na região de Decápolis durante seu ministério na Galileia quando cruzou o mar da Galileia e entrou no país dos gerasenos (ou gadarenos, segundo Mt 8:28). (Mr 5:1) Ali, porém, após ter expulsado demônios e permitido que entrassem numa manada de porcos, resultando na destruição da manada, as pessoas da cidade e da zona rural próximas suplicaram a Jesus que "saísse dos seus distritos". Ele aquiesceu, mas o homem a quem livrara da possessão demoníaca obedeceu à instrução de Jesus de ir dar testemunho a seus parentes, e ele proclamou em Decápolis as obras curativas de Jesus. (Mr 5:2-20) Alguns peritos acreditam que a manada de porcos ali era evidência adicional da influência não judaica prevalecente naquela região.

Depois da Páscoa de 32 EC, e ao retornar duma viagem às regiões de Tiro e de Sídon, na Fenícia, Jesus veio ao "mar da Galileia, subindo através das regiões de Decápolis". (Mr 7:31) Em alguma parte desta região ele curou um homem surdo que tinha um impedimento de fala, e, mais tarde, alimentou milagrosamente uma multidão de 4.000. — Mr 7:32-8:9.

História Posterior. Segundo Eusébio, antes da destruição de Jerusalém, em 70 EC, os cristãos da Judeia fugiram para a cidade decapolitana de Pela, na região montanhosa de Gileade, acatando assim o aviso profético de Jesus. — Lu 21:20, 21; The Ecclesiastical History (A História Eclesiástica), III, v, 3.

De modo algum sendo as únicas cidades da Palestina nas suas inclinações helenísticas, as cidades de Decápolis refletiam a mais forte expressão da influência grega. Acredita-se terem atingido seu auge durante o segundo século EC, e no século seguinte, a liga começou a desfazer-se. A evidência da forte influência grega, bem como da riqueza das cidades de Decápolis, pode ser vista nos restos impressionantes de teatros, anfiteatros, templos, banhos, aquedutos e outras construções em Gerasa (a moderna Jeraxe), bem como em outras cidades.

DECEPAMENTO. Em Israel, quando usado em relação a uma punição por violação da Lei, este termo significava um decepamento da vida. Alguns peritos rabínicos creem que se tratava apenas da expulsão de alguém da congregação de Israel, embora divirjam muito de opinião.

Por examinar os textos das Escrituras que alistam os delitos para os quais esta pena era aplicada, pode-se determinar que tem referência à pena de morte, executada quer pelas autoridades em Israel, quer pelo próprio Deus. Os crimes para os quais era prescrito o decepamento da vida são os de natureza muito séria. Incluem o desrespeito por Jeová (Deus e Rei de Israel), idolatria, sacrifício de crianças, espiritismo, dessacração de coisas sagradas, e práticas repugnantes tais como incesto, bestialidade e sodomia. Em alguns casos, a pena de morte é especificamente mencionada em conexão com o delito para o qual se decretava o 'decepamento' como sanção. — Êx 31:14; Le 7:27; 18:6, 22, 23, 29; 20:3-6; 22:3, 4, 9; 23:28-30; Núm 4:15, 18, 20; 15:30, 31; veja também Êx 30:31-33, 38.

O escritor da carta aos hebreus pelo visto tinha em mente a declaração de Números 15:30: "A alma que fizer algo deliberadamente . . . essa alma terá de ser decepada dentre seu povo", quando disse: "Qualquer homem que tiver desconsiderado a lei de Moisés morre sem compaixão, pelo testemunho de dois ou três." (He 10:28) Jesus usou esta expressão ao definir a punição para os "cabritos" simbólicos: "Estes partirão para o decepamento [gr.: kó·la·sin; literalmente: "truncamento; poda"] eterno, mas os justos, para a vida eterna." (Mt 25:46) O contraste aqui é entre a vida e a morte.

DECISÕES JUDICIAIS. Julgamento feito por pessoa(s) em autoridade. (2Sa 8:15; 1Rs 3:16-28; 10:9; 2Rs 25:6; 2Cr 19:8-10) Jeová Deus, qual Juiz, Legislador e Rei (Is 33:22), deu à nação de Israel um extenso código de leis. Suas decisões em assuntos jurídicos forneceram diretrizes para decidir assuntos envolvendo pessoas, bem como as questões internas e externas da nação. — Veja CAUSA JURÍDICA; LEI; TRIBUNAL DE JUSTIÇA.

Muitas dessas decisões judiciais foram fornecidas à nação de Israel no monte Sinai. (Ne 9:13) Às vezes, porém, certas situações exigiam uma decisão judicial especial. Por exemplo, no caso do manassita Zelofeade, que ao morrer deixou apenas filhas, surgiu a questão de se elas deveriam receber uma herança. Jeová fez então uma decisão que resolveu o caso e que depois serviu de estatuto para lidar com situações semelhantes. (Núm 27:1-11; 36:1-12; veja também Le 24:10-16.) Similarmente, uma decisão judicial feita por Davi a respeito da distribuição de despojos de guerra estabeleceu um precedente legal. — 1Sa 30:23-25.

Por classificar como delitos capitais certos atos comuns, mas extremamente prejudiciais, as decisões judiciais divinamente fornecidas destacavam-se como ímpares entre as leis das nações contemporâneas. Os povos vizinhos empenhavam-se em bestialidade, sodomia, incesto e outras práticas degradantes, prejudiciais ao bem-estar mental, físico e espiritual. (Le 18:6-30; 20:10-23) Portanto, as decisões judiciais de Jeová, se obedecidas, teriam enaltecido a nação de Israel. Com a bênção de Jeová, a estrita aderência de Israel aos mandamentos Dele teria resultado em benefícios tangíveis, fazendo com que outras nações dissessem: "Esta grande nação é indubitavelmente um povo sábio e entendido." (De 4:4-6) Visto que elas constituíam realmente uma bênção para Israel (Le 25:18, 19; De 4:1; 7:12-15; 30:16), não é de surpreender que o salmista orasse para que se lhe ensinasse as decisões judiciais de Jeová. (Sal 119:108) Ele as prezava tanto, que louvava a Jeová por Suas decisões judiciais sete vezes por dia (Sal 119:164), chegando mesmo a levantar-se à meia-noite para agradecer a Deus por elas. — Sal 119:62.

Contudo, embora boas, justas e santas, as decisões judiciais da Lei serviram meramente qual tutor que conduziu a Cristo. O pacto da Lei foi substituído pelo novo pacto. (Ro 7:12; Gál 3:24; He 8:7-13) Assim, é de esperar que a obediência às ordens ou decisões judiciais associadas ao novo pacto resulte em bênçãos muito maiores do que as usufruídas pelo Israel natural sob a Lei. — Jo 13:34, 35; 1Co 6:9-11; 1Pe 1:14, 15, 22, 23; 2:9, 10; 1Jo 5:3.

DECLARAR JUSTO. O verbo hebraico tsa·dhéq (aparentado com tsé·dheq, que significa "justiça; retidão") às vezes é traduzido por "declarar justo". (Êx 23:7; De 25:1) Esta expressão bíblica também é traduzida por "justificar", e as formas substantivas, por "justificação". As palavras originais (di·kai·ó·o [verbo], di·kai·o·ma e di·kai·o·sis [substantivos]) nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, onde se encontra a mais completa explicação do assunto, basicamente transmitem a ideia de absolver ou inocentar de toda acusação, julgar inocente, e, assim, justificar, ou declarar e considerar justo. — Veja Léxico do Novo Testamento Grego/Português (de F. Wilbur Gingrich e Frederick W. Danker; tradução de J. P. T. Zabatiero, Ed. Vida Nova), 1986, p. 57; também A Greek-English Lexicon (Léxico Grego-Inglês), de H. Liddell e R. Scott (revisado por H. Jones), Oxford, 1968, p. 429.

Assim, o apóstolo Paulo fala de Deus como "mostrado justo [forma de di·kai·ó·o]" em Suas palavras e vencendo ao ser julgado por difamadores. (Ro 3:4) Jesus disse que "a sabedoria é provada justa pelas suas obras", e que, ao prestarem contas no Dia do Juízo, os homens seriam 'declarados justos [forma de di·kai·ó·o]' ou condenados pelas suas próprias palavras. (Mt 11:19; 12:36, 37) Jesus disse a respeito do humilde cobrador de impostos que orou arrependido no templo, que ele "desceu para sua casa provado mais justo" do que o jactancioso fariseu que orava na mesma ocasião. (Lu 18:9-14; 16:15) O apóstolo Paulo declarou que aquele que morre foi "absolvido [forma de di·kai·ó·o] do seu pecado", tendo pago a pena de morte. — Ro 6:7, 23.

Além de tais usos, no entanto, essas palavras gregas são usadas em sentido especial como se referindo a um ato de Deus, pelo qual alguém é considerado inculpe (At 13:38, 39; Ro 8:33), e também ao ato de Deus, de declarar alguém perfeito em integridade e julgado digno do direito à vida, conforme se verá.

Em Tempos Pré-Cristãos. Originalmente, Adão era homem perfeito, justo, 'filho humano de Deus'. (Lu 3:38) Era justo em virtude de ter sido criado por Deus e declarado "muito bom" pelo seu Criador. (Gên 1:31) Mas ele deixou de manter a integridade perante Deus e perdeu a qualidade de justiça para si mesmo e sua descendência futura. — Gên 3:17-19; Ro 5:12.

Não obstante, dentre seus descendentes havia homens de fé que 'andavam com o verdadeiro Deus', tais como Noé, Enoque e Jó. (Gên 5:22; 6:9; 7:1; Jó 1:1, 8; 2:3) A respeito de Abraão declara-se que ele exercia fé em Deus e foi "declarado justo"; escreveu-se também que Raabe, de Jericó, manifestou a sua fé por obras e por isso foi "declarada justa", poupando-se-lhe a vida quando a cidade de Jericó foi destruída. (Tg 2:21-23, 25) Pode-se notar que na epístola de Tiago (conforme citada) e também na carta de Paulo aos Romanos (4:3-5, 9-11), na qual ele cita Gênesis 15:6, declara-se que a fé de Abraão 'lhe foi contada como justiça'. Esta expressão é melhor entendida quando se considera o sentido da palavra grega lo·gi·zo·mai, "contar", usada aqui.

Como 'contados' justos. Este verbo grego, lo·gí·zo·mai, era usado regularmente nos tempos antigos para cálculos ou computações numéricas, tais como em contabilidade, sendo usado ao se referir tanto a algo lançado como débito numa conta, como a algo lançado como crédito nela. Na Bíblia, é usado para significar 'considerar [contar como, imputar], creditar, contar, ou tomar em conta'. Assim, 1 Coríntios 13:5 diz que o amor "não leva em conta [forma de lo·gí·zo·mai] o dano" (compare isso com 2Ti 4:16); e cita-se o salmista Davi como dizendo: "Feliz o homem cujo pecado Jeová de modo algum levará em conta." (Ro 4:8) Paulo mostrou àqueles que encaravam as coisas segundo o seu valor aparente a necessidade de fazer uma avaliação correta da questão, de examinar como que ambos os lados do balanço contábil. (2Co 10:2, 7, 10-12) Ao mesmo tempo, Paulo se preocupava com que 'ninguém pusesse para o seu crédito [forma de lo·gí·zo·mai]' mais do que era correto quanto ao seu ministério. — 2Co 12:6, 7.

A palavra lo·gí·zo·mai também pode significar "estimar, avaliar, considerar, classificar ou contar (com um grupo, classe ou tipo)". (1Co 4:1) Neste respeito, Jesus disse que seria "contado [forma de lo·gí·zo·mai] com os que são contra a lei", isto é, considerado ou classificado como estando entre estes, ou como um deles. (Lu 22:37) O apóstolo, na sua carta aos romanos, diz que, quando o incircunciso guarda a Lei, "será sua incircuncisão considerada como circuncisão", isto é, avaliada ou encarada como se fosse circuncisão. (Ro 2:26) Em sentido similar, os cristãos foram exortados a 'considerar-se deveras mortos no que se refere ao pecado, mas vivos no que se refere a Deus, por Cristo Jesus'. (Ro 6:11) E os cristãos ungidos dentre os gentios, embora não fossem descendentes carnais de Abraão, foram "contados como o descendente [literalmente: semente]" de Abraão. — Ro 9:8.

Como podia Abraão ser declarado justo antes da morte de Cristo?

Assim, também, a fé de Abraão, conjugada com obras, 'foi-lhe contada [considerada, creditada ou imputada] como justiça'. (Ro 4:20-22) Naturalmente, isto não significa que ele e outros homens fiéis dos tempos pré-cristãos fossem perfeitos ou livres do pecado; no entanto, em virtude de exercerem fé na promessa de Deus a respeito da 'semente', e por se esforçarem a seguir as ordens de Deus, eles não eram classificados como injustos, sem boa reputação perante Deus, como os demais do mundo da humanidade. (Gên 3:15; Sal 119:2, 3) Amorosamente, Jeová os considerava inculpes, em comparação com o mundo da humanidade, apartado de Deus. (Sal 32:1, 2; Ef 2:12) Deste modo, Deus podia, em razão da fé que tinham, lidar com tais homens imperfeitos e abençoá-los, ao mesmo tempo permanecendo fiel às suas próprias normas perfeitas de justiça. (Sal 36:10) Todavia, esses homens reconheciam sua necessidade duma redenção do pecado e aguardavam o tempo devido de Deus para fornecê-la. — Sal 49:7-9; He 9:26.

O "Um só Ato de Justificação" de Cristo Jesus. As Escrituras mostram que, quando Jesus Cristo estava na terra, ele realmente tinha um organismo humano perfeito (1Pe 1:18, 19) e manteve a sua perfeição por continuar a reter e a fortalecer sua integridade sob prova. Isto estava em harmonia com o propósito de Deus, de tornar o Agente Principal da salvação 'aperfeiçoado por sofrimentos'. (He 2:10) Quer dizer, Jesus foi aperfeiçoado quanto à obediência e quanto a manter a integridade, e foi aperfeiçoado para a sua posição como Sumo Sacerdote de salvação, da parte de Deus, conforme Paulo mostra em Hebreus 5:7-10. Por terminar sua carreira terrestre livre de defeitos, em todos os sentidos da palavra, Jesus foi reconhecido por Deus como justificado. Foi assim o único homem que, através de prova, se manteve firme e positivamente justo, ou reto, perante Deus por mérito próprio. Por este "um só ato de justificação [forma de di·kaí·o·ma]", isto é, por Jesus mostrar-se perfeitamente justo por todo o seu proceder imaculado, inclusive seu sacrifício, ele proveu a base para que aqueles que têm fé em Cristo sejam declarados justos. — Ro 5:17-19; 3:25, 26; 4:25.

Na Congregação Cristã. Com a vinda do Filho de Deus qual prometido Redentor, veio a existir um fator novo em que Deus podia basear seu modo de lidar com seus servos humanos. Os seguidores de Jesus Cristo chamados para serem seus irmãos espirituais, com a perspectiva de ser co-herdeiros com ele no Reino celestial (Ro 8:17), são primeiro declarados justos por Deus à base da sua fé em Jesus Cristo. (Ro 3:24, 28) Este é um ato judicial de Jeová Deus; portanto, diante dele como Juiz Supremo, ninguém pode 'levantar acusação' contra Seus escolhidos. (Ro 8:33, 34) Por que toma Deus tal ação para com eles?

Em primeiro lugar, porque Jeová é perfeito e santo (Is 6:3); assim, em harmonia com a sua santidade, aqueles a quem ele aceita como seus filhos precisam ser perfeitos. (De 32:4, 5) Jesus Cristo, o principal Filho de Deus, mostrou ser perfeito, "leal, cândido, imaculado, separado dos pecadores". (He 7:26) Seus seguidores, entretanto, são tirados dentre os filhos de Adão, o qual, por causa do pecado, gerou uma família imperfeita, pecaminosa. (Ro 5:12; 1Co 15:22) Assim, conforme mostra João 1:12, 13, os seguidores de Jesus, para começar, não eram filhos de Deus. Jeová Deus, graças à bondade imerecida, providenciou um processo de "adoção", por meio do qual ele aceita tais favorecidos e os traz a uma relação espiritual como parte da sua família de filhos. (Ro 8:15, 16; 1Jo 3:1) Consequentemente, Deus estabelece a base para a admissão ou a adoção deles na qualidade de filhos por declará-los justos por meio do mérito do sacrifício de resgate de Cristo, no qual exercem fé, inocentando-os de toda culpa devida ao pecado. (Ro 5:1, 2, 8-11; compare isso com Jo 1:12.) Eles, portanto, são "contados" ou creditados como pessoas completamente justas, todos os seus pecados sendo perdoados e não imputados a eles. — Ro 4:6-8; 8:1, 2; He 10:12, 14.

Serem estes cristãos declarados justos, portanto, tem alcance muito maior do que no caso de Abraão (e de outros servos pré-cristãos de Jeová), já considerados. Indicando o alcance da justificação de Abraão, o discípulo Tiago escreveu: "Cumpriu-se a escritura que diz: 'Abraão depositou fé em Jeová, e isso lhe foi contado como justiça', e ele veio a ser chamado 'amigo de Jeová'." (Tg 2:20-23) Assim, por causa da sua fé, Abraão foi declarado justo como amigo de Deus, não como filho de Deus por "nascer de novo", visando a vida celestial. (Jo 3:3) O registro bíblico torna claro que, antes da vinda de Cristo, não se abrira para os homens nem tal filiação, nem tal esperança celestial. — Jo 1:12, 17, 18; 2Ti 1:10; 1Pe 1:3; 1Jo 3:1.

Pode-se ver assim que, embora gozem a condição de pessoas justas perante Deus, esses cristãos não são dotados de perfeição real ou literal na carne. (1Jo 1:8; 2:1) Em vista da perspectiva de vida celestial que esses seguidores de Cristo têm, essa perfeição literal num organismo carnal realmente não é necessária agora. (1Co 15:42-44, 50; He 3:1; 1Pe 1:3, 4) No entanto, por terem sido declarados justos, tendo-lhes sido "contada" ou creditada a justiça, os requisitos de justiça, de Deus, são satisfeitos, e ele introduz estes adotados no "novo pacto", validado pelo sangue de Jesus Cristo. (Lu 22:20; Mt 26:28) Esses adotados filhos espirituais no novo pacto, feito com o Israel espiritual, são 'batizados na morte de Cristo', tendo, no fim, uma morte semelhante à dele. — Ro 6:3-5; Fil 3:10, 11.

Embora Jeová lhes perdoe seus pecados de fraqueza e imperfeição carnais, todavia existe um conflito nestes cristãos, conforme ilustrado na carta de Paulo aos Romanos (7:21-25). Esse é entre a lei da sua mente reformada (Ro 12:2; Ef 4:23), ou a "lei de Deus", e a "lei do pecado" existente nos seus membros. Isto se dá porque seus corpos carnais não são aperfeiçoados, embora eles próprios sejam contados justos e se perdoem seus pecados. Este conflito contribui para a prova da sua integridade para com Deus. Eles podem vencer este conflito com a ajuda do espírito de Deus e o auxílio do seu misericordioso Sumo Sacerdote, Cristo Jesus. (Ro 7:25; He 2:17, 18) Para vencerem, porém, têm de constantemente exercer fé no sacrifício resgatador de Cristo e têm de segui-lo, mantendo assim sua justiça aos olhos de Deus. (Veja Re 22:11.) Deste modo 'se asseguram da sua chamada e escolha'. (2Pe 1:10; Ro 5:1, 9; 8:23-34; Tit 3:6, 7) Por outro lado, se empreenderem fazer do pecado uma prática, desviando-se da fé, perdem sua posição favorecida perante Deus como pessoas justas, porque "eles de novo pregam para si mesmos o Filho de Deus numa estaca e o expõem ao opróbrio público". (He 6:4-8) Estes se confrontam com a destruição. (He 10:26-31, 38, 39) Neste respeito, Jesus falou do pecado para o qual não há perdão, e o apóstolo João fez uma distinção entre o pecado "que não incorre em morte" e o pecado "que incorre em morte". — Mt 12:31, 32; 1Jo 5:16, 17.

Jesus Cristo, depois de manter a sua fidelidade até a morte, foi "vivificado no espírito", recebendo imortalidade e incorrupção. (1Pe 3:18; 1Co 15:42, 45; 1Ti 6:16) Foi assim "declarado [ou pronunciado] justo em espírito" (1Ti 3:16; Ro 1:2-4) e sentou-se à mão direita de Deus nos céus. (He 8:1; Fil 2:9-11) Os seguidores fiéis das pisadas de Cristo aguardam uma ressurreição semelhante à dele (Ro 6:5), na expectativa de se tornarem recebedores da "natureza divina". — 2Pe 1:4.

Outros Justos. Numa das ilustrações, ou parábolas, de Jesus, referente ao tempo da sua vinda na glória do Reino, aqueles que são semelhantes a ovelhas são chamados de "justos". (Mt 25:31-46) É notável, porém, que nesta ilustração esses "justos" são apresentados como separados e distintos daqueles que Cristo chama de "meus irmãos". (Mt 25:34, 37, 40, 46; compare isso com He 2:10, 11.) Visto que esses semelhantes a ovelhas dão ajuda aos "irmãos" espirituais de Cristo, demonstrando com isso fé no próprio Cristo, são abençoados por Deus e chamados de "justos". Iguais a Abraão, são contados, ou declarados, justos como amigos de Deus. (Tg 2:23) Esta posição justa significará sua sobrevivência quando os "cabritos" partirem "para o decepamento eterno". — Mt 25:46.

Uma situação paralela pode ser observada na visão registrada em Revelação (Apocalipse) 7:3-17. Ali, uma "grande multidão" de número indefinido é mostrada como distinta dos 144.000 "selados". (Veja Ef 1:13, 14; 2Co 5:1.) Que os desta "grande multidão" usufruem uma condição justa perante Deus é indicado por serem descritos como tendo 'lavado as suas vestes compridas e as embranquecido no sangue do Cordeiro'. — Re 7:14.

Os da "grande multidão", que sobrevivem à "grande tribulação", ainda não são declarados justos para a vida — quer dizer, como dignos do direito à vida eterna na terra. Precisam continuar a recorrer às "fontes de águas da vida", conforme guiados pelo Cordeiro, Cristo Jesus. Terão de fazer isso durante o Reinado Milenar de Cristo. (Re 7:17; 22:1, 2) Se se mostrarem leais a Jeová durante uma prova final, no fim dos mil anos, terão seu nome permanentemente registrado no livro da vida de Deus, Jeová assim declarando, ou reconhecendo, que eles finalmente são justos em sentido completo. — Re 20:7, 8; veja VIDA (Árvores da Vida).

Deus Provado Justo em Todos os Seus Atos. Pode-se ver que Deus, nos seus tratos com humanos imperfeitos, nunca viola suas próprias normas de retidão e justiça. Ele não declara pessoas pecadoras justas pelos próprios méritos delas, desconsiderando ou tolerando assim o pecado. (Sal 143:1, 2) Conforme o apóstolo Paulo explica: "Todos pecaram e não atingem a glória de Deus, e é como dádiva gratuita que estão sendo declarados justos pela benignidade imerecida dele, por intermédio do livramento pelo resgate pago por Cristo Jesus. Deus o apresentou como oferta de propiciação por intermédio da fé no seu sangue. Isto se deu, a fim de exibir a sua própria justiça, porque ele estava perdoando os pecados que ocorreram no passado, enquanto Deus exercia indulgência; a fim de exibir a sua própria justiça nesta época atual, para que fosse justo, mesmo ao declarar justo o homem que tem fé em Jesus." (Ro 3:23-26) Assim, Deus, mediante benignidade imerecida, proveu um arranjo legal, à base do sacrifício de Cristo, por meio do qual pode ser completamente justo e reto ao perdoar os pecados daqueles que exercem fé.

Tentativas de Mostrar-se Justo. Visto que apenas Deus pode declarar justo um homem, as tentativas de se mostrar justo à base de méritos próprios ou por aceitar o julgamento de outros quanto à justiça da pessoa, não têm nenhum valor. Jó foi repreendido porque, embora não acusasse Deus de algum mal, ele 'declarava justa a sua própria alma em vez de a Deus'. (Jó 32:1, 2) O homem versado na Lei, que interrogou Jesus a respeito do caminho para a vida eterna, foi indiretamente repreendido por Jesus pela sua tentativa de se mostrar justo. (Lu 10:25-37) Jesus condenou os fariseus por procurarem declarar-se justos perante os homens. (Lu 16:15) O apóstolo Paulo, em especial, mostrou que, por causa do estado imperfeito e pecaminoso de toda a humanidade, ninguém pode ser declarado justo pela tentativa de estabelecer a sua própria justiça por meio de obras da Lei mosaica. (Ro 3:19-24; Gál 3:10-12) Em vez disso, enfatizou a fé em Cristo Jesus como a verdadeira base para se ser declarado justo. (Ro 10:3, 4) A carta inspirada de Tiago complementa a declaração de Paulo por mostrar que essa fé tem de ser feita viver, não por obras da Lei, mas por obras de fé, como nos casos de Abraão e de Raabe. — Tg 2:24, 26.

Certos homens, afirmando falsamente ser apóstolos, desafiaram injustamente o apostolado e as obras cristãs de Paulo, procurando assim atrair a si a congregação coríntia. (2Co 11:12, 13) Paulo, sabendo que era fiel no cumprimento do serviço de mordomo para Cristo, declarou que ele não se preocupava com o julgamento de homens que, totalmente desautorizados, na realidade se arvoravam em "tribunal humano" para julgá-lo. Ele nem mesmo se estribava na sua própria avaliação de si mesmo, mas olhava para Jeová como seu Examinador. (1Co 4:1-4) Assim se estabelece o princípio de que não se pode confiar no julgamento de homens quanto à justiça da própria pessoa, ou a falta dela, a menos que o julgamento deles seja apoiado pela Palavra de Deus. A pessoa precisa recorrer à Palavra de Deus e deixar que ela a examine. (He 4:12) Entretanto, quando o apoio da Palavra de Deus é evidente, a pessoa repreendida por um irmão cristão, especialmente por um ancião na congregação, não agiria bem se rejeitasse tal repreensão por tentar mostrar-se justa. (Pr 12:1; He 12:11; 13:17) E todo aquele que ocupa um cargo de responsabilidade e que deve julgar um assunto ou uma disputa seria condenado por Deus se declarasse "justo ao iníquo em troca de suborno". — Is 5:23; Tg 2:8, 9.

DEDÃ.

1. Cusita da linhagem de Raamá. (Gên 10:7; 1Cr 1:9) Parece que sua posteridade povoou parte da Arábia.

2. Descendente de Abraão por meio de Jocsã. (Gên 25:3; 1Cr 1:32) Os dedanitas descendentes de Jocsã evidentemente estabeleceram-se ao S e ao SE da Terra da Promessa, na mesma vizinhança geral para onde Abraão mandou todos os filhos que teve com Quetura. — Gên 25:6.

Visto que ambas as famílias de dedanitas (a de Raamá e a de Jocsã) evidentemente povoaram partes da Arábia, surge a pergunta de que Dedã se fala quando o nome ocorre em escritos bíblicos posteriores. No entanto, a conexão às vezes estabelecida com outros povos semíticos, tais como Edom, Tema e Buz, indica o Dedã descendente de Jocsã. Por exemplo, Dedã é alistado como estando numa extremidade de Edom, cuja terra estava para ser devastada. (Ez 25:13) Dedã, na "planície desértica", também é mandado fugir diante das forças invasoras. As caravanas dedanitas devem procurar um lugar na floresta, ao passo que Tema, através de cujo território evidentemente fogem, é convocado para prover alimento e água para o sustento dos fugitivos. (Is 21:11-15; Je 49:8) Igual a Edom, Dedã, por fim, também se veria obrigado a tomar o copo do vinho do furor de Jeová. — Je 25:15, 21, 23.

Os peritos relacionam Dedã com o oásis de el-Ula, a uns 120 km ao SO de Taima.

Outras referências a Dedã não fornecem indícios sobre se a referência é a um povo camítico ou semítico. Por exemplo, Dedã é mencionado em Ezequiel 27:15, 20, como negociando com Tiro. Dedã também encara com interesses egoístas o planejado saque do povo de Deus por Gogue de Magogue. — Ez 38:13.

DEDICAÇÃO. Separar ou pôr à parte para um fim sagrado. O verbo hebraico na·zár (dedicar) tem o sentido básico de "manter apartado (separado); estar apartado; recolher-se". (Le 15:31; 22:2; Ez 14:7; compare isso com Os 9:10, n.) A palavra hebraica aparentada, né·zer, refere-se ao sinal ou símbolo de santa dedicação usado como coroa na cabeça santificada do sumo sacerdote ou na cabeça do rei ungido; referia-se também ao nazireado. — Núm 6:4-6; compare isso com Gên 49:26, n.

Na investidura de Arão como sumo sacerdote, colocou-se na cabeça dele um turbante de linho fino. Preso na frente deste turbante com um cordel de linha azul, para todos verem, havia "o sinal sagrado de dedicação [né·zer]", uma brilhante lâmina de ouro puro, tendo gravadas nela como selo as palavras, em hebraico: "Santidade pertence a Jeová." A seguir, derramava-se o santo óleo de unção sobre o sumo sacerdote na cerimônia de investidura. (Êx 29:6, 7; 39:30, 31 n.; Le 8:9, 12) Concordemente, o sumo sacerdote tinha de ter cuidado de evitar fazer algo que profanasse o santuário, "porque há sobre ele o sinal de dedicação, o óleo de unção de seu Deus". — Le 21:12.

De modo similar, a palavra né·zer tinha referência ao "diadema", ornato oficial usado na cabeça pelos reis ungidos de Israel, como símbolo do seu cargo sagrado. — 2Sa 1:10; 2Rs 11:12; 2Cr 23:11; Sal 89:39; 132:18; Pr 27:24.

Quando alguém fazia um voto de nazireu a Jeová, ele não devia cortar o cabelo, nem rapar a barba, enquanto estivesse sob o voto. De modo que o seu cabelo comprido tornava-se um sinal coroante do seu nazireado (né·zer). (Núm 6:4-21) Personificando Jerusalém como alguém que havia violado seus votos sagrados de santidade para com Jeová, o profeta Jeremias exclamou: "Raspa o teu cabelo não cortado [ou "cabelo dedicado"; niz·rékh, forma de né·zer] e lança-o fora." (Je 7:29) Jeová, por meio de outro profeta, descreve como os inconstantes israelitas "entraram até Baal de Peor e passaram a dedicar-se [wai·yin·na·zerú, forma do verbo na·zár] à coisa vergonhosa". — Os 9:10.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs faz-se referência a certas coisas dedicadas. A "festividade da dedicação" (en·kaí·ni·a) do inverno é mencionada em conexão com o ministério terrestre de Jesus. (Jo 10:22; veja FESTIVIDADE DA DEDICAÇÃO.) Esta palavra grega, en·kaí·ni·a, tem a mesma raiz que en·kai·ní·zo, que em Hebreus 9:18 é vertida por "dedicar" em certas traduções (AS, KJ, Dy, Sp), mas "inaugurar" em outras. (BJ, CBC, MC, NM, PIB) De modo similar, em Hebreus 10:20, algumas a traduzem por "dedicar" (AS, Dy, Sp), outras por "inaugurar". (BJ, IBB, NM) Jesus chamou atenção para os ensinos tradicionais dos fariseus com respeito a "corbã", isto é, uma dádiva dedicada a Deus. (Mr 7:11; Mt 15:5; veja CORBÃ.) Jesus advertiu também que viria o tempo em que o templo de Herodes, junto com as suas "pedras excelentes e com coisas dedicadas [a·na·thé·ma·sin]", seria derrubado. — Lu 21:5, 6.

DEDO DA MÃO. Como instrumento da mão e do braço, o dedo da mão tem muito a ver com a direção e os detalhes mais finos do trabalho feito por uma pessoa. Visto que fazem parte da mão, os dedos são às vezes usados como sinônimo de "mão", na Bíblia. As duas palavras, "dedos" e "mãos" são usadas em declarações paralelas na descrição da fabricação de ídolos. — Is 2:8.

Figuradamente, fala-se de Deus como realizando obras com "o(s) dedo(s)", tais como escrever os Dez Mandamentos em tábuas de pedra (Êx 31:18; De 9:10), fazer milagres (Êx 8:18, 19) e criar os céus (Sal 8:3). Que os "dedos" de Deus, empregados na atividade criativa, referem-se ao seu espírito santo, ou força ativa, é indicado no relato de Gênesis sobre a criação, onde se diz que a força ativa de Deus (rú·ahh, "espírito") movia-se sobre a superfície das águas. (Gên 1:2) Todavia, as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs fornecem a chave para o entendimento correto desse uso simbólico, pois o relato de Mateus explica que Jesus expulsava demônios por meio do 'espírito santo de Deus' e Lucas nos informa de que isso se dava por meio do "dedo de Deus". — Mt 12:28; Lu 11:20.

Os gestos são especialmente expressivos entre os orientais; um pequeno movimento muitas vezes tem significado importante. A Bíblia retrata o homem imprestável como "dando indicações com os dedos". (Pr 6:12, 13) Os israelitas teriam de eliminar do seu meio coisas tais como "o apontar com o dedo" (possivelmente em desprezo ou em acusação falsa), junto com o falar o que fosse prejudicial, se quisessem obter o favor de Deus. (Is 58:9-11) Visto que os dedos se destacam de modo proeminente diante dos olhos e são vitais para a realização dos propósitos da pessoa, o povo de Deus devia figuradamente 'atar Seus mandamentos aos seus dedos', como constante lembrete e guia em tudo o que fizesse. — Pr 7:2, 3; compare isso com Sal 144:1.

Quando uma delegação pediu ao Rei Roboão uma carga de serviço mais leve do que aquela que seu pai Salomão colocara sobre o povo, o rei foi aconselhado pelos seus jovens assistentes a responder que 'seu próprio dedo mínimo seria mais grosso do que os quadris de seu pai'; significando esta metáfora que ele colocaria sobre o povo uma carga ainda mais pesada. (1Rs 12:4, 10, 11) A palavra hebraica aqui empregada para "dedo mínimo" vem duma raiz que significa "ser miúdo, pequeno, mínimo".

Jesus Cristo usou uma figura de retórica semelhante ao ilustrar a dura e arrogante dominação exercida pelos escribas e pelos fariseus. Mostrando a completa indisposição desses líderes religiosos em ajudar o povo sobrecarregado, no mínimo que fosse, Jesus disse que 'amarravam cargas pesadas e as punham nos ombros dos homens, mas eles mesmos não estavam dispostos nem a movê-las com o dedo'. (Mt 23:2-4) Em outra metáfora, Jesus retratou "o rico" como desejando que Lázaro fizesse a coisa mínima por ele (trazer apenas água na "ponta do seu dedo"), pedido destinado a afastar Lázaro da sua posição favorecida junto a Abraão. — Lu 16:22, 24.

Um dos refains que lutou contra Israel era homem de tamanho extraordinário, uma anormalidade genética, tendo os dedos das mãos e dos pés aos seis, 24 ao todo. — 2Sa 21:20; 1Cr 20:6; veja também POLEGAR.

DEDO DO PÉ. Cada um dos membros terminais do pé humano. As palavras hebraica e aramaica usadas nas Escrituras para dedo da mão referem-se também, às vezes, ao dedo do pé. (2Sa 21:20; 1Cr 20:6; Da 2:41, 42) Em outros trechos, a palavra hebraica para "polegar" é usada também para 'dedo grande do pé'. — Êx 29:20; Le 8:23, 24; 14:14, 17, 25, 28.

Os dedos dos pés, sendo importantes para o equilíbrio e a direção do corpo ao caminhar, são mencionados nas Escrituras em sentido tanto literal como figurativo. Um costume praticado ocasionalmente com o fim de incapacitar para a batalha um inimigo capturado era cortar-lhe os polegares e os dedos grandes dos pés. — Jz 1:6, 7.

Na investidura do sacerdócio em Israel, Moisés tomou parte do sangue do carneiro da investidura e colocou-o sobre a orelha direita, sobre o polegar direito e sobre o dedo grande do pé direito de Arão, e de cada um de seus filhos. (Le 8:23, 24) O sangue do sacrifício sobre este importante membro do pé direito significava que eles tinham de traçar seu rumo e andar sem se desviar, usando da melhor forma suas habilidades nos deveres sacrificiais do sacerdócio. Jesus Cristo, o grande Sumo Sacerdote, cumpriu este tipo profético quando na terra (Mt 16:21-23), e seus subsacerdotes, seus irmãos gerados pelo espírito, precisam seguir de perto as suas pisadas. — He 7:26; 1Pe 2:5, 8; Re 20:6.

DEFEITO. Veja MÁCULA.

DELAÍAS [Jeová Puxou para Cima [para libertar]].

1. Sacerdote arônico do tempo de Davi, designado por sorte como chefe da 23.ª turma sacerdotal. — 1Cr 24:1, 5, 18.

2. Filho de Semaías; um dos príncipes da corte do Rei Jeoiaquim, que ouviu Baruque ler o livro escrito por Jeremias e que depois, pelo visto, apresentou um relatório ao rei. Daí, na ocasião em que o rolo foi lido perante Jeoiaquim, Delaías e outros dois príncipes instaram em vão com o rei para que não o queimasse. — Je 36:11-26.

3. Antepassado de certos homens que vieram a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC, mas que não puderam provar que eram israelitas. — Esd 2:1, 59, 60; Ne 7:61, 62.

4. Filho de Meetabel e pai do Semaías que foi contratado por Sambalá e Tobias para intimidar Neemias, o governador. — Ne 6:10-13.

5. Um dos sete filhos de Elioenai; descendente de Davi por Salomão. — 1Cr 3:10, 24.

DELEGADOS GOVERNANTES. "Delegados governantes" (hebr.: segha·ním, sempre usado no plural) ocorre 17 vezes na Bíblia, como, por exemplo, em Esdras 9:2; Neemias 2:16; Is 41:25; Jeremias 51:23 e Ezequiel 23:6. Referia-se a governantes subordinados ou oficiais inferiores, diferenciados de nobres, príncipes e governadores. Alguns tradutores vertem a palavra como "magistrados" (Al, BJ, CBC) ou "prefeitos" (PIB).

DEMAS [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de "Demétrio", que significa "De (Pertencente a) Deméter"]. Foi certa vez colaborador do apóstolo Paulo. Demas estava em Roma com o apóstolo durante o primeiro aprisionamento deste ali, e seus cumprimentos foram incluídos nas cartas aos colossenses e a Filêmon. (Col 4:14; Flm 24) Quando Paulo escreveu a Timóteo, durante seu segundo aprisionamento, Demas havia abandonado o apóstolo e partido para Tessalônica, talvez sua cidade natal. — 2Ti 4:10.

Não se revela exatamente como Demas abandonou Paulo 'por causa de seu amor ao atual sistema de coisas'. O apóstolo não diz que Demas se tornou apóstata ou opositor. Talvez o amor de Demas às coisas materiais e aos prazeres mundanos se tenha tornado mais forte do que seu amor aos assuntos espirituais. O temor de sofrer martírio junto com Paulo talvez tenha feito com que Demas procurasse um lugar mais seguro para assim preservar sua vida no então existente sistema de coisas. De qualquer modo, quando as condições se tornaram desfavoráveis, Demas deixou de aproveitar sua maravilhosa oportunidade de fortalecer seu irmão Paulo.

DEMÉTRIO [De (Pertencente a) Deméter [deusa grega da agricultura]].

1. Prateiro da cidade de Éfeso, na Ásia Menor, que instigou um tumulto contra o apóstolo Paulo e seus companheiros, no fim da estada de dois a três anos de Paulo em Éfeso (c. 53-55 EC), no decurso da sua terceira viagem missionária. A pregação de Paulo havia sido abençoada com êxito, fazendo com que muitos se desviassem da prática da magia e queimassem seus livros. Demétrio, que tinha um próspero negócio de fabricar santuários de prata da deusa Ártemis, ficando alarmado diante da perspectiva de perder a renda por causa do êxito de Paulo em fazer discípulos de Cristo, instigou os artífices e outros. Com um argumento duplo, da ameaça de perder o negócio e do perigo de o templo de Ártemis cair em descrédito, ele conseguiu lançar a cidade inteira em confusão.

Depois de cerca de duas horas, o escrivão da cidade conseguiu sufocar o alvoroço; salientou que, se Demétrio e os artífices tinham alguma acusação contra Paulo e seus companheiros, havia tribunais para cuidar do assunto legalmente, mas que aquela manifestação desordeira expunha a cidade à acusação de sedição por parte do governo romano. A multidão sossegou então, soltando os colaboradores de Paulo e deixando o teatro, cenário do distúrbio vergonhoso. Pouco depois, Paulo partiu para a Macedônia. — At 19:18, 19, 23-41; 20:1.

2. Cristão mencionado favoravelmente pelo apóstolo João numa carta enviada a Gaio, por volta de 98 EC. Demétrio talvez tenha sido o portador da carta para Gaio. A menção elogiosa de Demétrio, por João, talvez tenha sido feita para incentivar a hospitalidade da parte de Gaio, uma vez que parece ter sido costume das congregações ajudarem em prover de casa e comida os irmãos fiéis que viajavam pela causa das boas novas. — 3Jo 1, 12.

DEMÔNIO. Iníqua criatura espiritual, invisível, com poderes sobre-humanos. A costumeira palavra grega para demônio (dai·mon) ocorre apenas uma vez nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, em Mateus 8:31; em outros lugares aparece a palavra dai·mó·ni·on. Pneú·ma, a palavra grega para "espírito", às vezes é aplicada a espíritos iníquos, ou demônios. (Mt 8:16) Ocorre também acompanhada por termos qualificativos tais como 'iníquo', 'impuro', "sem fala" e "surdo". — Lu 7:21; Mt 10:1; Mr 9:17, 25; veja ESPÍRITO (Pessoas Espirituais).

Os demônios, como tais, não foram criados por Deus. O primeiro a se transformar num deles foi Satanás, o Diabo (veja SATANÁS), que se tornou o governante de outros filhos angélicos de Deus, os quais também se transformaram em demônios. (Mt 12:24, 26) Nos dias de Noé, anjos desobedientes se materializaram, casaram-se com mulheres, produziram uma geração híbrida, conhecida como os nefilins (veja NEFILINS), e depois se desmaterializaram quando veio o Dilúvio. (Gên 6:1-4) Todavia, ao retornarem ao domínio espiritual, eles não recuperaram a sua elevada posição original, pois Judas 6 diz: "Os anjos que não conservaram a sua posição original, mas abandonaram a sua própria moradia correta, ele reservou com laços sempiternos, em profunda escuridão, para o julgamento do grande dia." (1Pe 3:19, 20) De modo que é a esta condição de densa escuridão espiritual que são obrigados agora a confinar suas operações. (2Pe 2:4) Embora evidentemente impedidos de se materializarem, ainda têm grande poder e influência sobre a mente e a vida dos homens, tendo até mesmo a capacidade de entrar em homens e animais e possuí-los, e os fatos mostram que também usam coisas inanimadas, tais como casas, fetiches e amuletos. — Mt 12:43-45; Lu 8:27-33; veja POSSESSÃO DEMONÍACA.

O objetivo de toda esta atividade demoníaca é voltar as pessoas contra Jeová e a adoração pura Dele. A lei de Jeová, portanto, proíbe estritamente o demonismo em qualquer forma. (De 18:10-12) No entanto, o Israel refratário desviou-se tanto, que passou a sacrificar seus filhos e filhas aos demônios. (Sal 106:37; De 32:17; 2Cr 11:15) Quando Jesus estava na Terra, a influência demoníaca era muito prevalecente, e alguns dos seus maiores milagres consistiam em expulsar espíritos iníquos de pessoas vitimadas. (Mt 8:31, 32; 9:33, 34; Mr 1:39; 7:26-30; Lu 8:2; 13:32) Jesus concedeu este mesmo poder aos seus 12 apóstolos e aos 70 que enviou, de modo que, em nome de Jesus, eles também pudessem expulsar demônios. — Mt 10:8; Mr 3:14, 15; 6:13; Lu 9:1; 10:17.

A influência demoníaca nos assuntos humanos é igualmente manifesta hoje. Ainda é verdade que "as coisas sacrificadas pelas nações, elas sacrificam a demônios, e não a Deus". (1Co 10:20) No último livro da Bíblia, a "revelação de Jesus Cristo, que Deus lhe deu, para mostrar aos seus escravos as coisas que têm de ocorrer em breve", dá-se um aviso profético a respeito da acelerada atividade demoníaca na Terra. (Re 1:1) "Foi lançado para baixo o grande dragão, a serpente original, o chamado Diabo e Satanás, que está desencaminhando toda a terra habitada; ele foi lançado para baixo, à terra, e os seus anjos [demônios] foram lançados para baixo junto com ele. Por esta razão, . . . ai da terra e do mar, porque desceu a vós o Diabo, tendo grande ira, sabendo que ele tem um curto período de tempo." (Re 12:9, 12) Impuras expressões inspiradas, semelhantes a rãs, "são, de fato, expressões inspiradas por demônios e realizam sinais, e vão aos reis de toda a terra habitada, a fim de ajuntá-los para a guerra do grande dia de Deus, o Todo-Poderoso". — Re 16:13, 14.

Portanto, os cristãos têm de travar uma luta árdua contra esses invisíveis espíritos iníquos. Tiago, argumentando que apenas a crença não basta, diz: "Crês tu que há um só Deus? Fazes muito bem. Contudo, os demônios creem e estremecem." (Tg 2:19) "Nos períodos posteriores de tempo", advertiu Paulo, "alguns se desviarão da fé, prestando atenção a desencaminhantes pronunciações inspiradas e a ensinos de demônios". (1Ti 4:1) Não se pode ao mesmo tempo comer à mesa de Jeová e à mesa dos demônios. (1Co 10:21) Por isso, os fiéis têm de travar uma luta árdua contra o Diabo e seus demônios, "contra os governantes mundiais desta escuridão, contra as forças espirituais iníquas nos lugares celestiais". — Ef 6:12.

O que eram os demônios para os gregos aos quais Paulo pregava?

Este uso da palavra "demônio" é limitado e específico em comparação com as noções dos antigos filósofos e o modo em que esta palavra era usada no grego clássico. Neste respeito, o Theological Dictionary of the New Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento), editado por G. Kittel (Vol. II, p. 8) observa: "O sentido do adj[etivo dai·mó·ni·os] destaca bem claramente as particularidades distintivas do conceito gr[ego] sobre os demônios, porque denota aquilo que está fora da capacidade humana e assim deve ser atribuído à intervenção de poderes superiores, quer para o bem, quer para o mal. [To dai·mó·ni·on] nos escritores pré-cristãos pode ser usado no sentido de 'divino'." (Traduzido para o inglês e editado por G. Bromiley, 1971) Discutindo com Paulo, alguns filósofos epicureus e estoicos concluíram: "Ele parece ser publicador de deidades [gr.: dai·mo·ní·on] estrangeiras." — At 17:18.

Falando aos atenienses, Paulo usou uma forma composta da palavra grega dai·mon, dizendo: "Pareceis mais dados ao temor das deidades [gr.: dei·si·dai·mo·ne·sté·rous; na Vulgata latina, 'mais supersticiosos'] do que os outros." (At 17:22) Comentando esta palavra composta, F. F. Bruce observa: "O contexto tem de decidir se esta palavra é usada no seu sentido melhor ou pior. De fato, era tão vaga como 'religiosos' em ingl[ês], e aqui seria melhor traduzida por 'muito religiosos'. Mas o 'supersticiosos' da AV [Versão Autorizada, em inglês] não é inteiramente errado; para Paulo, a religião deles era mormente supersticiosa, como também era, embora por outros motivos, para os epicureus." — The Acts of the Apostles (Os Atos dos Apóstolos), 1970, p. 335.

Ao falar ao Rei Herodes Agripa II, Festo disse que os judeus tinham certas disputas com Paulo a respeito da "adoração da deidade [gr.: dei·si·dai·mo·ní·as; na Vulgata latina: 'superstição']" por parte deles. (At 25:19) F. F. Bruce observou que esta palavra grega "poderia ser vertida com menos polidez como 'superstição' (como na AV). O adjetivo correspondente aparece com a mesma ambiguidade em [Atos] 17:22". — Commentary on the Book of the Acts (Comentário sobre o Livro dos Atos), 1971, p. 483.

Veja DEMÔNIO CAPRINO.

DEMÔNIO CAPRINO. A palavra hebraica sa·ʽír (literalmente: peludo) refere-se a um bode ou a um cabritinho. (Le 16:18; Núm 7:16) No entanto, em quatro textos (Le 17:7; 2Cr 11:15; Is 13:21; 34:14), a palavra é geralmente considerada por tradutores como tendo um sentido além do significado comum de "bode" ou "cabritinho".

Tanto em Levítico 17:7 como em 2 Crônicas 11:15, é claro que o termo (se·ʽi·rím, plural) é usado para referir-se a coisas às quais é prestada adoração e são oferecidos sacrifícios, e isto em relação à religião falsa. Os tradutores das versões Septuaginta grega e da Vulgata latina, portanto, traduziram a palavra hebraica por "as coisas insensatas" (LXX) e "os demônios" (Vg). Tradutores e lexicógrafos modernos, em geral, adotam o mesmo conceito nesses dois textos, usando "demônios" (Al, So), "sátiros" (BJ, CBC, IBB, PIB) ou "demônios caprinos" (NM; veja também Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], de Koehler e Baumgartner, Leiden, 1958, p. 926, e A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament [Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento], de Brown, Driver e Briggs, 1980, p. 972), sendo exceções a tradução da Liga de Estudos Bíblicos, a versão dos Missionários Capuchinhos, a Bíblia Vozes e a Versão Brasileira, que vertem o termo literalmente como "bodes" em 2 Crônicas 11:15.

Segundo Heródoto, a crença grega em Pã, deus de aspecto caprino, pode ter sido influenciada pela adoração egípcia do bode.

As palavras de Josué, em Josué 24:14, mostram que os israelitas tinham sido até certo ponto influenciados pela adoração falsa do Egito durante sua permanência ali, ao passo que Ezequiel indica que tais práticas pagãs continuaram a afligi-los por muito tempo depois. (Ez 23:8, 21) Por esta razão, alguns peritos acham que o decreto divino, emitido no ermo para impedir que os israelitas oferecessem "sacrifícios aos demônios caprinos" (Le 17:1-7), e constituir Jeroboão sacerdotes "para os altos, e para os demônios caprinos, e para os bezerros que tinha feito" (2Cr 11:15), indicam que havia alguma forma de adoração do bode entre os israelitas, tal como a que era proeminente no Egito, especialmente no Baixo Egito. Heródoto (II, 46) afirma que foi de tal adoração egípcia que os gregos derivaram sua crença em Pã e também nos sátiros, deuses de natureza lasciva que habitavam as florestas, posteriormente representados como tendo chifres, rabo e pernas de bode. Alguns sugerem que essa forma de meio-animal, desses deuses pagãos, é a origem da prática de retratar Satanás com rabo, chifre e cascos fendidos, costume prevalecente entre professos cristãos na Era do Obscurantismo.

Não se declara, porém, exatamente o que eram tais "peludos" (se'i·rím). Ao passo que alguns consideram ser bodes literais ou ídolos em forma de bode, isto não necessariamente parece ser indicado; tampouco outros textos fornecem evidência desta natureza. O termo usado talvez simplesmente indique que na mente daqueles que os adoravam, esses deuses falsos eram concebidos como tendo forma caprina ou aparência peluda. Ou, pode ser que o uso de "bodes", nessas referências, apenas seja uma forma de desprezo por todos os objetos idólatras em geral, do mesmo modo como a palavra para ídolos, em diversos textos, deriva dum termo que originalmente significava "bolotas de esterco", não denotando, porém, que os ídolos fossem literalmente feitos de esterco. — Le 26:30; De 29:17.

O sentido de sa·'ír e se·'i·rím nos outros dois textos (Is 13:21; 34:14) não goza de aceitação tão geral como tendo relação com a adoração falsa. Nesses textos, as ruínas desoladas de Babilônia e de Edom são representadas como habitadas por criaturas selvagens, inclusive por se'i·rím. Algumas traduções vertem o termo no seu sentido comum como "bodes" (BJ [13:21]; Fi [34:14]; Yg) ou como "cabras selvagens" (BLH [13:21]; AS), ao passo que a versão Figueiredo, embora use "demônios" em Levítico e em Segundo Crônicas (Paralipômenos), prefere "peludos" em Isaías 13:21. Aqueles que preferem tais traduções nesses textos indicam que a palavra aparece entre outras criaturas conhecidas como animais ou aves literais. Objetando à tradução de sa·'ir por "sátiro" em Isaías 34:14, G. R. Driver (Palestine Exploration Quarterly [Revista Trimestral sobre a Exploração da Palestina], Londres, 1959, p. 57) salienta que o sátiro em parte alguma era usado na mitologia como símbolo de desolação, mas, antes, de lascívia e folia; favorecendo considerar o sa·'ir como bode literal, ele mostra que os bodes se dão bem em lugares ermos, e que se relata que cabras-selvagens são comuns na extremidade S do Mar Morto, e assim na direção do desolado Edom, contra quem se proferiu a profecia de Isaías (34:14).

Aqueles que favorecem a tradução em Isaías igual à indicada pelos textos de Levítico e Segundo Crônicas mostram que a tradução da Septuaginta usa "demônios" para se'i·rím em Isaías, e que João usa a mesma linguagem da Septuaginta (Is 13:21) ao descrever a desolada Babilônia, a Grande, como guarida de toda ave impura e de "demônios". (Re 18:2) Naturalmente, não se pode declarar definitivamente que o apóstolo João aqui citou realmente a Septuaginta. É digno de nota, porém, que, conforme declarado no Theological Dictionary of the New Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento), "a LXX presume . . . que [dai·mó·ni·on, traduzido por "demônio"] seja um termo depreciativo aplicado a deuses pagãos". — Editado por Gerhard Kittel, 1971, Vol. II, p. 12.

Portanto, este assunto não permite uma certeza absoluta. Isaías talvez injetasse na sua lista de animais e aves referências literais a demônios, não querendo dizer que tais demônios se materializassem realmente na forma de bodes, mas, antes, que a mente dos pagãos em volta desses lugares imaginaria os sítios desolados povoados por tais habitantes demoníacos. A história mostra que o povo da Síria e da Arábia já por muito tempo tem associado criaturas monstruosas com ruínas similares, e os jinn dos árabes são representados como tendo monstruosas formas peludas. Por outro lado, os se'i·rím que ocupavam as ruínas desoladas de Edom e Babilônia bem que podem ter sido animais reais, peludos e talvez de uma aparência que induzisse os observadores a pensar em demônios.

DENÁRIO. Moeda romana de prata, que pesava cerca de 3,85 g, e assim teria um valor atual de uns US$ 0,74. Levava a imagem da cabeça de César e era a "moeda do imposto por cabeça", que os romanos exigiam dos judeus. (Mt 22:19-21) Nos dias do ministério terrestre de Jesus, os lavradores recebiam em geral um denário por um dia de 12 horas de trabalho. (Mt 20:2) Assim, Revelação (Apocalipse) 6:6 retrata uma condição extrema ao declarar que um litro de trigo ou três de cevada custariam um denário (o salário de um dia inteiro).

Se o dispendioso nardo que Maria, irmã de Lázaro, usou para untar a Jesus Cristo tivesse sido vendido por 300 denários (aproximadamente o salário de um ano), provavelmente isto significaria que uma considerável soma de dinheiro teria sido depositada na caixa de dinheiro guardada por Judas Iscariotes. Não é de admirar que o desonesto Judas Iscariotes levantasse fortes objeções, visto que ficou sem poder apropriar-se indevidamente de uma fração sequer desta grande soma. — Jo 12:3-6; 13:29; Mr 14:3-11.

As duas faces de um denário romano. Observe, à esquerda, a efígie de Tibério César.

O prestimoso samaritano, da ilustração de Jesus, gastou dois denários (o salário de dois dias) para ajudar a um forasteiro desconhecido e declarou-se disposto a pagar as despesas adicionais em favor dele. (Lu 10:33-35) Em contraste, numa das ilustrações de Jesus, destacando a necessidade de ser perdoador, um escravo, cuja dívida de 60.000.000 de denários tinha sido cancelada, não estava disposto a perdoar a dívida de 100 denários de um coescravo. — Mt 18:24-33.

DENTES. Órgãos duros, ósseos, na boca, usados para mastigar o alimento, e, no caso dos animais, também como arma.

Jó, servo fiel de Deus, escapando por pouco da morte nos seus sofrimentos, disse: "Eu escapo com a pele dos meus dentes." (Jó 19:20) Parece que Jó simplesmente queria dizer que escapara com nada ou quase nada sobrando. Escapara com a pele dos seus dentes, isto é, com a "pele" daquilo que evidentemente não tem pele.

Ranger os dentes é usado frequentemente para indicar ira (Jó 16:9; At 7:54) ou angústia e desespero. (Mt 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30) Tal ranger de dentes pode vir acompanhado de palavras amargas e de ação violenta contra o objeto da ira.

Em Amós 4:6, a expressão "limpeza de dentes" é paralelizada com "carência de pão", representando condições de fome.

Os dentes simbolizam também o poder destrutivo duma nação ou de um povo. (Da 7:5, 7, 19; Jl 1:6; Re 9:8) Davi assemelhou os inimigos iníquos dos justos a leões ferozes, e pediu a Deus que os socasse no queixo e quebrasse os seus dentes. Isto os deixaria incapazes de causar dano. (Sal 3:7; 58:6) Os falsos profetas de Israel são apresentados como gananciosos e vorazes, "que mordem com os seus dentes" e que santificam a guerra contra todo aquele que não os alimente. — Miq 3:5; compare isso com Ez 34:2, 3; Mt 7:15; At 20:29.

Nos dias anteriores à destruição de Jerusalém, um dito comum entre o povo era: "Os pais foram os que comeram a uva verde, mas foram os dentes dos filhos que ficaram embotados." (Je 31:29; Ez 18:2-4) Dessa maneira tentavam escusar-se da culpa pelas condições adversas sobrevindas à nação por causa da iniquidade dela, alegando que o que lhes acontecia era o resultado daquilo que seus pais haviam feito.

DEPLORAR. Veja ARREPEPNDIMENTO.

DEPÓSITO. Armazém ou prédio no qual se guardavam gêneros alimentícios — vinho e azeite — bem como metais ou pedras preciosos, e outros artigos. Celeiro é o depósito usado para armazenar cereais em grão. Palheiros, torres e outras instalações para armazenagem eram comuns na antiguidade (1Cr 27:25; 2Cr 32:27, 28; Jl 1:17; Ag 2:19), e certas cidades serviam principalmente como centros de armazenagem. — Êx 1:11.

Havia necessidade de depósitos relacionados com o santuário, para se cuidar dos dízimos e das contribuições procedentes de campos, pomares e vinhedos, trazidos por Israel aos levitas. (Mal 3:10) Certos levitas eram encarregados dos depósitos e distribuíam essas provisões aos seus irmãos. — 1Cr 26:15, 17; Ne 12:44; 13:12, 13.

No antigo Egito, os celeiros eram de diversas estruturas, um tipo delas sendo similar ao atual silo. Tinha no alto uma porta para se depositar o cereal (por se subir uma escada) e pequenas portas corrediças ao nível do chão para a sua retirada. Celeiros subterrâneos também já são de longo uso no Oriente Médio, evidentemente sendo preferidos em regiões esparsamente povoadas, por ficarem ocultos a bandos de saqueadores.

Uso Ilustrativo. Jesus Cristo, ao exortar seus discípulos a não estarem ansiosos pelas necessidades materiais, mas a buscarem apenas o "pão para este dia", lembrou-lhes que Deus alimenta as aves, embora estas não ajuntem coisas em depósitos ou celeiros. (Mt 6:11, 25, 26; Lu 12:22, 24) Para mostrar que a vida não resulta das coisas que se possuem, Jesus apresentou uma ilustração a respeito de um rico que pensava em substituir seus depósitos por maiores, para guardar os seus muitos bens, mas apenas se confrontou com a morte; portanto, suas riquezas materiais não lhe foram de nenhum proveito. — Lu 12:13-21.

Em vez de incentivar-nos a procurar bens terrestres e assim acumular uma grande quantidade deles, o sábio escritor de Provérbios diz: "Honra a Jeová com as tuas coisas valiosas . . . Então os teus depósitos de suprimentos se encherão de fartura." (Pr 3:9, 10) Isto foi exemplificado por aquilo que se deu com a nação de Israel, a qual, quando servia obedientemente a Jeová e trazia os plenos dízimos ao santuário, era abençoada com abundância. (De 28:1, 8; 1Rs 4:20; 2Cr 31:4-10; Mal 3:10) Pelo visto, o Rei Davi se referiu a essas bênçãos materiais que Jeová dá a quem lhe obedece no Salmo 144:13-15. Depois de salvar Davi e seu povo e de dar a eles a vitória sobre os inimigos, Jeová abençoou o povo enchendo seus depósitos e dando a eles prosperidade material. Mostrando que Jeová era a fonte dessa prosperidade e felicidade, Davi termina esse salmo com as palavras: "Feliz o povo cujo Deus é Jeová!"

Uso Figurado. João, o Batizador, advertiu os fariseus e os saduceus a respeito da situação perigosa deles, comparando os verdadeiramente arrependidos a trigo a ser ajuntado, mas comparando aqueles líderes a palha. Disse-lhes: "O que vem depois de mim . . . [ajuntará] seu trigo no celeiro, mas a palha ele queimará em fogo inextinguível." (Mt 3:7-12; Lu 3:16, 17) Jesus predisse uma "colheita", que ele comparou à "terminação dum sistema de coisas", e em que os "ceifeiros" angélicos reuniriam o simbólico "joio" para ser queimado, ao passo que "o trigo" seria ajuntado no "celeiro" de Deus, a restabelecida congregação cristã, onde teria o favor e a proteção de Deus. — Mt 13:24-30, 36-43.

Jeová fala das coisas em torno das quais colocou limites por meio das forças criadas, ou leis naturais, bem como as coisas que reservou sob o Seu controle para fins especiais, como estando em "depósitos". Fala-se do mar 'recolhido como que por um dique, posto em depósitos'. (Sal 33:7) Também perguntou a Jó a respeito de outros fenômenos naturais que Ele às vezes tem usado contra seus inimigos: "Acaso entraste nos depósitos da neve, ou vês mesmo os depósitos da saraiva, que reservei para o tempo de aflição, para o dia de peleja e de guerra?" (Jó 38:22, 23; compare isso com Jos 10:8-11; Jz 5:20, 21; Sal 105:32; 135:7.) Até mesmo os exércitos dos medos e dos persas, sob o Rei Ciro, foram incluídos por Jeová entre "as armas da sua verberação" trazidas do Seu "depósito" contra Babilônia. — Je 50:25, 26.

DEQUER [Perfurante]. Pai de um dos 12 prepostos de Salomão. O filho de Dequer provia Salomão e sua casa de alimentos durante um mês do ano, evidentemente da região meridional de Dã. — 1Rs 4:7, 9.

DERBE. 'Cidade da Licaônia', na Ásia Menor, visitada pessoalmente duas ou talvez três vezes pelo apóstolo Paulo.

Provavelmente algum tempo antes do inverno setentrional de 47-48 EC, durante sua primeira viagem missionária, Paulo chegou a Derbe, após sofrer grave apedrejamento na vizinha Listra. Em Derbe, ele e Barnabé 'declararam as boas novas' e fizeram "não poucos discípulos", incluindo possivelmente "Gaio, de Derbe", mencionado mais tarde qual companheiro de viagem do apóstolo. Embora a história secular indique que Derbe, após 41 EC, era a cidade mais oriental da província política da Galácia, a descrição dela por Lucas, nesse relato, como 'uma cidade da Licaônia', tem, aparentemente, sentido regional ou etnográfico. (At 14:6, 19-21; 20:4) Meses mais tarde, após o concílio de Jerusalém a respeito da circuncisão (c. 49 EC), e no decorrer da sua segunda viagem, Paulo voltou a Derbe. (At 15:36; 16:1) Embora não mencionada diretamente por nome, Derbe talvez fosse também ponto de parada de Paulo na sua terceira viagem, quando fortaleceu os discípulos no "país da Galácia". (At 18:23) Não há registro de Paulo ter encontrado resistência física em Derbe, e ele não menciona a cidade, muitos anos depois, ao relatar seus sofrimentos em outros lugares na vizinhança dela. — 2Ti 3:11.

Derbe é agora identificada com Kerti Hüyük, a 21 km ao NNE de Karaman (a antiga Laranda), e a uns 100 km ao SE de Konya (a antiga Icônio). Sobre se Derbe estava incluída na carta de Paulo dirigida "às congregações da Galácia", veja GÁLATAS, CARTA AOS. — Gál 1:2.

DESMAMA. Processo de treinamento duma criança amamentada ao peito para ingerir alimentos de outro modo. Nos tempos antigos, a mãe em geral amamentava o filho por bastante tempo, a menos que circunstâncias, tais como a incapacidade de produzir leite suficiente ou sua morte prematura, exigissem que fosse contratada uma ama de leite para tal finalidade. (Êx 2:5-10) A época em que a amamentação ao peito era descontinuada assinalava um marco significativo na vida da criança. (Is 11:8; 28:9) Este acontecimento feliz podia ser motivo de festa, tal como aquela que Abraão providenciou na desmama de Isaque. — Gên 21:8.

Naqueles dias, as mulheres amamentavam os filhos por muito mais tempo do que fazem agora na maior parte da terra. Ao ser desmamado, Samuel tinha idade suficiente para ser entregue aos cuidados do sumo sacerdote Eli e para servir no tabernáculo. (1Sa 1:24-28) Ele devia ter então no mínimo três anos de idade, pois o registro dos varões levitas começava nessa idade. (2Cr 31:16) Raphael Patai, no seu livro Family, Love and the Bible (A Família, o Amor e a Bíblia; Londres, 1960, p. 175) diz a respeito de crianças árabes: "São conhecidos casos em que uma criança foi amamentada até o seu décimo ano." A evidência indica que Isaque tinha cerca de cinco anos de idade quando foi desmamado. — Veja ISAQUE.

A criança desmamada, embora não mais anseie a nutrição da mãe, ainda encontra segurança e satisfação nos braços dela. Comparavelmente, Davi acalmara e aquietara sua alma "como uma criança recém-desmamada sobre sua mãe", e sua alma estava 'sobre ele como uma criança recém-desmamada'. Evidentemente, sua alma ficou acalmada, aquietada e satisfeita porque ele não desejara destaque, manifestara humildade, evitara a soberba e se refreara de andar em coisas grandes demais para ele. Instou com Israel a agir de modo similar, humildemente 'esperando por Jeová por tempo indefinido'. — Sal 131:1-3.

DESONRA. Veja VITUPÉRIO.

DESPOJO. Saque ou presa tirados dum inimigo derrotado, costumeiramente pertencentes aos vitoriosos na guerra, ou, menos frequentemente, aquilo de que se apossaram bandidos ou assaltantes. (Lu 11:21, 22) Embora os israelitas obtivessem despojos nas suas vitórias, conseguir despojos não era o motivo das suas batalhas, mas constituíam parte da recompensa que Jeová lhes dava por cumprirem a Sua vontade, como executores usados por Ele.

Abraão, quando resgatou Ló das forças de Quedorlaomer, recusou aceitar do rei de Sodoma algum despojo para si mesmo, para que ninguém pudesse dizer que este, não Jeová, enriquecera Abraão. — Gên 14:1-24; He 7:4.

Repartição do Despojo. Quando se executou vingança nos midianitas por terem causado o pecado e a destruição de muitos de Israel (Núm 25), tomou-se muito despojo. Este foi repartido de modo que os 12.000 homens combatentes receberam metade, e os que ficaram em casa, a outra metade. Daí, uma parte dentre 500, do quinhão dos combatentes, foi para os sacerdotes, e uma parte dentre 50 da outra metade para os levitas. Os soldados deram voluntariamente grande parte do despojo de ouro, especialmente na forma de joias e ornamentos, ao santuário, em apreço pela proteção de Jeová na luta, na qual não perderam nem sequer um homem. — Núm 31:3-5, 21-54.

Esta fórmula talvez não tenha sido seguida à risca em casos posteriores, mas parece ter constituído a base geral para a repartição do despojo. (1Sa 30:16-20, 22-25; Sal 68:12) Posteriormente, sob o reinado, uma parte do despojo era separada para o rei ou para o santuário. — 2Sa 8:7, 8, 11, 12; 2Rs 14:14; 1Cr 18:7, 11.

Na Conquista de Canaã. Cidades das sete nações de Canaã deviam ser devotadas à destruição; todos os habitantes deviam ser mortos; apenas o gado e outros objetos podiam ser tomados. (De 20:16-18; 7:1, 2; Jos 11:14) Jericó, como primícia da conquista de Canaã, foi exceção; apenas os metais foram poupados e devotados ao santuário. (Jos 6:21, 24) A família de Raabe foi poupada por causa da fé que ela tinha. (Jos 6:25) Nas cidades pertencentes a povos de outras nações, se tinham de ser tomadas em guerra, as virgens e as crianças eram poupadas. (De 20:10-15) Todo o despojo em forma de bens ou outros artigos tinha de ser purificado: Se era de tecido, de pele ou de madeira, então tinha de ser lavado; se era de metal, tinha de ser processado por fogo. — Núm 31:20-23.

Cidades Apóstatas. Cidades israelitas que se tornassem apóstatas deviam ser completamente aniquiladas, junto com todos os seus habitantes, o despojo devia ser queimado na praça pública e a cidade devia ser deixada "um monte de ruínas por tempo indefinido". — De 13:12-17.

Cristo Despoja a Casa de Satanás. Jesus Cristo, quando estava na terra, despojou ou 'saqueou' a casa de Satanás por libertar os mantidos em servidão por demônios, curando os padecimentos que os demônios lhes tinham causado. (Mt 12:22-29) Também, "quando ele ascendeu ao alto, levou consigo cativos; deu dádivas em homens". Tirou estes do controle de Satanás como dádivas para a edificação da sua própria congregação. — Ef 4:8, 11, 12.

Despojadores Pertencentes à Religião Falsa. Cristo declarou que os escribas e os fariseus, iguais a assaltantes, eram "cheios de saque", evidentemente adquirido por extorquir viúvas e outras pessoas indefesas; e também porque mantinham o povo em servidão religiosa por subtrair "a chave do conhecimento". (Mt 23:25; Lu 11:52) Os líderes religiosos dos judeus destacavam-se igualmente em saquear os bens dos cristãos. — He 10:34.

DESTACAMENTO ITALIANO. Unidade do exército romano na qual Cornélio, de Cesareia, servia como centurião. Na única menção dela na Bíblia, fala-se de Cornélio como tendo sido "oficial do exército do chamado destacamento italiano". (At 10:1) Tratava-se provavelmente duma coorte, assim chamada para diferençá-la das legiões romanas regulares. Uma coorte, com o seu quadro completo, consistia em cerca de 600 homens, isto é, aproximadamente um décimo do tamanho de uma legião. Conforme o nome indica, esta coorte era provavelmente composta de voluntários recrutados na Itália, tendo estes a cidadania romana, quer por terem nascido como cidadãos livres, quer por liberdade adquirida.

O texto não diz que este destacamento italiano estava aquartelado em Cesareia. Diz apenas que Cornélio, um de seus oficiais de exército, morava em Cesareia. — At 10:1, 2, 22, 24.

DESTRUIÇÃO. Ato de destruir, arruinar ou aniquilar. A destruição usualmente se refere ao fim físico de um objeto ou de uma criatura vivente. (2Rs 21:3; Je 18:7; Da 2:12, 14, 18) Pode também referir-se à ruína espiritual. — 1Co 3:17; veja TEMPLO (Cristãos Ungidos — Templo Espiritual).

Uma palavra hebraica costumeiramente traduzida por "destruir" é 'a·vádh. (Le 23:30; Sal 21:8, 10) Tem o sentido básico de "perder-se" ou "perecer", e corresponde ao termo grego a·pól·ly·mi. (Êx 10:7; 1Sa 9:20; Mr 3:6; 4:38; Lu 15:4) A forma substantiva de 'a·vádh é 'avad·dóhn, significando "destruição". (Jó 26:6 n.; veja ABADON; APOLION.) O termo hebraico hha·rám significa "devotar à destruição", ou colocar sob proscrição sagrada, quer dizer, vetado para uso comum ou profano. — Êx 22:20 n; veja DEVOTADA, COISA.

Às vezes, Jeová achava necessário executar julgamento nos que mereciam a destruição, a fim de defender Seu nome e Suas normas de justiça. Em resultado da conduta iníqua das pessoas nos dias de Noé, Jeová executou um julgamento de destruição ao fazer com que um dilúvio global destruísse o mundo daquele tempo. (2Pe 3:5, 6) De modo similar, por causa do 'alto clamor de queixa a respeito de Sodoma e Gomorra', e de seu 'grave pecado', Jeová destruiu essas cidades e seus habitantes. (Gên 18:20; 19:13, 24, 25) Além de recorrer a forças naturais, Jeová às vezes usou agentes humanos para executar uma sentença de destruição. No caso das nações iníquas de Canaã, Jeová usou seu povo Israel como executor principal do seu decreto condenatório. — De 9:1, 3, 4; 20:15-18.

Jeová destrói com justiça os violadores deliberados da lei, os mentirosos e aqueles que são hostis aos seus servos. (Le 23:30; Sal 5:6; 143:12) Age contra a religião falsa e seus ídolos. (Núm 33:52; De 12:2, 3) Jeová até mesmo tomou ação destrutiva contra o seu povo Israel quando este se mostrou desobediente ao Seu pacto. — De 8:19, 20; 28:63; Je 31:28.

Será que todos os destruídos por Deus no passado permanecerão mortos para sempre?

A Bíblia indica que nem toda destruição é eterna. Isto é demonstrado pelo fato de que a palavra hebraica 'avad·dhón (destruição) é usada duas vezes em paralelo com "Seol". (Jó 26:6; Pr 15:11) O profeta Sofonias falou da destruição da Assíria, ao passo que Ezequiel disse que os assírios desceriam ao Seol. (Sof 2:13; Ez 32:21, 22) Moisés, ao falar da destruição dos rebeldes Datã e Abirão, escreveu que desceram "vivos ao Seol". (Núm 16:31, 33) Visto que Seol, na Bíblia, denota a sepultura comum da humanidade, da qual haverá uma ressurreição, é evidente que nem toda a destruição — nem mesmo toda a destruição às mãos de Deus — necessariamente é eterna.

Destruição Eterna. A Bíblia não indica que todos os mortos serão ressuscitados. Jesus deu a entender isso ao falar sobre "os que têm sido contados dignos de ganhar aquele sistema de coisas e a ressurreição dentre os mortos". (Lu 20:35) A possibilidade da destruição eterna de alguns é também indicada pelas palavras de Jesus em Mateus 10:28: "Não fiqueis temerosos dos que matam o corpo, mas não podem matar a alma; antes, temei aquele que pode destruir na Geena tanto a alma como o corpo." Sobre este texto diz The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology (O Novo Dicionário Internacional da Teologia do Novo Testamento; editado por C. Brown, 1978, Vol. 3, p. 304): "Mat. 10:28 não ensina a potencial imortalidade da alma, mas a irreversibilidade do julgamento divino dos impenitentes." Também, o Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament (Léxico Grego-Inglês do Novo Testamento; de Bauer, revisado por F. W. Gingrich e F. Danker, 1979, p. 95) dá o sentido de "morte eterna" à frase grega de Mateus 10:28, traduzida por "destruir na Geena tanto a alma como o corpo". Assim, ser consignado à Geena refere-se à total destruição, da qual a ressurreição é impossível. — Veja GEENA.

"Sodoma e Gomorra, e as cidades em volta delas, . . . são postas diante de nós como exemplo de aviso por sofrerem a punição judicial do fogo eterno." (Ju 7) Esta punição, evidentemente, aplica-se não apenas às cidades físicas, mas também aos seus habitantes, porque foram as próprias pessoas que cometeram os graves pecados que levaram à sua aniquilação.

A possibilidade da destruição eterna é uma questão que se apresenta especialmente durante a terminação do sistema de coisas. Quando os discípulos perguntaram a Jesus qual seria o 'sinal da sua presença e da terminação do sistema de coisas', ele incluiu como parte da sua resposta a parábola das ovelhas e dos cabritos. (Mt 24:3; 25:31-46) A respeito dos "cabritos" foi predito que o Rei celestial diria: "Afastai-vos de mim, vós os que tendes sido amaldiçoados, para o fogo eterno, preparado para o Diabo e seus anjos", e Jesus acrescentou: "Estes partirão para o decepamento eterno." É evidente que a atitude e as ações de alguns resultarão na sua destruição eterna.

Todavia, Jeová "não deseja que alguém seja destruído, mas deseja que todos alcancem o arrependimento". (2Pe 3:9; compare isso com Ez 18:23, 32.) De fato, Jeová amou tanto os humanos, que proveu o sacrifício resgatador do seu próprio Filho, Jesus Cristo. (Jo 3:16; compare isso com Tg 4:12.) Apesar desta amorosa provisão, a maioria nega-se a seguir "a estrada que conduz à vida", mas continua na "estrada que conduz à destruição". — Mt 7:13, 14.

A Bíblia indica que diversas coisas, pessoas e organizações hão de ser eternamente destruídas. Jesus chamou Judas de "o filho da destruição". (Jo 17:12) Trair Judas deliberadamente o Filho de Deus tornou-o sujeito à destruição eterna. O mesmo se dá com aqueles que blasfemam o espírito santo. Eles são culpados de "pecado eterno" e não terão perdão, "nem neste sistema de coisas, nem no que há de vir". (Mr 3:28, 29; Mt 12:32; veja BLASFÊMIA.) A destruição permanente aguarda também aqueles que, por livre vontade, "não conhecem a Deus e os que não obedecem às boas novas". (2Te 1:8, 9) O composto e apóstata "homem que é contra a lei" é também chamado de "o filho da destruição". (2Te 2:3; veja HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI.) A sentença de destruição eterna foi determinada para Satanás, seus demônios, a "fera" e o "falso profeta" simbólicos, e até mesmo para a morte e o Hades. (Mt 25:41; Re 20:10, 14, 15; 21:8) Todos estes são consignados ao "lago de fogo", quer dizer, sofrerão a destruição eterna. — Veja LAGO DE FOGO.

Nos tempos bíblicos, o fogo era usado como o meio mais cabal de destruição. Portanto, Jesus usou fogo para ilustrar a destruição completa dos iníquos. — Mt 13:40-42, 49, 50; veja FOGO.

DETENÇÃO. Veja CUSTÓDIA, DETENÇÃO.

DETESTÁVEL, ALGO (COISA). A palavra ta·ʽáv (detestar) e a aparentada toh·ʽe·váh (algo [coisa] detestável) ocorrem umas 140 vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Seu uso na Bíblia indica forte aversão ou rejeição de coisas ou pessoas à base da violação, por parte delas, de certos princípios ou de não satisfazerem normas específicas daquele que as encara assim.

De modo que lemos em Gênesis 43:32 que era "algo detestável" ("abominação", Al; "horror", BJ) para os egípcios comer com os hebreus, e, em Gênesis 46:34, que "todo pastor de ovelhas é algo detestável ["abominação", Al; "horror", BJ] para o Egito". Segundo G. Rawlinson, esta aversão baseava-se no desprezo dos egípcios pelos estrangeiros em geral e pelos pastores em especial. Novamente, em Êxodo 8:25-27, encontramos Moisés, plenamente apercebido da adoração de certos animais pelos egípcios (e especialmente da vaca) como sagrados, insistindo que Faraó permitisse que os israelitas partissem para o ermo para fazer seus sacrifícios, porque isso seria "algo detestável para os egípcios". (Egypt and Babylon From Sacred and Profane Sources [Egito e Babilônia de Fontes Sagradas e Profanas], 1885, p. 182) Essas normas egípcias, naturalmente, não foram divinamente determinadas ou aprovadas por Jeová Deus. — Veja ABOMINÁVEL, COISA.

As normas, os princípios e os requisitos do próprio Deus mostram ser a devida base para a detestação. (Le 18:1-5; De 23:7) Assim, o Salmo 14:1 diz: "O insensato disse no seu coração: 'Não há Jeová.' Agiram ruinosamente, agiram de modo detestável (uma forma de ta·ʽáv) na sua ação. Não há quem faça o bem." Portanto, um exame dos textos que usam as palavras hebraicas ta·ʽáv e toh·ʽe·váh dá compreensão do modo de pensar de Deus sobre os assuntos. Mostra também por que há um nítido contraste ou conflito aberto entre a posição ou atitude mental daqueles que seguem a Palavra de Deus e daqueles que a desconsideram ou rejeitam em favor das suas próprias normas ou das de outros. — Pr 29:27.

Entre os Cananeus. Antes de os israelitas entrarem em Canaã, Jeová esclareceu-lhes quais as práticas e os costumes dos povos de Canaã que lhe eram detestáveis, e estes eles deviam detestar. (Le 18:26-30) Notável era a prática da idolatria pelos cananeus. Deus disse: "Deves queimar em fogo as imagens entalhadas de seus deuses. Não deves desejar a prata e o ouro sobre elas, nem tampouco tomá-lo para ti, para que não sejas enlaçado por ele; pois é algo detestável [thoh·ʽaváth] para Jeová, teu Deus. E não deves introduzir algo detestável [thoh·ʽe·váh] na tua casa e assim realmente tornar-te algo devotado à destruição, igual a ele. Deves ter completa repugnância dele e absolutamente detestá-lo [wetha·ʽév tetha·ʽavén·nu], porque é algo devotado à destruição." (De 7:25, 26) O israelita culpado de fazer imagens para adoração religiosa devia ser amaldiçoado. (De 27:15) Não importava o artesanato que essas imagens refletissem, elas deviam ser moralmente repugnantes para o povo de Deus. — Ez 7:20; compare isso com Is 44:18-20.

Outras práticas dos cananeus a serem detestadas por Israel eram: o espiritismo com as suas sessões, encantamentos, adivinhação (De 18:9-12), sacrificar crianças em fogo aos seus deuses (De 12:31; Je 32:35; 2Rs 16:3), incesto, sodomia e bestialidade. (Le 18:6, 22-30; 20:13) Sem dúvida, a moralmente repulsiva prática da sodomia foi o motivo da severidade da regra que declarava que usar vestimenta do sexo oposto era "detestável". (De 22:5) Os cananeus praticavam também a prostituição "sagrada" de homens e mulheres que se prostituíam no serviço dum templo, mas Jeová proibiu trazer "a paga duma meretriz nem o preço dum cão" à sua casa, "porque são algo detestável". — De 23:17, 18; 1Rs 14:24.

À base destas e de outras práticas "abomináveis" ou "detestáveis", Jeová Deus ordenou a Israel devotar os cananeus à destruição, para que não houvesse nenhuma contaminação pela religião falsa. (De 20:17, 18) O israelita que praticasse essas mesmas coisas ou promovesse tal apostasia devia sofrer exatamente a mesma penalidade. — De 13:12-15; 17:2-7; Esd 9:1, 11-14.

Israel Contaminado. No restante das Escrituras Hebraicas, ta·ʽáv e toh·ʽe·váh são usados para descrever falcatruas ou fraudes comerciais (De 25:13-16; Pr 11:1; 20:10, 23), mentira (Sal 5:6; 119:163; Pr 12:19, 22), adultério (Ez 33:26), roubo, ganância, opressão dos pobres (Ez 18:10-13), altivez, derramamento de sangue inocente, ardis prejudiciais, dar falso testemunho e criar contendas entre irmãos; todos esses são classificados por Deus como "detestáveis". — Pr 3:32; 6:16-19; 11:20; 15:26; 24:9; 26:24-26.

A prática dessas coisas torna também a adoração prestada pela pessoa inaceitável para Deus, fazendo com que os sacrifícios e até mesmo as orações dela sejam "detestáveis" para Ele. (Pr 15:8, 9; 21:27; 28:9) Por este motivo, Jeová, mais tarde, classificou de 'detestáveis' os sacrifícios, o incenso, bem como as celebrações da lua nova e de sábados, por parte dos israelitas apóstatas. (Is 1:11-17) Perguntou-lhes: "Pode haver furto, assassinato, e adultério, e perjúrio, e oferta de fumaça sacrificial a Baal, e a ida atrás de outros deuses que não conhecestes, e é preciso que chegueis e que fiqueis de pé diante de mim nesta casa sobre a qual se invocou meu nome e que digais: 'Havemos de ser livrados', visto que fazeis todas estas coisas detestáveis ["abominações", Al]? Tornou-se esta casa sobre a qual se invocou meu nome um mero covil de salteadores aos vossos olhos?" (Je 7:9-11) Não sentiam mais vergonha ou humilhação pelos seus atos detestáveis. — Je 6:15; 8:12.

Embora os líderes de Israel, os reis e os sacerdotes, fossem culpados desses atos ou os tolerassem (1Rs 21:25, 26; 2Rs 21:2-12; 2Cr 28:1, 3; 33:2-6; 36:8, 14; Ez 8:6-17; 43:7, 8), ordenou-se aos profetas fiéis de Deus fazer os do povo saber que Jeová detestava seu proceder rebelde e avisá-los das consequências. (Ez 16:2, 51, 52; 20:4; 22:2; 23:36) Exortou-se o povo a rejeitar tais práticas detestáveis e a retornar aos estatutos e às normas de conduta de Deus. (Ez 14:6) Continuar a praticar aquilo que Deus detestava só podia resultar por fim em desolação e destruição. (Je 44:4, 22; Ez 6:11; 7:3-9; 11:21; 12:16; 33:29) Após o exílio, alguns se envergonhariam dos seus maus caminhos e Jeová lhes daria "um espírito novo". — Ez 6:9; 11:18-21; 36:31.

O que se passou com Jó mostra que aqueles que defendem as normas de Deus talvez sejam escarnecidos (Jó 30:9, 10) e rejeitados pelos anteriores conhecidos (Jó 19:19; Sal 88:8), porque esses "odiaram o repreendedor e detestaram o orador de coisas perfeitas". (Am 5:10) "Para os estúpidos é algo detestável desviar-se do mal." (Pr 13:19) Mas, Deus detesta aqueles que torcem Suas normas de modo a declarar "justo ao iníquo" e pronunciar "iníquo ao justo". (Pr 17:15) Ele promete no futuro a completa inversão da situação para os seus servos que são detestados assim. — Is 49:7; compare isso com Mt 5:10-12; 1Pe 3:16; 4:1-5; veja REPUGNANTE, COISA.

DEUEL [Conhecimento de Deus; Deus Conhece]. Aquele cujo filho Eliasafe serviu como maioral da tribo de Gade durante as peregrinações de Israel no ermo. (Núm 1:14; 7:42, 47; 10:20) No texto massorético e na Pesito siríaca, ele é chamado de "Reuel" em Números 2:14. Isto talvez se deva a um erro de escriba, visto que as letras hebraicas para "D" e "R" são muito similares, e o nome "Deuel", de fato, aparece em Números 2:14 no Pentateuco samaritano, na Vulgata latina e em mais de cem manuscritos hebraicos.

DEUS. Qualquer coisa adorada pode ser chamada de deus, visto que o adorador atribui a ela poder maior do que o seu próprio e a venera. Alguém pode até mesmo fazer de seu ventre um deus. (Ro 16:18; Fil 3:18, 19) A Bíblia faz menção de muitos deuses (Sal 86:8; 1Co 8:5, 6), mas ela mostra que os deuses das nações são deuses que nada valem. — Sal 96:5; veja DEUSES E DEUSAS.

Termos Hebraicos. Entre as palavras hebraicas traduzidas por "Deus" está 'El, provavelmente significando "Poderoso; Forte". (Gên 14:18) Ela é usada com referência a Jeová, a outros deuses e a homens. É também usada extensivamente na composição de nomes próprios, tais como Eliseu (que significa "Deus É Salvação") e Miguel ("Quem É Semelhante a Deus?"). Em alguns lugares, 'El aparece com o artigo definido (ha·'Él, literalmente: "o Deus"), com referência a Jeová, diferenciando-o assim de outros deuses. — Gên 46:3; 2Sa 22:31; veja apêndice na NM, p. 1507.

Em Isaías 9:6, Jesus Cristo é profeticamente chamado de 'El Gib·bóhr, "Deus Poderoso" (não 'El Shad·dai [Deus Todo-Poderoso], que é aplicado a Jeová em Gênesis 17:1).

A forma plural, 'e·lím, é usada com referência a outros deuses, tal como em Êxodo 15:11 ("deuses"). É também usada como plural de majestade e excelência, como no Salmo 89:6: "Quem entre os filhos de Deus [bi·venéh 'E·lím] pode assemelhar-se a Jeová?" Que se usa a forma plural para denotar aqui uma única pessoa, e em numerosos outros lugares, é apoiado pela tradução de 'E·lím pela forma singular The·ós na Septuaginta grega; igualmente por Deus na Vulgata latina.

A palavra hebraica 'elo·hím (deuses) parece derivar duma raiz que significa "ser forte". 'Elo·hím é o plural de 'elóh·ah (deus). Este plural, às vezes, refere-se a diversos deuses (Gên 31:30, 32; 35:2), com mais frequência, porém, é usado como plural de majestade, dignidade ou excelência. 'Elo·hím é usado nas Escrituras com referência ao próprio Jeová, a anjos, a deuses-ídolos (singular e plural) e a homens.

Quando aplicado a Jeová, 'Elo·hím é usado como plural de majestade, dignidade ou excelência. (Gên 1:1) Sobre isso escreveu Aaron Ember: "Que a linguagem do A[ntigo] T[estamento] renunciou inteiramente à ideia de pluralidade em . . . ['Elo·hím] (conforme aplicado ao Deus de Israel) evidencia-se especialmente no fato de que é quase invariavelmente construído com um predicado verbal no singular e tem atributo adjetival singular. . . . ['Elo·hím] deve ser antes explicado como plural intensivo, denotando grandiosidade e majestade, igual a O Grande Deus." — The American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures (A Revista Americana de Línguas e Literaturas Semíticas), Vol. XXI, 1905, p. 208.

O título 'Elo·hím traz à atenção a força de Jeová como Criador. Aparece 35 vezes sozinho no relato da criação, e toda vez o verbo que descreve o que ele disse e fez está no singular. (Gên 1:1-2:4) Nele reside a essência de forças infinitas.

No Salmo 8:5, os anjos também são chamados de 'elo·hím, segundo é confirmado pela citação desta passagem por Paulo, em Hebreus 2:6-8. São chamados de benéh ha·'Elo·hím, "filhos de Deus" (Al); "filhos do verdadeiro Deus" (NM), em Gênesis 6:2, 4; Jó 1:6; 2:1. O Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento), de Koehler e Baumgartner (1958), página 134, diz: "seres divinos, deuses (individuais)". E a página 51 diz: "os singulares deuses", e menciona Gênesis 6:2; Jó 1:6; 2:1; 38:7. Por isso, no Salmo 8:5, 'elo·hím é vertido por "anjos" (LXX); "semelhantes a Deus" (NM).

A palavra 'elo·hím é também usada com referência a deuses-ídolos. Às vezes, esta forma plural significa simplesmente "deuses". (Êx 12:12; 20:23) Outras vezes é o plural de excelência, e a referência é a um único deus (ou deusa). Todavia, é claramente evidente que esses deuses não eram trindades. — 1Sa 5:7b (Dagom); 1Rs 11:5 (a "deusa" Astorete); Da 1:2b (Marduque).

No Salmo 82:1, 6, 'elo·hím é usado referente a homens, juízes humanos, em Israel. Jesus citou este Salmo em João 10:34, 35. Eram deuses na sua qualidade de representantes e porta-vozes de Jeová. De modo similar, disse-se a Moisés que ele devia servir de "Deus" para Arão e para Faraó. — Êx 4:16 n.; 7:1.

Em muitos lugares nas Escrituras, 'Elo·hím é também encontrado precedido pelo artigo definido ha. (Gên 5:22) A respeito do uso de ha·'Elo·hím, F. Zorell diz: "Nas Escrituras Sagradas, especialmente o único verdadeiro Deus, Jahve, é chamado por esta palavra; . . . 'Jahve é o [único verdadeiro] Deus' De 4:35; 4:39; Jos 22:34; 2Sa 7:28; 1Rs 8:60 etc." — Lexicon Hebraicum Veteris Testamenti (Léxico Hebraico do Velho Testamento), Roma, 1984, p. 54; os colchetes são dele.

O Termo Grego. O costumeiro equivalente grego de 'El e 'Elo·hím na tradução Septuaginta, e a palavra para "Deus" ou "deus" nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, é the·ós.

O Verdadeiro Deus, Jeová. O verdadeiro Deus não é Deus sem nome. Seu nome é Jeová. (De 6:4; Sal 83:18) Ele é Deus em razão da sua qualidade de Criador. (Gên 1:1; Re 4:11) O verdadeiro Deus é real (Jo 7:28), é uma pessoa (At 3:19; He 9:24) e não é uma lei natural sem vida operando sem um legislador vivo, nem é uma força cega operando por meio duma série de acasos para desenvolver uma ou outra coisa. A edição de 1956 de The Encyclopedia Americana (A Enciclopédia Americana; Vol. XII, p. 743) comentava sob o verbete "Deus": "No sentido cristão, muçulmano e judeu, o Ser Supremo, a Causa Primária, e em sentido geral, conforme é considerado atualmente em todo o mundo civilizado, um ser espiritual, autoexistente, eterno, e absolutamente livre e Todo-Poderoso, distinto da matéria que ele criou em muitas formas e que ele conserva e controla. Não parece ter havido nenhum período na história em que a humanidade tivesse estado sem alguma crença num autor e governante sobrenatural do Universo."

Prova da existência do "Deus vivente". A existência de Deus é provada pela ordem, pelo poder e pela complexidade da criação, macroscópica e microscópica, e pelos Seus tratos com o seu povo no decorrer da história. Os cientistas aprendem muito pelo exame do que se poderia chamar de Livro da Criação Divina. Pode-se aprender dum livro somente quando seu autor investiu nele pensamentos e preparação inteligentes.

Em contraste com os deuses inanimados das nações, Jeová é "o Deus vivente". (Je 10:10; 2Co 6:16) Em toda a parte há testemunho da sua atividade e da sua grandeza. "Os céus declaram a glória de Deus; e a expansão está contando o trabalho das suas mãos." (Sal 19:1) Os homens não têm nenhum motivo ou desculpa para negar a existência de Deus, porque "aquilo que se pode saber sobre Deus é manifesto entre eles, porque Deus lho manifestou. Pois as suas qualidades invisíveis são claramente vistas desde a criação do mundo em diante, porque são percebidas por meio das coisas feitas, mesmo seu sempiterno poder e Divindade, de modo que eles são inescusáveis." — Ro 1:18-20.

Jeová Deus é descrito na Bíblia como vivendo de tempo indefinido a tempo indefinido, para sempre (Sal 90:2, 4; Re 10:6), e como Rei da eternidade, incorruptível, invisível, o único Deus verdadeiro. (1Ti 1:17) Nunca houve outro deus antes dele. — Is 43:10, 11.

Infinito, mas acessível. O verdadeiro Deus é infinito e está além de ser plenamente compreendido pela mente do homem. A criatura nunca poderia esperar tornar-se igual ao seu Criador ou compreender como funciona a Sua mente. (Ro 11:33-36) Mas Ele pode ser encontrado e é acessível, e supre aos seus adoradores todo o necessário para o bem-estar e a felicidade deles. (At 17:26, 27; Sal 145:16) Ele está sempre no apogeu da sua capacidade e disposição de dar boas dádivas e presentes às suas criaturas, conforme está escrito: "Toda boa dádiva e todo presente perfeito vem de cima, pois desce do Pai das luzes celestiais, com quem não há variação da virada da sombra." (Tg 1:17) Jeová sempre age no âmbito dos seus próprios arranjos justos, fazendo tudo em base legal. (Ro 3:4, 23-26) Por este motivo, todas as suas criaturas podem ter plena confiança nele, sabendo que ele sempre se apega aos princípios que estabelece. Ele não muda (Mal 3:6), e não há "variação" nele na aplicação dos seus princípios. Não há parcialidade da parte dele (De 10:17, 18; Ro 2:11), e é impossível que ele minta. — Núm 23:16, 19; Tit 1:1, 2; He 6:17, 18.

Seus atributos. O verdadeiro Deus não é onipresente, porque se fala dele como tendo localização. (1Rs 8:49; Jo 16:28; He 9:24) Seu trono está no céu. (Is 66:1) Ele é onipotente, sendo o Deus Todo-Poderoso. (Gên 17:1; Re 16:14) "Todas as coisas estão nuas e abertamente expostas aos olhos" dele, e ele é "Aquele que desde o princípio conta o final". (He 4:13; Is 46:10, 11; 1Sa 2:3) Seu poder e seu conhecimento se estendem a toda a parte, atingindo todo canto do universo. — 2Cr 16:9; Sal 139:7-12; Am 9:2-4.

O verdadeiro Deus é espírito, não carne (Jo 4:24; 2Co 3:17), embora ele às vezes compare seus atributos de visão, poder, e assim por diante, a faculdades humanas. De modo que fala figuradamente de seu "braço" (Êx 6:6), de seus "olhos" e de seus "ouvidos" (Sal 34:15), e indica que, visto ser o Criador dos olhos e dos ouvidos humanos, certamente pode ver e ouvir. — Sal 94:9.

Alguns dos atributos primários de Deus são amor (1Jo 4:8), sabedoria (Pr 2:6; Ro 11:33), justiça (De 32:4; Lu 18:7, 8) e poder (Jó 37:23; Lu 1:35). Ele é Deus de ordem e de paz. (1Co 14:33) É inteiramente santo, limpo e puro (Is 6:3; Hab 1:13; Re 4:8); feliz (1Ti 1:11) e misericordioso (Êx 34:6; Lu 6:36). As Escrituras descrevem muitas outras qualidades da sua personalidade.

Sua posição. Jeová é o Soberano Supremo do Universo, o Rei eterno. (Sal 68:20; Da 4:25, 35; At 4:24; 1Ti 1:17) A posição de seu trono é de derradeira superioridade. (Ez 1:4-28; Da 4:9-14; Re 4:1-8) Ele é a Majestade (He 1:3; 8:1), o Deus Majestoso, o Majestoso. (1Sa 4:8; Is 33:21) Ele é a Fonte de toda a vida. — Jó 33:4; Sal 36:9; At 17:24, 25.

Sua justiça e glória. O verdadeiro Deus é Deus justo. (Sal 7:9) Ele é o Deus glorioso. (Sal 29:3; At 7:2) Sua eminência está acima de todos (De 33:26), estando ele revestido de alteza e de força (Sal 93:1; 68:34), e de dignidade e esplendor. (Sal 104:1; 1Cr 16:27; Jó 37:22; Sal 8:1) "Sua atuação é a própria dignidade e esplendor." (Sal 111:3) Seu Reinado tem a glória do esplendor. — Sal 145:11, 12.

Seu propósito. Deus tem um propósito que ele executará e que não pode ser frustrado. (Is 46:10; 55:8-11) Seu propósito, conforme expresso em Efésios 1:9, 10, é "ajuntar novamente todas as coisas no Cristo, as coisas nos céus e as coisas na terra". Por meio de Cristo, toda a criação inteligente será trazida à plena harmonia com Deus. (Veja Mt 6:9, 10.) Ninguém existiu antes de Jeová; portanto, ele precedeu a tudo. (Is 44:6) Sendo o Criador, existiu antes de quaisquer outros deuses, e 'depois dele não haverá nenhum', porque as nações nunca produzirão um deus real, vivo, capaz de profetizar. (Is 43:10; 46:9, 10) Sendo o Alfa e o Ômega (Re 22:13), ele é o único e exclusivo Deus Todo-Poderoso; levará a um término bem-sucedido a questão da Divindade, sendo para sempre vindicado como único Deus Todo-Poderoso. (Re 1:8; 21:5, 6) Ele nunca se esquece de seus propósitos ou pactos, nem os abandona, o que faz dele um Deus de confiança e lealdade. — Sal 105:8.

Um Deus comunicativo. Tendo grande amor às suas criaturas, Deus dá-lhes ampla oportunidade de conhecer a ele e seus propósitos. Sua própria voz foi ouvida em três ocasiões por homens na Terra. (Mt 3:17; 17:5; Jo 12:28) Comunicou-se por meio de anjos (Lu 2:9-12; At 7:52, 53) e por meio de homens aos quais deu orientações e revelações, tais como Moisés, e especialmente por meio de seu Filho, Jesus Cristo. (He 1:1, 2; Re 1:1) Sua Palavra escrita é sua comunicação aos do seu povo, habilitando-os a estarem plenamente equipados como seus servos e ministros, e dirigindo-os no caminho da vida. — 2Pe 1:19-21; 2Ti 3:16, 17; Jo 17:3.

Contrastado com os deuses das nações. O verdadeiro Deus, o Criador dos gloriosos corpos celestes, tem glória e brilho além da capacidade de a vista humana suportar, porque "homem algum pode ver [a Deus] e continuar vivo". (Êx 33:20) Somente os anjos, criaturas espirituais, têm visão capaz de observar a Sua face em sentido literal. (Mt 18:10; Lu 1:19) Não obstante, ele não expõe os homens a tal experiência. Em benevolência, habilita os homens a ver suas belas qualidades por meio da sua Palavra, inclusive a revelação de si mesmo por meio do seu Filho, Cristo Jesus. — Mt 11:27; Jo 1:18; 14:9.

Deus nos dá no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse) uma ideia do efeito da sua presença. O apóstolo João teve uma visão que era como que ver ele a Deus, no sentido de que ela revelou o efeito de se vê-lo no Seu trono. Deus não era como homem em aparência, porque nunca revelou alguma figura sua ao homem, conforme o próprio João disse mais tarde: "Nenhum homem jamais viu a Deus." (Jo 1:18) Antes, mostrou-se que Deus era semelhante a gemas altamente polidas, preciosas, fulgurantes, belas, que atraem o olho e suscitam deleitada admiração. Era, "em aparência, semelhante à pedra de jaspe e a uma pedra preciosa de cor vermelha, e ao redor do trono [havia] um arco-íris, em aparência semelhante à esmeralda". (Re 4:3) De modo que ele tem aparência linda e é agradável de se ver, causando enorme admiração. Em volta do seu trono há glória adicional e um ambiente de calma, serenidade; a aparência de um perfeito arco-íris de esmeralda indica isso, lembrando a agradável calma tranquilizante após uma tormenta. — Veja Gên 9:12-16.

Portanto, quão diferente é o verdadeiro Deus dos deuses das nações, os quais frequentemente são retratados como grotescos, irados, ferozes, implacáveis, impiedosos, excêntricos nos seus favores e desfavores, horrendos e perversos, e prontos para torturar criaturas terrestres em alguma espécie de inferno.

"Um Deus que exige devoção exclusiva." "Embora haja os que se chamem 'deuses', quer no céu, quer na terra, assim como há muitos 'deuses' e muitos 'senhores', para nós há realmente um só Deus, o Pai." (1Co 8:5, 6) Jeová é o Deus Todo-Poderoso, o único Deus verdadeiro, e ele exige de direito devoção exclusiva. (Êx 20:5) Seus servos têm de manter fora ou excluir os outros do Seu devido lugar no coração e nas ações deles. Ele requer que seus adoradores o adorem com espírito e verdade. (Jo 4:24) Devem ter espanto reverente apenas diante dele. — Is 8:13; He 12:28, 29.

Na Bíblia, entre outros poderosos chamados de "deuses", está Jesus Cristo, que é "o deus unigênito". Mas ele mesmo disse claramente: "É a Jeová, teu Deus, que tens de adorar e é somente a ele que tens de prestar serviço sagrado." (Jo 1:18; Lu 4:8; De 10:20) Os anjos são "os semelhantes a Deus", mas um deles impediu que João o adorasse, dizendo: "Toma cuidado! Não faças isso! . . . Adora a Deus." (Sal 8:5; He 2:7; Re 19:10) Homens poderosos entre os israelitas eram chamados de "deuses" (Sal 82:1-7); mas Deus não teve por propósito que algum homem fosse adorado. Quando Cornélio começou a prestar homenagem a Pedro, este apóstolo impediu-o com as palavras: "Levanta-te; eu mesmo também sou homem." (At 10:25, 26) Decerto, os deuses falsos inventados e formados pelos homens no decorrer dos séculos, desde a rebelião no Éden, não devem ser adorados. A Lei mosaica adverte fortemente contra se desviar de Jeová para eles. (Êx 20:3-5) Jeová, o verdadeiro Deus, não tolerará para sempre a rivalidade de deuses falsos, sem valor. — Je 10:10, 11.

Depois do Reinado Milenar de Cristo, durante o qual ele reduzirá a nada toda autoridade e poder em oposição a Deus, ele entregará o Reino ao seu Deus e Pai, que se tornará então "todas as coisas para com todos". (Ro 8:33; 1Co 15:23-28) Por fim, todos os viventes reconhecerão a soberania de Deus e louvarão seu nome continuamente. — Sal 150; Fil 2:9-11; Re 21:22-27; veja JEOVÁ.

DEUS, O DEUS DE ISRAEL. Nome dado por Jacó ao primeiro altar que ele construiu depois de retornar de Harã. Em resultado do seu encontro em Peniel com o anjo de Jeová, Jacó recebeu o nome de Israel, e depois duma reunião pacífica com seu irmão Esaú, ele passou a morar em Sucote e então em Siquém. Adquiriu ali um terreno dos filhos de Hamor e armou nele a sua tenda. (Gên 32:24-30; 33:1-4, 17-19) "Depois erigiu ali um altar e chamou-o de Deus, o Deus de Israel", ou "Deus É o Deus de Israel". (Gên 33:20) Identificando-se por meio de seu recém-recebido nome com o nome do altar, Jacó indicava sua aceitação e seu apreço desse nome, e de Deus o ter guiado a salvo de volta à Terra da Promessa. Esta expressão ocorre apenas uma vez nas Escrituras.

DEUS DA BOA SORTE, DEUS DO DESTINO. Na época de Isaías, os judeus apóstatas estavam envolvidos na adoração do "deus da Boa Sorte" (hebr.: gadh) e do "deus do Destino" (hebr.: mení). Os adoradores destas deidades punham diante delas uma mesa de alimentos e bebidas. Jeová disse a tais adoradores que ele os destinaria à matança pela espada. — Is 65:11, 12.

Os assírios e os babilônios frequentemente preparavam alimentos e bebidas para os seus deuses. O povo de Harã fazia votos e esperava ser aceito pelo "Senhor da Sorte". Jerônimo, no seu comentário sobre Isaías 65:11, escreveu que "em todas as cidades, e especialmente no Egito e em Alexandria, havia um antigo costume idólatra, que no último dia do último mês do seu ano eles punham uma mesa coberta de diversas espécies de alimentos, e um copo duma mistura de vinho doce, para assegurar a boa sorte da fertilidade quer do ano que passou, quer do próximo". — Corpus Christianorum, Series Latina, LXXIII A, S. Hieronymi presbyteri opera, Pars. 1, 2A, Turnhout, Bélgica, 1963, p. 754.

DEUS DESCONHECIDO. Parte de uma inscrição num altar, vista pelo apóstolo Paulo quando esteve em Atenas. Os atenienses expressavam seu medo das deidades por construírem muitos templos e altares. Foram até mesmo a ponto de deificarem o abstrato, erigindo altares à Fama, à Modéstia, à Energia, à Persuasão e à Piedade. Talvez temendo que pudessem esquecer algum deus, e, por conseguinte, incorrer no desfavor dele, os homens de Atenas haviam erigido um altar inscrito com as palavras: "A um Deus Desconhecido." Na abertura do seu discurso aos estoicos, aos epicureus e a outros reunidos no Areópago (Colina de Marte), Paulo jeitosamente dirigiu a atenção deles para esse altar, dizendo-lhes que era a respeito desse Deus, até então desconhecido a eles, que lhes pregava. — At 17:18, 19, 22-34.

Que existiam na Grécia altares desta natureza é comprovado pelos escritores gregos Filostrato (170?-245 EC) e Pausânias (segundo século EC). Pausânias menciona altares de "deuses chamados Desconhecidos". (Description of Greece [Descrição da Grécia], Ática I, 4) Filostrato, na sua obra Life of Apollonius of Tyana (Vida de Apolônio de Tiana; VI, III), escreve: "É prova muito maior de sabedoria e sobriedade falar bem de todos os deuses, especialmente em Atenas, onde se erguem altares em honra até mesmo de deuses desconhecidos."

DEUSES E DEUSAS. As deidades que têm sido e ainda são adoradas pelas nações são criações humanas, produtos de homens imperfeitos, "inanes", que "transformaram a glória do Deus incorruptível em algo semelhante à imagem do homem corruptível, e de aves, e de quadrúpedes, e de bichos rastejantes". (Ro 1:21-23) Não surpreende, portanto, observarmos que tais deidades refletem as mesmas características e fraquezas de seus adoradores imperfeitos. Um termo hebraico usado para se referir a ídolos ou deuses falsos significa literalmente "coisas sem valor" ou "coisa inútil". — Le 19:4; Is 2:20.

A Bíblia refere-se a Satanás, o Diabo, como "o deus deste sistema de coisas". (2Co 4:4) Que Satanás é o "deus" mencionado aqui é claramente indicado mais adiante no versículo 4, onde diz que este deus "tem cegado as mentes dos incrédulos". Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 12:9, diz-se que ele "está desencaminhando toda a terra habitada". O controle que Satanás exerce sobre o atual sistema de coisas, inclusive os governos deste, foi indicado quando ele ofereceu a Jesus "todos os reinos do mundo" em troca de "um ato de adoração". — Mt 4:8, 9.

A adoração veneradora dos homens aos seus deuses-ídolos na realidade é dirigida "a demônios, e não a Deus". (1Co 10:20; Sal 106:36, 37) Jeová Deus requer devoção exclusiva. (Is 42:8) Quem adora um deus-ídolo repudia o verdadeiro Deus e assim serve os interesses do principal Adversário de Jeová, Satanás, e seus demônios.

Embora a Bíblia mencione diversos deuses e deusas dos povos antigos, nem sempre é possível identificar especificamente tais deuses.

Origem de Deuses e Deusas. Dificilmente podem-se atribuir ao acaso as notáveis similaridades prontamente observáveis quando se comparam os deuses e as deusas dos povos antigos. Concernente a isto, J. Garnier escreveu: "Não apenas os egípcios, os caldeus, os fenícios, os gregos e os romanos, mas também os hindus, os budistas da China e do Tibete, os godos, os anglo-saxões, os druidas, os mexicanos e os peruanos, os aborígines da Austrália e até mesmo os selvagens das ilhas dos Mares do Sul, devem todos ter derivado suas ideias religiosas de uma fonte comum e de um centro comum. Em toda a parte deparamo-nos com as mais surpreendentes coincidências nos rituais, nas cerimônias, nos costumes, nas tradições, e nos nomes e nas relações de seus respectivos deuses e deusas." — The Worship of the Dead (A Adoração dos Mortos), Londres, 1904, p. 3.

A evidência das Escrituras aponta para a terra de Sinear como o berço pós-diluviano dos conceitos religiosos falsos. Sem dúvida sob a direção de Ninrode, "poderoso caçador em oposição a Jeová", começou a construção da cidade de Babel e da sua torre, provavelmente um zigurate a ser usado na adoração falsa. Empreendeu-se este projeto de construção, não para dar honra a Jeová Deus, mas para a autoglorificação dos construtores, que desejavam fazer para si mesmos um "nome célebre". Também, era diametralmente oposto ao propósito de Deus, de que a humanidade se espalhasse sobre a Terra. O Todo-Poderoso frustrou os planos desses construtores por confundir a língua deles. Não mais podendo entender-se, gradualmente desistiram de construir a cidade e se dispersaram. (Gên 10:8-10; 11:2-9) No entanto, Ninrode aparentemente ficou em Babel e expandiu o seu domínio, fundando o primeiro Império Babilônico. — Gên 10:11, 12.

Quanto aos povos dispersos, para onde quer que tenham ido levaram junto a sua religião falsa, que seria praticada sob novos termos, na nova língua deles e em novos lugares. O povo foi disperso nos dias de Pelegue, que nasceu cerca de um século após o Dilúvio e morreu à idade de 239 anos. Visto que tanto Noé como seu filho Sem sobreviveram a Pelegue, a dispersão ocorreu numa época em que eram conhecidos os fatos a respeito de acontecimentos anteriores, tais como o Dilúvio. (Gên 9:28; 10:25; 11:10-19) Este conhecimento, sem dúvida, perdurava em alguma forma na memória do povo disperso. Isto é indicado pelo fato de que as mitologias dos antigos refletem várias partes do registro bíblico, porém, de forma distorcida e politeísta. As lendas descrevem certos deuses como matadores de serpentes; também, as religiões de muitos povos antigos incluíam a adoração de um deus colocado no papel de benfeitor, que sofre morte violenta na Terra e é então trazido de volta à vida. Isto talvez sugira que tal deus era, na realidade, um humano deificado, erroneamente considerado como o 'descendente [semente] prometido'. (Veja Gên 3:15.) Os mitos falam a respeito de casos amorosos entre deuses e mulheres terrenas, e dos feitos heroicos de sua descendência híbrida. (Veja Gên 6:1, 2, 4; Ju 6.) Dificilmente existe uma nação na Terra que não tenha uma lenda a respeito dum dilúvio global, e, nas lendas da humanidade, são também encontrados vestígios do relato da construção da torre.

Deidades Babilônicas. Após a morte de Ninrode, os babilônios sem dúvida estavam propensos a tê-lo em alta estima qual fundador, construtor e primeiro rei da sua cidade, e como organizador do Império Babilônico original. Segundo a tradição, Ninrode sofreu morte violenta. Visto que o deus Marduque (Merodaque) era considerado como fundador de Babilônia, alguns têm sugerido que Marduque representa o deificado Ninrode. Todavia, as opiniões dos peritos divergem muito quanto à identificação de deidades com humanos específicos.

Com o passar do tempo, os deuses do primeiro Império Babilônico começaram a se multiplicar. O panteão veio a ter numerosas tríades de deuses, ou deidades. Uma de tais tríades era composta de Anu (o deus do céu), Enlil (o deus da terra, do ar e da tempestade) e Ea (o deus que presidia as águas). Outra tríade era composta do deus-lua, Sin, do deus-sol, Xamaxe, e da deusa de fertilidade, Istar, amante ou consorte de Tamuz. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 529) Os babilônios tinham até mesmo tríades de demônios, tais como a tríade de Labartu, Labasu e Akhkhazu. A adoração de corpos celestiais tornou-se proeminente (Is 47:13), e diversos planetas vieram a ser associados a certas deidades. O planeta Júpiter foi identificado com o deus principal de Babilônia, Marduque; Vênus com Istar, deusa do amor e da fertilidade; Saturno com Ninurta, deus da guerra e da caça, e padroeiro da agricultura; Mercúrio com Nebo, deus da sabedoria e da agricultura; Marte com Nergal, deus da guerra e da pestilência, e senhor do além.

As cidades da antiga Babilônia passaram a ter as suas próprias divindades guardiãs especiais, algo parecido a "santos padroeiros". Em Ur, era Sin; em Eridu, Ea; em Nipur, Enlil; em Cuta, Nergal; em Borsipa, Nebo, e na cidade de Babilônia, Marduque (Merodaque). Na época em que Hamurábi tornou Babilônia a capital do império babilônico, aumentou, naturalmente, a importância do deus favorito da cidade, Marduque. Por fim, Marduque recebeu os atributos de anteriores deuses e substituiu estes nos mitos babilônicos. Em períodos posteriores, seu nome próprio, "Marduque", foi substituído pelo título "Belu" ("Dono"), de modo que finalmente passou a ser chamado de Bel. A esposa dele chamava-se Belit ("Senhora", por excelência). — Veja BEL; NEBO N.º 4.

O quadro de deuses e deusas apresentado em antigos textos babilônicos apenas reflete o pecaminoso homem mortal. Estes relatos dizem que as divindades nasciam, amavam, geravam filhos, lutavam e até morriam, assim como Tamuz. Diz-se que elas, aterrorizadas pelo Dilúvio, 'agacharam-se como cães'. As deidades são também retratadas como cobiçosas, frequentemente comendo como glutões e bebendo a ponto de ficar embriagadas. Tinham gênio furioso, e eram vingativas e suspeitosas umas das outras. Havia entre elas ódios amargos. Para ilustrar isso: Tiamat, decidida a destruir os outros deuses, foi vencida por Marduque, que a partiu ao meio, formando com uma metade o céu e usando a outra metade com relação ao estabelecimento da Terra. Eresquigal, deusa do além, mandou que Namtar, deus da pestilência, encarcerasse a irmã dela, Istar, e a afligisse com 60 misérias. — Veja NERGAL.

O acima fornece algumas indicações sobre o ambiente que o fiel Abraão deixou para trás quando partiu da cidade caldeia de Ur, que então estava mergulhada na idolatria babilônica. (Gên 11:31; 12:1; Jos 24:2, 14, 15) Séculos mais tarde, foi para Babilônia, "uma terra de imagens entalhadas" e de imundos "ídolos sórdidos", que milhares de cativos judeus foram mandados. — Je 50:1, 2, 38; 2Rs cap. 25.

Deidades Assírias. Falando-se de modo geral, os deuses e as deusas assírios são idênticos às deidades babilônicas. No entanto, uma deidade, Assur, o deus principal, parece ter sido exclusivo do panteão assírio. Visto que a Assíria derivou seu nome de Assur, tem-se sugerido que este deus, na realidade, seja o filho de Sem, chamado Assur, deificado por praticantes da adoração falsa. — Gên 10:21, 22.

Dessemelhante do Marduque babilônico, que também era adorado na Assíria, mas cuja sede de adoração sempre permaneceu na cidade de Babilônia, a sede da adoração de Assur mudava conforme os reis da Assíria passavam a fixar residência oficial em outras cidades. Também, construíram-se santuários de Assur em diversos lugares da Assíria. Um estandarte militar era símbolo primário de Assur, e era levado para o grosso da batalha. O círculo ou disco alado, do qual frequentemente emerge um homem barbudo, representava o deus Assur. Às vezes mostra-se a figura humana segurando um arco, ou no ato de atirar uma flecha. Outra representação de Assur sugere o conceito duma tríade. Além da figura central emergindo do círculo, mostram-se duas cabeças humanas por cima das asas, uma de cada lado da figura central. — Veja FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 529; ASSÍRIA; NISROQUE.

Era entre tais assírios que exilados do reino setentrional das dez tribos se encontravam após a queda de Samaria em 740 AEC. (2Rs 17:1-6) Mais tarde, o profeta Naum predisse a queda de Nínive (capital da Assíria) e de seus deuses, destruição que ocorreu em 632 AEC. — Na 1:1, 14.

Deidades Egípcias. Os deuses e deusas adorados pelos egípcios evidenciam uma herança basicamente babilônica. Havia tríades de deidades e até mesmo tríades triplas, ou "enéades". Uma das tríades populares consistia em Osíris, sua consorte Ísis e o filho deles, Hórus. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 529.

Osíris era o mais popular dos deuses egípcios e era considerado filho do deus-terra, Geb, e da deusa-céu, Nut. Dizia-se que Osíris tornou-se marido de Ísis e reinou sobre o Egito. Os relatos mitológicos contam que Osíris foi assassinado pelo seu irmão, Set, e então trazido à vida, tornando-se o juiz e o rei dos mortos. O relacionamento entre Osíris e Ísis, e as respectivas características deles, correspondem notavelmente ao relacionamento e às características dos babilônios Tamuz e Istar. Assim, muitos peritos acham que eles são os mesmos.

A adoração de mãe e filho era também muito popular no Egito. Ísis é muitas vezes retratada com o menino Hórus no colo. Esta figura é tão parecida com a da Madona ("Nossa Senhora") e o filho, que certas pessoas na cristandade às vezes a têm venerado em ignorância. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 529) Com respeito ao deus Hórus, existe evidência da distorção da promessa edênica concernente ao descendente, ou semente, que havia de machucar a cabeça da serpente. (Gên 3:15) Hórus, às vezes, é retratado pisoteando crocodilos, e agarrando cobras e escorpiões. Segundo certo relato, quando Hórus passou a vingar a morte de seu pai Osíris, Set, que assassinara Osíris, transformou-se numa serpente.

Em esculturas e pinturas egípcias, o símbolo sagrado, a cruz ansada, aparece muitas vezes. Este chamado símbolo da vida assemelha-se à letra "T", com uma asa oval na parte superior, e provavelmente representava os órgãos de reprodução masculino e feminino combinados. Muitas vezes as deidades egípcias são representadas segurando a cruz ansada. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 530.

Muitas eram as criaturas veneradas como sagradas pelos egípcios. Incluíam o abutre, o carneiro, o chacal, o crocodilo, o escaravelho, o escorpião, o falcão, o gato, o hipopótamo, o íbis, o leão, o lobo, a rã, a serpente, o touro e a vaca. Todavia, algumas delas eram sagradas em uma parte do Egito, mas não em outra, resultando isto, às vezes, até em irrompimento de guerras civis. Os animais não só eram sagrados para certos deuses, mas alguns deles eram até mesmo considerados como encarnação de um deus ou uma deusa. Por exemplo, o touro Ápis era considerado como a própria encarnação do deus Osíris, e também uma emanação do deus Ptá.

Segundo Heródoto (II, 65-67), quem matasse deliberadamente um animal sagrado era morto; se o animal fosse morto acidentalmente, os sacerdotes estipulavam uma multa. No entanto, quem matasse um íbis ou um gavião, quer intencionalmente quer não, era morto, usualmente às mãos duma turba enfurecida. Quando morria um gato, todos os da casa rapavam as sobrancelhas, ao passo que por ocasião da morte dum cão, rapavam o corpo inteiro. Animais sagrados eram mumificados e recebiam sepultamento suntuoso. Entre os animais mumificados foram encontrados o crocodilo, o falcão, o gato e o touro, para se mencionarem apenas alguns.

As narrativas mitológicas retratam as deidades egípcias com fraquezas e imperfeições humanas. Dizia-se delas que sentiam angústia e medo, e que repetidas vezes se viam em perigo. O deus Osíris foi morto. Hórus, na infância, supostamente sofria de dores internas, dores de cabeça e disenteria, e morreu duma picada de escorpião, mas diz-se que depois foi trazido de volta à vida. Cria-se que Ísis sofria dum abscesso no seio. Ensinava-se que, com o passar dos anos, a força do deus-sol Rá diminuía e que escorria saliva da sua boca. A própria vida dele estava em perigo depois de ter sido picado por uma serpente mágica, formada por Ísis, embora se restabelecesse em resultado de palavras mágicas de Ísis. Secmet, deusa que representava o poder destrutivo do Sol, era representada como sanguinária. Ela se agradava tanto em matar homens, que se diz que Rá temia pelo futuro da raça humana. Para salvar a humanidade do extermínio, Rá distribuiu 7.000 jarros duma mistura de cerveja com romã sobre o campo de batalha. Pensando tratar-se de sangue humano, Secmet bebeu-a avidamente, até ficar embriagada demais para continuar com sua matança. Diz-se que Néftis embriagou seu irmão Osíris, marido da sua irmã Ísis, e depois teve relações sexuais com ele. Os deuses-sol Tem e Hórus eram retratados como masturbadores.

É interessante que, quando Faraó constituiu José em segundo governante da terra do Egito, José foi com isso elevado acima dos adoradores dos deuses falsos do Egito. — Gên 41:37-44.

As Dez Pragas. Por meio das pragas com as quais afligiu os egípcios, Jeová humilhou e executou julgamento nos deuses deles. (Êx 12:12; Núm 33:4; FOTOS, Vol. 2, p. 530) A primeira praga, a transformação do Nilo e de todas as águas do Egito em sangue, causou desonra ao deus-Nilo, Hápi. A morte dos peixes no Nilo foi também um golpe contra a religião do Egito, pois certas espécies de peixes eram realmente veneradas e até mesmo mumificadas. (Êx 7:19-21) A rã, tida como símbolo da fertilidade e do conceito egípcio da ressurreição, era considerada sagrada para a deusa-rã, Heqt. Assim, a praga das rãs trouxe desonra a esta deusa. (Êx 8:5-14) A terceira praga resultou em os sacerdotes-magos reconhecerem a derrota, quando se viram incapazes de transformar o pó em borrachudos, por meio de suas artes secretas. (Êx 8:16-19) Atribuía-se ao deus Tot a invenção da magia ou das artes secretas, mas nem mesmo este deus pôde ajudar os sacerdotes-magos a imitar a terceira praga.

A linha de demarcação entre os egípcios e os adoradores do verdadeiro Deus veio a ficar nitidamente traçada da quarta praga em diante. Enquanto enxames de moscões invadiam os lares dos egípcios, os israelitas na terra de Gósen não foram atingidos. (Êx 8:23; 24) A praga seguinte, a pestilência no gado, humilhou deidades tais como a deusa-vaca, Hator, Ápis e a deusa-céu, Nut, imaginada como uma vaca, com as estrelas afixadas na sua barriga. (Êx 9:1-6) A praga dos furúnculos causou desonra aos deuses e às deusas considerados como possuindo habilidades curativas, tais como Tot, Ísis e Ptá. (Êx 9:8-11) A forte saraivada envergonhou os deuses considerados como tendo controle sobre os elementos naturais; por exemplo, Reshpu, o qual, pelo que parece, cria-se que controlava os raios, e Tot, do qual se dizia ter poder sobre a chuva e os trovões. (Êx 9:22-26) A praga dos gafanhotos significava uma derrota dos deuses que, segundo se pensava, garantiam abundante colheita, um destes sendo o deus da fertilidade, Min, o qual era encarado como protetor das colheitas. (Êx 10:12-15) Dentre as deidades desonradas pela praga da escuridão achavam-se os deuses-sol, tais como Rá e Hórus, e também Tot, o deus da Lua, tido como o sistematizador do Sol, da Lua e das estrelas. — Êx 10:21-23.

A morte dos primogênitos resultou na maior humilhação para os deuses e as deusas egípcios. (Êx 12:12) Os governantes do Egito realmente chamavam a si mesmos de deuses, filhos de Rá ou Amom-Rá. Afirmava-se que Rá, ou Amom-Rá, tinha relações sexuais com a rainha. O filho nascido era, portanto, considerado como um deus encarnado e era dedicado a Rá, ou Amom-Rá, no seu templo. Assim, com efeito, a morte do primogênito de Faraó realmente significava a morte de um deus. (Êx 12:29) Isto já por si só teria sido um duro golpe na religião do Egito, e a completa incapacidade de todas as deidades se evidenciou em serem incapazes de salvar da morte os primogênitos dos egípcios. — Veja AMOM, II N.º 4.

Deidades Cananeias. Fontes extrabíblicas indicam que o deus El era considerado o criador e soberano. Embora El parece ter ficado um tanto afastado dos assuntos terrestres, ele é repetidas vezes mostrado como contatado por outras divindades com solicitações. El é retratado como filho rebelde que destronou e castrou seu próprio pai, e também como tirano sanguinário, assassino e adúltero. Nos textos de Ras Xamra, El é mencionado como "pai touro" e é representado com cabelo e barba grisalhos. Sua consorte era Axerá, mencionada como progenitora dos deuses, ao passo que El é colocado no papel de progenitor dos deuses.

O mais proeminente dos deuses cananeus, porém, era Baal, o deus da fertilidade, deidade do céu, da chuva e da tempestade. (Jz 2:12, 13) Nos textos de Ras Xamra, Baal muitas vezes é chamado de filho de Dagom, embora se fale também de El como seu pai. Anate, irmã de Baal, aparece como referindo-se a El como seu pai, e este, por sua vez, chama-a de sua filha. Assim, provavelmente, Baal era considerado filho de El, embora pudesse também ter sido encarado como neto de El. Nos relatos mitológicos, descreve-se a Baal como atacando e vencendo a Iam, deus que presidia às águas e que parece ter sido o filho favorito ou amado de El. Mas, Baal é morto na sua luta com Mot, encarado como um filho de El e deus da morte e da aridez. De modo que Canaã, tal qual Babilônia, tinha seu deus que sofrera morte violenta e fora depois trazido de volta à vida. — Veja BAAL N.º 4.

Anate, Axerá e Astorete são as principais deusas mencionadas nos textos de Ras Xamra. Todavia, parece ter havido considerável coincidência nas funções dessas deusas. Na Síria, onde os textos de Ras Xamra foram achados, Anate talvez fosse considerada esposa de Baal, visto que ela, embora repetidas vezes mencionada como "donzela", é apresentada como tendo relações sexuais com Baal. Em conexão com Baal, porém, o registro das Escrituras menciona apenas Astorete e o poste sagrado, ou Axerá. Assim, às vezes, Axerá, ou então Astorete, talvez fossem consideradas esposas de Baal. — Jz 2:13; 3:7; 10:6; 1Sa 7:4; 12:10; 1Rs 18:19; veja ASTORETE; COLUNA SAGRADA; POSTE SAGRADO.

As referências a Anate, nos textos de Ras Xamra, fornecem alguns indícios do conceito degenerado sobre as divindades que os cananeus, sem dúvida, compartilhavam com os sírios. Anate é descrita como a mais bonita das irmãs de Baal, mas como tendo um gênio extremamente violento. Ela é retratada como ameaçando esmagar o crânio de seu pai, El, fazer o cabelo grisalho dele jorrar sangue e sua barba grisalha ficar com sangue coagulante, se ele não acedesse aos desejos dela. Em outra ocasião, mostra-se Anate numa orgia de matança. Ela prendia cabeças nas suas costas, e mãos no seu cinto, e mergulhava até os joelhos em sangue e até os quadris em sangue coagulante dos valentes. Seu prazer em tal derramamento de sangue é refletido nas palavras: "O fígado dela incha de riso, o coração dela enche-se de alegria." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 136, 137, 142, 152.

A natureza extremamente torpe e degradada da adoração cananeia destaca a justeza de Deus executar um decreto de destruição nos habitantes daquela terra. (Le 18; De 9:3, 4) Todavia, visto que os israelitas deixaram de executar completamente esse decreto divino, foram por fim enlaçados pelas práticas degeneradas associadas com a adoração dos deuses cananeus. — Sal 106:34-43; veja também CANAÃ, CANANEU N.º 2.

Deidades da Medo-Pérsia. Há indícios de que os reis do Império Medo-Persa eram zoroastristas. Embora não se possa provar nem refutar que Ciro, o Grande, tenha aderido aos ensinamentos de Zoroastro, desde a época de Dario I as inscrições dos monarcas repetidas vezes referem-se a Auramazda (Ahura Mazda), a principal deidade do zoroastrismo. Dario I referiu-se a Auramazda como criador do céu, da Terra e do homem, e considerava este deus como aquele que lhe conferira sabedoria, destreza física e o reino.

Um aspecto característico do zoroastrismo é o dualismo, isto é, a crença em dois seres divinos independentes, um bom e o outro mau. Auramazda era considerado criador de todas as coisas boas, ao passo que Angra-Mainyu era considerado o criador de tudo o que é mau. Pensava-se que este último pudesse provocar terremotos, tempestades, doença e morte, bem como instigar tumultos e a guerra. Acreditava-se que espíritos inferiores ajudavam a esses dois deuses a se desincumbirem de suas funções.

O símbolo do deus Auramazda era bem parecido à representação do assírio Assur, a saber, um círculo alado, do qual, às vezes, emergia um homem barbudo com o rabo vertical duma ave.

Auramazda talvez figurasse numa tríade. Isto é sugerido pelo fato de que Artaxerxes Mnemon invocou a proteção de Auramazda, Anaíta (deusa da água e da fertilidade) e Mitra (deus da luz), e que atribuiu a reconstrução da Sala das Colunas em Susa à graça dessas três deidades.

Diversos peritos relacionam Anaíta com a Istar babilônica. E. O. James observa no seu livro The Cult of the Mother-Goddess (O Culto da Deusa-Mãe; 1959, p. 94): "Ela era adorada como 'a Grande Deusa cujo nome é Dama', a 'todo-poderosa imaculada', purificando 'o sêmen dos machos, e o ventre e o leite das fêmeas'. . . . Ela era, de fato, o equivalente iraniano da Anate síria, da Nana-Istar babilônica, da deusa hitita de Comana, e da Afrodite grega."

Segundo o historiador grego Heródoto (I, 131), os persas adoravam também os elementos naturais e os corpos celestes. Ele escreve: "Quanto aos usos dos persas, sei dos seguintes. Não costumam construir e erguer estátuas, nem templos, nem altares, mas consideram insensatos os que os constroem, e isso, suponho, porque nunca acreditaram, como os gregos acreditam, terem os deuses forma humana; mas chamam todo o círculo dos céus de Zeus, e a ele oferecem sacrifícios nos picos mais altos das montanhas; fazem também sacrifícios ao Sol, e à Lua, e à Terra, e ao fogo, e à água, e aos ventos. Estes são os únicos deuses aos quais têm oferecido sacrifícios desde o começo; aprenderam mais tarde, dos assírios e dos árabes, oferecer sacrifícios à Afrodite 'celestial'. Ela é chamada pelos assírios de Milita, pelos árabes, de Alilat, pelos persas, de Mitra."

O Zendavesta, escritos zoroastristas sagrados, realmente contém orações ao fogo, à água e aos planetas, bem como à luz do Sol, da Lua e das estrelas. O fogo até mesmo é chamado de filho de Auramazda.

Embora talvez fosse zoroastrista, o Rei Ciro foi citado por nome na profecia bíblica como o designado por Jeová para derrubar Babilônia e efetuar a soltura dos cativos judeus. (Is 44:26-45:7; compare isso com Pr 21:1.) Após a destruição de Babilônia, em 539 AEC, os israelitas passaram a estar sob o controle de zoroastristas medo-persas.

Deidades Gregas. Um exame dos deuses e das deusas da antiga Grécia revela os traços da influência babilônica. O professor George Rawlinson, da Universidade de Oxford, comentou: "A notável semelhança entre o sistema caldeu e o da Mitologia Clássica parece merecer atenção especial. Esta semelhança é geral demais, e demasiado similar em alguns aspectos, para permitir a suposição de que a coincidência foi produzida por mero acaso. Nos Panteões da Grécia e de Roma, e no da Caldeia, pode-se reconhecer o mesmo agrupamento geral; não é incomum verificar-se a mesma sucessão genealógica; e, em alguns casos, até mesmo os nomes e títulos conhecidos das deidades clássicas admitem a mais curiosa ilustração e explicação de fontes caldeias. Dificilmente podemos duvidar de que, de um modo ou de outro, houve uma comunicação de crenças — uma transmissão em tempos bem primitivos, desde as margens do golfo Pérsico até as terras banhadas pelo Mediterrâneo, de noções e de ideias mitológicas." — The Seven Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World (As Sete Grandes Monarquias do Antigo Mundo Oriental), 1885, Vol. I, pp. 71, 72.

Uma distorção da declaração de Deus a respeito da semente, ou descendente, da promessa talvez possa ser percebida nos contos mitológicos que falam de o deus Apolo matar a serpente Píton, e de o infante Hércules (filho de Zeus e de uma mulher terrena, Alcmena) esganar duas serpentes. Novamente nos confrontamos com o conhecido tema de um deus que morre e em seguida é trazido de volta à vida. Anualmente era comemorada a morte violenta de Adônis e o retorno dele à vida; eram principalmente mulheres que choravam sua morte e que conduziam imagens do seu corpo como numa procissão fúnebre, e mais tarde as atiravam no mar ou em fontes de água. Outra deidade, cuja morte violenta e retorno à vida costumavam ser celebrados pelos gregos, era Dioniso, ou Baco; ele, como Adônis, tem sido identificado com o babilônico Tamuz.

Os relatos mitológicos fazem os deuses e deusas gregos parecer bem semelhantes a homens e mulheres. Embora se imaginasse os deuses de tamanho muito maior, e como ultrapassando os homens em beleza e força, seus corpos eram retratados como corpos humanos. Visto que nas suas veias supostamente fluía "icor", em vez de sangue, achava-se que os corpos das deidades eram incorruptíveis. Não obstante, cria-se que homens, por meio das suas armas, podiam realmente infligir feridas dolorosas aos deuses. Todavia, dizia-se que as feridas sempre saravam e que os deuses permaneciam jovens.

Na maior parte, as deidades dos gregos eram retratadas como muito imorais e tendo fraquezas humanas. Brigavam entre si, lutavam entre si, e até mesmo conspiravam umas contra as outras. Diz-se que Zeus, deus supremo dos gregos, destronou seu próprio pai, Cronos. Antes disso, o próprio Cronos depusera e até mesmo castrara seu pai Urano. Tanto Urano como Cronos são retratados como pais cruéis. Urano imediatamente escondia na terra a prole que lhe nascia de sua esposa Geia, nem permitindo que vissem a luz. Cronos, por outro lado, engoliu os filhos que lhe nasceram de Reia. Entre as práticas detestáveis atribuídas a certas deidades estão adultério, fornicação, incesto, estupro, mentira, roubalheira, embriaguez e assassinato. Aqueles que incorriam no desfavor de um deus ou deusa são retratados como punidos na maneira mais cruel. Por exemplo, o sátiro Mársias, que desafiou o deus Apolo num concurso musical, foi preso por este ao tronco duma árvore e esfolado vivo. Diz-se que a deusa Ártemis transformou o caçador Acteão num cervo e então fez com que os próprios cães dele o devorassem, porque ele havia visto a nudez dela.

Naturalmente, alguns afirmam que estas narrativas mitológicas eram apenas imaginações de poetas. Mas, sobre isto Agostinho escreveu no quinto século EC: "Embora se diga em defesa deles que esses contos sobre os seus deuses não eram verdadeiros, mas apenas invenções poéticas, e ficções falsas, ora, isso o torna ainda mais abominável, se respeitares a pureza da tua religião: e se observares a malícia do diabo, acaso pode haver mais astúcia ou mais malícia enganosa? Pois, quando se calunia o governante honesto e digno dum país, não é a calúnia tanto mais iníqua e imperdoável, visto que a vida desta pessoa caluniada é mais clara e isenta do toque de quaisquer dessas coisas?" (The City of God [A Cidade de Deus], Livro II, cap. IX) No entanto, a popularidade das narrativas poéticas, conforme encenadas nos palcos gregos, indica que a maioria não as considerava como calúnia, mas estava em harmonia com eles. A imoralidade dos deuses servia para justificar os delitos do homem, e o povo estava a favor disso. — Veja GRÉCIA, GREGOS (Religião Grega).

O ministério do apóstolo Paulo o trouxe em contato com adoradores dos deuses gregos Zeus e Hermes. (At 14:12, 13) Os atenienses expressavam seu temor das deidades por construir muitos templos e altares. (At 17:22-29) A crassa imoralidade sexual, que fazia parte da adoração grega, até mesmo afetou a congregação cristã em Corinto, achando o apóstolo Paulo necessário censurar esta congregação. — 1Co cap. 5.

Deidades Romanas. A religião dos romanos foi grandemente influenciada pelos etruscos, um povo que em geral se pensa ter vindo da Ásia Menor. A prática da adivinhação liga definitivamente a religião dos etruscos à dos babilônios. Por exemplo, os modelos de fígados de barro usados para adivinhação, encontrados na Mesopotâmia, são parecidos ao modelo de um fígado de bronze encontrado em Piacenza, na província de Emília-Romagna, Itália. De modo que, quando os romanos adotaram as deidades etruscas, eles estavam, na realidade, recebendo uma herança babilônica. (Veja ASTRÓLOGOS.) A tríade romana de Júpiter (o deus supremo, deus do céu e da luz), Juno (a consorte de Júpiter, considerada como presidindo aos assuntos de interesse especial para as mulheres) e Minerva (deusa que presidia a todas as artes e ofícios), corresponde aos etruscos Tínia, Uni e Menrva.

Com o passar do tempo, os principais deuses gregos introduziram-se no panteão romano, embora conhecidos por outros nomes. Também, deidades de ainda outros países foram adotadas pelos romanos, incluindo a persa Mitra (cujo aniversário era celebrado em 25 de dezembro), a deusa frígia da fertilidade, Cibele, e a egípcia Ísis, as duas últimas sendo identificadas com a babilônica Istar. Também, os próprios imperadores romanos eram deificados.

Saturno era adorado por ter dado a Roma uma era áurea. As saturnais, originalmente uma festa de um dia em sua honra, foram mais tarde prolongadas para uma celebração de sete dias, na última parte de dezembro. O evento era marcado por uma grande orgia. Eram trocados presentes, tais como frutas de cera e velas, e as crianças, em especial, eram presenteadas com bonecas de barro. Durante a festividade, nenhuma punição era aplicada. As escolas e os tribunais tinham feriado; até mesmo as operações de guerra eram suspensas. Os escravos trocavam de lugar com os seus amos e lhes era permitido falar o que quisessem, sem necessidade de temerem castigo.

Os primitivos cristãos negaram-se a participar na adoração romana, especialmente na adoração do imperador, o que os tornou alvo de intensa perseguição. Não transigiam na sua posição "de obedecer a Deus como governante antes que aos homens", negando-se a prestar aos governantes romanos a adoração que legitimamente pertencia a Deus. — At 5:29; Mr 12:17; veja ROMA (Religião).

Deuses de Nações Contrastados com Jeová. Atualmente, muitos dos deuses mencionados na Bíblia não são nada mais do que um nome. Embora seus adoradores às vezes até mesmo sacrificassem seus próprios filhos a eles, os deuses falsos eram incapazes de salvar os que recorriam a eles em busca de ajuda, em seus momentos de maior necessidade. (2Rs 17:31) Assim, por causa de seus sucessos militares, o rei da Assíria, por meio de seu porta-voz, Rabsaqué, jactou-se: "Livraram deveras os deuses das nações cada um a sua própria terra da mão do rei da Assíria? Onde estão os deuses de Hamate e de Arpade? Onde estão os deuses de Sefarvaim, de Hena e de Iva? Livraram eles a Samaria da minha mão? Quais dentre todos os deuses dos países livraram a sua terra da minha mão, de modo que Jeová livre Jerusalém da minha mão?" (2Rs 18:28, 31-35) Mas Jeová não desapontou seu povo, como fizeram aqueles deuses falsos. Numa só noite, o anjo de Jeová matou 185.000 no acampamento dos assírios. Humilhado, o orgulhoso monarca assírio, Senaqueribe, voltou a Nínive, onde mais tarde foi assassinado por dois de seus filhos, no templo de seu deus, Nisroque. (2Rs 19:17-19, 35-37) Na verdade, "todos os deuses dos povos são deuses que nada valem; mas, quanto a Jeová, ele fez os próprios céus". — Sal 96:5.

Os deuses falsos não só têm as características dos seus criadores, mas as pessoas também se tornam muito semelhantes aos deuses que adoram. Para ilustrar: O Rei Manassés, de Judá, era devoto de deuses falsos, mesmo a ponto de fazer seu filho passar pelo fogo. O zeloso empenho de Manassés na adoração falsa, porém, não fez dele um rei melhor. Antes, por derramar sangue inocente em quantidade muito grande, mostrou ser semelhante às deidades sedentas de sangue que adorava. (2Rs 21:1-6, 16) Em nítido contraste com isso, os adoradores do verdadeiro Deus diligenciam ser imitadores do seu Criador perfeito, exibindo os frutos do Seu espírito: amor, alegria, paz, longanimidade, benignidade, bondade, fé, brandura e autodomínio. — Ef 5:1; Gál 5:22, 23.

DEUTERONÔMIO. O nome hebraico deste quinto livro do Pentateuco é Deva·rím (Palavras), tirado da frase inicial do texto hebraico. O nome "Deuteronômio" deriva do título grego na Septuaginta, Deu·te·ro·nó·mi·on, que significa literalmente "Segunda Lei; Repetição da Lei". Vem da tradução grega duma frase hebraica em Deuteronômio 17:18, mish·néh hat·toh·ráh, corretamente traduzida por 'cópia da lei'.

A autenticidade de Deuteronômio como livro do cânon da Bíblia e de Moisés ser o escritor dele acha-se bem alicerçada no fato de que Deuteronômio sempre foi reputado pelos judeus como parte da Lei de Moisés. A evidência da autenticidade de Deuteronômio, em geral, é a mesma que a dos outros quatro livros do Pentateuco. (Veja PENTATEUCO; também esses livros sob os seus respectivos nomes.) Jesus é a principal autoridade que atesta a autenticidade de Deuteronômio, citando-o três vezes ao repelir as tentações de Satanás, o Diabo. (Mt 4:1-11; De 6:13, 16; 8:3) Também, Jesus respondeu à pergunta quanto a qual era o maior e o primeiro mandamento por citar Deuteronômio 6:5. (Mr 12:30) E Paulo cita Deuteronômio 30:12-14; 32:35, 36. — Ro 10:6-8; He 10:30.

O tempo abrangido pelo livro de Deuteronômio é um pouco superior a dois meses, no ano de 1473 AEC. Foi escrito nas planícies de Moabe, e consiste em quatro discursos, um cântico e uma bênção, da parte de Moisés, enquanto Israel acampava nas fronteiras de Canaã, antes de entrar nessa terra. — De 1:3; Jos 1:11; 4:19.

Objetivo. Apesar do significado do nome Deuteronômio, este livro não é uma segunda lei, nem uma repetição da Lei inteira, mas é antes uma explicação dela, como diz Deuteronômio 1:5. Exorta Israel à fidelidade a Jeová, usando a geração que

DESTAQUES DE DEUTERONÔMIO

Discursos explicando partes da Lei e exortando Israel a amar e a obedecer a Jeová na terra em que estavam para entrar.

Escrito por Moisés pouco antes de Israel entrar na Terra da Promessa, em 1473 AEC.

Exortação a se lembrar do que Jeová havia feito e a servir somente a ele. (1:1–4:49)

Moisés relembra o envio de espias, a reação sem fé e rebelde ao relatório deles, o juramento de Jeová, de que aquela geração morreria no ermo.

Israel não devia molestar os filhos de Esaú (descendentes do irmão de Jacó), nem Moabe e Amom (prole do sobrinho de Abraão, Ló); mas Jeová deu a Israel a terra ocupada pelos reis amorreus Síon e Ogue, ao L do Jordão.

Moisés roga a Jeová para permitir-lhe cruzar o Jordão; em vez disso, Jeová manda-lhe comissionar e fortalecer Josué para liderar a nação.

Moisés lembra à nação a ira ardente de Jeová com respeito a Baal de Peor; não deve esquecer-se do que testemunhou em Horebe, nunca fazendo uma imagem esculpida para adoração; Jeová, o único Deus verdadeiro, exige devoção exclusiva.

Admoestação a amar a Jeová e a obedecer a todos os seus mandamentos. (5:1–26:19)

Moisés recapitula como a Lei foi dada em Horebe, repete as Dez Palavras, insta com Israel a fazer exatamente o que Jeová ordenou.

Têm de amar a Jeová de todo o coração, alma e força vital; as ordens de Deus têm de estar constantemente diante deles; devem explicar aos filhos o motivo dos regulamentos de Jeová.

Sete nações a serem extirpadas do país, junto com seus altares e imagens; nenhuma aliança matrimonial com elas.

Não se devem esquecer de como Deus lidou com eles no ermo, a fim de que soubessem que o homem não vive só de pão, mas de toda expressão da boca de Jeová.

Devem lembrar-se de como provocaram a Jeová por fazer um bezerro fundido; agora devem temê-lo, servi-lo e apegar-se a ele; cumprir todo o mandamento.

Regulamentos a serem obedecidos na Terra da Promessa: Eliminar a religião falsa de Canaã; adorar no lugar que Jeová escolher; não comer sangue; matar os apóstatas; comer alimentos puros; dar o décimo dos produtos a Jeová; ter consideração com os pobres; guardar as festividades anuais; seguir a justiça; evitar o espiritismo; escutar o suscitado por Jeová como profeta; respeitar marcos divisórios; manter a terra livre de culpa de sangue; mostrar compaixão; manter-se livre da imoralidade sexual; dar as primícias da terra a Jeová; mostrar-se santo para com Jeová.

Bênçãos pela obediência a Jeová, maldições pela desobediência. (27:1–28:68)

Depois de a nação cruzar o Jordão, a Lei devia ser inscrita em grandes pedras.

Maldições pela desobediência devem ser proferidas no monte Ebal.

Bênçãos pela obediência a todas as ordens de Jeová devem ser proferidas no monte Gerizim.

Pacto feito nas planícies de Moabe (29:1–30:20)

Recapitula o cuidado de Jeová no Egito e durante os 40 anos de Israel no ermo; adverte contra a desobediência obstinada.

Prediz a misericórdia de Jeová para com os arrependidos.

Apresenta-lhes a escolha entre a vida e a morte; exorta-os a escolher a vida por amar a Jeová, escutar a Sua voz e apegar-se a ele.

Transferência da liderança para Josué e últimas bênçãos de Moisés. (31:1–34:12)

Josué é comissionado para liderar Israel.

Moisés ensina a Israel um cântico que será testemunho contra eles caso abandonem a Jeová.

Moisés abençoa as tribos de Israel, depois morre no monte Nebo.

peregrinou por 40 anos como exemplo a ser evitado. Moisés explica e discorre sobre alguns dos pontos essenciais da Lei e os princípios nela contidos, tendo em vista as circunstâncias mudadas de Israel quando se fixasse de forma permanente naquela terra. Faz concordemente ajustes em algumas das leis, e provê outros regulamentos concernentes à administração do governo em sua condição de povo fixado na Terra da Promessa.

Ao exortá-los e convocá-los a entrar neste pacto renovado com Jeová, mediante Moisés, o livro de Deuteronômio destaca notavelmente o conhecimento, o ensino e a instrução. As palavras "ensinar", "ensino" e "ensinado" ocorrem com muito mais frequência em Deuteronômio do que em Êxodo, Levítico ou Números. Moisés explicou que Jeová estava ensinando Israel por alimentá-los com o maná. (De 8:3) Disse aos israelitas que colocassem a lei de Deus, figuradamente, como frontal entre os olhos, e nos umbrais de suas casas e nos seus portões. (6:8, 9) Mandou-os inculcar Sua Lei nos filhos deles. (6:6, 7) Foram dadas instruções para que a Lei fosse lida a cada sétimo ano, durante a época da (anual) Festividade das Barracas. (31:10-13) Instruções especiais foram dadas para o rei que Israel pudesse vir a ter no futuro. Ele devia escrever para si mesmo uma cópia da Lei, e devia ler nela todo dia. (17:18-20) Toda vez que Israel saísse em combate, os sacerdotes deviam admoestar o povo a ter fé e coragem, e assegurar-lhe a vitória, pois Jeová, seu Deus, marchava junto com ele. (20:1-4) Quando entrassem na Terra da Promessa, deviam dividir as tribos em dois grupos, um grupo no monte Ebal e o outro no monte Gerizim, e então fazer que a lei de Deus fosse lida para eles. — 27:11-26; compare isso com Jos 8:33-35.

Destacado o Amor. O amor, a benignidade e a consideração também são destacados em Deuteronômio. As próprias palavras "amor" e "amar" ocorrem cinco vezes mais em Deuteronômio do que em Êxodo, Levítico e Números juntos. É aqui também que temos o maior mandamento, ao qual Jesus se referiu (Mt 22:36, 37), declarado de forma ímpar: "Tens de amar a Jeová, teu Deus, de todo o teu coração, e de toda a tua alma, e de toda a tua força vital." (De 6:5; veja também 10:12; 11:13.) Jeová repetidas vezes expressa seu amor por Israel. (7:7-9; 23:5; 33:3) A própria tônica de Deuteronômio destaca o amor de Jeová ao seu povo. "Se somente desenvolvessem este coração seu para me temerem e para guardarem sempre todos os meus mandamentos, para que lhes fosse bem a eles e a seus filhos, por tempo indefinido!" (5:29) Efetivamente, em Deuteronômio, vez após vez encontramos expressões tais como "para que te vá bem", e 'para ficares vivo'. — 4:40; 5:16; 6:3; 22:7; 30:19, 20.

Embora Israel se confrontasse com a guerra ao tomar aquela terra, Jeová não deixou de mostrar amorosa consideração. A vitória não era tão importante, nem tão urgente, que se devessem fazer exigências impiedosas. Um homem noivo ficava isento. (De 20:7) Isentava-se um homem recém-casado, de modo que pudesse tratar com carinho sua esposa e ela tivesse seu marido presente pelo menos por um ano inteiro. (24:5) Caso um homem tivesse plantado um vinhedo e ainda não tivesse comido o fruto dele, ou se tivesse construído uma casa e não a tivesse inaugurado, estava dispensado da guerra, para que pudesse usufruir os frutos de seus labores. — 20:5, 6.

Deram-se pormenores explícitos com respeito a travar guerra e tomar a terra de Canaã. Os temerosos deviam ser mandados para casa, a fim de que não enfraquecessem também o coração de seus irmãos. (De 20:8) As cidades das nações especificadas de Canaã, cuja iniquidade se tornara plena, sem falta deviam ser devotadas à destruição, mas às cidades que não fossem destas nações especificadas se devia oferecer a alternativa da rendição ou da destruição. Se se rendessem, deviam ser postas a trabalhos forçados, mas a Lei exigia que até mesmo escravos fossem tratados com benignidade, e os mandamentos dela protegiam as mulheres contra serem molestadas mesmo nas cidades tomadas em guerra. Nos casos das cidades que se negassem a se render, todos os varões deviam ser mortos, sendo poupadas apenas as crianças e as mulheres que ainda não haviam tido relações sexuais com homens. (20:10-18; compare isso com Núm 31:17, 18.) Ao construir obras de sítio em torno duma cidade, os israelitas não tinham permissão de cortar árvores frutíferas. — De 20:19, 20.

Os animais também receberam consideração amorosa no livro de Deuteronômio. Proibia-se aos israelitas tirar uma ave pousada no ninho, porque era o instinto protetor para com os seus filhotes que a tornava vulnerável. Permitia-se-lhe escapar, mas os filhotes podiam ser tomados pelos israelitas. A mãe estava assim livre para criar outra ninhada. (De 22:6, 7) Não se permitia ao lavrador atrelar um jumento junto com um touro, para impedir dificuldades para o animal mais fraco. (22:10) Não se devia açaimar o touro enquanto debulhava grãos, a fim de que não fosse atormentado pela fome enquanto havia cereais tão perto e ele gastava sua energia em debulhá-los. — 25:4.

Mostrou-se consideração na vida familiar e social. Ao filho primogênito cabia uma porção dupla, sem considerar se era ou não filho da esposa favorita. (De 21:15-17) Pela primeira vez se declarou, como lei, o casamento de cunhado, e especificaram-se as penalidades para fazê-la vigorar. (25:5-10) Eram obrigatórios os pesos e as medidas honestos. (25:13-16) O valor da vida foi enfatizado pela ordem de construir um parapeito em volta de todo o terraço da casa. (22:8) A consideração até mesmo para com um transgressor, que devia ser espancado, foi demonstrada pela Lei que limitava os golpes a 40. (25:1-3) Todos esses regulamentos forneciam minúcias à Lei, ao passo que também mostravam grande consideração. Ao mesmo tempo, havia mais rigidez.

Avisos e Leis. Deuteronômio está repleto de avisos contra a adoração falsa e a infidelidade, bem como de instruções sobre a maneira de lidar com tais, de modo a preservar a adoração pura. Algo notável em Deuteronômio é a exortação à santidade. Admoestava-se os israelitas a não se casarem com pessoas das nações em sua volta, porque isto representaria uma ameaça para a adoração pura e a lealdade a Jeová. (De 7:3, 4) Foram avisados contra o materialismo e a autojustiça. (8:11-18; 9:4-6) Foram feitas fortes leis referentes à apostasia. Eles deviam cuidar-se bem, a fim de que não se desviassem para outros deuses. (11:16, 17) Foram avisados contra os falsos profetas. Foram dadas instruções, em dois lugares, sobre como identificar um falso profeta e como lidar com ele. (13:1-5; 18:20-22) Até mesmo se um membro da própria família se tornasse apóstata, a família não devia ter pena dele, mas devia tomar parte em apedrejá-lo até a morte. — 13:6-11.

As cidades de Israel que apostatassem deviam ser devotadas à destruição e nada delas devia ser preservado para benefício pessoal de alguém. Tal cidade nunca deveria ser reconstruída. (De 13:12-17) Os delinquentes cujos pais não conseguissem controlá-los deviam ser apedrejados até morrerem. — 21:18-21.

A santidade e o isentar-se da culpa de sangue foram destacados pela lei relativa ao modo de se lidar com um caso de homicídio não solucionado. (De 21:1-9) Indicando o zelo pela adoração pura, Deuteronômio continha regulamentos sobre quem podia tornar-se membro da congregação de Jeová, e quando. Nenhum filho ilegítimo, até a décima geração, nem moabita ou amonita, por tempo indefinido, e nenhum eunuco podia ser admitido. Todavia, egípcios e edomitas da terceira geração podiam tornar-se membros da congregação. — 23:1-8.

Deuteronômio esquematiza o arranjo judicial para Israel, quando se fixasse na Terra da Promessa. Delineia as habilitações para juízes, e o arranjo de tribunais nos portões das cidades, sendo o santuário o supremo tribunal do país, cujos julgamentos deviam ser seguidos por todo o Israel. — De 16:18-17:13.

Deuteronômio ressalta a posição de Jeová como o único Deus (De 6:4), a posição de Israel como seu povo único (4:7, 8), e o estabelecimento dum único local central de adoração (12:4-7). Prediz aquele que seria suscitado como profeta semelhante a Moisés e que falaria em nome de Jeová, alguém a quem todos deveriam estar sujeitos. — 18:18, 19.

DEVOÇÃO A DEUS. Veja DEVOÇÃO PIEDOSA.

DEVOÇÃO EXCLUSIVA. Esta expressão refere-se ao fato de que Jeová não tolera nenhuma rivalidade, não tolera a adoração de quaisquer outros deuses. A palavra hebraica qan·ná' é usada apenas referente a Deus; significa "exigir devoção exclusiva; ciumento (zeloso)". — Êx 20:5, n.; veja CIUMENTO, CIÚME.

Deus não transfere para outro a honra devida a ele. (Is 42:8) Afastar-se da devoção exclusiva a Ele provocaria Sua ira zelosa. (De 4:24; 5:9; 6:15) A nação de Israel era considerada como casada com Jeová. Jeová, como marido, reivindicava de Israel devoção exclusiva, lealdade e fidelidade. Ele seria zeloso, cheio de ardor a favor dela, em defesa dela. (Ez 36:5) Inversamente, a desobediência, ir atrás de outros deuses, seria adultério, merecendo assim a justa ira de Jeová e seu ciúme pelo seu próprio nome. — De 32:16, 21; Ez 16:38, 42.

O que é a devoção exclusiva que Jeová requer de seus servos?

A palavra "exclusivo" vem da latina exclusus, que significa "totalmente excluído". Devoção significa forte apego e ardente amor. Portanto, a devoção exclusiva significa manter outros fora ou excluídos da posição de Deus no nosso coração e nas nossas ações. Todos e tudo o mais fica excluído da posição honrosa que apenas Ele pode ocupar.

Jeová Deus não Tolera Rivalidade. Jeová exige devoção exclusiva na segunda das "Dez Palavras", ou Dez Mandamentos, escritas pelo dedo de Deus: "Eu sou Jeová, teu Deus . . . Nunca deves ter quaisquer outros deuses em oposição à minha pessoa [ou: "quaisquer outros deuses em desafio a mim"]. . . . porque eu, Jeová, teu Deus, sou um Deus que exige devoção exclusiva." (De 5:6-9) Em Êxodo 34:14, a versão francesa Drioux (1884) diz: "Deus quer ser amado exclusivamente", isto é, numa classe por si só, singularmente. Jesus apoiou este conceito ao falar a um judeu que tentou testá-lo. (Mt 22:37) Jeová era tanto Deus como Rei de Israel, Chefe de religião e de Estado. Portanto, violar um israelita o primeiro e o segundo mandamento por servir a outros deuses significava que cometia lesa-majestade, ou traição, o mais grave dos crimes, merecendo a punição mais pesada. Em certa ocasião, Israel estava empenhado na adoração dum deus falso, bem como praticando imoralidade, e, visto que Jeová insiste plenamente na devoção exclusiva, ele estava prestes a exterminar esta nação. Mas, porque Fineias, neto de Arão, agiu prontamente em "não tolerar nenhuma rivalidade" com Jeová, Israel foi poupado. — Núm 25:11.

O motivo de Jeová restabelecer seu povo após o exílio babilônico era seu nome. (Ez 39:25-28) Em Êxodo 34:14, a tradução de Fenton reza: "O SEMPRE-VIVO é ciumento do SEU NOME." Visto que ele é ciumento do seu nome, ou exclusivamente devotado a ele, não tolerava entre o seu povo nenhuma rivalidade por parte do nome de qualquer outro deus.

Relação Entre Amo e Escravo. A devoção exclusiva sugere também a relação entre amo e escravo. Jeová, como Criador, é Dono e Amo. Ele é Deus por ser o Criador; tem o direito de receber devoção exclusiva dos seus súditos criados, e estes têm de fazer a vontade dele. A pessoa ajuizada, ao ser informada sobre Jeová e reconhecer sua relação com Ele, voluntariamente presta devoção exclusiva de coração, exatamente o que Jeová deseja. Ele odeia a mera devoção ou adoração formal. (Mt 15:8, 9) Esta relação e a devoção de livre vontade, que Jeová deseja, foram ilustradas na Lei mosaica. O escravo hebreu devia ser liberto no sétimo ano de sua servidão. "Mas, se o escravo disser com insistência: 'Eu amo realmente meu amo, minha esposa e meus filhos; não quero sair como alguém liberto', então seu amo terá de levá-lo perto do verdadeiro Deus e terá de encostá-lo à porta ou à ombreira; e seu amo terá de furar-lhe a orelha com uma sovela, e ele terá de ser seu escravo por tempo indefinido." (Êx 21:2, 5, 6) Paulo falou a não judeus na congregação tessalonicense sobre a mudança voluntária de devoção feita por eles quando se tornaram cristãos. Deixaram de ser escravos de ídolos e começaram a "trabalhar como escravos para um Deus vivente e verdadeiro". — 1Te 1:9.

A Devoção Exclusiva de Jesus a Deus. Conforme mostra Filipenses 2:5-8, tanto quando estava no céu, como quando estava na Terra, Jesus reconhecia a posição exclusiva de seu Pai e prestava-lhe devoção exclusiva. Jesus salientou que o mandamento mais importante na Lei exigia amor de todo o coração a Deus. (Mt 22:37) Além disso, Jesus manifestou devoção exclusiva ao nome de Jeová e enfatizou que seus discípulos deviam ter a mesma atitude. Na oração que ensinou aos seus discípulos, ele iniciou com as palavras: "Nosso Pai nos céus, santificado seja o teu nome." (Mt 6:9) Esta devoção de Jesus estava conjugada com um ardente zelo, conforme manifestado em ele limpar o templo, onde cumpriu a profecia: "O zelo da tua casa me devorará." (Jo 2:17; Sal 69:9) Em parte alguma é a devoção exclusiva de Jesus ao seu Pai melhor exemplificada do que no que se acha escrito a seu respeito em 1 Coríntios 15:24-28, onde diz que, depois de seu Reinado celestial ter reduzido a nada toda outra autoridade e todos os inimigos, ele entrega o Reino ao Pai e se sujeita a Ele, a fim de que "Deus seja todas as coisas para com todos".

DEVOÇÃO PIEDOSA. Reverência, adoração e serviço prestado a Deus, com lealdade à sua soberania universal. As Escrituras usam a palavra grega eu·sé·bei·a e as formas adjetiva, adverbial e verbal, aparentadas. O substantivo, conforme usado na Bíblia, pode ser traduzido literalmente por "bem-reverência" e aplica-se à reverência ou devoção para com o que é genuinamente santo e justo. (Veja 2Pe 1:6, Int.) O antônimo de "devoção piedosa" é "impiedade" ou "irreverência" (gr.: a·sé·bei·a).

Em Christian Words (Palavras Cristãs), Nigel Turner escreveu: "Eusebeia ocorre ocasionalmente num sentido que sugere devoção religiosa pessoal, nas inscrições contemporâneas . . . mas o seu sentido mais geral, no grego popular do período romano, era 'lealdade'. . . . Para os cristãos, eusebeia é a espécie mais elevada de devoção a Deus." (1981, p. 111) O uso bíblico da expressão "devoção piedosa" refere-se à devoção com lealdade a Jeová Deus pessoalmente.

O adjetivo aparentado, eu·se·bés, que significa "devoto; de devoção piedosa", ocorre em Atos 10:2, 7; 2 Pedro 2:9. Segundo John A. H. Tittmann, eu·se·bés "expressa aquela reverência pela Deidade que se mostra em ações, especialmente na adoração de Deus; . . . [eu·se·bés] é aquele que mostra essa piedade por ação". — Remarks on the Synonyms of the New Testament (Observações sobre os Sinônimos do Novo Testamento), Edimburgo, 1833, Vol. I, pp. 253, 254.

O verbo eu·se·bé·o é usado em 1 Timóteo 5:4 com referência à conduta de filhos ou netos para com sua mãe ou avó enviuvadas. A Greek and English Lexicon of the New Testament (Um Léxico Grego e Inglês do Novo Testamento; 1885, p. 307), de Edward Robinson, declara que eu·se·bé·o pode ter o sentido de ser piedoso para com alguém. Por este motivo, algumas traduções vertem esta passagem: "Estes aprendam primeiramente a cumprir seus deveres para com a própria família." (NTP; veja A Bíblia na Linguagem de Hoje.) Mas Deus é o Estabelecedor do arranjo familiar (Ef 3:14, 15), e a Bíblia compara a família de Deus à unidade familiar. Portanto, a reverência, ou devoção piedosa, nos relacionamentos familiares no lar cristão realmente constituiria reverência a Deus e obediência às ordens de Deus a respeito da família e da conduta correta dos seus membros. Verter-se este texto: "Se alguma viúva tiver filhos ou netos, que estes aprendam primeiro a praticar a devoção piedosa na sua própria família" (NM), está em harmonia com este entendimento.

O 'Segredo Sagrado da Devoção Piedosa'. O exemplo primário de devoção piedosa é Jesus Cristo. O apóstolo Paulo escreveu a Timóteo: "Deveras, o segredo sagrado desta devoção piedosa é admitidamente grande: 'Ele foi manifestado em carne, foi declarado justo em espírito, apareceu a anjos, foi pregado entre nações, foi crido no mundo, foi recebido acima em glória.'" (1Ti 3:16) Adão, o homem perfeito, não dera o exemplo perfeito de devoção piedosa. Nenhum de seus filhos, nascidos imperfeitos, podia fazer isso. Quem seria capaz disso? A vinda do Filho de Deus à Terra e seu proceder de integridade forneceu a resposta, revelando a solução do segredo sagrado. Era para ele que Timóteo devia olhar para ver o exemplo perfeito de conduta que manifestava devoção piedosa. — 1Ti 3:15.

Jesus Cristo foi o único homem a demonstrar perfeitamente a devoção piedosa, em todo sentido, provando que o homem na carne pode manter tal devoção. Até o fim da sua carreira terrestre, marcada por severas provações, Jesus foi "leal, cândido, imaculado, separado dos pecadores". (He 7:26) Era impossível encontrar alguma falha na sua integridade, a fim de acusá-lo perante Deus. Ele disse, antes da sua morte: "Eu venci o mundo", também: "O governante do mundo está chegando. E ele não tem nenhum poder sobre mim." (Jo 16:33; 14:30) Não se podia achar nele nenhuma injustiça. Pôde com razão dizer aos seus inimigos: "Quem de vós me declara culpado de pecado?" (Jo 8:46) A solução do "segredo sagrado desta devoção piedosa" é tão grandiosa e significa tanto para a humanidade, que deve ser proclamada mundialmente. O próprio Jesus Cristo é a base segundo a qual a devoção piedosa e a conduta cristãs na congregação são padronizadas.

Treinamento, com Contentamento, É Essencial. É necessário um treinamento árduo da parte do cristão, a fim de conseguir plena devoção piedosa. Isto acarreta suportar oposição e perseguição. (2Ti 3:12) A intenção ou o objetivo da pessoa ao treinar-se não é obter ganho materialista egoísta. Mas há um ganho para aquele que está contente com a sua sorte, aquele que persiste na devoção piedosa junto com autossuficiência. "[A devoção piedosa] tem a promessa da vida agora", a saber, saúde espiritual, satisfação, felicidade e um objetivo na vida. Tem também a promessa da vida que "há de vir". — 1Ti 4:7, 8; 6:6-8; compare isso com Pr 3:7, 8; 4:20-22.

Embora perseguições e dificuldades possam sobrevir àquele que manifesta devoção piedosa, ele não precisa temer, pois "Jeová sabe livrar da provação os de devoção piedosa". (2Pe 2:9) O apóstolo Pedro aconselha os cristãos a suprirem à sua perseverança a devoção piedosa. (2Pe 1:5, 6) Admoesta-os a serem pessoas de 'atos santos de conduta e de ações de devoção piedosa', a fim de sobreviverem ao julgamento do dia de Jeová. — 2Pe 3:7, 10, 11; 1Pe 4:18.

O Poder da Devoção Piedosa. Quem professa devoção piedosa tem de reconhecer o poder que esta tem para mudar a sua personalidade, e deve ser fiel e genuíno ao guiar-se pela piedade. (1Ti 6:11; Ef 4:20-24) Precisa reconhecer que a Palavra de Deus é a expressão Dele quanto ao proceder da devoção piedosa, e por isso tem de sujeitar-se aos preceitos dela. (Tit 1:1; 2Pe 1:3) Visto que a devoção piedosa é demonstrada para com Deus pessoalmente, Sua Palavra e Seu espírito levarão a pessoa a conhecer a Jeová pessoal e intimamente, e a se tornar mais parecido com Ele — a ser imitador e copiador Dele. (Ef 5:1) Tal pessoa refletirá mais e mais as excelentes qualidades de Jeová Deus. — 2Co 3:18.

Se alguém que professa servir a Deus se estribar nas suas próprias ideias, em vez de aderir à Bíblia, e se seu ensino não for "concordante com a devoção piedosa", deixando assim de refletir a devoção do instrutor a Deus, ele passará a 'ter manias'. (1Ti 6:3, 4) O apóstolo Paulo alertou seu coministro mais jovem, Timóteo, a respeito de indivíduos impiedosos que professavam devoção a Deus. Acautelou Timóteo a manejar corretamente a Palavra da verdade, esquivando-se dos falatórios vãos que violam o que é santo, para que Timóteo não se desviasse do proceder da devoção piedosa. Em seguida salientou que haveria os que praticariam toda sorte de iniquidade, tendo hipocritamente uma forma de devoção piedosa, mostrando-se, porém, falsos para com o seu poder. (2Ti 2:15, 16; 3:1-5) Judas, da mesma forma, mostra que tais não demonstrariam genuína reverência ou devoção a Deus, nem respeito ou apreço por Sua benignidade imerecida. Seriam pessoas que usariam a piedade para ganhos materialistas ou sensuais. A hipocrisia delas revela-se na sua prática de atos de conduta desenfreada. — Ju 4.

O que é "o mistério daquilo que é contra a lei" a que Paulo se refere?

Nisto há outro mistério, diametralmente oposto ao "segredo sagrado" de Jeová. Trata-se do "mistério daquilo que é contra a lei". Este era um mistério para os verdadeiros cristãos, porque, nos dias do apóstolo Paulo, a identidade do "homem que é contra a lei" ainda não tinha tomado forma numa classe definitivamente estabelecida e claramente identificável. Mesmo depois de este "homem" assumir forma, sua identidade continuaria a ser um mistério para a maioria das pessoas, porque a iniquidade dele seria praticada sob o disfarce e em nome da devoção piedosa. De fato, seria uma apostasia da genuína devoção piedosa. Paulo disse que "o mistério daquilo que é contra a lei" já estava em operação nos dias dele, porque havia uma influência contrária à lei na congregação cristã, que finalmente resultaria na formação desta classe apóstata. Por fim, esta seria eliminada por Jesus Cristo na manifestação da sua presença. Este apóstata "homem" manipulado por Satanás se ergueria acima 'de todo aquele que se chamasse "deus" ou objeto de reverência' (gr.: sé·ba·sma). De modo que este grande opositor de Deus, como instrumento satânico, seria extremamente enganoso e causaria a destruição daqueles que adotassem as práticas dele. A eficácia do "homem que é contra a lei" se originaria do fato de que sua iniquidade seria camuflada por uma devoção piedosa hipócrita. — 2Te 2:3-12; compare isso com Mt 7:15, 21-23.

DEVOTADA, COISA. Jeová Deus, nos seus tratos com a nação de Israel, decretou que certas coisas, pessoas ou até mesmo cidades inteiras fossem colocadas sob proscrição sagrada, impedindo assim seu uso comum ou profano. Koehler e Baumgartner definem hhé·rem como "coisa ou pessoa devotada (à destruição ou a uso sagrado [e] assim excluída de uso profano)", e a forma causativa do verbo hha·rám como "banir (por proscrever . . . excluir da sociedade [e] da vida, devotar à destruição)". (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1958, p. 334) Em certo sentido, portanto, coisas devotadas assim tornavam-se "tabu" para os israelitas. A palavra árabe aparentada retém até hoje um sentido similar. Para os muçulmanos árabes, o território sagrado de Meca e Medina é considerado haram; e o harim dum xeque já por muito tempo é lugar proibido para todas as pessoas exceto o dono do harém ou os eunucos dele.

Foi na declaração da Lei que se expressou pela primeira vez a proscrição sagrada. Lemos em Êxodo 22:20: "Quem oferecer sacrifícios a quaisquer deuses, e não somente a Jeová, deve ser devotado à destruição [uma forma de hha·rám]." Este decreto era aplicado imparcialmente contra os próprios israelitas, como no caso da idolatria praticada em Sitim, que resultou na morte de uns 24.000 da nação. (Núm 25:1-9) A posse de algo devotado à destruição também podia sujeitar o possuidor a tal proscrição. Assim, Deus advertiu os israelitas a respeito das imagens religiosas das nações de Canaã: "Não deves introduzir algo [imagem] detestável na tua casa e assim realmente tornar-te algo devotado à destruição [hhé·rem], igual a ele. Deves ter completa repugnância dele e absolutamente detestá-lo, porque é algo devotado à destruição." — De 7:25, 26.

A proscrição sagrada nem sempre significava destruição. Objetos, animais e até mesmo campos podiam ser devotados a Jeová e assim tornar-se itens santos para uso sagrado pelo sacerdócio ou no serviço do templo. Todavia, pessoas que sofreram a proscrição sagrada tinham de ser mortas sem falha. Nenhuma coisa devotada era remível por qualquer preço que fosse, e esta era uma das principais diferenças entre a coisa devotada e algo de outro modo santificado. — Le 27:21, 28, 29; compare isso com os versículos 19, 27, 30, 31; Núm 18:14; Jos 6:18, 19, 24; Ez 44:29; Esd 10:8.

Cananeus. Foi na conquista de Canaã que esta proscrição sagrada atingiu seu maior destaque. Antes da entrada oficial naquela terra, quando o rei cananeu de Arade atacou Israel lá no Negebe, Jeová aprovou o voto dos israelitas, de devotar as cidades do reino daquele rei à destruição. (Núm 21:1-3) Os reinos de Síon e Ogue, ao L do Jordão, depois dos seus ataques contra Israel, foram os próximos a sofrer a proscrição, resultando na destruição de todas as pessoas nas cidades deles e na preservação de apenas os animais domésticos e de outros despojos. (De 2:31-35; 3:1-7) Mais tarde, nas planícies de Moabe, pouco antes de os israelitas cruzarem o Jordão, Jeová enfatizou de novo a necessidade vital da adoração pura e de evitar todas as influências corrompedoras. Decretou que sete nações na Terra da Promessa fossem colocadas sob proscrição sagrada e que suas populações idólatras fossem devotadas à destruição pelos israelitas, os quais deviam agir como Seus executores. (De 7:1-6, 16, 22-26) Apenas cidades longínquas, que não eram dessas nações, deviam receber a opção de buscar paz; mas as nações designadas por Deus como devotadas à destruição deviam ser aniquiladas, "a fim de que não te ensinem fazer segundo todas as suas coisas detestáveis que fizeram com os seus deuses e deveras pequeis contra Jeová, vosso Deus". (De 20:10-18) Pouparem a quaisquer delas levaria inevitavelmente à infecção e contaminação pelas religiões falsas delas. O extermínio delas podia servir para preservar a vida dos próprios israelitas; mas, de importância maior, era que manteria a pureza da adoração do Soberano Universal, Jeová Deus. A mesma proscrição devia aplicar-se a qualquer membro apóstata das famílias deles ou aos futuros habitantes de qualquer das cidades israelitas que fossem estabelecidas na Terra da Promessa. — De 13:6-17.

Ao oeste do Jordão, Jericó foi a primeira cidade a ser devotada à destruição, não se preservando nada exceto os objetos de metal, para uso no templo. Por causa da sua fé, Raabe e sua família foram eximidas da proscrição. Apesar do forte aviso de Josué, de que a não observância da proscrição podia resultar em toda a nação ser devotada à destruição, Acã apoderou-se de alguns objetos proscritos e assim fez de si "uma coisa devotada à destruição". Somente a morte dele livrou a nação inteira de cair sob a mesma proscrição. — Jos 6:17-19; 7:10-15, 24-26.

Gibeonitas. Depois disso, diversas cidades foram devotadas à destruição. (Jos 8:26, 27; 10:28-42; 11:11, 12) A respeito dessas cidades, o registro declara: "Não se mostrou haver nenhuma cidade que fizesse paz com os filhos de Israel, exceto os heveus que habitavam em Gibeão. A todas as outras tomaram por meio de guerra. Pois, mostrou ser a maneira de agir de Jeová, deixar seus corações ficar obstinados para que declarassem guerra a Israel, a fim de que os devotasse à destruição, para que não obtivessem consideração favorável, mas para que os aniquilasse, assim como Jeová ordenara a Moisés." — Jos 11:19, 20.

Fracasso Assírio. O assírio Senaqueribe jactou-se de que nenhum deus conseguira salvar as nações que os antepassados dele haviam devotado à destruição. (2Cr 32:14) Os deuses falsos da Assíria, porém, não puderam tornar realidade esta proscrição com respeito a Jerusalém, e o verdadeiro Deus, Jeová, mostrou que a ameaça de Senaqueribe era impotente. Todavia, a própria terra de Judá, por causa da obstinação e rebelião do povo, finalmente tornou-se uma terra devotada por Deus à destruição, e sofreu a devastação às mãos de Nabucodonosor. (Je 25:1-11; Is 43:28) Babilônia sofreu depois a devoção à destruição no mais pleno sentido da palavra. — Je 50:21-27; 51:1-3; veja Re 18:2-8.

Outras Menções. Depois de Israel se fixar naquela terra, os israelitas que residiam em Jabes-Gileade sofreram a proscrição por não apoiarem uma ação unida contra a tribo de Benjamim, em punição pela iniquidade desta. (Jz 21:8-12) O Rei Saul deixou de executar completamente os termos da proscrição imposta a Amaleque e seu rei, apresentando como pretexto que as coisas preservadas iriam ser oferecidas em sacrifício a Jeová. Foi-lhe dito que "obedecer é melhor do que um sacrifício" e que o reinado seria então dado a outro. (1Sa 15:1-23) O Rei Acabe foi culpado duma ação similar com respeito ao sírio Ben-Hadade II. (1Rs 20:42) Os habitantes do monte Seir foram devotados à destruição pelos amonitas e pelos moabitas. — 2Cr 20:22, 23.

Proscrições sagradas constam em diversas profecias. Malaquias 4:5, 6, prediz a obra de "Elias, o profeta, antes de chegar o grande e atemorizante dia de Jeová", a fim de que Jeová "não venha e realmente golpeie a terra, devotando-a à destruição". (Veja Mt 24:21, 22.) Daniel 11:44 descreve que o simbólico "rei do norte" sairia em grande furor "para aniquilar e para devotar muitos à destruição". Jeová, por causa da sua indignação, é descrito como devotando "todas as nações" à destruição. (Is 34:2; compare isso com Re 19:15-21.) Diz-se que a triunfante "filha de Sião", por uma proscrição, devota todo o lucro injusto e os recursos dos povos inimigos "ao verdadeiro Senhor de toda a terra". (Miq 4:13) Prediz-se que Jerusalém, liberta de todos os seus inimigos, será habitada e que, daí em diante, "não virá a haver mais nenhuma condenação à destruição". — Za 14:11; compare isso com Re 22:3.

Todos estes textos servem para enfatizar a declaração divina de Deuteronômio 7:9, 10: "E bem sabes que Jeová, teu Deus, é o verdadeiro Deus, o Deus fiel, guardando o pacto e a benevolência no caso dos que o amam e dos que guardam seus mandamentos, até mil gerações, mas retribuindo na sua face àquele que o odeia, destruindo-o. Não hesitará para com aquele que o odeia; retribuindo-lhe na sua face." O Filho de Deus, que deu sua vida como resgate, declarou: "Quem exerce fé no Filho tem vida eterna; quem desobedece ao Filho não verá a vida, mas o furor de Deus permanece sobre ele." (Jo 3:36) Os "cabritos" amaldiçoados, na parábola profética de Mateus 25:31-46, claramente são tais pessoas sobre as quais o furor de Deus permanece e que, portanto, são devotadas à destruição eterna.

Na Septuaginta, a palavra hhé·rem geralmente é traduzida pela palavra grega a·ná·the·ma. — Veja MALDIÇÃO; VOTO.

DEZ MANDAMENTOS. Veja DEZ PALAVRAS.

DEZ PALAVRAS. Esta tradução da expressão hebraica 'asé·reth had·deva·rím, encontrada apenas no Pentateuco, designa as dez leis básicas do pacto da Lei; comumente chamadas de Dez Mandamentos. (Êx 34:28; De 4:13; 10:4) Este código especial de leis é também chamado de "Palavras" (De 5:22) e de "as palavras do pacto". (Êx 34:28) A Septuaginta grega (Êx 34:28; De 10:4) reza dé·ka (dez) ló·gous (palavras), combinação da qual deriva a palavra "Decálogo".

Origem das Tábuas. As Dez Palavras foram originalmente fornecidas, de forma oral, no monte Sinai, pelo anjo de Jeová. (Êx 20:1; 31:18; De 5:22; 9:10; At 7:38, 53; veja também Gál 3:19; He 2:2.) Em seguida Moisés subiu ao monte, a fim de receber as Dez Palavras em forma escrita, em duas tábuas de pedra, junto com outros mandamentos e instruções. Durante a sua prolongada estada de 40 dias, o povo ficou impaciente e fez a estátua fundida dum bezerro, para adorar. Ao descer do monte, Moisés viu este espetáculo de idolatria e atirou ao chão "as tábuas [que] eram o trabalho de Deus", as próprias tábuas sobre as quais haviam sido escritas as Dez Palavras, destroçando-as. — Êx 24:12; 31:18-32:19; De 9:8-17; compare isso com Lu 11:20.

Mais tarde, Jeová disse a Moisés: "Lavra para ti duas tábuas de pedra iguais às primeiras, e eu terei de escrever nas tábuas as palavras que apareceram nas primeiras tábuas que destroçaste." (Êx 34:1-4) E assim, depois de passar mais 40 dias no monte, obteve uma cópia idêntica das Dez Palavras. Estas foram guardadas por Moisés numa arca de madeira de acácia. (De 10:1-5) As duas tábuas foram chamadas de "as tábuas do pacto". (De 9:9, 11, 15) Evidentemente, foi por esta razão que a arca revestida de ouro, feita mais tarde por Bezalel, na qual as tábuas foram por fim guardadas, era chamada de "Arca do Pacto". (Jos 3:6, 11; 8:33; Jz 20:27; He 9:4) Esta legislação das Dez Palavras também era chamada de "o testemunho" (Êx 25:16, 21; 40:20), e de "tábuas do Testemunho" (Êx 31:18; 34:29), daí as expressões "a arca do testemunho" (Êx 25:22; Núm 4:5), e também "o tabernáculo do Testemunho", isto é, a tenda na qual a Arca era abrigada. — Êx 38:21.

A respeito do primeiro conjunto de tábuas, declara-se que não apenas foram feitas por Jeová, mas que também foram "inscritas pelo dedo de Deus", evidentemente, denotando o espírito de Deus. (Êx 31:18; De 4:13; 5:22; 9:10) Da mesma forma, Jeová fez as inscrições no segundo conjunto de tábuas, embora lavradas por Moisés. Quando se disse a Moisés, em Êxodo 34:27: "Escreve para ti estas palavras", não se aludiu às próprias Dez Palavras, mas, antes, como numa ocasião anterior (Êx 24:3, 4), que ele devia escrever alguns dos outros detalhes pertinentes aos regulamentos do pacto. Assim, o pronome "ele", em Êxodo 34:28b, refere-se a Jeová, quando diz: "E ele [Jeová, e não Moisés] passou a escrever nas tábuas as palavras do pacto, as Dez Palavras." O versículo 1 mostra que foi assim. Mais tarde, ao lembrar tais acontecimentos, Moisés confirma que foi Jeová quem reproduziu as tábuas. — De 10:1-4.

Conteúdo dos Mandamentos. Como introdução a estas Dez Palavras figura a seguinte declaração direta, feita na primeira pessoa: "Eu sou Jeová, teu Deus, que te fiz sair da terra do Egito, da casa dos escravos." (Êx 20:2) Isto não apenas estabelece quem está falando a quem, mas mostra por que o Decálogo foi dado especialmente aos judeus, naquela época. Não foi dado a Abraão. — De 5:2, 3.

O primeiro mandamento: "Não deves ter quaisquer outros deuses em oposição à minha pessoa", dava primazia a Jeová. (Êx 20:3) Envolvia sua elevada função e sua posição ímpar como Deus Todo-Poderoso, o Altíssimo, o Soberano Supremo. Este mandamento indicava que os israelitas não deviam ter quaisquer outros deuses como rivais de Jeová.

O segundo mandamento era uma sequência natural do primeiro, visto que proibia a idolatria de qualquer forma ou estilo, considerando-a uma afronta aberta à glória e à Personagem de Jeová. 'Não deves fazer imagem esculpida, nem semelhança de algo que há nos céus, na terra, ou nas águas abaixo da terra, nem deves curvar-te diante delas ou servi-las.' Esta proibição é acentuada com a declaração: "Porque eu, Jeová, teu Deus, sou um Deus que exige devoção exclusiva." — Êx 20:4-6.

O terceiro mandamento, em sequência apropriada e lógica, rezava: "Não deves tomar o nome de Jeová, teu Deus, dum modo fútil." (Êx 20:7) Isto se harmoniza com a proeminência vinculada ao nome de Jeová nas Escrituras Hebraicas (6.979 vezes na NM; veja JEOVÁ [Importância do Nome]). Apenas nesses poucos versículos das Dez Palavras (Êx 20:2-17), o nome ocorre oito vezes. A expressão "não deves tomar" tem o sentido de "não proferir" ou "não erguer (carregar)". Fazer isso com o nome de Deus dum "modo fútil" seria erguer esse nome para uma falsidade, ou "em vão". Os israelitas, que eram privilegiados de levar o nome de Jeová como suas testemunhas e que se tornaram apóstatas, na realidade estavam erguendo ou carregando o nome de Jeová de um modo fútil. — Is 43:10; Ez 36:20, 21.

O quarto mandamento declarava: "Lembrando o dia de sábado para o manteres sagrado, deves prestar serviço e tens de fazer toda a tua obra por seis dias. Mas o sétimo dia é um sábado para Jeová, teu Deus. Não deves fazer nenhuma obra, nem tu, nem teu filho, nem tua filha, nem teu escravo, nem tua escrava, nem teu animal doméstico, nem teu residente forasteiro que está dentro dos teus portões." (Êx 20:8-10) Por considerarem esse dia como santo para Jeová, todos, mesmo os escravos e os animais domésticos, teriam o benefício de um descanso reparador. O dia de sábado propiciava também a oportunidade para as pessoas se concentrarem em assuntos espirituais, sem distração.

O quinto mandamento: "Honra a teu pai e a tua mãe", pode ser considerado como um elo de ligação entre os primeiros quatro, que definem os deveres do homem para com Deus, e os mandamentos restantes, que especificam as obrigações do homem para com suas concriaturas. Uma vez que os pais servem quais representantes de Deus, por obedecer ao quinto mandamento, a pessoa está honrando e obedecendo tanto ao Criador como às criaturas a quem Deus conferiu autoridade. Este mandamento era o único, dentre os dez, que vinha acompanhado duma promessa: "A fim de que os teus dias se prolonguem sobre o solo que Jeová, teu Deus, te dá." — Êx 20:12; De 5:16; Ef 6:2, 3.

Os mandamentos seguintes no código foram declarados de modo bem conciso: o sexto: "Não deves assassinar"; o sétimo: "Não deves cometer adultério"; o oitavo: "Não deves furtar". (Êx 20:13-15) É assim que essas leis estão alistadas no texto massorético — desde leis que tratam de crimes que causam o maior dano ao próximo até os que causam o menor, nesta ordem. Em alguns manuscritos gregos (Códice Alexandrino, Códice Ambrosiano), a ordem é 'assassinato, furto, adultério'; Filo (The Decalogue [O Decálogo], XII, 51) tem 'adultério, assassinato, furto'; o Códice Vaticano, 'adultério, furto, assassinato'. Passando em seguida de ações para palavras, o nono diz: "Não deves testificar uma falsidade contra o teu próximo." — Êx 20:16.

O décimo mandamento (Êx 20:17) era ímpar no sentido de que proibia a cobiça, isto é, o desejo errado de possuir a propriedade e os bens, inclusive a esposa, pertencentes ao próximo. Legislador humano algum produziu tal lei, pois, deveras, humanamente não seria possível impô-la. Jeová, por outro lado, por meio deste décimo mandamento, fez com que cada um se tornasse diretamente responsável diante Dele, que vê e conhece todos os pensamentos secretos do coração da pessoa. — 1Sa 16:7; Pr 21:2; Je 17:10

Outras Maneiras de Alistar Estas Leis. A divisão acima das Dez Palavras, conforme se encontra em Êxodo 20:2-17, é a natural. É a mesma fornecida por Josefo, historiador judeu do primeiro século EC (Antiquities of the Jews [Antiguidades Judaicas], III, 91, 92 [v, 5]), e pelo filósofo judeu Filo, também do primeiro século EC, em The Decalogue (XII, 51). Outros, porém, inclusive Agostinho, juntaram as duas leis contra deuses estranhos e contra imagens (Êx 20:3-6; De 5:7-10) num só mandamento, e, então, a fim de ainda ter dez, dividiram Êxodo 20:17 (De 5:21) em dois mandamentos, criando assim um nono contra cobiçar a esposa do próximo e um décimo contra cobiçar sua casa, e assim por diante. Agostinho buscou apoio para a sua divisão teórica no alistamento paralelo posterior do Decálogo, em Deuteronômio 5:6-21, onde se encontram duas palavras hebraicas diferentes no versículo 21 ("Nem deves desejar [forma da hebr. hha·mádh] . . . Nem deves almejar egoistamente [forma da hebr. 'a·wáh]"), ao invés de no texto anterior de Êxodo 20:17, onde apenas o único verbo (desejar) ocorre duas vezes.

Na fraseologia usada nas enumerações paralelas dos Dez Mandamentos, em Êxodo e em Deuteronômio, existem outras pequenas diferenças, mas estas, de modo algum, influem na força ou no sentido das leis. Ao passo que, na listagem anterior, as Dez Palavras são declaradas em estilo legislativo formal, na sua repetição posterior usa-se a forma mais narrativa, pois, nesta última ocasião, Moisés estava apenas repassando o mandamento de Deus, como lembrete. As Dez Palavras aparecem também em outros trechos com ainda outras variações, pois foram muitas vezes mencionadas ou citadas, junto com outras instruções, por escritores bíblicos tanto das Escrituras Hebraicas como das Gregas Cristãs. — Êx 31:14; 34:14, 17, 21; Le 19:3, 11, 12; De 4:15-19; 6:14, 15; Mt 5:27; 15:4; Lu 18:20; Ro 13:9; Ef 6:2, 3.

As Dez Palavras foram dadas por Deus, de modo que consistem num código de lei perfeito. Quando certo homem "versado na Lei" perguntou a Jesus Cristo: "Instrutor, qual é o maior mandamento na Lei?", Jesus citou um mandamento que, na realidade, epitomou os primeiros quatro (ou possivelmente cinco) dos Dez Mandamentos, dizendo: "Tens de amar a Jeová, teu Deus, de todo o teu coração, de toda a tua alma e de toda a tua mente." O restante do Decálogo, Jesus resumiu então nas poucas palavras de outro mandamento: "Tens de amar o teu próximo como a ti mesmo." — Mt 22:35-40; De 6:5; Le 19:18.

Os Cristãos não Estão sob o Decálogo. Jesus nasceu sujeito à Lei e obedeceu-a perfeitamente, dando por fim sua vida qual resgate pela humanidade. (Gál 4:4; 1Jo 2:2) Ainda mais, por meio da sua morte na estaca de tortura, ele livrou os que estavam sujeitos à Lei (inclusive as Dez Palavras ou Mandamentos básicos) "por se tornar maldição" em lugar deles. Sua morte possibilitou 'apagar o documento manuscrito', sendo este pregado na estaca de tortura. — Gál 3:13; Col 2:13, 14.

No entanto, um estudo da Lei com suas Dez Palavras é essencial para os cristãos, pois revela o ponto de vista de Deus sobre os assuntos, e tinha "uma sombra das boas coisas vindouras" da realidade que pertence ao Cristo. (He 10:1; Col 2:17; Gál 6:2) Os cristãos 'não estão sem lei para com Deus, mas estão debaixo de lei para com Cristo'. (1Co 9:21) Mas essa lei não os condena quais pecadores, pois a benignidade imerecida de Deus por meio de Cristo os provê do perdão dos erros praticados devido às fraquezas carnais. — Ro 3:23, 24.

DIA. Jeová Deus introduziu esta divisão fundamental do tempo no primeiro "dia" do período durante o qual preparou a terra para a humanidade, quando a luz difusa evidentemente atravessou as faixas que rodeavam a terra, fazendo com que a terra coberta de umidade tivesse seu primeiro dia e sua primeira noite, à medida que girava em torno do seu eixo, por receber a luz do sol. "Deus fez separação entre a luz e a escuridão. E Deus começou a chamar a luz de Dia, mas a escuridão chamou de Noite." (Gên 1:4, 5) Aqui a palavra "Dia" refere-se às horas de claridade do dia, em contraste com as do período noturno. No entanto, o registro depois usa a palavra "dia" com referência a outras unidades de tempo, de duração variada. Tanto nas Escrituras Hebraicas como nas Gregas a palavra "dia" (hebr.: yohm; gr.: he·mé·ra) é usada em sentido literal e também figurativo, ou até mesmo simbólico.

O dia solar, a unidade fundamental do tempo, é determinado por uma rotação completa da terra em torno do seu eixo, desde o momento em que o sol deixa o meridiano, o ponto mais alto que atinge ao meio-dia, até que volta a ele. Este dia solar ou civil, em certos países, é atualmente dividido em dois períodos de 12 horas cada um, e em outros é calculado como um período de 24 horas. Entretanto, nos tempos bíblicos, usavam-se diversos outros métodos para dividir o dia.

O dia dos hebreus começava à noitinha, após o pôr do sol, e terminava no dia seguinte, ao pôr do sol. O dia, portanto, ia de noitinha a noitinha. "Deveis observar o vosso sábado de noitinha a noitinha." (Le 23:32) Isto segue o padrão dos dias criativos de Jeová, conforme indicado em Gênesis 1:5: "Veio a ser noitinha e veio a ser manhã, primeiro dia." — Veja Da 8:14.

Os hebreus não eram os únicos a contar o dia de noitinha a noitinha; também os fenícios, os númidas e os atenienses o faziam. Os babilônios, por outro lado, contavam o dia do nascer do sol ao nascer do sol, ao passo que os egípcios e os romanos o contavam de meia-noite a meia-noite (conforme é comum hoje em dia).

Embora os hebreus oficialmente iniciassem o seu dia à noitinha, às vezes falavam dele como começando de manhã. Por exemplo, Levítico 7:15 diz: "A carne do sacrifício de agradecimento dos seus sacrifícios de participação em comum deve ser comida no dia em que a oferece. Nada deve guardar dela até à manhã." Este uso, sem dúvida, era uma simples questão de conveniência de expressão, para indicar a passagem da noite.

Conforme mencionado no relato da criação, o período de claridade do dia é também chamado de dia. (Gên 1:5; 8:22) Na Bíblia, ele é dividido em períodos naturais: o crepúsculo matutino ou a alvorada, pouco antes de o dia começar (Sal 119:147; 1Sa 30:17); o alvorecer ou nascer do sol (Jó 3:9); a manhã (Gên 24:54); o meio-dia (De 28:29; 1Rs 18:27; Is 16:3; At 22:6); o período do pôr do sol, marcando o fim do dia (Gên 15:12; Jos 8:29); e o crepúsculo vespertino ou anoitecer (2Rs 7:5, 7). As ocasiões para os sacerdotes fazerem certas ofertas ou queimarem incenso também eram períodos conhecidos ao povo. — 1Rs 18:29, 36; Lu 1:10.

A que período se refere a expressão "entre as duas noitinhas"?

Com referência ao abate do cordeiro pascoal, em 14 de nisã, as Escrituras mencionam "as duas noitinhas". (Êx 12:6) Mesmo que alguns comentários sobre a tradição judaica apresente isso como o espaço de tempo desde o meio-dia (quando o sol começa a declinar) até o pôr do sol, parece que o sentido correto é que a primeira noitinha corresponde ao pôr do sol e a segunda noitinha à hora em que a luz refletida do sol, ou arrebol da tarde, acaba e a escuridão sobrevém. (De 16:6; Sal 104:19, 20) Este era também o entendimento do rabino espanhol Aben-Ezra (1092-1167), bem como dos samaritanos e dos judeus caraítas. É o conceito apresentado por peritos tais como Michaelis, Rosenmueller, Gesenius, Maurer, Kalisch, Knobel e Keil.

Não há nenhuma indicação de que os hebreus, antes do exílio babilônico, usassem horas para dividir o dia. A palavra "hora" encontrada em Daniel 3:6, 15; 4:19, 33; 5:5, na versão Almeida, edição revista e corrigida, traduz a palavra aramaica sha·ʽáh, a qual, literalmente, significa "uma olhada" e é traduzida mais corretamente por "instante". O uso de horas por parte dos judeus, porém, passou a ser costumeiro após o exílio. Quanto à "sombra dos degraus", mencionada em Isaías 38:8 e 2 Reis 20:8-11, isto talvez se refira ao método de calcular o tempo por meio dum relógio de sol, no qual o sol projetava sombras numa série de degraus. — Veja Sol (A Sombra Que Retrocedeu Dez Degraus).

Os primitivos babilônios usavam o sistema sexagesimal baseado na escala matemática de 60. Deste sistema obtivemos a nossa divisão do tempo, pela qual o dia é repartido em 24 horas (ou, em certos países, em dois períodos de 12 horas cada um), e a hora em 60 minutos de 60 segundos cada um.

Nos dias do ministério terrestre de Jesus, era comum o costume de dividir em horas o período de claridade do dia. Assim, em João 11:9, Jesus disse: "Não há doze horas de luz no dia?" Estas eram, em geral, contadas do nascer até o pôr do sol, ou de cerca das 6 às 18 horas. A "terceira hora", pois, seria por volta das 9 horas, e foi nesta hora que o espírito santo foi derramado em Pentecostes. (Mt 20:3; At 2:15) Quando Jesus, cansado de uma viagem, estava sentado junto à fonte de Jacó, era cerca da "sexta hora", ou meio-dia, que foi também a hora em que Pedro ficou com muita fome, em Jope. (Jo 4:6; At 10:9, 10) Foi também por volta do meio-dia que uma escuridão caiu sobre toda a terra, até a "nona hora", ou por volta das 15 horas, quando Jesus expirou na estaca de tortura. (Mt 27:45, 46; Lu 23:44, 46) Esta nona hora era também chamada "a hora da oração". (At 3:1; 10:3, 4, 30) Assim, a "sétima hora" seria por volta das 13 horas, e a "décima primeira hora", por volta das 17 horas. (Jo 4:52; Mt 20:6-12) A noite também era dividida em horas, naquele tempo. — At 23:23; veja NOITE.

Há casos em que os hebreus usavam 'dia e noite' para referir-se apenas a uma parte de um dia solar de 24 horas. Por exemplo, 1 Reis 12:5, 12 fala de Roboão pedir a Jeroboão e aos israelitas que 'fossem embora por três dias' e então retornassem a ele. Que Roboão não se referia a três dias completos de 24 horas, mas sim, a partes de três dias, pode-se depreender do fato de que o povo retornou a ele "no terceiro dia". Em Mateus 12:40, o mesmo sentido é conferido aos "três dias e três noites" da permanência de Jesus no Seol. Conforme mostra o registro, ele foi levantado à vida no "terceiro dia". Os sacerdotes judaicos entendiam claramente que este era o sentido das palavras de Jesus, visto que, no seu esforço de impedir a sua ressurreição, citaram Jesus como tendo dito: "Depois de três dias eu hei de ser levantado", e em seguida pediram a Pilatos que desse a ordem que 'o sepulcro fosse feito seguro até o terceiro dia'. — Mt 27:62-66; 28:1-6; note outros exemplos em Gên 42:17, 18; Est 4:16; 5:1.

Os hebreus não usavam nomes para os dias da semana, exceto para o sétimo dia, chamado de sábado. (Veja SÁBADO.) Fazia-se referência aos diversos dias por sua ordem numérica. Nos dias de Jesus e dos seus apóstolos, o dia antes do sábado era chamado de Preparação. (Mt 28:1; At 20:7; Mr 15:42; Jo 19:31; veja SEMANA.) O costume de dar aos dias os nomes dos planetas e de outros corpos celestes era pagão. Os romanos chamavam os dias pelos nomes do sol, da lua, de Marte, de Mercúrio, de Júpiter, de Vênus e de Saturno, mas no norte da Europa, quatro destes nomes foram mais tarde mudados para os equivalentes germânicos dos deuses romanos, representados por estes dias.

A palavra "dia" é às vezes usada para indicar certa medida de distância, como nas expressões "um dia de jornada" e a "distância da jornada de um sábado". — Núm 11:31; At 1:12; veja PESOS E MEDIDAS.

Em profecia, um dia representa às vezes um ano. Isto pode ser observado em Ezequiel 4:6: "Tens de deitar-te sobre o teu lado direito, no segundo caso, e tens de levar o erro da casa de Judá por quarenta dias. Um dia por um ano, um dia por um ano é o que te dei." — Veja também Núm 14:34.

Certos números específicos de dias dados com relação a profecias são: três dias e meio (Re 11:9); 10 dias (Re 2:10); 40 dias (Ez 4:6); 390 dias (Ez 4:5); 1.260 dias (Re 11:3; 12:6); 1.290 dias (Da 12:11); 1.335 dias (Da 12:12); e 2.300 dias (Da 8:14).

O termo "dia(s)" também é usado referindo-se a um período de tempo contemporâneo a determinada pessoa, como, por exemplo, os "dias de Noé" e os "dias de Ló". — Lu 17:26-30; Is 1:1.

Outros casos em que a palavra "dia" é usada em sentido flexível ou figurativo são: o "dia em que Deus criou Adão" (Gên 5:1), "o dia de Jeová" (Sof 1:7), o "dia de fúria" (Sof 1:15), o "dia de salvação" (2Co 6:2), "o dia do julgamento" (2Pe 3:7), o "grande dia de Deus, o Todo-Poderoso" (Re 16:14), e outros.

Este uso flexível da palavra "dia" para expressar unidades de tempo de duração variada é claramente evidente no relato de Gênesis sobre a criação. Lá se menciona uma semana de seis dias criativos, seguidos de um sétimo dia de descanso. A semana que os judeus deviam observar sob o pacto da Lei que lhes foi dado por Deus era uma cópia em miniatura daquela semana criativa. (Êx 20:8-11) No registro bíblico, o relato de cada um dos seis dias criativos conclui com a declaração: "E veio a ser noitinha e veio a ser manhã", primeiro, segundo, terceiro, quarto, quinto e sexto dia. (Gên 1:5, 8, 13, 19, 23, 31) O sétimo dia, porém, não tem esta conclusão, indicando que este período, durante o qual Deus tem estado descansando das suas obras criativas com respeito à terra, prosseguia. Em Hebreus 4:1-10, o apóstolo Paulo indicou que o dia de descanso de Deus ainda continuava na geração dele, e isso já era mais de 4.000 anos depois do início daquele período de descanso do sétimo dia. Isto torna claro que cada dia criativo, ou período de trabalho, tinha pelo menos milhares de anos de duração. Conforme observa A Religious Encyclopædia (Enciclopédia Religiosa; Vol. I, p. 613): "Os dias da criação eram dias criativos, estágios no processo, mas não dias de vinte e quatro horas cada um." — Editada por P. Schaff, 1894.

O inteiro período das seis unidades de tempo, ou "dias" criativos, dedicado à preparação do planeta Terra, é resumido num único todo-abrangente "dia", em Gênesis 2:4: "Esta é uma história dos céus e da terra no tempo em que foram criados, no dia em que Jeová Deus fez a terra e o céu."

A situação do homem não tem comparação com a do Criador, que não reside dentro do nosso sistema solar, e que não é afetado pelos diversos ciclos e órbitas deste. O salmista diz a respeito de Deus, que é de tempo indefinido a tempo indefinido: "Pois mil anos aos teus olhos são apenas como o ontem que passou e como uma vigília durante a noite."

(Sal 90:2, 4) De modo correspondente, o apóstolo Pedro escreve que "um só dia é para Jeová como mil anos, e mil anos, como um só dia". (2Pe 3:8) Para o homem, um período de 1.000 anos representa 365.242 unidades individuais de tempo, dia e noite, mas para o Criador pode ser apenas um só período ininterrupto em que ele começa a executar alguma atividade objetiva e a leva à sua conclusão bem-sucedida, muito parecido ao homem que começa uma tarefa de manhã e a termina até o fim do dia.

Jeová é o Originador de nosso universo, no qual o tempo, o espaço, o movimento, a massa e a energia se mostraram todos inescapavelmente relacionados entre si. Ele controla todos segundo o Seu propósito, e ao lidar com as Suas criaturas na terra, especifica tempos definidos para as Suas próprias ações para com elas, até mesmo 'o dia e a hora'. (Mt 24:36; Gál 4:4) Ele mantém estas especificações com a máxima pontualidade.

DIABO. Este nome descritivo foi dado a Satanás por este ser o principal caluniador e difamador de Jeová, da boa palavra e do santo nome Dele. A palavra grega di·á·bo·los significa "caluniador". (Veja Lu 16:1, onde ocorre o verbo aparentado di·a·bál·lo.) — Veja SATANÁS.

No decorrer dos séculos, o Diabo demonstrou ser o arquiopositor tanto de Deus como do homem. Ele disputou com Miguel o corpo de Moisés (Ju 9); mostrou que tem poder para enlaçar outros (1Ti 3:7; 2Ti 2:26); usou pessoas tais como os líderes da religião falsa, Judas Iscariotes e Barjesus como filhos seus (Jo 8:44; 13:2; At 13:6, 10); oprimiu pessoas a ponto de não poderem ser curadas por médicos (At 10:38); fez com que justos fossem lançados na prisão (Re 2:10); até mesmo teve os meios de causar a morte prematura (He 2:14). Os cristãos, portanto, são admoestados a não darem margem a este Caluniador de Deus por continuarem encolerizados. (Ef 4:27) "Mantende os vossos sentidos, sede vigilantes", adverte Pedro. "Vosso adversário, o Diabo, anda em volta como leão que ruge, procurando a quem devorar." — 1Pe 5:8.

Há outros casos no texto original das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs em que ocorre a palavra di·á·bo·los, mas sem se referir a Satanás, de modo que a palavra é corretamente vertida por "caluniador". Por exemplo, referindo-se a Judas, Jesus disse aos 12: "Um de vós é um caluniador" (Jo 6:70); mulheres na congregação foram acauteladas a não serem caluniadoras (1Ti 3:11; Tit 2:3); que "os homens serão . . . caluniadores" é uma das evidências dos "últimos dias". — 2Ti 3:1-5.

A lei que Jeová deu aos da nação de Israel proibia-lhes caluniarem uns aos outros. (Le 19:16) O teor de toda a Bíblia é contra tal mau uso da língua. — 2Sa 19:27; Sal 15:3; 101:5; Pr 11:13; 20:19; 30:10; Je 6:28; 9:4.

DIA DE JEOVÁ. Período especial de tempo, não de 24 horas, no qual Jeová se manifesta ativamente contra os seus inimigos e a favor do seu povo. Executado o julgamento divino nos iníquos, Jeová é vitorioso sobre os seus opositores durante este "dia". É também um tempo de salvação e libertação para os justos, o dia em que o próprio Jeová é grandemente enaltecido como o Supremo. Assim, de duas maneiras, é única e exclusivamente o grande dia de Jeová.

Este dia é detalhado nas Escrituras como tempo de batalha, um grande e atemorizante dia de escuridão e de ira ardente, dia de fúria, aflição, angústia, desolação e sobressalto. "Então, que significará para vós o dia de Jeová?" perguntou Deus ao inconstante Israel por meio do seu profeta Amós. O seguinte: "Será escuridão, e não luz, assim como quando algum homem foge do leão e o urso realmente vem ao seu encontro; e como quando ele entrou na casa e apoiou sua mão na parede e a serpente o mordeu." (Am 5:18-20) Disse-se a Isaías: "Eis que está chegando o próprio dia de Jeová, cruel, tanto com fúria como com ira ardente." (Is 13:9) "Este dia é dia de fúria, dia de aflição e de angústia, dia de tempestade e de desolação, dia de escuridão e de trevas, dia de nuvens e de densas trevas." (Sof 1:15) Durante esse tempo de dificuldade, o dinheiro não terá absolutamente nenhum valor. "A própria prata deles lançarão nas ruas . . . Nem a sua prata nem o seu ouro poderá livrá-los no dia da fúria de Jeová." — Ez 7:19; Sof 1:18.

Um senso de urgência está relacionado com o dia de Jeová pelos profetas que repetidas vezes avisaram sobre a proximidade dele. "Está próximo o grande dia de Jeová. Está próximo e se apressa muitíssimo." (Sof 1:14) "Ai do dia; porque está próximo o dia de Jeová." "Fiquem agitados todos os habitantes da terra; pois está chegando o dia de Jeová, pois está perto!" — Jl 1:15; 2:1, 2.

Tempos de Julgamento Destrutivo. À base de certos aspectos das profecias e em vista de eventos subsequentes, parece que a expressão "o dia de Jeová", pelo menos em miniatura, refere-se a diferentes tempos de julgamento destrutivo que ocorreram há muito tempo às mãos do Altíssimo. Por exemplo, Isaías teve visão do que sobreviria a Judá e Jerusalém infiéis no "dia pertencente a Jeová dos exércitos", que viria "sobre todo o altivo e altaneiro" entre elas. (Is 2:11-17) Ezequiel dirigiu-se aos profetas infiéis de Israel, advertindo que eles de modo algum serviriam para fortificar suas cidades, "para ficar de pé na batalha no dia de Jeová".

(Ez 13:5) Jeová predisse pela boca do seu profeta Sofonias que estava prestes a estender a sua mão contra Judá e contra Jerusalém, dando atenção especial para que nem mesmo os príncipes ou os filhos do rei escapassem. (Sof 1:4-8) Conforme mostrado pelos fatos, aquele "dia de Jeová" sobreveio aos habitantes de Jerusalém em 607 AEC.

Naquele tempo aflitivo de dificuldades para Judá e Jerusalém, suas nações vizinhas, tais como Edom, mostraram seu ódio a Jeová e ao povo dele, o que fez com que o profeta Obadias (vv. 1, 15) profetizasse contra elas: "Pois está próximo o dia de Jeová contra todas as nações. Assim como fizeste, será feito a ti." De modo similar, "o dia de Jeová", e toda a destruição ardente abrangida por esta expressão sobreveio a Babilônia e ao Egito exatamente como predito. — Is 13:1, 6; Je 46:1, 2, 10.

Mais tarde, por meio do profeta Malaquias, foi predito outro "grande e atemorizante dia de Jeová" e foi dito que seria precedido pela chegada de "Elias, o profeta". (Mal 4:5, 6) O Elias original vivera cerca de 500 anos antes de esta profecia ter sido feita, mas, no primeiro século EC, Jesus mencionou que João, o Batizador, era o predito que correspondia a Elias. (Mt 11:12-14; Mr 9:11-13) Assim, naquele tempo, um "dia de Jeová" estava próximo. Em Pentecostes de 33 EC, Pedro explicou que aquilo que acontecia era o cumprimento da profecia de Joel (Jl 2:28-32) a respeito do derramamento do espírito de Deus, e que isto também estava destinado a acontecer antes do "grande e ilustre dia de Jeová". (At 2:16-21) Aquele "dia de Jeová" veio em 70 EC, quando Jeová, em cumprimento de sua Palavra, fez com que os exércitos de Roma executassem o julgamento divino na nação que rejeitara o Filho de Deus e bradara desafiadoramente: "Não temos rei senão César." — Jo 19:15; Da 9:24-27.

Contudo, as Escrituras indicam para o futuro ainda outro "dia de Jeová". Depois que os judeus foram restabelecidos em Jerusalém, após o exílio babilônico, Jeová fez com que seu profeta Zacarias (14:1-3) predissesse "um dia pertencente a Jeová", em que reuniria não apenas uma nação, mas "todas as nações contra Jerusalém", no clímax do qual "Jeová há de sair e guerrear contra essas nações", acabando com elas. O apóstolo Paulo, sob inspiração, ligou o vindouro "dia de Jeová" com a presença de Cristo. (2Te 2:1, 2) E Pedro falou dele em conexão com o estabelecimento de 'novos céus e uma nova terra, nos quais há de morar a justiça'. — 2Pe 3:10-13.

A segurança e a proteção durante o grande dia de Jeová devem interessar a cada um. Após perguntar: "Quem poderá resistir nele?", Joel diz: "Jeová será refúgio para o seu povo." (Jl 2:11; 3:16) O convite é bondosamente feito a todos, mas poucos aproveitam esta provisão de refúgio por acatarem o conselho de Sofonias: "Antes de o estatuto dar algo à luz, antes que tenha passado o dia como a pragana, antes que venha sobre vós a ira ardente de Jeová, antes que venha sobre vós o dia da ira ardente de Jeová, procurai a Jeová, todos os mansos da terra, que tendes praticado a Sua própria decisão judicial. Procurai a justiça, procurai a mansidão. Provavelmente sereis escondidos no dia da ira de Jeová." — Sof 2:2, 3.

DIADEMA. Veja COROA.

DIA DO JULGAMENTO (JUÍZO). "Dia" ou período específico em que determinados grupos, nações, ou a humanidade em geral, têm de prestar contas a Deus. Pode ser um tempo em que os já julgados merecedores da morte são executados, ou o julgamento pode proporcionar, para alguns, a oportunidade de serem libertos, mesmo para a vida eterna. Jesus Cristo e seus apóstolos apontaram para um futuro "Dia do Juízo" que envolveria, não apenas os vivos, mas também os que morreram no passado. — Mt 10:15; 11:21-24; 12:41, 42; 2Ti 4:1, 2.

Tempos de Julgamento no Passado. Em várias épocas, no passado, Jeová convocou pessoas e nações a prestarem contas de suas ações e executou os seus julgamentos por lhes causar destruição. Tais julgamentos executórios não eram demonstrações arbitrárias de força bruta ou de poder sobrepujante. Em alguns casos, a palavra hebraica traduzida "julgamento" ou "juízo" [mish·pát] é também traduzida "justiça" e "o que é direito". (Esd 7:10; Gên 18:25) A Bíblia destaca que Jeová "ama a justiça e o juízo", de modo que seus julgamentos executórios envolvem ambas essas qualidades. — Sal 33:5.

Às vezes, os julgamentos executórios sobrevinham em consequência da conduta iníqua das pessoas na sua vida cotidiana. Sodoma e Gomorra são um exemplo disso. Jeová inspecionou estas cidades e concluiu que o pecado dos habitantes era muito grave; ele decidiu arruinar essas cidades. (Gên 18:20, 21; 19:14) Mais tarde Judas escreveu que essas cidades sofreram "a punição judicial [gr.: di·ken; "julgamento", Da; "justiça", Yg; "pena", Al, CBC, MC, PIB, So; "castigo", BJ, BLH] do fogo eterno". (Ju 7) Assim, essas cidades sofreram um "dia" de julgamento.

Jeová moveu uma ação judicial contra a antiga Babilônia, perene inimiga de Deus e do povo dele. Por ser desnecessariamente cruel com os judeus, por não pretender libertá-los após o exílio de 70 anos e por atribuir a Marduque a vitória sobre o povo de Deus, Babilônia merecia ser sentenciada à execução. (Je 51:36; Is 14:3-6, 17; Da 5:1-4) Esta sobreveio a Babilônia em 539 AEC, quando foi derrotada pelos medos e persas. Visto que o julgamento a ser executado era o de Jeová, podia-se referir a esse período como "o dia de Jeová". — Is 13:1, 6, 9.

Similarmente, Jeremias profetizou que Deus iria 'pôr-se em julgamento' com Edom, entre outros. (Je 25:17-31) Portanto, essa nação que demonstrara ódio a Jeová e ao povo dele sofreu julgamento destrutivo no "dia de Jeová". — Ob 1, 15, 16.

Quando Judá e Jerusalém se tornaram infiéis, merecendo a reprovação de Deus, ele prometeu "executar no . . . meio [delas] decisões judiciais". (Ez 5:8) Em 607 AEC o "dia da fúria de Jeová" veio com a execução do Seu julgamento destrutivo. (Ez 7:19) No entanto, predisse-se outro "dia" ou tempo de julgamento de Jerusalém. Joel profetizou um derramamento de espírito antes do "grande e atemorizante dia de Jeová". (Jl 2:28-31) Pedro, sob inspiração, no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, explicou que estavam tendo naquela ocasião um cumprimento dessa profecia. (At 2:16-20) O destrutivo "dia de Jeová" veio em 70 EC, quando os exércitos romanos executaram nos judeus o julgamento divino. Conforme Jesus predissera, aqueles eram "dias para se executar a justiça". — Lu 21:22; veja DESTRUIÇÃO.

Tempos Futuros de Julgamento Executório. À parte das profecias das Escrituras Hebraicas, a Bíblia menciona explicitamente vários futuros dias de julgamento que envolvem execuções. Revelação (Apocalipse) aponta a ocasião em que "Babilônia, a Grande", será completamente queimada. Esta punição judicial deve-se à sua fornicação com as nações e por ela estar embriagada com o sangue das testemunhas de Jesus. (Re 17:1-6; 18:8, 20; 19:1, 2) Mencionando outro julgamento executório, Pedro referiu-se ao que ocorreu nos dias de Noé e predisse um "dia do julgamento e da destruição dos homens ímpios". (2Pe 3:7) Revelação fala de tal destruição como executada pela "Palavra de Deus", que golpeará as nações com uma longa espada. (Re 19:11-16; compare isso com Ju 14, 15.) Também, no primeiro século, o Diabo já tinha sido julgado, e os demônios que ele lidera sabiam que seriam lançados no abismo, assim como Satanás. (1Ti 3:6; Lu 8:31; Re 20:1-3) Assim, segue-se que o julgamento que os aguarda é simplesmente a execução de um julgamento já feito. — Ju 6; 2Pe 2:4; 1Co 6:3.

Pode ou não Ser Condenatório. A maioria das ocorrências de "julgamento" (gr.: krí·sis e krí·ma) nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs tem claramente a conotação de um julgamento condenatório ou adverso. Em João 5:24, 29, "julgamento" é contrastado com "vida" e "vida eterna", evidentemente querendo dizer um julgamento condenatório que significa a perda total da vida — a morte. (2Pe 2:9; 3:7; Jo 3:18, 19) Todavia, nem todo julgamento adverso leva inevitavelmente à destruição. As observações de Paulo em 1 Coríntios 11:27-32, a respeito da celebração da Refeição Noturna do Senhor, ilustram isso. Quem não discernisse corretamente o que estava fazendo, poderia comer ou beber "julgamento contra si mesmo". Daí, Paulo acrescenta: "Quando somos julgados, somos disciplinados por Jeová, para não ficarmos condenados com o mundo." Assim, alguém talvez receba um julgamento adverso, mas, por arrepender-se, talvez não seja destruído para sempre.

Outrossim, a possibilidade de haver um julgamento que não seja condenatório é óbvia em 2 Coríntios 5:10. A respeito dos manifestados perante a cadeira de juiz, o texto diz: "Cada um [receberá] o seu prêmio . . . segundo as coisas que praticou, quer boas, quer ruins." O julgamento mencionado em Revelação 20:13 evidentemente termina com resultado favorável para muitos. Dentre os mortos julgados, aqueles que recebem um julgamento adverso são lançados no "lago de fogo". Os demais, porém, saem do julgamento 'achados inscritos no livro da vida'. — Re 20:15.

Dia de Julgamento de Prestação de Contas Pessoal. Os hebreus pré-cristãos estavam familiarizados com a ideia de que Deus os considerava pessoalmente responsáveis por sua conduta. (Ec 11:9; 12:14) As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs explicam que haverá um futuro período ou "dia" específico em que a humanidade, tanto os vivos como os que morreram no passado, serão julgados individualmente. — 2Ti 4:1, 2.

Identidade dos juízes. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, Jeová é identificado como "o Juiz de toda a terra". (Gên 18:25) Similarmente, nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, ele é chamado de "o Juiz de todos". (He 12:23) No entanto, delegou poderes a seu Filho para julgar por ele. (Jo 5:22) A Bíblia fala de Jesus como 'designado', "decretado" e "destinado" a julgar. (At 10:42; 17:31; 2Ti 4:1) Ter sido Jesus assim autorizado por Deus resolve qualquer aparente contradição entre o texto que diz que os indivíduos ficarão "postados diante da cadeira de juiz de Deus" e o versículo que diz que serão "manifestados perante a cadeira de juiz do Cristo". — Ro 14:10; 2Co 5:10.

Jesus disse também aos seus apóstolos que, quando se assentasse no seu trono, na "recriação", eles estariam "sentados em doze tronos" para julgar. (Mt 19:28; Lu 22:28-30) Paulo mostrou que os cristãos "chamados para ser santos" julgarão o mundo. (1Co 1:2; 6:2) Também, o apóstolo João viu em visão o tempo em que alguns receberam "poder para julgar". (Re 20:4) Em vista dos textos acima, isto evidentemente inclui os apóstolos e os outros santos. Tal conclusão é confirmada pelo restante do versículo, que fala dos que reinam com Cristo durante o Milênio. Estes serão então juízes reais junto com Jesus.

A excelente qualidade do julgamento que ocorrerá no Dia do Juízo está assegurada, pois os "julgamentos [de Jeová] são verdadeiros e justos". (Re 19:1, 2) O tipo de julgamento que ele autoriza também é justo e veraz. (Jo 5:30; 8:16; Re 1:1; 2:23) Não haverá deturpação da justiça, nem a ocultação dos fatos.

Envolve a ressurreição. Ao usar a expressão "Dia do Juízo", Jesus introduziu no cenário a ressurreição dos mortos. Mencionou que certa cidade talvez rejeitasse os apóstolos e sua mensagem, e disse: "No Dia do Juízo será mais suportável para a terra de Sodoma e Gomorra do que para essa cidade." (Mt 10:15) Embora evidentemente ele usasse uma hipérbole (visto que Sodoma e Gomorra haviam sofrido destruição eterna), sua declaração na realidade apontava para um julgamento futuro pelo menos para alguns procedentes de tal cidade judaica do primeiro século. (Veja Mt 11:22-24; Lu 10:13-15; Ju 7.) Ainda mais clara é a declaração de Jesus de que "a rainha do sul será levantada no julgamento". (Mt 12:41, 42; Lu 11:31, 32) As declarações bíblicas a respeito de Jesus julgar 'os vivos e os mortos' podem ser encaradas à luz do fato de que o Dia do Juízo envolve a ressurreição. — At 10:42; 2Ti 4:1.

Uma última indicação de que muitos dos que serão examinados no Dia do Juízo serão pessoas ressuscitadas é a informação em Revelação 20:12, 13. São vistas pessoas "em pé diante do trono". Mencionam-se os mortos, e também que a morte e o Hades entregaram os mortos neles. Tais pessoas são julgadas.

Tempo do Dia do Juízo. Em João 12:48, Cristo associou o julgamento de pessoas com 'o último dia'. Revelação 11:17, 18, situa a ocorrência dum julgamento dos mortos depois de Deus assumir seu grande poder e começar a reinar de modo especial. Luz adicional sobre o assunto decorre da sequência de acontecimentos registrados em Revelação, capítulos 19 e 20. Lê-se ali a respeito duma guerra, na qual o "Rei dos reis" mata "os reis da terra, e os seus exércitos". (Já antes, em Revelação [16:14], esta é chamada de "a guerra do grande dia de Deus, o Todo-Poderoso".) A seguir, Satanás é amarrado por mil anos. Durante esses mil anos, juízes reais prestam serviços junto com Cristo. No mesmo contexto são mencionados a ressurreição e o julgamento dos mortos. Isto, então, é uma indicação do tempo em que ocorre o Dia do Juízo. E, do ponto de vista bíblico, não é impossível considerar um período de mil anos como um "dia", porque tal equiparação é declarada na Bíblia. — 2Pe 3:8; Sal 90:4.

Base para o julgamento. Descrevendo o que ocorrerá na terra durante o tempo do julgamento, Revelação 20:12 diz que os mortos ressuscitados serão então "julgados pelas coisas escritas nos rolos, segundo as suas ações". Esses ressuscitados não serão julgados à base das ações praticadas na sua vida anterior, porque a regra em Romanos 6:7 diz: "Aquele que morreu foi absolvido do seu pecado."

No entanto, Jesus disse que a relutância em reconhecer as suas obras poderosas e arrepender-se, ou deixar de acatar a mensagem de Deus, tornaria para alguns difícil suportar o Dia do Juízo. — Mt 10:14, 15; 11:21-24.

DIA DO SENHOR. Período específico em que o Senhor Jesus Cristo leva a um término bem-sucedido certas coisas relacionadas com o propósito de Deus.

No uso bíblico, a palavra "dia" pode significar um período bem mais longo do que 24 horas. (Gên 2:4; Jo 8:56; 2Pe 3:8) A evidência do contexto indica que o "dia do Senhor", de Revelação (Apocalipse) 1:10, não é um dia específico de 24 horas. Visto que foi "por inspiração" que João veio a estar "no dia do Senhor", não poderia referir-se a um específico dia da semana. Para chegar a um específico dia da semana, não teria sido necessário que João fosse inspirado. Portanto, o "dia do Senhor" deve ser aquele tempo futuro em que ocorreriam os acontecimentos que João foi privilegiado em presenciar em visão. Isto incluía acontecimentos tais como a guerra no céu e a expulsão de Satanás, a destruição de Babilônia, a Grande, e dos reis da terra e seus exércitos, o acorrentamento de Satanás e seu lançamento no abismo, a ressurreição dos mortos e o Reinado Milenar de Cristo.

O contexto aponta para Jesus Cristo como o Senhor a quem pertence tal "dia". Imediatamente após vir a estar "no dia do Senhor", João ouviu, não a voz do Deus Todo-Poderoso, mas a do ressuscitado Filho de Deus. (Re 1:10-18) Também, o "dia do Senhor" mencionado em 1 Coríntios 1:8; 5:5, e em 2 Coríntios 1:14, é o de Jesus Cristo.

DIAMANTE. Pedra preciosa, brilhosa, o mais duro mineral natural já descoberto e uma das mais valiosas gemas. Embora os diamantes em geral sejam incolores, alguns têm matizes tais como amarelo, verde, vermelho, marrom, azul e preto. A maioria dos diamantes brutos são cristais transparentes ou translúcidos, de oito faces, e compostos de carbono quase puro. Pensa-se que os diamantes se formaram há muito, quando o carbono da terra foi sujeito a grande pressão e intenso calor. Os primitivos diamantes eram encontrados no leito de rios, mas, em tempos modernos, são em geral extraídos de formações rochosas das profundezas da terra.

A palavra hebraica sha·mír (traduzida duas vezes por "diamante" e uma vez por "pedra de esmeril", na NM) evidentemente é aparentada com a palavra acadiana ashmur, que significa "esmeril". Alguns opinam que sha·mír talvez se aplique a um mineral duríssimo vagamente identificado pelo termo geral "adamantino" (do gr. a·dá·mas, que significa "invencível; indomável"), que pode referir-se ao diamante ou diversas substâncias muito duras, tais como coríndon e esmeril.

Jeová referiu-se a uso de diamantes para riscar ou gravar materiais duros, ao dizer: "O pecado de Judá está assentado por escrito com um estilo de ferro. Com ponta de diamante foi gravado na tábua do seu coração e nos chifres dos seus altares." (Je 17:1, 2) A casa de Israel também se tornou obstinada e de coração endurecido. Por isso, Jeová disse a Ezequiel: "Eis que fiz a tua face tão dura como as faces deles e a tua testa tão dura como as testas deles. Igual ao diamante, mais dura do que a pederneira fiz a tua testa." (Ez 3:7-9) De modo similar, por causa da obstinação dos judeus, Jeová declarou por meio de Zacarias: "Tornaram seu coração como pedra de esmeril [hebr.: sha·mír] para não obedecer à lei e às palavras que Jeová dos exércitos enviara por meio do seu espírito, por intermédio dos profetas anteriores." — Za 7:12; veja JOIAS E PEDRAS PRECIOSAS.

DIBLA. Lugar mencionado por Ezequiel (6:14) quando registrou a profecia de Jeová a respeito da desolação que sobreviria à terra de Israel em retribuição pela sua adoração idólatra. Desconhece-se qualquer lugar antigo com este nome, e a maioria dos peritos hodiernos, portanto, acha que "Dibla" seja erro de copista em lugar de "Ribla", sendo fácil confundir a letra hebraica inicial "R" (ר) com a letra hebraica "D" (ד). Neste caso, pode ser identificada com a Ribla bíblica (ruínas perto da moderna Ribleh) às margens do rio Orontes, "na terra de Hamate" (2Rs 23:33), e "o ermo na direção de Dibla [Ribla]" talvez se refira à ininterrupta planície pedregosa do Deserto Sírio ao S e ao SE de Ribla. Alguns tradutores, porém, fazem as palavras de Ezequiel rezar "desde o deserto até Ribla". (CBC) De acordo com tal tradução, o sentido talvez seja que o julgamento de Jeová se estenderia desde "o ermo", tradicional fronteira meridional da Terra da Promessa (Êx 23:31) até a região de "Hamate" (representada por Ribla) no norte longínquo. (1Rs 8:65) Usar Ezequiel tal frase seria equivalente à melhor conhecida "desde Dã para baixo até Berseba". — Jz 20:1; veja RIBLA N.º 2.

DIBLAIM [Dois Bolos de Figos Prensados]. Genitor(a) de Gômer, esposa de Oseias. — Os 1:2, 3.

DIBOM. Veja DÍBON.

DÍBON.

1. Cidade ao L do Mar Morto, arrebatada dos moabitas por Síon, o amorreu, porém, mais tarde tomada dele por Israel, na época da entrada dos israelitas nessa terra, sob Moisés. — Núm 21:25-30.

A antiga Díbon é hoje identificada com Dhiban, 5 km ao N do Árnon, 21 km ao L do Mar Morto. Tem sido área de recentes e intensas pesquisas arqueológicas, e ganhou alguma fama como local da descoberta da famosa Pedra Moabita, em 1868. As declarações nesta estela, erigida por Mesa, rei de Moabe, têm sido interpretadas por alguns como identificando Díbon qual capital (incluindo Qarhah) e "principal cidade de Moabe" em certa época.

Pouco depois da conquista original desta região pelos israelitas, a tribo de Gade viveu ali e eles "passaram a construir [ou, reconstruir] Díbon", aparentemente dando-lhe o nome mais extenso de Díbon-Gade, ponto alistado como um dos locais de acampamento da nação. (Núm 32:34; 33:45, 46) Todavia, Díbon era considerada parte da herança de Rubem. (Núm 32:2, 3; Jos 13:8, 9, 15-17) Díbon provavelmente sofreu sob o ressurgimento do poder moabita, durante o reinado do Rei Eglom, até que obteve alívio em resultado da vitória do juiz Eúde. (Jz 3:12-30) Mesa, rei de Moabe, revoltou-se contra a dominação israelita muitos séculos mais tarde, "assim que Acabe morreu", segundo o relato bíblico em 2 Reis 3:4, 5. A Bíblia não diz exatamente quanto tempo durou este levante, e é possível, conforme Mesa alardeia na Pedra Moabita, que ele tenha conseguido anexar várias cidades israelitas a "Qarhah", naquela época. No entanto, dessemelhante da inscrição propagandística de Mesa, o registro bíblico deixa claro que Moabe foi totalmente derrotado quando as suas forças entraram em combate contra os exércitos conjuntos de Israel, Judá e Edom. — 2Rs 3:4-27.

Menos de 200 anos depois, Díbon ficou mais uma vez conhecida como cidade moabita, e Isaías (15:2) fez contra ela uma pronúncia de condenação. A respeito dos habitantes da região, portanto, diz-se profeticamente que sobem "até A Casa e a Díbon, aos altos", chorando a desolação de Moabe.

Certos peritos apresentaram a teoria de que Isaías aludiu à iminente ameaça assíria como causa do "choro" nos "altos" perto de Díbon; todavia, não há registro duma devastação dessa região pelos assírios. Quando Jeremias, servo de Jeová, profetizou cerca de cem anos mais tarde que Díbon 'desceria da glória e se sentaria com sede'

(Je 48:18), a anterior profecia de Isaías pelo visto ainda não se cumprira. Portanto, a profecia posterior evidentemente apresentava de novo uma mensagem similar e assim tornava duplamente certa a predição da condenação de Moabe. Algum tempo depois da queda de Jerusalém em 607 AEC, quando Nabucodonosor devastou totalmente Moabe, ele talvez deixasse os cidadãos de Díbon não somente "com sede" dos luxos da sua anterior glória, mas também abandonados como cativos humilhados, literalmente sedentos de água e de outras necessidades comuns. — Je 25:9, 17-21.

Encontrarem-se em Díbon grandes depósitos de cereais notavelmente conservados, que se acha datarem aproximadamente da segunda metade do primeiro milênio AEC, parece confirmar o conceito de alguns, de que a região de Díbon, que mesmo hoje é uma região de boa produção agrícola, talvez tenha sido outrora o celeiro da Palestina.

Alguns comentadores acham que Díbon é a Dimom mencionada em Isaías 15:9. — Veja DIMOM.

2. Lugar em Judá (Ne 11:25), que alguns acham ser o mesmo que Dimona. — Jos 15:22; veja DIMONA.

DÍBON-GADE. Veja DÍBON N.º 1.

DIBRI [provavelmente: Verboso]. Israelita da tribo de Dã, cuja filha Selomite casou-se com um egípcio. Pouco depois do Êxodo do Egito, o filho resultante desta união foi apedrejado até morrer por ter ultrajado o nome de Jeová. — Le 24:10-16, 23.

DICLA. Descendente de Sem por meio de Joctã. (Gên 10:21, 26, 27; 1Cr 1:17, 20, 21) Alguns peritos acreditam que sua tribo se fixou na Arábia meridional. No entanto, isto não pode ser determinado com certeza.

DIDRACMA. Moeda grega de prata no valor de duas dracmas, ou US$ 1,31 segundo valores modernos. Os judeus pagavam para o templo um imposto anual de duas dracmas ou uma didracma. — Mt 17:24 n.

DIFÁ. Descendente de Noé por meio de Jafé e de Gômer; chamado Rifá na Vulgata latina, na Septuaginta grega e em cerca de 30 manuscritos hebraicos, bem como em Gênesis 10:3. (1Cr 1:4-6 n.) A grafia "Difá" encontrada no texto massorético, em 1 Crônicas 1:6, talvez tenha surgido dum erro de copista, visto que as letras hebraicas "R" (ר) e "D" (ד) são muito parecidas.

DILEÃ. Cidade da Judeia, na Sefelá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 38) Embora sua localização exata seja incerta, alguns geógrafos a situam em Tell en-Najileh (Tel Nagila), a uns 10 km ao SO de Laquis.

DILIGÊNCIA. Atividade constante e perseverante; esforço laborioso; empenho; zelo. Costumeiramente o termo infere trabalho lícito e útil. É o oposto da indolência ou ociosidade.

Na Bíblia, a palavra grega traduzida por "diligência" é na maioria das vezes traduzida por "seriedade", "verdadeira seriedade" ou "esforço sério". O sentido da palavra é também às vezes transmitido pela tradução por "pressa", "velocidade" ou "quefazeres".

Os cristãos são admoestados a não afrouxar as mãos ou cansar-se em fazer o bem. Paulo disse: "Desejamos que cada um de vós mostre a mesma diligência [literalmente: "pressa"], para ter a plena certeza da esperança até o fim, para que não fiqueis indolentes, mas sejais imitadores daqueles que pela fé e pela paciência herdam as promessas." (He 6:11, 12; compare isso com Pr 10:4; 12:24; 18:9.) Jesus Cristo disse aos seus discípulos: "Esforçai-vos vigorosamente a entrar pela porta estreita, porque eu vos digo que muitos buscarão entrar, mas não poderão." (Lu 13:24) O próprio Paulo foi exemplo de tal empenho vigoroso. (Col 1:29; 2Te 3:7-9) Naturalmente, Jeová e seu Filho são os exemplos mais destacados de diligência. — Jo 5:17; Is 40:26.

A fim de não serem inativos ou infrutíferos, os cristãos precisam 'contribuir em resposta [às promessas de Deus] todo esforço sério' para suprir à sua fé virtude, conhecimento, autodomínio, perseverança, devoção piedosa, afeição fraternal e amor. (2Pe 1:4-8) Isto requer empenho constante em perseverança diligente (2Ti 2:15; He 4:11) e persistente atenção. (He 2:1) Grande parte da força necessária para isso vem por meio da ajuda do espírito de Jeová. O que poderia expressar mais vigorosamente a necessidade de diligência do que o conselho do apóstolo Paulo: "Não sejais indolentes nos vossos quefazeres. Sede fervorosos de espírito. Trabalhai como escravos para Jeová"? Esta exigência de ser diligente aplica-se a todos os ministros ("ocupemonos neste ministério"), mas com força especial aos em cargos em que presidem as reuniões e as atividades da congregação, pois "aquele que preside, faça-o em verdadeira seriedade". — Ro 12:7, 8, 11.

Na congregação cristã, os necessitados que recebem ajuda material da congregação têm de ser pessoas diligentes. A regra bíblica é: "Se alguém não quiser trabalhar, tampouco coma." A exortação aos que não trabalham é que procurem atarefar-se, para que, "por trabalharem com sossego, comam o alimento que eles mesmos ganham". (2Te 3:10-12) O professo cristão que se recusa, ou que negligencia, prover a sua família das necessidades "tem repudiado a fé e é pior do que alguém sem fé". (1Ti 5:8) Mesmo as viúvas necessitadas, antes de serem incluídas na lista da congregação para o recebimento regular de ajuda material, tinham de ter um registro de atividades cristãs, tendo "seguido diligentemente toda boa obra". — 1Ti 5:9, 10.

Recompensas da Diligência. Ricas recompensas resultam para a pessoa diligente, tanto agora como no futuro. "A mão do diligente é a que enriquecerá a pessoa." (Pr 10:4) "A mão dos diligentes é a que governará." (Pr 12:24) 'Far-se-á engordar' a sua alma. (Pr 13:4) A esposa diligente é aquela cujos "filhos se levantaram e passaram a chamá-la feliz; seu dono se levanta e a louva". Sobre ela se diz o seguinte: "Dai-lhe dos frutos das suas mãos e louvem-na os seus trabalhos até mesmo nos portões." (Pr 31:28, 31) Sobretudo, diz-se aos irmãos espirituais de Cristo: "Fazei . . . o vosso máximo para vos assegurar da vossa chamada e escolha; pois, se persistirdes em fazer estas coisas, de nenhum modo falhareis jamais. De fato, assim vos será ricamente suprida a entrada no reino eterno de nosso Senhor e Salvador Jesus Cristo." — 2Pe 1:10, 11.

DILÚVIO. A destruição catastrófica de homens e animais por uma esmagadora inundação nos dias de Noé, em 2370 AEC. Este maior cataclismo de toda a história humana foi causado por Jeová, visto que homens iníquos haviam enchido a terra de violência. A sobrevivência do justo Noé e sua família, oito almas ao todo, junto com animais selecionados, foi por meio de uma enorme arca, ou caixa. — Gên 6:9-9:19; 1Pe 3:20; veja ARCA N.º 1; NOÉ.

Extensão do Dilúvio. Não se tratava de um aguaceiro ou uma chuvarada local. De fato, a palavra grega usada na Bíblia para se referir ao Dilúvio é ka·ta·kly·smós, cataclismo. (Lu 17:27 n.) As inundações locais ocorrem e desaparecem em questão de dias; esta durou mais de um ano, sendo que a maior parte desse período foi necessária para que as águas baixassem. Quão desarrazoado é crer que Noé tenha gasto talvez 50 anos construindo uma enorme embarcação, com capacidade de cerca de 40.000 m^3, para a sobrevivência da sua família e de poucos animais durante uma simples inundação local! Se apenas uma região comparativamente pequena fosse atingida, por que a necessidade de levar para dentro da arca espécimes de "toda criatura vivente, de toda sorte de carne", a fim de "preservar viva alguma descendência na superfície de toda a terra"? (Gên 6:19; 7:3) Este foi definitivamente um dilúvio global, como jamais ocorreu, antes ou depois. "As águas predominaram tão grandemente sobre a terra, que ficaram cobertos todos os altos montes que havia debaixo de todos os céus. Até quinze côvados [c. 6,5 m] predominaram as águas sobre eles, e os montes ficaram cobertos." (Gên 7:19, 20) "Chegou o fim de toda a carne diante de mim", disse Jeová, assim "vou obliterar da superfície do solo toda coisa existente que tenho feito". E assim aconteceu. "Morreu tudo em que o fôlego da força da vida estava ativo nas suas narinas, a saber, todos os que estavam em solo seco . . . e sobreviviam somente Noé e os com ele na arca." — Gên 6:13; 7:4, 22, 23.

Cronometragem do Dilúvio. O Dilúvio não veio de repente, sem aviso. Gastaram-se anos na construção da arca, tempo que Noé, "pregador da justiça", também usou para avisar aquela geração iníqua. (2Pe 2:5) Finalmente, o prazo esgotou-se "no seiscentésimo ano da vida de Noé, no segundo mês, no dia dezessete do mês". "Macho e fêmea de toda sorte de carne" haviam sido levados para dentro da arca, junto com a família de Noé, bem como alimentos suficientes para todos, e "depois Jeová fechou a porta". Então, "abriram-se as comportas dos céus". (Gên 7:11, 16) Houve uma incessante chuva torrencial durante "quarenta dias e quarenta noites"; "as águas continuaram a predominar sobre a terra" por cento e cinquenta dias. (Gên 7:4, 12, 24) Cinco meses após o começo do aguaceiro, a arca "veio a pousar nos montes de Ararate". (Gên 8:4) Ainda levou quase dois meses e meio antes que "apareceram os cumes dos montes" (Gên 8:5), depois mais três meses antes de Noé remover a cobertura da arca para notar que a terra praticamente ficara drenada (Gên 8:13), e foi quase dois meses mais tarde que a porta foi aberta e os sobreviventes novamente puseram pé em solo seco. — Gên 8:14-18.

Noé e sua família entraram na arca no 600.º ano da vida de Noé, no 2.º mês (outubro-novembro), no dia 17. (Gên 7:11) Um ano mais tarde (o ano consistindo em 360 dias) chegou-se ao dia 17 do 2.º mês do 601.º ano. Dez dias depois, seria o dia 27 do 2.º mês, quando saíram; passaram na arca o total de 370 dias, ou partes de 371 dias diferentes. (Gên 8:13, 14) No diário de bordo mantido por Noé, parece que ele usou meses de 30 dias cada um, 12 desses meses equivalendo a 360 dias. Assim evitou todas as frações complicadas que estariam envolvidas se tivesse usado meses estritamente lunares, que consistem em um pouco mais de 29½ dias. Que tais cálculos foram usados no relato é evidente no fato de que um período de cinco meses equivalia a 150 dias. — Gên 7:11, 24; 8:3, 4.

As Águas do Dilúvio. Tem-se dito que, se toda a umidade na atmosfera caísse subitamente em forma de chuva, não passaria de algumas dezenas de milímetros, se fosse distribuída sobre a superfície da terra. Assim, qual seria a origem deste enorme dilúvio dos dias de Noé? Segundo o relato de Gênesis, Deus disse a Noé: "Eis que [eu, Jeová] estou trazendo o dilúvio [ou: "oceano celeste"; hebr.: mab·búl] de águas sobre a terra." (Gên 6:17 n.) Descrevendo o que aconteceu, o capítulo seguinte diz: "Romperam-se todos os mananciais da vasta água de profundeza e abriram-se as comportas dos céus." (Gên 7:11) Tão esmagador foi o Dilúvio, que "ficaram cobertos todos os altos montes que havia debaixo de todos os céus". — Gên 7:19.

Donde veio este "oceano celeste"? O relato da criação, em Gênesis, conta que, no segundo "dia", Jeová fez uma expansão em volta da terra, e esta expansão (chamada "Céu") produziu uma separação entre as águas abaixo dela, isto é, os oceanos, e as águas acima dela. (Gên 1:6-8) As águas acima da expansão evidentemente permaneceram ali desde o segundo "dia" criativo até o Dilúvio. Foi a isto que o apóstolo Pedro se referiu quando relatou que "desde a antiguidade havia céus, e uma terra sobressaindo compactamente à água e no meio da água, pela palavra de Deus". Estes "céus" e as águas acima e abaixo deles, foram os meios que a palavra de Deus pôs em operação, e, "por esses meios, o mundo daquele tempo sofreu destruição, ao ser inundado pela água". (2Pe 3:5, 6) Ofereceram-se diversas explicações sobre como a água fora mantida suspensa até o Dilúvio e sobre os processos que resultaram na sua queda. Mas essas são apenas especulativas. A Bíblia simplesmente diz que Deus fez a expansão com as águas acima dela e que ele causou o Dilúvio. Sua onipotência pôde facilmente fazer isso.

Visto que, conforme diz o relato de Gênesis, "todos os altos montes" foram cobertos pela água, onde está agora toda esta água? Evidentemente, bem aqui na terra. Acredita-se que houve época em que os oceanos eram menores e os continentes maiores do que agora, conforme evidenciam canais de rios estendendo-se longe sob os oceanos. Deve-se notar também que cientistas têm declarado que os montes, no passado, eram muito mais baixos do que atualmente, e que até alguns montes foram empurrados para cima de dentro dos mares. Quanto à situação atual, diz-se que "há no oceano um volume dez vezes maior de água do que há terra acima do nível do mar. Lance-se toda esta terra uniformemente no mar, e a água cobrirá a terra inteira com a profundidade de uma milha e meia". (Revista National Geographic, janeiro de 1945, p. 105) Portanto, após a queda das águas do Dilúvio, mas antes do levantamento dos montes e abaixamento dos leitos dos mares, e antes de se criarem as calotas polares, havia mais do que suficiente água para cobrir "todos os altos montes", conforme o registro inspirado diz que aconteceu. — Gên 7:19.

Efeito na Terra. O Dilúvio trouxe grandes mudanças, como, por exemplo, a diminuição muito rápida da duração da vida humana. Alguns têm sugerido que, antes do Dilúvio, as águas acima da expansão filtravam parte da radiação prejudicial, e que, com o desaparecimento dessas águas, aumentou a radiação cósmica geneticamente prejudicial para o homem. Todavia, a Bíblia não trata deste assunto. Incidentalmente, qualquer mudança na radiação alteraria a taxa de formação do radioativo carbono-14 a tal ponto, que invalidaria todas as datas radiocarbônicas anteriores ao Dilúvio.

Com a repentina abertura dos 'mananciais da água de profundeza' e das "comportas dos céus", incontáveis bilhões de toneladas de água inundaram a terra. (Gên 7:11) Isto pode ter causado tremendas mudanças na superfície da terra. A crosta da terra, que de certo modo é fina e de espessura variada, está estendida sobre uma massa bastante plástica de milhares de quilômetros de diâmetro. Portanto, com o peso adicional da água, houve provavelmente grandes deslocamentos nesta crosta. Com o tempo, evidentemente novos montes se elevaram, antigos montes aumentaram em altura, bacias rasas de mares se aprofundaram e estabeleceram-se novos litorais, com o resultado de que agora cerca de 70 por cento da superfície é coberta de água. Estes deslocamentos na crosta da terra talvez expliquem muitos dos fenômenos geológicos, tais como a elevação de antigos litorais a novas alturas. Alguns têm calculado que somente a pressão da água foi igual a "2 toneladas por polegada quadrada", suficiente para fossilizar rapidamente fauna e flora. — Veja The Biblical Flood and the Ice Epoch (O Dilúvio Bíblico e a Época Glaciária), de D. Patten, 1966, p. 62.

Que evidência prova que realmente houve um dilúvio global?

Outra possível evidência duma mudança drástica: Em várias partes da terra foram encontrados restos de mamutes e de rinocerontes. Alguns destes foram encontrados em penhascos siberianos; outros foram preservados no gelo da Sibéria e do Alasca. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 328) De fato, alguns foram encontrados com alimento não digerido no estômago ou ainda não mastigado, nos dentes, indicando que morreram subitamente. Calcula-se, à base do comércio de presas de marfim, que se encontraram os ossos de dezenas de milhares de tais mamutes. Os restos fósseis de muitos outros animais, tais como leões, tigres, ursos e alces, foram encontrados nas mesmas camadas, indicando talvez que todas essas criaturas foram destruídas simultaneamente. Alguns têm indicado tais achados como prova física inequívoca duma rápida mudança no clima e duma destruição repentina causada por uma inundação universal. Outros, porém, são a favor de explicações da morte desses animais que não envolvam uma catástrofe global. A prova de que o Dilúvio ocorreu não depende de tais fósseis e restos de animais congelados.

Lendas do Dilúvio. Um cataclismo tal como o Dilúvio, que acabou com a existência do inteiro mundo daquele tempo, nunca seria esquecido pelos sobreviventes. Falariam dele a seus filhos e aos filhos de seus filhos. Depois do Dilúvio, Sem ainda viveu 500 anos, podendo relatar o acontecimento a muitas gerações. Morreu apenas dez anos antes do nascimento de Jacó. Moisés preservou o relato autêntico em Gênesis. Algum tempo após o Dilúvio, quando pessoas que desafiavam a Deus construíram a Torre de Babel, Jeová confundiu a língua deles e os espalhou "por toda a superfície da terra". (Gên 11:9) Era só natural que essas pessoas levassem consigo histórias do Dilúvio e as transmitissem de pai para filho. O fato de que não existem apenas poucas, mas talvez centenas de histórias diferentes sobre aquele grande Dilúvio, e que essas histórias se encontram entre as tradições de muitas raças primitivas no mundo todo, é uma prova forte de que todos esses povos tiveram uma origem comum e de que seus antepassados iniciais compartilharam aquele acontecimento, o Dilúvio. — TABELA, Vol. 1, p. 328.

Esses relatos folclóricos do Dilúvio harmonizam-se com alguns dos principais aspectos do relato bíblico: (1) um lugar de refúgio para uns poucos sobreviventes, (2) também, uma destruição global da vida por meio de água, e (3) a preservação duma semente da humanidade. Os egípcios, os gregos, os chineses, os druidas da Britânia, os polinésios, os esquimós e os groenlandeses, os africanos, os hindus, os índios americanos — todos esses têm suas histórias dum Dilúvio. The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional; Vol. 2, p. 319) declara: "Descobriram-se histórias sobre o dilúvio entre quase todas as nações e tribos. Embora sejam mais comuns no continente asiático e nas ilhas logo ao sul dele, bem como no continente norte-americano, foram encontradas em todos os continentes. O número das histórias conhecidas ascende a cerca de 270 . . . A universalidade dos relatos sobre o dilúvio costuma ser tomada como evidência da destruição universal da humanidade por um dilúvio e a dispersão da raça humana a partir de um único lugar, e mesmo de uma única família. Embora as tradições talvez nem sempre se refiram ao mesmo dilúvio, parece que a vasta maioria o faz. A asserção de que muitas destas histórias de dilúvio originaram-se dos contatos com missionários não procede, porque a maioria delas foi coletada por antropólogos não interessados em vindicar a Bíblia, e elas estão cheias de elementos fantasiosos e pagãos, evidentemente em resultado da transmissão durante períodos extensos numa sociedade humana pagã. Outrossim, alguns dos relatos antigos foram escritos por pessoas bem opostas à tradição hebraico-cristã." — Editada por G. Bromiley, 1982.

Em tempos passados, certos povos primitivos (na Austrália, no Egito, em Fiji, nas Ilhas da Sociedade, no Peru, no México e em outros lugares) preservavam um possível resto dessas tradições sobre o Dilúvio por celebrar em novembro uma 'Festa dos Antepassados' ou 'Festa de Finados'. Esses costumes refletem uma lembrança da destruição causada pelo Dilúvio. Segundo o livro Life and Work at the Great Pyramid (Vida e Obra na Grande Pirâmide), a festividade no México era realizada em 17 de novembro, porque eles "tinham uma tradição de que, naquela época, o mundo fora previamente destruído, e temiam que uma catástrofe similar no fim de um ciclo aniquilasse a raça humana". (Do Professor C. Piazzi Smyth, Edimburgo, 1867, Vol. II, pp. 390, 391) O livro The Worship of the Dead (A Adoração dos Mortos) observa: "Esta festa [de finados] é . . . realizada por todos no próprio dia ou quase no dia em que, segundo o relato mosaico, ocorreu o Dilúvio, a saber, o décimo sétimo dia do segundo mês — o mês quase correspondente ao nosso novembro." (De J. Garnier, Londres, 1904, p. 4) É interessante notar que a Bíblia relata que o Dilúvio começou "no segundo mês, no dia dezessete do mês". (Gên 7:11) Este "segundo mês" corresponde à última parte de outubro e à primeira parte de novembro de nosso calendário.

Confirmação Bíblica. Evidência mais forte do que as tradições pagãs de povos primitivos quanto à historicidade do Dilúvio é o endosso que outros escritores bíblicos deram sob inspiração. O único outro lugar onde a mesma palavra hebraica (mab·búl, dilúvio) ocorre, além de no relato em Gênesis, é na melodia de Davi em que ele descreve Jeová como que assentado "sobre o dilúvio". (Sal 29:10) No entanto, outros escritores referem-se ao relato de Gênesis e confirmam-no, como, por exemplo, Isaías. (Is 54:9) Ezequiel também endossa a historicidade de Noé. (Ez 14:14, 18, 20) Pedro, nas suas cartas, refere-se extensivamente ao relato do Dilúvio. (1Pe 3:20; 2Pe 2:5; 3:5, 6) Paulo atesta a grande fé que Noé demonstrou ao construir a arca para a sobrevivência da sua família. (He 11:7) Lucas alista Noé na linhagem dos antepassados do Messias. — Lu 3:36.

Ainda mais significativo é o que Jesus disse a respeito dos dias do Dilúvio, conforme registrado tanto por Lucas como por Mateus. Sendo muito mais do que um simples endosso da veracidade do relato do Dilúvio, as palavras de Jesus mostram o significado pictórico e profético desses antigos acontecimentos. Em resposta à pergunta dos discípulos: "Qual será o sinal da tua presença e da terminação do sistema de coisas?", Jesus disse, entre outras coisas: "Pois assim como eram os dias de Noé, assim será a presença do Filho do homem. Porque assim como eles eram naqueles dias antes do dilúvio, comendo e bebendo, os homens casando-se e as mulheres sendo dadas em casamento, até o dia em que Noé entrou na arca, e não fizeram caso, até que veio o dilúvio e os varreu a todos, assim será a presença do Filho do homem." (Mt 24:3, 37-39; Lu 17:26, 27) Existe, portanto, evidência abundante das próprias Escrituras Sagradas inspiradas para confirmar a autenticidade e genuinidade do relato do Dilúvio. Não se baseia em meras tradições de homens, nem no folclore de povos primitivos, nem nas descobertas geológicas ou arqueológicas.

DIMNA. Evidentemente a mesma cidade que Rimom (Jos 19:13) e Rimono (1Cr 6:77), uma cidade na fronteira L do território de Zebulão, dada aos levitas meraritas. (Jos 21:34, 35) Dimna costuma ser identificada com a moderna Rummana (Rimmon), a uns 10 km ao N de Nazaré.

DIMOM. Lugar mencionado por Isaías na sua pronúncia de ruína contra Moabe; o massacre de moabitas faz as águas de Dimom ficar "cheias de sangue". — Is 15:9.

Alguns comentadores acham que Dimom é outra forma de Díbon (mencionada no versículo 2 da mesma profecia), usando-se Dimom para se fazer uma aliteração, ou repetição de fonema, da palavra hebraica para "sangue" (dam), resultando em "Dimom . . . cheias de dam". O que favorece tal conceito é o fato de que os Rolos do Mar Morto rezam "Díbon" em vez de "Dimom" neste versículo 9, e a declaração de Jerônimo, de que nos seus dias (c. 347-420 EC) esses dois nomes eram intercambiáveis.

Outros, porém, acham improvável que o nome de Díbon fosse apresentado de dois modos diferentes dentro da curta declaração, e eles observam também que nenhum outro lugar da declaração recebe menção dupla. Salientam adicionalmente que Díbon não ficava junto a grandes "águas", estando situada a uma considerável distância do uádi mais próximo, o Árnon. Eles sugerem, portanto, que Dimom seja uma alteração, por escribas, de Madmém, mencionada na condenação de Moabe por Jeremias (Je 48:2), e usualmente identificada com Dimna, a uns 4 km ao ONO de Rabbath-Moab, numa elevação que domina as águas de ʽAin el-Megheisil, ao SE.

Ambos os conceitos são apenas conjecturas, tendo o segundo a seu favor a identificação com um lugar associado com águas, que o contexto parece exigir.

DIMONA. Cidade meridional de Judá, perto da fronteira de Edom. (Jos 15:21, 22) Alguns sugerem tratar-se da "Díbon" mencionada em Neemias 11:25, mas a sua localização exata permanece incerta.

DINÁ [Julgada [isto é: absolvida; vindicada]]. Filha de Jacó e Leia. Diná tinha talvez cerca de seis anos de idade quando Jacó voltou a Canaã e se estabeleceu em Sucote, visto que ela nasceu em Harã, quando seu pai morava lá. — Gên 30:21, 22, 25; 31:41.

Na época em que Jacó e sua família acampavam fora da cidade de Siquém, a jovem Diná, imprudentemente, costumava visitar as moças cananeias locais. Numa destas visitas, ela foi violentada por Siquém, filho de Hamor, o maioral heveu. Siquém enamorou-se dela e Diná ficou na casa dele até ser vingada por seus irmãos germanos, Simeão e Levi. (Gên 34:1-31) Alguns argumentam que Diná deve ter sido apenas menina quando foi violentada. Contudo, deve-se ter em mente que, antes de vir a Siquém, Jacó construíra uma casa e barracas em Sucote, indicando que residiu ali por algum tempo. (Gên 33:17) Em Siquém, comprou um lote de terreno e aparentemente se fixou ali por algum tempo. Tudo isso, junto com o fato de que Siquém se enamorou de Diná, a "moça", argumentaria que Diná, embora ainda jovem, não era apenas uma menina na época da sua associação com Siquém. — Gên 33:18, 19; 34:12.

Anos mais tarde, Diná, acompanhada pelos demais da família de Jacó, foi para o Egito a convite de José. — Gên 46:7, 15.

DINABÁ. Cidade de Bela, rei de Edom. (Gên 36:32; 1Cr 1:43) Sua localização atual é desconhecida.

DINHEIRO. Meio de troca. Na antiguidade, o gado era um elemento constante da permuta, isto é, a troca de um item por outro, e, evidentemente, o mais velho método de transação comercial. Indicativo disso é que a palavra latina para dinheiro (pecunia) deriva de pecus, que significa "gado". Todavia, gado (Gên 47:17) e mantimentos (1Rs 5:10, 11) nem sempre eram meios convenientes de troca. Portanto, vieram a ser usados metais, como o ouro e a prata. Já nos dias de Abraão, metais preciosos serviam de dinheiro. Mas não se tratava de moeda-padrão, cunhada. Consistia em prata e em ouro, sem dúvida moldados por conveniência no feitio de lingotes, argolas, pulseiras ou outras formas convencionais, com um peso específico.

(Veja Gên 24:22; Jos 7:21.) O termo hebraico costumeiro traduzido "dinheiro" significa literalmente "prata". (Gên 17:12 n.) Frequentemente, os objetos de metal eram pesados na hora do pagamento pelas pessoas envolvidas. — Gên 23:15, 16; Je 32:10.

Visto que as transações comerciais envolviam a pesagem, é compreensível que as designações de pesos fossem também designações monetárias. (Veja PESOS E MEDIDAS.) Entre os israelitas, havia cinco divisões principais: o gera, o meio siclo (beca), o siclo, a mina (mané) e o talento. (Êx 25:39; 30:13; 38:25, 26; 1Rs 10:17; Ez 45:12; veja GERA; MINA; SICLO; TALENTO.) A correspondência entre eles e os valores comparativos modernos, em ouro e prata, são apresentados a seguir. (O preço do ouro e da prata tem variado nos últimos anos. Nesta publicação, o ouro é de modo conservativo calculado a US$ 11,25 o grama e a prata a US$ 0,19 o grama; antigamente, a proporção entre o ouro e a prata, porém, é considerada ter sido de 13 para 1.)

		Ouro	Prata
1 gera	= 1/20 siclo	US$ 6,42	US$ 0,11
1 beca	= 10 geras	64,23	1,10
1 siclo	= 2 becas	128,45	2,20
1 mina	= 50 siclos	6.422,50	110,10
1 talento	= 60 minas	385.350,00	6.606,00

O valor da(s) "peça(s) de dinheiro" (hebr.: qesitáh) mencionada(s) em Gênesis 33:19; Josué 24:32 e Jó 42:11 não pode ser fixado definitivamente. Da mesma forma, o valor do pim é incerto. Pode ter sido de cerca de dois terços de um siclo. — 1Sa 13:21; veja PIM.

Moedas nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Crê-se em geral que as primeiras moedas foram cunhadas por volta de 700 AEC. Os israelitas talvez usassem pela primeira vez moedas na sua pátria após retornarem do exílio em Babilônia. Livros bíblicos pós-exílicos mencionam o darico persa (1Cr 29:7; Esd 8:27) e dracmas (hebr.: dar·kemoh·nim), geralmente consideradas equivalentes ao darico. (Esd 2:69; Ne 7:70-72) O darico persa de ouro pesava cerca de 8,4 g e é assim atualmente avaliado em US$ 94,50. — Veja DARICO; DRACMA.

Dinheiro no Período das Escrituras Cristãs. O lépton (judaico), o quadrante (romano), o asse ou assário (romano e provincial), o denário (romano), a dracma (grega), a didracma (grega) e o estáter (grego; considerado por muitos como a tetradracma de Antioquia ou Tiro) são moedas especificamente mencionadas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. (Mt 5:26; 10:29; 17:24, 27; 20:10; Mr 12:42; Lu 12:6, 59; 15:8; 21:2, Int; veja DENÁRIO; ESTÁTER.) Os valores monetários bem mais elevados, conhecidos como minas e talentos, eram pesos, não moedas. (Mt 18:24; Lu 19:13-25) A tabela que segue mostra a relação entre as várias unidades monetárias e as converte em atuais valores aproximados.

		Valor Moderno
1 lépton (cobre ou bronze)	= ½ quadrante	US$ 0,006
1 quadrante (cobre ou bronze)	= 2 leptas	0,012
1 asse (assário) (cobre ou bronze)	= 4 quadrantes	0,046
1 denário (prata)	= 16 asses	0,74
1 dracma (prata)	=	0,65
1 didracma (prata)	= 2 dracmas	1,31
1 tetradracma*	= 4 dracmas	2,62
1 mina (prata)	= 100 dracmas	65,40
1 talento (prata)	= 60 minas	3.924,00
1 talento (ouro)	=	228.900,00

*Considerada ser o próprio estáter (prata).

Poder Aquisitivo. Os valores modernos atribuídos ao dinheiro antigo não dão uma ideia exata do seu valor. A Bíblia, porém, fornece algum indício do poder aquisitivo, e isto é útil para se entender os valores antigos. Na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus, os trabalhadores agrícolas recebiam em geral um denário por um dia de trabalho de 12 horas. (Mt 20:2) Pode-se presumir que no período abrangido pelas Escrituras Hebraicas os salários eram mais ou menos os mesmos. Neste caso, um siclo de prata era equivalente ao salário de três dias.

O preço de um escravo era de 30 siclos de prata (talvez o salário de 90 dias). (Êx 21:32; compare isso com Le 27:2-7.) Oseias, o profeta, adquiriu uma mulher por 15 peças de prata e um ômer e meio (15 efas) de cevada. Provavelmente, este pagamento constituía o preço integral de um escravo. Neste caso, um efa (22 l) de cevada valia então um siclo. — Os 3:2.

Em épocas de escassez, os preços subiam vertiginosamente. As 80 peças de prata (salário de c. de 240 dias de trabalho) que antes poderiam ter comprado oito ômeres (1.760 l) de cevada, em época de sítio davam apenas para adquirir a cabeça de pouca carne de um jumento, animal impróprio para alimento segundo os termos da Lei mosaica. — 2Rs 6:25; compare isso com Os 3:2.

No primeiro século da EC, dois pardais custavam um asse (salário de 45 minutos), e cinco pardais poderiam ser obtidos pelo dobro desse preço. (Mt 10:29; Lu 12:6) A contribuição para o templo da viúva necessitada, observada por Jesus, foi ainda menor, apenas dois leptas (1 quadrante) ou 1/64 do salário de um dia. Contudo, Cristo Jesus elogiou o donativo dela como tendo sido maior do que o daqueles que haviam doado muito, pois ela contribuiu, não parte do que lhe sobrava, mas, "tudo o que tinha, todo o seu meio de vida". (Mr 12:42-44; Lu 21:2-4) O imposto anual do templo, pago pelos judeus, era de duas dracmas ou uma didracma (salário de cerca de dois dias de trabalho). (Mt 17:24) Sendo a dracma equivalente a aproximadamente o salário de um dia de trabalho, uma mulher iria razoavelmente varrer sua casa inteira e procurar diligentemente uma moeda de dracma perdida. — Lu 15:8, 9.

Judas Iscariotes traiu Jesus por 30 moedas de prata, evidentemente o preço de um escravo. (Mt 26:14-16, 47-50) Essas moedas de prata, sem dúvida, eram siclos ou outras moedas de valor similar. O tipo de moeda, porém, não é especificado no relato, exceto que eram de prata.

Dinheiro Pode Ser Tanto Benéfico Como Prejudicial. O dinheiro constitui proteção contra a pobreza e os problemas acompanhantes, possibilitando às pessoas adquirir tanto o essencial como o supérfluo. (Veja Ec 7:12; 10:19.) Por esta razão, existe a possibilidade de a pessoa passar a confiar no dinheiro como fonte de segurança e a esquecer-se do seu Criador. (Veja De 8:10-14.) "O amor ao dinheiro [literalmente, gosto pela prata] é raiz de toda sorte de coisas prejudiciais, e alguns, por procurarem alcançar este amor, foram desviados da fé e se traspassaram todo com muitas dores." (1Ti 6:10) Por dinheiro, as pessoas têm pervertido a justiça, têm-se prostituído, têm cometido assassinato, têm traído outros e falsificado a verdade. — De 16:19; 23:18; 27:25; Ez 22:12; Mt 26:14, 15; 28:11-15.

Por outro lado, o uso correto do dinheiro é aprovado por Deus. (Lu 16:1-9) Isto inclui contribuir para o progresso da adoração pura e dar ajuda material aos necessitados. (Veja 2Cr 24:4-14; Ro 12:13; 1Jo 3:17, 18; veja CONTRIBUIÇÃO; DÁDIVAS DE MISERICÓRDIA.) Embora, dessa maneira, muita coisa boa possa ser realizada com dinheiro, as coisas mais valiosas — o alimento e a bebida espirituais, e a própria vida eterna — podem ser obtidas sem ele. — Is 55:1, 2; Re 22:17.

DIONÍSIO [De (Pertencente a) Dioniso [o deus do vinho]]. Areopagita, ou juiz do Areópago ateniense, que ouviu a defesa de Paulo e se tornou cristão. — At 17:34; veja AREÓPAGO.

DIÓTREFES [Nutrido por Zeus]. Homem mencionado pelo apóstolo João na sua carta a Gaio. Além de Diótrefes ser ambicioso, orgulhoso, desrespeitador da autoridade apostólica, rebelde e inospitaleiro, ele procurava impedir os que desejavam mostrar hospitalidade aos irmãos e expulsá-los da congregação. — 3Jo 9, 10.

DIREITA. Rua em Damasco, na Síria. (At 9:10, 11; FOTO, Vol. 2, 748) Durante o período romano, era uma avenida principal que ia de leste a oeste atravessando a cidade por cerca de 1,5 km. A pista central era para o tráfego de veículos e tinha 15 m de largura. Dos dois lados dessa pista havia passagens para pedestres rodeadas de colunas, formando uma grande avenida de uns 26 m de largura. Ainda levando um equivalente árabe do nome anterior (Darb al-Mustaqim), mas não mais inteiramente reta, estende-se do Portão Oriental da cidade para o O. Nesta rua antiga, na casa dum homem chamado Judas, Saulo de Tarso ficou por algum tempo depois de lhe ter aparecido o glorificado Jesus Cristo. Numa visão, Jesus encaminhou o discípulo Ananias a esta casa na "rua chamada Direita", para restabelecer a visão de Saulo. — At 9:3-12, 17-19.

DISÃ [possivelmente: Antílope]. Seirita, xeque dos horeus na terra de Edom. (Gên 36:20, 21; 1Cr 1:38) Gênesis 36:28 diz que os filhos de "Disã" eram Uz e Árã, ao passo que 1 Crônicas 1:42, no texto massorético, hebraico, na Septuaginta grega e na Pesito siríaca, menciona "Disom" como progenitor deles. Esta diferença na vocalização, evidentemente em resultado do erro dum copista, é solucionada em muitas traduções em português (Al, ALA, BJ, BLH, CBC, IBB, MC, NM, So) por usarem o mesmo nome em ambos os textos, assim como faz também a recensão clementina da Vulgata latina.

DISCIPLINA. O substantivo hebraico mu·sár e a forma verbal ya·sár transmitem o sentido de "disciplina", "castigo", "correção" e "exortação". Na Septuaginta grega e nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o substantivo correspondente, pai·deí·a, e o verbo pai·deú·o têm basicamente o mesmo sentido. Derivada de pais, que significa "criança (filho, filha, menino, menina)", pai·deí·a refere-se primariamente ao que é necessário para criar filhos — disciplina, instrução, educação, correção e castigo.

Fontes e Objetivo. Expressando seu amor, Jeová dá disciplina ao seu povo. (Pr 3:11, 12) Dá-lhe instrução que corrige conceitos errados, bem como amolda suas faculdades mentais e seu proceder. Para os israelitas, no tempo de Moisés, a disciplina incluía presenciarem manifestações da grandiosidade de Deus. Houve demonstrações de inigualável poder, quando Jeová executou julgamento em todos os deuses do Egito, libertou seu povo e destruiu o exército egípcio no Mar Vermelho. Houve temíveis julgamentos executados nos israelitas desobedientes. E houve a milagrosa provisão de alimento e água, junto com lições sobre a importância de se tomar a peito e aplicar tudo o que Jeová diz. Toda esta disciplina serviu para torná-los humildes e incutir neles a necessidade de terem o devido temor de Jeová, a ser mostrado por fé e obediência. — De 8:3-5; 11:2-7.

Frequentemente, a disciplina de Jeová é dada por meio dos seus representantes, as autoridades devidamente constituídas. O israelita que acusasse falsamente sua esposa de não ter sido virgem por ocasião do casamento devia ser disciplinado pelos anciãos que serviam de juízes. (De 22:13-19) Os pais representam a Jeová quando disciplinam devidamente seus filhos. E os filhos devem acatar tal disciplina como expressão de amor parental, destinada a promover o seu bem-estar duradouro. (Pr 1:8; 4:1, 13; 6:20-23; 13:1, 24; 15:5; 22:15; 23:13, 14; Ef 6:4) Na congregação cristã, a Palavra de Deus é usada por anciãos para prover disciplina — admoestação, correção, repreensão. (2Ti 3:16) O objetivo da disciplina da parte de Jeová, aplicada aos cristãos em casos de transgressão, é recuperá-los da queda no pecado e impedir que compartilhem o julgamento condenatório a ser expresso contra o mundo ímpio. (1Co 11:32) Jesus Cristo, como cabeça da congregação cristã, numa expressão de sua afeição, cuida de que se proveja a necessária disciplina. — Re 3:14, 19.

Uma forma severa de disciplina é a expulsão da congregação. O apóstolo Paulo recorreu a ela quando entregou Alexandre e Himeneu "a Satanás". (1Ti 1:20) Cortados da congregação, eles faziam novamente parte do mundo sob o controle de Satanás. — 1Co 5:5, 11-13.

Aquilo que Jeová talvez permita que sobrevenha aos seus servos em forma de perseguição pode servir de disciplina, ou treinamento, produzindo o fruto desejável da justiça, a ser usufruído em paz após acabar a provação. (He 12:4-11) Até mesmo o Filho de Deus foi preparado para ser sumo sacerdote compassivo e compreensivo, em razão do sofrimento que seu Pai permitiu que lhe sobreviesse. — He 4:15.

Resultados do Acatamento e da Desconsideração. Os iníquos, os tolos ou os moralmente imprestáveis mostram seu ódio à disciplina de Jeová por rejeitá-la totalmente. (Sal 50:16, 17; Pr 1:7) O mau resultado de tal tolice constitui disciplina adicional, frequentemente punição severa. Conforme o expressa o provérbio: "A disciplina dos tolos é tolice." (Pr 16:22) Eles podem trazer a si próprios pobreza, desonra, doença e até a morte prematura. A história dos israelitas ilustra quão grande pode ser esta perda. Não prestaram atenção à disciplina dada na forma de repreensão e correção, expressa por meio dos profetas. Não acataram a disciplina dada na forma de Jeová reter Sua proteção e bênção. Por fim, sentiram a severa disciplina anunciada com antecedência — serem conquistados e exilados. — Je 2:30; 5:3; 7:28; 17:23; 32:33; Os 7:12-16; 10:10; Sof 3:2.

Em contraste, a aceitação da disciplina, junto com um temor salutar de Jeová, torna a pessoa sábia, capaz de usar corretamente o conhecimento, e assim ajuda-lhe a evitar muita dor e sofrimento. Quando acatada, a disciplina aceita com apreço pode contribuir para o prolongamento da vida atual e oferece a promessa de um futuro duradouro. Portanto, de direito, a disciplina deve ser altamente estimada. — Pr 8:10, 33-35; 10:17.

DISCÍPULO. Alguém ensinado, aprendiz, aluno. A palavra hebraica para discípulo (lim·múdh) refere-se basicamente a alguém que aprende, é ensinado ou é treinado. (Veja Is 8:16, n.) A palavra aparentada mal·mádh denota uma "aguilhada" usada para treinar gado. (Jz 3:31; veja Os 10:11.) A palavra grega ma·the·tés (discípulo) denota primariamente alguém que fixa sua mente em alguma coisa.

Nas Escrituras Gregas lemos a respeito de discípulos de Jesus, de João, o Batizador, dos fariseus e de Moisés. (Mt 9:14; Lu 5:33; Jo 9:28) Os primeiros discípulos de Jesus procederam dentre os discípulos de João. (Jo 1:35-42) Os 12 escolhidos como apóstolos são chamados de discípulos em Mateus 10:1 e 11:1. Em sentido amplo, a palavra "discípulo" aplicava-se aos que criam nos ensinos de Jesus, pelo menos um deles sendo discípulo secreto. (Lu 6:17; Jo 19:38) No entanto, nos relatos evangélicos, ela usualmente se aplica ao corpo de seguidores íntimos de Jesus, que o acompanhavam nas suas viagens de pregação, sendo ensinados e instruídos por ele. O termo se aplica principalmente a todos os que não somente creem nos ensinos de Cristo, mas também os seguem de perto. Têm de ser ensinados a "observar todas as coisas" ordenadas por Jesus. — Mt 28:19, 20.

O objetivo de Jesus ensinar seus discípulos era torná-los semelhantes a si mesmo, pregadores e instrutores das boas novas do Reino. "O aluno não está acima do seu instrutor, mas, todo aquele que for perfeitamente instruído será semelhante ao seu instrutor", disse Jesus. (Lu 6:40) A eficácia do ensino de Cristo foi provada pela história posterior. Seus discípulos continuaram a obra que ele lhes ensinara e fizeram discípulos em toda a parte do Império Romano, na Ásia, na Europa e na África, antes do fim do primeiro século. Esta foi sua obra principal, em harmonia com a ordem de Jesus Cristo, em Mateus 28:19, 20.

Que os cristãos até hoje têm o dever de fazer discípulos de pessoas das nações é tornado claro pelas palavras finais da ordem de Jesus: "E eis que estou convosco todos os dias, até à terminação do sistema de coisas." Não fazem discípulos para si mesmos, uma vez que os ensinados são, na realidade, discípulos de Jesus Cristo, pois seguem o ensino, não de homens, mas de Cristo. Por esta razão, por providência divina, os discípulos foram chamados de cristãos. (At 11:26) De modo similar, o profeta Isaías tinha discípulos, mas não para si mesmo. Os discípulos de Isaías conheciam a lei de Jeová, e o testemunho da lei residia com eles. — Is 8:16.

Ser discípulo de Jesus não significa adotar um modo folgado de vida. Jesus não agradava a si mesmo, mas seguia um caminho que envolvia sofrer a maior oposição da parte do Diabo e seus agentes. (Ro 15:3) Ele disse que seus discípulos têm de amá-lo mais do que aos parentes mais achegados deles na Terra, e ainda mais do que a sua própria alma. Têm de amar seus condiscípulos cristãos. Têm de produzir os frutos do espírito. Quem deseja ser discípulo de Jesus tem de apanhar sua estaca de tortura e seguir o caminho percorrido por Cristo. Ao fazer isso, terá de "se despedir de todos os seus bens", mas receberá muito mais coisas valiosas agora, com perseguições, e receberá a vida eterna. — Lu 14:26, 27, 33; Jo 13:35; 15:8; Mr 10:29, 30; veja CRISTÃO.

DISCUSSÃO. Veja ALTERCAÇÃO.

DISOM [possivelmente: Antílope]. Nome de um ou possivelmente dois homens diferentes, nas genealogias registradas em Gênesis 36:20-28 e 1 Crônicas 1:38-42.

Em Gênesis 36:20, 21 (também nos vv. 29, 30), alistam-se sete "filhos de Seir, o horeu", como xeques, a saber, Lotã, Sobal, Zibeão, Aná, Disom, Ezer e Disã. Daí, nos versículos 22 a 28 , alista-se cada um dos sete xeques junto com seus filhos. No versículo 25 , um dos filhos de Aná é chamado Disom. Alguns acham que este Disom seja neto de Seir e sobrinho do xeque Disom, visto que todos os sete xeques eram "filhos" de Seir, no sentido estrito da palavra, quer dizer, da mesma geração.

Outros, porém, acreditam que este relato apresenta os sete xeques apenas como descendentes de Seir, não da mesma geração, portanto, "filhos" em sentido lato. Portanto, sugerem que o Disom do versículo 25 é o próprio xeque Disom (Gên 36:21, 26), não seu sobrinho. De acordo com este conceito, embora realmente fosse filho do xeque Aná, Disom é mencionado junto com os outros seis xeques, não por ser irmão deles, mas por ser igual a eles no sentido de ser xeque.

DISTRITO. A palavra "distrito" indica uma unidade administrativa, uma região em torno duma cidade ou uma região com certos limites.

Quando Neemias organizou a reconstrução da muralha de Jerusalém, ele designou determinados trechos aos líderes, ou 'príncipes', e aos habitantes de certos 'distritos'. Estes distritos levavam o nome da sua cidade principal, e alguns (Jerusalém, Bete-Zur, Queila) eram duplos. (Ne 3:9, 12, 14-18) Tratava-se evidentemente de subdivisões do "distrito jurisdicional", ou "província", persa de Judá. (Ne 1:3; Al, ALA, CBC) Diz-se que a palavra hebraica que designa esses distritos (pé·lekh) deriva da palavra acadiana pilku, possivelmente indicando que foram instituídos pelos babilônios depois da queda de Jerusalém. — Veja DISTRITO JURISDICIONAL.

O termo hebraico kik·kár transmite a ideia de algo redondo. É usado para indicar um pão "redondo" (Êx 29:23), uma "tampa circular" de chumbo (Za 5:7), um "talento" de ouro ou de prata (Êx 25:39; 1Rs 20:39), e um "distrito", ou "bacia", mais ou menos redondo. — Gên 13:10 n.; Ne 12:28.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra hó·ri·on (sempre no plural) indica literalmente os "termos", ou "fronteiras", duma região geográfica (At 13:50; Mt 19:1), mas pode também indicar aquilo que eles cercam, a saber, um "distrito" ou uma "região". (Mt 2:16; 15:22) O termo me·rís, usado para se referir ao "distrito" da Macedônia, em Atos 16:12, literalmente indica uma "parte". — Veja Int; At 8:21.

DISTRITO DO JORDÃO. Bacia mais ou menos redonda, ou região oval, na qual deságua o rio Jordão. Inclui a parte inferior do vale do Jordão, conforme se pode ver na menção do "Distrito do Jordão" em conexão com as atividades de fundição de cobre, de Salomão, entre Sucote e Zaretã. (1Rs 7:46; 2Cr 4:17; compare isso com 2Sa 18:23.) No entanto, "o Distrito" parece também estender-se à extremidade meridional do Mar Morto, onde evidentemente se encontravam "as cidades do Distrito". (Gên 13:10-12) De modo que abrangia não somente a planície de Jericó, mas estendia-se até Zoar, cidade para a qual fugiram Ló e suas filhas. — Gên 19:17-25; De 34:3.

Pesquisas realizadas na extremidade meridional do Mar Morto indicam que uma grande parte de terra logo ao S da península chamada Lisan ficou coberta pelas águas do mar. Muitos peritos acreditam que "as cidades do Distrito" jazam submersas nesta região. Anteriormente era uma região "bem regada" e semelhante "ao jardim de Jeová". (Gên 13:10) Isto não só se aplicava à região ao N do Mar Morto, onde hoje apenas as planícies de Moabe e o oásis de Jericó retêm considerável fertilidade, mas também à parte meridional do Distrito. Mesmo hoje, a planície que se estende ao longo de Lisan é descrita como "oásis prolongado", onde se podem cultivar cevada, trigo, tâmaras e videiras. A região do delta do rio Zerede, que deságua na extremidade meridional do Mar Morto, também é chamada de "oásis fértil".

DISTRITO JURISDICIONAL. Divisão administrativa de um domínio sob controle dum governo central. (Est 1:16; 2:3, 18) A Bíblia menciona distritos jurisdicionais em relação a Israel, Babilônia e Medo-Pérsia. (1Rs 20:14-19; Est 1:1-3; Da 3:1, 3, 30) A palavra hebraica e aramaica para "distrito jurisdicional" (medhi·náh) deriva do verbo radical din, que significa "julgar".

Daniel, o profeta, foi nomeado governante sobre todo o distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia, talvez o distrito principal, que incluía a cidade de Babilônia. (Da 2:48) Seus três companheiros hebreus, Sadraque, Mesaque e Abednego, também foram nomeados para servir em cargos administrativos neste distrito. (Da 2:49; 3:12) Elão parece ter sido outro distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia. (Da 8:2) Talvez por terem morado no distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia, os exilados judeus repatriados são chamados de "filhos do distrito jurisdicional". (Esd 2:1; Ne 7:6) Ou, esta especificação pode aludir a eles serem habitantes do distrito jurisdicional medo-persa de Judá. — Ne 1:3.

Pelo menos durante o reinado de Assuero (Xerxes I), o Império Medo-Persa consistia em 127 distritos jurisdicionais, da Índia à Etiópia. Os judeus estavam espalhados por todo este vasto domínio. (Est 1:1; 3:8; 4:3; 8:17; 9:2, 30) A terra de Judá, com seu próprio governador e chefes administrativos inferiores, era ela mesma um dos 127 distritos jurisdicionais. (Ne 1:3; 11:3) Aparentemente, porém, Judá fazia parte duma divisão política ainda maior, administrada por uma autoridade governamental superior. Parece que esta autoridade encaminhava ao rei quaisquer denúncias sérias concernentes aos distritos sob sua jurisdição e então aguardava autorização real para agir. Também, funcionários de escalão inferior podiam pedir que as atividades de determinado distrito jurisdicional fossem investigadas. (Esd 4:8-23; 5:3-17) Quando autorizados pelo rei, os distritos jurisdicionais podiam receber verbas da tesouraria real, e os decretos reais eram enviados por correios às diversas partes do império. (Esd 6:6-12; Est 1:22; 3:12-15; 8:10-14) Portanto, todos os habitantes dos distritos jurisdicionais estavam familiarizados com as leis e os decretos do governo central. — Veja Est 4:11.

O sistema de distritos jurisdicionais existente nas nações da antiguidade frequentemente tornava mais difícil a sorte dos povos subjugados. Este fato é reconhecido pelo sábio escritor de Eclesiastes (5:8). — Veja PROVÍNCIA.

DIVÃ. Veja CAMA.

DIVERTIMENTOS. Conforme expresso pelo escritor de Eclesiastes: "Para tudo há um tempo determinado, . . . tempo para chorar e tempo para rir; tempo para lamentar e tempo para saltitar." (Ec 3:1, 4) A palavra "rir" traduz aqui o verbo hebraico sa·hháq. Embora seu sentido básico seja o de "rir", esta palavra e a palavra relacionada tsa·hháq também são traduzidas por expressões tais como "festejar", 'divertir-se' e "servir de diversão". (2Sa 6:21; Jó 41:5; Jz 16:25; Êx 32:6; Gên 26:8) Em Provérbios 8:30, 31, usam-se formas do verbo sa·hháq com referência ao "mestre de obras" 'regozijar-se' perante Jeová após a criação da terra, bem como para descrever o "brincar" ou "divertir-se" da criação animal no mar e nos campos. — Sal 104:26; Jó 40:20.

Expressões de Alegria e Prazer. Os divertimentos e diversões dos israelitas não são muito destacados no registro bíblico. Não obstante, ele mostra que são encarados como corretos e também como desejáveis, quando em harmonia com os princípios religiosos da nação. As formas principais de recreação eram tocar instrumentos musicais, cantar, dançar, conversar, bem como alguns jogos. Propor enigmas e fazer perguntas difíceis era muito estimado. — Jz 14:12.

Irromperam cantos, danças e o uso de pandeiros logo após a libertação de Israel no Mar Vermelho. (Êx 15:20, 21) Mais tarde, quando Arão proclamou "uma festividade para Jeová", depois de ter feito o bezerro de ouro, o povo comeu e bebeu, e depois se levantou "para se divertir [letsa·hhéq]". Neste caso, porém, sua dança e seu canto estavam relacionados com a adoração falsa, causando desgraça. — Êx 32:5, 6, 18, 19, 25.

As três festividades anuais ofereciam a oportunidade de diversão junto com a observância dos requisitos da adoração, especificados na Lei. "Dançar em rodas" é mencionado com relação à festividade anual realizada em Silo. (Jz 21:21) Outras ocasiões eram as celebrações de vitória (Jz 11:34; 1Sa 18:6, 7) e a coroação de um rei. (1Rs 1:40) Embora fossem as mulheres quem mais se empenhava em danças, ocasionalmente os homens também dançavam, assim como fez Davi ao levar a Arca para cima, a Jerusalém. (2Sa 6:5, 14, 21; 1Cr 13:8; 15:29) A vindima e também a tosquia das ovelhas eram ocasiões de alegria e festejos. (Je 25:30; 2Sa 13:23-28) Igualmente, os casamentos eram ocasiões de divertimento, e Jesus contribuiu para isso no casamento em Caná. (Je 7:34; 16:9; Jo 2:1-10) Em Lucas 15:25 mencionam-se um concerto de música e dança como parte da festa que celebrava o retorno do filho pródigo.

No Egito, ensinava-se música e dança aos escravos, para divertir a família e seus convidados. Também os gregos empregavam dançarinas e músicos profissionais para divertir convidados. Houve dança para diversão no aniversário natalício de Herodes, ocasião em que se lhe pediu a cabeça de João, o Batizador. (Mt 14:6-8) A dança era popular entre os gregos como divertimento, embora as danças gregas originalmente estivessem associadas com a adoração religiosa.

Equilíbrio Apropriado no Divertimento. Certos textos apresentam avisos contra formas impróprias de divertimento e sobre a necessidade de manter a diversão no seu devido lugar. Provérbios descreve o estúpido, para quem entregar-se à conduta desenfreada é como um "divertimento [seh·hóhq]", e o homem que engana seu próximo e diz: "Não me diverti [mesa·hhéq]?" (Pr 10:23; 26:19) Mostrando o valor relativamente pequeno do divertimento, Provérbios 14:13 diz: "Mesmo no riso [bisehhóhq] o coração talvez sinta dor; e é em pesar que acaba a alegria." (Veja Ec 2:2; 7:2, 3, 6.) Os alegres filisteus mandaram chamar o cego Sansão para servir-lhes de divertimento (sa·hháq), o que resultou apenas em ele fazer a casa cair sobre eles. — Jz 16:25-30.

Jeremias, apercebido da seriedade daqueles tempos e sofrendo perseguição por causa da sua pregação, declarou que não se assentara com os 'que faziam pilhérias [mesa·hhaqím]' e rejubilavam. (Je 15:17) Embora predissesse a ruína de Jerusalém, também profetizou sobre o tempo em que os habitantes dela sairiam novamente com alegria na dança dos que estão rindo, ataviados com pandeiros. (Je 30:19; 31:4) Zacarias, de modo similar, predisse o dia em que as praças públicas da restaurada Jerusalém encher-se-iam de crianças brincando. — Za 8:5; veja DANÇA; JOGOS; TEATRO.

DÍVIDA, DEVEDOR. Dívida refere-se àquilo que se deve a outro, a obrigação de pagar ou de dar alguma coisa em troca. No antigo Israel, incorria-se em dívidas primariamente devido a reveses financeiros. Tornar-se devedor era um infortúnio para o israelita; aquele que tomava emprestado se tornava, na realidade, servo do credor. (Pr 22:7) Ordenou-se aos do povo de Deus, portanto, que fossem generosos e altruístas ao emprestar a coisraelitas necessitados, não tentando lucrar às custas das adversidades deles por cobrar juros. (Êx 22:25; De 15:7, 8; Sal 37:26; 112:5) Mas podiam-se cobrar juros dos estrangeiros. (De 23:20) Comentaristas judeus entendem que esta provisão se aplicava a empréstimos comerciais, não a casos de necessidade. Via de regra, os estrangeiros estavam em Israel apenas temporariamente, muitas vezes como negociantes, e seria razoável esperar que pagassem juros, especialmente visto que eles também emprestariam a outros com juros.

Às vezes, um terceiro assumia a responsabilidade ou era fiador do devedor. No livro de Provérbios (6:1-3; 11:15; 17:18; 22:26) adverte-se diversas vezes contra esta prática, visto que aquele que era fiador seria o perdedor, caso o devedor não pagasse a dívida.

O conceito cristão a respeito de dívidas, no primeiro século, é expresso em Romanos 13:8: "A ninguém fiqueis devendo coisa alguma, exceto que vos ameis uns aos outros."

A Lei Protegia Credores e Devedores. Sob a Lei mosaica, até do ladrão se exigia que pagasse a dívida que contraiu com o seu delito. Se não pudesse pagar, devia ser vendido como escravo. (Êx 22:1, 3) Deste modo, a vítima tinha certeza de que seu prejuízo seria compensado.

Os israelitas fiéis reconheciam que saldarem suas dívidas era uma exigência divina. (Sal 37:21) Assim, o credor podia ficar tranquilo quanto a receber a restituição. O israelita que não tivesse bens materiais podia vender a si mesmo ou a seus filhos como escravos, para saldar suas dívidas. — Êx 21:7; Le 25:39; compare isso com 2Rs 4:1-7.

Por outro lado, a Lei também protegia o devedor. O credor não podia entrar na casa do devedor e apoderar-se de algo que fora empenhado, mas tinha de esperar do lado de fora até que o devedor o trouxesse a ele. (De 24:10, 11) Nem a roupa duma viúva, nem utensílios de primeira necessidade, tais como um moinho manual ou sua mó superior, podiam ser tomados como penhores. (De 24:6, 17) Visto que era comum os pobres terem apenas uma peça de roupa exterior (manto), com a qual também dormiam, esta vestimenta, se tomada como penhor, tinha de ser devolvida pelo credor ao pôr do sol. — Êx 22:26, 27; De 24:12, 13.

De acordo com Deuteronômio 15:1-3, parece que, durante o ano sabático (cada sétimo ano), o credor não podia pressionar um coisraelita a pagar uma dívida. Dessemelhante do israelita que observava o sábado e virtualmente não lucrava nada da sua terra, o estrangeiro continuava a ter uma renda de seu trabalho não agrícola. Razoavelmente, portanto, poderia ser pressionado a pagar uma dívida no ano sabático. Ao se aproximar o ano sabático, alguns israelitas, sabendo que não poderiam insistir na questão, talvez tivessem deixado de emprestar a seus irmãos necessitados. Mas a Lei condenava tal egoísmo. — De 15:9.

No ano do jubileu (cada 50.º ano), os escravos hebreus eram libertados; todos os bens hereditários, com exceção das casas nas cidades muradas que não tivessem antes pertencido aos levitas, eram devolvidos aos seus proprietários originais. Este arranjo impedia que famílias israelitas afundassem sem esperança em dívidas e pobreza. Mesmo quem administrasse mal seus bens não perdia para sempre a herança para sua família. — Le 25:10-41.

A estrita aderência à lei de Deus teria resultado numa economia estável, livre de grandes dívidas nacionais e internas. Garantiu-se aos israelitas: "Pois, Jeová, teu Deus, deveras te abençoará assim como te prometeu, e certamente emprestarás sob caução a muitas nações, ao passo que tu mesmo não tomarás empréstimo." — De 15:6.

Abusos. À medida que os israelitas se entregavam a um proceder de infidelidade, devedores necessitados figuravam entre os que sofriam. O fato de que devedores se juntaram a Davi quando este era foragido dá a entender que eles eram duramente pressionados pelos seus credores. (1Sa 22:2) Parece que emprestar a juros a coisraelitas tornou-se comum. (Is 24:2) Jeová, por meio de seu profeta Amós, condenou Israel por vender "o pobre pelo preço de um par de sandálias". (Am 2:6) E, mediante Ezequiel, Ele condenou os israelitas por cobrarem juros e lucrarem fraudulentamente às custas de seus companheiros. — Ez 22:12.

Após o retorno do exílio babilônico, desenvolveu-se entre os judeus uma situação deplorável, por deixarem de obedecer à lei de Deus a respeito de conceder empréstimos sem juros a coisraelitas necessitados. No tempo de Neemias, muitos judeus haviam sido obrigados a empenhar suas casas, seus campos, e até mesmo seus filhos e suas filhas, como garantia. No entanto, após a exortação de Neemias para que se corrigisse a situação, os credores concordaram em fazer a devolução a seus devedores e a emprestar sem juros. — Ne 5:1-13.

Ilustrações de Jesus. No primeiro século da EC, a relação entre credores e devedores era bem conhecida pelos judeus, e Jesus às vezes utilizava isso nas suas ilustrações. Acentuou a necessidade de se ser perdoador por falar a respeito dum escravo iníquo que, embora tendo sido desobrigado de uma dívida de 60.000.000 de denários (c. US$ 40.000.000), mandou lançar na prisão um coescravo por causa de uma dívida de 100 denários (c. US$ 70). (Mt 18:23-33) A ilustração de dois devedores, a um dos quais se perdoou uma dívida de 500 denários (c. US$ 350) e ao outro uma de 50 denários (c. US$ 35), salientou o princípio: "Aquele a quem se perdoa pouco, ama pouco." (Lu 7:41-47) O uso sábio de riquezas (materiais) "injustas", para tornar-se amigo de Deus, é ilustrado pelo mordomo injusto que, quando prestes a perder seu cargo, usou astutamente sua autoridade para tornar-se amigo dos devedores de seu amo por reduzir as dívidas deles. — Lu 16:1-9.

Outras Dívidas. Nas Escrituras, as palavras "dívida" e "devedor" são também usadas com referência a outras obrigações, além das resultantes de se tomar empréstimo. O salário devido a um trabalhador é chamado de "dívida". (Ro 4:4) Os pecadores são "devedores" dos contra quem transgrediram, e, portanto, têm de procurar seu perdão. O perdão das "dívidas", por Deus, depende de a pessoa ter perdoado ou não aos seus "devedores" pessoais. (Mt 6:12, 14, 15; Lu 13:4) Em virtude da sua obrigação de pregar as "boas novas", o apóstolo Paulo falou de si mesmo como "devedor" de todas as pessoas. (Ro 1:14, 15) Os crentes gentios, de fato, eram "devedores" dos cristãos judeus de Jerusalém, por terem sido beneficiados espiritualmente por estes. Portanto, era apenas correto que ajudassem materialmente seus irmãos judeus pobres. — Ro 15:26, 27.

DIVINO. Aquilo que pertence a Deus ou se refere a ele, aquilo que é semelhante a Deus ou celestial.

Em alguns lugares, nas Escrituras Hebraicas, as palavras 'El (forma singular da palavra "Deus") e 'Elo·hím (forma plural majestático da palavra "Deus") são usadas lado a lado. Assim, em Josué 22:22 e no Salmo 50:1, o texto hebraico reza 'El 'Elo·hím Yehwáh. Ao passo que algumas traduções (Ro; Sal 49:1, BC [em espanhol]) simplesmente transliteram as primeiras duas palavras desta frase, outras a vertem por "o Deus dos deuses" (BJ, BV, MC, Tr), ou, mais exatamente, 'O Poderoso, Deus' (ALA, AS, IBB, Mo, VB), e "Divino, Deus" (NM). — Veja DEUS.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, certas palavras derivadas de the·ós (deus) aparecem e se relacionam com aquilo que é divino. As palavras aparentadas thei·os, thei·ó·tes e the·ó·tes ocorrem em Atos 17:29, Romanos 1:20; Colossenses 2:9 e 2 Pedro 1:3, 4.

Em Atos 17:29, Paulo, em Atenas, mostrou que não é lógico que os humanos imaginem que "o Ser Divino [to thei·on, forma de thei·os] seja semelhante a ouro, ou prata, ou pedra". Muitos tradutores usam aqui termos tais como "a Divindade" (Al, BJ, CBC, MC, PIB), ao passo que a tradução, em inglês, de E. J. Goodspeed diz "a natureza divina". Segundo The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional), a expressão to thei·on "deriva do adjetivo theios, que significa 'pertencente a Deus', 'divino'". (Editada por G. Bromiley, 1979, Vol. 1, p. 913) O Greek-English Lexicon (Léxico Grego-Inglês) de Liddell e Scott dá como sentido "a Divindade". (Revisado por H. Jones, Oxford, 1968, pp. 787, 788) De modo que a frase to thei·on pode ser entendida como se referindo a uma pessoa ou a uma qualidade. Obviamente, pois, o contexto tem de orientar o tradutor na sua escolha de palavras. Aqui, em Atos 17:29, o contexto claramente mostra que se descreve a pessoa de Deus, e, portanto, a expressão é traduzida corretamente por "Ser Divino", na Tradução do Novo Mundo. — Veja NIV.

Em Romanos 1:20, o apóstolo menciona a inegável evidência visível das "qualidades invisíveis" de Deus, especialmente seu "sempiterno poder e Divindade [Thei·ó·tes]". Outras traduções rezam "deidade" (NE, RS, JB), transmitindo a muitos a ideia de personalidade, a condição de pessoa. No entanto, segundo o Greek-English Lexicon, de Liddell e Scott, a palavra grega thei·ó·tes significa "natureza divina, divindade". (P. 788) Portanto, há base para se traduzir thei·ó·tes de modo a se referir à qualidade de ser deus, não à pessoa de Deus, e isto é apoiado pelo contexto. O apóstolo trata de coisas que são discerníveis na criação física. Por exemplo, embora a criação não revele o nome de Deus, ela realmente fornece evidência do seu "sempiterno poder" — necessário para criar e sustentar o Universo. A criação física também demonstra sua "Divindade", o fato de que o Criador deveras é Deus e digno da nossa adoração.

Daí, em Colossenses 2:9, o apóstolo Paulo diz que em Cristo "mora corporalmente toda a plenitude da qualidade divina [forma de the·ó·tes]". Novamente, algumas traduções rezam aqui "divindade", o que os trinitaristas interpretam como significando que Deus mora corporalmente em Cristo. (Al, ALA, BJ, CBC) No entanto, o Greek-English Lexicon de Liddell e Scott define thei·ó·tes basicamente do mesmo modo que the·ó·tes, com o significado de "divindade, natureza divina". (P. 792) A Pesito siríaca e a Vulgata latina vertem esta palavra por "divindade". De modo que aqui, também, há base sólida para se verter the·ó·tes como se referindo à qualidade, não à personalidade.

A consideração do contexto de Colossenses 2:9 mostra claramente que possuir Cristo "divindade" ou "natureza divina" não o torna igual ao Deus Todo-Poderoso. No capítulo anterior, Paulo diz: "Deus achou bom que morasse nele toda a plenitude." (Col 1:19) Portanto, toda a plenitude mora em Cristo porque isso "foi do agrado do Pai" (Al, So), porque foi "pela própria escolha de Deus". (NE) Portanto, a plenitude da "divindade" que mora em Cristo é dele em resultado duma decisão do Pai. Mostrando adicionalmente que ter Cristo tal "plenitude" não o torna a mesma pessoa do Deus Todo-Poderoso há o fato de Paulo, mais tarde, falar de Cristo como estar "sentado à direita de Deus". — Col 3:1.

Quando se toma em consideração o contexto imediato de Colossenses 2:9, nota-se que no versículo 8 se adverte os cristãos a não se deixarem desencaminhar por aqueles que advogam filosofias e tradições humanas. Diz-se-lhes também que "cuidadosamente ocultos [em Cristo] se acham todos os tesouros da sabedoria e do conhecimento", e eles são exortados a prosseguir "andando em união com ele, arraigados, e sendo edificados nele e estabilizados na fé". (Col 2:3, 6, 7) Além disso, os versículos 13 a 15 explicam que eles são vivificados pela fé, sendo libertos do pacto da Lei. Paulo argumenta, portanto, que os cristãos não necessitam da Lei (que foi removida por meio de Cristo), nem de filosofias e tradições humanas. Eles já têm todo o necessário, uma "plenitude" preciosa, em Cristo. — Col 2:10-12.

Por fim, em 2 Pedro 1:3, 4, o apóstolo mostra que em virtude das "promessas preciosas e mui grandiosas" feitas aos fiéis cristãos ungidos, estes podem 'tornar-se parceiros na natureza divina, tendo escapado da corrupção que há no mundo pela concupiscência'. Outras partes das Escrituras mencionam cristãos como "parceiros" de Cristo nos seus sofrimentos, numa morte semelhante à dele e numa ressurreição semelhante à dele para a imortalidade como criaturas espirituais, tornando-se coherdeiros com ele no Reino celestial. (1Co 15:50-54; Fil 3:10, 11; 1Pe 5:1; 2Pe 1:2-4; Re 20:6) Assim é evidente que a participação de cristãos na "natureza divina" é a participação com Cristo na sua glória.

DIVÓRCIO. Dissolução legal da união marital. Portanto, a ruptura do vínculo matrimonial entre marido e esposa. Diversos termos das línguas originais para "divórcio" significam literalmente "mandar embora" (De 22:19 n.), "soltar" ou "liberar" (Mt 1:19, Int; 19:3 n.), "expulsar; mandar embora" (Le 22:13 n.) e "decepar". — Veja De 24:1, 3, onde a expressão "certificado de divórcio" significa literalmente "livro de decepamento".

Quando Jeová uniu Adão e Eva em casamento, ele não fez nenhuma provisão para divórcio. Jesus Cristo tornou isto claro quando respondeu à pergunta dos fariseus: "É lícito que um homem se divorcie de sua esposa por qualquer motivo?" Cristo mostrou que o propósito de Deus para com o homem era que este deixasse pai e mãe e se apegasse à sua esposa, tornando-se os dois uma só carne. Daí, Jesus acrescentou: "De modo que não são mais dois, mas uma só carne. Portanto, o que Deus pôs sob o mesmo jugo, não o separe o homem." (Mt 19:3-6; veja Gên 2:22-24.) A seguir, os fariseus perguntaram: "Então, por que prescreveu Moisés que se desse um certificado de repúdio e que ela fosse divorciada?" Em resposta, Cristo disse: "Moisés, por causa da dureza dos vossos corações, vos fez a concessão de vos divorciardes de vossas esposas, mas este não foi o caso desde o princípio." — Mt 19:7, 8.

Embora o divórcio, com base em vários motivos, fosse permitido entre os israelitas como concessão, Jeová Deus regulamentou-o na sua Lei dada a Israel por meio de Moisés. Deuteronômio 24:1 diz: "Caso um homem tome uma mulher e faça dela sua propriedade, como esposa, então tem de suceder que, se ela não achar favor aos seus olhos por ele ter encontrado alguma coisa indecente da parte dela, então tem de escrever-lhe um certificado de divórcio e pô-lo na mão dela, e tem de despedi-la de sua casa." Exatamente o que era "alguma coisa indecente" (literalmente: "a nudez duma coisa") não é especificamente declarado. Que não se tratava de adultério é indicado pelo fato de que a lei de Deus dada a Israel decretava que os culpados de adultério fossem mortos, e não simplesmente divorciados. (De 22:22-24) Sem dúvida, originalmente, a 'indecência' que teria dado ao marido hebreu alguma base para se divorciar da esposa envolvia algo sério, talvez a esposa demonstrando grave desrespeito pelo marido ou envergonhando sua família. Visto que a Lei especificava "tens de amar o teu próximo como a ti mesmo", não é razoável presumir que pequenas faltas pudessem ser usadas com impunidade qual desculpa para alguém se divorciar da esposa. — Le 19:18.

Nos dias de Malaquias, muitos maridos judeus agiam traiçoeiramente com sua esposa, divorciando-se dela por toda sorte de motivos, livrando-se da esposa da sua mocidade, possivelmente a fim de se casar com mulheres pagãs mais jovens. Em vez de sustentarem a lei de Deus, os sacerdotes permitiam isso, o que desagradava muito a Jeová. (Mal 2:10-16) Que os homens judeus recorriam a muitos motivos para o divórcio, quando Jesus Cristo estava na terra, é indicado pela pergunta que os fariseus fizeram a Jesus: "É lícito que um homem se divorcie de sua esposa por qualquer motivo?" — Mt 19:3.

Entre os israelitas, o homem costumeiramente pagava um dote pela mulher que se tornava sua esposa, e ela era considerada sua propriedade. Embora usufruísse muitas bênçãos e privilégios, cabia a ela o papel subordinado na união marital. A situação dela é adicionalmente esclarecida em Deuteronômio 24:1-4, que indica que o marido podia divorciar-se da esposa, mas não diz nada a respeito de a esposa divorciar-se do marido. Sendo considerada propriedade dele, ela não podia divorciar-se dele. Na história secular, o primeiro caso registrado de uma mulher em Israel tentar divorciar-se do marido foi quando Salomé, irmã do Rei Herodes, enviou a seu esposo, o governador da Idumeia, um documento de divórcio dissolvendo seu casamento. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XV, 259 [vii, 10]) Que tais ações de divórcio por iniciativa da mulher já começavam a aflorar quando Jesus estava na terra, ou que ele previa tal ocorrência, pode ser indicado pelas palavras de Cristo: "Se uma mulher, depois de divorciar-se de seu marido, se casar com outro, ela comete adultério." — Mr 10:12.

Certificado de Divórcio. Não se deve concluir, à base dos abusos posteriores, que a concessão mosaica original do divórcio tornasse fácil para o marido israelita divorciar-se da esposa. Para isso, tinha de tomar medidas formais. Era necessário redigir um documento, "escrever-lhe um certificado de divórcio". O marido que se divorciava tinha de 'pô-lo na mão dela e despedi-la de sua casa'. (De 24:1) Embora as Escrituras não forneçam detalhes adicionais a respeito desse procedimento, esta medida legal aparentemente envolvia uma consulta com homens devidamente autorizados, que talvez primeiro se empenhassem em conseguir uma reconciliação. O tempo envolvido para preparar o certificado e completar legalmente o divórcio daria ao marido que movia a ação de divórcio uma oportunidade para reconsiderar sua decisão. Tinha de haver base para divórcio, e, quando o regulamento era aplicado corretamente, servia logicamente como fator dissuasivo contra ações precipitadas para obter divórcio. Ademais, os direitos e os interesses da esposa eram também protegidos. As Escrituras não revelam o conteúdo do "certificado de divórcio".

Novo Casamento de Cônjuges Divorciados. Deuteronômio 24:1-4 estipulava também que a mulher divorciada 'tinha de sair de sua casa, e tinha de ir e tornar-se de outro homem', o que significava que ela era elegível para novo casamento. Declarava-se também: "Se este último homem veio a odiá-la e lhe tiver escrito um certificado de divórcio e lho tiver posto na mão, e a tiver despedido da sua casa, ou caso morra o último homem que a tomou por sua esposa, não se permitirá ao primeiro dono dela, que a despediu, tomá-la novamente de volta para se tornar sua esposa depois de ela ter sido aviltada; pois isso é algo detestável perante Jeová e não deves levar ao pecado a terra que Jeová, teu Deus, te dá por herança." O ex-marido estava impedido de retomar a esposa divorciada, talvez para evitar a possibilidade de qualquer trama, entre ele e esta esposa que se casou de novo, a fim de provocar o divórcio de seu segundo marido, ou causar a sua morte, para assim poder casar-se novamente com seu marido anterior. Se seu ex-cônjuge a retomasse, isso seria impuro aos olhos de Deus; o primeiro marido ridicularizaria a si mesmo, porque a repudiara como mulher na qual encontrara "alguma coisa indecente", e, daí, depois de ela ter-se juntado legalmente a outro homem e servido como esposa dele, a tomava de volta.

Sem dúvida, o mero fato de que o marido original não poderia casar-se de novo com sua esposa divorciada, depois de ela ter passado a pertencer a outro homem, mesmo que este homem se divorciasse dela ou morresse, fazia com que o marido que cogitasse a ação do divórcio pensasse seriamente antes de agir para terminar o casamento. (Je 3:1) Contudo, nada foi dito que o proibisse casar-se ele outra vez com sua esposa divorciada se ela não se casasse de novo depois da dissolução legal do seu laço marital.

Despedir Esposas Pagãs. Antes de os israelitas entrarem na Terra da Promessa, foi-lhes dito que não formassem alianças matrimoniais com seus habitantes pagãos. (De 7:3, 4) Não obstante, nos dias de Esdras, os judeus haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, e, em oração a Deus, Esdras admitiu a culpa deles neste respeito. Em resposta ao apelo dele e em reconhecimento de seu erro, os homens de Israel, que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, as despediram "junto com os filhos". — Esd 9:10-10:44.

Todavia, os cristãos, procedentes de todas as diferentes nações (Mt 28:19), não deviam divorciar-se de cônjuges que não fossem adoradores de Jeová, nem era aconselhável que se separassem de tais cônjuges, conforme mostra o conselho inspirado de Paulo. (1Co 7:10-28) Contudo, quando se tratava de contrair um novo casamento, os cristãos foram aconselhados a se casarem "somente no Senhor". — 1Co 7:39.

O Divórcio Cogitado por José. No período em que Maria estava prometida em casamento a José, mas antes de se unirem, ela engravidou por espírito santo, e o relato diz: "No entanto, José, seu marido, porque era justo e não queria fazer dela um espetáculo público, pretendeu divorciar-se dela secretamente." (Mt 1:18, 19) Visto que o noivado era um compromisso tão obrigatório assim entre os judeus naquela época, a palavra "divórcio" é usada corretamente aqui.

Quando uma moça noiva concordava em ter relações sexuais com outro homem, ela era apedrejada até morrer, igual a uma adúltera. (De 22:22-29) Nos casos que resultariam no apedrejamento de alguém até a morte, eram necessárias duas testemunhas para confirmar a culpa da pessoa. (De 17:6, 7) Obviamente, José não tinha testemunhas contra Maria. Maria estava grávida, mas José não entendeu bem o assunto, até que o anjo de Jeová lhe deu a explicação. (Mt 1:20, 21) Não se declara se o 'divórcio secreto' que cogitava incluiria ele dar um certificado de divórcio; mas é provável que José agiria segundo os princípios declarados em Deuteronômio 24:1-4, possivelmente concedendo-lhe o divórcio diante de apenas duas testemunhas, para resolver a questão, sem expô-la indevidamente à vergonha. Embora Mateus não forneça todos os detalhes a respeito do proceder intencionado de José, ele deveras indica que José queria lidar com Maria de modo misericordioso. José não é considerado injusto por causa disso, mas, antes, foi "porque era justo e não queria fazer dela um espetáculo público" que "pretendeu divorciar-se dela secretamente". — Mt 1:19.

Circunstâncias Que Impediam o Divórcio em Israel. Segundo a lei de Deus dada a Israel, havia situações em que o divórcio era impossível. Podia acontecer que um homem tomasse uma esposa, tivesse relações sexuais com ela e depois viesse a odiá-la. Poderia declarar falsamente que ela não era virgem quando se casou com ele, deste modo acusando-a incorretamente de comportamento escandaloso, dando-lhe má reputação. Se os pais da moça apresentassem evidência de que a filha deles era virgem por ocasião do casamento, os homens da cidade teriam de punir o acusador falso. Eles o multariam em cem siclos de prata (US$ 220), entregando-os ao pai da moça, e ela continuaria sendo a esposa desse homem, declarando-se: "Não se lhe permitirá divorciar-se dela em todos os seus dias." (De 22:13-19) Também, se fosse descoberto que um homem se apoderara duma virgem que não era noiva e tivera relações sexuais com ela, estipulava-se: "O homem que se deitou com ela tem de dar cinquenta siclos de prata [US$ 110] ao pai da moça e ela se tornará sua esposa devido ao fato de que a humilhou. Não se lhe permitirá divorciar-se dela em todos os seu dias." — De 22:28, 29.

Entre os cristãos, qual é a única base bíblica para um divórcio?

Jesus Cristo, no seu Sermão do Monte, declarou: "Outrossim, foi dito: 'Quem se divorciar de sua esposa, dê-lhe certificado de divórcio.' No entanto, eu vos digo que todo aquele que se divorciar de sua esposa, a não ser por causa de fornicação, expõe-na ao adultério, e quem se casar com uma mulher divorciada comete adultério." (Mt 5:31, 32) Também, depois de dizer aos fariseus que a concessão mosaica, de eles se divorciarem de suas esposas, não era o arranjo que prevalecia "desde o princípio", Jesus disse: "Eu vos digo que todo aquele que se divorciar de sua esposa, exceto em razão de fornicação, e se casar com outra, comete adultério." (Mt 19:8, 9) Hoje em dia, de modo geral, faz-se uma distinção entre "fornicadores" e "adúlteros". De acordo com o uso moderno, os culpados de fornicação são pessoas não casadas que voluntariamente têm relações sexuais com alguém do sexo oposto. Adúlteros são os casados que deliberadamente têm relações sexuais com alguém do sexo oposto, que não é seu cônjuge legal. Conforme se mostra no artigo FORNICAÇÃO, porém, o termo "fornicação" traduz a palavra grega por·nei·a e inclui todas as formas de relações sexuais ilícitas fora do casamento bíblico. Portanto, as palavras de Jesus em Mateus 5:32 e 19:9 significam que a única base para o divórcio, que realmente rompe o laço matrimonial, é por·nei·a por parte de um dos cônjuges. O seguidor ou seguidora de Cristo pode recorrer a esta provisão de divórcio, se assim desejar, e esse divórcio permite-lhe casar-se com uma cristã ou um cristão elegível. — 1Co 7:39.

Atos sexuais imorais cometidos por alguém casado com outra pessoa do mesmo sexo (homossexualismo) são imundos e repugnantes. Os impenitentes deste tipo não herdarão o Reino de Deus. E, naturalmente, a bestialidade é biblicamente condenada. (Le 18:22, 23; Ro 1:24-27; 1Co 6:9, 10) Esses atos crassamente imundos caem sob a designação ampla de por·nei·a. É também digno de nota que, sob a Lei mosaica, o homossexualismo e a bestialidade acarretavam a pena de morte, livrando o cônjuge inocente para novo casamento. — Le 20:13, 15, 16.

Jesus Cristo salientou que "todo aquele que persiste em olhar para uma mulher, a ponto de ter paixão por ela, já cometeu no coração adultério com ela". (Mt 5:28) Mas Jesus não disse que aquilo que estava no coração, mas não era transformado em ação, constituísse base para um divórcio. As palavras de Cristo mostram que se deve manter o coração puro, e que não se deve entreter pensamentos e desejos impróprios. — Fil 4:8; Tg 1:14, 15.

A lei rabínica dos judeus dava ênfase ao dever da pessoa casada de realizar o ato marital e permitia ao marido divorciar-se da esposa, se ela não pudesse ter filhos. Todavia, as Escrituras não dão aos cristãos o direito de divorciar-se de seu cônjuge por tal motivo. A esterilidade da esposa, durante muitos anos, não fez que Abraão se divorciasse de Sara, que Isaque se divorciasse de Rebeca, que Jacó se divorciasse de Raquel ou que o sacerdote Zacarias se divorciasse de Elisabete. — Gên 11:30; 17:17; 25:19-26; 29:31; 30:1, 2, 22-25; Lu 1:5-7, 18, 24, 57.

As Escrituras não dizem nada que permita ao cristão ou à cristã divorciar-se do cônjuge por este ser incapaz de realizar o ato marital, ou por ter ficado demente, ou por ter contraído uma doença incurável ou repugnante. O amor que os cristãos devem mostrar requereria, não o divórcio, mas tratar esse cônjuge com misericórdia. (Ef 5:28-31) A Bíblia tampouco dá aos cristãos o direito de se divorciarem do cônjuge por diferenças de religião; antes, ela mostra que, por permanecer com o cônjuge incrédulo, o cristão, ou a cristã, talvez ganhe a tal para a verdadeira fé. — 1Co 7:12-16; 1Pe 3:1-7.

No seu Sermão do Monte, Jesus disse que "todo aquele que se divorciar de sua esposa, a não ser por causa de fornicação, expõe-na ao adultério, e quem se casar com uma mulher divorciada comete adultério". (Mt 5:32) Com isso, Cristo mostrou que, se um marido se divorcia de sua esposa por razões outras do que a "fornicação" (por·nei·a) por parte dela, ele a expõe a adultério no futuro. Isto se dá porque a esposa não adúltera não fica devidamente desvinculada do seu esposo por tal divórcio, e não está livre para se casar com outro homem e ter relações sexuais com outro marido. Quando Cristo disse que "quem se casar com uma mulher divorciada comete adultério", ele se referia a uma mulher divorciada por motivos que não fossem "por causa de fornicação" (por·nei·a). Tal mulher, embora legalmente divorciada, não estaria biblicamente divorciada.

Marcos, assim como Mateus (Mt 19:3-9), registrou as declarações de Jesus aos fariseus a respeito do divórcio e o citou como dizendo: "Quem se divorciar de sua esposa e se casar com outra, comete adultério contra ela, e, se uma mulher, depois de divorciar-se de seu marido, se casar com outro, ela comete adultério." (Mr 10:11, 12) Uma declaração similar é feita em Lucas 16:18, que reza: "Todo aquele que se divorciar de sua esposa e se casar com outra, comete adultério, e quem se casar com uma mulher divorciada do marido, comete adultério." Considerados isoladamente, esses versículos parecem proibir todo e qualquer divórcio para os seguidores de Cristo, ou pelo menos indicar que uma pessoa divorciada não teria o direito de se casar de novo, a não ser após a morte do cônjuge divorciado. Contudo, as palavras de Jesus, conforme registradas por Marcos e por Lucas, devem ser entendidas à luz da declaração mais completa registrada por Mateus. Este incluiu a frase "exceto em razão de fornicação" (Mt 19:9; veja também Mt 5:32), mostrando que aquilo que Marcos e Lucas escreveram, ao citar Jesus sobre o divórcio, se aplica quando o motivo do divórcio não é a "fornicação" (por·nei·a) praticada pelo cônjuge infiel.

A pessoa, porém, não é biblicamente obrigada a se divorciar dum cônjuge adúltero arrependido. Em tal caso, o marido ou a esposa cristãos podem conceder misericórdia, assim como Oseias, que aparentemente retomou sua esposa adúltera Gômer, e como Jeová, que concedeu misericórdia ao Israel arrependido, que havia sido culpado de adultério espiritual. — Os 3.

Restabelecida a norma original de Deus. É evidente que a declaração de Jesus Cristo indicava o retorno à elevada norma de casamento originalmente estabelecida por Jeová Deus, e mostrava que aqueles que quisessem tornar-se discípulos de Jesus teriam de aderir a esta norma elevada. Embo-ra ainda vigorassem as concessões providas pela Lei mosaica, aqueles que fossem verdadeiros discípulos de Jesus, fazendo a vontade do Seu Pai e 'fazendo', ou pondo em prática, as declarações de Jesus (Mt 7:21-29), não mais se aproveitariam de tais concessões para usar de 'dureza de coração' para com o seu cônjuge. (Mt 19:8) Por serem discípulos genuínos, não violariam os princípios divinos originais que regem o casamento por se divorciarem de seu cônjuge por qualquer motivo, sem ser o especificado por Jesus, a saber, a "fornicação" (por·nei·a).

A pessoa solteira que comete fornicação com uma prostituta torna-se "um só corpo" com ela. De modo similar, o adúltero torna-se "um só corpo", não com a sua esposa legal, mas com a pessoa imoral com quem tem relações sexuais. O adúltero peca assim não só contra a sua própria carne, mas também contra a sua esposa legítima, que até então fora "uma só carne" com ele. (1Co 6:16-18) Por este motivo, o adultério fornece uma base real para o rompimento do laço marital de acordo com os princípios divinos, e quando existe tal base, o divórcio conseguido resulta na dissolução formal e definitiva da união matrimonial legal, libertando o cônjuge inocente para um novo casamento honroso. — He 13:4.

Divórcio Figurativo. A relação matrimonial é usada de modo simbólico nas Escrituras. (Is 54:1, 5, 6; 62:1-6) Faz-se também referência ao divórcio, ou despedida da esposa, em sentido simbólico. — Je 3:8.

O reino de Judá foi derrubado e Jerusalém foi destruída em 607 AEC, sendo os habitantes do país levados ao exílio babilônico. Anos antes, Jeová dissera profeticamente aos judeus que então estariam no exílio: "Onde está então o certificado de divórcio da vossa mãe, que eu mandei embora?" (Is 50:1) A "mãe" ou organização nacional deles havia sido repelida por justa causa, não porque Jeová rompera seu pacto e iniciara o processo de divórcio, mas por causa da transgressão dela contra o pacto da Lei. Mas um restante dos israelitas se arrependeu e orou pela renovação da relação marital de Jeová com eles na sua pátria. Jeová, por causa do seu próprio nome, restabeleceu seu povo na sua pátria em 537 AEC, ao fim dos 70 anos de desolação, conforme prometido. — Sal 137:1-9; veja CASAMENTO.

DIZAABE [possivelmente: Lugar de Ouro]. Lugar, ao L do rio Jordão, mencionado junto com outros como uma ajuda para localizar o local onde Moisés proferiu seu discurso de despedida. Sua localização exata é hoje desconhecida. — De 1:1.

DÍZIMO. Décima parte, ou 10 por cento, entregue ou paga como tributo, especialmente para fins religiosos.

A Bíblia fala de dois casos ocorridos antes de entrar em vigor o pacto da Lei, em que uma décima parte de bens foi paga a Deus ou ao seu representante. O primeiro deles foi quando Abraão deu a Melquisedeque um décimo dos despojos da sua vitória sobre Quedorlaomer e os aliados deste. (Gên 14:18-20) O apóstolo Paulo cita este episódio como prova de que o sacerdócio de Cristo, à maneira de Melquisedeque, é superior ao de Levi, visto que Levi, estando nos lombos de Abraão, na realidade pagou assim dízimos a Melquisedeque. (He 7:4-10) O segundo caso diz respeito a Jacó, que em Betel fez um voto de dar a Deus um décimo dos seus recursos. — Gên 28:20-22.

Contudo, esses dois relatos são simples exemplos de se dar um décimo voluntariamente. Não há registro no sentido de que Abraão ou Jacó ordenassem a seus descendentes seguir esses exemplos, promulgando assim uma prática, um costume ou uma lei religiosa. Se Jacó já estivesse sob a obrigação compulsória de pagar dízimos, o voto que fez quanto a isso teria sido supérfluo. Portanto, é evidente que o sistema do dízimo não era costume ou lei entre os primitivos hebreus. Foi instituído com a implantação do pacto da Lei, não antes.

Leis Mosaicas Referentes ao Dízimo. Jeová deu a Israel leis referentes ao dízimo para fins específicos, aparentemente envolvendo o uso de dois décimos da sua renda anual, exceto durante os anos sabáticos, quando não se pagava dízimo, visto que não se previa renda. (Le 25:1-12) Todavia, alguns peritos creem que existia apenas um dízimo. Esses dízimos eram adicionais às primícias que obrigatoriamente se ofereciam a Jeová. — Êx 23:19; 34:26.

O primeiro dízimo, que consistia em um décimo dos produtos da terra e das árvores frutíferas, e (evidentemente do aumento) das manadas e dos rebanhos, era levado ao santuário e entregue aos levitas, visto que estes não tinham herança naquela terra, mas eram devotados ao serviço do santuário. (Le 27:30-32; Núm 18:21, 24) Os levitas, por sua vez, davam um décimo do que recebiam ao sacerdócio arônico, para o sustento deste. — Núm 18:25-29.

Evidentemente, antes de se tirar a décima parte, o cereal era debulhado, e o fruto da videira e da oliveira era convertido em vinho e em azeite. (Núm 18:27, 30; Ne 10:37) Se um israelita preferisse dar dinheiro em vez de produtos, podia fazer isso, estipulando-se neste caso que acrescentasse ao valor um quinto adicional. (Le 27:31) Era diferente, porém, no caso do rebanho e da manada. À medida que os animais iam saindo um a um do curral, através dum portão, o proprietário postava-se com uma vara no portão e marcava todo décimo como dízimo, sem examinar ou selecionar. — Le 27:32, 33.

Parece que havia um dízimo adicional, um segundo décimo, reservado cada ano para outras finalidades, sem ser em apoio direto ao sacerdócio levítico, embora os levitas se beneficiassem dele. Normalmente era usado e usufruído em grande parte pela família israelita quando ela comparecia às festividades nacionais. Nos casos em que a distância até Jerusalém era grande demais para o transporte prático deste dízimo, o produto era convertido em dinheiro e este, por sua vez, era usado em Jerusalém para o sustento e o deleite dos membros da família durante o santo congresso realizado ali. (De 12:4-7, 11, 17, 18; 14:22-27) Daí, no fim de cada terceiro e de cada sexto ano do ciclo sabático de sete anos, este dízimo, em vez de ser usado para custear as despesas nas assembleias nacionais, era destinado aos levitas, aos residentes forasteiros, às viúvas e aos meninos órfãos de pai na comunidade local. — De 14:28, 29; 26:12.

Essas leis do dízimo que recaíam sobre Israel não eram excessivas. Nem deve ser despercebido que Deus prometeu prosperar Israel por abrir "as comportas dos céus", se suas leis do dízimo fossem obedecidas. (Mal 3:10; De 28:1, 2, 11-14) Quando o povo se tornava negligente quanto a dar o dízimo, o sacerdócio sofria, porque os sacerdotes e os levitas se viam obrigados a gastar seu tempo em serviço secular, e, consequentemente, negligenciavam seus serviços ministeriais. (Ne 13:10) Tal infidelidade tendia a produzir um declínio na adoração verdadeira. Lamentavelmente, quando as dez tribos sucumbiram à adoração do bezerro, elas usaram o dízimo para apoiar essa religião falsa. (Am 4:4, 5) Por outro lado, quando Israel era fiel a Jeová e estava sob o governo de administradores justos, o dízimo para os levitas era restabelecido, e, fiel à promessa de Jeová, não havia escassez. — 2Cr 31:4-12; Ne 10:37, 38; 12:44; 13:11-13.

Sob a Lei não existia pena estipulada para ser aplicada à pessoa que deixasse de pagar o dízimo. Jeová colocou todos sob forte obrigação moral de dar o dízimo; no fim do ciclo de três anos de pagamento de dízimos, exigia-se deles confessar perante Ele que os dízimos haviam sido pagos integralmente. (De 26:12-15) Qualquer coisa retida incorretamente era considerada algo roubado de Deus. — Mal 3:7-9.

Já no primeiro século EC, os líderes religiosos judeus, especialmente entre os escribas e os fariseus, faziam do pagamento de dízimos e de outras obras exteriores uma ostentação santimoniosa, em forma de adoração, mas o coração deles estava muito longe de Deus. (Mt 15:1-9) Jesus repreendeu-os por sua atitude egoísta, hipócrita, chamando atenção para a meticulosidade deles em dar o décimo até mesmo da "hortelã, e do endro e do cominho" — algo que estavam sob a obrigação de fazer — contudo, ao mesmo tempo, desconsideravam "os assuntos mais importantes da Lei, a saber, a justiça, a misericórdia e a fidelidade". (Mt 23:23; Lu 11:42) Como ilustração, Jesus contrastou o fariseu que jactanciosamente se considerava autojusto, devido às suas próprias obras de jejuar e de dar o dízimo, com o cobrador de impostos que, embora considerado insignificante pelo fariseu, humilhou-se, confessou seus pecados a Deus e implorou a misericórdia divina. — Lu 18:9-14.

Cristãos não Sujeitos a Pagar Dízimos. Em nenhuma ocasião se ordenou aos cristãos do primeiro século pagar dízimos. O objetivo primário do arranjo de dízimos, sob a Lei, era sustentar o templo e o sacerdócio de Israel; consequentemente, a obrigação de pagar dízimos cessaria quando aquele pacto da Lei mosaica chegasse ao fim, por estar cumprido, por meio da morte de Cristo na estaca de tortura. (Ef 2:15; Col 2:13, 14) É verdade que os sacerdotes levitas continuaram a servir no templo em Jerusalém até que este foi destruído em 70 EC, mas os cristãos, a partir de 33 EC, tornaram-se parte de um novo sacerdócio espiritual que não era sustentado por dízimos. — Ro 6:14; He 7:12; 1Pe 2:9.

Como cristãos, foram incentivados a dar apoio ao ministério cristão, tanto por sua própria atividade ministerial como por contribuições materiais. Em vez de darem quantias fixas, especificadas, para custear as despesas congregacionais, deviam contribuir "segundo o que a pessoa tem", dando "conforme tem resolvido no seu coração, não de modo ressentido, nem sob compulsão, pois Deus ama o dador animado". (2Co 8:12; 9:7) Foram incentivados a seguir o princípio: "Os anciãos, que presidem de modo excelente, sejam contados dignos de dupla honra, especialmente os que trabalham arduamente no falar e no ensinar. Porque a escritura diz: 'Não deves açaimar o touro quando debulha o grão'; também: 'O trabalhador é digno do seu salário.'" (1Ti 5:17, 18) Contudo, o apóstolo Paulo deu exemplo, procurando não acarretar à congregação uma carga financeira indevida. — At 18:3; 1Te 2:9.

DODAI. Veja DODO N.º 2.

DODANIM. Este nome aparece em Gênesis 10:4 como o quarto filho alistado de Javã. A Septuaginta grega e o Pentateuco Samaritano rezam aqui "Rodanim". "Rodanim" é também encontrado no texto massorético hebraico em 1 Crônicas 1:7, embora muitos manuscritos hebraicos, bem como a Pesito siríaca e a Vulgata latina rezem ali "Dodanim". — Veja RODANIM.

DODAVAÚ [possivelmente: Amado por Jeová]. Homem de Maressa, cujo filho Eliézer profetizou desastre para os navios de Jeosafá, construídos em sociedade com o iníquo Rei Acazias, de Israel. — 2Cr 20:36, 37.

DODO [duma raiz que significa "amado"].

1. Antepassado, provavelmente avô, do juiz Tola, da tribo de Issacar. — Jz 10:1.

2. Descendente de Benjamim através de Aoí. Eleazar, filho de Dodo, era um dos três poderosos de Davi. (2Sa 23:9; 1Cr 11:12) Dodai (forma alternativa de Dodo) serviu, talvez em sentido representativo por meio do seu filho Eleazar, como chefe da turma do exército do segundo mês. — 1Cr 27:4.

3. Residente de Belém, cujo filho Elanã era um dos poderosos de Davi. — 2Sa 23:24; 1Cr 11:26.

DOEGUE [possivelmente: Ansioso; Medroso]. Edomita que servia como pastor principal do Rei Saul, um cargo de supervisão, de responsabilidade. (1Sa 21:7; 22:9) Doegue evidentemente era prosélito. Por estar "retido perante Jeová" em Nobe, possivelmente por causa de um voto, de alguma impureza ou duma suspeita de lepra, Doegue presenciou quando o sumo sacerdote Aimeleque entregou a Davi os pães da proposição e a espada de Golias. Mais tarde, quando Saul, ao dirigir-se aos seus servos, externou a opinião de que eles conspiravam contra ele, Doegue contou o que vira em Nobe. Depois de convocar o sumo sacerdote, bem como os outros sacerdotes de Nobe, e então interrogar Aimeleque, Saul deu ordens aos batedores que matassem os sacerdotes. Quando estes se recusaram, Doegue, às ordens de Saul, sem hesitação matou um total de 85 sacerdotes. Depois deste ato iníquo, Doegue devotou Nobe à destruição, matando todos os seus habitantes, tanto jovens como idosos, bem como o gado. — 1Sa 22:6-20.

Conforme indicado no cabeçalho do Salmo 52, Davi escreveu a respeito de Doegue: "Tua língua maquina adversidades, afiada como navalha, trabalhando com dolo. Amaste o mal mais do que o bem, a falsidade mais do que falar justiça. Amaste todas as palavras devoradoras, ó língua enganosa." — Sal 52:2-4.

DOENÇAS E TRATAMENTO. As Escrituras frequentemente se referem a enfermidades, uma condição não salutar do corpo ou da mente, e também à doença espiritual, ou à condição de se estar figurativamente doente. Embora a Bíblia não tenha sido escrita primariamente como manual de instruções médicas ou de outras formas de tratamento para vários males, as informações que apresenta sobre esses assuntos são cientificamente exatas. Significativamente, ela mostra como superar a doença espiritual.

As doenças são consequência da imperfeição, que resulta em morte, e que foi transmitida à raça humana pelo pecador Adão. (Gên 3:17-19; Ro 5:12) Contudo, Jeová diretamente "tocou . . . Faraó e os da sua casa com grandes pragas, por causa de Sarai, esposa de Abrão". (Gên 12:17) Deus foi responsável pelos "furúnculos com bolhas" que surgiram em homens e animais durante o sexto golpe que infligiu ao antigo Egito. (Êx 9:8-11) Atingiu a presunçosa Miriã com lepra (Núm 12:9-15), aplicou um golpe no filho ilegítimo de Davi e Bate-Seba, de modo que ele adoeceu e finalmente morreu (2Sa 12:15-18), e "deu . . . uma pestilência em Israel", nos dias de Davi (2Sa 24:15). Todos esses atos de Deus foram em defesa de seu nome e de sua lei, e para proteção, libertação ou disciplina paternal de seu povo escolhido.

Entretanto, por permissão de Jeová, Satanás "golpeou a Jó com um furúnculo maligno, desde a sola de seu pé até o alto de sua cabeça". (Jó 2:6, 7) Isto permitiu a Jó ser exemplo para o povo de Deus na questão de manter a integridade. Jó foi posteriormente curado por Deus, e sua vida foi prolongada por 140 anos, devido à sua fidelidade. (Jó 42:10, 16) Os demônios foram às vezes responsáveis por enfermidades, como no caso de um homem cego e mudo, possesso de demônio, curado por Jesus Cristo. (Mt 12:22) Mas as Escrituras fazem distinção entre os males comuns e os causados por possessão demoníaca. — Mt 4:24; Mr 1:32-34; At 5:16; veja POSSESSÃO DEMONÍACA.

Deixar de obedecer à Palavra de Deus, como em assuntos que envolvem a moralidade sexual, pode levar a doença e até à morte. (Pr 7:21-27) Os israelitas foram avisados de que, se desobedecessem a Jeová, ele os golpearia com várias doenças. — De 28:58-61.

A Bíblia menciona diversas doenças e distúrbios. Por exemplo, os israelitas, se fossem desobedientes, sofreriam enfermidades tais como a tuberculose, furúnculos, hemorroidas, eczemas e loucura. (De 28:22, 27, 28, 35) A Lei fornecia informações para se diagnosticar casos de lepra e sobre como lidar com ela. (Le caps. 13, 14) O descendente de Arão que contraísse tinha favosa era impedido de desempenhar as funções sacerdotais, e um animal atacado dela não era aceitável para sacrifício. (Le 21:17, 20; 22:22) Jesus Cristo, pelo poder de Deus, curou cegueira congênita (Jo 9:1-7), surdez (Lu 7:22), hidropisia (Lu 14:1-4), lepra (Lu 5:12, 13), epilepsia, paralisia e outras doenças e enfermidades (Mt 4:23, 24). Em Malta, Paulo curou o pai de Públio, que estava "afligido por febre e disenteria". — At 28:1-8.

Pesquisadores atuais, às vezes, procuram ser mais específicos do que a Bíblia na descrição dos sintomas e das enfermidades que ela menciona, mas, frequentemente, seus conceitos variam muito. Todavia, visto que a Bíblia é a inspirada Palavra de Deus, quando seus escritores mencionavam uma doença, eles eram exatos. No entanto, às vezes não se identificam os padecimentos. Por exemplo, a Bíblia não identifica as doenças que custaram a vida de dois meninos, depois vivificados por Jeová mediante Elias e Eliseu. (1Rs 17:17-24; 2Rs 4:17-37) Ela não revela a natureza da "doença de que [Eliseu] havia de morrer" (2Rs 13:14, 20), nem revela a enfermidade que resultou na morte de Lázaro. — Jo 11:1-4.

Tratamentos nos Tempos Antigos. Médicos, praticantes da medicina ou de diversas artes de cura, eram comuns no antigo Israel e em outras terras bíblicas. No Egito, "os médicos embalsamaram Israel", o falecido Jacó. (Gên 50:1-3) O discípulo Lucas é chamado de "o médico amado". (Col 4:14) Marcos fala sobre uma mulher que "já por doze anos padecia dum fluxo de sangue" e que "tinha sido submetida a muitas dores, por muitos médicos, e tinha gasto todos os seus recursos, sem ter sido beneficiada, mas, antes, tinha ficado pior". — Mr 5:25-29.

Médicos hebreus, pelo visto, usavam algumas ervas e talvez certos remédios dietéticos. 'Bálsamo de Gileade', um óleo perfumado obtido de plantas na antiga Gileade, às vezes era aplicado a feridas, talvez com fins antissépticos ou para produzir um efeito suavizante e mitigante da dor. (Je 46:11; 51:8) Pelo que parece, indica-se também o uso de folhas para fins medicinais. (Ez 47:12; Re 22:1, 2) Pelo visto, usavam-se cataplasmas. (2Rs 20:7; Is 38:21) Às vezes aplicava-se óleo para suavizar feridas e machucaduras (Is 1:6), aplicando-se ocasionalmente tanto óleo como vinho às feridas. (Lu 10:34) O consumo moderado de vinho era ocasionalmente recomendado por causa do seu efeito animador e pelas suas propriedades medicinais. — Pr 31:6; 1Ti 5:23.

Medicina e cirurgia eram praticadas pelos antigos egípcios, a respeito dos quais escreveu o historiador Heródoto (II, 84): "A medicina está de tal maneira organizada no Egito, que um médico não cuida senão de uma especialidade. Há médicos por toda parte. Uns, para a vista; outros, para a cabeça; estes, para os dentes; aqueles, para os males do ventre; outros, enfim, para as doenças internas."

No Egito, técnicas cirúrgicas incluíam a cauterização para controlar a hemorragia, e o afastamento dum fragmento de osso que talvez comprimisse o cérebro da pessoa, em casos de fratura de crânio. Usavam-se talas para ossos quebrados, tendo-se até mesmo descoberto algumas múmias com talas feitas de casca de árvore, presas com ataduras. (Veja Ez 30:20, 21.) Que na primitiva Babilônia havia cirurgiões é indicado no Código de Hamurábi, que especificava certos honorários de médico e fazia referência a "uma faca de bronze" para incisões.

A odontologia era praticada na Fenícia. Um espécime de trabalho dentário encontrado envolvia o uso de fio de ouro para ligar seis dentes no maxilar inferior. Em outro, uma prótese de fios de ouro serviu para fazer uma "ponte" com dentes de outra pessoa.

Influência da Magia e da Religião Falsa. A respeito dos médicos do Egito e seus remédios diz The International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional; Vol. IV, p. 2393): "À base dos antigos papiros médicos preservados, o maior deles sendo o Papiro Ebers, sabemos que o conhecimento de medicina desses médicos era puramente empírico, na maior parte mágico e inteiramente não científico. Apesar das amplas oportunidades que tinham, sabiam quase nada da anatomia humana, suas descrições de doenças são irremediavelmente rudimentares, e três quartos das centenas de receitas nos papiros são totalmente inertes. Mesmo a sua arte de embalsamação era tão imperfeita, que poucas das suas múmias teriam restado em qualquer outro clima a não ser no do Egito." — Editada por J. Orr, 1960.

O médico e erudito francês Georges Roux (no seu livro Ancient Iraq [O Iraque Antigo], 1964, pp. 305-309) declara: "A diagnose e prognose dos médicos mesopotâmios eram uma mistura de superstição e de observações exatas." Havia médicos profissionais treinados que acreditavam que a maioria das doenças tinha origem sobrenatural, mas que também tomavam em consideração outras causas, tais como contágio, alimentos e bebidas. O médico, às vezes, indicava aos pacientes um adivinho, o sacerdote-baru, que procurava descobrir o pecado oculto responsável pela enfermidade. Ou, o médico encaminhava o paciente ao sacerdote-ashipu, que empregava encantamentos e ritos mágicos para exorcismar demônios. Roux observa: "Os médicos da Mesopotâmia, iguais aos astrônomos dela, baseavam sua arte em doutrinas metafísicas e com isso fechavam a porta à busca frutífera de explicações racionais."

Os babilônios consideravam Ea como o principal deus da medicina. Como proteção contra espíritos maus, usavam objetos tais como amuletos e talismãs. Os gregos achavam que Higia era a deusa que protegia a saúde, e os médicos da antiga Grécia derivavam sua inspiração de Asclépio (Esculápio). Os romanos associavam certas deidades com a cura de determinados padecimentos. Por exemplo, para febres havia Febris. É de interesse que um bastão com uma única serpente enroscada nele era símbolo associado com o deus grego Asclépio. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 530) O algo similar caduceu, bastão alado com serpentes enroscadas, emblema da medicina, é cópia do bastão mostrado na arte romana como carregado pelo deus Mercúrio.

Sobre antigos conceitos patológicos em geral diz The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete; Vol. 1, p. 847): "Entre as raças primitivas, a doença era encarada ou como resultado de magia hostil dominando a pessoa, ou sua incidência era atribuída à violação de algum tabu. Em qualquer dos casos, pressupunha-se que, nos casos de enfermidades não tratáveis, havia por detrás magia, feitiçaria e bruxaria, e as medidas curativas aplicadas inevitavelmente envolviam o xamã, ou curandeiro. A função dele era descobrir por adivinhação a causa sobrenatural da doença, e tentar bani-la por meio de despachos, feitiços, drogas e encantamentos." — Editado por G. Buttrick, 1962.

As Escrituras mostram que Satanás afligiu Jó (Jó 2:7) e que ocasionalmente havia possessão demoníaca vinculada com as doenças. (Mt 17:14-18) De modo que os antigos pagãos tinham motivo para associar pelo menos algumas enfermidades com a possessão demoníaca. Mas, dessemelhantes deles, os fiéis sacerdotes e médicos hebreus nunca recorriam à magia na tentativa de realizar curas. (De 18:9-13) Nem Jesus Cristo, nem seus verdadeiros seguidores, proferiam encantamentos mágicos, mesmo quando expulsavam demônios para realizar curas. Ex-praticantes de magia, ao aceitarem o cristianismo, abandonavam tais atividades demoníacas, e, certamente, o médico cristão nem empregaria o ocultismo, nem encaminharia o paciente a um praticante da magia. — At 19:18, 19.

Exatidão dos Conceitos Bíblicos. Diz-se a respeito de Hipócrates, médico grego do quinto e quarto séculos AEC, que se tornou conhecido como "o pai da medicina moderna": "Não tinha ligação com os hospitais-templos de sua época, controlados pelos sacerdotes de Asclépio, o deus grego da medicina." (Enciclopédia Delta Universal, 1987, Vol. 7, p. 3986) Hipócrates era virtualmente contemporâneo de Malaquias, mas, grande parte do que a Bíblia fala sobre doenças foi escrita por Moisés, cerca de mil anos antes. Todavia, é significativo que se tenha dito: "Os pesquisadores médicos mais bem informados que agora fazem o melhor trabalho estão chegando à conclusão de que a Bíblia é um bem exato livro científico. . . . Os fatos da vida, os diagnósticos, os tratamentos e a medicina preventiva, conforme apresentados na Bíblia, são muito mais avançados e confiáveis do que as teorias de Hipócrates, muitas ainda sem comprovação, e algumas já provadas como totalmente inexatas." — Dr. H. O. Philips, numa carta dirigida a The AMA News (Notícias da AMA [Associação Médica Americana]), publicada no número de 10 de julho de 1967.

Concernente ao médico cristão Lucas, que escreveu um Evangelho e o livro de Atos, o Dr. C. Truman Davis declarou: "Onde é dada uma descrição médica, ela é meticulosamente exata. Lucas usa um total de vinte e três palavras técnicas gregas, encontradas em Hipócrates, Galeno e outros escritos médicos daquela época." — Arizona Medicine (Medicina do Arizona), março de 1966, "Medicine and the Bible" (A Medicina e a Bíblia), p. 177.

Da observância à Lei, frequentemente resultavam benefícios para a saúde. Por exemplo, ela exigia que o excremento humano num acampamento militar fosse coberto (De 23:9-14), assim provendo considerável proteção contra doenças infecciosas transmitidas por moscas, tais como a disenteria e a febre tifoide. Prevenia-se a contaminação dos alimentos e da água, sendo que a Lei especificava que qualquer coisa sobre a qual caísse uma criatura "impura" ao morrer devia ser considerada impura, exigindo que se tomassem certas medidas, inclusive a destruição do vaso de barro assim contaminado. — Le 11:32-38.

Significativamente, foi declarado: "Os cuidados profiláticos eram básicos para esta legislação, os quais, quando observados, contribuiriam muito para a prevenção da incidência de polioencefalite transmitida pela comida, das febres entéricas, da intoxicação alimentar e da verminose. A insistência na proteção de um suprimento de água limpa era o meio mais eficiente de evitar o aparecimento e a disseminação de doenças tais como a amebíase, as febres do grupo entérico, a cólera, a esquistossomíase, e a icterícia espiroquética. Essas medidas profiláticas, que constituem parte fundamental de qualquer sistema de saúde pública, eram de particular importância para o bem-estar de uma nação que vivia, sob condições primitivas, numa região subtropical da terra." — The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 2, pp. 544, 545.

No seu livro The Bible and Modern Medicine (A Bíblia e a Medicina Moderna), A. Rendle Short, M.D., salientou que leis de saneamento público só existiam, se é que existiam, de forma elementar entre as nações que rodeavam o antigo Israel, e declarou: "É bem surpreendente, portanto, que num livro como a Bíblia, que se afirma não ser científico, haja um código sanitário, e é igualmente surpreendente que uma nação que acabava de ser liberta da escravidão, tendo sido frequentemente devastada por inimigos e levada ao cativeiro de tempos em tempos, tenha em seus livros de estatutos um código tão sábio e razoável de regras de saúde. Isto tem sido reconhecido por autoridades fidedignas, mesmo aquelas com pouco interesse nos aspectos religiosos da Bíblia." — Londres, 1953, p. 37.

De acordo com a Lei, a lebre e o porco estavam entre os animais que os israelitas não tinham permissão de comer. (Le 11:4-8) Quanto a isso, o Dr. Short declara: "Sim, comemos porco, coelho e lebre, mas estes animais são sujeitos a infecções parasitárias e só são seguros se o alimento estiver bem cozido. O porco não possui hábitos limpos de alimentação, e abriga dois vermes, a triquina e a tênia, os quais podem ser transmitidos ao homem. O perigo é mínimo sob as presentes condições neste país, mas seria muito diferente na antiga Palestina, e era melhor evitar tal alimento." — The Bible and Modern Medicine, pp. 40, 41.

A aderência aos justos requisitos de Jeová quanto à moralidade sexual tinha também um bom efeito sobre os israelitas em sentido espiritual, mental e físico. (Êx 20:14; Le 18) Benefícios quanto à saúde são similarmente desfrutados pelos cristãos que mantêm limpeza moral. (Mt 5:27, 28; 1Co 6:9-11; Re 21:8) Obedecer aos altos padrões morais da Bíblia oferece proteção contra as doenças sexualmente transmissíveis.

Paulo recomendou que Timóteo tomasse um pouco de vinho por causa do seu estômago e dos seus frequentes casos de doença. (1Ti 5:23) Que o vinho tem propriedades medicinais é confirmado pela pesquisa hodierna. O Dr. Salvatore P. Lucia, professor de medicina da Faculdade de Medicina da Universidade da Califórnia, declarou: "O vinho é amplamente usado no tratamento dos distúrbios do sistema digestivo. . . . O teor de tanino e as moderadas propriedades antissépticas do vinho o tornam valioso no tratamento das cólicas intestinais, da colite mucosa, da constipação espástica, da diarreia e de muitas doenças infecciosas do trato gastrointestinal." (Wine as Food and Medicine [Vinho Como Alimento e Remédio], 1954, p. 58) Naturalmente, Paulo sugeriu que Timóteo 'usasse de um pouco de vinho', não de muito vinho, e a Bíblia condena a bebedice. — Pr 23:20; veja BEBEDICE, EMBRIAGUEZ.

As Escrituras reconhecem o princípio psicossomático, embora só em tempos relativamente recentes os pesquisadores médicos em geral se tenham dado conta de que há alguma conexão entre as condições patológicas do corpo e o estado emocional da pessoa. Provérbios 17:22 declara: "O coração alegre faz bem como o que cura, mas o espírito abatido resseca os ossos." Emoções tais como a inveja, o medo, a cobiça, o ódio e a ambição egoísta são prejudiciais, ao passo que efeitos bons e às vezes terapêuticos são produzidos através do cultivo e da demonstração de amor, alegria, paz, longanimidade, benignidade, bondade, fé, brandura e autodomínio — os frutos do espírito de Deus. (Gál 5:22, 23) As Escrituras, é claro, não classificam todas as enfermidades como psicossomáticas, nem excluem como objetáveis toda consulta a médicos ou todo tratamento feito por eles. Paulo chamou o fiel cristão Lucas de "o médico amado". — Col 4:14.

Quarentena. De acordo com a Lei, quem tivesse, ou fosse suspeito de ter, uma doença contagiosa era posto em quarentena, isto é, mantido distante ou isolado de outros por certo tempo. Períodos de sete dias de quarentena eram impostos em testes de averiguação da lepra, no caso de pessoas, de roupa e de outros itens, ou de casas. (Le 13:1-59; 14:38, 46) Também, a pessoa era considerada impura por sete dias se tocasse num cadáver humano. (Núm 19:11-13) Embora as Escrituras não digam que este último regulamento foi dado por razões de saúde, dava-se assim alguma proteção a outros, caso o cadáver fosse de alguém que morreu de doença contagiosa.

Aplicação Figurativa. Judá e Jerusalém tornaram-se espiritualmente doentes por causa da sua pecaminosidade. (Is 1:1, 4-6) Embora os líderes religiosos de Jerusalém tentassem em vão sarar o quebrantamento do povo, dizendo falsamente que havia paz (Je 6:13, 14), não puderam impedir a destruição da cidade em 607 AEC. Mas, Jeová prometeu realizar a recuperação de Sião, ou Jerusalém (Je 30:12-17; 33:6-9), cura realizada com o retorno do restante judaico à sua pátria, em 537 AEC.

Jesus Cristo reconhecia o estado espiritualmente doente dos pecadores e procurava fazê-los recorrer a Jeová em busca de cura espiritual. Por isso, quando foi criticado por comer e beber com cobradores de impostos e pecadores, Jesus disse: "Os que têm saúde não precisam de médico, mas sim os que estão adoentados. Eu não vim chamar os que são justos, mas sim pecadores ao arrependimento." — Lu 5:29-32.

O tratamento da doença espiritual que aflige um membro da congregação cristã é considerado em Tiago 5:13-20. O contexto, que contrasta o estar doente com o ter bom ânimo, mostra que Tiago considerava, não a enfermidade física, mas a doença espiritual. Concernente às medidas terapêuticas e sua eficácia, Tiago escreveu: "Há alguém [espiritualmente] doente entre vós? Chame a si os anciãos da congregação, e orem sobre ele [de modo que ele possa ouvir a oração e mostrar que concorda por dizer "Amém"], untando-o com óleo [estimulando-o com confortadora e tranquilizadora instrução da Palavra de Deus, para trazê-lo de volta à união com a congregação (Sal 133:1, 2; 141:5)] em nome de Jeová [com fidelidade a Deus e de acordo com Seu propósito]. E a oração de fé [feita pelos anciãos em favor da pessoa espiritualmente doente] fará que o indisposto fique [espiritualmente] bom, e Jeová o levantará [como que do desânimo e do sentimento de estar abandonado por Deus, fortalecendo-o Jeová para andar no caminho da verdade e da justiça (Fil 4:13)]. Também, se ele tiver cometido pecados, ser-lhe-á isso perdoado [por Jeová (Sal 32:5; 103:10-14), se a pessoa reagir favoravelmente às orações e à repreensão, à correção e à exortação da Palavra de Jeová, dadas pelos anciãos, se ela, arrependida, der meia-volta e trilhar a vereda correta (Sal 119:9-16)]."

Lidar com Enfermidades. A doença é uma calamidade que pode sobrevir a alguém mesmo que seja materialmente rico. (Ec 5:16, 17; compare isso com Mt 16:26.) Algumas pessoas têm abundância de alimentos deliciosos, mas não podem saboreá-los por causa de distúrbios estomacais ou intestinais. (Ec 6:1, 2) Também se fala dos irmãos espirituais de Jesus Cristo como às vezes estando fisicamente doentes. (Mt 25:39, 40) Cristãos tais como Epafrodito, Timóteo e Trófimo sofreram doenças físicas (Fil 2:25-30; 1Ti 5:23; 2Ti 4:20), mas a Bíblia não relata ter havido curas milagrosas desses homens cristãos, realizadas pelos apóstolos.

No entanto, quando um dos servos de Deus fica fisicamente doente, é correto que ele ore a Jeová pedindo a necessária fortitude para suportar o padecimento e força espiritual para manter a integridade durante este período de fraqueza na carne. "O próprio Jeová o amparará no divã de enfermidade." — Sal 41:1-3; veja também 1Rs 8:37-40.

Entretanto, se alguém aceitasse sangue no seu organismo, como tratamento da doença, isto violaria a lei de Deus. — Gên 9:3, 4; At 15:28, 29; veja SANGUE.

Jeová pode eliminar doenças. (Êx 15:26; 23:25; De 7:15) Isaías escreveu sobre o tempo em que "nenhum residente dirá: 'Estou doente' " (Is 33:24), e a respeito da cura espiritual dos cegos, surdos, coxos e mudos, profecias que também prometem cura física. (Is 35:5, 6) Jesus Cristo, quando estava na terra, realizou curas tanto físicas como espirituais dos enfermos por cumprir a profecia messiânica: "Ele mesmo tomou as nossas doenças e levou as nossas moléstias." (Mt 8:14-17; Is 53:4) A base destas curas era o sacrifício da sua vida humana, o qual seria o clímax da carreira que tinha seguido desde que o espírito de Deus viera sobre ele no rio Jordão, em 29 EC. Os cristãos têm assim uma base para ter esperança e têm prova abundante de que, por meio do ressuscitado Jesus Cristo e por meio do Reino de Deus, a humanidade obediente receberá, não apenas tratamento temporário das doenças, mas o livramento permanente do pecado, das doenças e da morte atribuíveis a Adão. Todo o louvor por isso cabe a Jeová, identificado por Davi como aquele "que cura todas as tuas enfermidades". — Sal 103:1-3; Re 21:1-5.

DOFCA [possivelmente: Impelida; Empurrada]. A primeira parada dos israelitas depois de partirem do ermo de Sim em caminho para a Terra da Promessa. (Núm 33:12, 13) A Bíblia não indica sua localização geográfica exata. Todavia, muitos peritos associam Dofca com a Mafqat egípcia, um distrito que leva o nome da turquesa minerada desde tempos antigos em volta de Sarabit el-Khadim, a uns 34 km ao L da atual Abu Zanima, na península do Sinai.

DONS DADOS POR DEUS. Os dons, ou dádivas, que Deus concede a homens são expressão da sua benignidade imerecida. A própria palavra khá·ri·sma (literalmente: graça), que aparece 17 vezes nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, subentende uma dádiva que envolve "benignidade imerecida" (khá·ris) da parte de Deus. (Ro 6:23 n.; 1Co 12:4; 2Ti 1:6; 1Pe 4:10) Portanto, é somente correto que os dons recebidos de Jeová sejam usados em benefício do próximo e para a glória de Deus, o dador. (1Pe 4:10, 11) Esses dons não se destinam a dar lucro egoísta ao recebedor. Visto que tal pessoa 'recebeu de graça', tem a obrigação de 'dar de graça'. — Mt 10:8.

"Toda boa dádiva e todo presente perfeito vem de cima." (Tg 1:17) Jeová é generoso nas dádivas, permitindo que tanto os justos como os iníquos se beneficiem da luz solar e a chuva. De fato, ele "dá a todos vida, e fôlego, e todas as coisas". As dádivas de Deus, inclusive o alimento e a bebida, e ver o que é bom por todo o trabalho árduo que o homem faz, são para o seu usufruto. (Mt 5:45; At 17:24, 25; Ec 3:12, 13; 5:19; 1Ti 6:17) Tanto o estado de solteiro como o casamento são dons de Deus a serem usufruídos dentro dos limites dos Seus requisitos. Visto que a pessoa não casada está mais livre para se devotar ao serviço de Jeová sem distração, o estado de solteiro é o melhor dos dois dons. — Pr 18:22; Mt 19:11, 12; 1Co 7:7, 17, 32-38; He 13:4.

Dádiva de Deus por meio do Sacrifício de Jesus. A benignidade imerecida de Jeová em prover seu Filho como sacrifício resgatador é uma dádiva inestimável, e os que exercem fé no sacrifício de Jesus Cristo podem assim obter o dom da vida eterna. (Ro 6:23; Jo 3:16) A "indescritível dádiva gratuita" de Deus evidentemente inclui toda a bondade e benevolência que Ele estende ao seu povo por meio de Jesus Cristo. — 2Co 9:15; compare isso com Ro 5:15-17.

Espírito Santo. Deus confere seu espírito como dom ao seu povo, habilitando este a evitar as obras degradantes da carne e a cultivar em vez disso os frutos do espírito, a saber, amor, alegria, paz, longanimidade, benignidade, bondade, fé, brandura e autodomínio. (At 2:38; Ro 8:2-10; Gál 5:16-25) O espírito de Jeová é guia seguro e supre poder além do normal, ajudando o cristão a cumprir com as designações dadas por Deus, não importa que pressões se exerçam sobre ele. (Jo 16:13; 2Co 4:7-10) Jesus assegurou aos seus discípulos que o espírito de Deus lhes ensinaria todas as coisas, lembrar-lhes-ia as coisas que ele lhes ensinara e ajudá-los-ia a fazer uma defesa mesmo perante governantes. — Jo 14:26; Mr 13:9-11.

Sabedoria e Conhecimento. Verdadeira sabedoria e conhecimento são dons de Deus. Jeová realmente convida seus servos a orar por sabedoria e conhecimento, assim como Salomão fez. (Tg 1:5; 2Cr 1:8-12) No entanto, obter conhecimento requer esforço em estudar o que Deus tornou disponível por meio da sua Palavra, que é dádiva Sua. (Pr 2:1-6; 2Ti 2:15; 3:15) Mas o estudo da Palavra de Deus por si só não garante que se receba os dons do conhecimento e da sabedoria. Verdadeiro conhecimento e sabedoria estão disponíveis apenas por meio de Jesus Cristo e com a ajuda do espírito de Deus. — 1Co 2:10-16; Col 2:3.

A sabedoria piedosa serve de proteção e de guia nos caminhos da vida. (Ec 7:12; Pr 4:5-7) A sabedoria originária de Deus é nitidamente diferente da sabedoria mundana, que é tolice do ponto de vista de Jeová e também prejudicial, visto que deixa Deus fora de cogitação. (1Co 1:18-21) "Mas a sabedoria de cima é primeiramente casta, depois pacífica, razoável, pronta para obedecer, cheia de misericórdia e de bons frutos, sem parcialidade, sem hipocrisia." — Tg 3:17.

O conhecimento exato da vontade de Jeová ajuda quem o possui a 'certificar-se das coisas mais importantes', a evitar fazer outros tropeçar e a 'andar dignamente de Jeová, com o fim de lhe agradar plenamente'. (Fil 1:9-11; Col 1:9, 10) Além disso, o conhecimento é uma das coisas que ajudam o cristão a ser ativo e produtivo no serviço que presta a Deus. (2Pe 1:5-8) Este dom da parte de Deus envolve mais do que apenas conhecer os fatos. Abrange entender estes fatos e saber como usá-los ao "responder a cada um". — Col 4:6.

Dons de Serviço e "Dádivas em Homens". Designações de serviço no arranjo terrestre de Deus são realmente dons concedidos por Jeová. (Núm 18:7; Ro 12:6-8; Ef 3:2, 7) Os favorecidos com designações de serviço pela benignidade imerecida de Deus são também chamados de "dádivas em homens", e Jesus Cristo, como representante de Deus e cabeça da congregação, os tem dado à congregação para que seus membros individuais sejam edificados e atinjam a madureza. (Ef 4:8, 11, 12) Para poder desincumbir-se fielmente das suas responsabilidades para a bênção de outros, aquele que possui o dom tem de continuar a cultivá-lo, nunca o negligenciando. (1Ti 4:14; 2Ti 1:6) Com a ajuda de Jeová, aquele que fizer decidido empenho de aproveitar plenamente suas capacidades e de vencer obstáculos que talvez surjam poderá cultivar a habilidade de realizar qualquer serviço divinamente designado. — Fil 4:13.

Dons do Espírito. No primeiro século EC, dons milagrosos acompanhavam o batismo com espírito santo. Estes serviram de sinais de que Deus não mais usava a congregação judaica no Seu serviço, mas que Sua aprovação repousava sobre a congregação cristã, estabelecida por seu Filho. (He 2:2-4) No dia de Pentecostes, dons milagrosos acompanhavam o derramamento do espírito santo, e, em cada caso mencionado depois nas Escrituras, em que se transmitiram dons milagrosos do espírito, estava presente pelo menos um dos 12 apóstolos, ou Paulo, diretamente escolhido por Jesus. (At 2:1, 4, 14; 8:9-20; 10:44-46; 19:6) Evidentemente, com a morte dos apóstolos, a transmissão dos dons do espírito findou, e os dons milagrosos do espírito cessaram totalmente, ao passo que aqueles que haviam recebido esses dons deixaram o cenário terrestre.

A realização de obras aparentemente milagrosas não provava por si só que havia autorização divina, nem a incapacidade de servos de Deus realizarem milagres com a ajuda do espírito de Deus lançava dúvida sobre o fato de que eles estavam sendo usados por ele. (Mt 7:21-23) Nem todo cristão do primeiro século podia realizar obras poderosas, curar, falar em línguas e interpretar. Paulo, e sem dúvida outros, pela benignidade imerecida de Deus, receberam diversos destes dons do espírito. Todavia, esses dons milagrosos assinalavam a infância da congregação cristã e se predisse que cessariam. De fato, até mesmo Jesus indicou que seus seguidores seriam identificados, não por realizarem obras poderosas, mas por seu amor entre si. — 1Co 12:29, 30; 13:2, 8-13; Jo 13:35.

Paulo enumera nove diferentes manifestações ou operações do espírito: (1) palavra de sabedoria, (2) palavra de conhecimento, (3) fé, (4) dons de curar, (5) obras poderosas, (6) profetizar, (7) discernimento de pronunciações inspiradas, (8) línguas diferentes, e (9) interpretação de línguas. Todos esses dons do espírito tinham um objetivo benéfico, que não somente contribuiu para o crescimento numérico da congregação, mas também resultou na sua edificação espiritual. — 1Co 12:7-11; 14:24-26.

"Palavra de sabedoria." Embora se possa obter sabedoria por estudo, empenho e experiência, a "palavra de sabedoria" mencionada aqui evidentemente era a capacidade milagrosa de aplicar conhecimento de forma bem-sucedida na solução de problemas que surgissem na congregação. (1Co 12:8) Foi "segundo a sabedoria que lhe foi dada" que Paulo escreveu cartas que se tornaram parte da Palavra inspirada de Deus. (2Pe 3:15, 16) Este dom também parece ter-se manifestado na capacidade da pessoa de fazer uma defesa que os opositores não podiam refutar ou disputar. — At 6:9, 10.

"Palavra de conhecimento" e "fé". Todos na congregação cristã do primeiro século tinham conhecimento básico a respeito de Jeová e de Seu Filho, bem como a respeito da vontade e dos requisitos de Deus para a vida. Portanto, a "palavra de conhecimento" era algo além e acima do conhecimento compartilhado pelos cristãos em geral; era conhecimento milagroso. Do mesmo modo, a "fé" como dom do espírito evidentemente era fé milagrosa, que ajudava a pessoa a vencer obstáculos montanhescos, que de outra maneira estorvariam o serviço a Deus. — 1Co 12:8, 9; 13:2.

"Curar." O dom de curar manifestava-se na capacidade de curar doenças totalmente, não importando a natureza do padecimento. (At 5:15, 16; 9:33, 34; 28:8, 9) Antes de Pentecostes, curas haviam sido feitas por Jesus e pelos seus discípulos. Ao passo que algumas pessoas curadas obviamente manifestavam fé, não se exigia dos enfermos fazer uma expressão de fé, a fim de serem curados. (Veja Jo 5:5-9, 13.) Jesus, em certa ocasião, atribuiu a incapacidade de seus discípulos curarem um epiléptico não à falta de fé daquele que procurava a cura de seu filho, mas à pouca fé dos seus discípulos. (Mt 17:14-16, 18-20) Nem uma única vez citam as Escrituras um caso em que Jesus ou seus apóstolos fossem incapazes de curar outros, por falta de fé daqueles que buscavam a cura. Além disso, em vez de usar o dom da cura para curar Timóteo do seu distúrbio estomacal, ou de atribuir os seus frequentes casos de doença à sua falta de fé, o apóstolo Paulo recomendou que Timóteo usasse de um pouco de vinho por causa do seu estômago. — 1Ti 5:23; veja CURA; FÉ.

"Obras poderosas." As obras poderosas incluíam ressuscitar mortos, expulsar demônios e até mesmo golpear opositores com cegueira. (1Co 12:10) A manifestação de tais obras poderosas resultava na adição de crentes à congregação. — At 9:40, 42; 13:8-12; 19:11, 12, 20.

"Profetizar." Profetizar era um dom maior do que falar em línguas, visto que edificava a congregação. Além disso, os incrédulos eram assim ajudados a reconhecer que Deus realmente estava entre os cristãos. (1Co 14:3-5, 24, 25) Todos na congregação cristã falavam sobre o cumprimento das profecias registradas na Palavra de Deus. (At 2:17, 18) Entretanto, os respectivos que tinham o dom milagroso de profetizar podiam predizer eventos futuros, assim como fez Ágabo. — At 11:27, 28; veja PROFECIA; PROFETA (Profetas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs).

"Discernimento de pronunciações inspiradas." O discernimento de pronunciações inspiradas evidentemente envolvia a capacidade de discernir se uma expressão inspirada se originava de Deus, ou não. (1Co 12:10) Este dom impediria que aquele que o possuía fosse enganado e desviado da verdade, e protegeria a congregação contra falsos profetas. — 1Jo 4:1; compare isso com 2Co 11:3, 4.

"Línguas." O milagroso dom de línguas acompanhou o derramamento do espírito de Deus em Pentecostes de 33 EC. Os aproximadamente 120 discípulos reunidos numa sala de andar superior (possivelmente perto do templo) foram assim habilitados a falar sobre "as coisas magníficas de Deus" nas línguas nativas dos judeus e dos prosélitos que haviam chegado a Jerusalém de lugares longínquos para a celebração da festividade. Este cumprimento da profecia de Joel provou que Deus usava a nova congregação cristã e não mais a congregação judaica. Para poderem receber a dádiva gratuita do espírito santo, os judeus e os prosélitos tinham de se arrepender e ser batizados no nome de Jesus. — At 1:13-15; 2:1-47.

O dom de línguas mostrou-se muito útil para os cristãos do primeiro século na pregação àqueles que falavam outras línguas. Na realidade, era um sinal para os incrédulos. No entanto, Paulo, escrevendo à congregação cristã em Corinto, mandou que, quando se reunissem, nem todos falassem em línguas, visto que estranhos e incrédulos, entrando e não entendendo nada, concluiriam que eles estavam loucos. Recomendou também que falar em línguas fosse "limitado a dois ou no máximo três, e por turnos". Todavia, se não houvesse intérprete, então aquele que falava numa língua devia ficar calado na congregação, falando consigo mesmo e com Deus. (1Co 14:22-33) Não havendo tradução, falar ele numa língua não resultaria na edificação dos outros, porque ninguém escutaria as suas palavras, por não poder entendê-las. — 1Co 14:2, 4.

Quando aquele que falava numa língua não a podia traduzir, então ele não entendia o que ele mesmo estava dizendo, nem os outros que não conheciam essa língua, ou esse idioma. Portanto, Paulo incentivou aqueles que tinham o dom de línguas a orar para que também a pudessem traduzir e assim edificar todos os ouvintes. Em vista do precedente, pode-se facilmente ver por que Paulo, sob inspiração, classificou o falar em línguas como dom inferior e salientou que, numa congregação, ele antes queria falar cinco palavras com a sua mente (entendimento) do que 10.000 palavras numa língua. — 1Co 14:11, 13-19.

"Interpretação de línguas." O dom da interpretação de línguas manifestava-se em a pessoa ser capaz de traduzir uma língua desconhecida àquele que tinha tal dom. (1Co 12:10) Este dom realmente realçava o dom de falar em línguas, visto que a congregação inteira seria edificada por ouvir a tradução. — 1Co 14:5.

Outras Operações do Espírito. Ao mencionar algumas das operações do espírito em conjunto com a colocação dos respectivos membros no corpo de Cristo, Paulo declara: "Deus tem colocado os respectivos na congregação, primeiro apóstolos; segundo profetas; terceiro instrutores; depois obras poderosas; depois dons de curar, serviços prestimosos, capacidades de dirigir, línguas diferentes." (1Co 12:27, 28) "Serviços prestimosos" talvez incluíssem os arranjos organizados para se ajudar materialmente irmãos necessitados, tais como a distribuição de alimentos a viúvas necessitadas, para a qual sete homens "cheios de espírito e de sabedoria" foram designados na congregação de Jerusalém. (At 6:1-6) "Capacidades de dirigir" eram necessárias para se realizar a comissão de fazer discípulos, esboçada por Jesus. (Mt 28:19, 20) A obra missionária, bem como o estabelecimento de novas congregações, e depois orientar as atividades dessas congregações, exigia direção perita. Neste respeito, é digno de nota que Paulo, com referência à sua parte no programa de edificação de Deus, fala de si mesmo como "diretor sábio de obras". — 1Co 3:10.

Controle dos Dons do Espírito. Evidentemente, aqueles que tinham os dons do espírito só podiam usá-los quando o espírito de Jeová se tornava operativo neles para usar o dom. Por exemplo, em Cesareia, embora Paulo ficasse no lar de Filipe, o qual "tinha quatro filhas, virgens, que profetizavam", não foi uma destas filhas, mas sim Ágabo, um profeta que viera da Judeia, quem predisse a prisão de Paulo. (At 21:8-11) Numa reunião de congregação, um profeta talvez recebesse uma revelação enquanto outro profeta falava; mas aqueles que tinham os dons do espírito tinham controle sobre estes quando o espírito de Deus os envolvia, quer dizer, podiam refrear-se de falar até surgir a oportunidade. Portanto, profetizar, falar em línguas e traduzir podiam ser feitos de modo ordeiro na congregação, para a edificação de todos. — 1Co 14:26-33.

DONZELA. Veja VIRGEM.

DOR, I. Uma das cidades palestinas que se aliaram com o rei cananeu Jabim, de Hazor, para lutar contra Josué (Jos 11:1, 2) e que foi sumariamente derrotada. (Jos 11:12; 12:23) Embora Dor e suas aldeias dependentes ficassem realmente no território de Aser, elas foram dadas à tribo de Manassés, que se mostrou incapaz de desapossar os habitantes remanescentes ali. (Jos 17:11-13; 1Cr 7:29) Mais tarde, o território de Dor, supervisionado por um dos genros de Salomão, fornecia alimentos em um mês do ano para a casa de Salomão. — 1Rs 4:11.

A cidade de Dor usualmente é identificada com Khirbet el-Burj (Tel Dor), 13 km ao N de Cesareia, na extensa e estreita planície costeira ao longo do mar Mediterrâneo. Esta localização na planície costeira tem provocado alguns debates sobre o significado da frequentemente usada frase "nos serros [do hebr.: na·fáh] de Dor". (Jos 11:2) Alguns peritos acreditam que isto se refere aos penhascos ao longo de grande parte do litoral desta região, associando assim o termo hebraico na·fáh com o árabe nafnaf, significando "penhasco, precipício". Outros acreditam que talvez indique as encostas montanhosas que começam 3 km terra adentro de Dor e culminam na elevação do monte Carmelo.

DOR, II. Sensação de desconforto físico, quer moderada, quer severa; também, aguda aflição mental ou emocional.

Por motivo de trabalho fatigante de cultivar o solo amaldiçoado (Gên 3:17-19; 5:29), palavras injuriosas (Pr 15:1), a insensibilidade de outros quanto a corresponder ao bem que lhes é feito (Ro 9:2), doenças e outras adversidades (Jó 2:13; 16:6), os humanos têm sofrido dor mental, emocional e física. Situações horríveis ou aflitivas, quer reais, quer imaginárias, têm similarmente dado origem a dor. — Sal 55:3, 4; Is 21:1-3; Je 4:19, 20; Ez 30:4, 9; veja também DORES DE PARTO.

'Não Haverá Mais Dor.' Embora desagradável, a sensação física da dor serve a um objetivo benéfico por alertar a pessoa a perigos de dano corporal, e desse modo a capacita a tomar medidas para evitar danos sérios. Portanto, o cumprimento da promessa de Deus, de que "não haverá mais . . . dor" (Re 21:4), não pode significar que os humanos se tornarão insensíveis ou incapazes de sentir dor. Antes, 'não haverá mais' dor mental, emocional e física resultante do pecado e da imperfeição (Ro 8:21, 22), no sentido de que suas causas (tais como a doença e a morte) serão removidas. Que a perfeição física não exige por si só a absoluta ausência da sensação de dor é confirmado pelo fato de que até mesmo o homem perfeito, Jesus, sofreu dor física e emocional em conexão com sua morte e a insensibilidade daqueles a quem ministrou. (Mt 26:37; Lu 19:41) Fora inclusive predito que ele seria um "homem para ter dores". (Is 53:3) Por curar os "afligidos por várias moléstias e padecimentos" (Mt 4:24), Jesus carregou as dores de outros. — Is 53:4.

Uso Figurado. Frequentemente, as Escrituras mencionam a dor em sentido figurado. Dependendo do contexto, ela pode significar trabalho árduo (Pr 5:10) ou temor salutar e respeito reverente por Jeová Deus. (1Cr 16:30; Sal 96:9; 114:7) Águas, montanhas e a terra, quando num estado de agitação, são descritas como sofrendo dores. (Sal 77:16; 97:4; Je 51:29; Hab 3:10) Jeová considerou a infiel Judá como tendo uma dor incurável, uma dor que ameaçava matá-la. — Je 30:15.

Dores ou ânsias também podem denotar circunstâncias aflitivas. Referindo-se a Jesus Cristo, o apóstolo Pedro declarou: "Deus o ressuscitou por afrouxar as ânsias da morte, porque não era possível que ele continuasse a ser segurado por ela." (At 2:24) Embora os mortos não estejam cônscios, a morte é uma situação amarga e aflitiva, tanto na dor que muitas vezes a precede como na perda de toda atividade e liberdade causada pelas suas garras paralisantes. — Veja Sal 116:3.

DORCAS [Gazela]. Mulher cristã da congregação de Jope, que abundava em "boas ações e nas dádivas de misericórdia", evidentemente incluindo fazer roupas interiores e exteriores para viúvas necessitadas. (At 9:36, 39) "Dorcas" corresponde ao aramaico "Tabita", nomes que ambos significam "Gazela". Possivelmente Dorcas era conhecida pelos dois nomes, uma vez que naquela época não era incomum que os judeus, especialmente aqueles que moravam em um porto marítimo tal como Jope, com sua população mista de judeus e gentios, tivessem um nome hebraico, bem como um nome grego ou latino. Ou, Lucas pode ter traduzido o nome em benefício dos leitores gentios. Dorcas é a única mulher mencionada nas Escrituras a quem se aplica a forma feminina da palavra "discípulo". Isto, entretanto, não significa que tenha ocupado uma posição especial na congregação, visto que todos os cristãos, na realidade, eram discípulos de Jesus Cristo. (Mt 28:19, 20) Embora sua morte, em 36 EC, provocasse muito pranto entre as viúvas que aparentemente se haviam beneficiado bastante da sua bondade, não se fazer menção alguma de pesar da parte dum marido sugere que Dorcas não era casada naquele tempo.

Quando ela morreu, os discípulos em Jope prepararam-na para o enterro, e, ao saberem que Pedro estava em Lida, uns 18 km ao SE de Jope, mandaram chamá-lo. Sem dúvida, tinham ouvido falar da cura do paralítico Eneias, feita ali por Pedro, e isto pode ter-lhes dado uma base para pensar que o apóstolo poderia ressuscitar Dorcas. Por outro lado, podem ter recorrido a Pedro apenas em busca de consolo. — At 9:32-38.

Seguindo um proceder similar àquele usado por Jesus ao ressuscitar a filha de Jairo (Mr 5:38-41; Lu 8:51-55), Pedro, depois de pedir a todos que saíssem do quarto de andar superior, orou e então disse: "Tabita, levanta-te!" Dorcas abriu os olhos, sentou-se e tomou a mão de Pedro para levantar-se. Esta é a primeira ressurreição relatada como realizada por um apóstolo, resultando em muitos se tornarem crentes em toda a Jope. — At 9:39-42.

DORES DE PARTO. Tribulação associada com o dar à luz. Deus disse à primeira mulher, Eva, depois de ela ter pecado, qual seria o resultado quanto a dar à luz. Se tivesse permanecido obediente, a bênção de Deus teria continuado sobre ela e dar à luz teria sido pura alegria, visto que "a bênção de Jeová — esta é o que enriquece, e ele não lhe acrescenta dor alguma". (Pr 10:22) Agora, porém, como regra geral, o funcionamento imperfeito do corpo traria dor. Concordemente, Deus disse (uma vez que, com frequência, as coisas que Ele permite são mencionadas como sendo feitas por ele): "Aumentarei grandemente a dor da tua gravidez; em dores de parto darás à luz filhos." — Gên 3:16.

A expressão hebraica nesta passagem da Escritura é, literalmente, "a tua dor e a tua gravidez", e é vertida por algumas traduções "a tua dor, e a tua conceição". (Al; Tr) Mas a forma gramatical utilizada é chamada hendíadis, em que duas palavras são ligadas por "e", embora se fale de uma só coisa. Traduções modernas vertem a expressão concordemente. (ALA; BJ; CBC; MC) Assim, não se declara que a concepção seria necessariamente aumentada, mas a dor seria.

É verdade que a dor da gravidez e do parto pode ser aliviada por tratamento médico, e até mesmo evitada, até certo ponto, por cuidados e métodos preparatórios. Geralmente, porém, o parto continua sendo uma experiência fisicamente aflitiva. — Gên 35:16-20; Is 26:17.

Uso Simbólico. Apesar de dores de parto estarem associadas ao dar à luz, há alegria associada com o nascimento de uma criança. Quando Jesus Cristo falou intimamente com seus apóstolos, na noite antes da sua morte, ele usou essa circunstância como ilustração. Explicou-lhes que ia deixá-los, e então passou a dizer: "Digo-vos em toda a verdade: Chorareis e lamentareis, mas o mundo se alegrará; vós sereis contristados, mas o vosso pesar será transformado em alegria. Uma mulher, quando dá à luz, tem pesar, porque chegou a sua hora; mas, quando ela deu à luz a criancinha, não se lembra mais da tribulação, por causa da alegria de que um homem tem nascido no mundo. Portanto, vós também, deveras, tendes agora pesar; mas, hei de ver-vos novamente e os vossos corações se alegrarão, e ninguém vos tirará a vossa alegria." — Jo 16:20-22.

Passaram realmente por este período doloroso durante partes de três dias, quando eles, sem dúvida, prantearam e 'atribularam suas almas' com jejum. (Lu 5:35; compare isso com Sal 35:13.) Contudo, cedo na manhã do terceiro dia, 16 de nisã, e por 40 dias depois disso, o ressuscitado Jesus apareceu a certos discípulos. Imagine só a alegria deles! No dia de Pentecostes, o 50.º dia a partir da ressurreição de Jesus, foi derramado sobre eles o espírito santo de Deus e eles se tornaram testemunhas alegres da Sua ressurreição, primeiro em Jerusalém e depois em partes distantes da terra. (At 1:3, 8) E ninguém lhes podia tirar sua alegria. — Jo 16:22.

O salmista descreveu um encontro de reis, ao verem o esplendor e a magnificência da cidade santa de Deus, Sião, com suas fortes torres e escarpas. Ele disse: "Eles mesmos viram; por isso ficaram pasmados. Ficaram perturbados, foram postos a correr em pânico. Ali se apoderou deles o próprio tremor, dores de parto como as da mulher que dá à luz." (Sal 48:1-6) O salmo parece descrever um acontecimento real em que reis inimigos ficaram tomados de pânico num planejado ataque a Jerusalém.

Jeremias, ao profetizar a derrota que viria sobre a poderosa Babilônia, falou de um povo vindo do norte, sendo que o relato a respeito disso faria o rei de Babilônia ter fortes dores, como uma mulher ao dar à luz. Isto se cumpriu quando Ciro avançou contra Babilônia e especialmente quando a misteriosa escrita à mão apareceu na parede, durante o banquete do babilônio Rei Belsazar. O profeta Daniel a interpretou para Belsazar como pressagiando a imediata queda de Babilônia diante dos medos e dos persas. — Je 50:41-43; Da 5:5, 6, 28.

Concernente à vinda do "dia de Jeová", o apóstolo Paulo explicou que esta se daria quando o clamor: "Paz e segurança!" estivesse sendo proclamado. Então "lhes há de sobrevir instantaneamente a repentina destruição, assim como as dores de aflição vêm sobre a mulher grávida, e de modo algum escaparão". (1Te 5:2, 3) As dores de parto sobrevêm repentinamente, não se prevendo com exatidão o dia e a hora. As dores primeiro ocorrem a intervalos de aproximadamente 15 a 20 minutos, tornando-se mais frequentes à medida que o trabalho de parto progride. Na maioria dos casos, o tempo do trabalho de parto é relativamente curto, especialmente em seu segundo estágio, mas uma vez que as dores de parto começam, a mulher sabe que o nascimento está-se aproximando e que é preciso passar por esta experiência dolorosa. Não há 'escapatória'.

Na visão do apóstolo João, em Revelação (Apocalipse), ele viu uma mulher celestial clamando "nas suas dores e na sua agonia de dar à luz". A criança que nasceu era "um filho, um varão, que há de pastorear todas as nações com vara de ferro". Apesar dos esforços do dragão para devorá-lo, "o filho dela foi arrebatado para Deus e para o seu trono". (Re 12:1, 2, 4-6) O arrebatamento do filho por parte de Deus denotaria aceitar Ele a criança como sua, assim como era costume nos tempos antigos apresentar a criança recém-nascida ao pai para aceitação. (Veja NASCIMENTO.) Concluir-se-ia que a "mulher" é a "esposa" de Deus, a "Jerusalém de cima", a "mãe" de Cristo e de seus irmãos espirituais. — Gál 4:26; He 2:11, 12, 17.

A "mulher" celestial de Deus, naturalmente, seria perfeita, e o nascimento seria sem dor literal. As dores de parto, portanto, representariam simbolicamente que a "mulher" entendia que o nascimento estava próximo; ficaria na expectativa dele em breve. — Re 12:2.

Quem seria este "filho, um varão"? Ele iria "pastorear todas as nações com vara de ferro". Isto foi predito referente ao rei messiânico de Deus, no Salmo 2:6-9. Mas João teve esta visão muito depois do nascimento de Cristo na terra, e de sua morte e ressurreição. A visão, portanto, pareceria referir-se ao nascimento do Reino Messiânico nas mãos do Filho de Deus, Jesus Cristo, o qual, tendo sido levantado dentre os mortos, 'se assentou à direita de Deus, daí em diante esperando até que os seus inimigos fossem postos por escabelo dos seus pés'. — He 10:12, 13; Sal 110:1; Re 12:10.

Este era um evento aguardado, e, à medida que o tempo se aproximava, a expectativa dele no céu e na terra se tornaria grande, visto que o cumprimento de profecia seria uma indicação segura de sua proximidade. Assim também seria, conforme o apóstolo indicou aos cristãos, a vinda do "dia de Jeová": "Ora, quanto aos tempos e às épocas, irmãos, não necessitais de que se vos escreva." "Vós, irmãos, não estais em escuridão, de modo que aquele dia vos sobrevenha assim como a ladrões." — 1Te 5:1, 4.

DOTÃ. Cidade que figura em duas narrativas bíblicas. Dotã é hoje identificada com Tell Dothan (Tel Dotan), situada numa colina em uma pequena planície semelhante a uma bacia, localizada entre as colinas de Samaria e a cordilheira do Carmelo, 16 km ao NNE de Samaria. — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 950.

O jovem José encontrou seus irmãos e os rebanhos deles "em Dotã". Pensa-se que provavelmente eles estavam ao N daquela cidade, na pastagem através da qual passava a estrada que ligava Gileade (ao L do Jordão) com a costa mediterrânea e o Egito. Esta pode ter sido a rota feita pela "caravana de ismaelitas" que compraram José. — Gên 37:17-36.

Séculos mais tarde, o rei da Síria enviou uma poderosa força militar a Dotã para prender Eliseu. Ali, o amedrontado ajudante do profeta teve seus olhos miraculosamente abertos para ver o equipamento de guerra, de fogo, de Deus, na "região montanhosa . . . em torno de Eliseu", isto é, ou na mesma colina onde ficava Dotã, ou nas colinas vizinhas ao L, S e O de Dotã. (2Rs 6:11-17) Os sírios, ao cercar a cidade, podem também ter-se postado nestas colinas circundantes, das quais então 'desceram' quando Eliseu saiu da cidade ao encontro deles. As forças inimigas, no entanto, foram tornadas inofensivas quando atingidas miraculosamente por um tipo de cegueira, Jeová usando talvez as forças angélicas para realizar isso. — 2Rs 6:18, 19; compare isso com Gên 19:1, 10, 11.

DRACMA. Moeda grega de prata ainda em uso no primeiro século EC. (Lu 15:8, 9) A dracma ática estampava a cabeça da deusa Atena num lado e uma coruja no outro. No tempo do ministério terrestre de Jesus, a dracma provavelmente já tinha seu peso reduzido para cerca de 3,4 gramas, e assim seria hoje avaliada em US$ 0,65. No primeiro século EC, os gregos equiparavam a dracma ao denário, mas o governo romano calculava o valor oficial da dracma como de três quartos de um denário. Os judeus pagavam ao templo um imposto anual de duas dracmas (uma didracma). — Mt 17:24.

A dracma grega de prata não deve ser confundida com a "dracma" de ouro (dar·kemóhn) das Escrituras Hebraicas, uma moeda geralmente equiparada ao darico persa (8,4 gramas; US$ 94,50 segundo valores modernos). — Esd 2:69; Ne 7:70-72.

DRAGÃO. Do grego drá·kon, significando um monstro terrificante, um devorador semelhante a uma serpente. Esta palavra ocorre 13 vezes na Bíblia, mas apenas no altamente simbólico livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), e representa Satanás, o Diabo. Ele é o "grande dragão cor de fogo, com sete cabeças e dez chifres", que tem uma cauda que arrasta atrás de si "um terço das estrelas do céu", as quais primeiro foram induzidas a se materializar como humanos, antes do Dilúvio, e depois se tornaram demônios. (Re 12:3, 4; Ju 6) Junto com esses demônios, Satanás, o Dragão, é expulso dos céus para a vizinhança da Terra. "Assim foi lançado para baixo o grande dragão, a serpente original, o chamado Diabo e Satanás." (Re 12:7-9) Neste estado rebaixado, ele persegue o restante da "mulher" de Deus, aqueles que têm "a obra de dar testemunho". — Re 12:13-17.

O dragontino Satanás é também aquele que dá poder e grande autoridade à simbólica fera de sete cabeças e dez chifres, e, por sua vez, ele é adorado pelas pessoas de "toda a terra". (Re 13:2-4) Em visão, João também observa que as coaxantes "expressões inspiradas por demônios", semelhantes a rãs, que vão aos "reis de toda a terra habitada", saem da boca do Dragão, ou Satanás, bem como da boca da "fera" e do "falso profeta". O efeito disso é ajuntar esses governantes e seus apoiadores "para a guerra do grande dia de Deus, o Todo-Poderoso . . . ao lugar que em hebraico se chama Har-Magedon [Armagedom]". (Re 16:13-16) Logo depois desta maior de todas as guerras, o "anjo" que desce do céu se apoderará do "dragão, a serpente original, que é o Diabo e Satanás", e o acorrentará e lançará no abismo por mil anos. — Re 20:1-3; veja SATANÁS.

DRUSILA. Terceira e mais jovem filha de Herodes Agripa I, nascida por volta de 38 EC; irmã de Agripa II, Berenice e Mariamne III. O nome de sua mãe era Cipros. Antes de ela ter seis anos de idade, foi arranjado seu casamento com o príncipe Epifânio, de Comagena, mas esse nunca se concretizou, devido à recusa do prospectivo esposo de converter-se ao judaísmo. Um rei sírio, Aziz de Emesa, satisfez os termos da circuncisão e Drusila tornou-se sua esposa aos 14 anos. Exasperada pela crueldade dele, e irritada pela inveja de sua irmã menos atraente, Berenice, Drusila foi facilmente induzida a divorciar-se de Aziz, contrário à lei judaica, e desposar o governador Félix por volta de 54 EC. Ela talvez estivesse presente quando o prisioneiro Paulo "falava sobre a justiça e o autodomínio, e o julgamento por vir", os quais mostraram ser assuntos muito inquietantes para o governador Félix. Depois de dois anos, quando Félix entregou a governança a Festo, ele deixou Paulo em cadeias para "ganhar o favor dos judeus", o que alguns acham que fez para agradar sua jovem esposa, "que era judia". (At 24:24-27) O filho de Drusila com Félix era outro Agripa, que se afirma ter sido morto na grande erupção do monte Vesúvio, em 79 EC.

DUMÁ.

1. Sexto na lista dos 12 filhos de Ismael. Com o casamento de sua irmã Maalate, Dumá tornou-se cunhado de seu primo Esaú. Dumá tornou-se também maioral e chefe de clã, ou nação, em cumprimento da promessa de Jeová a Abraão. — Gên 17:20; 25:14-16; 28:9; 1Cr 1:30.

O ismaelita Dumá, evidentemente, deu seu nome à região na Arábia setentrional, a cerca de meio-caminho entre a Terra da Promessa e Babilônia meridional. O nome persiste no do oásis Dumat al-Ghandal (agora conhecido como Al-Jawf). O rei assírio Senaqueribe menciona uma Adummatu, "situada no deserto". Esar-Hadom diz que uma Adumu foi conquistada pelo seu pai Senaqueribe.

2. Cidade alistada entre as designadas à tribo de Judá depois da conquista daquela terra por Josué. (Jos 15:52) Ficava na região montanhosa e é identificada com Khirbet Domeh ed-Deir (Duma), a uns 15 km ao SO de Hébron.

3. Em Isaías 21:11, faz-se uma pronúncia contra "Dumá". Todavia, logo se menciona "Seir", e isto talvez indique que a mensagem é dirigida contra Edom. (Gên 32:3) A Septuaginta grega, em Isaías 21:11, diz "Idumeia" (terra dos edomitas) em vez de "Dumá".

DURA. Planície onde Nabucodonosor erigiu uma imagem de ouro. — Da 3:1.

É biblicamente descrita como situada "no distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia", de modo que, pelo visto, ficava perto desta cidade. Por este motivo, alguns peritos aceitam hoje Tulul Dura, a 10 km ao SE de Babilônia, como o lugar mais provável dos muitos propostos. Descobriram-se ali as ruínas duma elevação feita de tijolos cozidos ao sol, de 14 m de cada lado, ruínas que alguns conjecturam ser a base da imagem de Nabucodonosor. Todavia, o termo acadiano duru, que significa "circuito", "muro" ou "lugar murado", aparece frequentemente em nomes de lugares mesopotâmios, tornando presentemente impossível uma identificação positiva.

E

EBAL. Terceiro filho mencionado do xeque horeu Sobal, descendente de Seir. (Gên 36:20, 23; 1Cr 1:40) Os horeus moravam em Seir antes de serem desapossados e aniquilados pelos filhos de Esaú. — De 2:12.

EBAL, MONTE. Monte agora identificado como Jebel Eslamiyeh (Har ʽEval), situado no distrito de Samaria. O monte Ebal defronta com o monte Gerizim, estando estes montes separados por um lindo vale estreito, o vale de Siquém (vale de Nablus), no qual se aninha a cidade de Nablus, não muito longe da antiga Siquém. Apenas a parte inferior das suas encostas apresenta vegetação, tal como vinhedos e olivais, sendo a parte superior bastante despida de vegetação, e rochosa. Assim como outros montes em Samaria, o Ebal é de pedra calcária com crosta de giz. Está situado ao NE do monte Gerizim e eleva-se a mais de 900 m acima do nível do Mediterrâneo. Os montes Ebal e Gerizim ficam ao O do rio Jordão. — De 11:29, 30.

Olhando do cume do Ebal para o N, pode-se ver a maior parte da terra da Galileia e também o monte Hermom. As elevações na vizinhança de Jerusalém podem ser vistas olhando-se para o S, e a planície de Sarom e o Mediterrâneo, para o O. Olhando-se para o L, pode-se enxergar até Haurã, do outro lado do Jordão. Abrão (Abraão) certa vez acampou no vale entre estes dois montes, perto das árvores grandes de Moré. — Gên 12:6.

Moisés disse aos israelitas que, quando Jeová os levasse à terra de que iriam tomar posse, eles tinham "de dar a bênção sobre o monte Gerizim e a invocação do mal sobre o monte Ebal". (De 11:29, 30) Mandou também que se escolhessem grandes pedras não lavradas, que estas fossem caiadas e colocadas no monte Ebal. Devia-se erigir ali um altar em que se deviam apresentar sacrifícios a Jeová. Moisés disse também: "Terás de escrever sobre as pedras todas as palavras desta lei, tornando-as bem claras." — De 27:1-8.

Depois que Israel cruzou o Jordão, as tribos de Rubem, Gade, Aser, Zebulão, Dã e Naftali deviam ficar "de pé para a invocação do mal no monte Ebal", e as outras tribos deviam ficar "de pé para abençoar o povo no monte Gerizim". Nesta ocasião se recitariam as bênçãos a serem usufruídas pelos que obedecessem à lei de Deus, bem como as maldições, ou invocações do mal, a serem sofridas pelos violadores da lei. (De 27:12-14) Ao se proferirem as maldições pela desobediência, todo o povo devia dizer: "Amém!" isto é: "Assim seja!" para mostrar que concordava que os praticantes da iniquidade mereciam a condenação. — De 27:15-26.

Depois da vitória de Israel em Ai, Josué obedeceu às instruções de Moisés, construindo um altar para Jeová no monte Ebal. Sobre pedras (talvez, mas não necessariamente, as do próprio altar), ele escreveu "uma cópia da lei de Moisés, que havia escrito perante os filhos de Israel". Daí, diante da congregação de Israel (inclusive os residentes estrangeiros), reunida conforme Moisés havia ordenado, Josué "leu em voz alta todas as palavras da lei, a bênção e a invocação do mal, segundo tudo o que está escrito no livro da lei". Metade da congregação se pôs defronte do monte Ebal, e a outra metade defronte do monte Gerizim, a Arca do Pacto e os le-vitas ficando entre os dois grupos. (Jos 8:30-35) As encostas do monte Ebal em relação às encostas do monte Gerizim forneciam uma excelente acústica para esta ocasião. É notável, também, que essas coisas ocorressem quase que no coração da terra da promessa, e nas proximidades do local em que Jeová prometeu essa terra a Abrão (Abraão), antepassado de Israel. — Gên 12:6, 7.

Segundo a tradição judaica, os levitas de pé entre os montes Ebal e Gerizim encaravam o monte Gerizim quando proferiam uma bênção, à qual o povo reunido ali devia responder: "Amém!" Daí, diz-se que se viravam para encarar o monte Ebal e proferiam uma das maldições, à qual os reunidos naquele lado diziam: "Amém!" As Escrituras, porém, não especificam o procedimento exato seguido naquela ocasião notável.

Segundo o Pentateuco Samaritano, em Deuteronômio 27:4, as pedras deviam ser erguidas no monte "Gerizim". Todavia, deve-se ler ali "Ebal", segundo o texto massorético, a Vulgata latina, a Pesito siríaca e a Septuaginta grega. Josué 8:30-32 indica que foi no monte Ebal que Josué erigiu as pedras em que se escreveu "uma cópia da lei de Moisés". — Veja GERIZIM, MONTE.

ÉBANO [hebr.: hov·ním]. Crê-se que o termo se aplica à madeira do Diospyros ebenum ou a tipos similares do mesmo gênero de árvore. Esta árvore cresce muito, tendo folhas simples e flores em forma de sino. A madeira externa é macia e branca, mas a madeira do cerne, que atinge o diâmetro máximo de uns 50 cm, é muito dura, de grãos compactos, durável e de coloração preta ou castanho-escura. Aceita grande polimento. Essas qualidades a tornam muitíssimo desejável para mobília de qualidade, para objetos ornamentais e para trabalhos incrustados de marfim. Era também usada pelos pagãos para fazer ídolos para sua adoração.

O ébano só é mencionado uma vez na Bíblia, em Ezequiel 27:15, onde é apresentado como item comercial. Sugere-se que o ébano e o marfim mencionados ali eram trazidos da Índia ou de Sri Lanka, talvez através do mar Arábico e subindo o Mar Vermelho, seguindo daí por terra, ou, talvez, da Núbia, no NE da África. O ébano era altamente apreciado pelos antigos egípcios, e nos túmulos egípcios têm-se encontrado produtos feitos dele.

EBEDE [Servo; ou: forma abreviada de Obadias, que significa "Servo de Jeová"].

1. Pai de Gaal, aquele que liderou os proprietários de terras de Siquém numa rebelião malsucedida contra Abimeleque. — Jz 9:26, 29, 39-41.

2. Filho de Jonatã. Ebede, acompanhado por 50 varões da casa paterna de Adim, retornou com Esdras de Babilônia a Jerusalém. — Esd 8:6.

Vista de cima do monte Gerizim em direção ao monte Ebal.

EBEDE-MELEQUE [Servo do Rei]. Eunuco etíope da casa do Rei Zedequias, que, pela sua atuação, demonstrou estar de pleno acordo com a obra feita pelo profeta de Jeová, Jeremias. Quando os príncipes de Judá acusaram falsamente Jeremias de sedição, Zedequias entregou o profeta nas mãos deles. Estes príncipes levaram então Jeremias e o lançaram na lamacenta cisterna de Malquijá, no Pátio da Guarda, para que ali morresse sem comida. (Je 38:4-6) Corajosamente, apesar do perigo a que isso o expunha, devido ao prevalecente ódio amargo contra Jeremias e sua mensagem, Ebede-Meleque dirigiu-se publicamente ao rei, que estava sentado junto ao Portão de Benjamim, e ali apresentou um recurso em favor de Jeremias. Zedequias respondeu favoravelmente. Daí, Ebede-Meleque, às ordens do rei, levou 30 homens à cisterna e fez baixar cordas junto com trapos e panos velhos, para Jeremias colocá-los sob as axilas, a fim de puxá-lo para fora da cisterna. (Je 38:7-13) É provável que Zedequias tenha mandado Ebede-Meleque levar 30 homens, não que tantos homens fossem necessários para tirar Jeremias da cisterna, mas a fim de que a libertação fosse bem-sucedida, apesar de qualquer possível interferência por parte dos príncipes ou dos sacerdotes. Por causa desta ação justa para com o profeta de Jeová Deus, este assegurou a Ebede-Meleque, mediante Jeremias, que ele não pereceria durante o sítio feito pelos babilônios, mas que se lhe concederia escapar. — Je 39:15-18; veja EUNUCO.

EBENEZER [Pedra de Ajuda].

1. Lugar perto do qual Israel foi duas vezes derrotado pelos filisteus, não só resultando na morte de 34.000 israelitas, inclusive Hofni e Fineias, mas também na captura da Arca do Pacto pelo inimigo. A notícia deste último evento precipitou a morte de Eli, o sacerdote. (1Sa 4:1-11, 17, 18; 5:1) Os peritos provisoriamente situam Ebenezer em Majdel Yaba, 4 km ao SE de Afeque, na planície de Sarom (onde os filisteus se acamparam).

2. Nome dado a uma pedra erigida por Samuel mais de 20 anos depois dos eventos mencionados no capítulo anterior, provavelmente para comemorar a vitória de Israel sobre os filisteus, com a ajuda de Deus. (1Sa 7:2, 12) Embora se desconheça hoje sua localização exata, evidentemente encontrava-se a alguns quilômetros ao SE do N.º 1 acima, "entre Mispá e Jesana".

ÉBER [duma raiz que significa "passar para (atravessar)"; ou "outro lado [isto é, o lado oposto]"]. Além de ser o nome pessoal de cinco homens diferentes mencionados na Bíblia, "Éber" é usado em Números 24:24 como indicando, quer a raça hebreia, quer uma região. A Septuaginta grega, a Pesito siríaca e a Vulgata latina traduzem "Éber" aqui como "os hebreus". No entanto, "Éber", neste caso, poderá referir-se à terra ou ao povo do 'outro lado', do Eufrates (em adição à Assíria, mencionada no mesmo versículo). Em hebraico, a expressão para "além do Rio" (hebr.: 'é·ver han·na·hár) é às vezes usada para se referir à região ao O do Eufrates. (Ne 2:7, 9; 3:7) Em 1 Reis 4:24, a mesma expressão hebraica é traduzida por "deste lado do Rio" (NM) ou "a oeste do rio Eufrates". (BLH) A correspondente expressão aramaica é usada para designar, em geral, a região da Síria e da Palestina. — Esd 4:10, 11, 16, 17, 20; 5:3, 6; 6:6, 13.

1. Antepassado de Abraão; filho de Selá, e pai de Pelegue e Joctã, bem como de outros filhos. Nos dias do seu filho Pelegue, a quem Éber sobreviveu uns 191 anos, "foi dividida a terra". Isto talvez se refira a Jeová confundir a língua daqueles que construíam Babel e sua torre, sob a direção de Ninrode. — Gên 10:25; 11:14-19, 26.

Gênesis 10:21 menciona "Sem, antepassado de todos os filhos de Éber ["pai de todos os hebreus", AT, BLH, Mo], irmão de Jafé, o mais velho". Evidentemente, Éber é alistado aqui em íntima associação com Sem por causa da importância bíblica dada aos descendentes de Éber, especialmente de Abraão em diante. O texto, portanto, não restringe os descendentes de Sem apenas aos hebreus, conforme os versículos seguintes tornam claro. Os descendentes de Éber por meio de Joctã parecem ter-se fixado na Arábia, ao passo que aqueles por meio de Pelegue são associados com a Mesopotâmia.

2. Gadita que morava em Basã, descendente de Abiail. — 1Cr 5:11, 13, 14.

3. Benjamita identificado como filho de Elpaal. — 1Cr 8:12.

4. Cabeça benjamita alistado entre os filhos de Sasaque. — 1Cr 8:22-25, 28.

5. Sacerdote levita; cabeça da casa paterna de Amoque. Evidentemente, Éber era contemporâneo do sumo sacerdote Joiaquim, do governador Neemias e de Esdras, o sacerdote e escriba. — Ne 12:12, 20, 26.

EBES. Cidade no território de Issacar. (Jos 19:17, 20) Sua localização é desconhecida.

EBIASAFE. Veja ABIASAFE.

EBROM. Nome duma cidade fronteiriça aquinhoada a Aser. (Jos 19:24, 28) Visto que muitos manuscritos hebraicos rezam aqui "Abdom", a maioria dos peritos, em geral, considera "Ebrom" uma grafia errada desse nome. — Veja ABDOM N.º 5.

ECBÁTANA. Capital da antiga Média, a partir de c. 700 AEC. O rei persa Ciro II tomou-a do rei medo Astíages, após o que os medos e os persas juntaram suas forças sob Ciro. Ecbátana é biblicamente identificada como um lugar do distrito jurisdicional da Média, nos dias do rei persa Dario I (Histaspes). — Esd 6:1, 2.

"Ecbátana" é a tradução em português do nome desta cidade, em Esdras 6:2. Esta forma do nome corresponde à leitura da Vulgata latina e também é encontrada no texto grego dos escritos apócrifos que vieram a ser incluídos na Septuaginta. O texto massorético e a Pesito siríaca, porém, dão o nome como "Acmeta". Os primitivos escritores gregos parecem ter aplicado o nome Ecbátana a vários lugares. No entanto, há consenso geral entre os peritos hodiernos de que a Ecbátana capturada por Ciro (e, assim, a mencionada em Esd 6:2) é a moderna cidade de Hamadã, importante centro comercial do Irã, situada ao sopé do monte Alvand, aproximadamente a 290 km ao OSO de Teerã. Assim como a antiga Ecbátana era uma cidade importante situada na principal via que conduzia da Mesopotâmia a pontos mais para o L, assim também a moderna Hamadã é cruzada por várias estradas, tais como a que vai de Bagdá a Teerã.

Quando certas autoridades designadas pelos persas questionaram a legalidade da obra de reconstrução do templo pelos judeus, nos dias de Zorobabel, esses opositores enviaram uma carta ao Rei Dario I, da Pérsia, solicitando a confirmação do decreto de Ciro que autorizava esta reconstrução. (Esd 5:1-17) Dario mandou fazer uma investigação, e o decreto de Ciro foi encontrado em Ecbátana, confirmando assim a legalidade da obra de reconstrução do templo. De fato, Dario emitiu uma ordem com o fim de que a obra dos judeus prosseguisse sem impedimento, e os opositores deles receberam até mesmo a ordem de prover-lhes os materiais necessários, o que "fizeram prontamente". O templo foi finalmente completado "ao terceiro dia do mês lunar de adar, isto é, no sexto ano do reinado de Dario, o rei", ou já perto da primavera setentrional de 515 AEC. — Esd 6:6-15.

ECLESIASTES. O nome hebraico, Qo·hé·leth (que significa "Congregante; Reunidor; Ajuntador; Convocador"), descreve apropriadamente o papel do rei no governo teocrático usufruído por Israel. (Ec 1:1, 12) Era da responsabilidade do governante manter o dedicado povo de Deus unido em fidelidade a seu verdadeiro Rei e Deus. (1Rs 8:1-5, 41-43, 66) Por este motivo, ser o rei bom ou mau para a nação era determinado por ele conduzir, ou não, a nação na adoração de Jeová. (2Rs 16:1-4; 18:1-6) O congregante, que era Salomão, já fizera muito para congregar Israel e seus companheiros, os residentes temporários, ao templo. Neste livro, ele procurou congregar o povo de Deus por afastá-lo das obras vãs e infrutíferas deste mundo e levá-lo a obras dignas do Deus a quem a nação estava dedicada. O nome usado em nossas Bíblias em português é tirado da tradução de Qo·hé·leth, na Septuaginta grega, a saber, Ek·kle·si·a·stés (Eclesiastes), significando "membro duma eclésia (congregação, assembleia)".

Escritor. Só houve um "filho de Davi", a saber, Salomão, que foi "rei sobre Israel em Jerusalém" (Ec 1:1, 12), porque os reis depois de Salomão não reinaram sobre todo o Israel. Salomão era o rei famoso por sua eminente sabedoria. (Ec 1:16; 1Rs 4:29-34) Era construtor. (Ec 2:4-6; 1Rs 6:1; 7:1-8) Era compositor de provérbios. (Ec 12:9; 1Rs 4:32) Salomão era famoso por suas riquezas. (Ec 2:4-9; 1Rs 9:17-19; 10:4-10, 14-29) Visto que o livro menciona o programa de construção de Salomão, deve ter sido escrito depois daquele tempo, mas antes do tempo em que ele "começou a fazer o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová". (1Rs 11:6) Por conseguinte, o livro foi escrito antes de 1000 AEC, em Jerusalém. Que Salomão seria um dos homens mais qualificados para escrever este livro é apoiado pelo fato de que não só era o mais rico, mas também era provavelmente um dos reis mais bem informados de seus dias; seus marujos e seus comerciantes, bem como os dignitários visitantes, trariam notícias e conhecimentos sobre povos de outras terras. — 1Rs 9:26-28; 10:23-25, 28, 29.

Autenticidade. Qo·hé·leth, ou Eclesiastes, é aceito como canônico tanto pela igreja judaica como pelas cristãs. Está de acordo com outros trechos da Bíblia que tratam dos mesmos assuntos. Por exemplo, concorda com Gênesis sobre o homem ter sido feito de um corpo composto do pó da terra e que tem da parte de Deus o espírito ou força de vida, e o fôlego que o sustenta. (Ec 3:20, 21; 12:7; Gên 2:7; 7:22; Is 42:5) Confirma o ensino bíblico de que o homem foi criado reto, mas preferiu deliberadamente desobedecer a Deus. (Ec 7:29; Gên 1:31; 3:17; De 32:4, 5) Reconhece a Deus como o Criador. (Ec 12:1; Gên 1:1) Concorda com o restante da Bíblia quanto à condição dos mortos. (Ec 9:5, 10; Gên 3:19; Sal 6:5; 115:17; Jo 11:11-14; Ro 6:23) Advoga fortemente a adoração e o temor de Deus. Usa a expressão ha·'Elo·hím, "o verdadeiro Deus", 32 vezes. O equivalente do nome Jeová é encontrado na Pesito siríaca e no Targum judaico do livro, em Eclesiastes 2:24. Embora alguns afirmem que o livro se contradiz, isto se dá somente porque não veem que o livro muitas vezes expressa o conceito comum, em contraste com o conceito que reflete a sabedoria divina. (Veja Ec 1:18; 7:11, 12.) Assim, deve-se lê-lo visando entender o sentido e deve-se ter presente o tema do livro.

DESTAQUES DE ECLESIASTES

Descrição vívida de obras vãs e de obras proveitosas.

Escrito por Salomão na última parte do seu reinado, depois de se ter empenhado nas muitas atividades que ele descreve.

A vida devotada a atividades vãs é fútil.

Para o homem físico, tudo é vaidade; uma geração é substituída por outra, e mesmo os ciclos naturais são repetitórios e cansativos. (1:1-11)

Maior sabedoria humana pode resultar em maiores dores; aquilo que é torto neste sistema não pode ser endireitado. (1:12-18)

Devotar-se à busca de prazeres através do materialismo é como esforçar-se para alcançar o vento. (2:1-11, 26)

A sabedoria é melhor do que a estultícia, mas tanto os sábios como os estúpidos morrem e são esquecidos. (2:12-16)

Trabalhar arduamente a vida toda só para deixar tudo para um homem que talvez não o aprecie — é uma calamidade. (2:17-23)

Acontecimentos na vida terrestre frequentemente ocorrem em ciclos, muitos dos quais além do controle humano. (3:1-9)

No atual sistema, todos (tanto o homem como o animal) por fim morrem. (3:18-22)

Ocorrem muitos atos de opressão, sem qualquer esperança do ponto de vista humano. (4:1-3)

Trabalho árduo e proficiência por motivo de rivalidade ou simplesmente para acumular riquezas é vaidade, e o preguiçoso é estúpido. (4:4-8)

A vida do governante também pode ser vaidade. (4:13-16)

Acumular riquezas não traz contentamento, mas pode privar seu dono do sono; e ao morrer, terá de deixar tudo para trás. (5:9-17)

Embora alguém tenha muitos bens, as circunstâncias — talvez doença ou um anseio não satisfeito — podem impedi-lo de achar contentamento. (6:1-12)

No atual sistema, o mesmo evento consequente aguarda tanto os justos como os iníquos — todos morrem; por isso, alguns se entregam à maldade. (9:2, 3)

A sabedoria nem sempre é prezada quando procede dum homem necessitado. (9:13-18)

Entregar-se à tolice dá má reputação; quando tais incompetentes estão em posições de autoridade, isso é perigoso para eles e duro para os outros. (10:1-19)

A juventude e o primor da mocidade são vaidade; a duração do vigor juvenil é tão incerta. (11:10)

Quando a vida da pessoa não foi guiada pela constante lembrança do Criador, tudo é vaidade! (12:8)

As coisas que valem a pena e que dão sentido à vida.

Usufrua os frutos do seu trabalho, reconhecendo que esses são dádiva de Deus. (2:24, 25; 5:18-20)

As obras de Deus são todas bonitas; ele pôs diante do homem a perspectiva de vida por tempo indefinido. (3:10-13)

O padrão geral de vida humana, existente segundo a permissão ou o propósito de Deus, não pode ser mudado pelo homem; portanto, espere que Deus atue como Juiz no seu tempo designado. (3:14-17; 5:8)

Quem trabalha com um associado está em situação melhor do que um sozinho. (4:9-12)

O devido temor de Deus deve induzir-nos a escutar atentamente o que ele requer de nós e cumprir todo voto que façamos a ele. (5:1-7)

Reconheça a importância de um bom nome e quão curta é a nossa vida atual para obtê-lo, o benefício da paciência, o valor superior da sabedoria e a necessidade de se sujeitar humildemente àquilo que Deus permite. (7:1-15)

Evite extremos, mas deixe-se guiar pelo temor de Deus; não se preocupe demais com o que outros dizem; evite o laço da prostituta. (7:16-29)

Acate a lei; embora homens talvez dominem outros para o prejuízo destes, e a justiça humana seja remissa, não deixe que isso estrague seu usufruto da vida; lembre-se de que irá bem àqueles que temem o verdadeiro Deus; não espere compreender todos os motivos daquilo que Deus faz e permite ocorrer. (8:1-17; 10:20)

Os justos e os sábios estão na mão do verdadeiro Deus — não perderão a sua recompensa; mas na morte a pessoa não sabe nada e não pode fazer nada, portanto, use a sua vida agora da maneira aprovada por Deus; usufrua-a de modo sadio enquanto a possui. (9:1, 4-12)

Aproveite as devidas oportunidades para ser generoso, para realizar o bem; não deixe que as incertezas da vida inibam sua atividade. (11:1-8)

Jovem, usufrua a sua mocidade, mas não se esqueça que tem de prestar contas a Deus pelas suas ações; lembre-se do seu Grandioso Criador enquanto jovem, antes de virem a fraqueza e a decrepitude da velhice, antes que a vida acabe. (11:9; 12:1-7)

Os escritos mais proveitosos são aqueles que refletem a sabedoria do "um só pastor", Jeová Deus. (12:9-12)

Tema o verdadeiro Deus e guarde os seus mandamentos; ele vê tudo o que fazemos, e levará nosso trabalho a julgamento. (12:13, 14)

ECROM. Destacada cidade dos filisteus, que parece ter sido a sede mais setentrional de um dos seus cinco senhores do eixo. (Jos 13:3) Sua localização exata é incerta, mas, em geral, é identificada com Khirbet el-Muqanna' (Tel Miqne), a uns 18 km ao L de Asdode. Recentes escavações feitas ali desenterraram a maior cidade do seu período e constituem motivo para a atual preferência dela como o lugar de Ecrom.

A história de Ecrom é de dominação constantemente alterada. A conquista de Josué não incluiu

Ecrom. Foi só posteriormente que os de Judá a capturaram. (Jos 13:2, 3; Jz 1:18) Na divisão inicial da Terra da Promessa, Ecrom ficava na fronteira entre Judá e Dã, mas dentro da tribo de Judá. (Jos 15:1, 11, 45, 46; 19:40-43) Já na época em que os filisteus capturaram a Arca do Pacto, Ecrom havia retornado a eles. A presença da Arca provocou "uma confusão mortífera" nesta cidade, e foi de Ecrom que a Arca foi finalmente devolvida aos judeus. (1Sa 5:10-12; 6:16, 17) Depois de Ecrom passar outro período sob controle israelita, os filisteus aparentemente estavam de novo de posse dela, na época em que Davi matou Golias. (1Sa 7:14; 17:52) Foi no início do décimo século AEC que o Faraó Sisaque, do Egito, afirmou ter conquistado Ecrom. Cerca de dois séculos mais tarde, segundo os anais de Senaqueribe, Padi, rei de Ecrom, era leal aos assírios.

ÉDEN [Prazer; Deleite].

1. Região em que o Criador plantou um parque semelhante a um jardim como lar original do primeiro casal humano. A declaração de que o jardim achava-se no "Éden, do lado do oriente", indica aparentemente que o jardim ocupava apenas uma parte da região chamada Éden. (Gên 2:8) No entanto, depois disso, o jardim é chamado de "jardim do Éden" (Gên 2:15), e, em textos posteriores, é mencionado como "Éden, jardim de Deus" (Ez 28:13), e como "jardim de Jeová". — Is 51:3.

A Septuaginta traduz a palavra hebraica para "jardim" (gan) pela palavra grega pa·rá·dei·sos. A isto devemos nossa associação da palavra portuguesa "paraíso" com o jardim do Éden.

Gênesis 2:15 declara que "Deus passou a tomar o homem e a estabelecê-lo no jardim do Éden". Embora isso talvez pareça indicar que a criação do homem se deu fora do jardim, pode referir-se simplesmente a que Deus 'tomou' o homem no sentido de formá-lo e criá-lo dos elementos terrestres, e daí designá-lo para morar inicialmente no jardim no qual obteve vida. O cultivo e o cuidado do jardim era a tarefa designada ao homem. As árvores e as plantas do Éden incluíam todas as que supriam beleza cênica, bem como as que o proviam de alimento em ampla variedade. (Gên 2:9, 15) Bastaria este fato para indicar que o jardim abrangia uma área de considerável tamanho.

Havia grande variedade de vida animal no jardim. Deus trouxe perante Adão "todos os animais domésticos e . . . criaturas voadoras dos céus, e . . . todo animal selvático do campo", aos quais Adão devia dar nomes, como uma de suas primeiras tarefas. (Gên 2:19, 20) O solo do Éden era regado pelas águas do rio que 'saía do Éden'. (Gên 2:10) Em vista da nudez do homem, pode-se presumir que o clima era muito ameno e agradável. — Gên 2:25.

Qual era o fruto proibido no Éden?

Todas as árvores frutíferas do Éden estavam ali para que o homem comesse delas "à vontade". (Gên 2:16) Mas certa árvore, a do "conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau", foi interditada para o casal humano. Eva citou a proibição de Jeová, dada ao marido dela, como incluindo até mesmo 'tocar' nessa árvore, o que acarretaria a pena de morte, caso houvesse desrespeito e violação da lei divina. (Gên 2:17; 3:3) Ensinos tradicionais têm tentado explicar o fruto proibido de diversas maneiras: como símbolo de relações sexuais, representadas por uma "maçã"; como significando o mero reconhecimento do certo e do errado; e como conhecimento obtido ao se alcançar a madureza e também por experiência, conhecimento que pode ter bom ou mau uso. Todavia, em vista da ordem do Criador, de 'serem fecundos e tornarem-se muitos, e de encherem a terra' (Gên 1:28), as relações sexuais têm de ser rejeitadas como representadas pelo fruto da árvore, porque de que outra maneira poderia haver procriação e multiplicação? Certamente não podia significar a mera faculdade de reconhecer o certo e o errado, porque a obediência à ordem de Deus exigia do homem, sem pecado, que exercesse tal discriminação moral. Tampouco pode referir-se ao conhecimento obtido ao atingir a madureza, porque não seria pecado por parte do homem atingir este estágio, nem seria lógico que seu Criador o obrigasse a continuar imaturo.

Quanto ao gênero de árvore, o registro bíblico nada revela. Mas, torna-se evidente que a árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau simbolizava o direito ou prerrogativa divina, que o Criador do homem retém, de especificar para as suas criaturas o que é "bom" e o que é "mau", exigindo depois corretamente a prática daquilo que é declarado ser bom e a abstenção daquilo que é condenado como mau, a fim de continuarem aprovadas por Deus, o Governante Soberano. (Veja ÁRVORES.) Tanto a proibição como a subsequente sentença proferida sobre o casal desobediente salientam o fato de que foi o ato de desobediência em comer do fruto proibido que constituiu o pecado original. — Gên 3:3.

Embora alguns críticos modernos talvez empaquem na própria simplicidade do relato edênico, devia ser óbvio que as circunstâncias existentes tornavam bem próprio um teste simples. A vida do homem e da mulher recém-criados era simples, não complicada nem estorvada por todos os complexos problemas, apuros e perplexidades que a desobediência a Deus, desde então, tem causado à raça humana. Sem embargo, apesar de toda a sua simplicidade, o teste expressava, de modo sucinto e admirável, a verdade universal da soberania de Deus, bem como a dependência do homem de Deus e seu dever para com Deus. E deve-se dizer que, embora simples, o relato dos eventos no Éden apresenta os assuntos num nível infinitamente superior ao daquelas teorias que não colocariam a origem do homem num jardim, mas sim numa caverna, apresentando-o não só como crassamente ignorante, mas também como desprovido de senso moral. A simplicidade do teste no Éden ilustra o princípio declarado milênios mais tarde pelo Filho de Deus, de que "quem é fiel no mínimo, é também fiel no muito, e quem é injusto no mínimo, é também injusto no muito". — Lu 16:10.

É claro que não se tencionava que, por ter o Éden esta árvore proscrita em seu interior, isto servisse como espinho na carne para o casal humano, nem se destinava a suscitar uma questão ou a servir como assunto de debate. Se Adão e Eva tivessem acatado a vontade de Deus no assunto e respeitado as instruções dele, seu lar-jardim teria continuado imaculado como local de prazer e de deleite. O registro mostra que a questão e o debate sobre a árvore, junto com a tentação de violar a ordem de Deus, foram impostos à humanidade pelo Adversário de Deus. (Gên 3:1-6; compare isso com Re 12:9.) Exercerem Adão e Eva sua vontade como pessoas de livre-arbítrio, rebelando-se contra a soberania legítima de Deus, levou a perderem o Paraíso e as condições abençoadas de seus confins. De consequências ainda mais graves foi perderem a oportunidade de comer de outra das árvores do Éden, esta representando o direito à vida eterna. Neste respeito, o relato diz que Jeová "expulsou assim o homem, e colocou ao oriente do jardim do Éden os querubins e a lâmina chamejante duma espada que se revolvia continuamente para guardar o caminho para a árvore da vida". — Gên 3:22-24.

Localização do Éden. A localização original do jardim do Éden é conjectural. O principal meio de se identificar sua localização geográfica é a descrição bíblica do rio 'que saía do Éden', e que depois se dividia em quatro "cabeceiras", resultando nos rios chamados Eufrates, Hídequel, Píson e Giom. (Gên 2:10-14) O Eufrates (hebr.: Peráth) é bem conhecido, e "Hídequel" é o nome usado para o Tigre em inscrições antigas. (Veja também Da 10:4.) Os outros dois rios, o Píson e o Giom, porém, continuam sem ser identificados. — Veja CUS N.º 2; HAVILÁ N.º 1.

Alguns, tais como Calvino e Delitzsch, têm argumentado em favor da localização do Éden em alguma parte perto da cabeceira do golfo Pérsico, na Mesopotâmia inferior, aproximadamente no lugar em que o Tigre e o Eufrates se aproximam um do outro. Eles têm associado o Píson e o Giom com canais entre estes rios. Todavia, isso tornaria esses rios tributários, em vez de braços que se ramificavam duma fonte original. O texto hebraico, em vez disso, aponta para um lugar na região montanhosa ao N das planícies mesopotâmicas, para uma área em que o Eufrates e o Tigre têm suas nascentes atuais. Neste respeito, The Anchor Bible (A Bíblia Âncora; 1964), nas suas notas sobre Gênesis 2:10, declara: "No hebr[aico], a desembocadura do rio é chamada de 'fim' (Jos xv 5, xviii 19); portanto, o plural de ro's, 'cabeceira', tem de referir-se aqui ao curso superior. . . . Este último uso é bem atestado referente ao cognato ac[adiano] resu." O fato de que os rios Eufrates e Tigre não procedem agora duma única nascente, bem como a impossibilidade de se determinar definitivamente a identificação dos rios Píson e Giom, é possivelmente explicado pelos efeitos do Dilúvio dos dias de Noé, que, sem dúvida, alterou em muito os aspectos topográficos da terra, enchendo os leitos de alguns rios e criando outros.

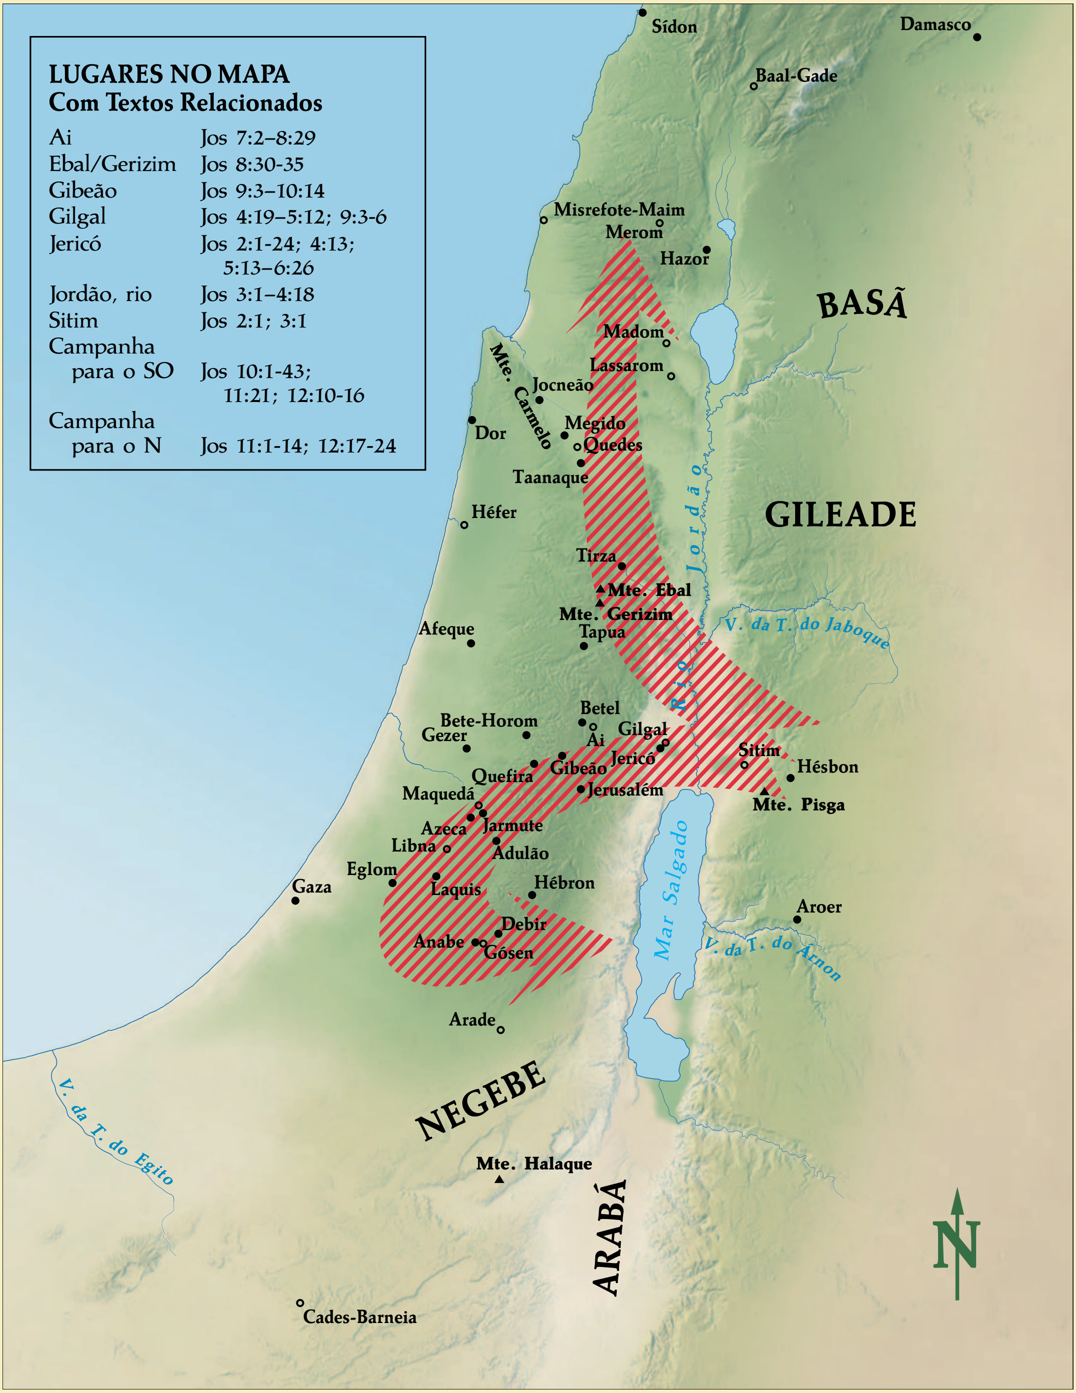
A localização tradicional do jardim do Éden há muito é sugerida como tendo sido na região montanhosa a uns 225 km ao SO do monte Ararate e a poucos quilômetros ao S do lago Van, na parte oriental da moderna Turquia. Que o Éden talvez tivesse estado cercado por alguma barreira natural, tal como montanhas, talvez seja sugerido pelo fato de que se diz que querubins foram postos apenas ao L do jardim, ponto do qual Adão e Eva saíram dele. — Gên 3:24.

Depois de Adão ter sido banido do jardim paradísico, não havendo ninguém para 'o cultivar e tomar conta dele', seria de presumir que simplesmente cresceu em exuberância natural, tendo apenas os animais para povoar seus confins, até ser obliterado pelas águas avolumantes do Dilúvio, desconhecendo o homem a sua localização exata, exceto pelo registro divino sobre a sua existência. — Gên 2:15.

2. Lugar mencionado junto com Harã e Cané como um dos principais centros de intercâmbio comercial com Tiro, especializado em excelentes vestimentas, tapetes e cordas. (Ez 27:23, 24) Sugere-se que se trata duma forma abreviada do nome Bete-Éden, mencionado em Amós 1:5. "Os filhos de Éden" estão incluídos entre outros habitantes de lugares assolados pelas forças assírias (2Rs 19:12; Is 37:12), e alguns acham que este Éden (Bete-Éden) seja o pequeno distrito de Bit-adini, junto ao curso médio do rio Eufrates. — Veja BETE-ÉDEN.

3. Um dos levitas que acataram a convocação para uma reforma, feita pelo Rei Ezequias; designado depois para trabalhar sob Core, "o porteiro ao leste", na distribuição das santas contribuições entre as turmas sacerdotais. — 2Cr 29:12; 31:14, 15.

A Conquista Israelita da Terra da Promessa



Nações Que Ocupavam a Terra Que Deus Deu a Israel

QUANDO Jeová deu a Israel a terra que prometera a Abraão, ela estava ocupada por nações moralmente degradadas. A Bíblia relata candidamente que Deus decretou a destruição daquelas nações iníquas, e que ele designou os israelitas para serem os executores. (De 7:2) Muitos têm criticado esta ação. Outros reconhecem com humildade que dificilmente cabe a humanos imperfeitos pretender julgar a Deus. (Veja Ez 18:29.) Eles têm o desejo de entender o modo de proceder de Deus. O que aprendem?

Este registro mostra claramente que todas as pessoas são responsáveis perante o Criador da humanidade, Jeová Deus, quer professem crer nele, quer não. Mostra que Deus é paciente, mas não fecha os olhos à transgressão. (Gên 15:16) Torna claro que Jeová deixa a responsabilidade por filhos pequenos recair sobre os ombros dos seus pais; ele não isenta dela os pais, no sentido de permitir que estes achem que suas ações afetam apenas a eles mesmos. (De 30:19; Jos 10:40) Mostra também que todos os que se desviam do seu mau caminho e adoram a Jeová podem ser poupados à destruição. — Jos 6:25; 9:3–10:11.

A Bíblia identifica claramente as práticas iníquas a que os habitantes de Canaã se entregavam. O Manual Bíblico (de Henry H. Halley, 1987, p. 157) conclui: "Alguns arqueólogos que têm escavado as ruínas das cidades dos cananeus admiram-se de Deus não os haver destruído há mais tempo." A lição é evidente: Jeová não tolera para sempre a iniquidade.

Por Que Foram Destruídos

Degradação moral. (Le 18:3-25)

Práticas espíritas. (De 18:9-12)

Idolatria degradante. (Êx 23:23, 24; 34:11-16; De 7:1-5; 1Rs 21:26)

Estelas de Tanit e de Baal, com uma estátua de Tanit (a equivalente de Astorete); desenterradas num cemitério perto de Cartago (Tunísia, África do Norte).

Cemitério em que se encontraram os ossos de milhares de crianças sacrificadas à deusa Tanit. Foram os navegadores fenícios (cananeus) que trouxeram para cá esses ritos religiosos assassinos. O local trágico permanece como monumento da depravação dos cananeus.

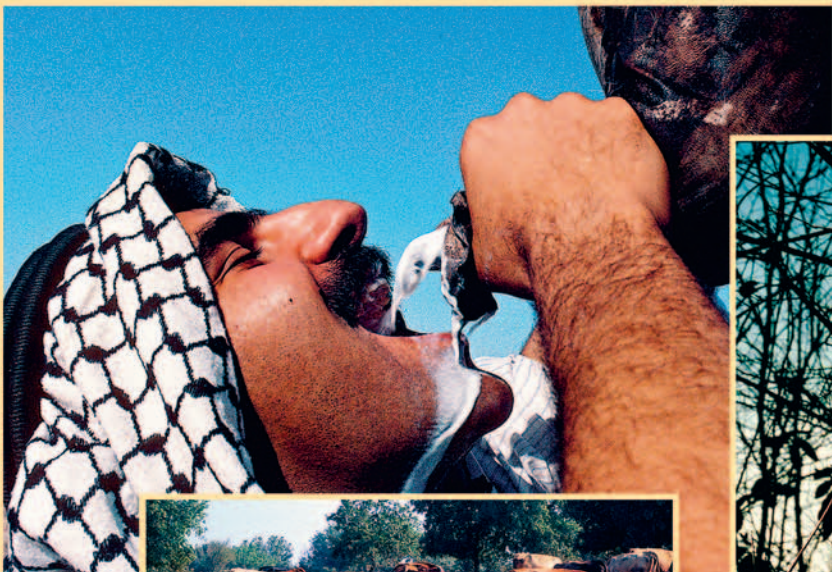
A Terra Que Deus Deu a Israel

A TERRA que Deus deu a Israel era deveras uma boa terra. Quando Moisés enviou espias na frente da nação para explorar a Terra da Promessa e para obter amostras dos seus produtos, eles retornaram com figos, romãs e um cacho de uvas tão grande, que dois homens o carregaram entre si numa barra! Embora recuassem com medo, por falta de fé, mesmo assim relataram: A terra "deveras mana leite e mel". — Núm 13:23, 27.

Pouco antes de finalmente entrarem nesta terra, o porta-voz de Jeová assegurou ao povo: "Jeová, teu Deus, te introduz numa terra boa, uma terra de vales de torrentes de água, de fontes e de águas de profundeza surgindo no vale plano e na região montanhosa, uma terra de trigo e de cevada, e de videiras, e de figos, e de romãs, uma terra de azeitonas e de mel . . . em que não carecerás de nada, uma terra cujas pedras são ferro e de cujas montanhas extrairás o cobre." (De 8:7-9) Até hoje, esta terra continua a produzir em abundância.

A beleza e o esplendor daquela antiga terra da promessa é de vivo interesse para nós hoje. Por quê? Porque profecias messiânicas usam a abundância com que Jeová abençoou o antigo Israel para ilustrar o que Ele fará para toda a humanidade sob o domínio de Jesus Cristo, o "Príncipe da Paz". — Is 9:6; Sal 67:4-7; 72:16.

Era uma terra que manava leite . . .



. . . e um lugar que produzia abundantemente mel silvestre.

Era uma terra bem regada.

Viram que era uma terra de trigo . . .

. . . e dos seus campos
ceifaram cevada.

Seus vinhedos produziam uma abundância de uvas — e destas obtinham vinho para alegrar o coração.

As romãs eram a base duma bebida refrescante.

A figueira, prezada pelo seu delicioso fruto, tornou-se símbolo de condições pacíficas, prósperas.

As oliveiras produziam azeite — dum só pé o suficiente para uma família inteira.

Juízes Livram Israel da Opressão

O LIVRO de Juízes é um registro emocionante das façanhas de homens de fé, suscitados por Jeová para livrar Israel da opressão. Os opressores procediam de diversas direções; as regiões em que os juízes agiram não eram sempre as mesmas. Mas, não importava quão poderoso o inimigo era, quando Israel se arrependia humildemente das suas más práticas e realmente confiava em Jeová, o juiz o livrava. Este livro bíblico oferece um vislumbre do livramento maior que Deus proverá aos seus servos por meio do seu Filho.

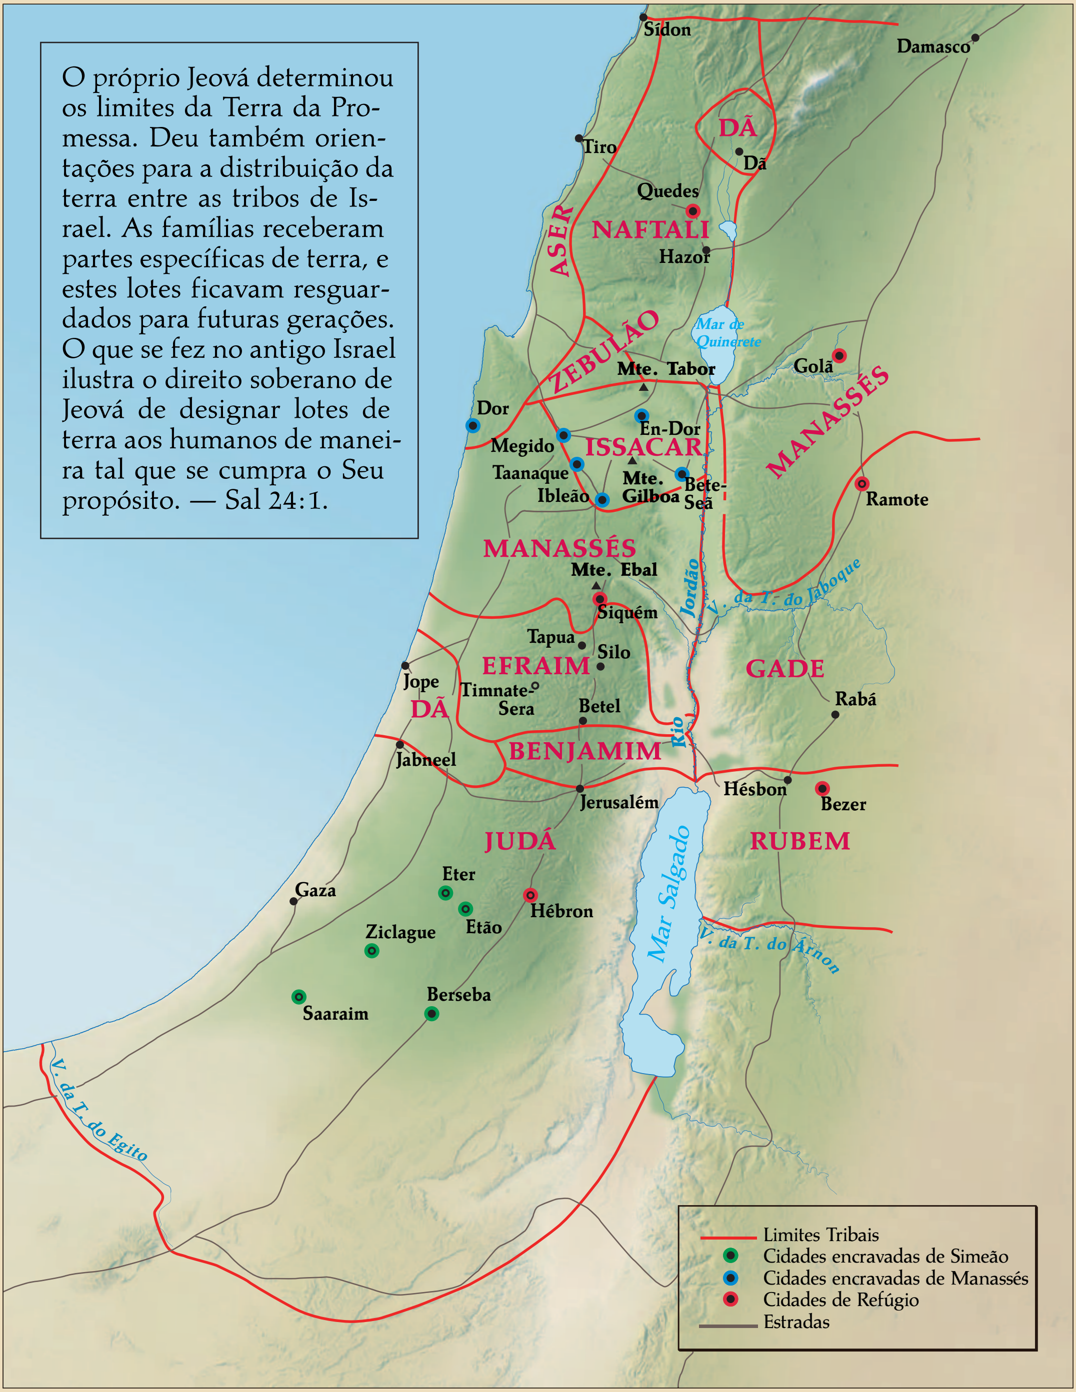
Territórios Tribais em Israel

O próprio Jeová determinou os limites da Terra da Promessa. Deu também orientações para a distribuição da terra entre as tribos de Israel. As famílias receberam partes específicas de terra, e estes lotes ficavam resguardados para futuras gerações. O que se fez no antigo Israel ilustra o direito soberano de Jeová de designar lotes de terra aos humanos de maneira tal que se cumpra o Seu propósito. — Sal 24:1.



DAVI, filho de Jessé, foi notável músico, poeta, guerreiro e estadista. Mas o destaque de Davi, nas Escrituras, deve-se primariamente à sua relação com Deus. Jeová chamou-o de "homem agradável ao meu coração". — At 13:22; 1Sa 13:14.

Deus escolheu Davi como futuro rei de Israel quando ele era apenas um jovem pastor. Pouco depois, com plena confiança em Jeová, Davi corajosamente enfrentou e matou o gigante filisteu Golias, conforme ilustrado à direita. Todavia, o Rei Saul ficou com ciúme da crescente popularidade de Davi, e Davi se viu obrigado a passar a viver como fugitivo. Durante este período provador, Davi compôs muitos fervorosos salmos, que ainda hoje consolam os leitores da Bíblia.

Quando Davi finalmente foi empossado como rei, ele participou em eventos momentosos na história da nação: As fronteiras de Israel foram estendidas aos limites prometidos. A Arca do Pacto foi levada a Jerusalém. Elaboraram-se planos para um glorioso templo de Jeová. Altamente significativa, também era a promessa pactuada de Deus a Davi, de suscitar da sua linhagem real um governante permanente. (2Sa 7:12-16) Este pacto indica o caminho para o governo global de Jesus Cristo. — Ro 1:3; Lu 1:32.

Ermo de Judá. Escondendo-se em cavernas e fendas desta região, Davi eludia o Rei Saul.

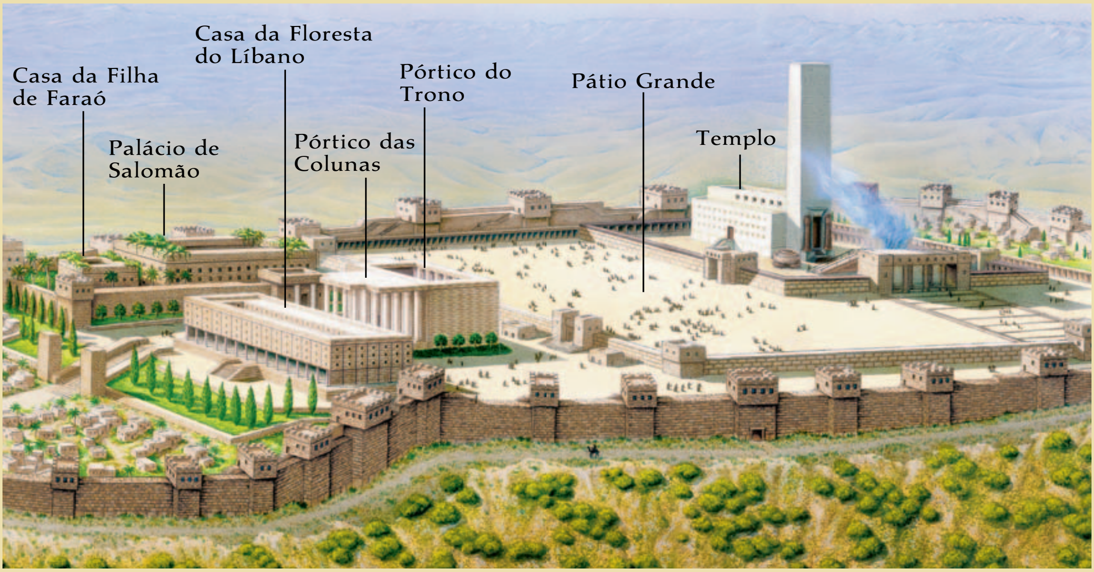
Uma rua na parte antiga de Hébron, cidade em que Davi foi ungido rei pelos homens de Judá.

Aspecto atual da Cidade de Davi (ao sul da elevação do Templo); dali Davi reinou por 33 anos.

O Reinado de Salomão

O REINADO do Rei Salomão oferece-nos um vislumbre profético do futuro. Durante o seu reinado, Israel atingiu o apogeu de riqueza e de glória. Salomão tanto era um rei sábio, como era mestre em organização. Construiu um magnífico templo para Jeová, diversos prédios governamentais e um palácio real, conforme abaixo apresentado. Estabeleceu distritos administrativos, os quais, em rodízio, proviam a casa real de uma variedade de alimentos, independente da estação do ano.

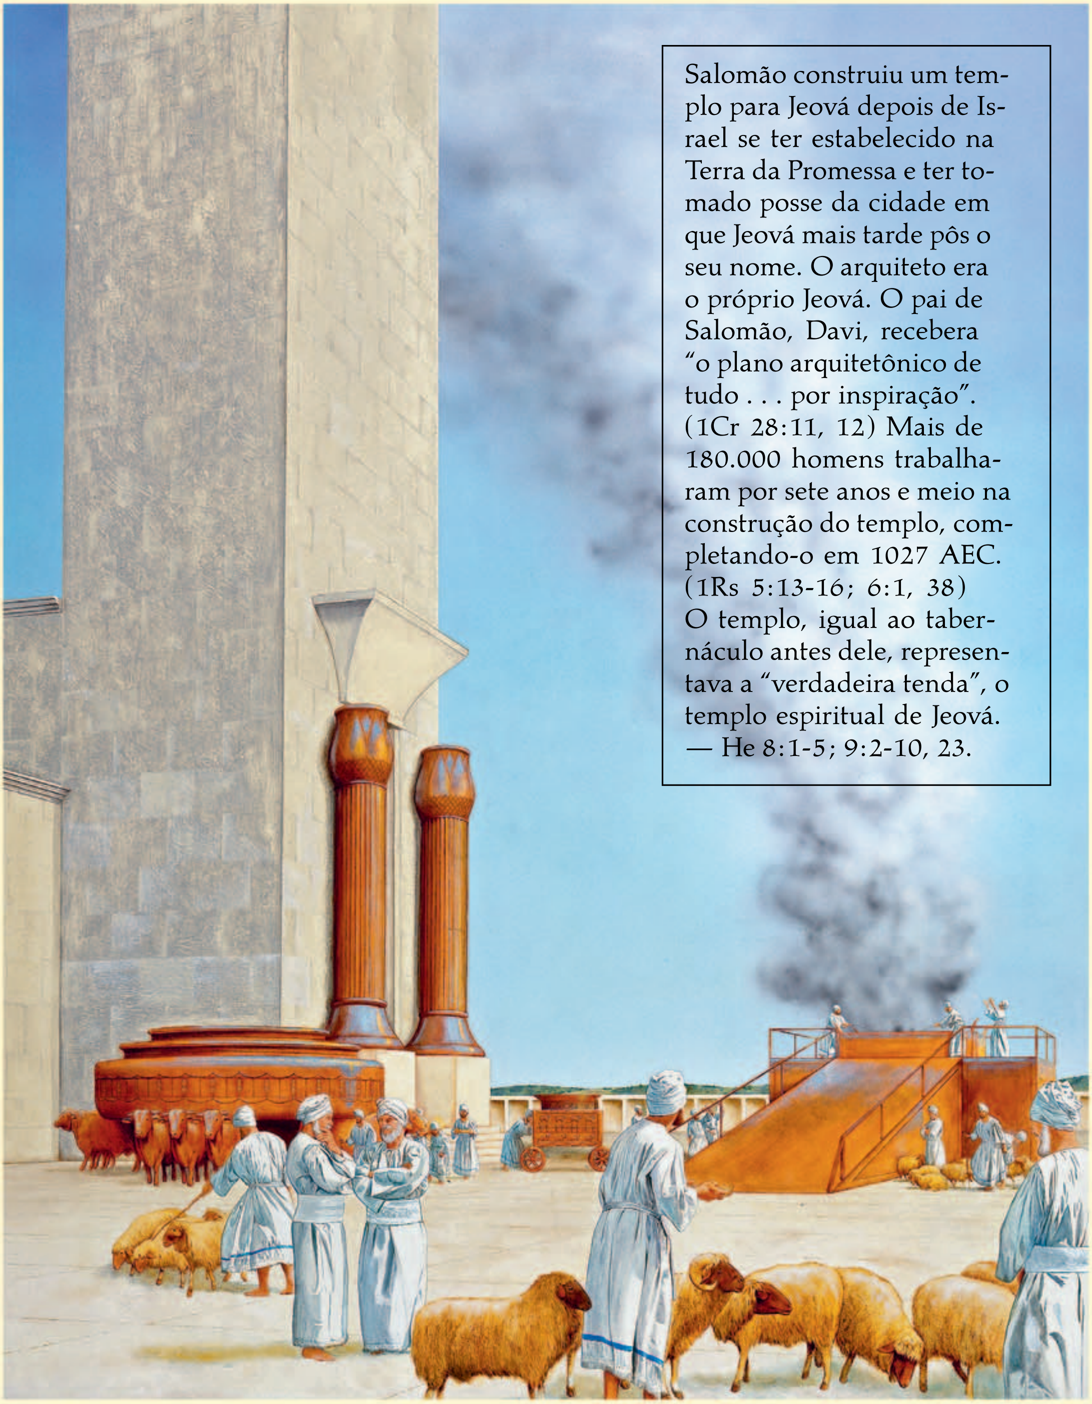
O governo de Salomão foi uma época de genuína paz e segurança. Isto prefigura muito bem o reinado pacífico do Messias, que "terá súditos de mar a mar e desde o Rio [Eufrates] até os confins da terra". — Sal 72:8.



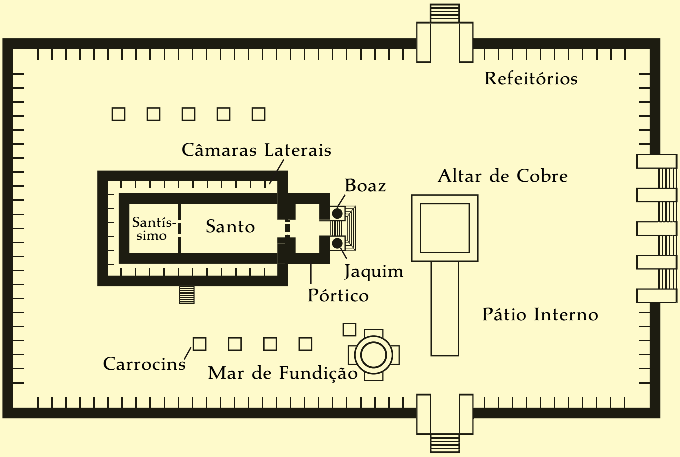
Durante o reinado de Salomão, Judá e Israel moravam em segurança — figurativamente, cada um debaixo da sua própria videira e da sua própria figueira. (1Rs 4:25)

Até mesmo governantes de outras terras vinham para ouvir a sua sabedoria. (1Rs 4:34; 10:1)

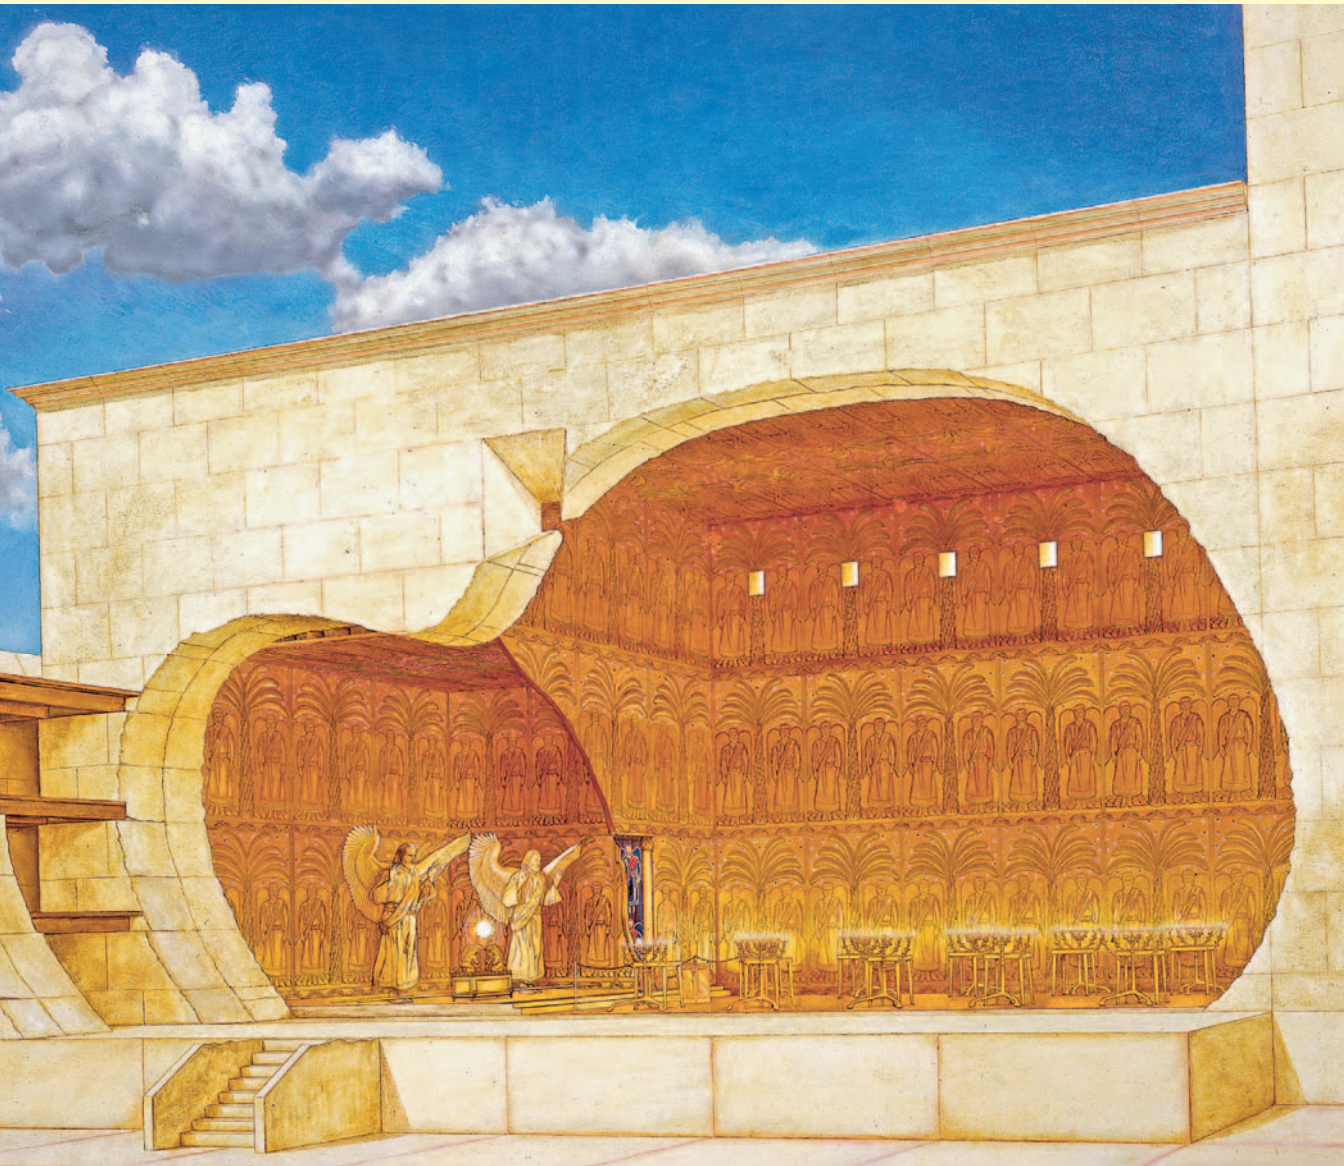
O Templo Construído por Salomão



Salomão construiu um templo para Jeová depois de Israel se ter estabelecido na Terra da Promessa e ter tomado posse da cidade em que Jeová mais tarde pôs o seu nome. O arquiteto era o próprio Jeová. O pai de Salomão, Davi, recebera "o plano arquitetônico de tudo . . . por inspiração". (1Cr 28:11, 12) Mais de 180.000 homens trabalharam por sete anos e meio na construção do templo, completando-o em 1027 AEC. (1Rs 5:13-16; 6:1, 38) O templo, igual ao tabernáculo antes dele, representava a "verdadeira tenda", o templo espiritual de Jeová. — He 8:1-5; 9:2-10, 23.



Planta baixa (à esquerda) do templo e do pátio interno. Uma vista interna do templo (abaixo) dá uma ideia da beleza desta magnífica construção. As paredes internas eram de cedro, entalhadas com figuras de querubins, palmeiras e flores; as paredes e o teto eram revestidos de ouro e tinham gemas encravadas neles.



A Cidade de Jerusalém (Davi/Salomão)

A ANTIGA Jerusalém era o lugar em que Jeová escolheu pôr seu nome. (2Cr 6:6) Ela serviu tanto de centro da adoração pura como de sede do governo de Israel. Dizia-se que os reis que governavam em Jerusalém sentavam-se "no trono de Jeová". — 1Cr 29:23.

O Rei Davi arrebatou dos jebuseus o baluarte do monte Sião e tornou este sua capital. Salomão ampliou a cidade e a desenvolveu até o apogeu da sua grandiosidade, construindo um magnífico templo, bem como um impressionante conjunto de edifícios governamentais no monte Moriá e nas encostas deste. Jerusalém era uma cidade intimamente associada com o nome de Jeová.

Isto nos ajuda a reconhecer por que Jerusalém recebe tanto destaque nas profecias bíblicas. Ela serve de símbolo apropriado da parte celestial da organização de Jeová e do seu Reino messiânico nas mãos de Jesus Cristo.

ÉDER.

1. Descendente de Berias, da tribo de Benjamim, que morava em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 8:1, 15, 16, 28.

2. Descendente de Musi, da família levítica de Merari, designado a certo serviço durante o tempo de Davi. — 1Cr 23:21, 23-25; 24:30.

3. Cidade na parte meridional de Judá. (Jos 15:21) Visto que com a transposição das últimas duas consoantes hebraicas do nome Éder, as consoantes hebraicas ficam iguais às de Arade, e visto que a Septuaginta (Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209) tem "Ara" em vez de "Éder" neste texto, a maioria dos peritos acha que Éder é Arade (Tel ʽArad), a uns 28 km ao L de Berseba.

4. [Grei]. Torre perto da qual Jacó (Israel) armou sua tenda algum tempo depois da morte de Raquel. Embora sua localização exata não seja conhecida, parece ter estado situada entre Belém e Hébron. O nome Éder indica que fornecia abrigo a pastores e servia de torre de vigia, da qual podiam observar seus rebanhos. (Gên 35:19, 21, 27) Enquanto Jacó morava ali em tendas, seu filho Rubem 'profanou o leito de Jacó', tendo relações sexuais com Bila, concubina de Jacó. — Gên 35:22; 49:3, 4.

A mesma expressão hebraica aqui traduzida por "torre de Éder" (migh·dal-ʽé·dher) é usada por Miqueias (4:8) ao mencionar a "torre da grei". Esta expressão talvez aluda ao nome do lugar de acampamento de Jacó e é usado em conexão com o restabelecimento do povo 'manquejante' de Jeová. (Miq 4:7) Com o restabelecimento de "Sião", este seria vigiado como que duma "torre" de observação e assim seria protegido contra perigos adicionais. Essa ilustração é coerente com outras símiles na profecia de Miqueias; ele menciona o Messias como aquele que 'pastorearia' (Miq 5:2-4) e o povo de Jeová como 'o rebanho da herança de Deus'. — Miq 7:14.

EDOM [Vermelho], EDOMITAS. Edom era o nome secundário ou a alcunha dada a Esaú, irmão gêmeo de Jacó. (Gên 36:1) Foi aplicado a ele por ter vendido sua primogenitura em troca do cozido vermelho. (Gên 25:30-34) Coincidentemente, Esaú, ao nascer, tinha cor bem avermelhada (Gên 25:25), e uma coloração similar predominava em partes da terra em que ele e seus descendentes habitaram mais tarde.

Seir e Edom. Em algum tempo durante a permanência de 20 anos de Jacó em Harã, Esaú (Edom) começou a fixar-se na terra de Seir, "o campo de Edom". (Gên 32:3) Assim, mesmo antes de seu pai morrer (Gên 35:29), Esaú, pelo que parece, começara a cumprir a bênção profética de Isaque, desviando sua atenção dos solos férteis ao redor de Hébron, e, sem dúvida, começando a 'viver pela espada', junto com os 400 homens sob seu comando. (Gên 27:39, 40; 32:6, 8) O registro indica, porém, que ainda mantinha uma residência, ou acampamento-base, na área de Hébron, só se transferindo definitivamente para a região montanhosa de Seir depois da morte de seu pai (1738 AEC). Já então sua família tinha aumentado e seus bens eram muitos. — Gên 36:6-8.

A terra de Seir fora anteriormente o domínio dos horeus (Gên 14:6; 36:20-30), mas os filhos de Esaú desapossaram os xeques horeus e se apoderaram da região. (De 2:12) Depois disso, a terra passou a ser conhecida como a terra de Edom, embora ainda continuasse a ser usado o nome Seir, mais antigo. — Núm 24:18.

Descrição Geográfica. O território de Edom estendia-se por cerca de 160 km desde sua fronteira com Moabe, ao N, formada pelo vale da torrente de Zerede, para baixo até Elate (Elote), no golfo de ʽAqaba, ao S. (De 2:1-8, 13, 14; 1Rs 9:26) Ao L, o domínio edomita aparentemente se estendia até a beirada do deserto Arábico, ao passo que, ao O, estendia-se através do Arabá até o ermo de Zim, e abrangia os altiplanos do Negebe, que se estendiam desde o canto SO do Mar Salgado até Cades-Barneia. A parte ocidental de Edom, portanto, passou a constituir a fronteira SE do território de Judá. — Jos 15:1; compare isso com Núm 34:3.

O próprio coração do território edomita, porém, evidentemente ficava ao L do Arabá, pois ali a elevada cadeia montanhosa, tendo alguns pontos que atingem uma altitude de 1700 m, recebe alguma chuva. Isto se dá porque a terra ao O do Arabá, o Negebe, é consideravelmente mais baixa, permitindo que as remanescentes nuvens tempestuosas vindas do Mediterrâneo passem por cima dele e atinjam as montanhas mais elevadas de Edom, onde liberam parte de sua umidade restante. Assim, as investigações arqueológicas mostram uma série de povoados e fortalezas antigos ao longo duma estreita faixa de solo arável, na parte mais elevada do longo planalto, ou platô, montanhoso, mas estes acabam ao se prosseguir para o S em direção ao golfo de ʽAqaba. A moderna Tafileh, a uns 30 km ao S do Mar Morto (Salgado), possui grandes olivais, embora isto se deva, em grande parte, ao fluxo de água de oito ótimas fontes, visto que caem ali apenas uns 280 mm de chuva anualmente.

Embora tivesse pouca terra fértil, esta acidentada região montanhosa possuía valiosos depósitos de cobre e de ferro; faziam-se mineração e fundição em torno do lugar da moderna Feinan, a uns 48 km ao S do Mar Morto. Vê-se também evidência da existência de antigos pinheirais de considerável extensão.

Em harmonia com o acima, Moisés, ao enviar mensageiros ao rei de Edom, falou da posição israelita em Cades-Barneia como "na extremidade do teu território", e ao solicitar permissão para uma passagem pacífica através do território dos edomitas, Moisés referiu-se aos campos, vinhedos e poços deles. — Núm 20:14-17.

Posição Estratégica. Moisés solicitou permissão para Israel seguir pela "estrada real" através de Edom. (Núm 20:17) Esta estrada, também conhecida por Estrada do Rei, talvez fosse do golfo de ʽAqaba até Damasco, na Síria, seguindo a borda dos altos platôs que beiram o lado L do Arabá ao atravessar Edom. Ao longo dela podiam-se encontrar as principais cidades de Edom. (Gên 36:33; 2Rs 14:7) Uma rota também seguia do Negebe para o L através de Maʽan, à beira do deserto Arábico, conectando ali com outra rota que seguia em direção N-S. Por estas estradas passavam ricas cargas do Egito, da Arábia, da Síria e da Mesopotâmia. Pedágios cobrados das caravanas de camelos e de mulas que percorriam essas estradas provavelmente contribuíam muitíssimo para a riqueza de Edom. Os cansados viajantes do deserto talvez também pagassem por alimentos e acomodações ao chegarem a Edom.

A escarpa íngreme, ou paredão do planalto, do lado do Arabá, dava ao principal baluarte de Edom uma excelente proteção nesta direção. O profundo desfiladeiro do vale da torrente de Zerede impedia a invasão desde Moabe. (Note, porém, Am 2:1.) Uma cadeia de fortalezas dava para o deserto, no mais vulnerável lado L, dando boa defesa contra midianitas e outras tribos nômades. Além disso, as fendas existentes nas montanhas e nos planaltos são, em geral, cercadas por inescaláveis penhascos de arenito vermelho, que formam intimidativas gargantas. É com boa razão que a profecia de Jeová, mediante Jeremias, fala dos edomitas como confiantemente 'residindo nos retiros do rochedo, ocupando o alto do morro', e como águia em seu ninho. — Je 49:7, 16.

O Povo de Edom. Os edomitas, como descendentes de Esaú, eram basicamente uma raça semítica, mas com forte traço camítico. Isto se devia a que duas das esposas de Esaú eram do tronco cananeu camítico (hitita e heveu); apenas uma esposa dele, cujo nome é citado, era parte semítica, por meio de Ismael, filho de Abraão. (Gên 36:2, 3) Se, como alguns peritos sustentam, o nome "horeu" significa simplesmente "habitante de caverna", Oolibama, esposa heveia de Esaú e filha de Aná, talvez procedesse dos habitantes horeus de Seir. (Veja Gên 36:2, 20, 24, 25.) De qualquer modo, os edomitas, assim como os moabitas e os amonitas, descendentes de Ló (note Da 11:41), eram aparentados com os israelitas, e, originalmente, também praticavam a circuncisão. (Je 9:25, 26; compare isso com Ez 32:29.) Jeová referiu-se a eles como "irmãos" de Israel, e os direitos fundiários dos edomitas deviam ser tidos como inalienáveis pelos israelitas, que avançavam através do ermo, visto que Jeová concedera o monte Seir como posse aos descendentes de Edom. — De 2:1-8.

Formadas originalmente em territórios sob o domínio de xeques, as tribos edomitas mais tarde se organizaram em reino. A linha de sucessão real indica que os reis provinham de diferentes tribos ou territórios de xeques, não assumindo assim o trono numa base familiar hereditária. (Gên 36:15-19, 31-43) Alguns críticos consideram anacronismo, ou inserção posterior, a referência aos regentes edomitas, em Gênesis 36:31, como "os reis que reinaram na terra de Edom antes de qualquer rei reinar sobre os filhos de Israel". Não é assim, porém, visto que Moisés, que registrou Gênesis, já conhecia a explícita promessa de Deus a Jacó (Israel), de que "dos teus lombos sairão reis". (Gên 35:11) O próprio Moisés predisse que Israel, por fim, teria um rei. — De 28:36.

A Septuaginta grega contém uma adição a Jó 42:17, que identificaria Jó com Jobabe, o rei edomita de Gênesis 36:33. Jó, porém, era da terra de Uz, nome dado originalmente a uma tribo arameia e repetido na linhagem arameia de Naor. (Jó 1:1; compare isso com Gên 10:23; 22:20, 21.) Lamentações 4:21, de fato, fala de Edom como 'morando na terra de Uz', mas este texto, escrito muitos séculos depois do provável tempo em que Jó viveu, não equaciona Uz com Edom, especialmente visto que, em Jeremias 25:20, 21, "os reis da terra de Uz" são diferenciados de Edom. Antes, o texto talvez indique uma extensão do território edomita. — Veja Uz N.º 4.

É possível que um dos três "companheiros" que visitaram e criticaram Jó na sua condição doente era edomita, a saber, Elifaz, o temanita. (Jó 2:11; compare isso com Gên 36:11, 34.) Temã, em Jeremias 49:7, é apresentado como centro de sabedoria edomita, talvez contribuindo para a sua reputação de sabedoria o contato e a comunicação regular dos edomitas com viajantes procedentes do Oriente.

Desde o Êxodo Até o Fim da História de Judá. A destruição das forças de Faraó e a miraculosa libertação de Israel no Mar Vermelho tiveram repercussões em Edom, como em toda a região de Canaã e em torno dela. (Êx 15:14, 15) No ermo da península do Sinai, surgiu a primeira oposição armada contra Israel por parte duma tribo edomita grandemente espalhada, os amalequitas, fonte de dificuldades para Israel no decorrer de toda a sua história. (Êx 17:8-16; compare isso com Gên 36:12, 16; veja AMALEQUE, AMALEQUITAS.) Ao término do período de peregrinação, a respeitosa solicitação de Moisés, pedindo salvo-conduto para seguir a estrada real através de Edom, foi rejeitada, e o rei edomita de então, cujo nome não é citado, juntou uma poderosa força militar para bloquear qualquer intrusão israelita. (Núm 20:14-21) Assim, depois da morte de Arão, no monte Hor, perto da fronteira de Edom (Núm 20:22-29), Israel contornou o coração da terra de Edom, acampou junto ao vale da torrente de Zerede, e depois seguiu para o N, passando pela fronteira oriental de Moabe. — Núm 21:4, 10-13; Jz 11:18; compare isso com De 2:26-29.

Na bênção poética que Moisés proferiu sobre Israel, antes da sua morte, ele descreveu a Jeová Deus como 'vindo do Sinai', como 'raiando desde Seir [Edom]' e como 'reluzindo desde as montanhas de Parã'. Uma descrição similar ocorre no cântico de Baraque e Débora, e na profecia de Habacuque. (De 33:2; Jz 5:4, 5; Hab 3:3, 4) Esta representação profética, evidentemente, fixa assim a arena, ou o teatro, em que Jeová se manifestara à sua recém-constituída nação, iluminando-a como que por lampejos de luz brilhando sobre os picos montanhosos.

Ordenara-se a Israel que não detestasse o edomita, "pois é teu irmão". (De 23:7, 8) No entanto, não só a agressiva tribo amalequita, mas Edom como um todo, adotou um proceder de oposição a Israel. Saul travou uma guerra bem-sucedida contra eles. (1Sa 14:47, 48) Todavia, Saul tinha um edomita, Doegue, como cabeça sobre seus pastores, e este homem agiu como informante de Saul contra Davi. Quando os homens de Saul se mostraram adversos a atacar os sacerdotes de Nobe, Saul usou Doegue para realizar um massacre em grande escala. — 1Sa 21:7; 22:9-18.

Davi, como rei, obteve uma grande vitória sobre os edomitas no vale do Sal. (2Sa 8:13; veja SAL, VALE DO.) Embora não se declare que ação provocou essa batalha, uma agressão edomita, sem dúvida, foi responsável, talvez porque os edomitas pensavam que as campanhas de Davi na Síria haviam deixado a parte meridional do seu reino vulnerável a uma invasão. Em 1 Crônicas 18:12, e no cabeçalho do Salmo 60, descrevem-se respectivamente Abisai e Joabe como realizando a conquista sobre os edomitas. Visto que Davi era o comandante-chefe e Joabe era seu principal general, ao passo que Abisai era um comandante divisionário sob Joabe, pode-se entender como os relatos podiam diferir nos créditos dados pela vitória, dependendo do ponto de vista assumido, assim como se dá nos tempos modernos. Similarmente, a diferença nos números fornecidos nesses textos se deve provavelmente ao conceito específico do narrador quanto aos diferentes aspectos ou campanhas da guerra. (Veja 1Rs 11:15, 16.) De qualquer forma, Davi estabeleceu guarnições de tropas israelitas em todo o Edom, e a população restante de Edom ficou sujeita a Israel. (2Sa 8:14; 1Cr 18:13) O "jugo" de Jacó pousava então pesadamente sobre o pescoço de Edom (Esaú). — Gên 27:40; compare isso com Núm 24:18.

Salomão, que se casou com mulheres edomitas (1Rs 11:1), utilizou o controle israelita sobre as cidades costeiras edomitas junto ao Mar Vermelho, Elote (Elate) e Eziom-Géber, para um empreendimento de navegação. (1Rs 9:26; 2Cr 8:17, 18) A reduzida população masculina de Edom não conseguiu remover o jugo israelita, embora Hadade, fugitivo de sangue real, deveras liderasse uma espécie de movimento de resistência. — 1Rs 11:14-22.

Não se pode afirmar se esta situação predominou continuamente durante todo um século, depois da conquista inicial de Davi. O ataque efetuado pelos "filhos de Amom e de Moabe, e os da região montanhosa de Seir [Edom]" (2Cr 20:1, 2, 10, 22) talvez tenha ocorrido antes do ataque conjugado das forças de Judá, de Israel e de Edom contra Moabe. (2Rs 3:5-9; veja MOABE, MOABITAS.) Pelo que parece, Edom fazia parte de cada uma das alianças tríplices, lutando primeiro de um lado, e, daí, do outro. Declara-se também que, em certo ponto do reinado de Jeosafá, Edom não tinha rei; o país era governado por um preposto, evidentemente responsável ao trono de Judá, de modo que o acesso de Judá ao golfo de ʽAqaba e a seu porto, ou portos, estava desimpedido. (1Rs 22:47, 48) Quanto à campanha contra Moabe, a predita inundação do anteriormente seco vale da torrente, onde os exércitos aliados acampavam, pode ter resultado de um temporal desértico sobre o planalto mais elevado. Tais tempestades, nos tempos modernos, podem enviar torrentes de água uádis abaixo, até o Arabá. Ou a água pode ter surgido por meios puramente milagrosos. — 2Rs 3:16-23.

Edom revoltou-se e livrou-se do jugo de Judá no reinado do filho de Jeosafá, Jeorão, e restabeleceu sua monarquia independente. Embora Jeorão obtivesse uma vitória militar num choque com os edomitas, eles continuaram sua revolta. (2Rs 8:20-22; 2Cr 21:8-10) Na primeira metade do reinado de Amazias (858-830 AEC), o vale do Sal tornou-se novamente cenário de um desastre militar para Edom, e Amazias apoderou-se de Sela, a principal cidade edomita, sendo enlaçado, porém, pela adoração dos falsos deuses impotentes de Edom. (2Rs 14:7; 2Cr 25:11-20) Seu filho, Uzias (Azarias), restaurou Elate ao controle de Judá. — 2Rs 14:21, 22.

A Síria, numa ofensiva contra Judá, durante o reinado de Acaz (761-746 AEC), fez retornar o porto de Elate, no Mar Vermelho, às mãos de Edom. (2Rs 16:5, 6) Os edomitas, evidentemente libertos do domínio de Judá, juntaram-se a outras nações, inclusive a Assíria, em incursões contra Judá. — 2Cr 28:16-20; compare isso com Sal 83:4-8.

Não se encontraram registros de fontes edomitas. Os registros seculares de outras nações, porém, os mencionam. Um papiro egípcio, considerado ser do segundo milênio AEC, menciona tribos beduínas de Edom entrando na região do delta em busca de pastagens para o seu gado. Os faraós Menepta e Ramsés III reivindicaram o território de Edom, assim como fez também o monarca assírio Adade-Nirari III. Algum tempo depois deste último rei, Tiglate-Pileser III (contemporâneo de Acaz) jactou-se de ter recebido tributo de "Kaushmalaku de Edom", ao passo que Esar-Hadom, sucessor de Senaqueribe, alista "Qaushgabri" como rei vassalo edomita. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 282, 291.

Edom na Profecia. Já no governo do Rei Uzias, os profetas Joel e Amós declararam a condenação definitiva de Edom, por Jeová, devido à sua implacável fúria, expressa contra Israel pelo uso desapiedado da espada. (Am 1:6, 11, 12) Edom, por sua feroz oposição ao povo pactuado de Jeová, tinha perdido seu direito à propriedade da terra que mantinha por concessão divina. (Jl 3:19; Am 9:11, 12) Os edomitas selaram sua condenação quando os babilônios conquistaram Judá e Jerusalém em 607 AEC. O ódio dos edomitas ficou claramente revelado ao instigarem os devastadores de Jerusalém (Sal 137:7), ao se regozijarem com a tragédia de Judá, e, na sua inimizade e no seu desejo de vingança, até mesmo entregaram judeus fugitivos para serem mortos pelos babilônios. Juntaram-se a outros povos circunvizinhos em saquear aquela terra, e planejaram tomar o país abandonado de Judá e de Israel, falando jactanciosamente contra Jeová. Por causa disso, Jeová orientou seus profetas Jeremias, Ezequiel e Obadias a garantir a Edom que seu regozijo seria de curta duração e que o tratamento dispensado a Judá também se tornaria o quinhão de Edom. (La 4:21, 22; Ez 25:12-14; 35:1-15; 36:3-5; Ob 1-16) Conforme o profeta Isaías havia predito antes, os edomitas que brandiam espadas ficariam sob a própria espada de justiça e de julgamento de Jeová, tornando-se todas as classes, os grandes e os pequenos, como animais sacrificiais devotados à destruição. — Is 34:5-8.

Edom tornar-se-ia como Sodoma e Gomorra, desabitado para sempre. (Je 49:7-22; compare isso com Is 34:9-15.) Merecendo o ódio de Jeová, Edom seria chamado de "território da iniquidade" e "o povo que Jeová verberou por tempo indefinido". (Mal 1:1-5) Edom, assim, evidentemente é símbolo dos inimigos empedernidos do povo pactuado de Deus, em Isaías 63:1-6, onde o Guerreiro divino, com vestes manchadas de sangue, que pisou o lagar de vinho da vingança de Deus, é apropriadamente descrito como vindo de Edom (que significa "Vermelho"), e de Bozra, a cidade mais destacada de Edom (aqui possivelmente usada como trocadilho com a palavra hebraica ba·tsír, que significa "vindima"). — Veja Re 14:14-20; 19:11-16.

História Posterior e Desaparecimento. O rei de Edom foi avisado por meio de Jeremias, profeta de Jeová, a pôr seu pescoço sob o jugo de Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia. (Je 27:1-7) Não se registrou o que os edomitas realmente fizeram neste respeito. Todavia, depois da destruição de Jerusalém em 607 AEC, alguns exilados de Judá acharam refúgio temporário em Edom. Daí, após a partida dos exércitos babilônicos, esses refugiados retornaram à sua terra e finalmente fugiram para baixo ao Egito. (Je 40:11, 12; 43:5-7) Pouco depois chegou o tempo para Edom beber fartamente do copo do furor de Jeová. (Je 25:15-17, 21) Isto ocorreu por volta de meados do sexto século AEC, sob o rei babilônio Nabonido. De acordo com C. J. Gadd, perito em história e literatura babilônicas, as tropas de Nabonido que conquistaram Edom e Tema incluíam soldados judeus. Comentando isso, John Lindsay escreveu: "Assim, pelo menos em parte, tiveram cumprimento as palavras do profeta, quando ele escreveu a respeito de Javé dizer: 'Porei minha vingança sobre Edom pela mão do meu povo Israel' (Ez 25:14). Temos também um cumprimento parcial das palavras de Obadias, que disse que os 'aliados', 'confederados', 'amigos de confiança', de Edom, os 'enganariam', 'prevaleceriam contra' eles e 'colocariam uma armadilha' debaixo deles. Podemos ver nisso uma referência aos babilônios, os quais, embora nos dias de Nabucodonosor estivessem dispostos a deixá-los participar na perda de Judá, sob Nabonido cortaram de uma vez para sempre todas as ambições comerciais e mercantis de Edom (cf. Obad. 1 e 7)." — Palestine Exploration Quarterly (Revista Trimestral sobre a Exploração da Palestina), Londres, 1976, p. 39.

O livro de Malaquias, escrito uns 100 anos depois da campanha de invasão de Edom por Nabonido, relata que Deus já fizera os "montes [de Edom] um baldio desolado e a sua herança para os chacais do ermo". (Mal 1:3) Os edomitas esperavam retornar e reconstruir seus lugares devastados, mas não seriam bem-sucedidos. — Mal 1:4.

Já no quarto século AEC, os nabateus habitavam o território edomita, e os edomitas nunca mais puderam retornar. Antes, encontravam-se no Negebe, ao S de Judá. Os edomitas avançaram para o N até Hébron, e, por fim, a parte meridional de Judá ficou conhecida como Idumeia. Segundo Josefo, João Hircano I subjugou-os entre 130 e 120 AEC e compeliu-os a aceitar o judaísmo. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XIII, 257, 258 [ix, 1]; XV, 253, 254 [vii, 9]) Depois, aos poucos, foram absorvidos pelos judeus, e após a destruição romana de Jerusalém, em 70 EC, deixaram de existir como povo. — Ob 10, 18; veja IDUMEIA.

EDREI.

1. Cidade real de Ogue, rei de Basã. (Jos 12:4; 13:12) Depois de derrotarem Síon, o amorreu, as forças israelitas sob a direção de Moisés "subiram", isto é, foram em direção ao norte, até se confrontarem com a força militar de Ogue na "batalha de Edrei", no que parece ter sido a fronteira meridional de Basã. Embora Ogue fosse o último dos gigantescos refains e talvez tivesse um exército enorme, os israelitas, aconselhados por Jeová a serem destemidos, eliminaram Ogue, seus filhos e o povo, tomando posse do território dele. (Núm 21:33-35; De 3:1-10) A cidade foi mais tarde cedida a Manassés como parte da sua herança. (Jos 13:21) Edrei geralmente é identificada com a atual cidade de Derʽa, a uns 50 km a ESE da extremidade meridional do mar da Galileia, perto do Iarmuc. Ruínas ali existentes incluem uma parcialmente escavada cidade subterrânea, escavada na rocha abaixo da cidade do nível do chão.

2. Cidade fortificada de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 35, 37) Tem sido associada com a moderna Tell Khureibeh, a uns 7 km ao NNO de Hazor.

EDUCAÇÃO.

A transmissão ou a obtenção de conhecimento e de habilidades. Consegue-se educação por (1) explicações e repetições; (2) disciplina, treinamento dado em amor (Pr 1:7; He 12:5, 6); (3) observações pessoais (Sal 19:1-3; Ec 1:12-14); (4) repreensões e censuras (Sal 141:5; Pr 9:8; 17:10).

Jeová Deus é o grande Educador e Instrutor, não tendo igual. (Jó 36:22; Sal 71:17; Is 30:20) Adão, o filho terrestre de Deus, foi criado com a capacidade de falar uma língua. (Gên 2:19, 20, 23) Recebeu instruções sobre a criação (Gên caps. 1, 2) e sobre o que Deus requeria dele. — Gên 1:28-30; 2:15-17.

Na Sociedade Patriarcal. Em toda a Bíblia, a família é a unidade básica para prover educação. Na sociedade humana mais antiga, o pai era o chefe da família e dos da casa, que podiam até ser uma grande comunidade, tal como a de Abraão. O chefe da família era responsável pela educação dos da sua casa. (Gên 18:19) O bom treinamento evidenciado por José indica que Isaque e Jacó imitaram seu pai Abraão em ensinar seus filhos. (Gên 39:4, 6, 22; 41:40, 41) Jó, da terra de Uz, parente distante de Abraão, demonstrou estar familiarizado com o entendimento científico e os desenvolvimentos industriais dos seus dias, e recebeu de Jeová uma lição de história natural. — Jó 9:1, 9; caps. 28, 38-41.

Na mesma época, havia no Egito considerável conhecimento de astronomia, matemática, geometria, arquitetura, construção, e de outras artes e ciências. Moisés, além de receber da mãe educação na adoração de Jeová (Êx 2:7-10), foi "instruído em toda a sabedoria dos egípcios. De fato, era poderoso nas suas palavras e ações". (At 7:22) Embora os israelitas tivessem sido escravos no Egito, eles sabiam ler e escrever, e conseguiam ensinar seus filhos. Pouco antes de entrarem na Terra da Promessa, foram mandados escrever os mandamentos de Deus nas ombreiras das suas casas e nos seus portões, em sentido figurado, e deviam ensinar aos seus filhos a lei de Deus. Esta, naturalmente, era na língua hebraica. — De 6:6-9; compare isso com De 27:3; Jos 8:32.

Educação sob a Lei, Antes do Exílio. Os pais ainda eram os educadores principais, responsáveis pela instrução dos filhos. (Êx 12:26, 27; De 4:9; 6:7, 20, 21; 11:19-21) A educação espiritual, moral e mental desde a infância era considerada pelos judeus, desde os primórdios da sua história, como um dos principais deveres dos pais. O pai de Sansão, Manoá, orou pedindo orientação sobre a maneira em que seu filho devia ser treinado. (Jz 13:8) O pai era o instrutor principal, mas a mãe também ensinava, incentivando o filho especialmente a seguir a instrução e disciplina do pai. (Pr 1:8; 4:1; 31:26, 27) Os pais davam-se conta de que o treinamento correto na juventude resguardaria a conduta correta em anos posteriores. — Pr 22:6.

Os filhos deviam encarar seus pais com o maior respeito. A vara da autoridade parental era exercida firmemente. (Pr 22:15) Ela devia ser usada em amor, mas havia disciplina severa para o filho desobediente, usando-se a vara às vezes literalmente. (Pr 13:24; 23:13, 14) O filho que amaldiçoasse ou golpeasse seus pais podia ser morto. (Le 20:9; Êx 21:15) O filho mais velho que fosse irremediavelmente rebelde devia ser apedrejado. (De 21:18-21) De fato, o primeiro mandamento com promessa era o quinto dos Dez Mandamentos: "Honra a teu pai e a tua mãe, . . . a fim de que os teus dias se prolonguem e te vá bem sobre o solo que Jeová, teu Deus, te dá." — De 5:16; Ef 6:2, 3.

A educação dada pelos pais devia ser regular e constante, em casa, no trabalho ou em viagem, e não devia ser apenas verbal e disciplinar, mas também pelo exemplo, porque a lei de Deus destinava-se a orientar os pais em todas as suas atividades na vida. A ida às festividades em Jerusalém, três vezes por ano, proporcionava educação em geografia, e ao mesmo tempo familiarizava o filho com seus patrícios de toda a terra de Israel. — De 16:16.

A educação religiosa dos rapazes era acompanhada pela educação na ocupação secular do pai ou por aprenderem um ofício. Bezalel e Ooliabe, artífices peritos, foram habilitados pelo espírito de Deus para instruir outros durante a construção do tabernáculo no ermo. (Êx 35:34) As moças na casa aprendiam os deveres duma esposa, e estas prospectivas esposas eram treinadas a ter muito respeito pelo marido, conforme Sara dera o exemplo. (Gên 18:12; 1Pe 3:5, 6) A boa esposa tinha muitas habilidades, realizações e responsabilidades, conforme descritas em Provérbios, capítulo 31.

Parece que tanto rapazes como moças recebiam treinamento em música. Havia músicas e cantoras. (1Sa 18:6, 7) Dentre os varões levitas havia compositores de cânticos e poesias, músicos e cantores. — Sal 87:cab.; 88:cab.; 1Cr 25.

Deus reservou também toda a tribo de Levi como corpo educativo religioso. O sacerdócio foi investido em 1512 AEC. Uma das suas principais funções era a educação do povo na lei de Deus. O levita Moisés, como mediador, naturalmente, era instrutor do povo na lei de Deus (Êx 18:16, 20; 24:12), e os sacerdotes, junto com os levitas não sacerdotais, estavam incumbidos da responsabilidade de cuidar de que o povo entendesse todos os regulamentos proferidos por Jeová por meio de Moisés. (Le 10:11; 14:57; De 17:10, 11; 2Cr 15:3; 35:3) Os levitas deviam ler a Lei para o povo. Isto se fazia publicamente, para todo o povo, por ocasião da Festividade das Barracas, no ano sabático, e não havia ali nenhuma segregação segundo idade ou sexo, mas todo o povo, idosos e jovens, inclusive os residentes forasteiros dentro dos portões e todos os que podiam entender, eram ajuntados para ouvir a leitura. (De 31:9-13) O Rei Jeosafá, no terceiro ano do seu reinado, instituiu uma campanha educativa em Judá, enviando príncipes, sacerdotes e levitas num circuito através de Judá, para instruir o povo na lei de Deus. — 2Cr 17:9.

Uma parte considerável das Escrituras Hebraicas consiste em poesia, a qual, do ponto de vista educativo, é uma eficaz ajuda para a memória. A poesia hebraica não era expressa em rimas, mas em paralelismos de pensamentos, pensamento rítmico. Usavam-se também poderosas metáforas; estas baseavam-se na criação natural, em coisas conhecidas por todos, mesmo por crianças. Usavam-se acrósticos alfabéticos, nos quais as letras iniciais de versos são arranjadas em ordem alfabética. (Sal 25, 34, 37, 111, 112, 119; Pr 31:10-31; La 1-4) Ocasionalmente, diversos versos começavam com a mesma letra; por exemplo, no Salmo 119, oito linhas começam com a letra hebraica álefe ('á·lef), oito com bete (behth), e assim por diante, perfazendo 176 linhas para as 22 letras do alfabeto hebraico.

Após a Restauração. Após o retorno de Babilônia e a reconstrução do templo, a maior necessidade era a educação do povo na verdadeira adoração. O escriba Esdras era um homem bem instruído e copista da Bíblia. (Esd 7:1, 6) Esdras compilou muitos registros, e ele copiou as Escrituras Hebraicas e teve parte em organizar o cânon delas. Outrossim, empreendeu a educação geral da nação de Israel na lei de Deus. Fazendo isso, cumpriu seus deveres como sacerdote levítico. (Esd 7:11, 12, 25) Organizou os sacerdotes e os levitas que haviam retornado de Babilônia, para que realizassem um programa educativo na restauração da verdadeira adoração para os repatriados israelitas e seus filhos. (Ne 8:4-9) Os copistas, ou escribas, hebreus (soferins) eram homens educados na Lei, e embora nem todos eles fossem levitas, passaram a destacar-se na instrução do povo. Com o passar do tempo, porém, introduziram muitas tradições e corromperam o verdadeiro ensino da Palavra de Deus. — Veja ESCRIBA.

Educação no Primeiro Século EC. Os pais continuavam a ser os principais responsáveis pela educação dos filhos, especialmente pela educação inicial deles. (2Ti 1:5; 3:14, 15) Lemos que Jesus foi criado em Nazaré por seu pai adotivo e sua mãe, e que ele continuou a crescer e a ficar mais forte, enchendo-se de sabedoria. À idade de 12 anos, pasmou os instrutores no templo com o seu entendimento e as suas respostas. (Lu 2:41, 46-52) Os escribas continuavam a ser os principais educadores públicos e nas escolas estabelecidas nas sinagogas. (Veja SINAGOGA.) Ensinavam-se tanto ciências físicas como a Lei e os ensinos rabínicos que haviam sido acrescentados à Lei. Requeria-se também dos pais que ensinassem aos filhos um ofício.

Jesus era o instrutor por excelência. Mesmo seus contemporâneos reconheciam-no como instrutor de excepcional influência e popularidade. Seus discípulos costumavam chamá-lo de "Rabi", que significa "Instrutor". (Mr 9:5; veja RABI.) Ocasionalmente, até mesmo seus opositores reconheciam a maneira excelente de ele falar, e, numa ocasião, os oficiais mandados pelos fariseus para prendê-lo, quando perguntados por que voltaram de mãos vazias, responderam: "Nunca homem algum falou como este." — Jo 7:46; Lu 20:39, 40; Mr 12:32, 34.

Em primeiro lugar, conforme Jesus disse, ele não falava de sua própria iniciativa, mas vinha em nome de seu Pai e falava as coisas que aprendera de seu Pai. (Jo 5:19, 30, 43; 6:38; 10:25) Ele era íntimo de Jeová Deus, sendo Seu Filho unigênito que descera dos céus, e, como tal, era o melhor instrutor sobre as qualidades, as obras e os propósitos de seu Pai. (Mt 11:27) Possuía a segunda qualificação mais vital de um bom instrutor, a de amar aqueles a quem ensinava. (Mr 10:21; Jo 13:1, 34; 15:9, 12) Poucos instrutores amaram tanto os seus discípulos, que estivessem dispostos a dar a vida por eles, assim como Jesus fez. (Jo 15:13) Ele entendia a mente dos seus ouvintes. (Jo 2:25) Tinha profundo discernimento. (Lu 6:8) Não visava interesses egoístas ao ensinar, porque não tinha pecado e era sem malícia. (He 7:26) Ele não ensinava com as palavras filosóficas dos escribas, mas usava ilustrações que envolviam coisas cotidianas. Por isso, seus ensinos são compreensíveis ainda hoje em dia. A instrução que dava incluía muitas ilustrações. — Veja ILUSTRAÇÕES.

Os ensinos de Jesus incluíam repreensão e disciplina. (Mr 8:33) Ele ensinava tanto por meio de exemplo como por palavra; realizava assim pessoalmente uma campanha vigorosa de pregação e de ensino. Falava com uma autoridade, que nenhum dos escribas podia igualar; isto era acompanhado pelo espírito santo de Deus, que dava aos seus ensinos o cunho de apoio celestial, de modo que ele, com autoridade e poder, podia ordenar aos demônios que saíssem daqueles possuídos por estes. (Mr 1:27; Lu 4:36) Era franco e destemido em denunciar os instrutores falsos, que queriam impedir outros de ouvir os ensinos dele. — Mt 23.

Educação e a Congregação Cristã. Os discípulos de Jesus seguiam os passos dele na obra educativa cristã e tinham êxito similar ao dele. Não somente pregavam em toda a parte as boas novas do Reino de Deus, mas também ensinavam os que queriam ouvir. (At 2:42) Semelhantes a Jesus, eram francos e falavam com autoridade. (At 4:13, 19, 20; 5:29) O espírito de Deus conferia-lhes poder e dava evidência da aprovação divina do ensino deles. Ensinavam no templo, em sinagogas e de casa em casa. (At 5:16, 21; 13:14-16; 20:20) Reuniam-se com concristãos para ensino e para estimularem uns aos outros ao amor e a obras excelentes. — At 20:7, 8; He 10:24, 25.

O apóstolo Paulo descreveu os diversos cargos e atividades na congregação desempenhados por homens maduros, que incluíam instrutores. Mostrou que o objetivo de todas estas atividades era a educação, visando o treinamento dos santos para a obra ministerial, para a edificação do corpo do Cristo. (Ef 4:11-16) Realizava-se na congregação um programa regular de educação na Palavra de Deus, conforme delineado em 1 Coríntios, capítulo 14. Todos os membros da congregação cristã, mesmo as mulheres, deviam ser instrutores; deviam fazer discípulos de pessoas do mundo. (At 18:26; He 5:12; Ro 12:7) Mas, dentro da própria congregação, designaram-se homens maduros para supervisioná-la, como, por exemplo, Timóteo e Tito. (1Ti 2:12) Esses homens tinham de estar qualificados para ensinar a congregação e para corrigir coisas que talvez estivessem erradas. Deviam usar de extraordinário cuidado para certificar-se de que seu ensino era exato e salutar. — 1Ti 4:16; 2Ti 4:2, 3; Tit 2:1.

Sobre o assunto da educação física, a Bíblia tem pouco a dizer, exceto que o apóstolo Paulo aconselha: "Pois o treinamento corporal é proveitoso para pouca coisa, mas a devoção piedosa é proveitosa para todas as coisas, visto que tem a promessa da vida agora e daquela que há de vir." (1Ti 4:8) No entanto, a pregação e o ensino vigorosos, que são incentivados, requerem atividade física. Jesus andava muito. O mesmo fizeram os discípulos; o ministério de Paulo, por exemplo, incluía muitas viagens, as quais, naquele tempo, significavam andar muito.

A Bíblia comenta pouco a educação de natureza secular. Ela adverte os cristãos a não se envolverem em filosofias de homens, nem a tomarem tempo para considerar perguntas tolas e improfícuas. Aconselha fortemente contra intercâmbio intelectual com aqueles que não creem em Deus e na sua Palavra. (1Ti 6:20, 21; 1Co 2:13; 3:18-20; Col 2:8; Tit 3:9; 1:14; 2Ti 2:16; Ro 16:17) Os cristãos reconheciam que, perante Deus, tinham a obrigação de fazer as devidas provisões para sua família. Frequentemente, isso exigia alguma forma de educação e treinamento, a fim de prepará-los para tal ocupação secular. (1Ti 5:8) Mas, à base da história do primitivo cristianismo, verificamos que eles estavam primariamente interessados em qualquer método legítimo para a pregação das "boas novas", na educação bíblica de si mesmos e de todos os que quisessem ouvi-los. (1Co 9:16) Conforme diz o Professor E. J. Goodspeed em Christianity Goes to Press (O Cristianismo Utiliza a Imprensa; 1940, p. 111):

"Desde o momento em que os cristãos acordaram para as possibilidades de usar publicações na divulgação do seu evangelho em todo o mundo, eles se aproveitaram disso plenamente, não somente publicando livros novos, mas procurando antigos para publicação, e este espírito de publicação nunca os abandonou. É engano supor que isso começou com a descoberta da imprensa; era uma característica de atitudes cristãs de A.D. 70 em diante, aumentando em força quando surgiu a grande produtividade daquele método. Nem mesmo as invasões de bárbaros e a Idade do Obscurantismo conseguiram sufocar isso. E tudo isso é evidência da enorme força dinâmica que informava a inteireza da primitiva vida cristã, que procurava, não só por atos e palavras, mas por todas as técnicas mais avançadas de publicação levar o evangelho, na sua plenitude e sem reservas, a toda a humanidade." — Veja ESCOLA; TUTOR.

EFA. Medida para secos igual a dez gômores (Êx 16:36), ou a um décimo de um ômer. O efa correspondia ao bato, medida para líquidos, e por isso é calculada em 22 l. (Ez 45:11) Nas Escrituras, "efa" é usado com referência a uma quantidade de farinha (Le 5:11), de cevada (Ru 2:17), de grãos torrados (1Sa 17:17) e de trigo (Ez 45:13). O termo refere-se também ao recipiente usado para medir um efa. (Le 19:36; Am 8:5) Zacarias 5:6-11 fala sobre um efa coberto por uma tampa circular de chumbo, no qual estava restrita a mulher "Iniquidade".

EFÁ [possivelmente: Trevas].

1. Filho de Midiã, e neto de Abraão e Quetura. (Gên 25:1, 2, 4; 1Cr 1:32, 33) Os descendentes de Efá, pelo visto, tinham muitíssimos camelos. — Is 60:6.

2. Concubina de Calebe, que lhe deu três filhos varões: Harã, Moza e Gazez. Pode ser que Gazez tenha sido neto em vez de filho. — 1Cr 2:46.

3. Filho de Jadai, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:3, 47.

EFAI [Criatura Voadora]. Netofatita (Je 40:8) da tribo de Judá (1Cr 2:50-54), cujos filhos estavam entre os chefes das forças militares que não foram levados ao exílio babilônico em 607 AEC. Os filhos de Efai e outros chefes das forças militares, bem como seus homens, vieram a Gedalias, em Mispá, e este, por sua vez, jurou-lhes que iria bem a eles. (Je 40:7-9) Aparentemente, Ismael assassinou os filhos de Efai quando matou Gedalias. — Je 41:3.

EFATÁ. Expressão semítica que significa "abre-te". Foi usada por Jesus quando curou um homem surdo que tinha um impedimento da fala. — Mr 7:32-34.

EFER [Filhote [dos veados]].

1. Segundo filho mencionado de Midiã; neto de Abraão e sua esposa Quetura. — Gên 25:2, 4; 1Cr 1:33.

2. Homem da tribo de Judá; terceiro filho mencionado de Ezra. — 1Cr 4:1, 17.

3. Um dos sete cabeças da meia tribo de Manassés. Estes cabeças de família são descritos como homens valentes, poderosos. Seus descendentes foram infiéis a Deus, e, por isso, Jeová permitiu que o rei da Assíria os levasse ao exílio. — 1Cr 5:23-26.

EFES-DAMIM. Lugar de acampamento dos filisteus, entre Socó e Azeca, do qual Golias avançava para escarnecer das fileiras combatentes de Israel. (1Sa 17:1, 4-10) Efes-Damim parece ser o mesmo lugar que Pas-Damim, mencionado em 1 Crônicas 11:13. Sua localização atualmente é incerta.

EFÉSIOS, CARTA AOS. Livro das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, escrito por volta de 60-61 EC pelo apóstolo Paulo durante seu encarceramento em Roma. (Ef 1:1; 3:1; 4:1; 6:20) Foi levada à congregação de Éfeso por Tíquico (Ef 6:21, 22), a quem Paulo também usou para entregar uma carta aos colossenses. (Col 4:7-9) Visto que a carta aos colossenses foi escrita aproximadamente na mesma época em que Paulo escreveu aos cristãos efésios, existem diversas similaridades entre Efésios e Colossenses. Segundo Charles Smith Lewis, "dos 155 versículos em Ef[ésios], 78 podem ser encontrados em Col[ossenses] em diversos graus de igualdade". (The International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia [A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional], editada por J. Orr, 1960, Vol. II, p. 959) Sem dúvida, as condições em Colossos eram de alguma maneira semelhantes às em Éfeso, e Paulo achou por bem dar o mesmo tipo de conselho.

Por Que Apropriada para os Cristãos Efésios. Um papiro Chester Beatty (P^{46}), bem como as versões originais do Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209 e do Manuscrito Sinaítico, omitem as palavras "em Éfeso", do capítulo 1, versículo 1. Todavia, estas palavras são encontradas em outros manuscritos e em todas as versões antigas. Ainda mais, os primeiros escritores eclesiásticos aceitaram-na como a carta aos efésios. Embora alguns tenham pensado que esta carta seja a mencionada como a enviada a Laodiceia (Col 4:16), deve-se notar que nenhum manuscrito antigo contém as palavras "a Laodiceia", e Éfeso é a única cidade mencionada ali em qualquer dos manuscritos desta carta.

Conselho sobre materialismo. Adicionalmente, um exame do conteúdo da carta aos efésios mostra que Paulo tinha em mente os cristãos em Éfeso; e seu conselho era especialmente apropriado em vista das circunstâncias prevalecentes em Éfeso, a cidade mais importante da província romana da Ásia. Por exemplo, Éfeso era conhecida como cidade fabulosamente rica, e havia a tendência de encarar as riquezas mundanas como a coisa mais importante. Na sua carta, porém, Paulo acentua as verdadeiras riquezas — "as riquezas de sua benignidade imerecida", "as gloriosas riquezas" que Deus oferece como herança para os santos, "as riquezas sobrepujantes de sua benignidade imerecida", as Carta que chama atenção para uma administração que resulta em paz e união com Deus, por meio de Jesus Cristo.

Enquanto Paulo era prisioneiro em Roma, ele escreveu esta carta à congregação em Éfeso, uma cidade portuária na costa O da Ásia Menor.

O propósito de Deus, de trazer paz e união por meio de Jesus Cristo.

- Deus, expressando grande benignidade imerecida, predeterminou que alguns humanos fossem adotados como seus filhos, por meio de Jesus Cristo. (1:1-7)
- Deus se propôs ter uma administração (um modo de gerenciar os assuntos da sua família), por meio da qual, mediante Cristo, uniria consigo mesmo os escolhidos para estarem nos céus e os que viveriam na terra. (1:8-14)
- Paulo ora para que os efésios realmente entendam e avaliem a maravilhosa provisão feita para eles por Deus, por meio de Cristo. (1:15-23; 3:14-21)
- Aqueles a quem se concedem elevadas designações em conexão com Cristo estavam anteriormente mortos no pecado; sua salvação é uma dádiva de Deus, não uma remuneração por obras feitas. (2:1-10)
- Por meio de Cristo, aboliu-se a lei e lançou-se a base para judeus e gentios se tornarem um só corpo, membros da família de Deus, templo para Deus habitar por espírito. (2:11–3:7)
- Os tratos de Deus com a congregação revelam, mesmo aos em lugares celestiais, a diversidade da Sua sabedoria. (3:8-13)
- Fatores unificadores providos por Deus: Um só corpo espiritual constituindo a congregação, um só espírito santo, uma só esperança, um só Senhor Jesus Cristo, uma só fé, um só batismo, um só Deus e Pai. (4:1-6)
- Dádivas em homens providas por Cristo ajudam todos a alcançar a unidade na fé; o corpo inteiro, sob ele como cabeça, funciona harmoniosamente por se falar a verdade e se manifestar amor. (4:7-16)

Revistam-se da nova personalidade, em harmonia com os ensinos e os exemplos de Cristo.

- Não as nações, mas Cristo é o exemplo a seguir; isto requer uma nova personalidade. (4:17-32)
- Imitem a Deus; manifestem a espécie de amor que Cristo manifestou. (5:1, 2)
- Evitem linguagem e conduta imorais; andem como filhos da luz. (5:3-14)
- Comprem o tempo; usem-no para louvar a Jeová. (5:15-20)
- Com profundo respeito por Cristo, manifestem a devida sujeição a maridos, pais, amos; mostrem consideração amorosa para com aqueles sob os seus cuidados. (5:21–6:9)

Revistam-se da completa armadura espiritual, a fim de se manter firme contra as artimanhas do Diabo.

- Temos uma pugna contra forças espirituais iníquas; a ajuda divina pode habilitar-nos a resistir a esses perturbadores da paz e união. (6:10-13)
- A armadura espiritual da parte de Deus dá proteção total; usem-na bem e orem fervorosamente, incluindo todos os santos nas suas súplicas. (6:14-24)

"riquezas insondáveis do Cristo" e 'as riquezas da glória de Deus'. (Ef 1:7, 18; 2:7; 3:8, 16) Isto ajudaria os cristãos efésios a adquirir um conceito correto sobre as riquezas.

Eliminação da imoralidade. Éfeso era também cidade notória por sua licenciosidade e conduta desenfreada, sua crassa imoralidade. Consequentemente, Paulo, o apóstolo, estendeu-se sobre isso enfaticamente como uma das características da velha personalidade e disse que os cristãos precisam despojar-se da velha personalidade e revestir-se da "nova personalidade". A dissoluta situação moral em Éfeso provocava entre os habitantes muita conversa a respeito da libertinagem sexual, não para condená-la, mas para regalar-se com ela; e os cristãos, aconselha Paulo, não devem ser semelhantes a tais pessoas, deleitando-se em conversar sobre a fornicação e contando piadas obscenas. — Ef 4:20-24; 5:3-5.

Contraste entre templos. A ilustração de Paulo a respeito de um templo espiritual também era muito apropriada para a congregação cristã que vivia à sombra do espantoso templo pagão de Ártemis, que era considerado uma das sete maravilhas do mundo antigo. Ao passo que "todo o distrito da Ásia e a terra habitada" prestavam adoração a Ártemis e estimavam muito o famoso templo em Éfeso, os cristãos ungidos constituem um "templo santo", no qual Jeová habita por meio do seu espírito. — At 19:27; Ef 2:21.

Visto que o templo de Ártemis era um refúgio, incentivavam-se os crimes, e a população criminosa de Éfeso aumentava. Ninguém dentro dos limites de certa área em volta de seus muros podia ser preso por qualquer crime que fosse. O resultado foi que se formou um aglomerado de ladrões, assassinos e pessoas dessa laia em volta do templo. As palavras de Paulo a respeito do furto, bem como da amargura maldosa, de brados e de injúrias, portanto, não deixavam de ter seu propósito. — Ef 4:25-32.

Prática do demonismo. Éfeso era o centro de todos os tipos de demonismo. Efetivamente, a cidade era conhecida em todo o mundo por suas muitas formas de magia. Os demônios, pois, estavam especialmente ativos em Éfeso, e, sem dúvida, para contrabalançar a influência da magia e da feitiçaria, e para ajudar os efésios de coração reto a se livrarem de tais práticas demoníacas, Paulo realizou milagres por meio do espírito de Deus; estes até mesmo incluíam a expulsão de espíritos iníquos. — At 19:11, 12.

Mostrando quão saturada de magia Éfeso estava e quão apropriado era o conselho de Paulo a respeito de lutar contra espíritos iníquos, existem os seguintes pontos:

As "letras efésias" eram famosas em todo o mundo. "Parecem ter consistido em determinadas combinações de letras ou de palavras, que, ao serem pronunciadas com certa entonação de voz, eram, segundo se cria, eficazes em expelir doenças, ou maus espíritos; ou que, ao serem escritas em pergaminho e usadas, supunha-se funcionarem quais amuletos, ou fetiches, para proteção contra os maus espíritos ou contra o perigo. Assim, Plutarco (Simpósio 7) diz: 'Os mágicos compelem os possuídos por um demônio a recitar e a pronunciar eles mesmos as letras efésias, numa certa ordem.' " — Notes, Explanatory and Practical, on the Acts of the Apostles (Notas, Explicativas e Práticas, sobre os Atos dos Apóstolos), de A. Barnes, 1858, p. 264.

Inscrições descobertas nas ruínas de Éfeso indicam a densa escuridão mental na qual os efésios viviam e por que o apóstolo Paulo escreveu aos cristãos daquela cidade 'que não mais andassem assim como também as nações andam na improficuidade das suas mentes, ao passo que estão mentalmente em escuridão'. (Ef 4:17, 18) As inscrições em muros e edifícios revelam que a população governava sua vida por meio de superstições, adivinhação e busca de presságios.

Por causa da pregação de Paulo, das obras milagrosas que realizou e do malogro dos exorcistas judeus, um bom número de efésios se tornou cristão. Sem dúvida, muitas dessas pessoas se haviam empenhado antes em alguma forma de prática de magia, pois o relato bíblico diz: "Um número considerável dos que haviam praticado artes mágicas trouxeram os seus livros e os queimaram diante de todos. E calcularam os preços deles e acharam que valiam cinquenta mil moedas de prata [se denários: US$ 37.200]." (At 19:19) Em vista de tal prevalência da magia em Éfeso e da prática de muitas formas de demonismo, foi muito apropriado que Paulo desse aos cristãos efésios excelente conselho sobre combater as forças espirituais iníquas por se revestirem da "armadura completa de Deus". Sem dúvida, alguns daqueles que se livraram da prática de magia seriam molestados pelos demônios, e o conselho de Paulo os ajudaria a resistir aos espíritos iníquos. Deve-se notar que a destruição de tais livros relacionados com o demonismo foi uma das primeiras coisas que aqueles cristãos primitivos fizeram, estabelecendo um padrão para os que atualmente desejam livrar-se da influência ou da molestação demoníaca. — Ef 6:11, 12.

O papel de Cristo. Por causa da gloriosa esperança que se lhes oferecia como co-herdeiros de Cristo, era bem apropriado que Paulo também escrevesse aos cristãos efésios que Cristo foi elevado "muito acima de todo governo, e autoridade, e poder, e senhorio, e todo nome dado, não só neste sistema de coisas, mas também no que há de vir". (Ef 1:21) Nesta carta, Paulo atinge apogeus de grandiosidade ao descrever a posição enaltecida de Jesus Cristo e a dádiva da benignidade imerecida de Deus com amor, sabedoria e misericórdia para com os trazidos à unidade com eles. A descrição da maneira em que todas as coisas no céu e na Terra serão unificadas sob Cristo, e a introdução tanto de judeus como de gentios na congregação, como "um novo homem", é a explicação mais completa encontrada na Bíblia a respeito do "segredo sagrado" de Deus, revelado nas boas novas a respeito do Cristo. — Ef 2:15.

Relevo que mostra homens lutando com feras, possivelmente no estádio de Éfeso.

ÉFESO. Antigamente, rico e importante centro religioso e comercial na costa O da Ásia Menor, quase defronte da ilha de Samos. Éfeso fora construída nas encostas e ao sopé de várias colinas, as principais das quais eram o monte Piom e o monte Coressos. Este porto ficava na principal rota comercial que ia de Roma para o Oriente. Sua localização próxima ao estuário do rio Caister, com acesso às bacias dos rios Gediz (antigo Hermus) e Menderes (antigo Meandro), colocava a cidade na junção das rotas comerciais terrestres da Ásia Menor. Havia estradas que ligavam Éfeso às principais cidades do distrito da Ásia.

Os escritos de Plínio, o Velho, autor romano do primeiro século, e de Estrabão, antigo geógrafo grego, deram origem ao conceito de que, outrora, um golfo do mar Egeu se estendia até Éfeso, mas que a faixa costeira gradualmente avançou em direção ao mar, pois agora as ruínas da cidade acham-se a vários quilômetros do litoral. No entanto, o escavador J. T. Wood, à base das suas descobertas em Éfeso, concluiu que a cidade antigamente jazia a 6,5 km do mar Egeu. Se isto for correto, então, no tempo de Paulo, os navios devem ter subido pelo estuário do rio Caister e chegado a uma baía interiorana, mantida navegável por meio de constante dragagem. No decorrer dos séculos, porém, a baía e o estuário do rio ficaram assoreados de sedimentos depositados pelo Caister.

Templo de Ártemis. O edifício mais notável da cidade era o templo de Ártemis, classificado pelos antigos como uma das sete maravilhas do mundo. O templo que existia no primeiro século EC, quando o apóstolo Paulo visitou Éfeso, tinha sido reconstruído segundo o projeto do anterior templo jônico, que se diz ter sido incendiado por Eróstrato em 356 AEC.

Segundo as escavações feitas no sítio na última metade do século 19, o templo foi erguido sobre uma plataforma de uns 73 m de largura e 127 m de comprimento. O próprio templo tinha aproximadamente 50 m de largura e 105 m de comprimento. Continha 100 colunas de mármore, cada uma elevando-se a quase 17 m. As colunas tinham 1,8 m de diâmetro na base, e, pelo menos algumas delas, eram esculpidas até uma altura de uns 6 m. O santuário interior do templo tinha uns 21 m de largura e 32 m de comprimento. O altar quadrado dentro dele tinha cerca de 6 m de cada lado, e a imagem de Ártemis talvez ficasse logo atrás desse altar.

Os fragmentos encontrados indicam que cores brilhantes e esculturas adornavam o templo. Grandes telhas de mármore branco cobriam o telhado. Em vez de argamassa, diz-se que se usou ouro nas juntas dos blocos de mármore.

Estádio; Teatro. Cerca de 1,5 km ao SO do templo de Ártemis havia um estádio que fora reconstruído sob Nero (54-68 EC). Este era provavelmente o lugar das competições atléticas, e, possivelmente, também de lutas gladiatoriais. Se a declaração do apóstolo Paulo, em 1 Coríntios 15:32, sobre lutar com feras em Éfeso, deve ser entendida literalmente, ele talvez tivera de se defender de feras neste estádio.

O teatro em que os efésios se amotinaram, instigados por Demétrio, ficava a menos de 800 m ao S do estádio. Este teatro se encontrava numa depressão do monte Piom. (At 19:23-41) Sua fachada era adornada de pilares, de nichos e de excelentes estátuas. Os assentos de mármore para os espectadores estavam dispostos em um semicírculo de 66 fileiras; nestes, segundo calculado, cabiam cerca 25.000 pessoas. As propriedades acústicas do teatro eram excelentes. Mesmo hoje, uma palavra proferida em tom baixo, no local do palco, pode ser ouvida nos assentos mais elevados. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 748.

Na frente do teatro havia uma larga estrada pavimentada de mármore, que ia direto para a baía. Esta rua tinha cerca de 500 m de extensão e uns 11 m de largura. Colunatas de 4,5 m de fundo perfilavam-se em ambos os lados desta rua, e por trás delas havia lojas e outros prédios. Um portal monumental ocupava cada extremo da rua.

Ministério de Paulo em Éfeso. Foi a Éfeso, encruzilhada do mundo antigo, que o apóstolo Paulo chegou acompanhado de Áquila e de Priscila, provavelmente em 52 EC. Paulo dirigiu-se imediatamente à sinagoga judaica para pregar. No entanto, embora lhe solicitassem que permanecesse por mais tempo, o apóstolo partiu de Éfeso, declarando que voltaria, se fosse a vontade de Jeová. (At 18:18-21) Áquila e Priscila, que permaneceram em Éfeso, conheceram Apolo, um judeu de Alexandria, no Egito, que só estava familiarizado com o batismo de João, e eles "expuseram-lhe mais corretamente o caminho de Deus". — At 18:24-26.

Quando Paulo retornou a Éfeso, provavelmente lá pelo inverno setentrional de 52/53 EC, encontrou diversos homens batizados com o batismo de João. Ao esclarecer a questão do batismo a eles, foram rebatizados. (At 19:1-7) Desta vez, Paulo ensinou na sinagoga judaica por três meses. Mas quando surgiu oposição, passou para o auditório da escola de Tirano, junto com os que se haviam tornado crentes; ali discursou diariamente por dois anos. (At 19:8-10) Além disso, Paulo pregava extensivamente de casa em casa. — At 20:20, 21.

A pregação de Paulo, acompanhada de curas miraculosas e da expulsão de demônios, moveu muitos efésios a se tornarem crentes. Também, a tentativa malsucedida de exorcismar, feita pelos sete filhos de certo sacerdote principal judeu, chamado Ceva, suscitou muito interesse. Ex-praticantes das artes mágicas queimaram publicamente seus livros, que tinham um valor total de 50.000 peças de prata (se foram denários, US$ 37.200). (At 19:11-20) Éfeso era tão renomada pelas artes mágicas, que os escritores gregos e romanos se referiram a livros, ou rolos, de fórmulas e encantamentos mágicos como "escritos efésios".

Visto que muitos efésios haviam abandonado a adoração de Ártemis, o prateiro Demétrio indicou a seus colegas artífices que a pregação de Paulo constituía uma ameaça para sua profissão, e também punha em perigo a adoração de Ártemis. Enraivecidos, os prateiros gritaram: "Grande é a Ártemis dos efésios!" A cidade ficou conturbada, culminando com um motim de duas horas num teatro capaz de acomodar uns 25.000 espectadores. — At 19:23-41.

Depois disso, Paulo partiu de Éfeso. Mais tarde, de Mileto, mandou chamar os anciãos da congregação de Éfeso, recapitulou seu próprio ministério no distrito da Ásia e deu-lhes instruções sobre como cuidar dos seus deveres. (At 20:1, 17-38) Sua referência, naquela ocasião, aos "três anos" gastos em Éfeso deve ser, evidentemente, considerada como número redondo. — At 20:31; compare isso com At 19:8, 10.

Com o passar dos anos, os cristãos em Éfeso tiveram de suportar muita coisa. No entanto, alguns deveras perderam o amor que tinham no início. — Re 2:1-6; veja ÁRTEMIS; DEMÉTRIO N.º 1; EFÉSIOS, CARTA AOS.

EFLAL [possivelmente: Arbitrador]. Filho de Zabade, da família de Jerameel, e pai de Obede. Eflal era descendente de Peres, filho de Judá e Tamar. Seu trisavô era Jara, servo egípcio na casa de Sesã. Jara recebeu por esposa a filha de Sesã. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 25, 34-37.

ÉFODE, I. Veste sacerdotal. O éfode especial a ser usado pelo sumo sacerdote acha-se descrito em pormenores nas instruções que Deus deu a Moisés. (ILUSTRAÇÃO, Vol. 1, p. 539) Era, pelo que parece, uma veste tipo avental, feita de "ouro, de linha azul e de lã tingida de roxo, de fibras carmíneas e de linho fino retorcido, trabalho de bordador". Consistia em frente e costas, unidas nos ombros. Havia 'nele' um cinto do mesmo material, talvez preso ao éfode, amarrando-o em torno da cintura. Em engastes de ouro, nos ombros, havia duas pedras de ônix, cada uma gravada com os nomes de seis dos filhos de Israel. Dos engastes de ouro dessas pedras pendia o peitoral, por meio de correntes de ouro da feitura de corda. Dos cantos inferiores do peitoral, um cordel azul passava por argolas de ouro presas à extremidade inferior das ombreiras do éfode, pouco acima do cinto. O éfode, pelo que parece, ia até um pouco abaixo da cintura, talvez não chegando aos joelhos. — Êx 28:6-14, 22-28.

O sumo sacerdote usava o éfode por cima da túnica sem mangas, azul, chamada de 'túnica do éfode', a qual, por sua vez, ficava sobre a veste comprida de linho. (Êx 29:5) Este éfode não era usado em todas as ocasiões. Quando era necessário inquirir a Jeová sobre um assunto importante para a nação, o sumo sacerdote usava o éfode e o peitoral que continha o Urim e o Tumim. (Núm 27:21; 1Sa 28:6; Esd 2:63) No anual Dia da Expiação, depois de apresentar as ofertas pelo pecado, o sumo sacerdote se lavava e trocava de roupa, tirando as roupas impecavelmente brancas, e, pelo que parece, vestindo suas lindas vestes, inclusive o éfode, antes de oferecer as ofertas queimadas. — Le 16:23-25.

O éfode que Abiatar, o sacerdote, levou do santuário em Nobe para o acampamento de Davi era, provavelmente, o éfode do sumo sacerdote, visto que Doegue havia matado o pai de Abiatar, o sumo sacerdote Aimeleque, e os subsacerdotes que estavam com ele. (1Sa 22:16-20; 23:6) Davi fez com que Abiatar trouxesse o éfode para perto, a fim de poder inquirir a Jeová quanto ao proceder a seguir. — 1Sa 23:9-12; 30:7, 8.

Éfodes dos Subsacerdotes. Os subsacerdotes também usavam éfodes, embora o éfode do sumo sacerdote seja o único especificamente mencionado e descrito nas instruções de Jeová para a feitura das vestes sacerdotais. Apenas se especificaram para os filhos de Arão, que serviam quais subsacerdotes sob Arão, "vestes compridas", "faixas", "coberturas para a cabeça" e "calções". (Êx 28:40-43) O uso do éfode pelos subsacerdotes parece ter sido um costume posterior. Samuel, embora não fosse subsacerdote, usava um éfode quando, como menino, ministrava a Jeová no santuário (1Sa 2:18), assim como também usavam os 85 sacerdotes mortos por Doegue, às ordens do Rei Saul. (1Sa 22:18) Estes éfodes talvez indicassem a posição sacerdotal de seu usuário, em vez de serem algo prescrito pela Lei, para ser usado no cumprimento dos seus deveres oficiais. O éfode do subsacerdote provavelmente tinha forma similar ao do sumo sacerdote, mas era feito de tecido branco simples, não bordado, e o linho de que era feito talvez não fosse da mesma qualidade daquele do éfode do sumo sacerdote. A palavra hebraica para "linho", usada na descrição do éfode usado pelo jovem Samuel e pelos 85 sacerdotes, é badh, ao passo que shesh, "linho fino", é a palavra usada para o éfode do sumo sacerdote. — Êx 28:6; 1Sa 2:18; 22:18.

Quando a Arca do Pacto foi levada para cima, a Jerusalém, para ser colocada no monte Sião, perto da sua casa, Davi, vestido com uma túnica sem mangas de tecido fino, usou sobre esta veste um éfode de linho, ao dançar perante Jeová, celebrando este evento alegre. — 2Sa 6:14; 1Cr 15:27.

O Éfode Feito por Gideão. Depois de Gideão ter derrotado os midianitas, ele usou o ouro tomado como despojo para fazer um éfode. (Jz 8:26, 27) Alguns têm objetado a esta declaração à base de que 1.700 siclos (19,4 kg) de ouro seriam muito mais do que um éfode requeria. Tem-se oferecido uma possível explicação, de que Gideão também fez uma imagem de ouro. Mas a palavra "éfode" não significa uma imagem. Gideão era um homem de fé em Deus. Ele não faria o que Jeroboão fez posteriormente, quando este liderou as dez tribos na adoração de imagens de bezerros. Gideão havia mostrado sua disposição para com a adoração de Jeová quando lhe foi dada a oportunidade de estabelecer uma dinastia governante sobre Israel. Ele rejeitou esta oferta, dizendo: "Jeová é quem dominará sobre vós." (Jz 8:22, 23) É possível que grande parte do ouro tenha sido usada para pagar pelas pedras preciosas, e assim por diante, que possivelmente foram usadas no éfode. Quanto ao custo do éfode de Gideão, pode ter atingido o valor declarado (US$ 218.365 a taxas atuais), especialmente se foram usadas pedras preciosas para adorná-lo.

Apesar das boas intenções de Gideão, de comemorar a vitória que Jeová havia concedido a Israel, e de honrar a Deus, o éfode "serviu de laço para Gideão e para a sua casa", porque os israelitas cometeram imoralidade espiritual por adorá-lo. (Jz 8:27) No entanto, a Bíblia não diz que o próprio Gideão o adorasse; pelo contrário, o apóstolo Paulo o cita especificamente como um dentre a 'grande nuvem' de fiéis testemunhas pré-cristãs de Jeová. — He 11:32, 12:1.

Uso Idólatra. Um caso do uso de um éfode em adoração idólatra é encontrado em Juízes, capítulos 17 e 18. Este éfode, feito por certo efraimita, foi primeiro usado por um de seus próprios filhos que atuava como sacerdote perante uma imagem esculpida, daí, por um levita descendente de Moisés, o qual, embora não fosse da família sacerdotal de Arão, atuava como sacerdote. Por fim, o éfode e a imagem caíram nas mãos de homens da tribo de Dã, entre os quais o levita e seus filhos depois dele continuaram nesta posição idólatra na cidade de Dã, durante todos os dias em que a casa de Deus se encontrava em Silo.

ÉFODE, II. Pai de Haniel, que era maioral da tribo de Manassés, designado às ordens de Jeová como um dos responsáveis pela divisão da terra de Canaã em quinhões hereditários. — Núm 34:16, 18, 23, 29.

EFRAIM [Duplamente Frutífero].

1. Filho de José com sua esposa Asenate, filha de Potífera, sacerdote de Om. Efraim, irmão caçula de Manassés, nasceu no Egito antes de começar o período de sete anos de fome. O nome Efraim lhe foi dado por seu pai "porque, segundo [José]: 'Deus me fez fecundo na terra da minha miséria'". — Gên 41:50-52.

Jacó, no seu leito de morte, na realidade, adotou seus netos, Efraim e Manassés, e designou-os como iguais aos seus filhos diretos. (Gên 48:5) José, o pai deles, que recebeu o direito de primogênito entre os filhos de Jacó, recebeu duas partes da herança de seu pai por meio da herança tribal de Efraim e de Manassés. (1Cr 5:1; compare isso com Gên 48:21, 22; De 21:17; Jos 14:4.) Ao abençoar Efraim e Manassés, o patriarca Jacó deu preferência a Efraim, e indicou profeticamente que este se tornaria o maior. — Gên 48:13-20.

Primeiro Crônicas 7:20-27 fornece uma lista genealógica dos filhos de Efraim e de seus posteriores descendentes, concluindo com Josué, que conduziu os israelitas à Terra da Promessa. Ezer e Eleade, provavelmente filhos de Efraim, foram mortos pelos homens de Gate. Algum tempo depois da morte desses filhos, Efraim gerou Berias.

2. O nome Efraim também é aplicado à tribo que descendeu dele. Cerca de um ano depois do Êxodo do Egito, os 40.500 homens combatentes de Efraim, de 20 anos ou mais, ultrapassaram em 8.300 os varões vigorosos de Manassés. (Núm 1:1-3, 32-35) No entanto, no fim dos 40 anos de peregrinação pelo ermo, os varões registrados de Efraim totalizavam apenas 32.500, ou 20.200 menos do que os de Manassés. (Núm 26:34, 37) Todavia, predissera-se que Efraim se tornaria a maior. Moisés, quando abençoou os israelitas, mencionou profeticamente "as dezenas de milhares de Efraim", mas apenas "os milhares de Manassés". — De 33:17.

No ermo, os efraimitas, tendo como maioral a Elisama, foram designados a acampar do lado O do tabernáculo, junto com as tribos de Manassés e de Benjamim. Esta divisão de três tribos era a terceira na ordem de marcha. — Núm 2:18-24.

Território Tribal. O território designado à tribo de Efraim ocupava uma parte central de Canaã, ao O do Jordão. A tribo também tinha cidades encravadas no território de Manassés. Ao N, Efraim fazia fronteira com Manassés, e, ao S, com Benjamim e Dã. (Jos 16:1-9) Esta região, embora montanhosa e colinosa, é abençoada com um solo rico e fértil, e, nos tempos antigos, tinha muitas florestas. (Jos 17:15, 17, 18) O maioral Quemuel serviu como representante divinamente designado de Efraim na divisão da Terra da Promessa em parcelas de herança. — Núm 34:18, 24.

Em Silo, em Efraim, fora erguido o tabernáculo. (Jos 18:1) Além de Siquém, cidade de refúgio, diversas outras cidades levitas também estavam situadas no território de Efraim. (Jos 21:20-22; 1Cr 6:66-69) De uma destas cidades levitas, Gezer, os efraimitas não expulsaram os cananeus, mas sujeitaram-nos a trabalhos forçados de escravos. — Jos 16:10; Jz 1:29.

Efraim, de Josué a Davi. O território de Efraim foi cenário de numerosos eventos notáveis. Em Siquém, o efraimita Josué, sucessor de Moisés, congregou as tribos de Israel e apelou para que elas servissem fielmente a Jeová. (Jos 24:1, 14, 15) Também, aqui em Siquém, foram por fim sepultados os ossos de José, e tanto Josué como Eleazar, filho de Arão, foram sepultados na região montanhosa de Efraim. (Jos 24:29-33) Mais tarde, o juiz Eúde, benjamita, convocou os israelitas na região montanhosa de Efraim para lutar contra os moabitas. (Jz 3:26-30) Após a morte de Eúde, a profetisa Débora, de sua moradia na região montanhosa de Efraim, mandou buscar Baraque como o designado por Jeová para livrar Israel da opressão do Rei Jabim. No cântico de vitória de Baraque e Débora, Efraim é a primeira tribo mencionada. (Jz 4:1-7; 5:14) Numa época posterior, Tola, da tribo de Issacar, julgou Israel por 23 anos enquanto morava em Samir, na região montanhosa de Efraim. (Jz 10:1, 2) O último dos juízes, o profeta Samuel, da tribo de Levi, nasceu em Ramá, na região montanhosa de Efraim, e foi ali que ele, quando adulto, montou seu lar. — 1Sa 1:1, 2, 19, 20; 7:15-17.

O orgulho e o desejo extremado de destaque causaram sérias dificuldades aos efraimitas em seu relacionamento com as demais tribos. Esta característica já se manifestava no tempo dos juízes. Por exemplo, os efraimitas tentaram altercar com Gideão por não os ter chamado mais cedo para lutar contra Midiã. No entanto, o tato empregado por Gideão, nessa ocasião, evitou um choque. (Jz 8:1-3) Mais tarde, embora tivessem anteriormente rejeitado a oportunidade de ajudar Jefté, os efraimitas se sentiram desprezados por ele não os ter chamado para lutar contra os amonitas. Guerrearam contra Jefté e sofreram humilhante derrota; milhares deles foram mortos nos vaus do Jordão, onde foram identificados como efraimitas por causa da sua pronúncia da senha "Xibolete" como "Sibolete". — Jz 12:1-6; veja também 2Cr 25:10.

Após a morte do Rei Saul, entre aqueles que chegaram a Hébron para entregar o reinado a Davi havia 20.800 homens de Efraim. — 1Cr 12:23, 30.

Tribo Dominante do Reino Setentrional. Desde o tempo em que o reino foi dividido, durante o reinado de Roboão, Efraim, como a tribo mais destacada e influente do reino setentrional, fez um nome ruim para si. (Os 13:1) O primeiro rei, o efraimita Jeroboão, estabeleceu a adoração do bezerro em Dã e em Betel. (1Rs 11:26; 12:25-30) Este mergulho na idolatria nunca se inverteu.

Como a tribo dominante do reino setentrional, Efraim veio a representar o inteiro reino das dez tribos. (2Cr 25:7; Je 7:15) Por conseguinte, os profetas Oseias e Isaías dirigiram suas fortes denúncias contra Efraim. Oseias condenou Efraim por misturar-se com as nações, aprendendo obras de-las e servindo aos seus ídolos. Comparou Efraim a um bolo redondo que não foi virado, assado ou mesmo queimado na parte de baixo, mas não assado na parte de cima. (Os 7:8; compare isso com Sal 106:35, 36; Os 4:17; 12:14.) Embora estranhos tivessem esvaído as forças de Efraim, este, em vez de se voltar para Jeová, recorreu ao Egito em busca de ajuda, e fez um pacto com a Assíria. Assim, Efraim era como uma pomba simplória que não conseguiria escapar de ser apanhada numa rede. — Os 7:9-12; 8:9; compare isso com 2Rs 17:4; Os 12:1.

O profeta Isaías dirigiu-se aos 'orgulhosos ébrios de Efraim'. Sua independência do reino de Judá, e suas alianças com a Síria e com outras nações, os haviam afetado como uma bebida inebriante. No entanto, sofreriam um desastre. — Is 7:1, 2, 5-9, 17; 9:9-12; 17:3; 28:1-3.

Todavia, os profetas de Jeová predisseram também que cessaria o espírito de ciúme e de hostilidade existente entre Efraim (o reino das dez tribos) e Judá (o reino das duas tribos). (Is 11:13; Je 31:6) Judá e Efraim ficariam unidos, e Efraim seria restaurado no favor divino. — Je 31:18-20; 50:19; Ez 37:16-19; Za 10:7.

Ao passo que a tribo de Efraim estabeleceu uma reputação má, houve pessoas naquela tribo que seguiram o proceder correto. No reinado do Rei Asa, de Judá, por exemplo, muitos efraimitas bandearam-se para o seu lado ao verem que Jeová estava com ele. (2Cr 15:9) Mais tarde, efraimitas também estavam presentes na celebração da Páscoa, em Jerusalém, no primeiro ano do reinado de Ezequias, e depois disso participaram em destruir os objetos usados na idolatria. (2Cr 30:18; 31:1) Todavia, quando Ezequias mandou o convite para que os israelitas do N viessem à Páscoa, seus correios sofreram zombarias e caçoadas da parte de muitos em Efraim, Manassés e Zebulão. O orgulho impediu que esses se humilhassem e descessem a Jerusalém para a Páscoa. — 2Cr 30:10, 11.

3. Cidade que em geral se acha ser a mesma que a Efraíne capturada de Jeroboão, rei de Israel, por Abias, rei de Judá. (2Cr 13:19) No primeiro século EC, quando os líderes religiosos se consultaram para matar Jesus Cristo, este, com seus discípulos, foi para Efraim, para o país perto do ermo. (Jo 11:53, 54) O lugar que se costuma sugerir como desta cidade é a aldeia de et-Taiyiba, a uns 6 km ao ENE de Betel, e 3 km ao ESE do lugar sugerido de Baal-Hazor. (2Sa 13:23) Segundo o historiador judeu Josefo, o general romano Vespasiano conquistou Efraim durante a sua marcha contra Jerusalém. — The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), IV, 551 (ix, 9).

4. A "floresta de Efraim" era uma área ao L do Jordão, onde o exército do Rei Davi lutou com o do seu rebelde filho Absalão. (2Sa 18:6-8) O lugar propriamente da floresta de Efraim, na terra de Gileade, é desconhecido, mas ficava provavelmente na vizinhança de Maanaim. — 2Sa 17:22, 24, 26.

EFRAIMITAS. Veja EFRAIM N.º 2.

EFRAÍNE. Cidade tomada pelo Rei Abias, de Judá, na sua batalha contra Jeroboão, de Israel. (2Cr 13:19) Encontrava-se evidentemente no território da tribo de Efraim e parece ter sido a mesma que a cidade de Efraim, mencionada em 2 Samuel 13:23 e também em João 11:54. — Veja EFRAIM N.º 3.

EFRATA [Fertilidade].

1. Esposa de Calebe (Quelubai), filho de Esrom, da tribo de Judá. Ela casou-se com Calebe enquanto estavam em servidão no Egito, após a morte da esposa dele, Azuba. Efrata tornou-se mãe de Hur, e, com o tempo, bisavó de Bezalel, artífice perito muito famoso na construção do tabernáculo. — 1Cr 2:9, 19, 50; 4:4; Êx 35:30-35.

2. Evidentemente, nome primitivo de Belém, ou nome aplicado à região em volta dela. Os nomes Belém e Efrata são usados em conjunto em diversos textos. O relato sobre a morte de Raquel narra que ela foi enterrada "no caminho de Efrate [Efrata], isto é, Belém". (Gên 35:16, 19; 48:7) Membros da família de Elimeleque são chamados de "efratitas de Belém", e foi para Belém que a sua viúva Noemi retornou de Moabe. (Ru 1:2, 19) A bênção proferida sobre Boaz por ocasião do seu casamento com Rute foi que ele se mostrasse 'digno em Efrata e ganhasse fama em Belém'. (Ru 4:11) E, finalmente, na profecia a respeito do nascimento do Messias, os nomes são conjugados como "Belém Efrata". (Miq 5:2) Em vista disso, parece que a referência a Efrata, no Salmo 132:6, que trata da preocupação de Davi com a Arca do Pacto, também se aplica a esta cidade natal de Davi. — Veja BELÉM N.º 1.

EFRATE [Fertilidade]. Variante de Efrata.

EFRATITA.

1. Habitante de Belém, ou Efrata. — Ru 1:2; 1Sa 17:12.

2. No hebraico, o mesmo termo é aplicado a um membro da tribo de Efraim (Jz 12:5; 1Rs 11:26) ou a um habitante de Efraim, como na genealogia do levita Elcana. (1Sa 1:1) A edição revista e corrigida da versão Almeida verte o termo hebraico por "efrateu" em dois destes textos.

EFROM.

1. [duma raiz que significa “filhote [dos veados]”]. Filho hitita de Zoar, que possuía um campo em Macpela, defronte de Manre, isto é, em Hébron. Abraão comprou este campo de Efrom, junto com a caverna situada nele, como lugar de sepultura da sua esposa Sara. (Gên 23:3-20) Abraão pagou 400 siclos de prata (c. US$ 880) por este lote de sepultamento de família, no entanto, gerações mais tarde, ainda era chamado de “campo de Efrom”. — Gên 25:9; 49:29, 30; 50:13.

2. [Lugar de Pó]. Uma serra situada entre Neftoa e Quiriate-Jearim. (Jos 15:9) Encontrava-se na fronteira setentrional da tribo de Judá.

3. “Efrom” aparece em 2 Crônicas 13:19 tanto no texto massorético, como na Septuaginta grega e em outras versões; todavia, a versão marginal do texto massorético dá “Efraíne”. — Veja EFRAÍNE.

EGITO, EGÍPCIO. O Egito e seus habitantes são mencionados mais de 700 vezes na Bíblia. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, o Egito costuma ser designado pelo nome de Mizraim (Mits·rá·yim) (veja Gên 50:11), evidentemente indicando o destaque ou a predominância dos descendentes deste filho de Cã naquela região. (Gên 10:6) O nome Misr é aplicado ao Egito mesmo hoje pelos árabes. Em certos salmos, é chamado de “terra de Cã”. — Sal 105:23, 27; 106:21, 22.

Fronteiras e Geografia. (MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 531) Nos tempos antigos e modernos, o Egito deve sua existência ao rio Nilo, com seu vale fértil que se estende como uma faixa verde, longa e estreita, através das regiões desérticas, secas, do NE da África. O “Baixo Egito” compreendia a ampla região do delta, onde as águas do Nilo se abrem em leque antes de desaguar no mar Mediterrâneo, outrora pelo menos por cinco diferentes ramificações, e hoje somente por duas. Do ponto em que as águas do Nilo se dividem (na região do moderno Cairo) até a costa marítima, são cerca de 160 km. O lugar da antiga Heliópolis (a Om bíblica) acha-se a curta distância ao N do Cairo, ao passo que a alguns quilômetros ao S do Cairo encontra-se Mênfis (usualmente chamada Nofe na Bíblia). (Gên 46:20; Je 46:19; Os 9:6) Ao S de Mênfis começava a região do “Alto Egito”, que se estendia vale acima até a primeira catarata do Nilo em Assuã (antiga Siene), numa distância de uns 960 km. Muitos peritos, porém, consideram mais lógico referir-se à parte setentrional desta região como “Médio Egito”. Nesta região inteira (do Médio e do Alto Egito), o vale plano do Nilo raramente ultrapassa 20 km de largura, e acha-se confinado em ambos os lados por penhascos de pedra calcária e de arenito, que formam a beira do deserto propriamente dito.

Além da primeira catarata achava-se a Etiópia antiga, de modo que se diz que o Egito se estendia “desde Migdol [um lugar evidentemente no NE do Egito] até Siene, e até o termo da Etiópia”. (Ez 29:10) Ao passo que o termo hebraico Mits·rá·yim é usado regularmente para representar toda a terra do Egito, muitos peritos creem que, em alguns casos, representa o Baixo Egito, e talvez o Médio Egito, sendo o Alto Egito designado por “Patros”. A referência ao ‘Egito [Mizraim], Patros, e Cus’, em Isaías 11:11, tem como paralelo um alinhamento geográfico similar numa inscrição do rei assírio Esar-Hadom, que alista dentro de seu império as regiões de ‘Musur, Paturisi e Kusu’. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 290.

Limitado pelo mar Mediterrâneo ao N, e pela primeira catarata do Nilo, e pela Núbia-Etiópia ao S, o Egito estava cercado pelo deserto da Líbia (parte do Saara) ao O, e pelo deserto do Mar Vermelho ao L. Assim, na maior parte, ficava bastante isolado da influência externa e protegido contra invasões. O istmo do Sinai, no NE, porém, formava uma ponte para o continente asiático (1Sa 15:7; 27:8); e por esta ponte terrestre vinham as caravanas comerciais (Gên 37:25), os migrantes, e, com o tempo, os exércitos invasores. O “vale da torrente do Egito”, geralmente identificado com o uádi el-ʽArish, na península do Sinai, evidentemente marcava o extremo NE do domínio estabelecido do Egito. (2Rs 24:7) Além deste ficava Canaã. (Jos 15:4) No deserto ao O do Nilo havia pelo menos cinco oásis que vieram a constituir parte do reino egípcio. O grande oásis de Faium, a uns 72 km ao SO da antiga Mênfis, recebia água do Nilo por meio dum canal.

Economia dependente do Nilo. Ao passo que, hoje em dia, as regiões desérticas que ladeiam o vale do Nilo suprem pouca ou nenhuma vegetação para sustentar a vida animal, a evidência aponta que, nos tempos antigos, os uádis ou vales de torrentes abrigavam muitos animais de caça, que eram caçados pelos egípcios. Ainda assim, a chuva era evidentemente escassa, e atualmente é insignificante (o Cairo recebendo anualmente talvez 50 mm). Assim, a vida no Egito dependia das águas do Nilo.

Os mananciais do Nilo originam-se nas montanhas da Etiópia e em terras vizinhas. Ali, a chuva sazonal era suficiente para aumentar o fluxo do rio, fazendo com que transbordasse todo ano suas margens no Egito, nos meses de julho a setembro. (Veja Am 8:8; 9:5.) Isto não só fornecia água para os canais e as bacias de irrigação, mas também depositava valiosos sedimentos que enriqueciam o solo. Tão fértil era o vale do Nilo, e também o delta, que a região bem regada de Sodoma e Gomorra, contemplada por Ló, foi assemelhada "ao jardim de Jeová, semelhante à terra do Egito". (Gên 13:10) Todavia, a taxa de inundação variava; quando baixa, a produção era pequena e o resultado era a fome. (Gên 41:29-31) A ausência completa de inundações do Nilo representaria um desastre da pior espécie, convertendo o país num ermo árido. — Is 19:5-7; Ez 29:10-12.

Produtos. Sendo o Egito rico em sentido agrícola, suas principais safras eram cevada, trigo, espelta (um tipo de trigo) e linho (do qual se fabricava linho fino, exportado para muitas terras). (Êx 9:31, 32; Pr 7:16) Havia vinhas, tamareiras, figueiras e romãzeiras; hortas forneciam boa variedade de produtos, inclusive pepino, melancia, alho-porro, cebola e alho. (Gên 40:9-11; Núm 11:5; 20:5) A alusão feita a 'irrigar a terra com o pé' (De 11:10) é entendida por alguns peritos como referindo-se à utilização da roda movida a pé, para puxar água. Podia também referir-se ao uso do pé para abrir e fechar canais pelos quais fluía a água da irrigação.

Quando a fome atingia as terras vizinhas, as pessoas frequentemente desciam ao fértil Egito, como fez Abraão, no início do segundo milênio AEC. (Gên 12:10) Com o tempo, o Egito se tornou o celeiro de grande parte da área mediterrânea. O navio que partiu de Alexandria, no Egito, tomado pelo apóstolo Paulo em Mirra, no primeiro século EC, era um graneleiro a caminho da Itália. — At 27:5, 6, 38.

Outro importante produto de exportação do Egito era o papiro, planta semelhante ao junco, que crescia nos abundantes charcos do delta (Êx 2:3; compare isso com Jó 8:11), e que era usado para a fabricação de material de escrita. No entanto, não dispondo de florestas, o Egito se via obrigado a importar madeira da Fenícia, especialmente o cedro, de cidades portuárias tais como Tiro, onde os linhos multicoloridos do Egito eram muito apreciados. (Ez 27:7) Os templos e os monumentos egípcios eram construídos de granito e de pedras mais moles, tais como a pedra calcária, havendo abundantes reservas dela nas colinas que ladeiam o vale do Nilo. As casas comuns e até mesmo os palácios eram feitos de tijolos de argila (o material comum de construção dos prédios). As minas egípcias nas colinas ao longo do Mar Vermelho (bem como na vizinha península do Sinai), produziam ouro e cobre; exportavam-se também produtos de bronze feitos deste cobre. — Gên 13:1, 2; Sal 68:31.

A criação de gado desempenhava importante papel na economia egípcia; Abraão adquiriu ovelhas e gado bovino enquanto estava ali, bem como animais de carga, tais como jumentos e camelos. (Gên 12:16; Êx 9:3) No período em que José administrava o Egito (1737-1657 AEC) mencionam-se cavalos, e em geral se acha que estes vieram originalmente da Ásia. (Gên 47:17; 50:9) Talvez fossem no início obtidos por intercâmbio comercial ou por captura, durante as incursões egípcias nas terras ao NE. Por volta do tempo de Salomão, os cavalos egípcios eram suficientes em número e bastante prezados para constituírem uma importante mercadoria (junto com os carros egípcios) no mercado mundial. — 1Rs 10:28, 29.

Aves de rapina e aves necrófagas, tais como os abutres, milhafres, águias e falcões, bem como muitas aves aquáticas, tais como o íbis e o grou, eram numerosas. O Nilo abundava de peixes (Is 19:8), e eram comuns os hipopótamos e os crocodilos. (Veja a linguagem simbólica de Ez 29:2-5.) As regiões desérticas eram habitadas por chacais, lobos, hienas e leões, bem como por vários tipos de cobras e de outros répteis.

O Povo. O povo do Egito era camítico, pelo visto descendendo primariamente de Mizraim, filho de Cã. (Gên 10:6) Depois da dispersão em Babel (Gên 11:8, 9), muitos dos descendentes de Mizraim, tais como os ludins, os anamins, os leabins, os naftuins e os patrusins, talvez migrassem para o N da África. (Gên 10:6, 13, 14) Conforme já se observou, Patros (singular de Patrusim [patrusins]) é associado com o Alto Egito, e há alguma evidência para situar os naftuins na região do delta do Egito.

O que apoia o conceito de que havia ali uma população bastante mista, formada de diferentes tribos familiares é o fato de que este país, desde grande antiguidade, estava dividido em diversos setores (mais tarde chamados nomos) e que estas divisões continuaram a existir e faziam parte da estrutura governamental depois de o país ser unificado sob um único governante principal, na realidade, até o fim do império. Em geral se reconheciam 42 nomos, 20 no Baixo Egito e 22 no Alto Egito. A contínua distinção feita entre o Baixo e o Alto Egito, no decorrer da história do Egito, embora talvez se relacione com as diferenças geográficas, pode também indicar uma divisão original por tribos. Quando o governo central enfraquecia, o país tendia a partir-se nestes dois grandes setores e até chegava quase à desintegração em vários reinos pequenos, nos diversos nomos.

À base de antigas pinturas e também de cadáveres mumificados, os primitivos egípcios são descritos como tendo em geral estatura pequena, esbeltos, e embora não fossem negroides, tinham tez escura. No entanto, antigas pinturas e esculturas evidenciam uma considerável variedade.

Língua. Peritos hodiernos estão inclinados a classificar a língua egípcia por termos tais como "camito-semítica". Embora a língua fosse basicamente camítica, afirma-se que há muitos pontos análogos na sua gramática e na das línguas semíticas, bem como algumas similaridades no vocabulário. Apesar dessas aparentes ligações, reconhece-se que "o egípcio difere de todas as línguas semíticas bem mais do que qualquer uma delas difere das outras, e, pelo menos até que se defina mais de perto seu parentesco com as línguas africanas, o egípcio certamente tem de ser classificado como estando fora do grupo semítico". (Egyptian Grammar [Gramática Egípcia], de A. Gardiner, Londres, 1957, p. 3) José, ao ocultar sua identidade dos seus irmãos, falou-lhes por meio dum intérprete egípcio. — Gên 42:23.

De qualquer modo, há diversos fatores que tornam extremamente difícil chegar a conclusões definitivas sobre as formas mais antigas da língua usada no Egito. Um deles é o sistema de escrita egípcio. As inscrições antigas usavam sinais pictográficos (representações de animais, aves, plantas e outros objetos) junto com certas formas geométricas, um sistema de escrita que os gregos chamaram de hieróglifos. Embora certos sinais passassem a representar sílabas, estas eram usadas apenas para suplementar os hieróglifos e nunca para substituí-los. Outrossim, o som exato expresso por essas sílabas é hoje desconhecido. Consegue-se alguma ajuda das referências ao Egito em certos escritos cuneiformes que remontam aos meados do segundo milênio AEC. Transcrições gregas de nomes egípcios e de outras palavras, datando de aproximadamente o sexto século EC, e transcrições aramaicas desde cerca de um século mais tarde, também dão alguma ideia da grafia das palavras egípcias transcritas. Mas a reconstrução da fonologia, ou sistema de sons, do antigo egípcio ainda se baseia primariamente no copta, a forma de egípcio falado a partir do terceiro século EC. Portanto, a estrutura original do antigo vocabulário na sua forma mais primitiva, especialmente antes do período da peregrinação dos israelitas no Egito, só pode ser aproximada. Para exemplos, veja NÔ, NÔ-AMOM.

Além disso, o conhecimento de outras antigas línguas camíticas na África é hoje muito limitado, dificultando assim determinar o parentesco do egípcio com elas. Não se conhece nenhuma inscrição de línguas africanas não egípcias anterior ao começo da Era Comum. Os fatos apoiam o relato bíblico da confusão de línguas, e parece evidente que os primitivos egípcios, como descendentes de Cã através de Mizraim, falavam uma língua separada e distinta das línguas semíticas.

A escrita hieroglífica foi usada especialmente para inscrições em monumentos e em murais, em que se executavam os símbolos com muitos detalhes. Embora continuasse a ser usada até o começo da Era Comum, especialmente para textos religiosos, uma escrita menos laboriosa, que usava formas cursivas mais simplificadas, foi desenvolvida já numa data antiga por escribas que usavam tinta em couro e papiro. Chamada hierática, foi seguida por uma forma ainda mais cursiva chamada demótica, especialmente a partir do que é classificado como "Dinastia XXVI" (sétimo e sexto séculos AEC). O deciframento de textos egípcios só foi conseguido após a descoberta da Pedra Roseta, em 1799. Esta inscrição, agora no Museu Britânico, contém um decreto honrando Ptolomeu V (Epifânio) e data de 196 AEC. A escrita é em hieróglifos egípcios, em demótico e em grego, tornando-se o texto grego a chave que possibilitou o deciframento do egípcio.

Religião. O Egito era uma terra ultrarreligiosa, prenhe de politeísmo. Cada cidade, grande ou pequena, tinha sua própria deidade local, que levava o título de "Senhor da Cidade". Uma lista encontrada no túmulo de Tutmés III contém os nomes de cerca de 740 deuses. (Êx 12:12) Frequentemente, o deus era representado como casado com uma deusa que lhe dera um filho, "formando assim uma divina tríade ou trindade, em que o pai, ademais, nem sempre era o chefe, contentando-se, vez por outra, com o papel de príncipe consorte, ao passo que a deidade principal da localidade permanecia sendo a deusa". (New Larousse Encyclopedia of Mythology [Nova Enciclopédia Larousse de Mitologia], 1968, p. 10) Cada um dos deuses principais morava num templo não franqueado ao público. O deus era adorado pelos sacerdotes que o despertavam toda manhã com um hino, banhavam-no, vestiam-no e "alimentavam-no", e prestavam-lhe outros serviços. (Contraste isso com o Sal 121:3, 4; Is 40:28.) Nisso, os sacerdotes eram, pelo que parece, considerados como atuando quais representantes do Faraó, que se cria ser ele mesmo um deus vivo, o filho do deus Rá. Esta situação certamente enfatiza a coragem demonstrada por Moisés e Arão ao comparecerem perante Faraó, a fim de lhe apresentar o decreto do verdadeiro Deus, e aumenta o significado da resposta desdenhosa de Faraó: "Quem é Jeová, que eu deva obedecer à sua voz?" — Êx 5:2.

Apesar da grande quantidade de material arqueológico desenterrada no Egito na forma de templos, estátuas, pinturas religiosas e escritos, conhecem-se relativamente poucos fatos sobre as reais crenças religiosas dos egípcios. Os textos religiosos apresentam um quadro muito incompleto e fragmentário, em geral omitindo tanto ou mais do que incluem. Grande parte do entendimento da natureza dos seus deuses e das suas práticas baseia-se em dedução ou em dados providos por escritores gregos, tais como Heródoto e Plutarco.

No entanto, a falta de unidade de crença é evidente, uma vez que as diferenças regionais continuaram por toda a história egípcia, e resultaram num emaranhado de lendas e mitos, frequentemente contraditórios. Para exemplificar, o deus Rá era conhecido por 75 nomes e formas diferentes. Apenas umas poucas, falando-se em sentido relativo, dentre as centenas de deidades parecem ter recebido adoração numa base realmente nacional. A mais popular dentre elas era a trindade ou tríade composta de Osíris, Ísis (sua esposa) e Hórus (seu filho). Daí, havia os deuses "cósmicos", liderados por Rá, o deus-sol, e incluindo deuses da lua, do céu, do ar, da terra, do rio Nilo, e assim por diante. Em Tebas (a Nô bíblica), o deus Amom era bem destacado, e, com o tempo, foi-lhe concedido o título de "rei dos deuses", sob o nome de Amom-Rá. (Je 46:25) Nas épocas festivas (Je 46:17), os deuses eram levados em desfiles pelas ruas das cidades. Por exemplo, quando a imagem-ídolo de Rá era carregada pelos seus sacerdotes numa procissão religiosa, o povo fazia questão de estar presente, esperando obter assim algum mérito. Julgando que sua simples presença era um cumprimento de suas obrigações religiosas, os egípcios achavam que Rá, por sua vez, tinha a obrigação de continuar a fazê-los prosperar. Voltavam-se para ele apenas em busca de bênçãos e prosperidade materiais, jamais solicitando algo de natureza espiritual. Há numerosas correspondências entre os deuses principais do Egito e os de Babilônia, a evidência favorecendo Babilônia como a fonte e o Egito como o seu recebedor ou perpetuador. — Veja DEUSES E DEUSAS.

Estátua de Amom como um carneiro com o Faraó Taarca (Tiraca); ela simbolizava a proteção dada pelo deus ao governante.

Esta adoração politeísta não exerceu nenhum efeito benéfico ou edificante sobre os egípcios. Conforme observado pela Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica, 1959, Vol. 8, p. 53): "Maravilhosos mistérios, abrigando ocultamente profundas verdades, lhes são atribuídos pela imaginação clássica e moderna. Dispunham, naturalmente, de mistérios, como os achantis ou os ibos [tribos africanas]. É um erro, porém, imaginar que tais mistérios abrigassem a verdade, e que houvesse uma 'fé' oculta por trás deles." Na realidade, a evidência disponível mostra que a mágica e a superstição primitiva eram elementos básicos da adoração egípcia. (Gên 41:8) A mágica religiosa era empregada para prevenir doenças; o espiritismo era destacado, havendo muitos "encantadores", "médiuns espíritas" e "prognosticadores profissionais de eventos". (Is 19:3) Usavam-se amuletos e talismãs de "boa sorte", e escreviam-se encantamentos mágicos em pedaços de papiro amarrados no pescoço. (Veja De 18:10, 11.) Quando Moisés e Arão realizaram atos miraculosos pelo poder divino, os mágicos e feiticeiros sacerdotais das cortes de Faraó se exibiram em reproduzir tais atos por meio das artes mágicas, até que se viram obrigados a admitir seu fracasso. — Êx 7:11, 22; 8:7, 18, 19.

Adoração de animais. Esta adoração supersticiosa levou os egípcios a praticar uma forma muito degradante de idolatria, que envolvia a adoração de animais. (Veja Ro 1:22, 23.) Muitos dos deuses mais destacados eram regularmente representados com corpo humano e cabeça de animal ou de ave. Assim, o deus Hórus era representado com cabeça de falcão; Tot, com cabeça de íbis, ou de macaco. Em alguns casos, considerava-se que o deus estava realmente encarnado no corpo do animal, como no caso dos touros Ápis. O touro Ápis vivo, considerado como a encarnação do deus Osíris, era mantido num templo, e, ao morrer, recebia um requintado funeral e sepultamento. A crença de que alguns animais, tais como o gato, o babuíno, o crocodilo, o chacal e diversas aves eram sagrados em virtude de sua associação com certos deuses, resultou em os egípcios mumificarem literalmente centenas de milhares desses animais, enterrando-os em cemitérios especiais.

Por que insistiu Moisés em dizer que os sacrifícios de Israel seriam 'detestáveis para os egípcios'?

Sem dúvida, foi o fato de tantos animais diferentes serem venerados numa ou noutra parte do Egito que deu força e persuasão à insistência de Moisés em que se permitisse a Israel ir ao ermo para oferecer seus sacrifícios, dizendo ele a Faraó: "Suponhamos que sacrificássemos algo detestável para os egípcios, diante dos seus olhos; não nos apedrejariam?" (Êx 8:26, 27) Parece que a maioria dos sacrifícios mais tarde realmente ofertados por Israel teriam sido altamente ofensivos para os egípcios. (No Egito, o deus-sol Rá era às vezes representado por um bezerro nascido da vaca celestial.) Por outro lado, conforme mostrado sob DEUSES E DEUSAS, Jeová, com as Dez Pragas sobre o Egito, executou julgamentos em "todos os deuses do Egito", causando-lhes grande humilhação, ao passo que tornava Seu próprio nome conhecido em todo o país. — Êx 12:12.

A nação de Israel não escapou totalmente da contaminação por tal adoração falsa, durante os dois séculos em que permaneceu no Egito (Jos 24:14), e isto, sem dúvida, em grande medida, era a raiz das atitudes erradas demonstradas logo no início da jornada do Êxodo. Embora Jeová mandasse que os israelitas jogassem fora "os ídolos sórdidos do Egito", deixaram de fazê-lo. (Ez 20:7, 8; 23:3, 4, 8) Fazerem um bezerro de ouro para ser adorado no deserto provavelmente refletia a adoração egípcia de animais, que havia infectado alguns israelitas. (Êx 32:1-8; At 7:39-41) Pouco antes de Israel entrar na Terra da Promessa, Jeová de novo deu um aviso explícito contra qualquer associação de formas animais ou de quaisquer dos corpos "cósmicos" com a adoração Dele por Israel. (De 4:15-20) Todavia, a adoração de animais emergiu de novo, séculos depois, quando Jeroboão, que pouco antes voltara do Egito, fez dois bezerros de ouro para adoração, ao obter a realeza do reino setentrional de Israel. (1Rs 12:2, 28, 29) É digno de nota que as Escrituras inspiradas registradas por Moisés estão totalmente livres de qualquer corrupção por parte de tal idolatria e superstição egípcias.

A praga da pestilência trazida por Jeová sobre o gado do Egito desacreditou o seu deus Ápis, representado por um touro.

Ausência de qualidades espirituais e morais. Alguns peritos sugerem que qualquer conceito de pecado manifestado em certos textos religiosos egípcios era o resultado posterior da influência semítica. Todavia, a confissão do pecado era sempre em sentido negativo, conforme comenta a Encyclopædia Britannica (1959, Vol. 8, p. 56): "Quando [o egípcio] confessava, ele não dizia: 'Sou culpado'; dizia: 'Não sou culpado.' Sua confissão era negativa, e o onus probandi [o ônus da prova] cabia a seus juízes, que, segundo os papiros funerários, sempre davam o veredicto em seu favor — ou, de qualquer modo, esperava-se e aguardava-se que o fizessem." (Contraste isso com Sal 51:1-5.) A religião do Egito antigo parece ter sido mormente uma questão de cerimônias e feitiços, destinados a alcançar certos resultados desejados através da providência de um ou mais de seus numerosos deuses.

Embora se faça a afirmação de que existia uma forma de monoteísmo durante os reinados dos faraós Amenotep III e Amenotep IV (Aquenatão), quando a adoração do deus-sol, Áton, se tornou quase que exclusiva, não se tratava dum verdadeiro monoteísmo. O próprio faraó continuou a ser adorado como deus. E, mesmo neste período, não existia qualidade ética nos textos religiosos egípcios, sendo que os hinos ao deus-sol, Áton, apenas o louvavam pelo seu calor vitalizador, mas continuavam isentos de quaisquer expressões de louvor ou de apreço por qualidades espirituais ou morais. Assim sendo, carece inteiramente de fundamento qualquer sugestão de que o monoteísmo dos escritos de Moisés resultou da influência egípcia.

Crenças a respeito dos mortos. De notável destaque, na religião egípcia, era a preocupação com os mortos, e a solicitude em assegurar o bem-estar e a felicidade da pessoa depois da "mudança" da morte. A crença na reencarnação ou na transmigração da alma era uma doutrina que permeava tudo. Cria-se que a alma era imortal; todavia, cria-se que o corpo humano também tinha de ser preservado, a fim de que a alma pudesse retornar e usá-lo ocasionalmente. Por causa desta crença, os egípcios embalsamavam seus mortos. O túmulo em que se colocava o corpo mumificado era considerado como o “lar” do falecido. As pirâmides eram colossais residências dos mortos da realeza. As necessidades e os luxos da vida, inclusive joias, roupa, mobília e suprimentos de alimento, eram estocados nos túmulos para serem usados no futuro pelo falecido, junto com feitiços e encantamentos escritos (tais como o “Livro dos Mortos”), para dar aos falecidos proteção contra os espíritos maus. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 533) No entanto, tais encantamentos nem sequer os protegiam dos ladrões humanos de túmulos que, com o tempo, saquearam virtualmente todo túmulo principal.

Embora os corpos de Jacó e de José fossem embalsamados, no caso de Jacó, sem dúvida, isto foi feito principalmente para preservar o corpo até que pudesse ser transferido para um sepulcro na Terra da Promessa, como expressão da sua fé. Especialmente no caso de José, o embalsamento pode ter sido realizado pelos egípcios como expressão de respeito e de honra. — Gên 47:29-31; 50:2-14, 24-26.

Vida e Cultura Egípcias. Os peritos, já por muito tempo, têm apresentado o Egito como a ‘mais antiga civilização’, e como a fonte de muitas das mais antigas invenções e do progresso da humanidade. Mais recentemente, porém, a evidência cumulativa tem apontado para a Mesopotâmia como o chamado berço da civilização. Acha-se que certos métodos arquitetônicos egípcios, o uso da roda, talvez os princípios básicos da sua escrita pictográfica, e especialmente os aspectos fundamentais da religião egípcia, têm todos origem mesopotâmica. Naturalmente, isto está de acordo com o registro bíblico da dispersão dos povos após o Dilúvio.

As mais conhecidas realizações da arquitetura egípcia são as pirâmides construídas em Gizé, pelos faraós Cufu (Quéops), Khafre e Menkure, do que é classificado como a “Dinastia IV”. A maior delas, a de Cufu, tem uma base que abrange cerca de 5,3 ha, com o topo a uns 137 m de altura (o equivalente de um moderno edifício de 40 andares). Calcula-se que se usaram 2.300.000 blocos de pedra, pesando em média 2,3 toneladas métricas cada um. Os blocos foram talhados com tanto cuidado, que se ajustavam entre si com uma margem de milímetros. Construíram-se também templos colossais; um deles, em Karnak, em Tebas (a bíblica Nô; Je 46:25; Ez 30:14-16), era a maior estrutura colunar já construída pelo homem.

A circuncisão era uma prática regular entre os egípcios, desde tempos antigos, e a Bíblia os alista junto com outros povos circuncidados. — Je 9:25, 26.

A Grande Esfinge parece montar guarda diante das pirâmides de Gizé.

As gigantescas estátuas em Abu Simbel, todas em honra de Ramsés II.

Não se conhece propriamente nenhum código de lei do Egito; leis existiam, mas, pelo visto, eram apenas decretos reais, como aqueles de Faraó a respeito do trabalho dos israelitas de fabricar tijolos e a ordem de afogar todos os recém-nascidos meninos israelitas. (Êx 1:8-22; 5:6-18; compare isso com Gên 41:44.) Impunham-se impostos a todas as safras de proprietários de terra, e isto parece ter tido início nos dias de José, quando todas as terras, exceto as dos sacerdotes, tornaram-se propriedade de Faraó. (Gên 47:20-26) Os impostos não só incluíam parte dos produtos ou do gado, mas também trabalho nos projetos governamentais e serviço militar. A punição por crimes incluíam o decepamento do nariz, o exílio para trabalho em minas, espancamentos com varas, encarceramento e morte, frequentemente por decapitação. — Gên 39:20; 40:1-3, 16-22.

Os costumes de casamento permitiam a poligamia e casamentos entre irmão e irmã, sabendo-se desta última prática em alguns lugares do Egito até o segundo século EC. Sabe-se de certos faraós que se casaram com sua irmã, evidentemente porque nenhuma outra mulher era considerada suficientemente sagrada para as núpcias com tal "deus vivente". A Lei dada aos israelitas, depois de terem saído do Egito, proibia casamentos incestuosos, declarando: "Não deveis fazer assim como faz a terra do Egito . . . [nem] como faz a terra de Canaã." — Le 18:3, 6-16.

O antigo conhecimento de medicina, dos egípcios, tem sido muitas vezes apresentado como bastante científico e avançado. Embora haja evidência de certo conhecimento de anatomia, e se tenham desenvolvido e catalogado certos métodos de cirurgia simples, também se revela muita ignorância. Assim, ao passo que um texto de papiro, egípcio, fala do coração como ligado por vasos com todas as partes do corpo, o mesmo texto apresenta os vasos, não como transportando sangue, mas ar, água, sê-

A educação parece ter consistido primariamente de escolas para escribas, administradas pelos sacerdotes. Além de os escribas reais serem peritos na escrita egípcia, eles estavam também cabalmente familiarizados com o cuneiforme aramaico; já em meados do segundo milênio AEC, governantes vassalos, na Síria e na Palestina, comunicavam-se regularmente em aramaico com a capital egípcia. A matemática egípcia achava-se suficientemente desenvolvida para permitir as estupendas façanhas de construção já mencionadas, e algum conhecimento de geometria e dos princípios algébricos é evidente. Pode-se notar que "Moisés foi instruído em toda a sabedoria dos egípcios". (At 7:22) Embora houvesse muita sabedoria falsa no Egito, também havia disponível conhecimento de valor prático.

Governo e lei giravam em torno do rei ou faraó, considerado como deus em forma humana. Ele governava o país por meio de subordinados, ou ministros, e mediante chefes feudais, cujo poder, em tempos de fraqueza régia, rivalizava com o do rei. É possível que esses últimos maiorais fossem deveras encarados pelos sob o seu domínio como virtuais reis, explicando assim a menção bíblica de "os reis [plural] do Egito", nas referências a tempos específicos. (2Rs 7:6; Je 46:25) Após a conquista egípcia da Núbia-Etiópia, ao S, a região foi governada por um vice-rei chamado "o filho do rei de Cus", e há também evidência dum vice-rei egípcio na Fenícia.

men e muco. Não havia somente um mal-entendido fundamental sobre a função do corpo vivo, mas os textos de medicina são muito dosados com magia e superstição; feitiços e encantamentos mágicos constituem a maior parte desta informação. Os remédios não somente incluíam ervas e plantas benéficas, mas também prescreviam ingredientes tais como sangue de camundongo, urina, ou excremento de moscas, os quais, junto com os feitiços, "destinavam-se a expulsar pela pura repugnância o demônio que possuía o corpo do homem". (History of Mankind [História da Humanidade], por J. Hawkes e Sir Leonard Woolley, 1963, Vol. I, p. 695) Esta falta de entendimento pode ter contribuído para algumas das "moléstias malignas do Egito", que provavelmente incluíam elefantíase, disenteria, varíola, peste bubônica, oftalmia e outros padecimentos; Israel podia obter proteção contra estes pela fiel obediência. (De 7:15; compare isso com De 28:27, 58-60; Am 4:10.) As medidas higiênicas impostas aos israelitas após o Êxodo estão em dramático contraste com muitas das práticas descritas nos textos egípcios. — Le 11:32-40; veja DOENÇAS E TRATAMENTO.

Os ofícios egípcios abrangiam as coisas costumeiras: cerâmica, tecelagem, metalurgia, a fabricação de joias e de amuletos religiosos, bem como muitas outras habilidades. (Is 19:1, 9, 10) Já por volta de meados do segundo milênio AEC, o Egito era centro da fabricação de vidro. — Veja Jó 28:17.

Os transportes no país giravam em torno do rio Nilo. Os ventos prevalecentes vindos do N ajudavam os barcos a vela a subir o rio, ao passo que os barcos procedentes do S eram levados pela correnteza. Além desta principal "via", havia canais e umas poucas estradas, levando, por exemplo, para cima a Canaã.

O comércio internacional com outros países africanos era realizado por caravanas e por navios no Mar Vermelho, ao passo que grandes galeras egípcias levavam cargas e passageiros a muitos portos do mar Mediterrâneo oriental.

A vestimenta egípcia era simples. Os homens, durante grande parte da primitiva história, usavam apenas uma espécie de avental, com pregas na frente; mais tarde, apenas os das classes mais humildes deixavam a parte superior do corpo despida. As mulheres usavam uma longa camisola bem ajustada, com alças, sendo a vestimenta frequentemente de linho fino. Era costumeiro andar descalço, um dos possíveis fatores da prevalência de certas doenças.

Pinturas egípcias mostram os homens de cabelo curto ou rapado, e bem barbeados. (Gên 41:14) O uso de cosméticos era comum entre as mulheres.

Os lares egípcios variavam desde as simples cabanas dos pobres até as espaçosas vilas dos ricos, cercadas de jardins, pomares e lagoinhas. Visto que Potifar serviu como oficial de Faraó, seu lar provavelmente era uma bela vila. (Gên 39:1, 4-6) A mobília variava desde banquinhos simples até elaboradas cadeiras e leitos. As casas de tamanho maior em geral eram construídas em volta dum pátio aberto. (Veja Êx 8:3, 13.) Sovar a massa de farinha e cozinhar costumavam ser feitos no pátio. O alimento da maioria dos egípcios provavelmente era pão de cevada, hortaliças, peixes (abundantes e baratos; Núm 11:5) e cerveja, a bebida comum. Aqueles que se podiam dar ao luxo disso acrescentavam diversos tipos de carne à sua alimentação. — Êx 16:3.

Os militares egípcios manejavam as armas costumeiras daquele tempo: arco e flecha, lança ou dardo, maça, acha e adaga. Carros puxados a cavalo desempenhavam um grande papel nas suas guerras. Embora a armadura para proteger o corpo parece ter tido pouco uso nos tempos primitivos, mais tarde passou a ser usado também o capacete, com frequência com plumas. De modo que a profecia de Jeremias (46:2-4) fornece uma descrição exata dos militares egípcios no sétimo século AEC. Grande parte do exército parece ter sido formada de recrutas dentre o povo; em tempos posteriores, empregavam-se regularmente tropas mercenárias de outras nações. — Je 46:7-9.

História. A história egípcia tirada de fontes seculares é muito incerta, especialmente para os períodos primitivos. — Veja CRONOLOGIA (Cronologia Egípcia).

Visita de Abraão. Algum tempo depois do Dilúvio (2370-2369 AEC) e da subsequente separação dos povos em Babel, os camitas ocuparam o Egito. Por volta da época (em algum tempo entre 1943 AEC e 1932 AEC) em que a fome obrigou Abraão (Abrão) a deixar Canaã e descer ao Egito, já funcionava ali um reino sob um faraó (cujo nome não é fornecido na Bíblia). — Gên 12:4, 14, 15; 16:16.

O Egito, pelo visto, era bem receptivo aos estrangeiros, e parece que não se mostrou nenhuma hostilidade para com o nômade Abraão, habitante em tendas. Todavia, o temor de Abraão de ser assassinado por causa de sua linda esposa se baseava, evidentemente, em fatos, e indica o baixo nível da moral no Egito. (Gên 12:11-13) As pragas trazidas sobre o Faraó, por este ter levado Sara para a casa dele, foram eficazes e resultaram em Abraão receber ordens de deixar o país; quando partiu, levou consigo não somente sua esposa, mas também bens aumentados. (Gên 12:15-20; 13:1, 2) Talvez Agar, a serva de Sara, fosse adquirida durante a permanência de Abraão no Egito. (Gên 16:1)

Agar tornou-se a mãe de Ismael, filho de Abraão (1932 AEC), e, ao crescer, Ismael casou-se com uma mulher do Egito, a terra natal da sua mãe. (Gên 16:3, 4, 15, 16; 21:21) Assim, os ismaelitas, como raça, eram de início predominantemente egípcios, e a extensão dos seus locais de acampamento às vezes os levava perto da fronteira do Egito. — Gên 25:13-18.

Uma segunda fome de novo tornou o Egito um lugar para se buscar alívio, mas então (algum tempo depois de 1843 AEC, ano da morte de Abraão), Jeová instruiu Isaque que rejeitasse qualquer ideia de se mudar para aquele país. — Gên 26:1, 2.

José no Egito. Daí, quase dois séculos depois da peregrinação de Abraão no Egito, José, filho jovem de Jacó, foi vendido a uma caravana midianita-ismaelita e revendido no Egito a um oficial da corte de Faraó (1750 AEC). (Gên 37:25-28, 36) Como José explicou mais tarde a seus irmãos, Deus permitiu isso, a fim de preparar o caminho para a futura preservação de toda a família de Jacó durante um período de extrema fome. (Gên 45:5-8) O relato dos principais eventos da vida de José apresenta um quadro inegavelmente exato do Egito. (Veja JOSÉ N.º 1) Os títulos de oficiais, os costumes, a vestimenta, o uso de magia e muitos outros pormenores descritos podem ser corroborados por dados obtidos de monumentos, quadros e escritos egípcios. A investidura de José como vice-rei do Egito (Gên 41:42), por exemplo, segue o procedimento retratado em inscrições e murais egípcios. — Gên caps. 45-47.

A repugnância dos egípcios de comer com os hebreus, como se deu na refeição que José proveu para seus irmãos, pode ter sido por motivo de orgulho, ou de preconceitos religiosos ou raciais, ou pode ter sido por detestarem pastores. (Gên 43:31, 32; 46:31-34) Esta última atitude, por sua vez, se devia possivelmente apenas a um sistema de castas egípcio, em que os pastores parecem ter-se situado perto do nível mais baixo; ou talvez porque as terras cultiváveis eram limitadas, havia forte desagrado para com aqueles que procuravam pastos para seus rebanhos.

"Período dos Hicsos." Muitos comentadores situam a entrada de José no Egito, bem como a de seu pai com a família, no que é popularmente conhecido como o Período dos Hicsos. Todavia, conforme Merrill Unger comenta (Archaeology and the Old Testament [Arqueologia e o Velho Testamento], 1964, p. 134): "Infelizmente, [este período] é um período de grande obscuridade no Egito, e a conquista dos hicsos só é entendida mui imperfeitamente."

Alguns peritos situam os hicsos nas "Dinastias XIII a XVII", com um domínio de 200 anos; outros os restringem às "Dinastias XV e XVI", de um século e meio ou apenas um século. O nome hicsos tem sido interpretado por alguns como significando "Reis Pastores", e por outros, "Governantes de Países Estrangeiros". Tem havido conjecturas ainda mais variadas sobre sua raça ou nacionalidade, sugerindo-se indo-europeus do Cáucaso ou mesmo da Ásia Central, hititas, governantes siro-palestinos (cananeus ou amorreus), e tribos árabes.

Alguns arqueólogos retratam a "conquista dos hicsos" do Egito como hordas setentrionais levarem de roldão a Palestina e o Egito com carros velozes, ao passo que outros a classificam de conquista rastejante, isto é, uma infiltração gradual de nômades e seminômades migrantes, que assumiram vagarosamente, aos poucos, o controle do país, ou que, com um rápido golpe de estado, assumiram o governo existente. No livro The World of the Past (O Mundo do Passado; Parte V, 1963, p. 444), a arqueóloga Jacquetta Hawkes declara: "Não mais se cogita que os governantes hicsos . . . representem a invasão duma horda conquistadora de asiáticos. O nome parece significar Governantes das Terras Altas, e tratava-se de grupos nômades de semitas que há muito haviam chegado ao Egito para comerciar e para outros fins pacíficos." Ao passo que isso talvez represente o atual conceito popular, ainda deixa o problema difícil de explicar como tais "grupos nômades" podiam assumir o controle da terra do Egito, especialmente visto que se considera que a "Décima Segunda Dinastia", anterior a este período, levou o país a um auge de poder.

Como diz The Encyclopedia Americana (A Enciclopédia Americana; 1956, Vol. 14, p. 595): "O único relato pormenorizado sobre [os hicsos] em qualquer antigo escritor é uma passagem não fidedigna duma obra perdida de Mâneto, citada por Josefo em sua réplica a Apião." Declarações atribuídas por Josefo a Mâneto são a fonte do nome hicsos. É interessante que Josefo, afirmando citar Mâneto palavra por palavra, apresenta o relato de Mâneto como ligando os hicsos diretamente com os israelitas. Josefo, pelo que parece, aceita esta ligação, mas argumenta veementemente contra muitos dos pormenores do relato. Parece preferir a tradução de hicsos como "pastores cativos", em vez de "reis pastores". Mâneto, segundo Josefo, apresenta os hicsos como conquistando o Egito sem batalha, destruindo cidades e "os templos dos deuses", e provocando matança e devastação. São apresentados como se fixando na região do delta. Por fim, diz-se que os egípcios se sublevaram, travaram uma longa e terrível guerra, com 480.000 homens, cercaram os hicsos na sua cidade principal, Avaris, e então, de modo estranho, chegaram a um acordo que permitiu que os hicsos deixassem o país sem sofrer da-nos, junto com suas famílias e seus bens, e daí, esses foram para a Judeia e construíram Jerusalém. — Against Apion (Contra Apião), I, 73-105 (14-16); 223-232 (25, 26).

Nos escritos contemporâneos, os nomes desses governantes eram precedidos por títulos tais como "Bom Deus", "Filho de Re'" ou Hik-khoswet, "Governante de Países Estrangeiros". O termo "hicsos" evidentemente deriva deste último título. Documentos egípcios logo depois do seu domínio chamam-nos de asiáticos. Sobre este período da história egípcia observou C. E. DeVries: "Na tentativa de correlacionar a história secular com os dados bíblicos, alguns peritos têm tentado equacionar a expulsão dos hicsos do Egito com o Êxodo israelita, mas a cronologia exclui tal identificação, e também outros fatores tornam esta hipótese insustentável. . . . A origem dos hicsos é incerta; vieram de alguma parte da Ásia e levavam na maior parte nomes semíticos." — The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional), editada por G. Bromiley, 1982, Vol. 2, p. 787.

Visto que a elevação de José ao poder e os benefícios que isto trouxe a Israel eram por providência divina, não há necessidade de se procurar outro motivo na forma de amistosos "Reis Pastores". (Gên 45:7-9) Mas é possível que o relato de Mâneto, que é realmente a base para a ideia dos "hicsos", represente simplesmente uma tradição deturpada, oriunda dos anteriores esforços dos egípcios de justificar o que ocorreu na sua terra durante a permanência israelita no Egito. O tremendo efeito produzido no país pela ascensão de José ao cargo de governante em exercício (Gên 41:39-46; 45:26); a profunda mudança que sua administração trouxe, resultando em os egípcios venderem suas terras e a eles próprios a Faraó (Gên 47:13-20); a taxa de 20 por cento que dali em diante pagaram de seus produtos (Gên 47:21-26); os 215 anos de residência dos israelitas em Gósen, os quais por fim excederam a população nativa em número e força, segundo a declaração de Faraó (Êx 1:7-10, 12, 20); as Dez Pragas e a devastação que estas causaram, não só à economia egípcia, mas, ainda mais, às suas crenças religiosas e ao prestígio de seu sacerdócio (Êx 10:7; 11:1-3; 12:12, 13); o Êxodo de Israel, depois da morte de todos os primogênitos do Egito, e, então, a destruição da nata das forças militares do Egito no Mar Vermelho (Êx 12:2-38; 14:1-28) — todas estas coisas certamente exigiram alguma tentativa de explicação por parte do elemento oficial egípcio.

Não deve jamais ser esquecido que o registro da história no Egito, como em muitas terras do Oriente Médio, estava inseparavelmente ligado ao sacerdócio, sob cuja tutela eram treinados os escribas. Seria muitíssimo incomum se alguma explicação propagandística não fosse inventada para explicar o total fracasso dos deuses egípcios em impedir o desastre que Jeová Deus trouxe sobre o Egito e o seu povo. A história, mesmo a história recente, registra muitas ocasiões em que tal propaganda torceu tão crassamente os fatos, que os oprimidos foram apresentados como opressores, e as vítimas inocentes como agressores perigosos e cruéis. O relato de Mâneto (de mais de mil anos depois do Êxodo), se foi mesmo preservado por Josefo com certo grau de exatidão, talvez represente as tradições distorcidas que foram passadas adiante através de gerações sucessivas de egípcios, para explicar os elementos básicos do verdadeiro relato, contido na Bíblia, a respeito da estada de Israel no Egito. — Veja ÊXODO (Autenticidade do Relato do Êxodo).

Escravização de Israel. Uma vez que a Bíblia não cita nominalmente o faraó que começou a oprimir os israelitas (Êx 1:8-22), nem o faraó perante o qual compareceram Moisés e Arão, e em cujo reinado se deu o Êxodo (Êx 2:23; 5:1), e visto que tais eventos ou foram deliberadamente omitidos dos registros egípcios ou os registros foram destruídos, não é possível atribuir esses eventos a qualquer dinastia específica, nem ao reinado de qualquer faraó específico da história secular. Frequentemente se sugere Ramsés (Ramessés) II (da "Dinastia XIX") como o faraó da opressão, à base da referência à construção das cidades de Pitom e Ramsés pelos trabalhadores israelitas. (Êx 1:11) Sustenta-se que essas cidades foram construídas no reinado de Ramsés II. Merrill Unger, em Archaeology and the Old Testament (p. 149), comenta: "Mas, à luz do notório costume de Ramsés II, de assumir o crédito pelas consecuções de seus predecessores, tais sítios foram, por certo, simplesmente reconstruídos ou ampliados por ele." Na realidade, o nome "Ramessés" parece ter-se aplicado a todo um distrito já no tempo de José. — Gên 47:11.

Por meio da libertação provida por Deus mediante Moisés, a nação de Israel foi liberta da "casa dos escravos" e do "forno de fundição de ferro", como o Egito continuou a ser chamado pelos escritores bíblicos. (Êx 13:3; De 4:20; Je 11:4; Miq 6:4) Quarenta anos depois, Israel iniciou a conquista de Canaã. Tem havido um esforço de ligar este acontecimento bíblico com a situação descrita no que é conhecido como as Tabuinhas de Amarna, encontradas em Tell el-Amarna, no Nilo, a uns 270 km ao S do Cairo. As 379 tabuinhas são cartas de vários governantes cananeus e sírios (inclusive os de Hébron, Jerusalém e Laquis), muitas delas contendo queixas ao faraó em exercício (geralmente Aquenatão) sobre as incursões e depredações causadas pelos "habirus" ('apiru). Ao passo que alguns peritos tentaram identificar os "habirus" com os hebreus ou israelitas, o conteúdo das próprias cartas não permite isto. Mostram que os habirus eram simplesmente incursores, às vezes aliados com certos governantes cananeus numa rivalidade entre cidades ou entre regiões. Entre as cidades ameaçadas pelos habirus achava-se Biblos, no N do Líbano, muito distante do âmbito dos ataques israelitas. Também, não apresentam um quadro que se compare com as grandes batalhas e vitórias da conquista israelita de Canaã após o Êxodo. — Veja HEBREU (Os "Habirus").

A permanência de Israel no Egito ficou indelevelmente gravada na memória da nação, e sua miraculosa libertação daquela terra era regularmente relembrada como notável prova da Divindade de Jeová. (Êx 19:4; Le 22:32, 33; De 4:32-36; 2Rs 17:36; He 11:23-29) Daí a expressão: "Eu sou Jeová, teu Deus, desde a terra do Egito." (Os 13:4; compare isso com Le 11:45.) Nenhuma circunstância ou evento singular ultrapassou isto, até que sua libertação de Babilônia lhes deu prova adicional do poder de libertação de Jeová. (Je 16:14, 15) Sua experiência no Egito ficou registrada na Lei que lhes foi dada (Êx 20:2, 3; De 5:12-15); era a base para a festividade da Páscoa (Êx 12:1-27; De 16:1-3); orientava-os em seu modo de lidar com os residentes forasteiros (Êx 22:21; Le 19:33, 34) e com as pessoas pobres que se vendiam quais escravos (Le 25:39-43, 55; De 15:12-15); dava-lhes uma base legal para a escolha e a santificação da tribo de Levi para o serviço no santuário (Núm 3:11-13). Com base na permanência de Israel como estrangeiros no Egito, os egípcios que satisfizessem certos requisitos podiam ser aceitos na congregação de Israel. (De 23:7, 8) Os reinos de Canaã e os povos das terras circunvizinhas sentiram espanto e medo por causa dos relatos que ouviram sobre o poder de Deus demonstrado contra o Egito, pavimentando o caminho para a conquista feita por Israel (Êx 18:1, 10, 11; De 7:17-20; Jos 2:10, 11; 9:9) e lembrada por séculos depois disso. (1Sa 4:7, 8) A inteira nação de Israel, em toda a sua história, celebrou estes acontecimentos em seus cânticos. — Sal 78:43-51; Sal 105 e 106; 136:10-15.

Após a conquista de Canaã por Israel. É só no reinado do Faraó Mernepta (Menepta), filho de Ramsés II (na parte final da "Décima Nona Dinastia"), que há uma menção egípcia direta de Israel; de fato, esta é a única menção direta deles como povo até agora encontrada nos registros egípcios antigos. Numa estela de vitória, Mernepta se jacta das derrotas que infligiu a várias cidades de Canaã, e então afirma: "Israel é desolado, sua semente já não existe." Embora seja aparentemente apenas uma jactância vã, isto parece evidenciar que Israel já se achava então estabelecido em Canaã.

Durante o período dos juízes, ou durante os reinados de Saul e de Davi, não se relata nenhum contato de Israel com o Egito, além da menção do combate entre um dos guerreiros de Davi e um egípcio "de tamanho extraordinário". (2Sa 23:21) Já no reinado de Salomão (1037-998 AEC), as relações entre as duas nações eram tais, que Salomão pôde fazer uma aliança matrimonial com o faraó, aceitando a filha deste como esposa. (1Rs 3:1) Não se declara exatamente quando este faraó não identificado conquistou Gezer, então oferecida à sua filha como presente de casamento e de despedida, ou como dote. (1Rs 9:16) Salomão também efetuou operações comerciais com o Egito, negociando cavalos e carros de fabricação egípcia. — 2Cr 1:16, 17.

O Egito, porém, era um refúgio para certos inimigos dos reis de Jerusalém. Hadade, o edomita, escapou para o Egito, depois de Davi devastar Edom. Embora semita, Hadade foi honrado pelo faraó com uma casa, com alimentos e com terras; casou-se com alguém da realeza, e sua prole, Genubate, era tratado como filho de faraó. (1Rs 11:14-22) Mais tarde, Jeroboão, que se tornou rei do reino setentrional de Israel depois da morte de Salomão, igualmente se refugiou no Egito por certo tempo, no reinado de Sisaque. — 1Rs 11:40.

Sisaque (conhecido como Xexonque I nos registros egípcios) fundara uma dinastia líbia de faraós (a "Dinastia XXII"), tendo por capital Bubástis, na região oriental do delta. No quinto ano do reinado de Roboão, filho de Salomão (993 AEC), Sisaque invadiu Judá com uma poderosa força de carros, cavalaria e soldados de infantaria, incluindo líbios e etíopes; ele capturou muitas cidades e até ameaçou Jerusalém. Graças à misericórdia de Jeová, Jerusalém não foi devastada, mas a sua grande riqueza foi entregue a Sisaque. (1Rs 14:25, 26; 2Cr 12:2-9) Um relevo num muro do templo em Karnak ilustra a campanha de Sisaque e alista, como capturadas, numerosas cidades em Israel e Judá.

Zerá, o etíope, que liderou um milhão de soldados etíopes e líbios contra o Rei Asa, de Judá (967 AEC), provavelmente iniciou sua marcha no Egito. Suas forças, reunidas no vale de Zefata, ao SO de Jerusalém, sofreram completa derrota. — 2Cr 14:9-13; 16:8.

Judá e Israel estiveram livres dos ataques egípcios por mais dois séculos. O Egito parece ter sofrido considerável comoção interna durante este período, havendo certas dinastias que reinavam contemporaneamente. No ínterim, a Assíria passou a destacar-se como a potência mundial dominante. Oseias, último rei do reino das dez tribos de Israel (c. 758-740 AEC), tornou-se vassalo da Assíria e depois tentou livrar-se do jugo assírio por conspirar com o Rei Sô, do Egito. Este esforço fracassou, e o reino setentrional israelita logo caiu diante da Assíria. — 2Rs 17:4.

Parece que o Egito passou a estar sob forte domínio por parte de elementos núbio-etíopes por volta dessa época, sendo a "Dinastia XXV" classificada como etíope. Rabsaqué, oficial fanfarrão do rei assírio, Senaqueribe, disse ao povo da cidade de Jerusalém que confiar na ajuda do Egito era como confiar numa "cana esmagada". (2Rs 18:19-21, 24) O Rei Tiraca, da Etiópia, que entrou marchando em Canaã nesta época (732 AEC), e que temporariamente desviou a atenção e as forças do assírio, geralmente é associado com o governante etíope do Egito, o Faraó Taarca. (2Rs 19:8-10) Isto parece ser corroborado pela profecia anterior de Isaías (Is 7:18, 19), de que Jeová "assobiará às moscas que há na extremidade dos canais do Nilo do Egito, e às abelhas que há na terra da Assíria", desta forma resultando num choque entre essas duas potências na terra de Judá e sujeitando essa terra a uma pressão dupla. Conforme observou Franz Delitzsch: "Os emblemas também correspondem à natureza dos dois países: a mosca ao [pantanoso] Egito, com seus enxames de insetos . . . e a abelha à mais montanhosa e matagosa Assíria." — Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento), 1973, Vol. VII, Isaías, p. 223.

Isaías, pelo que parece, prediz a situação tumultuosa que existia no Egito durante a parte final do oitavo século e a parte inicial do sétimo século AEC, na sua pronúncia contra o Egito. (Is 19) Descreve guerra civil e desintegração, com lutas de "cidade contra cidade, reino contra reino" no Egito. (Is 19:2, 13, 14) Historiadores hodiernos encontram evidência de que dinastias contemporâneas governavam diferentes setores do país naquela época. A alardeada "sabedoria" do Egito, com os seus 'deuses e encantadores que nada valiam', não o protegeu de ser entregue "na mão de um amo duro". — Is 19:3, 4.

Invasão assíria. Esar-Hadom, rei assírio (contemporâneo do Rei Manassés, de Judá [716-662 AEC]), invadiu o Egito, conquistou Mênfis, no Baixo Egito, e mandou muitos para o exílio. O faraó que governava naquele tempo ainda era, evidentemente, Taarca (Tiraca).

Assurbanipal renovou os ataques e saqueou a cidade de Tebas (a Nô-Amom bíblica), no Alto Egito, onde se encontravam os maiores tesouros de templo do Egito. Novamente, a Bíblia mostra que elementos etíopes, líbios e outros africanos estavam envolvidos. — Na 3:8-10.

As guarnições assírias foram mais tarde retiradas do Egito, e o país começou a recuperar parte da sua anterior prosperidade e poder. Quando a Assíria caiu diante dos medos e dos babilônios, o Egito já adquirira força suficiente (com o apoio de tropas mercenárias) para subir em auxílio do rei assírio. O Faraó Neco (II) chefiava as forças egípcias, mas, a caminho, foi confrontado em Megido pelo exército de Judá, do Rei Josias, e, contrário à sua vontade, foi obrigado a travar batalha; ele derrotou Judá e causou a morte de Josias. (2Rs 23:29; 2Cr 35:20-24) Três meses depois (em 628 AEC), Neco removeu do trono de Judá a Jeoacaz, filho e sucessor de Josias, e o substituiu por seu irmão Eliaquim (cujo nome foi mudado para Jeoiaquim), levando Jeoacaz como cativo para o Egito. (2Rs 23:31-35; 2Cr 36:1-4; compare isso com Ez 19:1-4.) Judá passou então a ser tributária do Egito, pagando uma soma inicial equivalente a quase US$ 1.046.000. Foi durante este período que o profeta Urijá fez sua fuga inútil para o Egito. — Je 26:21-23.

Derrotado por Nabucodonosor. Mas o esforço do Egito para restabelecer o controle egípcio sobre a Síria e a Palestina foi de curta duração; o Egito estava condenado a beber o cálice amargo da derrota, segundo a profecia de Jeová, já declarada por Jeremias (25:17-19). A queda do Egito começou com a sua derrota decisiva em Carquemis, à margem do rio Eufrates, pelos babilônios comandados pelo príncipe herdeiro Nabucodonosor, em 625 AEC, evento descrito em Jeremias 46:2-10, bem como numa crônica babilônica.

Nabucodonosor, agora rei de Babilônia, em seguida tomou a Síria e a Palestina, e Judá tornou-se estado vassalo de Babilônia. (2Rs 24:1) O Egito fez uma última tentativa de permanecer como potência na Ásia. Uma força militar de faraó (cujo nome não é mencionado na Bíblia) saiu do Egito em resposta à solicitação do Rei Zedequias, para dar-lhe apoio militar em sua revolta contra Babilônia, em 609-607 AEC. As tropas egípcias, produzindo apenas a suspensão temporária do sítio pelos babilônios, foram obrigadas a recuar, e Jerusalém ficou entregue à destruição. — Je 37:5-7; Ez 17:15-18.

Apesar do vigoroso aviso dado por Jeremias (Je 42:7-22), o restante da população de Judá fugiu para o Egito como refúgio, evidentemente juntando-se a outros judeus que já estavam naquela terra. (Je 24:1, 8-10) Os lugares especificamente mencionados em que eles passaram a habitar são Tafnes, pelo que parece uma cidade-fortaleza na região do delta (Je 43:7-9), Migdol e Nofe, considerada ser Mênfis, uma antiga capital do Baixo Egito (Je 44:1; Ez 30:13). Assim, o "idioma de Canaã" (evidentemente o hebraico) era então falado no Egito por estes refugiados. (Is 19:18) Insensatamente, eles renovaram no Egito as próprias práticas idólatras que haviam trazido o julgamento de Jeová contra Judá. (Je 44:2-25) Mas o cumprimento das profecias de Jeová sobreveio aos refugiados israelitas quando Nabucodonosor marchou contra o Egito e conquistou esta terra. — Je 43:8-13; 46:13-26.

Foi encontrado um texto babilônico, datado do 37.º ano de Nabucodonosor (588 AEC), que menciona uma campanha contra o Egito. Não se pode afirmar se se relaciona com a conquista original ou simplesmente com uma ação militar posterior. De qualquer modo, Nabucodonosor recebeu as riquezas do Egito como paga pelo serviço militar prestado na execução do julgamento de Jeová contra Tiro, opositora do povo de Deus. — Ez 29:18-20; 30:10-12.

Em Ezequiel 29:1-16, prediz-se uma desolação do Egito, que devia durar 40 anos. Esta pode ter ocorrido depois da conquista do Egito por Nabucodonosor. Ao passo que alguns comentários se referem ao reinado de Amasis (Ahmose) II, sucessor de Hofra, como tremendamente próspero por mais de 40 anos, fazem isso primariamente baseados no testemunho de Heródoto, que visitou o Egito mais de cem anos depois. Mas, conforme a Encyclopædia Britannica (1959, Vol. 8, p. 62) comenta a história de Heródoto a respeito deste período (o "Período Saítico"): "Suas declarações demonstram não ser inteiramente fidedignas quando podem ser verificadas com a escassa evidência nativa." O Commentary (Comentário) bíblico de F. C. Cook, depois de observar que Heródoto deixa até de mencionar o ataque de Nabucodonosor contra o Egito, diz: "É notório que Heródoto, embora registrasse fielmente tudo que ouviu e viu no Egito, devia suas informações sobre a história decorrida aos sacerdotes egípcios, cujas fábulas adotou com cega credulidade. . . . A inteira história [de Heródoto] sobre Apriés [Hofra] e Amasis acha-se misturada com tanta coisa incoerente e lendária, que bem que podemos hesitar em adotá-la como história autêntica. Não é de jeito nenhum estranho que os sacerdotes tentassem ocultar a desonra nacional, de terem ficado sujeitos a um jugo estrangeiro." (Nota B., p. 132) Por isso, embora a história secular não forneça nenhuma evidência clara do cumprimento daquela profecia, podemos confiar na exatidão do registro bíblico.

Sob domínio persa. O Egito, mais tarde, apoiou Babilônia contra a ascendente potência da Medo-Pérsia. Mas, por volta de 525 AEC, o país foi subjugado por Cambises II, filho de Ciro, o Grande, desta forma ficando sob a regência imperial persa. (Is 43:3) Ao passo que muitos judeus sem dúvida deixaram o Egito para voltar à sua terra natal (Is 11:11-16; Os 11:11; Za 10:10, 11), outros permaneceram no Egito. Assim, havia uma colônia judaica em Elefantina (a Yeb egípcia), uma ilha situada no Nilo, perto de Assuã, a uns 690 km ao S do Cairo. Uma valiosa descoberta de papiros revela as condições prevalecentes ali durante o quinto século AEC, por volta do tempo em que Esdras e Neemias estavam ativos em Jerusalém. Estes documentos, em aramaico, contêm o nome de Sambalá, de Samaria (Ne 4:1, 2), e de Joanã, o sumo sacerdote. (Ne 12:22) É de interesse uma ordem oficial expedida no reinado de Dario II (423-405 AEC), para que a "festividade dos pães não fermentados" (Êx 12:17; 13:3, 6, 7) fosse celebrada pela colônia. Também notável é o uso frequente do nome Yahu, uma forma do nome Jeová (ou Javé; veja Is 19:18), embora haja também considerável evidência de definitiva infiltração da adoração pagã.

Sob domínio grego e romano. O Egito continuou sob domínio persa até que Alexandre Magno o conquistou, em 332 AEC, supostamente libertando o Egito do jugo persa, mas acabando para sempre com o domínio de faraós nativos. O poderoso Egito se tornara, deveras, um "reino humilde". — Ez 29:14, 15.

Durante o reinado de Alexandre, fundou-se a cidade de Alexandria, e, depois da sua morte, o país foi governado pelos Ptolomeus. Em 312 AEC, Ptolomeu I capturou Jerusalém, e Judá tornou-se uma província do Egito ptolemaico até 198 AEC. Daí, na longa contenda com o Império Selêucida, na Síria, o Egito finalmente perdeu o controle da Palestina quando o rei sírio Antíoco III derrotou o exército de Ptolomeu V. Depois disso, o Egito gradualmente caiu sob a influência de Roma. Em 31 AEC, na batalha decisiva de Actium, Cleópatra desertou a esquadra de Marco Antônio, seu amante romano, que foi derrotado por Otávio, sobrinho-neto de Júlio César. Otávio passou a conquistar o Egito em 30 AEC, e o Egito tornou-se uma província romana. Foi para esta província romana que José e Maria fugiram com o menino Jesus, a fim de escapar do decreto assassino de Herodes, só voltando depois da morte de Herodes, de modo que se cumpriram as palavras de Oseias: "Do Egito chamei o meu filho." — Mt 2:13-15; Os 11:1; compare isso com Êx 4:22, 23.

O sedicioso "egípcio", com quem o comandante militar de Jerusalém confundiu Paulo, possivelmente é o mesmo mencionado por Josefo. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], II, 254-263 [xiii, 3-5]) Declara-se que sua insurreição ocorreu no reinado de Nero e na procuradoria de Félix, na Judeia, circunstâncias que se enquadram no relato de Atos 21:37-39; 23:23, 24.

A segunda destruição de Jerusalém pelos romanos, em 70 EC, resultou em adicional cumprimento de Deuteronômio 28:68, visto que muitos judeus sobreviventes foram mandados como escravos para o Egito. — The Jewish War, VI, 418 (ix, 2).

Outras Referências Proféticas e Simbólicas. Grande número de referências ao Egito encontram-se nas pronúncias de julgamento, expres-sas em linguagem simbólica. (Ez 29:1-7; 32:1-32) Para os israelitas, o Egito representava força militar e poder por meio de alianças políticas, de modo que depender do Egito tornou-se simbólico de depender do poder humano, em vez de depender de Jeová. (Is 31:1-3) Mas, em Isaías 30:1-7, Jeová mostrou que o poderio do Egito era mais fachada do que fato, chamando-a "Raabe — são para ficar sentados quietos ["Raabe que não se move", IBB]". (Veja Sal 87:4; Is 51:9, 10.) Junto com as muitas condenações, porém, havia promessas de que muitos do "Egito" viriam a conhecer a Jeová, a ponto de se poder dizer: "Bendito seja meu povo, o Egito." — Is 19:19-25; 45:14.

O Egito é mencionado como fazendo parte do domínio do simbólico "rei do sul". (Da 11:5, 8, 42, 43) Em Revelação 11:8, a infiel Jerusalém, onde o Senhor Jesus Cristo foi pregado numa estaca, é "em sentido espiritual" chamada de Egito. Isto é apropriado, quando consideramos que a infiel Jerusalém oprimia e escravizava os judeus em sentido religioso. Também, as primeiras vítimas pascoais foram abatidas no Egito, ao passo que o antitípico Cordeiro Pascoal, Jesus Cristo, foi morto em Jerusalém. — Jo 1:29, 36; 1Co 5:7; 1Pe 1:19.

Valiosos Achados de Papiros. O solo extraordinariamente seco do Egito tornou possível a preservação de manuscritos de papiro, os quais, em condições mais úmidas, teriam sido destruídos. Desde a última parte do século 19, descobriram-se ali muitos papiros, inclusive considerável número de papiros bíblicos, tais como a coleção Chester Beatty. Estes fornecem elos especialmente importantes entre os escritos originais das Escrituras Sagradas e as posteriores cópias manuscritas em velino.

EGITO, VALE DA TORRENTE DO. Longo uádi (ou ravina) que marcava a fronteira SO, ordenada por Deus, da Terra da Promessa, isto é, da "terra de Canaã". (Núm 34:2, 5; 1Rs 8:65; Is 27:12) Embora este vale da torrente não se encontrasse realmente no Egito, ao que parece, o domínio desta nação se estendia, pelo menos em certos períodos, até este ponto. (2Rs 24:7) A expressão abreviada "vale de torrente", usada para definir os limites da terra de Israel na visão de Ezequiel, aparentemente se refere a esta mesma ravina. — Ez 47:19; 48:28.

O vale da torrente do Egito é usualmente identificado com o uádi el-ʽArish, que começa mais de 200 km no interior da península do Sinai, perto de Jebel et-Tih. Estende-se para o N até se encontrar com o mar Mediterrâneo, na cidade de el-ʽArish (Rhinocolura), cerca de 150 km ao L de Port Said. No verão, nada mais é do que um leito seco. Na estação chuvosa, porém, quando numerosos tributários deságuam nele, o uádi el-ʽArish torna-se uma forte torrente que ataca suas margens, arrancando e arrastando até mesmo árvores em seu curso turbulento. Isto talvez permita identificá-lo como "o rio do Egito", na lista das fronteiras da Terra da Promessa em Gênesis 15:18. — Veja, porém, SIOR.

EGLÁ [Bezerra; Novilha]. Mãe do sexto filho do Rei Davi, Itreão, nascido em Hébron. — 2Sa 3:5; 1Cr 3:3.

EGLAIM. Evidentemente, uma das extremidades geográficas de Moabe que, segundo Isaías 15:1, 8, iria 'uivar' por causa da assolação da nação. Não há certeza da localização exata deste lugar antigo. Todavia, o nome Eglaim e outro nome similar, Agallim, mencionado por Eusébio (Onomasticon [Onomástico], 36, 19-21) como ficando a uns 12 km ao S de Rabate-Moabe, talvez tenham ficado preservados em Rujm el-Jilimeh, naquela área, ou em Khirbet Jeljul, localidade que data desde tempos nabateu-romanos, 7 km mais ao sul. Yohanan Aharoni sugere identificá-la com Mazraʽ, um oásis ao NE da península de Lisan.

EGLATE-SELISAIA [provavelmente: Terceira Eglate]. Termo usado por Isaías (15:5) e Jeremias (48:34) nas suas pronúncias de condenação de Moabe, evidentemente referindo-se a um lugar naquela nação. Alguns sustentam que havia três cidades na mesma vizinhança, com o mesmo nome, e que a terceira ("a terceira Eglate", AT) é neste caso o alvo dos proferimentos dos profetas. Nunca se fez uma identificação exata de tais lugares.

Muitos peritos, porém, são da opinião de que a expressão hebraica (ʽegh·láth sheli·shi·yáh) não devia ser transliterada como nome próprio. Consideram-na uma expressão simbólica e a traduzem por "novilha de três anos". (Al, ALA, IBB, So) Neste caso, os profetas talvez comparassem o derrotado Moabe a uma vaca forte, nova, todavia plenamente desenvolvida, mas da qual só se ouviam lastimosos 'clamores' de angústia.

EGLOM [Vitelo].

1. Rei de Moabe, nos dias dos juízes, que oprimiu Israel durante 18 anos, "porque faziam o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová". (Jz 3:12-25) Eglom era o cabeça da confederação de Moabe, Amom e Amaleque no seu ataque a Israel. A queda dele ocorreu quando o canhoto Eúde, depois de apresentar-lhe o tributo costumeiro, disse: "Tenho para ti uma palavra secreta, ó rei." Na privacidade do quarto fresco, no terraço em cima do seu palácio, Eglom, depois de dispensar seus serviçais, ergueu-se do trono para saber o que Eúde dissera ser "uma palavra de Deus". Nisso, Eúde fincou no abdome bem gordo de Eglom uma espada de dois gumes, de modo que 'o cabo continuou entrando após a lâmina', e "começaram a sair as matérias fecais". O Commentary (Comentário) de Clarke diz a respeito de Juízes 3:22: "Ou o conteúdo dos intestinos saiu pela ferida, ou ele evacuou de modo natural, premido pelo susto e pela angústia."

2. Cidade real cananeia, cujo rei participou numa confederação contra Gibeão, quando esta cidade fez paz com Josué e Israel. Josué matou os cinco reis envolvidos, pendurou-os em estacas e mais tarde conquistou Eglom, devotando seus habitantes à destruição. (Jos 10:1-5, 22-27, 34, 35; 12:12) Ela foi depois incluída no território da tribo de Judá. (Jos 15:39) Crê-se que o lugar original dela se encontra em Tell el-Hesi, a uns 25 km ao ENE de Gaza e a uns 11 km ao O do lugar de Laquis, estando assim quase à beira das planícies da Filístia. O nome antigo, porém, é preservado nas ruínas de Khirbet ʽAjlan, a uns poucos quilômetros dali.

EL. Veja DEUS.

ELA [possivelmente: Deus]. Pai de Simei, um dos 12 prepostos de Salomão que proviam de alimentos o rei e sua casa. — 1Rs 4:7, 18.

ELÁ.
[1-5: aparentado com a palavra hebr. 'El, "Deus"]

1. Xeque edomita que provavelmente ocupava a aldeia de Elate. — Gên 36:40, 41, 43; 1Cr 1:52; veja ELATE, ELOTE; TIMNA N.º 3.

2. Filho do espia Calebe; pai de Quenaz, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 4:15.

3. Quarto rei do setentrional reino das dez tribos de Israel. Elá ascendeu ao trono por volta de 952 AEC, após a morte do seu pai Baasa, e governou em Tirza por partes de dois anos. (1Rs 16:8) Enquanto Elá estava bêbedo, Zinri, chefe da metade dos carros, matou-o para assumir o reinado e depois passou a eliminar todos os da casa de Baasa, cumprindo a profecia de Jeová. — 1Rs 16:1-14.

4. Pai do Rei Oseias, último monarca do reino setentrional. — 2Rs 15:30; 17:1; 18:1, 9.

5. Descendente de Benjamim, que morava em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 9:3, 7, 8.

Quais eram as circunstâncias em que Davi enfrentou Golias?

6. [Árvore Grande]. Uma baixada ou vale, talvez assim chamado por causa de uma árvore notavelmente grande situada ali. A "baixada de Elá" foi o local do conflito entre os israelitas e os filisteus, cujo campeão era Golias. (1Sa 17:2, 19; 21:9) Costuma ser associada com o fértil uádi es-Sant, um dos principais uádis, que se estende desde as planícies filisteias através da Sefelá até as regiões montanhosas de Judá, passando entre as localidades sugeridas para Azeca e Socó. (1Sa 17:1) Ficava assim a uns 25 km ao SO de Jerusalém. A planície bem regada tem cerca de meio quilômetro de largura e é bem plana. As forças oponentes defrontavam-se através deste vale, cada lado tendo posição forte numa encosta montanhosa, os filisteus talvez ao S, e os israelitas ao N ou NE. Pela baixada corria o "vale da torrente", provavelmente o leito seco do rio ainda encontrado ali. (1Sa 17:40) É possível que a demora de "quarenta dias" por parte dos dois exércitos se devesse, em parte, à posição fraca em que qualquer um dos lados se colocaria ao ter de cruzar este vale da torrente e então subir contra a força inimiga na encosta oposta. (1Sa 17:16) Davi escolheu cinco pedras lisas no vale da torrente ao atravessá-lo para enfrentar Golias. Depois da vitória de Davi, o exército desbaratado dos filisteus fugiu descendo o vale até a planície filisteia, e as cidades de Gate e Ecrom. — 1Sa 17:52.

ELAMITAS. Veja ELÃO N.º 1.

ELANÃ [Deus Mostrou Favor; Deus Foi Clemente].

1. Filho de Jair, que, na guerra com os filisteus, golpeou Lami, irmão de Golias, o geteu. (1Cr 20:5) Em 2 Samuel 21:19, Elanã é identificado como "filho de Jaare-Oregim, o belemita", e diz-se que golpeou Golias. Todavia, muitos peritos acham que o texto original de 2 Samuel 21:19 correspondia ao de 1 Crônicas 20:5, tendo surgido as diferenças nos dois textos por erro de escriba. — Veja JAARE-OREGIM; LAMI.

2. Filho de Dodo de Belém; um dos poderosos de Davi. — 2Sa 23:24; 1Cr 11:26.

ELÃO.

1. Um dos cinco filhos varões de Sem, de quem descenderam "famílias, segundo as suas línguas, nas suas terras, segundo as suas nações". (Gên 10:22, 31; 1Cr 1:17) Não se especificam os nomes dos filhos de Elão; seu nome, porém, designa tanto um povo como uma região na fronteira SE da Mesopotâmia.

Historicamente, o nome Elão aplicava-se a uma região no que agora é chamado Cuzistã, no SO do Irã. Incluía a planície fértil do lado oriental do vale inferior do Tigre, regado pelos rios Carun e Carque, e evidentemente se estendia até as regiões montanhosas que ladeiam esta planície ao N e ao L, embora estes dois limites sejam os menos definidos.

Uma região chamada Anxã, segundo se crê, ficava nestas regiões montanhosas e é representada em inscrições como fazendo parte do Elão desde um período bem antigo. O Elão, situado no extremo oriental do Crescente Fértil, por conseguinte, estava numa posição um tanto fronteiriça, sendo uma das regiões em que o território, povoado e geralmente dominado pelas raças semíticas, se confrontava ou fundia com raças que descendiam dos outros filhos de Noé, principalmente da linhagem jafética.

A terra do Elão era chamada elamtu pelos assírios e pelos babilônios, e Elymais pelos escritores clássicos gregos, que, às vezes, também se referiam a ela como "Susiana", segundo a cidade de Susa, ou Susã, que outrora, evidentemente, fora a capital do Elão. Sob o Império Persa, Susa (Susã) era uma cidade real. (Ne 1:1; Est 1:2) Achava-se situada nas rotas comerciais que levavam para o SE, e também para o planalto iraniano. Os esforços de obter o controle destas rotas tornaram o Elão objeto frequente de invasão por parte dos governantes assírios e babilônios.

Língua. Ao tratarem de Elão, obras de referência costumam afirmar que o escritor de Gênesis alistou Elão sob Sem apenas em base política ou geográfica, visto que, dizem eles, o povo de Elão não era semítico. Baseiam este conceito na afirmação de que a língua dos elamitas não era semítica. A investigação revela, porém, que as inscrições mais antigas encontradas na região geográfica chamada Elão eram "meras listas de objetos anotados pictoricamente em tabuinhas de argila, com o número de cada um deles ao lado, indicado por um sistema simples de traços, círculos e semicírculos . . . seu conteúdo, nesta época, é puramente econômico ou administrativo". (Semitic Writing [Escrita Semítica], de G. R. Driver, Londres, 1976, pp. 2, 3) Estas inscrições poderiam razoavelmente ser chamadas de "elamitas" só no sentido de que foram encontradas no território de Elão.

O peso do argumento daqueles que se opõem à inclusão de Elão entre os povos semíticos, portanto, baseia-se principalmente em inscrições cuneiformes posteriores, consideradas como datando já bastante dentro do segundo milênio AEC, bem como no monumento de Behistun (do sexto século AEC), que contém textos paralelos em antigo persa, acadiano e "elamita". As inscrições cuneiformes atribuídas aos elamitas supostamente estão numa língua aglutinativa (uma em que raízes de palavras são juntadas para formar palavras compostas, diferente assim das línguas flexionais). Os filólogos não tiveram bom êxito em relacionar esta língua "elamita" com alguma outra língua conhecida.

Na avaliação da informação acima, deve ser lembrado que a região geográfica em que os descendentes de Elão por fim se concentraram pode muito bem ter sido ocupada por outros povos antes ou mesmo durante a residência dos elamitas ali, do mesmo modo como os primitivos sumerianos não semíticos residiam em Babilônia. A Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica; 1959, Vol. 8, p. 118) declara: "O país inteiro [chamado Elão] foi ocupado por uma variedade de tribos, falando na maior parte dialetos aglutinativos, embora os distritos ocidentais fossem ocupados por semitas." — O grifo é nosso; MAPA e TABELA, Vol. 1, p. 329.

Que as inscrições cuneiformes encontradas na região do Elão, por si só, não provariam que os verdadeiros elamitas originalmente não fossem semitas, pode ser visto em muitos exemplos históricos antigos que poderiam ser citados de povos adotando outra língua por causa da dominação ou infiltração de elementos estrangeiros. Há também exemplos de povos antigos que simultaneamente usavam outra língua junto com a sua própria para fins comerciais e internacionais, assim como o aramaico se tornou uma língua franca usada por muitos povos. Os "hititas" de Karatepe fizeram inscrições bilíngues (evidentemente no oitavo século AEC) em escrita hieroglífica "hitita" e em fenício antigo. Encontraram-se em Persépolis, cidade real persa, cerca de 30.000 tabuinhas de argila do tempo do rei persa Dario I. Eram na maior parte na língua chamada "elamita". No entanto, Persépolis não seria classificada como cidade elamita.

Mostrando adicionalmente que é insensato considerar a tabela das nações, de Gênesis, capítulo 10, como puramente geográfica e não realmente genealógica, há a evidência em forma de esculturas feitas para os reis elamitas, e datadas, pelos arqueólogos, como remontando à época de Sargão I (cujo governo eles atribuem à parte final do terceiro milênio). Estas esculturas não só apresentam a forma de figuras tipicamente acadianas (assírio-babilônicas semíticas), mas também trazem inscrições acadianas. — The Illustrated Bible Dictionary (O Dicionário Bíblico Ilustrado), editado por J. D. Douglas, 1980, Vol. 1, p. 433.

História. A primeira menção bíblica do Elão como país ou nação é do tempo de Abraão (2018-1843 AEC), quando Quedorlaomer, "rei de Elão", marchou com uma aliança de reis contra uma coalizão cananeia de reis da região do Mar Morto. (Gên 14:1-3) Quedorlaomer é identificado como o líder da aliança, e como tendo a suserania sobre os reis cananeus, aos quais ele então puniu. (Gên 14:4-17) Tal campanha, que exigiu uma viagem de ida e volta de talvez 3.200 km, não era incomum para os reis mesopotâmios, mesmo naqueles tempos antigos. A história secular confirma que, na parte inicial do segundo milênio AEC, houve tal período de domínio elamita na região mesopotâmia. Um oficial elamita chamado Kudur-Mabuk, que ocupou com êxito a destacada cidade de Larsa (junto ao Eufrates, ao N de Ur), designou seu filho, Warad-Sin, como rei ali. É digno de nota que Warad-Sin e Rim-Sin (irmão de Warad-Sin, que o sucedeu como rei) são ambos nomes semíticos, confirmando ainda mais o elemento semítico no Elão.

Este período de poder elamita em Babilônia foi transtornado e terminado por Hamurábi, e foi só na última metade do segundo milênio AEC que o Elão conseguiu conquistar Babilônia e de novo estabelecer seu controle por um período de alguns séculos. Crê-se ter sido nesta época que uma estela com o famoso Código de Hamurábi foi levada de Babilônia para Susa, onde foi descoberta por arqueólogos hodiernos.

O Elão foi de novo reduzido a uma posição subordinada por Nabucodonosor I (não o Nabucodonosor que vários séculos depois destruiu Jerusalém), mas continuou a ter frequente participação na luta pelo poder travada entre a Assíria e Babilônia, até que finalmente os imperadores assírios Senaquerib e Assurbanipal (Asenapar) derrotaram as forças elamitas, transferindo parte do povo para as cidades de Samaria. (Esd 4:8-10) Também, israelitas cativos foram mandados para o exílio no Elão. (Is 11:11) Inscrições dos imperadores assírios descrevem vividamente esta subjugação do Elão.

Depois da queda do Império Assírio, o Elão parece ter ficado sob controle jafético (ariano). Os medos e os persas, segundo se crê, espalharam-se pela região do planalto iraniano vários séculos antes, e, sob Ciaxares, os medos lutaram junto com os babilônios para derrubar a capital assíria de Nínive. Daniel 8:2 parece indicar que o Elão, depois disso, tornou-se distrito babilônico. Não importa quais tenham sido os efeitos imediatos do colapso assírio sobre o Elão, os persas evidentemente tiveram êxito em retirar do Elão a região chamada Anxã, pois os governantes persas Teíspes, Ciro I, Cambises, e Ciro II, foram todos chamados respectivamente pelo título de "Rei de Anxã". Ao passo que alguns consideram essa conquista de Anxã como cumprimento da profecia de Jeremias a respeito do Elão (Je 49:34-39), a maioria dos peritos situam a conquista de Anxã, por Teíspes, muitos anos antes do proferimento dessa profecia, feito aproximadamente em 617 AEC.

O aviso de Isaías, em Isaías 22:4-6, predizia que arqueiros elamitas estariam entre os atacantes de Judá e Jerusalém. Profetizou-se também que os elamitas se uniriam com a Média para saquear Babilônia (539 AEC), a Média naquele tempo estando sob o governo do persa Ciro II, "Rei de Anxã". (Is 21:2) Os elamitas contribuíram assim para libertar Israel do exílio, todavia, tendo-se aliado diversas vezes com os inimigos do povo de Deus, o Elão, junto com outras nações, no devido tempo, teria de beber do copo do furor de Deus e descer ao Seol. — Je 25:17, 25-29; Ez 32:24.

No dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, havia elamitas entre os milhares que ouviram a mensagem proferida pelos discípulos na língua então falada no Elão. (At 2:8, 9) Como nação e como povo, porém, deixaram de existir desde então, assim como foi predito em Jeremias 49:34-39.

2. Porteiro levita durante o reinado de Davi e filho de Meselemias, da família dos coraítas. — 1Cr 25:1; 26:1-3.

3. Filho de Sasaque e um cabeça da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:24, 25, 28.

4. Progenitor de uma família israelita, da qual 1.254 descendentes retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel (Esd 2:1, 2, 7; Ne 7:12), e um posterior contingente de 71 varões acompanhou Esdras. (Esd 8:7) Alguns dos seus descendentes estavam entre aqueles que concordaram em despedir suas esposas estrangeiras (Esd 10:19, 26), e um representante da família assinou o pacto no tempo de Neemias. — Ne 10:1, 14.

5. Alguém chamado de 'o outro Elão', também chefe de família com o mesmo número de descendentes, 1.254, que acompanhou o grupo de Zorobabel a Judá. — Esd 2:31; Ne 7:34.

6. Levita que estava presente na inauguração da muralha de Jerusalém por Neemias. — Ne 12:27, 42.

ELASÁ [Deus Fez]. Filho de Safã que, junto com Gemarias, foi enviado por Zedequias a Nabucodonosor, em Babilônia. Nesta ocasião, o profeta Jeremias enviou sua carta aos exilados em Babilônia, pela mão de Elasá e de Gemarias. — Je 29:1-3.

ELASAR. Reino ou cidade sobre a qual Arioque reinou no tempo de Abraão e Ló. (Gên 14:1) O Rei Arioque, de Elasar, juntou suas forças às dos reis Anrafel, de Sinear, Quedorlaomer, de Elão, e Tidal, de Goim, na guerra contra os reis das rebeldes cidades-estados (Sodoma, Gomorra, Admá, Zeboim e Bela, ou Zoar) na Baixada de Sidim, ou Mar Salgado. Os rebeldes foram derrotados, e Ló, que então morava em Sodoma, foi tomado cativo e levado para o N. Todavia, Abrão (Abraão), com Manre, Aner e Escol, seus confederados, alcançou as forças conjuntas dos quatro reis em Dã. Ali as pôs em fuga, resgatando Ló e o povo, e recuperando os bens. — Gên 14:1-16, 24.

A identificação positiva de Elasar com um lugar atualmente conhecido ainda constitui problema para os pesquisadores.

ELATE [possivelmente: Carneiro; ou: Lugar do Carneiro], ELOTE [plural]. Localidade pela primeira vez mencionada na recapitulação de Moisés a respeito da peregrinação dos israelitas por 40 anos no ermo. (De 2:8) Elate é mencionada junto com Eziom-Géber e ficava "à beira do Mar Vermelho, na terra de Edom". (1Rs 9:26) Isto indica a localização no braço ou esteiro NE do Mar Vermelho conhecido como golfo de ʽAqaba. Os peritos basicamente concordam com Jerônimo, do quarto e quinto séculos EC, que identificou Elate com a cidade então conhecida como Aila, associada com os nabateus. Isto localizaria Elate no lugar ou perto da atual cidade árabe de ʽAqaba, situada no canto NE do golfo (ficando a moderna cidade judaica de Elat no canto NO).

Elate fazia parte do domínio edomita, quando os israelitas atravessaram aquela região em caminho para Canaã. Encontraram-se na área de Elate selos com o nome edomita de "Qosʽanal, servo do rei", datados pelos arqueólogos como do sétimo século AEC.

Evidentemente, em resultado da conquista de Edom por Davi, Elate e a vizinha Eziom-Géber passaram para o controle de Judá (2Sa 8:13, 14), e são mencionadas em conexão com as atividades de construção de navios de Salomão. (1Rs 9:26; 2Cr 8:17) Mencionar-se Eziom-Géber como estando "junto a Elote" talvez indique que Elate (Elote) era o mais destacado dos dois lugares, pelo menos naquele tempo.

Pelo visto, o controle de Elate reverteu para Edom durante o reinado de Jeorão, de Judá. (2Rs 8:20-22) No século seguinte, a cidade foi devolvida a Judá e reconstruída pelo Rei Uzias (Azarias). (2Rs 14:21, 22; 2Cr 26:1, 2) Daí, durante o governo de Acaz (761-746 AEC), foi arrancada de Judá pelos sírios e foi reocupada pelos edomitas, nunca mais voltando depois a ser de Judá. (2Rs 16:6) O texto massorético reza aqui "Síria" ou "Arã" (hebr.: 'Arám), em vez de "Edom" ('Edhóhm). A maioria dos atuais peritos, porém, aceita esta última versão, na margem, achando que um escriba confundiu a letra hebraica dálete (ד) com a letra de forma similar rexe (ר).

Elate, essencialmente um oásis, era ponto de parada na rota de caravanas que ia do S da Arábia até o Egito, Canaã ou Damasco. Junto com Eziom-Géber, estava situada no ponto de partida dos "navios de Társis" que singravam as águas de ida e volta da Arábia, da África Oriental e possivelmente da Índia. (1Rs 10:22; 9:26, 27) Escritos aramaicos, tais como recibos de vinho, do período do Império Persa, foram encontrados nesta região, bem como restos de cerâmica de alta qualidade, de estilo grego, talvez destinada a transbordo para a Arábia.

EL-BERITE. Veja BAAL-BERITE.

EL-BETEL [O Deus de Betel]. Nome dado por Jacó ao lugar onde erigiu um altar em obediência à ordem de Deus. (Gên 35:1, 7) Certos peritos acham ser "O Deus de Betel" um nome improvável para um lugar, e notam que na Septuaginta grega, na Vulgata latina, na Pesito siríaca e em versões árabes o "El" inicial foi omitido. Todavia, deve ser lembrado que a área em torno de Betel estava cheia de significado para Jacó. Foi nesta área, mais de 20 anos antes, que Deus se revelara a Jacó num sonho, prometendo protegê-lo. Naquele tempo, o patriarca se sentiu movido a responder: "Verdadeiramente, Jeová está neste lugar." (Gên 28:10-22) Neste caso, quando mais tarde deu nome ao lugar do altar, Jacó estava na realidade dizendo: 'Deus está em Betel.' — Veja Gên 33:20.

ELCANA [Deus Produziu].

1. Levita, filho do rebelde Corá; ele e seus irmãos, Assir e Abiasafe, não compartilharam a sorte de seu pai. (Êx 6:24; Núm 26:11) Ele é possivelmente o Elcana mencionado em 1 Crônicas 6:23.

2. Segundo de quatro levitas coatitas chamados de Elcana e alistados em Crônicas. Ele é identificado como pai de Amasai e Aimote, e parece ter sido filho de Joel. — 1Cr 6:25, 36.

3. Terceiro dos levitas acima; aparentemente filho de Maate. — 1Cr 6:26, 35.

4. Filho de Jeroão e pai de Samuel, o profeta, bem como de outros filhos e filhas. Elcana era morador de Ramá, da região montanhosa de Efraim. Por isso ele é chamado de efraimita, embora genealogicamente fosse levita. (1Sa 1:1; 1Cr 6:27, 33, 34) Era costume de Elcana subir de ano em ano a Silo, "para prostrar-se e para oferecer sacrifícios a Jeová". Tinha duas esposas, Ana e Penina. Embora Ana continuasse estéril, Elcana amava-a e tentava consolá-la por ela ser estéril. Mais tarde, em resposta à oração de Ana, Jeová os abençoou com o nascimento de Samuel, e posteriormente, com mais três filhos e duas filhas. — 1Sa 1:2, 3, 5, 8, 19; 2:21.

5. Antepassado levita de certo Berequias. — 1Cr 9:16.

6. Um dos coraítas que aparentemente moravam no território de Benjamim e que "vieram a Davi em Ziclague, enquanto se achava ainda restrito por causa de Saul". — 1Cr 12:1, 2, 6.

7. Um dos porteiros para a Arca no tempo em que Davi mandou transferi-la da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém; possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 6. — 1Cr 15:23, 25.

8. Oficial que ocupava uma posição logo abaixo do Rei Acaz, de Judá, e que foi morto por Zicri, poderoso de Efraim, quando Peca, o rei de Israel, invadiu Judá. — 2Cr 28:6, 7.

ELCOSITA [De (Pertencente a) Elcos]. Habitante de Elcos. "Elcosita" só é aplicado ao profeta Naum. (Na 1:1) Alguns situariam Elcos na Galileia. Todavia, Naum talvez estivesse em Judá na época em que escreveu o livro que leva o seu nome. (Na 1:15) Neste caso, isto tornaria mais provável a sugerida identificação com o lugar de Judá chamado Beit Jibrin (Bet Guvrin), a uns 6 km ao NE de Laquis. A identificação, porém, continua provisória.

ELDA [possivelmente: Conhecimento de Deus; Deus Conhece]. Filho de Midiã, quarto filho mencionado de Abraão com Quetura. — Gên 25:1, 2, 4; 1Cr 1:33.

ELDADE [possivelmente: Deus Amou]. Um dos 70 anciãos escolhidos por Moisés para ajudá-lo a levar a carga do povo. Por causa das murmurações da multidão mista e também dos israelitas quanto ao maná, e de não terem carne para comer, Moisés expressou o sentimento de que a carga era pesada demais para ele sozinho. Por conseguinte, Jeová mandou que Moisés reunisse 70 anciãos e os levasse à tenda de reunião. Dois destes anciãos, Eldade e Medade, contudo, não foram à tenda de reunião, mas, sem dúvida por motivo válido, permaneceram no acampamento. Jeová passou então a tomar um pouco do espírito que havia sobre Moisés e a colocá-lo sobre os anciãos; estes, por sua vez, começaram a profetizar. O espírito também pousou sobre Eldade e Medade, e estes começaram a agir como profetas no acampamento. Isto foi relatado a Moisés, e, quando Josué, sentindo ciúme por Moisés, solicitou que este os restringisse, Moisés replicou: "Não; quisera eu que todo o povo de Jeová fosse profeta, porque Jeová poria seu espírito sobre eles!" — Núm 11:13-29.

ELEADA [Deus Adornou-se]. Um dos descendentes de Efraim. — 1Cr 7:20.

ELEADE [Deus Deu Testemunho]. Provavelmente filho de Efraim, que foi morto, junto com seu irmão Ezer, pelos homens de Gate, "porque desceram para tomar seu gado". — 1Cr 7:20, 21; veja EFRAIM N.º 1.

ELEALE. Lugar regularmente mencionado junto com Hésbon e situado na região pastoril ao L do Jordão. A tribo de Rubem 'construiu' (ou reconstruiu) a cidade logo depois de conquistá-la. (Núm 32:3-5, 37) Séculos mais tarde, quando ela ficou sob controle de Moabe, Isaías e Jeremias profetizaram que Eleale estava para 'clamar' por causa do colapso daquela nação. (Is 15:4; 16:9; Je 48:34) Pensa-se usualmente que se encontrava numa colina em el-ʿAl, a uns 3 km ao NE de Hésbon.

ELEASÁ [Deus Fez].

1. Filho de Helez e pai de Sismai, descendente de Judá por meio de Jerameel. Jara, escravo egípcio que se casou com a filha de seu amo Sesã, foi um dos antepassados de Eleasá. — 1Cr 2:33, 34, 39, 40.

2. Descendente de Jonatã, filho do Rei Saul. — 1Cr 8:33-37; 9:39-43.

3. Sacerdote dos "filhos de Pasur", que estava entre os que acataram a exortação de Esdras, de despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 2:36, 38; 10:22, 44.

ELEAZAR [Deus Ajudou].

1. Terceiro filho mencionado do sumo sacerdote Arão e de sua esposa, Eliseba. Eleazar era da família de Coate, filho de Levi. (Êx 6:16, 18, 20, 23; Núm 3:2) Arão e seus filhos, Nadabe, Abiú, Eleazar e Itamar, constituíam o sacerdócio de Israel, no tempo de sua investidura por Moisés. — Le 8.

No segundo ano depois de partirem do Egito, quando se ergueu o tabernáculo, menciona-se Eleazar como maioral dos levitas. (Núm 1:1; 3:32) Deve ter tido pelo menos 30 anos nessa época, uma vez que realizava deveres sacerdotais. — Núm 4:3.

Eleazar era daqueles de mais de 20 anos que deixaram o Egito e que também entraram na Terra da Promessa. Sendo da tribo de Levi, não estava incluído na condenação por parte de Deus, expressa contra as outras 12 tribos, de que ninguém dentre elas, de mais de 20 anos, entraria na Terra da Promessa, exceto Josué e Calebe. Levi não possuía representante entre os 12 espias, 10 dos quais trouxeram relatos maus, e os levitas, pelo que parece, não estavam entre os murmuradores sem fé e rebeldes contra Jeová. — Núm 13:4-16; 14:26-30.

Pouco depois da dedicação do tabernáculo, e da consagração de Arão e seus filhos para o sacerdócio (Le 8), Nadabe e Abiú ofereceram fogo ilegítimo a Jeová e foram mortos pelo fogo procedente de Jeová. (Le 10:1, 2; Núm 3:2-4) Arão, com seus dois filhos fiéis, Eleazar e Itamar, continuaram a exercer o sacerdócio. Com a divisão dos deveres de cuidar do santuário, Eleazar tinha a supervisão do tabernáculo, com seus utensílios, sua constante oferta de cereais, seu azeite e seu incenso. (Núm 4:16) Às ordens de Jeová, Eleazar tomou os porta-lumes de cobre que Corá e os outros associados com ele (nenhum dos quais eram sacerdotes) tinham usado para oferecer incenso a Jeová no afã de assumir deveres sacerdotais. Esses foram transformados em finas placas metálicas com que se recobriu o altar. (Núm 16:37-40) Eleazar oficiava na oferta pelo pecado, consistindo em uma vaca vermelha que fornecia as cinzas para a purificação de certas impurezas. — Núm 19:2, 3, 9; He 9:13.

Depois de os israelitas irem à guerra para punir os midianitas por causa do assunto de Peor, Eleazar estava a postos para ajudar a dividir os despojos tomados dos midianitas e para declarar o estatuto de Deus quanto às coisas tomadas como presa. — Núm 31:6, 21-41.

Fineias, filho de Eleazar e de uma das filhas de Putiel, por sua ação zelosa em favor da adoração pura, na ocasião em que Israel pecou com relação a Baal de Peor, foi recompensado por Jeová com um pacto de paz. Pode-se considerar isto como adição ao pacto para o sacerdócio que Jeová fizera com a tribo de Levi. — Núm 25:1-13; Êx 6:25.

Torna-se Sumo Sacerdote. No 40.º ano da jornada pelo ermo, com a morte de Arão, aos 123 anos, Eleazar, então com cerca de 70 anos, tornou-se sumo sacerdote. (Núm 33:37-39) Eleazar, portanto, foi o primeiro sumo sacerdote de Israel a oficiar na Terra da Promessa quando entraram nela, cerca de oito meses depois. (Núm 20:25-28; De 10:6; Jos 4:19) Foi perante Eleazar que Josué devia ficar em pé para ser designado como sucessor de Moisés, e Eleazar devia continuar a apoiar Josué na sua designação, e a transmitir-lhe as decisões de Jeová em questões de importância, segundo o julgamento do Urim e do Tumim. (Núm 27:18-23) Eleazar trabalhou também junto com Josué na distribuição da Terra da Promessa, depois da conquista de Canaã. — Jos 14:1; 21:1-3.

Cabeça duma das Principais Casas Sacerdotais. As Escrituras não declaram com exatidão quando Eleazar morreu, mas parece ter ocorrido perto do tempo da morte de Josué. Eleazar foi sucedido pelo seu filho Fineias. (Jos 24:29, 30, 33; Jz 20:27, 28) Eleazar manifestou a característica de zelo pela adoração verdadeira de Jeová, e dirigiu o sacerdócio de modo honroso, todos os seus dias. A tradição judaica sustenta que, durante o tempo em que o tabernáculo esteve em Silo, havia 16 turmas de sacerdotes, 8 da família de Eleazar e 8 da de seu irmão, Itamar. No entanto, no tempo de Davi havia mais varões principais na família de Eleazar do que na de Itamar. Por conseguinte, Davi formou 16 turmas sacerdotais da casa de Eleazar, e 8 da casa de Itamar, perfazendo o total de 24 turmas que posteriormente serviam, por turnos, no templo. — 1Cr 24:1-4.

2. Filho de Abinadabe, que foi santificado para guardar a Arca sagrada levada à casa de seu pai na cidade de Quiriate-Jearim, após ela ser devolvida pelos filisteus. — 1Sa 7:1, 2.

3. Filho de Dodo, o aoíta; um dos três notáveis poderosos de Davi. Em Pas-Damim, durante uma campanha militar de Davi, Eleazar distinguiu-se por se postar num campo cheio de cevada e sozinho golpear os filisteus, "de modo que Jeová salvou com uma grande salvação". — 1Cr 11:12-14; 2Sa 23:9, 10.

4. Filho de Mali, merarita da tribo de Levi. Eleazar não teve filhos, mas só filhas. Portanto, os filhos de Quis, seus primos, tomaram-nas por esposas. — 1Cr 23:21, 22.

5. Filho de certo Fineias, mencionado como ajudando Meremote, o sacerdote, no quarto dia depois da chegada de Esdras a Jerusalém, quando se pesaram a prata e o ouro, e os utensílios para uso do templo. — Esd 8:29, 32, 33.

6. Descendente de Parós, dentre aqueles que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que acataram a exortação de Esdras, de despedi-las. — Esd 10:25, 44.

7. Sacerdote levita no cortejo providenciado por Neemias na inauguração da reconstruída muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:42.

8. Antepassado de José, pai adotivo de Jesus. — Mt 1:15.

ELECTRO. Brilhante liga de ouro e prata, que, quando aquecida na fornalha, possui uma beleza tremeluzente e um peculiar cintilante brilho amarelo. — Ez 1:4, 27; 8:2.

ELI, I [Ascendido; Subido]. Sumo sacerdote de Israel; evidentemente, era descendente de Itamar, o quarto filho mencionado de Arão. (Veja 2Sa 8:17; 1Rs 2:27; 1Cr 24:3; Êx 6:23.) Na qualidade de sumo sacerdote, Eli julgou Israel por 40 anos. Durante a vida dele, Samuel começou a ser profeta. (1Sa 4:18; 3:10-13, 19-21) Os dias de Eli foram caracterizados pela fome espiritual em Israel, pois "a palavra da parte de Jeová havia ficado rara naqueles dias; não se divulgava visão". — 1Sa 3:1.

O primeiro relance de Eli é fornecido no capítulo 1 de Primeiro Samuel. Eli está sentado, do lado de fora, junto à ombreira da porta do tabernáculo, e censura a justa Ana, a quem ele julga estar bêbeda, quando, na realidade, ela está orando de forma prolongada a Jeová ali, na frente do tabernáculo. Diante da resposta de Ana, de que ela não está bêbeda, mas fala da abundância de sua preocupação e do seu vexame, Eli a despede em paz. Jeová responde à oração de Ana e ela dá à luz um filho, a quem chama de Samuel. Assim que ele é desmamado, ela, em harmonia com seu voto, entrega-o para o serviço no tabernáculo. — 1Sa 1:9-18, 20, 24, 28; 2:11, 18.

Relapso em Disciplinar Seus Filhos. Como pai e sumo sacerdote em Israel, Eli se mostra relapso em aplicar a disciplina de Jeová. Seus dois filhos, Hofni e Fineias, servem como sacerdotes oficiantes, mas são "homens imprestáveis", interessados apenas em satisfazer seu ventre e seus desejos sexuais impuros. Não se contentam com o quinhão do sacrifício reservado para eles pela lei de Deus, e até mesmo se servem antes de Jeová, por fazerem que um ajudante exija carne crua do ofertante, antes de fazer a gordura fumegar sobre o altar. Os filhos cobiçosos e sensuais de Eli usam sua posição junto à tenda de reunião para se entregar a vícios e a furtos às custas da adoração pura de Jeová. Mesmo quando seus filhos corruptos têm relações sexuais imorais com as mulheres que servem à entrada do tabernáculo, Eli não os expulsa do cargo, mas apenas os censura de forma branda. Eli continua honrando a seus filhos mais do que a Jeová. — 1Sa 2:12-17, 22-25, 29.

No decorrer do tempo, chega um profeta de Deus com uma mensagem funesta de aviso: O poder e a influência da casa de Eli serão decepados, de modo que não chegará a haver homem idoso na casa dele. Seus filhos corruptos são designados a morrer num só dia. (1Sa 2:27-36) Por intermédio do próprio menino Samuel, Jeová reafirma o julgamento adverso sobre a casa de Eli. (1Sa 3:11-14) Samuel tem medo de relatar esta mensagem, mas o faz a pedido de Eli. Eli sujeita-se então humildemente a isso, dizendo: "É de Jeová. Faça ele o que for bom aos seus olhos." — 1Sa 3:15-18.

Jeová Julga a Casa Dele. A retribuição chega segundo a palavra de Deus. Israel perde cerca de 4.000 homens na batalha contra os filisteus. Os israelitas decidem trazer de Silo a Arca e levá-la ao acampamento, pensando que isto resultaria em serem libertos dos seus inimigos. Mas os filisteus aceleram seus esforços de combate. Trinta mil israelitas são mortos. A Arca é capturada. Hofni e Fineias, que estão ali com a Arca, morrem. Um homem de Benjamim vai correndo das linhas de frente para levar as novas a Eli. Cego e debilitado, Eli, com 98 anos, está sentado à beira da estrada, seu coração tremendo por causa da Arca. Ao ouvir dizer que a Arca foi capturada, Eli cai de costas e morre de fratura do pescoço. — 1Sa 4:2-18.

Retribuição adicional contra a casa de Eli sobreveio às mãos do Rei Saul, que implacavelmente ordenou o assassínio dos sacerdotes de Nobe, descendentes de Eli por meio de Aitube, filho de Fineias. (1Sa 14:3; 22:11, 18) Apenas Abiatar, filho de Aimeleque, escapou do massacre e continuou servindo como sacerdote durante o reinado de Davi. (1Sa 22:20; 2Sa 19:11) No entanto, Abiatar foi removido como sacerdote por Salomão, por ter oferecido ajuda ao conspirador rebelde, Adonias. (1Rs 1:7; 2:26, 27) Cumpriu-se assim o julgamento de Jeová sobre a casa de Eli, e os descendentes dele foram expulsos para sempre do cargo de sumo sacerdote. — 1Sa 3:13, 14.

ELI, II. Quando Jesus morria na estaca de tortura, por volta da nona hora, ou cerca das 15 horas, ele exclamou: "Eli, Eli, lama sabactâni?" ("Deus meu, Deus meu, por que me abandonaste?") (Mt 27:46; Mr 15:34) Os observadores pensavam que Jesus chamava por Elias. Talvez entendessem mal as palavras de Jesus por sua fala ser indistinta em resultado do seu intenso sofrimento, ou porque seu dialeto diferia do deles. (Mt 27:47; Mr 15:34) Ao exclamar a seu Pai celeste, reconhecendo-o como o seu Deus, Jesus cumpriu o Salmo 22:1.

ELI, III [do hebr.: significando "Elevado (Exaltado)"]. Evidentemente o pai de Maria e avô materno de Jesus Cristo. (Lu 3:23) Compreende-se que ser José chamado de "filho de Eli" significa que era genro de Eli. Embora Lucas não aliste Maria, mãe de Jesus, ele evidentemente traça a ascendência natural dela de Davi. — Lu 3:31; veja GENEALOGIA DE JESUS CRISTO.

ELIABA [Deus Esconde]. Saalbonita; um dos poderosos de Davi. — 2Sa 23:32; 1Cr 11:33.

ELIABE [Meu Deus É Pai].

1. Filho de Helom, da tribo de Zebulão; um dos 12 maiorais designados por Jeová para ajudar Moisés e Arão na contagem dos filhos de Israel para o exército. (Núm 1:1-4, 9, 16) Eliabe era o encarregado do exército da sua tribo, que fazia parte da divisão de três tribos do acampamento de Judá. (Núm 2:3, 7; 10:14-16) Além de participar na oferenda em grupo feita pelos maiorais, após a ereção do tabernáculo, o maioral Eliabe apresentou então sua própria oferta no terceiro dia da inauguração do altar. — Núm 7:1-3, 10, 11, 24-29.

2. Filho de Palu, da tribo de Rubem; pai de Nemuel. Os outros filhos de Eliabe, Datã e Abirão, apoiaram Corá na sua rebelião contra Moisés e foram tragados junto com os da sua casa na milagrosa abertura da terra. — Núm 16:1, 12; 26:8-10; De 11:6.

3. Levita da família dos coatitas e antepassado de Samuel, o profeta. (1Cr 6:22, 27, 28, 33, 34) Em 1 Crônicas 6:34, seu nome é dado como Eliel, e em 1 Samuel 1:1, como Eliú.

4. Primogênito de Jessé, pai do Rei Davi. (1Sa 17:13; 1Cr 2:13) A aparência de Eliabe e sua estatura elevada impressionaram de tal forma a Samuel, que ele concluiu que este era o escolhido por Deus para o reinado. Jeová, porém, havia rejeitado Eliabe e escolhido Davi. — 1Sa 16:6-12.

Eliabe, Abinadabe e Samá, os três filhos mais velhos de Jessé, estavam no exército de Saul na ocasião em que o campeão filisteu, Golias, lançou seu desafio aos homens de Israel. Pouco antes de Golias subir de novo da linha de frente dos filisteus para zombar de Israel, Davi, tendo sido enviado por seu pai, chegou ao local, trazendo provisões de alimento para seus três irmãos. Muito irado por Davi indagar entre os guerreiros israelitas sobre a recompensa a ser recebida por aquele que abatesse Golias, Eliabe criticou duramente a Davi, insinuando que este era negligente em cuidar de seus deveres pastoris, e acusando-o de ser presunçoso e de ter um coração ruim. (Este relato sobre a incumbência de Davi e a ira de Eliabe é omitido no Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209.) — 1Sa 17:13, 17, 26-28.

Muito mais tarde, parece que Jerimote, filho de Davi, casou-se com Abiail, filha de Eliabe. — 2Cr 11:18.

5. Um dos gaditas que se juntaram a Davi enquanto ele ainda estava sob-restrição por causa do Rei Saul. Os gaditas são descritos como "homens poderosos, valentes", sendo o mínimo deles igual a cem, e o maior, igual a mil. — 1Cr 12:1, 8, 9, 14.

6. Músico levita da segunda turma, que ajudou com a música quando o Rei Davi fez a arca de Jeová ser transportada da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:18, 20, 25; 16:5.

ELIADA [Deus Conheceu].

1. Filho de Davi, nascido em Jerusalém. (2Sa 5:13-16; 1Cr 3:5-8) Chamado Beeliada em 1 Crônicas 14:7.

2. Pai de um opositor de Salomão chamado Rezom. — 1Rs 11:23.

3. Oficial do exército, benjamita, que comandava 200.000 arqueiros durante o reinado de Jeosafá. — 2Cr 17:12, 17.

ELIÃO [Deus do Povo].

1. Pai de Bate-Seba. (2Sa 11:3) Chamado Amiel em 1 Crônicas 3:5.

2. Um dos poderosos de Davi; filho de Aitofel. (2Sa 23:34) Talvez tenha sido o mesmo que o N.º 1 acima, o que tornaria Bate-Seba neta de Aitofel.

ELIAQUIM [Meu Deus se Levanta].

1. Filho de Hilquias; principal administrador dos assuntos da casa de Ezequias, rei de Judá, na época em que o rei assírio Senaqueribe invadiu Judá, em 732 AEC.

Enquanto Sebna ainda estava "sobre a casa", o profeta Isaías predisse que ele seria removido dessa posição e substituído por Eliaquim, a quem Jeová chama de "meu servo". A transferência devia ser feita por vestir Eliaquim com a veste comprida e a faixa oficiais de Sebna. Também, "a chave da casa de Davi" deveria ser colocada sobre o ombro de Eliaquim, sugerindo que se lhe confiaria a supervisão das câmaras do rei e a autoridade de decidir quem poderia ser aceito no serviço do rei. — Is 22:15-24.

Agindo nesta posição oficial, Eliaquim, Sebna, o secretário, e Joá, aparentemente o cronista, foram falar com Rabsaqué, que viera a Jerusalém junto com poderosa força militar, a fim de exigir a rendição da cidade. Daí, com as vestimentas rasgadas, os três relataram as palavras dos porta-vozes de Senaqueribe ao Rei Ezequias, o qual, por sua vez, passou a enviar Eliaquim, Sebna e os anciãos dentre os sacerdotes a Isaías, para indagar de Jeová. — Is 36:11, 22; 37:1, 2; 2Rs 18:17, 18, 26, 36, 37; 19:1, 2.

2. Rei de Judá (628-618 AEC), a quem o Faraó Neco colocou no trono, mudando-lhe o nome para Jeoiaquim. Eliaquim era filho do Rei Josias. — 2Rs 23:34; veja JEOIAQUIM.

3. Um dos sacerdotes levitas com as trombetas, que estava no desfile providenciado por Neemias na inauguração da reconstruída muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:31, 41.

4. Antepassado de José, pai adotivo de Jesus. — Mt 1:13.

5. Antepassado de Maria, mãe terrestre de Jesus. — Lu 3:30.

ELIAS [Meu Deus É Jeová].

1. Um dos mais destacados profetas de Israel. Ele, evidentemente, era de Tisbé, que alguns julgam ser uma aldeia na terra de Gileade, ao L do rio Jordão. (1Rs 17:1) Iniciou sua longa carreira profética em Israel durante o reinado do Rei Acabe, que começou a governar por volta de 940 AEC, e continuou durante o reinado do filho de Acabe, Acazias (que começou em c. 919 AEC). (1Rs 22:51) A última vez que é mencionado como servindo qual profeta (desta vez para Judá) é perto do fim do reinado de oito anos do Rei Jeorão, de Judá, cujo governo começou em 913 AEC. — 2Cr 21:12-15; 2Rs 8:16.

Mediante Elias, Jeová proveu um esteio para a adoração verdadeira, numa época em que a condição espiritual e moral de Israel havia caído a um nível alarmantemente baixo. O Rei Acabe, filho de Onri, tinha continuado a adoração do bezerro, estabelecida por Jeroboão, mas, o que era pior, casara-se com Jezabel, filha do rei sidônio Etbaal. Sob a influência dela, Acabe agravou muitíssimo seus pecados, muito além de todos os reis precedentes de Israel, por introduzir em grandíssima escala a adoração de Baal. Multiplicaram-se os sacerdotes e os profetas de Baal, e a corrupção atingiu um grau extremo. O ódio de Jezabel a Jeová causou perseguição e matança dos profetas, obrigando-os a ocultar-se em cavernas. — 1Rs 16:30-33; 18:13.

Alimentado por Corvos. Elias aparece pela primeira vez no registro quando Jeová o envia para anunciar o castigo que virá sobre Israel por seus pecados. Suas primeiras palavras registradas são: "Assim como vive Jeová, o Deus de Israel, perante quem deveras estou de pé." Elias indica que Jeová, o Deus vivente de Israel, decretou que não haveria chuva nem orvalho por um período de anos, exceto às ordens de Elias. Este período mostra ser de três anos e seis meses. (1Rs 17:1; Tg 5:17) Depois deste anúncio, Jeová dirige Elias para o vale da torrente de Querite, ao L do Jordão, no território da tribo de Gade. Ali, miraculosamente, corvos lhe trazem comida. Ele obtém água do vale da torrente, que, no devido tempo, seca em virtude da estiagem. Jeová continua a guiá-lo, mandando-o sair do território de Israel para Sarefá, aldeia fenícia dependente de Sídon naquela época. Ali, perto da cidade de Sídon, onde governa Etbaal, sogro do Rei Acabe (1Rs 16:31), Elias encontra uma viúva que está preparando a última refeição para si mesma e seu filho, com a última porção de farinha e de azeite. Elias solicita um bolo, com a promessa de que Jeová fará provisões para ela durante a seca. Visto que o reconhece como homem de Deus, ela concorda e é abençoada. (Veja Mt 10:41, 42.) Durante a permanência de Elias na sua casa, o filho dela morre. Elias ora a Deus, que faz esse retornar à vida, sendo esta a primeira ressurreição registrada, e o terceiro dos oito milagres de Elias. — 1Rs 17.

Como incutiu Elias em Israel que Jeová realmente é o verdadeiro Deus?

No ínterim, Acabe procura Elias em toda a parte, numa busca infrutífera, sem dúvida para matá-lo. (1Rs 18:10) Por fim, Deus manda Elias apresentar-se a Acabe. Elias encontra-se com Acabe e solicita uma reunião com os 450 profetas de Baal e os 400 profetas do poste sagrado (Axerá). Acabe reúne os profetas no monte Carmelo, não muito longe do mar Mediterrâneo. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 950) Elias, então, diante do povo, propõe um teste para provar quem é o verdadeiro Deus a ser seguido. O deus que responder por consumir o novilho sacrificado a ele deve ser reconhecido por todos. Considerando isto justo, o povo concorda. Inicialmente se invoca a Baal, porém, em vão. Não ocorre nenhum fogo, nenhuma prova de que Baal seja um deus vivo, embora seus profetas persistam em orar a ele, sim, até mesmo infligindo cortes em si mesmos, segundo seu ritual. Mancam em torno do altar, sob um sol escaldante, durante a maior parte do dia, enquanto Elias implacavelmente zomba deles, aumentando seu frenesi. — 1Rs 18:18-29.

Chega então a vez de Elias. Usando 12 pedras, ele restaura um altar que tinha sido derrubado, provavelmente às instâncias de Jezabel. Daí, faz com que o povo ensope de água, por três vezes, a oferta e o altar; até mesmo o rego ao redor do altar, delimitando uma área quadrada de talvez uns 32 m de cada lado, é enchido de água. (1Rs 18:30-35) Por volta da hora da oferta diária, vespertina, de cereais, Elias ora uma única vez a Jeová, que envia fogo do céu para consumir, não só a oferta, mas também a lenha, as pedras do altar e a água do rego. (1Rs 18:36-38) O povo, ao ver isto, lança-se com o rosto em terra e diz: "Jeová é o verdadeiro Deus! Jeová é o verdadeiro Deus!" Daí Elias faz com que todos os 450 profetas de Baal sejam mortos no vale da torrente do Quisom. Respondendo à oração de Elias, Jeová interrompe a seca com um aguaceiro. Pelo poder de Jeová, Elias corre então adiante do carro de Acabe, talvez tantos quantos 30 km, até Jezreel. — 1Rs 18:39-46.

Foge de Jezabel. Ao ser informada da morte dos seus profetas de Baal, a Rainha Jezabel faz um voto de mandar matar Elias. Com medo, Elias foge uns 150 km para o SO, até Berseba, ao O do Mar Morto inferior. (MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 949) Deixando ali seu ajudante, penetra mais fundo no ermo, orando para morrer. Ali lhe aparece o anjo de Jeová, a fim de prepará-lo para a longa jornada até "o monte do verdadeiro Deus", Horebe (Sinai). Sustentado para a jornada de 40 dias pelo que come então, ele empreende essa viagem de mais de 300 km. Em Horebe, Jeová lhe fala depois de uma espantosa demonstração de poder num vendaval, num terremoto e num fogo. Jeová não está nestas manifestações; ele não é deus da natureza, ou apenas forças naturais, personificadas. Estas forças naturais são apenas expressões da sua força ativa, não o próprio Jeová. O Todo-Poderoso mostra a Elias que este ainda tem trabalho a fazer como profeta. Jeová corrige a ideia de Elias, de ele ser o único adorador do verdadeiro Deus em Israel, por mostrar que há 7.000 que não se curvaram diante de Baal. Manda Elias retornar à sua designação, mencionando três pessoas que devem ser ungidas, ou comissionadas, a fazer um trabalho para Jeová: Hazael, como rei sobre a Síria; Jeú, como rei sobre Israel; e seu próprio sucessor, Eliseu. — 1Rs 19:1-18.

Designa Eliseu Como Seu Sucessor. Elias, em seguida, segue para a cidade natal de Eliseu, Abel-Meolá. Encontrando Eliseu arando um campo, Elias lança sobre ele seu manto oficial, indicando uma designação ou unção. Deste tempo em diante, Eliseu segue de perto a Elias, como ajudante deste. Sem dúvida está com Elias ao surgir outra ocasião para se profetizar contra Acabe. Este rei ganancioso, adorador de Baal, apossou-se ilegalmente dum vinhedo, a possessão hereditária de Nabote, o jezreelita, por permitir que Jezabel, sua esposa, usasse acusações falsas, testemunhas fal-sas e juízes injustos para mandar assassinar a Nabote. Elias encontra-se com Acabe no vinhedo e diz a Acabe que o sangue deste será lambido pelos cães no mesmo lugar em que lamberam o sangue de Nabote. Anuncia também um fim similar para Jezabel. — 1Rs 19:19; 21:1-26.

Cerca de três anos depois, Acabe morre em batalha. Seu carro de guerra é lavado junto ao reservatório de Samaria, e os cães lambem o sangue dele. A execução de Jezabel, porém, demora talvez mais uns 15 anos. Acabe foi sucedido pelo seu filho Acazias. Este rei segue as pisadas do seu iníquo pai, pois, quando ferido num acidente, ele se volta para o deus falso Baal-Zebube, o deus de Ecrom, para indagar sobre o resultado da sua doença. Elias envia-lhe a palavra de Jeová, de que, por causa disso, positivamente morrerá. Quando Acazias manda sucessivamente três grupos para trazer Elias, cada grupo composto de um chefe e de 50 homens, o profeta invoca fogo do céu para aniquilar os primeiros dois grupos, mas, atendendo à súplica do terceiro chefe, retorna com este para expressar em pessoa o julgamento contra Acazias. — 1Rs 22:1, 37, 38; 2Rs 1:1-17.

Eliseu o Sucede. Em harmonia com a ação de Elias, de designar Eliseu, anos antes, chega o tempo em que Elias precisa transferir o manto do seu cargo profético para Eliseu, que já foi bem treinado. Isto ocorre durante o governo do sucessor de Acazias, seu irmão Jeorão, de Israel. Nessa ocasião, Elias dirige-se a Betel, dali para Jericó, e para baixo ao Jordão, Eliseu acompanhando-o em todo o caminho. Ali Eliseu é recompensado pela sua fidelidade por ver um carro ardente de guerra e cavalos de fogo, e Elias ascender num vendaval em direção aos céus. Eliseu apanha o manto oficial de Elias, que caíra dele, e vêm sobre ele "duas parcelas" (como o quinhão dum primogênito) do espírito de Elias, um espírito de coragem e de ser "absolutamente ciumento por Jeová, o Deus dos exércitos". — 2Rs 2:1-13; 1Rs 19:10, 14; compare isso com De 21:17.

Elias não morre nesta ocasião, nem vai ao domínio espiritual invisível, mas é transferido para outra designação profética. (Jo 3:13) Isto é demonstrado por Eliseu não ter guardado nenhum período de luto pela morte do seu amo. Alguns anos depois da sua ascensão no vendaval, Elias ainda está vivo e ativo como profeta, desta feita para o rei de Judá. Por causa do proceder iníquo adotado pelo Rei Jeorão, de Judá, Elias lhe escreve uma carta, expressando a condenação de Jeová, que se cumpre pouco depois. — 2Cr 21:12-15; veja CÉU, I (Ascensão ao Céu).

Milagres. No relato bíblico, creditam-se a Elias oito milagres. São: (1) fechar o céu para que não chovesse, (2) manter renovado o estoque de farinha e de azeite da viúva de Sarefá, (3) ressuscitar o filho da viúva, (4) fazer com que fogo caísse do céu, em resposta à oração, (5) fazer com que a chuva interrompesse a seca, em resposta à oração, (6) fazer descer fogo sobre o capitão do Rei Acazias, e seus 50 homens, (7) fazer descer fogo sobre um segundo capitão e seus 50 homens, e (8) dividir o rio Jordão por golpeá-lo com seu manto oficial. Sua ascensão em direção aos céus também foi miraculosa, mas foi um ato direto de Deus, não algo iniciado por uma oração ou proclamação feita por Elias.

Elias foi um forte defensor da verdadeira adoração de Jeová. Fez uma enorme obra destrutiva contra o baalismo em Israel; a obra começada por ele foi continuada por Eliseu, e a execução de Jezabel e a destruição do impuro baalismo sidônio foram realizadas por Jeú. Nos dias de Elias, 7.000 foram achados fiéis a Jeová, inclusive Obadias, administrador doméstico de Acabe; sem dúvida, Elias fortaleceu grandemente a alguns deles. Elias designou Eliseu seu sucessor, mas a unção de Hazael e a de Jeú foram deixadas para Eliseu realizar.

O apóstolo Paulo, sem dúvida, refere-se a Elias quando fala de "Samuel e os outros profetas, os quais, pela fé . . . puseram em execução a justiça . . . Mulheres receberam os seus mortos pela ressurreição". Por conseguinte, ele está entre a "nuvem" de fiéis testemunhas da antiguidade. (He 11:32-35; 12:1) O discípulo Tiago aponta Elias qual prova da eficácia das orações de um "homem com sentimentos iguais aos nossos", que serve a Deus com justiça. — Tg 5:16-18.

Obra Profética de Coisas Vindouras. Cerca de 450 anos depois do tempo de Elias, Malaquias profetizou que Elias, o profeta, apareceria "antes de chegar o grande e atemorizante dia de Jeová". (Mal 4:5, 6) Os judeus dos dias de Jesus se mantinham na expectativa da vinda de Elias, para cumprir esta profecia. (Mt 17:10) Alguns achavam que Jesus era Elias. (Mt 16:14) João, o Batizador, que usava uma roupa de pelos e um cinto de couro em torno dos lombos, como fizera Elias, negou que fosse realmente Elias em pessoa. (2Rs 1:8; Mt 3:4; Jo 1:21) O anjo não disse a Zacarias, pai de João, que João seria Elias, mas sim que ele teria "o espírito e o poder de Elias . . . a fim de aprontar para Jeová um povo preparado". (Lu 1:17) Jesus indicou que João fez essa obra, mas não fora reconhecido pelos judeus. (Mt 17:11-13) Após a morte de João, ocorreu na transfiguração de Jesus um aparecimento visionário de Elias, junto com Moisés, indicando que ainda havia algo a acontecer, conforme representado pela obra feita por Elias. — Mr 9:1-8.

2. Filho do benjamita Jeroão; habitante de Jerusalém e cabeça da sua casa. — 1Cr 8:1, 27, 28.

3. Sacerdote levita dos “filhos de Harim” (1Cr 24:8; Esd 2:1, 2, 39), que estava entre os que acataram a admoestação de Esdras, de despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:21, 44.

4. Descendente de Elão, que estava entre os que acataram a exortação de Esdras, de despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:26, 44.

ELIASAFE [Deus Acrescentou (Incrementou)].

1. Filho de Deuel (ou Reuel), da tribo de Gade; um dos 12 maiorais que Jeová escolheu para ajudar Moisés e Arão em fazer a soma dos varões para o exército. (Núm 1:1-4, 14; 2:14) Eliasafe estava sobre o exército da sua tribo, que fazia parte da divisão de três tribos do acampamento de Rubem. (Núm 2:10-15; 10:18-20) Além de participar na apresentação em grupo feita pelos maiorais após a ereção do tabernáculo, Eliasafe apresentou depois a sua própria oferta no sexto dia da inauguração do altar. — Núm 7:1, 2, 10, 42-47.

2. Filho de Lael e maioral da casa paterna dos gersonitas. Sob a direção de Eliasafe, os gersonitas transportavam as coberturas da tenda e o reposteiro da entrada do tabernáculo, o reposteiro da entrada do pátio e os cortinados do pátio, bem como os cordões de tenda. — Núm 3:21-26.

ELIASIBE [Meu Deus Retorna (Traz de Volta)].

1. Levita dos filhos de Arão, para quem saiu a sorte da 11.ª turma sacerdotal no tempo de Davi. — 1Cr 24:1, 5, 6, 12.

2. Pai de certo Jeoanã. — Esd 10:6.

3. Cantor levita do templo que estava entre os que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras no tempo de Esdras. — Esd 10:16, 17, 23, 24, 44.

4. Descendente de Zatu, que também estava entre os homens que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:16, 17, 27, 44.

5. Descendente de Bani, que também estava entre os que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:16, 17, 34, 36, 44.

6. Neto de Jesua, que retornou do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel. Eliasibe era sumo sacerdote nos dias de Neemias, e participou com os outros sacerdotes na reconstrução do Portão das Ovelhas da muralha de Jerusalém. (Ne 12:1, 10; 3:1) Na ausência de Neemias, o próprio Eliasibe profanou o templo por fazer um refeitório no pátio do templo para seu parente Tobias, o amonita. Mas Neemias, ao retornar, lançou fora a mobília de Tobias e mandou limpar os refeitórios. Neemias expulsou também um dos filhos de Joiada, filho de Eliasibe, por se ter casado com uma filha de Sambalá, o horonita. — Ne 13:4, 5, 7-9, 28.

7. Filho de Elioenai, descendente do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 3:1, 5, 10, 24.

ELIATA [Meu Deus Veio]. Filho de Hemã, o qual, durante o governo do Rei Davi, foi designado por sorte para ser músico no 20.º grupo de serviço na casa de Jeová. — 1Cr 25:1, 4-6, 9, 27.

ELICA. Um dos poderosos de Davi, evidentemente da cidade de Harode. — 2Sa 23:25.

ELIDADE [Meu Deus Amou]. Maioral benjamita, filho de Quislom; ele foi designado à ordem de Jeová para participar diretamente na partilha da Terra da Promessa entre os israelitas. — Núm 34:17, 18, 21, 29.

ELIEL [Meu Deus É Deus].

1. Um dos cabeças da meia tribo de Manassés. Igual aos outros cabeças, Eliel era valente, poderoso, homem de fama. — 1Cr 5:24.

2. Levita da família dos coatitas e antepassado do profeta Samuel. (1Cr 6:33, 34) Ele evidentemente é chamado Eliú em 1 Samuel 1:1 e Eliabe em 1 Crônicas 6:27.

3. Descendente de Simei, da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:1, 20, 21.

4. Descendente de Sasaque, da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:1, 22, 25.

5. Maavita, um dos poderosos de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 46.

6. Outro dos poderosos de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 47.

7. Gadita, um dos poderosos velozes, corajosos, que se separaram para o lado de Davi enquanto este ainda estava sob restrições por causa do Rei Saul. O mínimo destes gaditas é descrito como igual a cem, e o maior, como igual a mil. — 1Cr 12:1, 8, 11, 14.

8. Filho de Hébron; um dos cabeças levitas escolhidos por Davi para levar a Arca a Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:9, 11, 12.

9. Comissário levita junto a Conanias, que estava encarregado ‘da contribuição, e do décimo, e das coisas sagradas’ nos dias do Rei Ezequias. — 2Cr 31:11-13.

ELIENAI [forma abreviada de Elieó-Enai]. Descendente de Simei, da tribo de Benjamim, que morava em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 8:1, 20, 21, 28.

ELIEÓ-ENAI [Em Jeová Estão os Meus Olhos].

1. Porteiro dos coraítas, designado por Davi; sétimo filho de Meselemias, da tribo de Levi. — 1Cr 26:1-3.

2. Filho de Zeraías, o qual, acompanhado por 200 varões da casa paterna de Paate-Moabe, retornou de Babilônia a Jerusalém, junto com Esdras. — Esd 8:1, 4.

ELIÉZER [Meu Deus É Ajudador].

1. Homem de Damasco e herdeiro presumível de Abraão, o qual não tinha filhos. Abraão referiu-se a ele como 'um filho da minha casa'. (Gên 15:2, 3) Descobertas arqueológicas, tais como as tabuinhas de Nuzi, elucidam por que Abraão considerava Eliézer seu herdeiro. Frequentemente, casais sem filhos adotavam um filho que depois cuidaria deles na velhice e providenciaria seu sepultamento, quando morressem, daí herdando sua propriedade. Estipulava-se, porém, que, caso lhes nascesse um filho depois da adoção, o filho verdadeiro se tornaria o principal herdeiro.

É provável que Eliézer fosse o mencionado como o servo mais antigo de Abraão e administrador da sua casa, enviado por Abraão à casa de Naor, na Mesopotâmia superior, para trazer uma esposa para Isaque. Igual a seu amo Abraão, Eliézer se voltava para Jeová em busca de orientação, e reconhecia a Sua direção. — Gên 24:2, 4, 12-14, 56.

2. O mais novo dos dois filhos de Moisés, assim chamado por Moisés porque Deus tinha sido seu ajudador ao livrar Moisés da espada de Faraó. (Êx 18:4) Eliézer só teve um filho, Reabias, por meio do qual surgiram muitos descendentes. Nos dias de Davi, um destes, Selomote, junto com seus irmãos, foi designado sobre todas as coisas tornadas sagradas. — 1Cr 23:17; 26:25, 26, 28.

3. Filho de Bequer e descendente de Benjamim. — 1Cr 7:6, 8.

4. Um dos sete sacerdotes que tocaram alto as trombetas diante da arca de Jeová quando Davi a fez levar da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:24.

5. Filho de Zicri e líder da tribo de Rubem durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 27:16.

6. Filho de Dodavaú, de Maressa; profeta que predisse que Jeová derrocaria os trabalhos do Rei Jeosafá no que se referia à sociedade com o iníquo Rei Acazias na construção de navios. — 2Cr 20:35-37; 1Rs 22:48.

7. Um dos cabeças dos exilados que retornaram a Jerusalém junto com Esdras. — Esd 8:16.

8. Sacerdote "dos filhos de Jesua", dentre os que acataram a exortação de Esdras e que prometeram despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:18, 19.

9. Levita dentre os homens que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras, seguindo a exortação de Esdras. — Esd 10:23, 44.

10. Descendente de Harim, dentre os que acataram as palavras de Esdras, de despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:31, 44.

11. Antepassado de Maria, mãe terrestre de Jesus. — Lu 3:29.

ELIFAL [possivelmente: Meu Deus Arbitrou]. Filho de Ur, alistado entre os poderosos das forças militares de Davi. Elifal talvez seja o Elifelete de 2 Samuel 23:34. — 1Cr 11:26, 35.

ELIFAZ.

1. Primogênito de Esaú e de sua esposa cananeia, Ada. Seis ou sete dos filhos de Elifaz, inclusive Temã, Omar e Amaleque, tornaram-se xeques de tribos edomitas. — Gên 36:4, 10-12, 15, 16; 1Cr 1:35, 36; veja XEQUE.

2. Um dos três companheiros de Jó. (Jó 2:11) Sendo temanita, era provavelmente descendente do N.º 1 acima, por conseguinte, descendente de Abraão e um parente distante de Jó. Ele e sua posteridade se jactavam da sua sabedoria. (Je 49:7) Dentre os três "consoladores", Elifaz prima como o mais importante e influente, o que sugere que talvez tenha sido também o mais idoso. Ele fala primeiro, nas três fases do debate, e seus discursos são mais extensos.

O raciocínio de Elifaz, no seu primeiro discurso, era mais ou menos o seguinte: "Que inocente jamais pereceu? E onde é que os retos foram eliminados?" Por isso, a conclusão dele é que Jó deve ter feito algo iníquo para merecer o castigo de Deus. (Jó caps. 4, 5) Em sua segunda censura forte, Elifaz zomba da sabedoria de Jó: "Responderá o próprio sábio com conhecimento ventoso, ou encherá seu ventre com o vento oriental? . . . O que sabes realmente que nós não saibamos?" Elifaz dá a entender que Jó "tenta mostrar-se superior ao Todo-Poderoso". Concluindo sua segunda difamação das virtudes de Jó, o edomita pinta o justo Jó como apóstata, como vivendo nas tendas do suborno, como um homem cheio de engano. (Jó 15) Por fim, Elifaz atormenta Jó pela terceira vez, acusando-o falsamente de toda sorte de crimes — de extorsão, de reter água e pão dos necessitados, e de oprimir viúvas e órfãos. — Jó 22.

Depois da segunda diatribe de Elifaz, Jó responde muito bem: "Todos vós sois consoladores funestos! Não há fim de palavras ventosas?" (Jó 16:2, 3) Na conclusão dos debates, o próprio Jeová se dirige a Elifaz: "Minha ira se acendeu contra ti e contra os teus dois companheiros, pois não falastes a verdade a meu respeito assim como fez meu servo Jó." Diz-se a Elifaz que eles deviam oferecer um sacrifício, e que Jó então orará a favor deles. — Jó 42:7-9.

ELIFELETE [Meu Deus É Escape; Deus de Escape].

1. Filho de Aasbai; um dos poderosos de Davi. (2Sa 23:34) Elifelete possivelmente é o Elifal de 1 Crônicas 11:35.

2. Filho de Davi, nascido em Jerusalém (1Cr 3: 5, 6), também chamado Elpelete em 1 Crônicas 14:5.

3. Último filho de Davi mencionado por nome, nascido em Jerusalém. (2Sa 5:16; 1Cr 3:8; 14:7) Comentadores que não consideram a repetição do nome no relato de Crônicas como erro de escriba sugerem que este segundo Elifelete nasceu após a morte do primeiro filho deste nome.

4. Terceiro filho de Eseque, descendente do Rei Saul. — 1Cr 8:33, 39.

5. Descendente de Adonicão, que retornou com Esdras de Babilônia a Jerusalém. — Esd 8:1, 13.

6. Homem alistado entre aqueles que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram, acatando a exortação de Esdras. — Esd 10:33, 44.

ELIFELEU [possivelmente: Que Deus o Torne Distinto]. Músico levita da segunda turma, que atuou como um dos regentes no toque da harpa por ocasião da transferência da Arca sagrada da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:17, 18, 21.

ELIM [Árvores Grandes]. Lugar do segundo acampamento dos israelitas depois de atravessarem o Mar Vermelho. (Êx 15:27; 16:1; Núm 33:9, 10) Embora não haja certeza sobre a sua localização exata, é tradicionalmente identificado com o uádi Gurundel (Gharandel) na pensínsula do Sinai, a uns 88 km ao SSE de Suez. Igual ao bíblico Elim, que tinha "doze fontes de água e setenta palmeiras", este lugar atual é bem conhecido como lugar de água, com vegetação e palmeiras.

ELIMAS [Feiticeiro]. Nome profissional ou título de "certo homem, feiticeiro, falso profeta", chamado Barjesus, um judeu que morava na ilha de Chipre, no primeiro século EC. (At 13:6-8) Quando Lucas diz 'feiticeiro, é assim que se traduz seu nome', ele se refere ao nome assumido, Elimas, não a Barjesus. Não era incomum que judeus daquele tempo se entregassem às artes mágicas e à feitiçaria, ou que assumissem um nome grego quando viviam numa sociedade grega. — At 8:9-11; 19:17-19; veja BARJESUS.

ELIMELEQUE [Meu Deus É Rei]. Homem de Belém, que, junto com sua esposa Noemi e seus dois filhos, Malom e Quiliom, partiram de Judá por causa duma fome nos dias dos juízes e passaram a residir como forasteiros em Moabe, onde ele faleceu. — Ru 1:1-3.

ELIOENAI [forma abreviada de Elieó-Enai].

1. Filho de Nearias e descendente do Rei Salomão. Elioenai era pai de Hodavias, Eliasibe, Pelaías, Acube, Joanã, Delaías e Anani. — 1Cr 3:10, 23, 24.

2. Maioral da tribo de Simeão. — 1Cr 4:24, 36-38.

3. Filho de Bequer e descendente de Benjamim. — 1Cr 7:6, 8.

4. Sacerdote dos "filhos de Pasur", entre os que acataram a exortação de Esdras, de despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 2:36, 38; 10:18, 19, 22.

5. Descendente de Zatu. Elioenai estava entre os que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras no tempo de Esdras. — Esd 10:27, 44.

6. Um dos sacerdotes com trombetas que estavam no cortejo providenciado por Neemias na inauguração da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:27, 31, 40, 41.

ELIOREFE [possivelmente: Deus de Inverno]. Filho de Sisa que, junto com seu irmão Aijá, serviu de secretário para o Rei Salomão. — 1Rs 4:1-3.

ELISÁ. Filho de Javã, e cabeça de família do qual "se espalhou a população das ilhas das nações". (Gên 10:4, 5; 1Cr 1:7) A única outra menção bíblica de Elisá acha-se na endecha proferida contra Tiro, onde esse nome aparece como de uma terra ou região que negociava com Tiro. Representa-se Tiro como navio figurativo, aparelhado por muitas nações, fornecendo as "ilhas de Elisá" a 'linha azul e a lã tingida de roxo' para a cobertura do convés do navio (talvez certo tipo de toldo para proteger do sol e da chuva). — Ez 27:1-7.

Josefo, historiador judeu do primeiro século, aplicou o nome Halisas (Elisá) aos halizões (eólios), um dos ramos ancestrais dos povos gregos. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 127 [vi, 1]) Já por volta do tempo de Ezequiel, o nome Eólia passara a designar apenas uma parte da costa O da Ásia Menor. Uma similaridade do nome Elisá é observada no distrito de Élida (Elis) na costa NO do Peloponeso (península meridional da Grécia). Sabe-se também que os gregos estabeleceram colônias na Itália meridional e na ilha da Sicília, e o Targum Aramaico, comentando Ezequiel 27:7, identifica Elisá como "a província da Itália". Qualquer destes locais se enquadraria no relato de Ezequiel no sentido de serem regiões que produziam um corante roxo muitíssimo prezado, mas não se pode declarar nada de conclusivo quanto à sua definitiva relação com Elisá, exceto que o peso da evidência aponta na direção da Grécia, em vez de na da África do Norte ou de Chipre. É também razoável que os descendentes de Elisá talvez não permanecessem fixos num lugar, mas que, no decorrer dos séculos, a região em que se estabeleceram se alterasse ou expandisse, e que o nome de Elisá assim talvez se aplicasse a regiões diferentes, em épocas diferentes.

ELISABETE [gr.: E·lei·sá·bet, do hebr.: 'E·li·shé·va, que significa "Meu Deus É Abundante; Deus de Abundância"]. Esposa, temente a Deus, do sacerdote Zacarias, e mãe de João, o Batizador. A própria Elisabete (ou Isabel, Al; BJ) era da família sacerdotal de Arão, o levita. Tanto ela como seu marido já eram bem avançados em anos quando o anjo Gabriel apareceu a Zacarias, no Santo do templo, e anunciou que Elisabete daria à luz um filho que devia chamar-se João. Ao ficar grávida, Elisabete se manteve em reclusão por cinco meses. No sexto mês da sua gravidez, ela foi visitada por sua parenta Maria. Nesta ocasião, João, ainda por nascer, pulou na madre da sua mãe, e Elisabete, cheia de espírito santo, bendisse Maria e o fruto do seu ventre, chamando-a de "a mãe de meu Senhor". — Lu 1:5-7, 11-13, 24, 39-43.

ELISAFATE [Meu Deus Julgou]. Um dos chefes de cem que o sacerdote Jeoiada incluiu num pacto e que estava entre aqueles que depois foram enviados através de Judá para reunir os levitas e os cabeças das casas paternas de Israel. (2Cr 23:1, 2) Elisafate deu seu apoio a Jeoiada em assegurar o reinado para Jeoás, herdeiro legítimo do trono, e em depor a usurpadora Atalia.

ELISAMA [Meu Deus Ouviu (Escutou)].

1. Filho de Amiúde, da tribo de Efraim; avô de Josué. (Núm 1:10; 2:18; 1Cr 7:26, 27) Elisama era um dos 12 maiorais designados por Jeová para ajudar Moisés e Arão no registro dos filhos de Israel para o exército. Ele comandava também o exército da sua tribo. (Núm 1:1-4, 17; 2:18; 10:22) Além de participar na oferenda em grupo feita pelos maiorais depois da ereção do tabernáculo, Elisama apresentou depois a sua própria oferta no sétimo dia da inauguração do altar. — Núm 7:1, 2, 5, 10, 11, 48-53.

2. Filho de Jecamias, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:3, 41.

3. Filho de Davi, nascido em Jerusalém. Este Elisama é alistado como Elisua em 2 Samuel 5:15, em 1 Crônicas 14:5, e em dois manuscritos hebraicos em 1 Crônicas 3:6. Acha-se em geral que Elisua seja o nome correto, visto que o nome Elisama aparece novamente em 1 Crônicas 3:8, e, portanto, pode ter-se introduzido facilmente no versículo 6 por um erro de escriba. Todavia, visto que o texto massorético, hebraico, a Septuaginta grega, a Pesito siríaca e a Vulgata latina rezam "Elisama" em 1 Crônicas 3:6, reteve-se esta forma do nome na Tradução do Novo Mundo, bem como em outras traduções.

4. Outro filho de Davi, nascido em Jerusalém. — 2Sa 5:16; 1Cr 3:8; 14:7.

5. Sacerdote nos dias do Rei Jeosafá que, junto com outros levitas e príncipes, 'dava volta através das cidades de Judá e ensinava entre o povo'. — 2Cr 17:1, 7-9.

6. Secretário na corte do Rei Jeoiaquim. — Je 36:12, 20, 21.

7. Avô de Ismael, assassino do governador judeu Gedalias. — 2Rs 25:25; Je 41:1-3.

ELISEBA [Meu Deus É Abundante; Deus de Abundância]. Filha de Aminadabe e esposa de Arão, irmão de Moisés. Eliseba deu à luz Nadabe, Abiú, Eleazar e Itamar para Arão. Seu irmão Nasom era maioral dos filhos de Judá. — Êx 6:23; Núm 2:3.

ELISEU [Deus É Salvação]. Filho de Safate e profeta de Jeová no décimo e no nono século AEC; sucessor do profeta Elias. Jeová mandou Elias ungir Eliseu, que era de Abel-Meolá. Encontrando Eliseu a arar, Elias lançou sobre ele seu manto oficial, indicando uma designação. (1Rs 19:16) Eliseu arava atrás de doze juntas de touros "e estava com a décima segunda". É de interesse notar que William Thomson, no século 19, em The Land and the Book (A Terra e o Livro; 1887, p. 144), relatou que era costumeiro, entre os árabes, que diversos lavradores trabalhassem juntos com seus pequenos arados, e um semeador podia facilmente semear toda a área lavrada por eles num dia. Eliseu, na retaguarda do grupo, pôde parar sem perturbar o trabalho dos demais. Ter ele sacrificado uma junta de touros e usado a apeiragem como lenha revela a prontidão, a determinação e o apreço de Eliseu pela convocação por parte de Jeová. Depois de preparar uma refeição, Eliseu partiu imediatamente para seguir Elias. — 1Rs 19:19-21.

Durante talvez seis anos, Eliseu serviu como ajudante de Elias. Elias servia como principal profeta, e Eliseu cooperava de perto com ele, sendo conhecido como aquele que "despejava água sobre as mãos de Elias", quando Elias lavava as mãos. — 2Rs 2:3-5; 3:11.

Eliseu, desde que se juntara a Elias, fez uma obra profética em Israel durante os reinados dos reis Acabe, Acazias, Jeorão, Jeú, e até o reinado de Jeoás. Quem governou no mesmo período em Judá foram Jeosafá, Jeorão, Acazias, Atalia, Jeoás e provavelmente Amazias. Eliseu usufruiu sozinho um ministério de uns 60 anos após a partida de Elias. — MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 949.

O registro da atividade profética de Eliseu, em Segundo Reis, não parece estar inteiramente em ordem cronológica. Por exemplo, no capítulo 5, Geazi é atacado de lepra, o que o excluiria da sociedade normal. Todavia, no capítulo 8, ele está falando de modo amigável com Jeorão, de Israel.

Também, a morte do Rei Jeoás, de Israel, acha-se registrada no capítulo 13, mas segue-se um registro de sua última entrevista com Eliseu. (2Rs 13:12-21) Em algumas partes do relato, as obras e os milagres de Eliseu parecem estar agrupados segundo sua natureza ou sua semelhança, por exemplo: (1) os que eram para o bem dos profetas e de outras pessoas (2Rs 4:1-6:7), daí, (2) os que tinham que ver com a nação e o rei. — 2Rs 6:8-7:20.

Sucede a Elias. A atividade de Eliseu, como sucessor de Elias, começa por volta de 917 AEC, ou pouco depois, na época da ascensão de Elias em direção aos céus, num vendaval. (2Rs 1:17; 2:1, 11, 12) Antes de Elias partir, Eliseu lhe pede "duas parcelas do [seu] espírito", isto é, uma porção dupla, que era devida ao primogênito. Ele ocupa esta posição por causa da sua designação oficial como sucessor de Elias, na época em que Elias lançou sobre ele seu manto oficial. (2Rs 2:9) Elias, compreendendo que não cabe a ele conceder isto, diz a Eliseu que, se vir Elias quando for removido de junto dele, seu desejo será concedido. Jeová confirma isto por permitir que Eliseu veja Elias ser levado num vendaval em direção aos céus. Quando Elias parte, seu manto simples, sua vestimenta oficial, cai dele. Eliseu o apanha, desta forma identificando-se como sucessor de Elias. À margem do rio Jordão, Jeová mostra que está com Eliseu, ao dividir miraculosamente as águas do Jordão quando Eliseu as golpeia com o manto. — 2Rs 2:9-15.

Atravessando o Jordão, Eliseu volta ao grupo dos filhos dos profetas em Jericó. Firmando ainda mais Eliseu como o cabeça da companhia de profetas de Deus, há sua cura do suprimento de água da cidade de Jericó, que era má e causava abortos. Dirigindo-se à nascente da água, lança sal nela, tirando-o de uma tigelinha nova, e "a água continua curada até o dia de hoje". — 2Rs 2:19-22.

De Jericó, Eliseu sobe até Betel, a uns 900 m acima do nível do mar, onde antes visitara um grupo dos filhos dos profetas, em companhia de Elias. (2Rs 2:3) A caminho, aparece um grupo de delinquentes juvenis e mostra grande desrespeito por ele e pelo seu cargo como profeta. "Sobe, careca! Sobe, careca!" escarnecem dele. Querem dizer que ele deve continuar subindo até Betel, ou que deve subir da terra, assim como seu predecessor supostamente fizera. (2Rs 2:11) Para ensinar a estes garotos e a seus pais o devido respeito pelo profeta de Jeová, ele se vira e invoca o mal sobre eles, em nome de Jeová. Subitamente, duas ursas saem da floresta e dilaceram 42 deles. — 2Rs 2:23, 24.

O Rei Jeorão, de Israel, o Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, e o rei de Edom ficam enredados num ermo sem água, durante uma expedição para sufocar uma revolta do Rei Mesa, de Moabe (que erigiu o que tem sido chamado de Pedra Moabita). O Rei Jeosafá clama por um profeta de Deus. Eliseu, não em benefício de Jeorão, mas por respeito a Jeosafá, que goza do favor de Jeová, manda trazer um tocador de instrumento de cordas, para que, sob a influência da música, possa receber inspiração de Jeová. (Veja 1Sa 10:5, 6.) Eliseu faz o povo cavar valas. Na manhã seguinte, estão cheias de água. À medida que o sol de manhã cedo brilha sobre a água nas valas, para os moabitas ela parece sangue. Imaginando que Israel e seus aliados foram abatidos numa luta confusa entre si mesmos, os moabitas avançam para levar os despojos. Mas, para sua surpresa, Israel se levanta e os derrota. (2Rs 3:4-27) Este evento ocorre entre 917 e 913 AEC.

Uma série de milagres de natureza doméstica surge então no registro de Eliseu. A viúva de um dos anteriores filhos dos profetas sofre grave carência. Eliseu multiplica milagrosamente seu escasso suprimento de azeite e salva os filhos dela de serem levados como escravos do credor dela. (2Rs 4:1-7) Este milagre se compara ao segundo milagre de Elias, quando ele multiplicou a farinha e o azeite da viúva de Sarefá. — 1Rs 17:8-16.

Em Suném, no vale de Jezreel, uma mulher de destaque demonstra incomum hospitalidade para com Eliseu, por reconhecê-lo como "homem santo de Deus", até mesmo providenciando-lhe um quarto, visto que ele frequentemente passa pela casa dela. Por esta sua bondade, Eliseu lhe promete um filho, embora o marido dela, nessa época, já seja idoso. Fiel à promessa, nasce-lhe um filho cerca de um ano depois, mas ele morre enquanto ainda criança. Eliseu então realiza sua primeira ressurreição, fazendo o menino retornar à vida, assim como Elias similarmente ressuscitara o filho da viúva de Sarefá. (2Rs 4:8-37; 1Rs 17:17-24) Graças à bondade dela para com um profeta de Deus, ela é ricamente recompensada. — Veja Mt 10:41.

Eliseu retorna a Gilgal, ao N de Betel, nas montanhas, para junto dos filhos dos profetas que estão ali. Grassa uma fome. À medida que se prepara um cozido, alguém inadvertidamente coloca algumas bagas venenosas na panela. Imediatamente, ao provarem o cozido, bradam: "Há morte na panela, homem do verdadeiro Deus." Visto que não seria bom desperdiçar comida durante a fome, Eliseu pede um pouco de farinha, colocando-a na panela e tornando comível o cozido, de modo que 'não se mostra haver nada nocivo na panela'. — 2Rs 4:38-41.

Nos tempos críticos da fome, um fiel restante de adoradores israelitas que não se curvaram perante Baal aprecia os esforços dos profetas de Jeová e lhes fornece alimento material. Quando certo homem traz 20 pães de cevada e um pouco de cereal, Eli-seu dá ordens para que este pequeno suprimento seja servido a todos. Mas há 100 homens dentre os "filhos dos profetas" a serem alimentados. Apesar das dúvidas daquele que servia, todos comem à saciedade, havendo ainda sobras. — 2Rs 4:42-44; compare isso com Mr 6:35-44.

Cura Naamã. Durante o reinado do Rei Ben-Hadade II, da Síria, este envia seu altamente respeitado chefe do exército, Naamã, um leproso, ao rei de Israel, para ser curado da sua lepra. Este homem valente, embora leproso, salvara a Síria. Evidentemente, a condição leprosa de Naamã não o impede de ocupar um cargo tão elevado na Síria, ao passo que o teria removido de tal cargo em Israel. (Le 13:46) A ação do Rei Ben-Hadade, de enviar Naamã, se dá por causa de uma mocinha israelita, cativa, que serve na casa de Naamã. Esta mocinha confia em Jeová e fala à sua senhora sobre o profeta de Jeová, Eliseu, em Israel. O rei de Israel acha que Ben-Hadade está querendo armar uma luta com ele, porque, conforme diz: "Acaso sou Deus, para entregar à morte e para preservar vivo?" Eliseu, ao saber da aflição do rei, diz ao rei: "Que venha a mim, por favor, para que saiba que há um profeta em Israel." — 2Rs 5:1-8.

Eliseu não sai para ver Naamã, mas manda instruções por meio do seu ajudante, para Naamã se banhar sete vezes no rio Jordão. No começo, isto enfurece a Naamã, mas, finalmente, ele se humilha e realiza este ato simples e é purificado. Naamã retorna a Eliseu e vota que doravante servirá fielmente a Jeová, o Deus de Israel. Leva consigo um pouco do solo de Israel, "a carga de um par de mulos", sobre o qual oferecerá sacrifícios a Jeová, sem dúvida olhando na direção do templo de Jerusalém. Realizará seu serviço qual oficial do rei da Síria, inclusive acompanhar o rei à casa do falso deus Rimom. Visto que o rei se apoia nele, terá de curvar-se junto com o rei, mas diz que não mais adorará a Rimom. Não prestará um serviço religioso, mas cumprirá apenas com seu dever no serviço do rei. Ele oferece a Eliseu um presente, que é recusado. Isto se harmoniza com o princípio de que o milagre é pelo poder de Jeová, não de Eliseu, e este não ia tirar lucro do cargo que Jeová lhe concedeu. — 2Rs 5:9-19; veja Mt 10:8.

O ajudante de Eliseu, Geazi, cobiçoso de lucro egoísta, vai atrás de Naamã e pede alguns dos presentes que Eliseu recusara. Mentindo, tenta ocultar este assunto de Eliseu. Como punição merecida, Eliseu lhe diz "que a lepra de Naamã se apegará a ti e à tua descendência por tempo indefinido". — 2Rs 5:20-27.

Torna-se necessário que os filhos dos profetas com os quais Eliseu se associa se mudem para acomodações mais espaçosas. Estão junto ao rio Jordão para cortar vigas para seu novo alojamento. Um dos profetas usa um machado emprestado, e o ferro do machado se solta e cai na água. Eliseu, evidentemente preocupado com que nenhum vitupério recaia sobre os profetas, lança um pedaço de lenha na água lá onde o ferro havia caído, e este flutua para a superfície. Jeová prova com isso que ele apoia seus profetas. — 2Rs 6:1-7.

Israel É Livrado da Síria. No reinado do Rei Jeorão, de Israel, a Síria planeja um ataque de surpresa contra Israel. Mais de uma vez, as manobras de Ben-Hadade II são frustradas por Eliseu, que revela ao Rei Jeorão cada movimento dos sírios. No começo, Ben-Hadade imagina haver um traidor no seu próprio acampamento. Mas, quando descobre a verdadeira fonte das suas dificuldades, manda uma força militar a Dotã, cercando-a com cavalos e carros de guerra para capturar Eliseu. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 950) O ajudante de Eliseu fica com medo, mas Eliseu ora a Deus para que abra os olhos de seu ajudante, 'e eis que a região montanhosa está cheia de cavalos e de carros de guerra, de fogo, em torno de Eliseu'. Daí, à medida que as hostes sírias apertam o cerco, Eliseu ora pedindo o tipo oposto de milagre: "Por favor, fere esta nação de cegueira." Eliseu diz aos sírios: "Segui-me", mas não precisa guiá-los pela mão, indicando que se trata de cegueira mental, em vez de cegueira física. Eles não reconhecem Eliseu, a quem vieram capturar, nem sabem para onde ele os está levando. — 2Rs 6:8-19.

Com que espécie de cegueira golpeou Jeová os sírios que tentavam capturar Eliseu?

Sobre este tipo de cegueira diz William James, em Principles of Psychology (Princípios de Psicologia; 1981, Vol. 1, p. 59): "A cegueira mental é um dos resultados mais curiosos de distúrbio funcional do córtice cerebral. Não é tanto a insensibilidade às impressões óticas como é a incapacidade de compreendê-las. Psicologicamente se interpreta isso como perda de associações entre as sensações óticas e o significado delas; e qualquer interrupção das vias entre os centros óticos e os centros de outras ideias deve causar isto."

Levando os sírios a Samaria, Eliseu ora para que Jeová lhes abra os olhos, e os sírios descobrem que estão bem no meio de Samaria, perante o próprio Rei Jeorão. Eliseu manifesta fé no poder de Jeová, e demonstra estar completamente livre do espírito de vingança, ao impedir que o rei de Israel mate os sírios, pois, afirma ele, são como cativos de guerra. Instrui o rei para que os alimente, e eles são banqueteados e mandados para casa. O resultado é:

"Nem uma única vez vieram as guerrilhas dos sírios de novo à terra de Israel." — 2Rs 6:20-23.

Entretanto, mais tarde, Ben-Hadade II invade, não com guerrilhas esporádicas, mas em massa, e sitia Samaria. O sítio é tão grave que se relata ao rei pelo menos um caso em que uma mulher come seu próprio filho. Como descendente de Acabe, o Rei Jeorão, "filho dum assassino", jura matar Eliseu. Mas o juramento precipitado não é executado. Chegando à casa do profeta com seu ajudante de ordens, Jeorão declara que perdeu toda a esperança de ajuda da parte de Jeová. Eliseu assegura ao rei que haverá abundância de reservas alimentares no dia seguinte. O ajudante de ordens do rei zomba desta predição, movendo Eliseu a lhe dizer: "Eis que o verás com os teus próprios olhos, mas não comerás disso." Por meio dum ruído que Jeová faz os sírios ouvir no seu acampamento, eles são levados a crer que um grande exército de nações coligadas está avançando contra eles, e passam a fugir, deixando intato seu acampamento, com todos os seus suprimentos alimentares. Quando o rei fica sabendo da deserção dos sírios, ele encarrega o ajudante de ordens de guardar o portão de Samaria, e ali ele é pisoteado até morrer, quando a multidão faminta de israelitas se lança ao saque do acampamento. Ele vê o alimento, mas não come dele. — 2Rs 6:24-7:20.

Hazael e Jeú Nomeados Reis. Nossa atenção se volta agora para Damasco, na Síria, onde o Rei Ben-Hadade II está à beira da morte. Hazael, enviado do rei, encontra-se com Eliseu e pergunta se seu amo se recuperará. O espírito de Jeová torna-se operante e habilita Eliseu a ver um quadro doloroso, triste para Eliseu: Hazael, como suplantador de Ben-Hadade, com o tempo infligirá indizível dano aos de Israel, embora seja uma punição justa da parte de Jeová pelos pecados deles. Eliseu manda Hazael dizer a Ben-Hadade: "'Positivamente reviverás'; e Jeová me mostrou que [ele] positivamente morrerá." Hazael relata a primeira parte em palavras, mas a segunda parte em ação, sufocando o rei sob uma colcha ensopada e apoderando-se do trono da Síria. — 2Rs 8:7-15.

Há ainda um trabalho inacabado para Elias, a ser completado por Eliseu, a saber, a unção de Jeú como executor de Deus contra a casa iníqua de Acabe. (2Rs 9:1-10) Ele o realiza uns 18 anos depois de Jeová ter dado a ordem a Elias. Eliseu chega a ver o cumprimento das profecias de 1 Reis 19:15-17 e 21:21-24.

Na época da unção de Jeú, Jeorão governa Israel e Acazias, seu sobrinho, governa Judá. O sírio Hazael aflige grandemente a Israel durante o seu governo, ferindo Jeorão em batalha em Ramote-Gileade. (2Rs 9:15) Jeú não perde tempo em cumprir a sua comissão de eliminar a casa iníqua de Acabe, não deixando sobrar nenhum sobrevivente. (2Rs 10:11) Primeiro vai atrás do Rei Jeorão, de Israel, que se recupera em Jezreel. Em cumprimento da profecia de Elias, Jeorão é encontrado fora da cidade, e morto e lançado no lote de terreno de Nabote, o jezreelita. (2Rs 9:16, 21-26) Entrando em Jezreel, Jeú mata a iníqua Jezabel, mãe de Jeorão de Israel e avó de Acazias de Judá. Jeú ia enterrá-la, mas Jeová cuida de que os cães comam as carnes dela, assim como o profeta Elias predissera, para que ela não tivesse nenhum túmulo em recordação dela. (2Rs 9:30-37) Os 70 filhos de Acabe são decapitados. Acazias, neto de Acabe, é morto (2Rs 10:1-9; 9:27, 28), e 42 irmãos de Acazias são mortos pela espada executora de Jeú. — 2Rs 10:12-14; 1Rs 21:17-24.

Destruída a Adoração de Baal. Seguindo de carro para Samaria, a capital, Jeú se encontra com Jonadabe, o qual o apoia plenamente na execução da adoração de Baal, e os dois andam de carro até Samaria, para ver o golpe final que exterminará totalmente o baalismo de Israel. Por meio duma estratégia, Jeú faz com que todos os adoradores de Baal se reúnam na casa de Baal e ponham sua vestimenta de identificação. A casa está cheia de ponta a ponta, e não há entre eles nenhum adorador de Jeová. Jeú dá a ordem, e seus homens matam todos os adoradores de Baal, derrubando suas colunas sagradas e demolindo a casa de Baal, reservando o local para latrinas. — 2Rs 10:15-27.

Eliseu, portanto, completa a obra iniciada por Elias. A adoração de Baal é aniquilada em Israel. Eliseu não passa a ser carregado num vendaval para os céus, a fim de ser levado para outro lugar, antes da sua morte, assim como foi Elias. No reinado do Rei Jeoás, de Israel, Eliseu tem morte natural. Enquanto está no seu leito de morte, a Síria de novo causa dificuldades a Israel. O Rei Jeoás se acerca de Eliseu e faz aparente apelo por ajuda militar contra os sírios, ao se dirigir a Eliseu com as seguintes palavras: "Meu pai, meu pai, o carro de guerra de Israel e seus cavaleiros!" A pedido de Eliseu, Jeoás golpeia a terra com suas flechas. Mas, por fazer isso sem verdadeiro zelo, apenas três vezes, Eliseu lhe diz que, em consequência, só lhe serão concedidas três vitórias sobre a Síria. Isto se cumpre. — 2Rs 13:14-19, 25.

Obra Realizada. Mediante o espírito de Deus sobre Eliseu, este já realizara 15 milagres até este ponto. Mas, mesmo depois da sua morte, ele é usado por Jeová para um 16.º milagre. Eliseu foi fiel até a morte, aprovado por Deus. O registro relata que depois do sepultamento de Eliseu, outro homem estava sendo sepultado quando um bando de guerrilheiros moabitas fez com que o grupo que realizava o enterro lançasse o homem no sepulcro de Eliseu e fugisse. Ao tocar nos ossos de Eliseu, o morto reviveu e se pôs de pé. — 2Rs 13:20, 21.

Em Lucas 4:27, Jesus chama Eliseu de profeta, e, sem dúvida, é a ele que se faz alusão, junto com Elias, em Hebreus 11:35, ambos tendo realizado ressurreições. Elias começara sua obra profética numa época em que Israel estava mergulhado na adoração de Baal, e isso exigia zelo pela verdadeira adoração. Realizou uma grande obra ao fazer com que o coração de muitos se voltasse para Jeová. Eliseu prosseguiu onde Elias parou, e embora seu próprio ministério fosse mais pacífico, ele se certificou de que a obra iniciada por Elias fosse executada cabalmente, e viveu para vê-la cumprida. Atribuem-se-lhe 16 milagres, em comparação com os 8 de Elias. Igual a Elias, mostrou grande zelo pelo nome e pela adoração verdadeira de Jeová. Demonstrou paciência, amor e benignidade, e, ainda assim, era muito firme quando estava envolvido o nome de Jeová; não hesitava em expressar o julgamento de Jeová contra os iníquos. Granjeou para si um lugar entre a "tão grande nuvem de testemunhas", mencionada em Hebreus 12:1.

ELISUA [Deus É Salvação]. Um dos filhos do Rei Davi nascidos em Jerusalém. (2Sa 5:15; 1Cr 14:5) Elisua é chamado Elisama em 1 Crônicas 3:6. — Veja ELISAMA N.º 3.

ELIÚ [Meu Deus É Ele].

1. "Filho de Baraquel, o buzita, da família de Rão." Como descendente de Buz, Eliú, evidentemente, era parente distante de Abraão. (Jó 32:1, 2, 6; Gên 22:20, 21) É provável que Eliú tenha escutado atentamente todo o debate entre Jó e seus três supostos consoladores. Mas, pelo devido respeito para com a idade deles, permaneceu em silêncio até que todos terminaram de falar. Embora críticos modernos tenham rotulado Eliú de loquaz, afirmando que seus discursos eram muito verbosos, as declarações de Eliú não eram as de um jovem impertinente. Ele avaliava de forma plena que a sabedoria não era posse exclusiva dos avançados nos anos, mas que o espírito de Deus é que tornava a pessoa realmente sábia. Por conseguinte, Eliú se estribava fortemente no espírito de Deus. Podia assim discernir de modo correto que Jó deixara de avaliar que a vindicação de Jeová Deus é muito mais importante do que a vindicação de qualquer homem, e que os três amigos de Jó tinham realmente declarado que Deus era iníquo. — Jó 32:2-9, 18.

Eliú era imparcial, não dando título lisonjeiro a ninguém. Reconhecia que ele, assim como Jó, fora feito de barro, e que o Todo-Poderoso era seu Criador. Eliú não tinha intenção de aterrorizar Jó, mas falou-lhe como verdadeiro amigo, dirigindo-se a Jó pelo nome, algo que não fora feito por Elifaz, Bildade ou Zofar. — Jó 32:21, 22; 33:1, 6.

Em todos os sentidos, Eliú exaltou a posição do verdadeiro Deus: O Todo-Poderoso é justo, recompensando a pessoa segundo a sua conduta. Ele julga sem parcialidade e está plenamente apercebido do proceder assumido pelos homens. Deus ouve o clamor dos aflitos. Ele é um Instrutor que torna os homens mais sábios do que a criação animal inferior. Deus somente não ouve a inverdade, e, por isso, Eliú incentivou Jó a esperar por Ele. Ademais, Eliú garantiu a Jó que Deus estava com ele, e que Ele não preservaria vivos os iníquos, mas que aqueles que servem a Ele "acabarão os seus dias no que é bom". (Jó 36:11) Jó foi então admoestado a magnificar a atividade de Deus, o grande Provisor, que fornece alimento em abundância. Eliú trouxe à atenção de Jó as grandes coisas feitas por Deus, e Seu controle sobre as forças naturais, incentivando Jó a mostrar-se "atento às obras maravilhosas de Deus". (Jó 37:14) Eliú concluiu num plano elevado, dizendo a respeito do Todo-Poderoso: "Ele é sublime em poder, e não depreciará o juízo e a abundância da justiça. Portanto, temam-no os homens." — Jó 37:23, 24; caps. 34-37.

Somente pelo espírito de Deus foi possível a Eliú avaliar corretamente os assuntos e falar as palavras que tiveram cumprimento em Jó, quando este foi restabelecido: "Isenta-o de descer à cova! Achei um resgate! Torne-se a sua carne mais fresca do que na infância; volte ele aos dias do seu vigor juvenil." — Jó 33:24, 25.

2. Antepassado do profeta Samuel; filho de Toú. (1Sa 1:1) Evidentemente, Eliú é também chamado Eliabe e Eliel. — 1Cr 6:27, 34.

3. Considerado ser Eliabe, irmão mais velho do Rei Davi; tornou-se príncipe da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 27:18, 22; compare isso com 1Sa 16:6; veja ELIABE N.º 4.

4. Um dos sete cabeças dos milhares que pertenciam a Manassés e que se bandeou para Davi, em Ziclague. — 1Cr 12:20.

5. Coraíta da família de Obede-Edom, que era porteiro da casa de Deus, designado durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 7, 8.

ELIÚDE [do hebr.: significando "Meu Deus É Dignidade; Deus de Dignidade"]. Antepassado de José, pai adotivo de Jesus. — Mt 1:15, 16.

ELIZAFÃ, ELZAFÃ [(Meu) Deus Escondeu (Entesourou)].

1. Filho de Uziel, tio de Arão, o qual, junto com seu irmão Misael, a mando de Moisés, levou os cadáveres de Nadabe e Abiú para fora do acampamento. (Êx 6:22; Le 10:4; Núm 3:30) Elizafã era cabeça ancestral duma família levita, da qual alguns membros são mencionados especificamente na Bíblia como servindo durante os reinados de Davi e de Ezequias. — 1Cr 15:8; 2Cr 29:13.

2. Filho de Parnaque e maioral dos filhos de Zebulão, que estava entre os designados por orientação de Jeová para dividir a Terra da Promessa nos quinhões de herança. — Núm 34:25.

ELIZUR [Meu Deus É Uma Rocha]. Filho de Sedeur, da tribo de Rubem; um dos 12 maiorais que ajudaram Moisés e Arão a contar os filhos de Israel. (Núm 1:1-3, 5, 17; 2:10; 10:18) Além de participar na apresentação de oferenda em grupo feita pelos maiorais após a ereção do tabernáculo, Elizur apresentou sua própria oferta no quarto dia da inauguração do altar. — Núm 7:1, 2, 10, 30-35.

ELMADÃ. Antepassado de Maria, mãe terrestre de Jesus. — Lu 3:28.

ELNAÃO [Deus É Agradabilidade; Deus de Agradabilidade]. Pai de Jeribai e Josavias, dois poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 1Cr 11:46.

ELNATÃ [Deus Deu].

1. Pai de Neusta, mãe do Rei Joaquim. (2Rs 24:8) É provável que ele seja o Elnatã identificado como "filho de Acbor", a quem o Rei Jeoiaquim mandou ao Egito para trazer de volta o profeta Urijá. (Je 26:22, 23) É de interesse que uma das Cartas de Laquis, datando deste período, mencione o nome Elnatã, dizendo: "O comandante da hoste, Conias, filho de Elnatã, desceu a fim de ir para o Egito." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 322.

2, 3, 4. Três homens com o nome Elnatã são mencionados no livro de Esdras. Dois são chamados de "cabeças" e o outro de instrutor. Junto ao rio Aava, antes da viagem a Jerusalém, Esdras deu-lhes a ordem de apelar para Ido e os netineus, em Casifia, a fim de que provessem de entre seu número ministros para a casa de Deus, o que os levitas e os netineus acataram. — Esd 8:15-20.

ELOHIM. Veja DEUS.

ELOM [provavelmente: Árvore Grande].

1. Hitita, cuja filha tornou-se para Isaque e Rebeca "uma fonte de amargura" como esposa do filho destes, Esaú. — Gên 26:34, 35; 27:46; 28:8; 36:2.

2. Segundo dos três filhos de Zebulão. Estava incluído nos membros da casa de seu avô, Jacó, que foram ao Egito. Era também chefe de família dos elonitas. — Gên 46:14; Núm 26:26.

3. Juiz zebulonita de Israel. Após um juizado de dez anos, enterraram-no em Aijalom, no território de Zebulão. — Jz 12:11, 12.

4. Cidade da tribo de Dã, alistada entre Itla e Timná. (Jos 19:42, 43) A identificação da sua localização é incerta.

ELOM-BETE-HANÃ [provavelmente: Árvore Grande da Casa de Hanã]. Cidade mencionada em 1 Reis 4:9 como fazendo parte de um dos distritos de comissariados de Salomão. Alguns peritos sugerem que possivelmente seja a mesma que Elom. — Veja ELOM N.º 4.

ELONITAS [De (Pertencente a) Elom]. Família descendente de Elom, filho de Zebulão. — Núm 26:26.

ELOTE. Veja ELATE, ELOTE.

ELPAAL [Deus de Atividade; Deus Realizou]. Descendente de Benjamim; filho de Saaraim e de sua esposa Husim. — 1Cr 8:1, 8, 11, 12.

EL-PARÃ [Árvore Grande de Parã]. Pelo visto, o ponto mais sulino atingido por Quedorlaomer e seus aliados na sua invasão de Canaã. (Gên 14:5, 6) Ser o lugar descrito como estando "junto ao ermo", ou "na margem do deserto" (BJ), parece situá-lo na extremidade oriental do "ermo de Parã". (Gên 21:21) Alguns peritos acham ser El-Parã um nome antigo de Elate.

ELPELETE. Veja ELIFELETE N.º 2.

ELTECOM. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48, 59) Embora se desconheça atualmente a localização exata de Eltecom, alguns a identificam provisoriamente com Khirbet ed-Deir, a uns 10 km ao O de Belém.

ELTEQUE, ELTEQUÉ. Cidade de Dã (Jos 19:44), dada junto com seus pastios, aos levitas coatitas. (Jos 21:20, 23) No Prisma de Taylor, o rei assírio Senaqueribe (contemporâneo de Ezequias, 745-717 AEC), gaba-se de ter "sitiado, capturado e saqueado Eltequé [em assírio: Altaqu]", depois de derrotar as forças egípcias e etíopes "na planície de Eltequé".

A maioria dos peritos anteriormente situavam Eltequé em Khirbet el-Muqanna' (Tel Miqne), a 36 km ao O de Jerusalém. Todavia, em resultado de recentes escavações, este lugar tem sido desde então associado com a bíblica Ecrom. Portanto, embora agora não seja possível fazer uma identificação certa, alguns tentativamente situam Eltequé em Tell esh-Shallaf (Tel Shalaf), a 18 km ao NE de Asdode.

ELTOLADE. Cidade situada na parte meridional do território da tribo de Judá, em direção à fronteira de Edom (Jos 15:21, 30), também chamada Tolade, em 1 Crônicas 4:29. Eltolade era uma das cidades de Judá designadas aos simeonitas como herança. (Jos 19:1, 4) Conforme mostra 1 Crônicas 4:24-31, estas eram cidades simeonitas até o reinado de Davi.

ELUL. Nome pós-exílico do 6.º mês lunar judaico do calendário sagrado, mas o 12.º do calendário secular, correspondendo a parte de agosto e a parte de setembro. O significado do nome é incerto.

Neste mês final da estação do verão, as tâmaras estavam maduras, assim como também a principal safra de figos. A vindima geral estava em progresso, e até o fim do mês havia vinho novo à disposição. — Le 26:5; Núm 13:23; Je 8:13.

Foi no mês de elul que Neemias completou o projeto de 52 dias da reconstrução das muralhas de Jerusalém. (Ne 6:15) Nas outras referências bíblicas, o mês de elul é mencionado apenas como o sexto mês. — 1Cr 27:9; Ez 8:1; Ag 1:1, 15.

As tabelas preparadas por Parker e Dubberstein, em Babylonian Chronology, 626 B.C.–A.D. 75 (Cronologia Babilônica, 626 A.C.–A.D. 75; 1971, pp. 27-47), mostram que o mês de elul era usado intermitentemente pelos babilônios como mês intercalar junto com o mês de adar.

ELUZAI [Deus É Minha Força]. Um dos poderosos benjamitas ambidestros que se juntaram a Davi em Ziclague, enquanto ele ainda se achava restrito por causa do Rei Saul. — 1Cr 12:1-5.

ELZABADE [Deus Dotou].

1. Um dos velozes e corajosos homens poderosos da tribo de Gade que se juntaram a Davi no ermo, enquanto ele ainda se achava restrito por causa do Rei Saul. O mínimo desses gaditas é descrito como igual a cem e o maior como igual a mil. — 1Cr 12:1, 8, 12, 14.

2. Levita da família dos coraítas; filho de Semaías e neto de Obede-Edom. Homem capaz, Elzabade serviu na turma dos porteiros nos dias do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 6-8, 12, 15, 19.

ELZAFÃ. Veja ELIZAFÃ, ELZAFÃ.

EMANUEL [Conosco Está Deus]. Nome primeiro mencionado pelo profeta Isaías (7:14; 8:8), no reinado de Acaz (761-746 AEC). Em Mateus 1:23, a única outra ocorrência dele, Emanuel é um nome-título aplicado a Cristo, o Messias.

Em vista das circunstâncias sob as quais foi dada esta profecia, os comentadores bíblicos têm procurado um "Emanuel" nos dias de Isaías, um que tenha apropriadamente servido na época como sinal de que 'Deus estava com eles'. Naquele oitavo século AEC, Peca e Rezim, os reis de Israel e da Síria, estavam decididos a derrubar Acaz, rei de Judá, de modo a colocar o filho de Tabeel em seu trono. (Is 7:1-6) Jeová, porém, lembrou-se de seu pacto do reino com Davi, antepassado de Acaz, e enviou seu profeta com a seguinte mensagem tranquilizadora:

"Escutai-me, por favor, ó casa de Davi. . . . O próprio Jeová vos dará um sinal: Eis que a própria donzela ficará realmente grávida e dará à luz um filho, e ela há de chamá-lo pelo nome de Emanuel. Ele comerá manteiga e mel pelo tempo em que souber rejeitar o mau e escolher o bom. Pois antes que o rapaz saiba rejeitar o mau e escolher o bom, o solo dos dois reis de que tens um pavor mórbido ficará completamente abandonado." — Is 7:13-16.

Daí, depois de falar sobre o nascimento do segundo filho de Isaías, Maer-Salal-Hás-Baz, a profecia descreve em seguida como seria removida a ameaça contra Judá. Como irresistível enchente, os assírios inundariam completamente a Síria e o reino setentrional de Israel, só parando depois de se terem perigosamente espalhado pela terra de Judá, até mesmo a ponto de "encher a largura da tua terra, ó Emanuel"! Daí, com esplendor poético, o profeta Isaías avisa a todos os que se opõem a Jeová: Se se cingirem para a guerra, se esboçarem um plano, se falarem uma palavra contra Jeová — "ela não se efetuará, porque Deus está conosco [Emanuel]"! — Is 8:5-10.

Alguns têm sugerido que, no tipo, lá naquele tempo, "Emanuel" era o terceiro filho de Isaías, talvez com uma donzela judia que possivelmente se tornara a segunda esposa do profeta. Certos comentadores judeus empenharam-se em aplicar a profecia ao nascimento do filho de Acaz, Ezequias. Isto, porém, não é possível, visto que a profecia foi proferida durante o reinado de Acaz (Is 7:1), época em que Ezequias tinha pelo menos nove anos de idade. — 2Rs 16:2; 18:1, 2.

Outro possível candidato era o segundo filho de Isaías, mencionado no capítulo seguinte, Maer-Salal-Hás-Baz, a respeito de quem se disse: "Antes que o rapazinho saiba chamar: 'Meu pai!' e: 'Minha mãe!' carregar-se-á com os recursos de Damasco e com o despojo de Samaria perante o rei da Assíria." (Is 8:1-4) Isto certamente é similar ao que se disse sobre Emanuel: "Antes que o rapaz saiba rejeitar o mau e escolher o bom, o solo dos dois reis [de Damasco e de Samaria] de que tens um pavor mórbido ficará completamente abandonado." (Is 7:16) Também, o nascimento do segundo filho de Isaías é apresentado em íntima associação com a profecia adicional envolvendo Emanuel, e, visto que Emanuel devia ser um "sinal", assim Isaías disse também: "Eu e os filhos que Jeová me deu somos como sinais." — Is 7:14; 8:18.

A principal objeção a esta identificação do segundo filho de Isaías como o Emanuel dos dias de Acaz surge à base de que a esposa de Isaías é chamada de "profetisa", não de "donzela", bem como pelo fato de que ela já era mãe do primogênito de Isaías, Sear-Jasube, de modo que não era "donzela". (Is 7:3; 8:3) Deve-se notar, porém, que a palavra hebraica traduzida aqui por "donzela" não é bethu·láh, que significa, especificamente, "virgem", mas é 'al·máh, que tem referência mais ampla a uma jovem adulta, que poderia ser uma virgem ou uma mulher recém-casada. 'Al·máh como substantivo comum ocorre também em outros seis textos, dos quais em mais de um se refere especificamente a donzelas virgens. — Gên 24:43 (veja o v. 16); Êx 2:8; Sal 68:25; Pr 30:19; Cân 1:3; 6:8.

A plena e completa identificação de Emanuel, naturalmente, se encontra no cargo e na personagem do Senhor Jesus Cristo. Por conseguinte, o emprego da palavra hebraica 'al·máh na profecia enquadraria tanto o tipo (se tal foi uma jovem esposa de Acaz ou de Isaías), como o antítipo (a desposada, mas ainda virgem Maria). No caso de Maria, não havia dúvida quanto a ela ser virgem quando ficou "grávida por espírito santo", sendo que tanto Mateus como Lucas registram este fato histórico. (Mt 1:18-25; Lu 1:30-35) "Tudo isso aconteceu realmente para que se cumprisse o que fora falado por Jeová por intermédio do seu profeta", observou Mateus. Era um sinal que identificava o há muito esperado Messias. Assim, em harmonia com estes fatos, o Evangelho de Mateus (citando Is 7:14) usa a palavra grega par·thé·nos, que significa "virgem", para traduzir 'al·máh, dizendo: "Eis que a virgem [par·thé·nos] ficará grávida e dará à luz um filho, e dar-lhe-ão o nome de Emanuel." (Mt 1:22, 23) Isto, de forma alguma, significava tomar liberdades com o texto, ou torcê-lo. Mais de um século antes, os tradutores judeus da Septuaginta grega também usaram par·thé·nos, ao traduzirem Isaías 7:14.

Esta identificação de Jesus Cristo como Emanuel não significava que fosse a encarnação de Deus, 'Deus em carne', como os proponentes do ensino da Trindade afirmam estar subentendido no significado de Emanuel, a saber: "Conosco Está Deus." Entre os judeus era costume englobar a palavra "Deus", e até "Jeová", nos nomes hebraicos. Até mesmo hoje, Emanuel é o nome de muitos homens, nenhum dos quais é uma encarnação de Deus.

Se parece haver um conflito entre as instruções do anjo a Maria ("deves dar-lhe o nome de Jesus") e a profecia de Isaías ("ela há de chamá-lo pelo nome de Emanuel"), lembremo-nos de que o Messias também deveria ser chamado por mais outros nomes. (Lu 1:31; Is 7:14) Por exemplo, Isaías 9:6 disse a respeito deste: "Será chamado pelo nome de Maravilhoso Conselheiro, Deus Poderoso, Pai Eterno, Príncipe da Paz." Todavia, nenhum destes nomes foram dados ao primogênito de Maria como nome pessoal, quer quando ele era bebê, quer depois de ter assumido seu ministério. Antes, todos eles eram nomes-títulos proféticos pelos quais o Messias seria identificado. Jesus viveu em conformidade com o significado desses nomes, em todos os respeitos, e este é o sentido em que foram dados profeticamente, para mostrar suas qualidades e os bons ofícios que prestaria a todos aqueles que o aceitassem como Messias. O mesmo se dá com seu título Emanuel. Ele viveu em conformidade com ele e cumpriu seu significado.

Os adoradores de Jeová sempre têm desejado que Deus esteja com eles, do seu lado, apoiando-os em seus empreendimentos, e, com frequência, Ele confirma que está, às vezes dando-lhes sinais visíveis neste sentido. (Gên 28:10-20; Êx 3:12; Jos 1:5, 9; 5:13-6:2; Sal 46:5-7; Je 1:19) Se, atualmente, a identidade pessoal de Emanuel nos dias de Acaz continua incerta, pode ser que Jeová tenha dirigido as coisas dessa forma, a fim de não desviar a atenção das gerações posteriores do Emanuel Maior, quando ele aparecesse como sinal do céu. Com a vinda de seu Filho amado à Terra, como o prometido "descendente [literalmente: semente]" messiânico (Gên 3:15) e o legítimo herdeiro do trono de Davi, Jeová supria seu sinal máximo de que não tinha abandonado a humanidade ou Seu pacto do Reino. O nome-título, Emanuel, portanto, era especialmente apropriado para Cristo, pois a sua presença era deveras um sinal do céu. E, com este mais destacado representante de Jeová entre a humanidade, Mateus, sob inspiração, podia verdadeiramente dizer: "Conosco Está Deus."

EMAÚS. Aldeia para a qual Cléopas e outro discípulo se dirigiam quando se juntou a eles o materializado Jesus Cristo, no dia da sua ressurreição. No entanto, foi só depois de chegarem a Emaús e Jesus "se recostar com eles à mesa" que o reconheceram. Após o subsequente desaparecimento de Jesus, os dois discípulos retornaram a Jerusalém naquela mesma noite. (Lu 24:13-33) Lucas diz que a aldeia se encontrava a "sessenta estádios" (7,5 milhas romanas [11 km]) de Jerusalém.

Todavia, a atual localização de Emaús é incerta, propondo-se pelo menos meia dúzia de lugares diferentes. O mais destacado entre estes é 'Imwas, na estrada para Tel Aviv-Yafo. Mas 'Imwas se encontra a cerca de 175 estádios (32 km) ao ONO daquela cidade, quase três vezes a distância mencionada por Lucas. Outro lugar muitas vezes proposto, Qalunyah (Mevaseret Zion), situado na estrada principal para Tel Aviv-Yafo e aceito por alguns como o Ammaous mencionado por Josefo, está a uns 35 está-dios (6,5 km) de Jerusalém e assim é perto demais para se ajustar ao registro de Lucas. Alguns, portanto, preferem identificar Emaús com El-Qubeiba, numa estrada romana mais setentrional do que os outros lugares sugeridos. Ali se encontraram objetos que se crê datarem do período das Escrituras Gregas. A localidade, a uns 60 estádios (11 km) ao NO de Jerusalém, dá apoio ao conceito de que esta talvez seja a aldeia bíblica. Todavia, qualquer identificação final é atualmente impossível.

EMBAIXADOR. No uso bíblico, um representante oficial enviado por um governante numa ocasião especial para um fim específico. Homens mais velhos, maduros, costumavam servir nesta qualidade. Assim, as palavras gregas pre·sbeú·o ('atuar como embaixador' [Ef 6:20]; 'ser embaixador' [2Co 5:20]) e pre·sbei·a ("corpo de embaixadores" [Lu 14:32]) são ambas aparentadas com a palavra pres·bý·te·ros, que significa "homem mais idoso; ancião". — At 11:30; Re 4:4.

Jesus Cristo veio como "apóstolo" ou "enviado" de Jeová Deus. Foi ele quem "lançou luz sobre a vida e a incorrupção por intermédio das boas novas". — He 3:1; 2Ti 1:10.

Depois de Cristo ter sido ressuscitado e ascendido aos céus, não mais estando na Terra em pessoa, seus seguidores fiéis foram designados para atuar em seu lugar, "substituindo a Cristo" como embaixadores de Deus. Paulo menciona especificamente seu cargo de embaixador. (2Co 5:18-20) Ele, como todos os seguidores ungidos de Jesus Cristo, foi enviado às nações e às pessoas alienadas de Jeová Deus, o Soberano Supremo — sendo embaixadores junto a um mundo que não estava em paz com Deus. (Jo 14:30; 15:18, 19; Tg 4:4) Paulo, como embaixador, levava uma mensagem de reconciliação com Deus mediante Cristo, e, por conseguinte, chamava a si mesmo, enquanto preso, de "embaixador em cadeias". (Ef 6:20) Estar ele em cadeias era demonstração da atitude hostil deste mundo para com Deus e Cristo, e o governo messiânico do Reino, pois os embaixadores, desde tempos imemoriais, têm gozado de imunidade. Revelava a maior hostilidade e era a forma mais grosseira de insulto da parte das nações quando elas desrespeitavam os embaixadores enviados para representar o Reino de Deus por Cristo.

Ao cumprir seu papel de embaixador, Paulo respeitava as leis do país, mas permanecia estritamente neutro quanto às atividades políticas e militares do mundo. Isto se harmonizava com o princípio de que os embaixadores dos governos mundanos têm de obedecer à lei, mas estão eximidos de mostrar lealdade ao país a que são enviados.

Como o apóstolo Paulo, todos os fiéis seguidores de Cristo, ungidos, gerados pelo espírito, que possuem cidadania celeste, são "embaixadores, substituindo a Cristo". — 2Co 5:20; Fil 3:20.

O modo como uma pessoa recebe tais embaixadores de Deus determina como Deus lidará com ela. Jesus Cristo delineou este princípio na sua ilustração do homem que possuía um vinhedo e que primeiro enviou seus escravos e depois seu filho, como seus representantes. Os vinhateiros maltrataram brutalmente esses escravos e mataram o filho do dono. Por causa disso, o dono do vinhedo causou a destruição dos vinhateiros hostis. (Mt 21:33-41) Jesus forneceu outra ilustração, a do rei cujos escravos foram mortos quando atuavam como mensageiros, convidando pessoas para uma festa de casamento. Os que receberam os representantes do rei de tal modo foram reputados inimigos dele. (Mt 22:2-7) Jesus especificou claramente este princípio ao dizer: "Quem receber a qualquer que eu enviar, recebe também a mim. Por sua vez, quem me receber, recebe também aquele que me enviou." — Jo 13:20; veja também Mt 23:34, 35; 25:34-46.

Jesus usou também a obra de promoção da paz de um embaixador para ilustrar nossa necessidade individual de pedirmos termos de paz a Jeová Deus e de desistirmos de tudo para seguir as pisadas de seu Filho, a fim de obtermos o favor de Deus e a vida eterna. (Lu 14:31-33) Inversamente, ilustrou a tolice de nos associarmos com aqueles que enviam embaixadores para falar contra aquele a quem Deus confere poder régio. (Lu 19:12-14, 27) Os gibeonitas constituem bons exemplos de ação na busca jeitosa e bem-sucedida da paz. — Jos 9:3-15, 22-27.

Enviados Pré-Cristãos. Nos tempos pré-cristãos não existia um cargo governamental oficial que correspondesse exatamente ao de embaixador dos dias atuais. Não havia nenhuma autoridade residente que representasse um governo estrangeiro. Por isso, os termos "mensageiro" (hebr.: mal·'ákh) e "enviado" (hebr.: tsir) descrevem mais exatamente seus deveres nos tempos bíblicos. No entanto, sua categoria e condição eram, em muitos sentidos, similares às de embaixadores, e alguns destes aspectos serão considerados aqui. Tais homens eram representantes oficiais que levavam mensagens entre governos e governantes específicos.

Diferente dos embaixadores hodiernos, os enviados ou mensageiros antigos não moravam em capitais estrangeiras, mas eram enviados somente em ocasiões especiais, para finalidades específicas. Não raro, eram pessoas categorizadas (2Rs 18:17, 18) e seu cargo era altamente respeitado. Por conseguinte, gozavam de imunidade pessoal ao visitarem outros governantes.

O tratamento dispensado aos mensageiros ou enviados dum governante era considerado como demonstrado ao governante e ao seu governo. Assim, quando Raabe mostrou favor aos mensageiros que Josué enviou a Jericó como espias, ela realmente agia desta forma por reconhecer que Jeová era o Deus e o Rei de Israel. Jeová, mediante Josué, concordemente mostrou-lhe favor. (Jos 6:17; He 11:31) Flagrante violação do implícito costume internacional de respeito pelos enviados foram as medidas tomadas por Hanum, rei de Amom, a quem o Rei Davi enviara alguns servos, num gesto de amizade. O rei de Amom deu ouvidos aos seus príncipes, que falsamente chamaram os mensageiros de espiões, e humilhou-os publicamente, demonstrando seu desrespeito por Davi e o governo deste. Esta ação vergonhosa levou a uma guerra. — 2Sa 10:2-11:1; 12:26-31.

Em vez de chamar de volta o embaixador, o que é feito pelas nações hodiernas quando se rompem relações diplomáticas, os povos dos tempos antigos, em épocas de tensão, enviavam um ao outro mensageiros ou enviados, como porta-vozes, no esforço de restabelecer relações pacíficas. Isaías fala de tais "mensageiros de paz". (Is 33:7) Ezequias enviou um apelo de paz a Senaqueribe, rei da Assíria. Embora Senaqueribe estivesse ameaçando as cidades fortificadas de Judá, os mensageiros gozavam de livre trânsito por parte dos assírios, porque atuavam como enviados de Ezequias. (2Rs 18:13-15) Outro exemplo disto pode ser visto no registro sobre Jefté, juiz de Israel. Ele enviou ao rei dos amonitas mensageiros com uma carta de protesto contra a ação errada por parte deste, e para resolver uma disputa sobre direitos territoriais. Se possível, Jefté, por meio de seus enviados, teria solucionado o assunto sem guerra. Permitiu-se que esses mensageiros transitassem de uma parte para outra, entre os exércitos, sem impedimento. — Jz 11:12-28; veja MENSAGEIRO.

EMBALSAMAMENTO. Processo de tratamento dum cadáver (humano ou animal) com substâncias tais como óleos aromáticos, a fim de preservá-lo da decomposição. Se não foram os egípcios que originaram esta arte, pelo menos a praticavam desde tempos bem antigos. O cadáver dum humano ou dum animal preservado por antigos métodos de embalsamamento egípcios ou outros é chamado de múmia. O embalsamamento de humanos era praticado não só pelos egípcios, mas também por povos antigos tais como os assírios, os persas e os citas.

Embalsamamento de Jacó e de José. Há na Bíblia somente dois casos especificamente chamados de embalsamamento, e ambos ocorreram no Egito. Foi ali que Jacó morreu, e o Registro inspirado, depois de relatar a expressão de tristeza de José pelo falecimento do pai, declara: "Depois, José ordenou aos seus servos, os médicos, que embalsamassem seu pai. De modo que os médicos embalsamaram Israel, e levaram com ele quarenta dias inteiros, pois levam costumeiramente tantos dias para o embalsamamento, e os egípcios continuavam a verter lágrimas por ele, por setenta dias." (Gên 50:2, 3) José morreu à idade de 110 anos, "e fizeram-no embalsamar, e ele foi posto num ataúde, no Egito". (Gên 50:26) No caso de Jacó, pelo visto, o objetivo principal era a preservação até o seu sepultamento na Terra da Promessa. O destaque de José talvez fosse o motivo no caso dele. — Gên 49:29-32; 50:13, 24, 25; Êx 13:18, 19; Jos 24:32.

De acordo com Heródoto, os métodos egípcios de embalsamamento incluíam colocar o corpo em natrão durante setenta dias. No entanto, quando Jacó foi embalsamado pelos médicos egípcios numa época bem anterior, a Bíblia diz que "levaram com ele quarenta dias inteiros, pois levam costumeiramente tantos dias para o embalsamamento, e os egípcios continuavam a verter lágrimas por ele, por setenta dias". (Gên 50:3) Os peritos têm feito diversos esforços para harmonizar Gênesis 50:3 com as palavras de Heródoto. Por um lado, os 40 dias talvez não incluíssem o tempo da imersão do corpo em natrão. Todavia, é bem possível que Heródoto simplesmente errou ao dizer que o cadáver ficava em natrão por 70 dias. O posterior historiador grego Diodoro da Sicília (do primeiro século AEC) disse que o processo de embalsamamento egípcio durava mais de 30 dias. (Diodorus of Sicily [Diodoro da Sicília], I, 91, 5, 6) Naturalmente, pode ter havido processos egípcios de embalsamamento de que nenhum dos dois fala, e é possível que os processos de embalsamamento diferissem em certos períodos, em diversos momentos da história.

Sepultamento de Hebreus e de Cristãos. A péssima condição de restos humanos encontrados em sepulcros palestinos indica que não era costume dos hebreus embalsamar os mortos (pelo menos não para uma longa preservação, à maneira dos egípcios) e que os primeiros seguidores de Cristo ali não embalsamavam seus entes falecidos, no empenho de preservar indefinidamente seu corpo. Os hebreus fiéis e os cristãos verdadeiros davam-se conta de que a alma, quer humana, quer animal, morre e que o corpo retorna ao pó. (Ec 3:18-20; Ez 18:4) Fazerem as Escrituras referências tão limitadas ao embalsamamento parece ser prova adicional de que não era costume entre hebreus e primitivos cristãos.

As Escrituras, relatando o sepultamento do Rei Asa, declaram: "Deitaram-no na cama que fora enchida de óleo de bálsamo e de diversas espécies de unguento, misturadas num unguento de fabricação especial. Além disso, fizeram para ele uma queima fúnebre extraordinariamente grande." Não se tratava da cremação do rei, mas da queima de especiarias. (2Cr 16:13, 14) E, se este uso de unguento pode ser considerado mesmo uma forma de embalsamamento, não era do tipo praticado pelos egípcios.

Quando Jesus Cristo morreu, Nicodemos veio trazer "um rolo de mirra e aloés, cerca de trinta e três quilos disso", e declara-se: "Tomaram assim o corpo de Jesus e o envolveram com faixas, junto com os aromas, do modo como os judeus costumam preparar para o enterro." (Jo 19:39, 40) No entanto, isso não foi chamado especificamente de embalsamamento e não era similar aos processos de embalsamamento usados pelos egípcios. Era o modo costumeiro de preparar o corpo para o enterro, e, sem dúvida, foi similar ao modo em que Lázaro fora preparado para o sepultamento. O caso dele mostra que o costume judaico não envolvia um elaborado processo de embalsamamento, destinado a preservar o cadáver durante longo tempo, porque, quando Jesus disse: "Retirai a pedra", Marta disse: "Senhor, ele já deve estar cheirando, porque já faz quatro dias." Ela não teria esperado que fosse assim, se Lázaro tivesse sido mesmo embalsamado. Os pés e as mãos de Lázaro foram amarrados com faixas, e "o seu semblante enrolado num pano", mas, evidentemente, não se tinha a intenção de preservar seu corpo da putrefação. — Jo 11:39, 44; veja ENTERRO, LUGARES DE SEPULTAMENTO.

EMBOSCADA. Ficar de tocaia num esconderijo para atacar de surpresa. Três palavras hebraicas para "emboscada" ('é·rev, 'ó·rev e ma·'aráv) derivam da raiz 'a·ráv, que significa "ficar de tocaia". (Jó 37:8; Je 9:8; Sal 10:8; Jz 9:32) De modo similar, a palavra grega para "emboscada" (e·né·dra) é aparentada com o verbo e·ne·dreú·o, que significa "estar de tocaia". — At 25:3; 23:21.

Josué empregou habilmente uma emboscada contra Ai, postando 5.000 homens ao O da cidade, de noite, ao passo que dispôs o corpo principal das suas forças ao N. Na manhã seguinte, ele atraiu os defensores da cidade para longe dela por fingir estar derrotado, permitindo assim que os da emboscada se levantassem e tomassem a cidade. (Jos 8:2-21) Houve emboscada na disputa entre os proprietários de terras de Siquém e Abimeleque, filho de Gideão. (Jz 9:25, 31-45) Sansão foi alvo de emboscadas dos filisteus. (Jz 16:1-12) Saul armou uma emboscada contra Amaleque e mais tarde acusou Davi de estar de emboscada contra ele. (1Sa 15:5; 22:8) Outras emboscadas foram as da luta de Israel contra a tribo de Benjamim (Jz 20:29-44), a emboscada fracassada de Jeroboão contra Judá (2Cr 13:13-19), a emboscada que resultou em confusão entre os que atacavam Judá nos dias de Jeosafá (2Cr 20:22, 23), as mencionadas na descrição da queda de Jerusalém (La 4:19) e a emboscada decretada por Jeová contra Babilônia (Je 51:12). Os exilados judeus que retornavam foram protegidos por Jeová contra emboscadas. — Esd 8:31; veja GUERRA.

O substantivo hebraico 'é·rev, que significa "emboscada", é usado para descrever táticas de caça. (Jó 37:8; 38:40) O verbo hebraico 'a·ráv é usado figurativamente para descrever a prostituta que tocaia homens (Pr 7:12; 23:28) e para descrever as táticas dos iníquos contra os inocentes e os justos. (Sal 10:9; Pr 1:11, 18; 12:6; 24:15; Miq 7:2; compare isso com Jó 31:9.) Em Israel decretava-se a pena de morte para o homem culpado de ter matado outro de emboscada. — De 19:11, 12.

Os mais de 40 judeus que 'se obrigaram com uma maldição' armaram uma emboscada contra o apóstolo Paulo, mas foram frustrados pelo sobrinho de Paulo. — At 23:12-35.

EMBRIAGUEZ. Veja BEBEDICE, EMBRIAGUEZ.

EMEQUE-QUEZIZ [Baixada de Decepamento]. Cidade benjamita. (Jos 18:21) Desconhece-se hoje a sua localização exata. O significado do nome e sua menção junto com Jericó, Bete-Hogla e Bete-Arabá, no vale do Jordão, talvez indiquem um lugar naquela vizinhança.

EMINS [Coisas Temíveis]. Tribo ou povo que morava no território ao L do Mar Morto. São descritos como grandes, numerosos e altos "como os anaquins". (De 2:10) Esta comparação com os filhos de Anaque indica que os emins eram de estatura gigantesca e eram ferozes, porque Moisés declarou a Israel: "Tu mesmo ouviste dizer: 'Quem se pode manter firme diante dos filhos de Anaque?'" (De 9:2) Não se pode determinar definitivamente a origem dos emins, embora alguns achem que eram um ramo dos refains.

No tempo de Abraão, o rei elamita Quedorlaomer derrotou os emins em Savé-Quiriataim. (Gên 14:5) Parece que os emins continuaram a morar na sua terra ao L do Mar Morto por certo tempo depois disso, visto que a Bíblia fala deles como finalmente serem desapossados pelos moabitas. Os moabitas também usavam o nome emins para se referir aos refains. — De 2:11.

EMPRÉSTIMO. Tudo aquilo, especialmente dinheiro, que é cedido para uso temporário, na expectativa duma futura devolução ou da entrega de algo equivalente.

Frequentemente, em nações da antiguidade, cobravam-se juros altíssimos, e aqueles que não podiam restituir o empréstimo eram tratados rudemente. À base de antigos registros sabe-se de se cobrarem juros de metade da safra de um homem pelo uso de um campo, e que a exigência de o comerciante restituir em dobro o que tomou emprestado não era considerado ilegal. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 168, 170) Às vezes, o tratamento dado ao devedor era muito duro. — Livy (Lívio), II, XXIII, 2-7; veja Mt 18:28-30.

No antigo Israel, porém, a situação era bastante diferente. Empréstimos de dinheiro ou de alimentos eram feitos costumeiramente a coisraelitas pobres, vítimas de reveses financeiros, e a Lei proibia cobrar deles juros. Aceitar o israelita juros dum coisraelita necessitado teria significado lucrar com a adversidade deste. (Êx 22:25; Le 25:35-37; De 15:7, 8; 23:19) De estrangeiros, porém, podiam-se cobrar juros. No entanto, mesmo esta provisão da Lei talvez se aplicasse apenas a empréstimos comerciais, não a casos de necessidades reais. Estrangeiros frequentemente se encontravam em Israel como comerciantes em trânsito, e era razoável esperar que pagassem juros, visto que eles também emprestavam a outros com juros. — De 23:20.

As Escrituras Hebraicas censuram aquele que toma emprestado e se nega a restituir o que tomou emprestado (Sal 37:21), e ao mesmo tempo incentivam que se façam empréstimos aos necessitados. (De 15:7-11; Sal 37:26; 112:5) Provérbios 19:17 diz: "Aquele que mostra favor ao de condição humilde está emprestando a Jeová, e Ele lhe retribuirá o seu tratamento."

O caso de Ana ilustra que Jeová retribui generosamente. Depois de ela 'emprestar' a Jeová seu único filho, Samuel, para servir no santuário, em cumprimento do voto dela, Ana foi abençoada, não apenas com mais um filho, mas com três filhos e duas filhas. — 1Sa 1:11, 20, 26-28; 2:20, 21.

Enquanto estava na terra, Cristo Jesus refletiu o espírito generoso do seu Pai Jeová e ensinou outros a fazer o mesmo. Ampliando a questão de se conceder empréstimos, Jesus disse: "Se emprestardes sem juros àqueles de quem esperais receber, de que mérito é isso para vós? Até mesmo pecadores emprestam sem juros a pecadores, para receberem de volta o mesmo. Ao contrário, continuai . . . a emprestar sem juros, não esperando nada de volta; e a vossa recompensa será grande, e sereis filhos do Altíssimo, porque ele é benigno para com os ingratos e os iníquos." — Lu 6:34, 35.

Os ouvintes judeus de Jesus eram obrigados pela Lei a conceder empréstimos sem juros a coisraelitas necessitados. Não era incomum que mesmo pecadores concedessem empréstimos sem juros àqueles que estavam em condições de restituí-los. Fazer tais empréstimos sem juros talvez até mesmo fosse com a intenção de granjear no futuro algum favor daquele que tomava o empréstimo. Por outro lado, aquele que desejasse imitar a Deus faria mais do que um pecador, concedendo empréstimo a pessoas necessitadas, cuja situação econômica era tal que talvez nunca pudessem restituí-lo.

Naturalmente, a aplicação das palavras de Jesus é limitada pelas circunstâncias. Por exemplo, a obrigação de cuidar das necessidades dos membros da própria família tem prioridade. Portanto, seria errado alguém conceder um empréstimo que interferisse na sua obrigação de prover das necessidades da vida a sua própria família. (Mr 7:11-13; 1Ti 5:8) Também, a atitude e a situação do prospectivo tomador de empréstimo entra na questão. Está ele passando necessidades por ser irresponsável, preguiçoso e indisposto a aceitar trabalho, embora haja disponível serviço que ele é capaz de realizar? Neste caso, aplicam-se as palavras do apóstolo Paulo: "Se alguém não quiser trabalhar, tampouco coma." — 2Te 3:10; veja DÍVIDA, DEVEDOR; JUROS.

ENÃ [relacionado com 'á·yin, "fonte; manancial"]. Pai de Aira, maioral da tribo de Naftali, nos dias de Moisés. — Núm 1:15; 2:29; 7:78, 83; 10:27. Veja também ENÃO.

ENAIM [provavelmente: Duas Fontes; Dois Mananciais]. Lugar perto do qual Tamar, disfarçada de prostituta, coabitou com Judá, o que resultou no nascimento de Peres e Zerá. (Gên 38:14-16, 21, 29, 30) Parece que Enaim ficava entre Adulão e Timná. (Gên 38:12) Embora alguns geógrafos achem que seja a Enão na Sefelá (Jos 15:34), sua localização exata é hoje desconhecida.

ENÃO [relacionado com 'á·yin, "fonte; manancial"]. Cidade na Sefelá de Judá. (Jos 15:33, 34) Embora se desconheça hoje a localização exata de Enão, alguns geógrafos acham que seja a Enaim mencionada em Gênesis 38:14, 21.

ENCANTAMENTO. A palavra hebraica 'it·tím é usada em Isaías 19:3 para com os "encantadores" do Egito. A palavra hebraica hhé·ver (traduzida "encantamento") refere-se a uma fórmula mágica proferida, cantada ou escrita como encantamento para 'enfeitiçar' alguém. (Sal 58:5; Is 47:9, 12) "As ornamentais conchas zunzunantes", possuídas e sem dúvida usadas pelas filhas de Sião, eram evidentemente amuletos, sendo que a palavra hebraica para elas (lehha·shím) deriva duma raiz que significa "cochicho; encantamento [amuleto]". (Is 3:20; compare isso com 2Sa 12:19; Sal 58:5.) Essas práticas espíritas estavam entre "as coisas detestáveis" que Jeová proibiu ao seu povo. (De 18:9-11) Os antigos babilônios, egípcios e outros eram famosos pela sua confiança em amuletos e em fazer encantamentos. — Is 19:3; 47:9, 12.

Encantamento de Serpentes. O chamado encantamento de serpentes pode ser uma forma de espiritismo e é um vestígio do antigo culto dos adoradores de serpentes. O encantador supostamente enfeitiça a serpente, frequentemente a naja, de modo que ela parece estar encantada com a música tocada, usualmente com flauta ou pífaro. As serpentes não são surdas ou de audição impedida, conforme alguns talvez pensem, mas, conforme o Salmo 58:4, 5, dá a entender, podem ouvir tanto a voz dos encantadores como a música. Talvez se pense tratar-se dum mero truque, de treinar a serpente assim como se treinaria um animal ou uma ave, por colocá-la num cesto com tampa, tocar música suave, rapidamente colocando a tampa, caso a serpente tente escapar, até que ela finalmente aprenda a erguer-se ereta, em obediência à música, sem tentar escapar. Embora talvez seja assim em alguns casos, evidentemente, não raro há forças espíritas envolvidas no encantamento de serpentes.

O que atesta a antiguidade desta prática espírita é sua menção na Bíblia. — Sal 58:4, 5; Ec 10:11; Is 3:3; Je 8:17.

ENCANTO. A palavra hebraica hhen tem o sentido de favor, encanto ou elegância, em forma e em conduta, e geralmente é traduzida por "favor" (Gên 6:8), embora em certos casos ela seja traduzida por "encanto". Por exemplo, a prostituta talvez seja "atraente com encanto" (Na 3:4), mas, conforme se observa em Provérbios: "O encanto talvez seja falso e a lindeza talvez seja vã; mas a mulher que teme a Jeová é a que procura louvor para si." Também, "a mulher de encanto é a que segura a glória". (Pr 31:30; 11:16; veja também Pr 5:18, 19.) Sabedoria divina e entendimento podem ser de verdadeiro encanto ornamental (Pr 3:21, 22; 4:7-9), assim como se dá também com a fala correta. (Sal 45:2; Pr 22:11) Quando os judeus retornaram do exílio em Babilônia, Zorobabel foi incentivado a prosseguir com a construção do templo, assegurando-se-lhe que, com o lançamento da pedra de remate, esta seria "aclamada: 'Quão encantadora! Quão encantadora!' " — Za 4:7.

ENCHENTE (INUNDAÇÃO). Veja DILÚVIO.

ENCHER A MÃO DE PODER. A expressão hebraica mil·lé' yadh, traduzida por "consagrar" em muitas versões, significa literalmente "encher a mão" e é usada com referência a se colocar plenos poderes na mão daqueles que irão servir num cargo sacerdotal. Arão e seus filhos, na sua investidura como sacerdotes de Jeová, tiveram as mãos enchidas de poder para servir nesta qualidade. (Êx 28:41; 29:9, 29, 33, 35; Le 8:33; 16:32; 21:10; Núm 3:3) Para simbolizar isso, o carneiro da investidura foi abatido e cortado, e partes dele, junto com outros itens do cesto dos pães não fermentados, foram por Moisés colocados sobre as palmas das mãos de Arão e de seus filhos, os quais moveram então a oferta perante Jeová. Por fim, faziam-se fumegar no altar, por cima da oferta queimada, as coisas movidas. — Êx 29:19-25; Le 8:22-28; veja INVESTIDURA; SACERDOTE; UNGIDO, UNÇÃO.

Também outros enchiam de poder a mão dos seus sacerdotes. O idólatra Micá primeiro empossou um filho e depois um levita infiel para serem sacerdotes da sua "casa de deuses". (Jz 17:5, 12) Mais tarde, o Rei Jeroboão, ao instituir a adoração do bezerro em Israel, investiu seus próprios sacerdotes dentre o povo em geral; os sacerdotes arônicos e os levitas permaneceram leais à adoração de Jeová centrada em Jerusalém, e, evidentemente por este motivo, eles foram expulsos do reino das dez tribos. — 1Rs 12:31; 13:33; 2Cr 13:9.

ENDECHA. Composição lírica ou musical que expressa profunda tristeza, tal como o pesar causado pela morte de um amigo ou de um ente querido; uma elegia. Na Tradução do Novo Mundo, "endecha" usualmente traduz a palavra hebraica qi·náh, que denota uma composição lamentosa, uma elegia ou uma lamentação.

O termo hebraico shig·ga·yóhn, no cabeçalho do Salmo 7, também é traduzido por "endecha" e talvez denote um canto muito emocional com rápidas mudanças de ritmo. (NM n.) Uma forma plural da palavra hebraica aparece em Habacuque 3:1, onde é vertida "endechas". As endechas, por causa da sua natureza, são associadas com gemidos e lamúria (Ez 2:10), e pelo menos algumas delas foram assentadas por escrito e preservadas. Segundo Crônicas 35:25 relata que Jeremias entoou um canto pelo falecido Rei Josias e indica que antigamente existia uma coleção de endechas (hebr.: qi·nóhth), porque declara: "Todos os cantores e todas as cantoras falam sobre Josias nas suas endechas até o dia de hoje; e puseram-nas por regulamento em Israel, e eis que estão escritas entre as endechas."

Endechas são relacionadas com pranto, como quando Jeová disse ao infiel Israel: "Eu vou transformar as vossas festividades em pranto e todas as vossas canções em endecha." (Am 8:10) Portanto, entoar uma endecha significava entoar uma elegia, ou composição lamentosa, talvez para indicar uma rejeição por parte de Jeová ou para contrastar anteriores circunstâncias favoráveis com uma posterior situação infeliz. (Je 7:29; Ez 19:1-14) A endecha era entoada, frequentemente por mulheres. — Ez 27:32; Je 9:20.

Algumas endechas eram do tipo histórico, compostas após um acontecimento, tal como a morte de um querido conhecido. Um exemplo desta espécie de endecha é a entoada por Davi em lamento por Saul e Jonatã, que foram mortos no monte Gilboa durante a guerra com os filisteus. (2Sa 1:17-27; 1Sa 31:8) O Rei Davi também entoou um canto por causa de Abner, após o sepultamento deste. (2Sa 3:31-34) Embora as endechas relacionadas com a morte duma pessoa talvez fossem compostas, em parte, para dar um pouco de consolo aos enlutados, entre os fiéis servos de Deus elas não se destinavam a glorificar os falecidos. — Ec 9:5, 10.

O livro de Lamentações é uma endecha escrita por Jeremias após a destruição de Jerusalém por mãos babilônicas, em 607 AEC. Embora expresse pesar por aquela desolação, também reflete fé e esperança em Jeová; e o quinto capítulo abre com um apelo a Deus para se lembrar dos do seu povo, os quais haviam ficado como "meros órfãos sem pai". — La 3:22-27; 5:1-3; veja LAMENTAÇÕES, LIVRO DE.

Algumas endechas registradas na Bíblia são proféticas e ilustram vividamente uma vindoura calamidade, às vezes como se já tivesse acontecido. Entoaram-se endechas proféticas contra Tiro e seu rei (Ez 26:17; 27:1, 2; 28:11-19), bem como contra Faraó e o Egito. (Ez 32:2-16) Entoar-se uma endecha sobre Judá e Jerusalém é mencionado em conexão com a desolação delas. — Je 9:9-11.

EN-DOR [possivelmente: Fonte (Manancial) da Geração]. Uma cidade de planície, situada no território de Issacar, mas designada a Manassés. Os cananeus dali não foram inteiramente desapossados, mas foram submetidos a trabalhos forçados. (Jos 17:11-13) Usualmente se identifica En-Dor com Khirbet Safsafeh (Horvat Zafzafot), a uns 11 km ao SE de Nazaré.

No Salmo 83:9, 10, liga-se En-Dor com a vitória de Jeová sobre Sísera. Embora não seja mencionada no relato da batalha em Juízes, capítulos 4 e 5, evidentemente ficava apenas a poucos quilômetros ao S do monte Tabor, de onde desceu o exército de Baraque. (Jz 4:6, 12) Achava-se também na região geral de Taanaque e Megido, e do vale da torrente do Quisom, onde as forças de Sísera foram miraculosamente desbaratadas. (Jos 17:11; Jz 5:19) Assim, certa parte da batalha evidentemente se estendeu até En-Dor, e o salmista, bem familiarizado com os pormenores históricos e geográficos, pôde falar de En-Dor como o lugar onde muitos dos cananeus fugitivos foram aniquilados.

En-Dor é mais conhecido como o lugar em que o Rei Saul foi consultar uma mulher "dona de mediunidade espírita", pouco antes da derrota de Israel às mãos dos filisteus. — 1Sa 28:7; 31:1-13.

ENDRO [gr.: á·ne·thon]. Lexicógrafos hodiernos concordam que a planta chamada pelo termo grego á·ne·thon seja o endro (ou: aneto) (Anethum graveolens) em vez de o anis (gr.: án·ne·son), conforme dizem traduções mais antigas (KJ, Dy). Na região palestina, o endro costuma hoje ser mais cultivado do que o anis, e a evidência indica que desde tempos antigos era cultivado no Oriente Médio, bem como pelos gregos e pelos romanos. O endro se encontrava entre as plantas pelas quais os fariseus hipócritas meticulosamente pagavam o dízimo, ao passo que deixavam de observar as coisas mais importantes da Lei. (Mt 23:23) A Míxena judaica (Ma'a·serot 4:5) prescrevia que não somente as sementes, mas também os caules e os aquênios estavam sujeitos ao dízimo.

A planta é herbácea, parecida ao anis, e atinge a altura de uns 50 cm, com folhas verde-claras de talho fino, e umbela de pequenas flores amarelas. É cultivada por suas sementes aromáticas, muito apreciadas para condimentar alimentos, e também como remédio para tratamento de males estomacais.

EN-EGLAIM [Fonte (Manancial) de Dois Bezerros]. Numa visão simbólica dada a Ezequiel, a água saturada de sal do Mar Morto havia de ser "curada" e pescadores haviam de ficar de pé ao longo dela, desde En-Gedi para cima até En-Eglaim. (Ez 47:8-10) O próprio nome indica um lugar junto a um manancial. A maioria dos peritos relacionam En-Eglaim com 'Ain Feshka, perto da extremidade NO do Mar Morto. 'Ain Feshka, e, a uns 29 km para o S, 'Ain Jidi (que perpetua o nome de En-Gedi) constituem os dois principais oásis na margem ocidental do Mar Morto. Por outro lado, outros sugerem um lugar na margem SE do Mar Morto, perto de Zoar. À base de antigos documentos escritos, que mencionam o distrito de 'Agaltain, Y. Yadin conclui que "é evidente que o 'distrito de 'Agaltain' é o setor sudeste do Mar Morto . . . Se houver qualquer conexão entre 'Agaltain e En-Eglaim na profecia de Ezequiel, no Mar Morto (Ez 47:10: 'e acontecerá que pescadores ficarão de pé sobre ela desde En-Gedi até En-Eglaim') — a interpretação desta passagem deve ser que o Mar será curado de costa a costa — um quadro bem vívido e claro. Não há necessidade de se procurar En-Eglaim na costa ocidental (recentemente se sugeriu identificá-la com Ain-Feshka), uma identificação que limita a visão profética apenas à margem ocidental". — Israel Exploration Journal (Revista de Explorações de Israel), Jerusalém, 1962, Vol. 12, pp. 250, 251.

ENEIAS [Louvado]. Homem de Lida, cidade à beira da planície de Sarom, curado por Pedro depois de ter estado paralítico por oito anos. — At 9:32-35.

ENFEITES (ORNAMENTOS). Adornos, nem sempre essenciais, mas destinados a melhorar a aparência de alguém ou de alguma coisa. Enfeites eram usados especialmente por mulheres, mas também por homens; eram usados para decorar prédios; às vezes eram colocados em animais.

As referências bíblicas e a evidência descoberta pelos arqueólogos revelam não só um grande interesse pela ornamentação, desde tempos antiquíssimos, mas também grande habilidade e perícia na produção de enfeites de alto calibre artístico. Os artesãos realizavam trabalhos altamente decorativos em tecelagens, bordados, esculturas de madeira e de marfim, e em artesanato com metais. Os restos de palácios na Assíria, em Babilônia, na Pérsia e na cidade de Mari suprem todos evidência de rica decoração, havendo grandes murais em paredes interiores e baixos-relevos excelentemente esculpidos, apresentando cenas de guerra, de caçadas e de assuntos palacianos, que adornam tanto paredes internas como externas. Os portais dos palácios eram não raro guardados por grandes figuras de poderosos animais. As representações do rei e de outros, nos relevos, revelam excelentes bordados na sua vestimenta. Até mesmo os arreios dos cavalos acham-se altamente decorados com borlas e gravuras. (Compare isso com os colares dos camelos dos midianitas; Jz 8:21, 26.) Pinturas em sepulcros fornecem a fonte primária da evidência procedente do Egito, embora alguns artefatos na forma de tronos, carros régios e de outros objetos ainda existam.

Hebraicos e Cristãos. Logo cedo se faz menção de joias na forma de uma argola de ouro para as narinas e também de pulseiras dadas a Rebeca pelo servo de Abraão. (Gên 24:22, 30, 47, 53) Quando José se tornou primeiro-ministro de Faraó, ele recebeu um colar de ouro e o anel de sinete do próprio monarca. (Gên 41:41-43) Esses anéis de sinete, ou anéis de chancela, eram comuns em todas as terras bíblicas, frequentemente usados num cordão no pescoço. (Veja Gên 38:18.) Serviam para apor a assinatura, ou o selo oficial, da pessoa em documentos, e, portanto, quando concedidos a outra pessoa, identificavam-na como representante de confiança e autorizado do dono do anel.

No Êxodo, os israelitas receberam dos egípcios muitos objetos de prata e de ouro, e, sem dúvida, destes é que provinham muitos dos broches, arrecadas, anéis e outros itens que contribuíram para a preparação do tabernáculo, assim como haviam contribuído erroneamente arrecadas de ouro para a fabricação de um bezerro idólatra. (Êx 12:35, 36; 32:1-4; 35:20-24) O tabernáculo e seu equipamento refletiam muito trabalho de artesãos hábeis em madeira e em metais preciosos e gemas, bem como em tecelagem e em bordados. (Êx 35:25-35) O posterior templo de Salomão foi ainda mais gloriosamente ornamentado. Seus painéis de cedro, bem como suas portas, de madeira oleaginosa e de junípero, tinham esculpidas neles figuras tais como ornamentos em forma de bagas, grinaldas de flores, querubins e figuras de palmeiras, recobertos de ouro, ao passo que as duas colunas de cobre, na frente do prédio, tinham trabalhos de rede, de corrente, de romãs e de lírio adornando seus capitéis. (1Rs 6:18, 29, 35; 7:15-22) Salomão mostrou grande apreço pela beleza artística, e seu grande trono de marfim, recoberto de ouro, com figuras de leões ao lado de cada braço, e mais 12 nos seis degraus diante dele, era único no mundo antigo. — 1Rs 10:16-21.

A Bíblia, porém, dá maior ênfase à beleza espiritual. A disciplina parental é "uma grinalda de encanto" para a cabeça da pessoa, "e um fino colar" para o pescoço; sabedoria é uma "coroa de beleza"; "lábios de conhecimento são vasos preciosos", superiores a quaisquer vasos de ouro dum artesão; "como maçãs de ouro em esculturas de prata é a palavra falada no tempo certo para ela", e "arrecada de ouro e ornamento de ouro especial é o sábio repreendedor sobre o ouvido atento". (Pr 1:9; 4:9; 20:15; 25:11, 12) A mulher linda, mas desprovida de sensatez, é assemelhada a "uma argola de ouro, para as narinas, no focinho dum porco". — Pr 11:22.

Incentiva-se a moderação, especialmente nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. As mulheres deviam 'adornar-se em vestido bem arrumado, com modéstia e bom juízo, não com estilos de trançados dos cabelos, e com ouro, ou pérolas, ou vestimenta muito cara, mas dum modo próprio das mulheres que professam reverenciar a Deus, a saber, por intermédio de boas obras'. (1Ti 2:9, 10) Pedro podia evocar exemplos dos tempos pré-cristãos ao instar com as mulheres para que procurassem a beleza da "pessoa secreta do coração, na vestimenta incorruptível dum espírito quieto e brando, que é de grande valor aos olhos de Deus"; ele destacou mulheres, tais como Sara, que se adornavam deste modo, "sujeitando-se aos seus próprios maridos". (1Pe 3:1-6) Assim, quando seguidas, as Escrituras fornecem orientação para uma avaliação correta dos enfeites e das joias, e para o bom equilíbrio em seu uso.

Ornamentação na Profecia. Devido à Sua bênção sobre Jerusalém, Jeová assemelhou esta capital de Judá a uma mulher vestida de roupas custosas, ricamente enfeitada e adornada de joias. A perda de espiritualidade da parte dela e sua prostituição espiritual com as nações resultaram em ela ser despojada de seus enfeites e deixada como que nua. (Ez 16:2, 10-39) Tal despojamento não ocorreu apenas em sentido espiritual, mas também em sentido literal, à medida que seus conquistadores cobiçosos tomaram as riquezas da cidade, inclusive as manilhas, as fitas para a cabeça, os ornamentos em forma de lua, os pingentes, os braceletes, os véus, as coberturas para a cabeça, as correntinhas para os pés, as faixas para o busto, as "casas da alma" (referindo-se, talvez, aos receptáculos de perfume), as ornamentais conchas zunzunantes (amuletos), os anéis, e as argolas para o nariz que "as filhas de Sião" usavam. (Is 3:16-26) Seria um tempo de pesar, pois, no pesar, costumeiramente se removiam os enfeites. — Êx 33:4-6.

No entanto, quando Jeová resgatasse Sião do cativeiro babilônico, ele figurativamente a construiria com alicerce de safira, com ameias de rubis e portões de pedras fulgurosas, isto por causa da paz e da justiça que Ele traria (Is 54:7, 8, 11-14), e ela seria revestida de atavios e enfeites como os duma noiva. (Is 49:14-18; compare isso com 61:10.) Este último quadro se assemelha um pouco à descrição da Nova Jerusalém, com seus portões de pérolas e seus alicerces semelhantes a pedras preciosas, como estando preparada qual "noiva adornada para seu marido". (Re 21:2, 9-21) De novo, torna-se evidente que os enfeites e adornos se relacionam com qualidades e bênçãos espirituais que resultam da aprovação e do favor de Deus.

Em contraste, Babilônia, a Grande, a mulher simbólica que comete fornicação com os reis da terra, adorna-se de roupas e enfeites régios, e vive em vergonhosa luxúria, mas será despojada de todos os seus suntuosos adereços, deixada nua e destruída. A beleza dela é enganosa, e ela 'se glorifica'; assim, seus enfeites não representam a bênção e o favor divinos, mas, ao invés disso, as pretensões dela, e os benefícios que seu proceder meretrício lhe traz no sentido de poder e de riquezas. — Re 17:3-5, 16; 18:7-20.

EN-GANIM [Fonte (ou: Manancial) de Jardins].

1. Cidade de Judá na Sefelá, ou terra baixa, mencionada no mesmo grupo que Adulão, em Josué 15:33-35. Seu lugar é possivelmente na moderna Beit Jimal, a uns 2,5 km ao S de Bete-Semes, ou de um lugar por perto. Umm Jina, que fica a cerca de 1 km ao O de Bete-Semes, foi sugerido por alguns como o lugar dela, mas isso é menos provável, porque ali não se encontra nenhuma fonte.

2. Cidade situada na herança da tribo de Issacar. (Jos 19:17, 21) Talvez seja a cidade que Josefo chamou de Ginae. Hoje é identificada com Jenin, uma cidade na extremidade S do vale de Jezreel, a uns 18 km ao SE de Megido e a 8 km ao NE de Dotã, na estrada principal de Jerusalém a Nazaré. Jenin está cercada por pomares e jardins, e tem uma fonte, característica que se harmonizaria com o significado do nome En-Ganim.

En-Ganim, com os seus pastos, foi designada aos filhos de Gérson como cidade levita. (Jos 21:27-29) Em 1 Crônicas 6:73, evidentemente ela é chamada de Anem.

EN-GEDI [Fonte (Nascente) do Cabritinho]. Nome duma cidade e do ermo circunvizinho no território de Judá. (Jos 15:62; 1Sa 24:1) A cidade costuma ser identificada com Tell Jurn (Tel Goren), perto da povoação moderna de 'En Gedi, a uns 37 km ao SSE de Jerusalém, na margem do Mar Morto.

A jovem sulamita fez alusão à fertilidade desta região, referindo-se a um "cacho de hena . . . entre os vinhedos de En-Gedi". (Cân 1:14) Isto, porém, só descreve parcialmente a rica vida vegetal que floresce ali mesmo hoje em dia. A localização especial de En-Gedi na depressão da região do Mar Morto propicia o crescimento de vegetação semitropical, de palmeiras e de balsameiros, além duma variedade de frutas, tornando En-Gedi um oásis que se destaca do vizinho e grandemente desolado ermo de Judá. — Veja JUDÁ, ERMO DE.

Não só esta vegetação abundante, mas também a inacessibilidade da região de En-Gedi a tornaram um esconderijo ideal para Davi, quando ele estava sendo perseguido pelo Rei Saul. Assim, a Bíblia fala de certos "lugares de difícil acesso em En-Gedi". (1Sa 23:29) Os visitantes da atualidade têm descrito similarmente os perigosos desfiladeiros rochosos, escarpados, naquela região. A hostilidade de partes da região também é indicada pela referência às "rochas calvas dos cabritos monteses". (1Sa 24:2) Alguns peritos consideram ser este um nome próprio, "Rochas das Cabras Monteses" (v 3: BJ; CBC; BV), referindo-se a determinada localidade em que provavelmente as cabras se congregavam, assim como fazem mesmo nos tempos modernos na região de En-Gedi. No entanto, outros consideram este termo como simples frase descritiva dos escarpados montes cônicos e cordilheiras da região, habitados por cabras. As rochas de En-Gedi estão cheias de cavernas espaçosas. Davi e seus homens talvez se tenham ocultado em uma delas. (1Sa 24:3) Alguns sugerem que os "redis de pedra para ovelhas", onde Saul parou, talvez se refiram a estas cavernas, com um rústico muro erguido na frente para as proteger das intempéries. — 1Sa 24:2-10.

As forças unidas de Amom, Moabe e da região montanhosa de Seir vieram contra Judá nos dias do Rei Jeosafá pelo caminho de "Hazazom-Tamar, isto é, En-Gedi". (2Cr 20:2; veja HAZAZOM-TAMAR.) Na visão de Ezequiel a respeito da "curada" água do mar, profetizava-se que pescadores se postariam "desde En-Gedi para cima até En-Eglaim". — Ez 47:8-10.

EN-HACORÉ [Fonte (ou: Manancial) Daquele que Invoca]. Fonte em Leí. (Jz 15:19) Ela recebeu seu nome quando Sansão, sedento depois de ter abatido mil homens, "começou a invocar a Jeová" pedindo água, e a fonte foi provida milagrosamente. — Jz 15:14-18.

EN-HADÁ [Fonte (Manancial) Abrupta (Veemente)]. Cidade de Issacar, provavelmente perto de En-Ganim. (Jos 19:17, 21) Costuma ser identificada com el-Hadetheh (Tel ʽEn Hadda) a 9 km ao L do monte Tabor.

EN-HAZOR [Fonte (Manancial) de Hazor]. Cidade fortificada da tribo de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 35, 37) Alguns a identificam com Khirbet Hazireh, a 16 km ao O de Quedes.

ENIGMA. Uma declaração intrigante. A palavra hebraica para enigma também pode ser vertida 'declaração ambígua' ou 'pergunta desconcertante'. (Veja Da 8:23 n.) Enigmas são contrastados com linguagem clara que pode ser facilmente entendida. (Núm 12:8) Essa palavra às vezes é usada como expressão paralela de "dito proverbial", porque um enigma bem que pode ser uma declaração cheia de significado, mas que é expressa em linguagem obscura. (Sal 49:4) A mesma palavra hebraica traduzida "enigmas", também, num contexto diferente, é vertida "perguntas difíceis". (2Cr 9:1) É preciso uma mente arguta para formular um enigma, que amiúde envolve uma analogia obscura, porém exata, e desvendar tal enigma exige a habilidade de ver as coisas em sua relação umas com as outras; assim, a Bíblia se refere aos enigmas como produto de pessoas sábias e como algo a ser discernido pelo homem de entendimento. — Pr 1:5, 6.

A própria Bíblia contém enigmas que envolvem os propósitos de Jeová. (Sal 78:2-4) São declarações que, de início, podem deixar o leitor perplexo; talvez sejam propositalmente obscuras, empregando comparações significativas que não se destinavam a ser entendidas pelas pessoas do tempo em que foram escritas. Por exemplo, em Zacarias 3:8, Jeová se refere de modo profético a "meu servo Renovo", mas não explica ali que este é um renovo ou descendente da linhagem real de Davi, e que, na realidade, este é o próprio Filho de Deus, então nos céus, que nasceria duma virgem que descendia do Rei Davi. E Revelação (Apocalipse) 13:18 diz que o "número da fera" é "seiscentos e sessenta e seis", mas não explica ali o significado deste número.

Às vezes se usaram enigmas, não para aturdir aqueles que os ouviam, mas, pelo que parece, para suscitar interesse e tornar mais vívida a mensagem transmitida. Este foi o caso do enigma das duas águias e a videira, que o profeta Ezequiel propôs à casa de Israel. (Ez 17:1-8) Logo depois de apresentar este enigma, Jeová instruiu Ezequiel que indagasse do povo se o havia entendido, e então o explicasse a este.

Alguns enigmas foram propostos para serem adivinhados pelos homens, e frequentemente em verso, como se deu com o enigma que Sansão propôs aos filisteus. Quando disse: "Do comedor saiu comida, e do forte saiu o doce", ele deliberadamente fazia comparações que não seriam facilmente percebidas. (Jz 14:12-18) Seu enigma baseava-se numa experiência pessoal que tivera pouco antes disso, quando removeu o mel da carcaça dum leão, onde tinha sido depositado por um enxame de abelhas. — Jz 14:8, 9.

EN-MISPATE [Fonte (Manancial) de Julgamento]. Outro nome de Cades. — Gên 14:7; veja CADES, CADES-BARNEIA.

ENOM. Lugar de "uma grande quantidade de água", onde João, o Batizador, realizava imersões após a Páscoa de 30 EC. (Jo 3:23) Ficava perto do aparentemente mais conhecido lugar chamado Salim. A localização exata destes lugares é incerta; no entanto, Eusébio, bispo de Cesareia, que viveu no terceiro e no quarto século EC, indica um lugar no vale do Jordão a umas 8 milhas romanas (12 km) ao S de Bete-Seã. Nesta região se encontra Tell Ridgha (Tel Salem), provisoriamente identificado com Salim. Na vizinhança há diversas fontes que talvez se enquadrem na descrição feita por Eusébio do lugar chamado Enom.

ENOQUE [Treinado; Inaugurado [isto é, dedicado, iniciado]].

1. Filho de Caim e pai de Irade. Enoque nasceu na terra da Fuga, depois de Caim matar seu irmão Abel. — Gên 4:17, 18.

2. Filho que nasceu a Jarede à idade de 162 anos; o sétimo homem na descendência de Adão. Além de Metusalém, que lhe nasceu quando tinha 65 anos, Enoque teve outros filhos e filhas. Enoque foi um dentre a "tão grande nuvem de testemunhas" que constituíram exemplos notáveis de fé, nos tempos antigos. "Enoque prosseguiu andando com o verdadeiro Deus." (Gên 5:18, 21-24; He 11:5; 12:1) Como profeta de Jeová, predisse que Deus viria com Suas santas miríades para executar julgamento nos iníquos. (Ju 14, 15) É provável que tenha sido perseguido por causa do seu profetizar. No entanto, Deus não permitiu que os oponentes matassem Enoque. Antes, Jeová "o tomou", isto é, abreviou sua vida à idade de 365 anos, uma idade muito inferior à da maioria de seus contemporâneos. Enoque foi "transferido para não ver a morte", o que talvez signifique que Deus o pôs num transe profético e então terminou a vida de Enoque enquanto estava no transe, de modo que não sofreu as agonias da morte. (Gên 5:24; He 11:5, 13) No entanto, não foi levado para o céu, em vista da expressa declaração de Jesus, em João 3:13. Parece que, como se deu no caso do corpo de Moisés, Jeová fez desaparecer o corpo de Enoque, pois "não foi achado em parte alguma". — De 34:5, 6; Ju 9.

Enoque não é o escritor do "Livro de Enoque". Este é um livro apócrifo, não inspirado, escrito muitos séculos mais tarde, provavelmente algum tempo entre o segundo e o primeiro século AEC.

3. Primeira cidade mencionada na Bíblia. Caim construiu esta cidade na terra da Fuga, ao L do Éden, dando-lhe o nome de seu filho Enoque. — Gên 4:17.

ENOS [Homem Mortal]. Filho de Sete, que lhe nasceu quando tinha 105 anos. Enos tinha 90 anos quando se tornou pai de Quenã, e viveu um total de 905 anos. (Gên 5:6-11) Seu nome também está alistado nas genealogias em 1 Crônicas 1:1 e em Lucas 3:38. Nos seus dias "se principiou a invocar o nome de Jeová". (Gên 4:26) Não se tratava, evidentemente, de uma invocação de Jeová com fé e em adoração pura, como Abel fizera mais de 105 anos antes do nascimento de Enos. Alguns peritos em hebraico contendem que o texto devia rezar "começaram profanamente", ou "então começou a profanação". Com referência aos dias de Enos, o Targum de Jerusalém diz: "Essa foi a geração em cujos dias começaram a errar, e a fazer para si mesmos ídolos, e deram sobrenomes a seus ídolos conforme o nome da Palavra do Senhor." Os homens talvez aplicassem o nome de Jeová a si mesmos ou a outros homens, mediante os quais fingiam aproximar-se de Deus em adoração; ou, talvez aplicassem Seu nome a objetos de idolatria.

EN-RIMOM [Fonte (ou: Manancial) da Romãzeira]. Cidade de Judá mencionada após o exílio como habitada pelos filhos de Judá. (Ne 11:25, 29) Seu nome é uma combinação de Aim e Rimom, mencionadas em Josué 15:32 e 19:7, e em 1 Crônicas 4:32. Atualmente, em geral é considerada identificável com Khirbet Umm er-Ramamin, a uns 15 km ao N de Berseba.

EN-ROGEL [Fonte (Manancial) de Rogel (Pé)]. Fonte ou poço perto de Jerusalém que marcava a fronteira entre Judá e Benjamim. (Jos 15:7; 18:16) Jonatã e Aimaás, espiões de Davi, aguardaram em En-Rogel informações secretas sobre a rebelião de Absalão. (2Sa 17:17) Perto dali, Adonias, outro filho rebelde de Davi, realizou mais tarde um banquete para granjear apoio para sua usurpação do trono. — 1Rs 1:9.

En-Rogel, segundo em geral se concorda, corresponde à moderna Bir Ayyub, ou poço de Jó. Acha-se localizada ao S do canto SE do muro de Jerusalém, ao sopé da margem ocidental do vale do Cédron, a cerca de 100 m ao S da junção com o vale de Hinom. O poço desce a uma corrente ou fonte subterrâneas que, depois duma chuva, às vezes flui com tamanha abundância que chega a elevar o nível da água até a superfície.

EN-SEMES [Fonte (ou: Manancial) do Sol]. Lugar na fronteira entre as heranças territoriais de Benjamim e de Judá. (Jos 15:1, 7; 18:11, 17) Costuma ser identificado com ʽAin el-Hod, a uns 3 km ao L do monte do Templo em Jerusalém, sendo a última fonte na estrada de Jerusalém a Jericó antes de se chegar ao vale do Jordão.

ENSINO. Veja INSTRUTOR, ENSINO.

ENTALHE, GRAVURA. A arte de entalhar desenhos ou letras em materiais tais como madeira (1Rs 6:29, 32), metal (Êx 39:30) ou pedra (Za 3:9). A alusão mais antiga a uma gravura, nas Escrituras, talvez seja a referência ao anel de chancela de Judá. (Gên 38:18) O entalhe costumava ser feito com instrumento pontudo de ferro ou mesmo com ponta de diamante. (Je 17:1) Mas os Dez Mandamentos foram gravados em pedra pelo "dedo" de Deus. — Êx 31:18; 32:16; 34:1; 2Co 3:7.

Cada uma das duas pedras de ônix nas ombreiras do éfode do sumo sacerdote tinha gravados nela os nomes de seis tribos diferentes de Israel, e cada uma das 12 pedras preciosas que adornavam o peitoral tinha gravado nela o nome de uma das tribos. O sinal sagrado de dedicação, a lâmina lustrosa no turbante do sumo sacerdote, tinha gravadas nela as palavras: "A santidade pertence a Jeová." Cheios do espírito de Deus, Bezalel, junto com Ooliabe, estavam qualificados para fazer este trabalho especializado de gravação, bem como para treinar outros. — Êx 35:30-35; 28:9-12; 39:6-14, 30.

EN-TAPUA [Fonte (ou: Manancial) da Maçã (Macieira)]. Manancial junto à cidade de Tapua, usado como ponto de referência dos limites entre a herança da tribo de Manassés e da de Efraim. (Jos 17:7) O nome talvez fosse também usado para a própria cidade de Tapua. (Jos 17:8) Alguns identificam En-Tapua com um manancial perto da cidade de Yasuf, ao S da qual jaz Tell Sheikh Abu Zarad, lugar sugerido de Tapua.

ENTENDIMENTO. As palavras das línguas originais traduzidas por "entendimento", podem referir-se à compreensão de algo bem simples, ou podem descrever o pleno e profundo reconhecimento da natureza interna, das razões subjacentes e do significado de assuntos complexos. A perspicácia, o discernimento e a percepção estão intimamente relacionados com o entendimento.

O verbo hebraico bin e o substantivo bi·náh são mais frequentemente relacionados com entendimento. Às vezes, bin e bi·náh podem mais particularmente destacar os aspectos específicos do discernimento (1Sa 3:8; 2Sa 12:19; Sal 19:12; Da 9:2), de se dar refletida consideração (De 32:7; Pr 14:15; 23:1; Je 2:10; Da 11:37) ou atenção (Jó 31:1; 32:12; 37:14; Sal 37:10) a um assunto, e podem ser traduzidos assim. O professor R. C. Dentan, escrevendo em The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete; editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 4, p. 733), diz: "A raiz בין [bin] significa primariamente 'discernir com os sentidos', 'perceber diferenças', daí, 'prestar detida atenção a', e, por fim — especialmente nos radicais derivados — 'obter compreensão' ou 'dá-la' a outros." O hebraísta Gesenius dá o sentido básico como "separar, distinguir; . . . por isso, discernir, notar, entender, termos que [todos] dependem da capacidade de separar, de distinguir, de discriminar". (A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament [Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento], traduzido para o inglês por E. Robinson, 1836, p. 140) Outro substantivo, tevu·náh, deriva da mesma raiz que bi·náh, e pode ser apropriadamente traduzido "discernimento" (Pr 10:23; 11:12) ou "entendimento" (Êx 31:3; De 32:28), conforme o contexto.

O significado básico destes termos revela que a pessoa de entendimento é aquela que consegue penetrar num assunto e discernir sua composição por separar os fatores ou aspectos individuais que o compõem ou que atuam juntos para formar um todo, daí, perceber então a relação entre eles e assim compreender ou captar a significância ou o sentido do assunto. Pode-se ilustrar isso por meio duma língua. Para alguém entender o que se fala em certa língua, ele precisa poder distinguir as palavras individuais que compõem as sentenças, conhecer o significado delas e ver que relação têm entre si. (De 28:49) Não obstante, mesmo que alguém compreenda basicamente o que se lhe diz, o entendimento pode também ir além de tal compreensão simples; significa que ele capta a verdadeira significância e sentido da mensagem, podendo assim avaliá-la, beneficiar-se dela e saber que ação requer. Quando Esdras, o sacerdote, leu a Lei diante do povo em Jerusalém, "todos os suficientemente inteligentes [do hebr: bin] para escutar" foram reunidos. Embora estes possuíssem mente amadurecida, capaz de entender todas as palavras, os levitas "explicavam a lei ao povo [instruindo o povo na lei, ou dando entendimento (uma forma de bin)], . . . [lendo] alto no livro, na lei do verdadeiro Deus, fornecendo-se esclarecimento e dando-se o sentido dela; e continuaram a tornar a leitura compreensível". — Ne 8:2, 3, 7, 8.

Nas Escrituras Gregas, "entendimento", com o sentido de percepção, obter o sentido dum assunto, é representado especialmente pelo verbo sy·ní·e·mi (literalmente: juntar) e o substantivo aparentado sý·ne·sis. Outros termos são e·pí·sta·mai, significando basicamente "conhecer bem", e gi·nó·sko, que significa "conhecer, saber".

Fonte do Entendimento. Jeová Deus tanto é a Fonte do entendimento como o Exemplo Supremo do seu uso. A esplêndida coordenação e o funcionamento do Universo, no qual cada criação serve determinado propósito harmonioso, sem choques ou problemas resultantes da falta de discernimento por parte do seu Criador, manifestam o entendimento de Deus. (Jó 38:36; Sal 136:5-9; Pr 3:19, 20; Je 10:12, 13) Deus deu aos animais um entendimento instintivo, a cada um segundo a sua espécie. Os homens talvez gastem anos em compreender a aerodinâmica, mas o falcão instintivamente sabe "ler" e utilizar os diferentes tipos de correntes de ar. (Jó 39:26) Os animais, porém, não possuem certos outros aspectos de entendimento peculiares ao homem. — Veja Sal 32:9.

Apesar de intensivas pesquisas feitas no decorrer dos séculos, muitos aspectos e ciclos que operam segundo leis divinas ainda escapam da plena compreensão do homem. (Jó 36:29; 38:19, 20) Aquilo que os homens podem compreender do seu estudo da criação material apenas se aproxima 'das beiradas dos caminhos de Deus', e é apenas um "sussurro" em comparação com um "poderoso trovão". Isto se aplica ainda mais às obras de julgamento e de salvação de Deus, visto que seus pensamentos são profundos demais para pessoas ímpias compreenderem. (Jó 26:7-14; Sal 92:5, 6) O exame da sabedoria e do entendimento divinos manifestados na criação material, porém, habilitou Jó a discernir sua relação correta para com o Criador e a reconhecer humildemente sua própria falta de entendimento. — Jó 42:1-6.

No que se refere ao homem, Jeová pode esquadrinhar os pensamentos e as ações de toda a humanidade (1Cr 28:9; Sal 139:1-6), e, segundo a sua vontade, 'dá refletida consideração' (hebr.: bin) ou atenção a pessoas e a classes. (Pr 21:12; Sal 5:1, 2) Ele conhece o Seu próprio propósito invencível e sabe o que fará no futuro. Suas normas justas são fixas, imutáveis. Por isso, "não há sabedoria, nem discernimento, nem conselho em oposição a Jeová". (Pr 21:30; compare isso com Is 29:13, 14; Je 23:20; 30:24.) Ele não precisa consultar ninguém para entender um assunto, tal como de que maneira ajudar seus servos eficazmente ou de como aliviá-los da aflição e da opressão. — Is 40:10-15, 27-31.

O conhecimento de Jeová Deus e o discernimento da Sua vontade, juntos com fé e confiança, portanto, constituem a base de todo o verdadeiro entendimento por parte de todas as Suas criaturas inteligentes. "O conhecimento do Santíssimo é o que é entendimento", e isto inclui entender "a justiça, e o juízo, e a retidão, o curso inteiro do que é bom". (Pr 9:10; 2:6-9; 16:20) Nenhum assunto de real importância pode ser plenamente entendido a menos que todos os fatores sejam encarados do ponto de vista de Jeová e vistos na sua relação com as normas, as qualidades e o eterno propósito dele.

Os que se desviam da Fonte. Quem se volta para a transgressão começa a desconsiderar a Deus como fator a tomar em consideração na hora de fazer decisões e planos. (Jó 34:27) Alguém assim permite que seu coração o cegue para com o erro dos seus caminhos e ele perde a perspicácia. (Sal 36:1-4) Mesmo afirmando que adora a Deus, ele coloca os preceitos dos homens acima dos de Deus; prefere-os. (Is 29:13, 14) Racionaliza e desculpa sua conduta desenfreada como mero "divertimento" (Pr 10:23), e torna-se pervertido, brutal, estúpido no seu raciocínio, a ponto de presumir que o Deus invisível não enxerga ou discerne a transgressão dele, como se os poderes de percepção de Deus tivessem falhado. (Sal 94:4-10; Is 29:15, 16; Je 10:21) Ele diz, na realidade, pelo seu proceder e pelas suas ações: "Não há Jeová" (Sal 14:1-3) e 'não o leva em conta'. Não se guiando por princípios divinos, ele não consegue julgar as coisas corretamente, não enxerga as questões de modo claro, não avalia os fatores envolvidos e não chega a decisões certas. — Sal 28:5.

Campos de Entendimento Humano. O entendimento, ou a compreensão, pode relacionar-se com conhecimento e habilidade em atividades mecânicas, tais como a construção e a projeção de edifícios ou a fabricação de objetos de madeira, metal, pedra e tecidos. O trabalhador tírio Hirão era "homem hábil, experiente em compreensão [ou entendimento]" como artífice que trabalhava com uma ampla gama de materiais. (2Cr 2:13, 14; 1Rs 7:13, 14) Tal entendimento contribui para um trabalho eficaz, resultando em produtos de qualidade duradoura.

Outros talvez sejam "peritos [forma de bin]" em questões de transportes ou música, por causa do seu entendimento. (1Cr 15:22; 25:7, 8; 2Cr 34:12) Alguns talvez demonstrem ter entendimento em linguística, em redação ou em outros assuntos eruditos. (Da 1:4, 17, 20) Tal entendimento pode ser obtido por habilidades naturais e esforços. Naturalmente, o espírito de Deus pode aumentar ou incrementar tal entendimento nas pessoas e habilitá-las a ensinar a outros suas artes e profissões. — Êx 31:2-5; 35:30-35; 36:1; 1Cr 28:19.

Alguns talvez tenham vivo discernimento da natureza humana, sendo observantes e capazes de chegar a uma conclusão. Davi, notando a maneira em que seus servos sussurravam, 'compreendeu' que o filho que teve com Bate-Seba tinha morrido. (2Sa 12:19) Roboão guiou-se pelo seu entendimento da decaída natureza humana e da tendência dela para a inveja e o ciúme, quando distribuiu heranças aos seus filhos. — 2Cr 11:21-23.

De modo similar, homens ou comunidades de homens podem mostrar considerável discernimento em operações comerciais, um fator no seu enriquecimento bem-sucedido, como fez o "líder" de Tiro. (Ez 28:2, 4) Governantes talvez tenham entendimento de guerra e estratégia militar (Is 10:12, 13) ou sejam peritos em diplomacia política. (Da 8:23) Todavia, seu entendimento talvez seja limitado e de pouco proveito, como se deu nos casos acima mencionados.

Portanto, pode-se ver que as Escrituras se referem ao entendimento conseguido por meios naturais. Todavia, toda essa "compreensão" (sý·ne·sis) dos "intelectuais" (sy·ne·toí) do mundo torna-se tolice, fútil, quando os propósitos de Deus não são tomados em consideração. (1Co 1:19, 20, Int) Portanto, as Escrituras exortam primariamente a se obter entendimento superior, o espiritual, que se baseia em Deus. Não importa quanto os homens explorem os recursos da Terra, as profundezas dela e as profundidades dos mares, ou estudem os céus, eles nunca, pelos seus próprios esforços, podem achar "o lugar da compreensão [ou entendimento]" e da sabedoria, que leva a uma vida bem-sucedida em justiça e felicidade. (Jó 28:1-21, 28) Tal entendimento é 'melhor do que a prata' e pode resultar no futuro desejado que as passageiras riquezas e honrarias do mundo não podem proporcionar. — Pr 16:16, 22; 23:4, 5; Sal 49:6-8, 14, 20.

Relação com Conhecimento e Sabedoria. O entendimento tem de basear-se em conhecimento, e coopera com o conhecimento, embora ele mesmo seja mais do que mero conhecimento. O alcance e o valor do entendimento que se tem são substancialmente afetados pela quantidade e qualidade do conhecimento que se possui. O conhecimento é saber de fatos, e os maiores e mais fundamentais fatos relacionam-se com Deus, sua existência, seu propósito invencível e seu modo de agir. O entendimento habilita a pessoa a relacionar o conhecimento que adquire com o propósito e as normas de Deus, e assim pode apreciar ou avaliar este conhecimento. O "coração entendido é o que procura conhecimento"; não se satisfaz com meros conceitos superficiais, mas procura compreender o quadro inteiro. (Pr 15:14) O conhecimento precisa tornar-se 'agradável à própria alma da pessoa', se o discernimento há de resguardá-la da deturpação e do engano. — Pr 2:10, 11; 18:15; veja CONHECIMENTO.

Provérbios 1:1-6 mostra que "homem de entendimento é aquele que adquire orientação perita para entender um provérbio e uma expressão enigmática, as palavras de sábios e seus enigmas". Estes não devem ser apenas coisas ditas para passar o tempo em conversa ociosa, porque os sábios não costumam desperdiçar tempo desta maneira, mas devem referir-se a instruções, perguntas e problemas que disciplinam e treinam a mente e o coração segundo princípios corretos, preparando assim o aprendiz para ações sábias no futuro. (Veja Sal 49:3, 4.) O conhecimento e o entendimento conjugados produzem sabedoria, a qual é "a coisa principal", a capacidade de aplicar um fundo de conhecimento e vivo entendimento a problemas com resultado bem-sucedido. (Pr 4:7) A pessoa corretamente motivada procura obter entendimento, não por mera curiosidade ou para se exaltar, mas com o próprio fim de agir com sabedoria; 'a sabedoria está diante da sua face'. (Pr 17:24; veja SABEDORIA.) Não é como aqueles nos dias do apóstolo Paulo, que presumiam ser instrutores de outros, mas estavam 'enfunados de orgulho, não entendendo nada', imprudentemente desenvolvendo a "mania de criar questões e debates sobre palavras", coisas que produzem desunião e uma série de maus resultados. — 1Ti 6:3-5.

Obter Verdadeiro Entendimento. Quem procura verdadeiro entendimento ora a Deus: "Faze-me entender, para que eu observe a tua lei e para que eu a guarde de todo o coração . . . para que eu continue vivendo." (Sal 119:34, 144, também 27, 73, 125, 169) Esta é a motivação correta. O apóstolo orou para que os cristãos colossenses ficassem "cheios do conhecimento exato da . . . vontade [de Deus], em toda a sabedoria e compreensão [sy·né·sei] espiritual, para [andarem] dignamente de Jeová". — Col 1:9, 10.

A idade e a experiência são fatores naturais que podem ajudar a pessoa a desenvolver maior entendimento. (Jó 12:12) Mas, a idade e a experiência sozinhas não são os fatores decisivos. Os consoladores de Jó orgulhavam-se do entendimento que eles e seus associados idosos tinham, mas foram repreendidos pelo homem mais jovem, Eliú. (Jó 15:7-10; 32:6-12) Jeová, o "Antigo de Dias" (Da 7:13), tem entendimento infinitamente superior ao de toda a humanidade, cujos dias abrangem apenas uns poucos milênios e que nem mesmo entende como o planeta em que vive foi formado. (Jó 38:4-13, 21) Portanto, a Palavra escrita de Deus é o meio principal para se obter entendimento. — Sal 119:130.

Crianças e jovens devem ponderadamente considerar a instrução dos seus pais, mais velhos e mais experientes, especialmente quando estes são servos devotados de Deus. (Pr 2:1-5; 3:1-3; 4:1; 5:1) A séria 'consideração' (hebr.: bin) da história de gerações anteriores pode dar entendimento, e pessoas mais idosas frequentemente estão familiarizadas com ela. (De 32:7) Deve procurar-se a associação, não com os "inexperientes", mas com os sábios, nutrindo-se dos conselhos e das instruções deles, a fim de 'continuar vivendo e andar direito no caminho do entendimento'. (Pr 9:5, 6) Por escutar e também observar, pode-se deixar de ser ingênuo e crédulo, pode-se 'compreender a argúcia' e podem-se evitar muitas experiências amargas. — Pr 8:4, 5.

A diligência em estudar e aplicar a Palavra e as ordens de Deus pode habilitar a pessoa a ter maior perspicácia do que os que atuam como seus instrutores, e mais entendimento do que homens mais idosos. (Sal 119:99, 100, 130; compare isso com Lu 2:46, 47.) Isto se dá porque a sabedoria e o entendimento, na realidade, são inerentes aos regulamentos puros e aos decretos judiciais de Deus; por isso, a observância fiel deles por Israel fazia com que as nações circunvizinhas o encarassem como "povo sábio e entendido". (De 4:5-8; Sal 111:7, 8, 10; compare isso com 1Rs 2:3.) O entendido reconhece a inviolabilidade da Palavra de Deus, quer encarar o seu próprio proceder em relação a ela e pede a ajuda de Deus neste respeito. (Sal 119:169) Permite que a mensagem de Deus cale fundo nele (Mt 13:19-23), escreve-a na tábua do seu coração (Pr 3:3-6; 7:1-4) e chega a desenvolver ódio a "toda vereda falsa" (Sal 119:104). O Filho de Deus, quando na Terra, mostrou entendimento assim, até mesmo recusando tentar escapar da morte na estaca porque o cumprimento das Escrituras requeria que ele morresse desta maneira. — Mt 26:51-54.

Tempo e meditação são essenciais. O 'apressado demais' usualmente deixa de 'considerar [ou dar atenção refletida a; forma da hebr. bin] o conhecimento'. (Is 32:4; compare isso com Pr 29:20.) O entendido caracteristicamente sabe quando ficar calado (Pr 11:12), não fala precipitadamente, mantém o espírito frio, mesmo que a discussão fique acalorada. (Pr 14:29; 17:27, 28; 19:11; Jó 32:11, 18; compare isso com Tg 3:13-18.) Medita no conselho para poder determinar a significância das palavras e das mensagens. (Jó 23:5; Sal 49:3) Faz perguntas destinadas a discernir as razões e os motivos, a fim de poder determinar a causa do êxito ou do fracasso, da bênção ou da maldição divinas; pondera as consequências lógicas, futuras, a que cada proceder levará. (Sal 73:2, 3, 16-18; Je 2:10-19; compare isso com Is 44:14-20.) Israel deixou de fazer isso e não deu consideração no coração a qual seria "seu fim posterior". — De 32:28-30.

Aceitar disciplina. O orgulho, a obstinação, a teimosia e a independência são inimigos do entendimento. (Je 4:22; Os 4:14, 16) Quem tem verdadeiro entendimento não pensa que sabe tudo; por isso, Provérbios 19:25 diz: "Deve-se repreender ao entendido, para que discirna o conhecimento." (Veja Jó 6:24, 25; Sal 19:12, 13.) Por ele ser entendido, está pronto para escutar, discerne a base da repreensão e tira dela maior proveito do que o estúpido tiraria de cem golpes. — Pr 17:10; veja 29:19.

Entender Profecias. Mensagens proféticas inspiradas são entendidas apenas por aqueles purificados que humildemente oram por entendimento. (Da 9:22, 23; 10:12; 12:10) Embora talvez se compreenda o período geral do seu cumprimento, o pleno discernimento da aplicação duma profecia talvez tenha de esperar o tempo devido de Deus para sua realização. (Da 8:17; 10:14; 12:8-10; compare isso com Mr 9:31, 32; Lu 24:44-48.) Aqueles que depositam sua confiança em homens e que desprezam o poder de Deus, e que desconsideram Seu propósito como fator que merece ser considerado, não podem entender as profecias, e continuam cegos para com a significância delas, até que os efeitos desastrosos do cumprimento delas passam a atingi-los. — Sal 50:21, 22; Is 28:19; 46:10-12.

ENTERRO, LUGARES DE SEPULTAMENTO.

O sepultamento do corpo de uma pessoa falecida era um ato de considerável importância para as pessoas no período bíblico. Assim, Abraão, primeiro a ser diretamente mencionado no registro como realizando um sepultamento, estava disposto a gastar uma boa soma de dinheiro para conseguir um lugar adequado para sepultamentos. (Veja COMPRA.) Os hititas (os filhos de Hete), dos quais fez a compra, tinham as suas próprias sepulturas 'seletas'. (Gên 23:3-20) A caverna obtida por Abraão tornou-se sepultura de família, onde foi colocado o corpo da sua esposa, e, mais adiante, o seu próprio, e os de Isaque, Rebeca, Leia e Jacó. (Gên 25:9; 49:29-32) Jacó estava seriamente preocupado de que seu corpo não fosse enterrado no Egito, mas, antes, junto aos seus antepassados. (Gên 47:29-31) Isto exigiu o embalsamamento do seu corpo, que de outro modo se teria decomposto durante a quente viagem do Egito até a caverna de Macpela. (Gên 50:1-3, 13) José expressou um desejo similar, e seu corpo foi igualmente embalsamado e colocado num ataúde, à espera do tempo do Êxodo para ser transferido. (Gên 50:24-26; Jos 24:32) Este desejo, sem dúvida, relacionava-se com eles partilharem a mesma fé nas promessas de Deus e era uma expressão de sua convicção quanto ao cumprimento delas no devido tempo. — He 11:13-22, 39.

Seguindo o modelo de Abraão, sepulturas familiares parecem ter sido preferidas. (2Sa 19:34-37) Gideão, Sansão e Asael são todos mencionados como tendo sido enterrados 'na sepultura de seu pai'. (Jz 8:32; 16:31; 2Sa 2:32) Todavia, a frequente expressão 'deitar-se, ou ser enterrado, com os antepassados' não necessariamente subentende compartilhar a mesma sepultura, porque esta frase é usada a respeito de homens que claramente não foram enterrados no mesmo lugar que seus antepassados. (Gên 15:15; De 31:16; 32:50; 1Rs 2:10; At 13:36) Portanto, deve referir-se a sua entrada comum no Seol (Hades), a sepultura comum da humanidade. Tal sepultura comum é chamada de "casa de reunião para todo o vivente". — Jó 30:23.

O ato de enterrar o cadáver de outro era encarado como expressão de benevolência, e os homens de Jabes-Gileade arriscaram a vida para realizar tal enterro para Saul e seus filhos. (1Sa 31:11-13; 2Sa 2:4-6) Ser privado dum enterro era considerado calamitoso (Je 14:16) e é declarado ser um meio divino de expressar o repúdio de Deus por pessoas, por causa do proceder errado delas. (Je 8:1, 2; 9:22; 25:32, 33; Is 14:19, 20; compare isso com Re 11:7-9.) O cadáver ficava assim exposto para ser consumido por animais e aves necrófagas. (Sal 79:1-3; Je 16:4) O quadro patético, de Rispa negar-se a abandonar os cadáveres dos seus filhos, talvez por meses, até que finalmente se lhes concedeu um enterro, retrata vividamente a importância que se dava a este assunto. — 2Sa 21:9-14.

A lei de Jeová, dada por meio de Moisés, até mesmo provia o enterro de criminosos. (De 21:23; compare isso com Jos 8:29.) Aitofel, embora fosse suicida, recebeu um enterro. (2Sa 17:23) Ao mes-mo tempo em que Salomão ordenou a execução de Joabe, ele deu também instruções sobre o seu enterro. (1Rs 2:31) Jeú pretendia dar à iníqua Jezabel um enterro, em consideração de ela ser "filha de rei", mas isso foi denegado pelo cumprimento da profecia de Jeová, de que ela havia de "tornar-se estrume sobre a face do campo". — 2Rs 9:10, 34-37; veja 2Cr 22:8, 9.

Com exceção dos casos de Jacó e de José, o enterro evidentemente era realizado pelos israelitas no mesmo dia do falecimento. Era necessário fazer o enterro logo por causa da rápida decomposição no clima usualmente quente das terras bíblicas. O mentiroso Ananias foi enterrado em cerca de três horas após a sua morte. (At 5:5-10) Adicionalmente, sob a Lei mosaica, o cadáver era encarado como tornando impuros por sete dias aqueles que o tocassem. Embora ser a morte o resultado do pecado e da imperfeição, sem dúvida, fosse a base subjacente desta decisão judicial, isso impedia também a propagação de doenças e beneficiava em sentido higiênico os que observavam esta lei. Aqueles que deixassem de observar o procedimento de purificação prescrito na Lei estavam sujeitos à pena de morte. (Núm 19:11-20; veja De 21:22, 23.) Josias usou os ossos dos idólatras para tornar os altares religiosos deles impróprios para adoração, e ele dessacrou também suas sepulturas. — 2Rs 23:14-16; 2Cr 34:4, 5.

Em vista da atitude bíblica para com cadáveres, é evidente que a veneração dos corpos de servos destacados de Deus não era praticada, nem aprovada. O corpo de Moisés foi enterrado pelo próprio Deus num lugar desconhecido, e isto também impossibilitou quaisquer peregrinações futuras à sua sepultura. — De 34:5, 6; veja Ju 9.

Os lugares escolhidos para fins de sepultamento variavam. O enterro no solo, método comum no Ocidente, embora certamente tenha sido praticado, não era preferido no Oriente Médio. A ama de Rebeca, Débora, e também, pelo menos inicialmente, o Rei Saul e seus filhos, foram enterrados debaixo de árvores grandes. (Gên 35:8; 1Cr 10:12) Mas, cavernas naturais, ou as artificiais escavadas na mole rocha calcária, tão comum na Palestina, parecem ter sido preferidas, como no caso de Abraão. A sepultura frequentemente era preparada pela própria pessoa com bastante antecedência. (Gên 50:5; Is 22:16; 2Cr 16:14) O lugar talvez fosse perto da casa da pessoa, possivelmente num jardim (1Sa 25:1; 1Rs 2:34; 2Rs 21:25, 26); a expressão "na sua casa" não significa dentro do prédio, conforme mostra a comparação de 2 Crônicas 33:20 com 2 Reis 21:18.

Investigações arqueológicas dão uma ideia do tipo de sepultura usado nos tempos antigos. Além de simples sepultura na terra, na Palestina, esta podia ser uma gruta ou câmara escavada na rocha, não raro em encostas de morros. Lugares elevados parecem ter sido preferidos. (Jos 24:33; 2Rs 23:16; 2Cr 32:33; Is 22:16) A câmara talvez servisse para um único sepultamento, deitando-se o cadáver num lugar escavado no chão. Ou talvez fosse preparada para sepultamentos múltiplos, com nichos compridos, de tamanho suficiente para cada um conter um cadáver, cortados nas laterais da câmara em ângulo reto em relação às paredes. A abertura estreita pela qual o cadáver era inserido era então fechada com uma pedra cortada para se encaixar nela. Em outros casos, cortava-se um nicho, ou prateleira, nas paredes dos fundos e nas laterais (Mr 16:5), ou talvez houvesse uma fileira dupla de tais prateleiras, aumentando assim a capacidade da sepultura. O túmulo talvez até mesmo consistisse em mais de uma câmara, embora a câmara singular parece ter sido o tipo comum usado pelos judeus. Quando o cadáver jazia exposto numa prateleira, naturalmente, era necessário selar a entrada para impedir depredações por animais selvagens. Assim, a entrada principal da câmara era fechada com uma grande pedra, às vezes como porta engonçada, e ocasionalmente com uma circular num trilho e rolada para fechar a entrada. Tais pedras circulares talvez pesassem até uma tonelada ou mais. — Mt 27:60; Mr 16:3, 4.

As primitivas sepulturas judaicas destacavam-se pela simplicidade. Contrastavam-se assim muito com os túmulos pagãos, os quais frequentemente tinham pinturas e outras ornamentações nas paredes. Embora Jacó erigisse uma coluna sobre o sepulcro de Raquel, talvez uma única pedra (Gên 35:20), esta parece ter servido como simples marco, não como monumento. (1Sa 10:2) Em 2 Reis 23:17 também se menciona uma "pedra tumular" como assinalando o ponto em que se encontrava uma sepultura. Jesus mencionou túmulos "que não estão em evidência, de modo que os homens andam sobre eles e não o sabem". (Lu 11:44) Visto que os mortos eram associados com aviltamento cerimonial, os sepulcros do povo judeu frequentemente eram caiados, alertando-se assim os transeuntes à sua existência. (Mt 23:27) Diz-se que se fazia esta caiação anualmente, antes da Páscoa. — A Míxena, Shekalim 1:1.

Após a morte duma pessoa, o corpo costumava ser banhado (At 9:37) e ungido com óleos e unguentos aromáticos, o que, se for considerado um tipo de embalsamamento, não era aquele feito pelos antigos egípcios. (Veja Mr 14:3-8; Jo 12:3, 7.) O corpo era então enrolado em um pano, em geral de linho. (Mt 27:59; Jo 11:44) Especiarias tais como mirra e aloés costumavam ser incluídas em tal enfaixamento (Jo 19:39, 40), ou o corpo talvez fosse deitado em óleo e unguento, como se fez com o corpo do Rei Asa. (2Cr 16:14) A grande "queima fúnebre" mencionada neste último caso evidentemente era a queima de tais especiarias, que produziam assim um incenso aromático. A cabeça talvez fosse coberta por um pano separado. — Jo 20:7.

As mulheres que foram ao túmulo de Jesus no terceiro dia, a fim de untar o corpo dele com especiarias, talvez fizessem isso por causa das circunstâncias apressadas em que Jesus foi sepultado, e, assim, com o fim de fazer um serviço mais completo como meio de preservar o corpo por mais tempo. — Mr 16:1; Lu 23:55, 56.

O cadáver provavelmente era levado à sepultura num esquife, ou liteira funerária, talvez feita de trançado de vime, e podia haver uma procissão de muitas pessoas acompanhando-o, inclusive, talvez, músicos tocando uma melodia lamentosa. (Lu 7:12-14; Mt 9:23) No meio do choro, possivelmente se faziam algumas expressões a respeito do falecido no local da sepultura. — 2Sa 3:31-34; 2Cr 35:23-25.

No decorrer do tempo, com o aumento do número de mortos, passaram a existir cemitérios. Estes costumavam encontrar-se fora dos muros da cidade. Mas, reis de Judá foram sepultados na "Cidade de Davi", e os de Israel foram sepultados na capital do reino setentrional. (1Sa 25:1; 1Rs 22:37; 2Cr 9:31; 24:15, 16) No livro Digging Up Biblical History (Escavando a História Bíblica; 1931, Vol. II, p. 186), J. G. Duncan escreve: "Por via de regra, os hebreus, embora às vezes fizessem enterros dentro dos muros da cidade, escavavam seus túmulos em rocha numa encosta de morro perto da sua cidade. A presença de túmulos rochosos em encostas de morros é frequentemente um indício seguro de que no morro defronte delas ou perto havia uma povoação, e, por outro lado, a ausência de qualquer indício de sepulturas perto dum lugar é prova segura de que este lugar não fora ocupado." Os penhascos que cercam Jerusalém estão cheios de sepulturas. (Veja Is 22:16.) Acredita-se que a menção do "cemitério dos filhos do povo" (as "sepulturas da plebe", ALA), no vale do Cédron, se refira a um cemitério da classe mais pobre. (Je 26:23; 2Rs 23:6) Faz-se também menção do "campo do oleiro" para o sepultamento de estranhos. — Mt 27:7; veja ACÉLDAMA.

A cremação, amplamente praticada pelos posteriores babilônios, gregos e romanos, era rara entre os judeus. Os cadáveres de Saul e de seus filhos foram queimados; os ossos, porém, foram enterrados. — 1Sa 31:8-13; note também Am 6:9, 10.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, as palavras qé·ver ("sepultura"; Gên 23:4) e qevu·ráh ("sepulcro"; Gên 35:20) têm sentido diferente da palavra hebraica she'óhl, a qual se refere, não a uma sepultura individual ou a diversas delas, mas à sepultura comum da humanidade, o domínio geral da sepultura. Do mesmo modo, nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra grega tá·fos ("sepulcro"; Mt 27:61) e as palavras mné·ma ("túmulo"; Mr 15:46) e mne·mei·on ("túmulo memorial"; Lu 23:55) são diferentes da palavra hai·des, a equivalente grega de she'óhl. — Veja HADES; SEOL; SEPULTURA, SEPULCRO; TÚMULO MEMORIAL.

Sepulturas dos Reis ou de Davi. Em Pentecostes, Pedro declarou: "Davi . . . tanto faleceu como foi enterrado, e o seu túmulo está entre nós até o dia de hoje." (At 2:29) Isto indica que a sepultura do Rei Davi ainda existia no ano 33 EC.

Primeiro Reis 2:10 diz que Davi foi enterrado "na Cidade de Davi", e, pelo visto, este tornou-se o lugar costumeiro de sepultamento de reis posteriores de Judá. Doze dos 20 reis que se seguiram a Davi são mencionados diretamente como sepultados na Cidade de Davi, embora nem todos fossem colocados "nas sepulturas dos reis" — Jeorão, Joás (Jeoás) e Acaz sendo mencionados especificamente como não enterrados ali. (2Cr 21:16, 20; 24:24, 25; 28:27) Em vez de tratar-se de um só túmulo comum, com muitas câmaras, as "sepulturas dos reis" talvez fosse uma área específica dentro da Cidade de Davi, onde se encontravam os túmulos memoriais dos reis. O Rei Asa foi sepultado na "grandiosa sepultura que escavara para si na Cidade de Davi" (2Cr 16:14), e de Ezequias se diz que foi enterrado "na subida às sepulturas dos filhos de Davi". (2Cr 32:33) O leproso Rei Uzias foi enterrado "com os seus antepassados, mas no campo de inumação pertencente aos reis, porque disseram: 'Ele é leproso.'" Isto parece indicar o sepultamento do seu infeccionado corpo no solo, em vez de num túmulo escavado na rocha. — 2Cr 26:23.

Dentre os outros reis de Judá, Manassés e Amom evidentemente foram sepultados em lugar diferente, "no jardim de Uza". (2Rs 21:18, 23, 26) A declaração de que o filho de Amom, o fiel Rei Josias, foi enterrado "no cemitério de seus antepassados", talvez se refira aos túmulos reais na Cidade de Davi, ou às sepulturas de Manassés e de Amom. (2Cr 35:23, 24) Três reis morreram em exílio: Jeoacaz (no Egito), Joaquim e Zedequias (em Babilônia). (2Rs 23:34; 25:7, 27-30) Jeoiaquim recebeu 'o enterro dum jumento', "lançado fora ao calor do dia e à geada da noite", em cumprimento da profecia de Jeremias. — Je 22:18, 19; 36:30.

O justo sumo sacerdote Jeoiada recebeu a honra de um enterro "na Cidade de Davi, junto aos reis", sendo a única pessoa mencionada que não era da linhagem real que recebeu tal distinção. — 2Cr 24:15, 16.

Não se pôde determinar onde se encontravam essas sepulturas reais. À base da referência às "Sepulturas de Davi", em Neemias 3:16, e da menção da "subida às sepulturas dos filhos de Davi", em 2 Crônicas 32:33, alguns acham provável a localização no morro SE da cidade, perto do vale do Cédron. Encontraram-se ali o que parece ser diversos antigos túmulos escavados na rocha, com as entradas em forma de poço retangular. Todavia, não se pode fazer uma identificação positiva; todo esforço de identificação foi complicado não só pela destruição da cidade no ano 70 EC, e novamente em 135 EC, mas também pelo uso da parte meridional da cidade pelos romanos como pedreira. Portanto, os acima mencionados túmulos encontram-se numa condição muito deteriorada.

O mausoléu da Rainha Helena de Adiabene, situado na parte N da cidade moderna de Jerusalém, adquiriu o nome enganoso de "Túmulos dos Reis". Na realidade, foi construído no primeiro século EC e não deve ser confundido com as sepulturas reais mencionadas no relato bíblico.

"Os Cadáveres de Seus Reis." Em Ezequiel 43:7-9, Jeová condenou a casa de Israel e seus reis por profanarem Seu santo nome "com a sua fornicação e com os cadáveres de seus reis na sua morte", e disse: "Agora, removam para longe de mim a sua fornicação e os cadáveres de seus reis, e eu certamente residirei no seu meio por tempo indefinido." Alguns comentadores tomaram isso como indício de que os judeus eram culpados de terem feito as sepulturas de certos reis perto da área do templo. No versículo 7, cerca de 20 manuscritos e edições hebraicos, bem como os targuns, contêm a frase "na sua morte", ao passo que o texto massorético reza, em vez disso, "nos seus altos", e a Septuaginta grega diz "no meio deles".

Mesmo que a frase "na sua morte" seja a correta aqui, não parece constituir base sólida para se crer que quaisquer dos reis de Judá tenham sido sepultados perto do recinto do templo. Visto que o cadáver da pessoa era considerado impuro, segundo a Lei, sepultar alguém perto do templo teria sido uma franca afronta para Deus, e uma violação tão óbvia e crassa da santidade do templo não é nem mesmo insinuada nas histórias dos reis. É mui pouco provável que os reis que não receberam enterro "nas sepulturas dos reis" ou "dos filhos de Davi" recebessem um lugar mais enaltecido de sepultamento, tal como perto do templo, mas, antes, receberiam um lugar menos destacado e menos honroso.

A consideração mais detida de Ezequiel 43:7-9 indica que o assunto envolve a idolatria e que, assim como a "fornicação" primariamente é figurativa, assim também "os cadáveres de seus reis" representam os ídolos sem vida que a casa de Israel e seus governantes haviam adorado. Assim, em Levítico 26:30, Jeová advertiu os israelitas que a sua desobediência faria com que ele 'aniquilasse os seus altos sagrados e decepasse os seus pedestais-incensários, e deitasse os seus próprios cadáveres sobre os cadáveres dos seus ídolos sórdidos'. (Veja Je 16:18; Ez 6:4-6.) O registro mostra que esses ídolos foram introduzidos na área do templo. (Ez 8:5-17) Pode-se também notar que alguns desses deuses-ídolos eram chamados reis, estando a palavra "rei" englobada nos nomes Moloque (1Rs 11:7), Milcom (1Rs 11:5) e Malcão (Je 49:1). A respeito dos deuses-ídolos do reino setentrional, o profeta Amós (5:26) escreveu: "E certamente carregareis Sacute, vosso rei, e Caivã, vossas imagens, a estrela de vosso deus, que fizestes para vós mesmos." Portanto, o peso da evidência parece ser maior para se encarar o texto como condenação da idolatria, em vez de uma dessacração do solo dedicado pelo enterro impróprio de governantes literais.

ENXADA. Veja IMPLEMENTOS AGRÍCOLAS.

ENXERTO. O processo de juntar o enxerto (rebento, renovo) duma árvore de que se sabe que produz bons frutos com o porta-enxerto (tronco, haste) de outra árvore que dá frutos inferiores, com o fim de produzir uma união permanente. Frequentemente se faz a enxertia para conseguir uma combinação das características vantajosas de ambos, o enxerto (seus bons frutos) e o porta-enxerto (seu vigor e sua força). Depois de se firmarem os enxertos, embora obtenham sua nutrição de um tronco diferente, eles produzirão a mesma espécie de frutos que a árvore de que foram tirados.

O apóstolo Paulo, escrevendo aos cristãos em Roma, comparou os cristãos não judeus a ramos duma oliveira brava, que foram enxertados numa oliveira cultivada, para substituir os ramos naturais que haviam sido arrancados. Esse procedimento de enxerto foi descrito por Paulo como "contrário à natureza". Os ramos naturais correspondiam aos judeus que, por sua falta de fé, perderam a oportunidade de estar entre os candidatos ao Reino celestial do Messias. O enxerto de ramos de oliveira brava, ou de cristãos não judeus, na oliveira cultivada, para substituir "ramos naturais", não era motivo de esses gentios terem ideias soberbas, porque poderiam manter a sua posição apenas por meio da fé. Também, o enxerto de ramos da oliveira brava na oliveira cultivada ilustra a união permanente realizada entre judeus e gentios como comembros do "Israel de Deus". — Ro 11:17-24; Gál 3:28; 6:16; compare isso com Jo 15:1-6; veja OLIVEIRA.

ENXOFRE. Elemento não metálico, amarelo, que existe livre ou em combinação com outros elementos em compostos de sulfetos e sulfatos. Seu ponto de fusão é incomumente baixo, 113°C. Queima prontamente com uma pálida chama azul, ao mesmo tempo formando dióxido de enxofre, que tem um odor pungente.

A primeira referência histórica ao enxofre fala da destruição que choveu sobre as iníquas cidades de Sodoma e Gomorra na forma de fogo e enxofre. (Gên 19:24; Lu 17:29) Alguns sugerem, à base de evidência geológica, que esta execução catastrófica, por parte de Jeová, possivelmente foi na forma de erupção vulcânica na região meridional do Mar Morto, o que explica a prevalência de enxofre naquela área hoje em dia.

Crê-se que um incinerador ou crematório de alta temperatura para a antiga cidade de Jerusalém foi desenvolvido pelo acréscimo de enxofre aos fogos constantemente acesos no vale de Hinom (Geena), logo fora da muralha.

Desde o julgamento ardente de Sodoma e Gomorra, em 1919 AEC, as Escrituras referem-se à natureza altamente inflamável do enxofre. (Is 30:33; 34:9; Re 9:17, 18) É símbolo de desolação total. (De 29:22, 23; Jó 18:15) "Fogo e enxofre" são associados quando se representa uma destruição total. (Sal 11:6; Ez 38:22; Re 14:9-11) Somos informados de que o Diabo será "lançado no lago de fogo e enxofre", uma descrição apropriada de aniquilamento total, "a segunda morte". — Re 19:20; 20:10; 21:8.

EPAFRAS [contração de Epafrodito]. Fiel ministro de Cristo, que, pela pregação das boas novas, familiarizou os colossenses com a benignidade imerecida de Deus e assim, bem provavelmente, serviu de instrumento para estabelecer a congregação em Colossos. Por ocasião do primeiro encarceramento de Paulo, Epafras veio a Roma, trazendo consigo um relatório animador sobre o amor e a firmeza da congregação colossense. (Col 1:4-8) Evidentemente, ele permaneceu em Roma, pelo menos por algum tempo, visto que Paulo, escrevendo sua carta aos colossenses, inclui as saudações de Epafras e assegura-lhes que este escravo de Jesus Cristo sempre se esforça "a favor de vós nas suas orações, para que por fim estejais de pé, completos e com firme convicção, em toda a vontade de Deus". Conforme Paulo atesta, este amado coescravo também fazia grande esforço a favor dos irmãos em Laodiceia e Hierápolis. (Col 4:12, 13) Daí, também, ao escrever a Filêmon, Paulo transmite as saudações de Epafras e se refere a ele como "companheiro meu de cativeiro em união com Cristo". (Flm 23) Epafras não deve ser confundido com Epafrodito, de Filipos.

EPAFRODITO [duma raiz que significa "espumar"]. Membro fidedigno da congregação de Filipos, na Macedônia, que (c. 59-61 EC), junto com um presente, foi enviado a Paulo, então preso em Roma. (Fil 2:25; 4:18) Enquanto em Roma, Epafrodito "adoeceu quase a ponto de morrer; mas Deus teve misericórdia dele". A notícia da doença dele chegara aos filipenses, e estes fizeram talvez ansiosamente indagações. Visto que Epafrodito ansiava ver os filipenses e ficou aflito ao saber que eles souberam da sua doença, Paulo achou aconselhável mandar Epafrodito depressa de volta, assim que se restabeleceu, e confiou-lhe a sua carta à congregação filipense. Paulo incentivou os irmãos a dar a Epafrodito "a acolhida costumeira no Senhor" e a ter "em estima a homens desta sorte". Fora por causa da obra do Senhor que Epafrodito se expusera ao perigo, chegando quase a morrer. (Fil 2:25-30) Epafrodito não deve ser confundido com Epafras, de Colossos.

EPÊNETO [Louvado; Elogiado]. Cristão da congregação de Roma, a quem Paulo menciona por nome e a quem envia saudações pessoais. (Ro 16:5) Epêneto é chamado de "uma das primícias da Ásia". É possível que ele fora contatado pessoalmente por Paulo, visto que a família de Estéfanas é similarmente mencionada como "as primícias da Acaia", e Paulo batizara esta família. — 1Co 1:16; 16:15.

EPICUREUS. Os seguidores do filósofo grego Epicuro (341-270 AEC).

A filosofia originada por Epicuro floresceu por sete séculos. Girava em torno da ideia de que o prazer da pessoa era o único ou principal bem na vida. Portanto, Epicuro advogava viver de modo a derivar o máximo prazer possível durante a vida, mas fazendo-o com moderação, a fim de evitar o sofrimento resultante de excessos em tal prazer. Dava-se mais destaque aos prazeres da mente do que aos prazeres físicos. Portanto, segundo Epicuro, mais importante é com quem se come do que o que se come. Prazeres desnecessários, e em especial os artificialmente produzidos, deviam ser suprimidos. Visto que a erudição, a cultura e a civilização, bem como os envolvimentos sociais e políticos, podiam criar desejos difíceis de satisfazer, resultando assim na perturbação da paz mental da pessoa, eram desestimulados. Procurava-se o conhecimento apenas para se livrar de temores e superstições religiosos, os dois temores primários a serem eliminados sendo o temor dos deuses e da morte. Encarando o casamento e o que acarreta como ameaça à paz mental, Epicuro levou uma vida celibatária, mas não impôs esta restrição aos seus seguidores.

A filosofia caracterizava-se pela completa ausência de princípios. Desaconselhava-se a violação da lei simplesmente por causa da vergonha associada com a detecção e a punição talvez resultante. Viver com medo de ser descoberto ou punido diminuiria o prazer, e isto tornava desaconselhável até mesmo transgressões secretas. Para os epicureus, a virtude, por si só, não tinha valor e só era benéfica quando servia de meio para obter felicidade. Recomendava-se a reciprocidade, não por ser direita e nobre, mas porque compensava. As amizades tinham a mesma base egoísta, quer dizer, resultar em prazer para quem as tivesse. Embora o empenho pelo prazer constituísse o ponto focal desta filosofia, paradoxalmente, Epicuro referia-se à vida como “dom amargo”.

Os epicureus acreditavam na existência de deuses, mas que estes, como tudo o mais, eram compostos de átomos, embora de contextura mais fina. Pensava-se que os deuses estavam longe demais da terra para ter qualquer interesse no que o homem fazia; portanto de nada adiantava orar ou oferecer sacrifícios a eles. Os deuses, segundo acreditavam, não criaram o universo, nem infligiam punição ou concediam bênçãos a alguém, mas eram supremamente felizes, e este era o alvo que se devia tentar atingir durante a vida. No entanto, os epicureus afirmavam que os deuses não estavam em condições de ajudar alguém neste respeito, que a vida veio à existência por acaso num universo mecânico, e que a morte acaba com tudo, libertando a pessoa do pesadelo da vida. Embora se cresse que o homem tinha uma alma, pensava-se que a alma se compunha de átomos que se dissolviam por ocasião da morte do corpo, assim como água se derrama dum jarro que se quebra.

À luz do precedente, pode-se reconhecer por que havia filósofos epicureus entre aqueles que passaram a conversar polemicamente com Paulo, na praça do mercado em Atenas, e que disseram: “O que é que este paroleiro quer contar?” “Ele parece ser publicador de deidades estrangeiras.” (At 17:17, 18) A filosofia dos epicureus, com a sua ideia de “comamos e bebamos, pois amanhã morreremos”, negava a esperança da ressurreição ensinada pelos cristãos no seu ministério. — 1Co 15:32.

EPILEPSIA. Doença crônica do sistema nervoso central, manifestada por convulsões, ou pela debilitação ou perda da consciência, e talvez ambas. Este distúrbio está relacionado com uma atividade anormal do cérebro. Uma grave crise epiléptica convulsiva, acompanhada pela inconsciência, é chamada de grand mal (grande mal), ao passo que a forma mais branda, ataques de duração muito curta, é chamada de petit mal (pequeno mal), sendo estes os dois principais tipos de epilepsia. Quem sofre de epilepsia é chamado de epiléptico.

No dia após a transfiguração, Jesus Cristo curou um epiléptico que seus discípulos não haviam conseguido curar. (Mt 17:14-20) Este menino, desde a infância, tinha um “espírito sem fala e surdo”, o qual, entre outras coisas, lançava-o periodicamente em convulsões; estas o faziam espumar pela boca. Jesus censurou o demônio, este saiu e o menino ficou assim curado. — Mr 9:14-29; Lu 9:37-43.

Embora neste caso específico houvesse atividade demoníaca associada com sintomas epilépticos, a epilepsia normalmente tem causas naturais, e as Escrituras não dão a entender que em geral ela seja causada por possessão demoníaca. Antes, Mateus (4:24, em grego) relata que as pessoas traziam a Jesus enfermos que incluíam “os possessos por demônios e os epilépticos”, diferenciando estes dois tipos de pessoas curadas por Cristo.

O termo “epilepsia” deriva da palavra grega e·pi·le·psí·a, que literalmente significa “agarra [ataque, acesso]”. No entanto, a palavra e·pi·le·psí·a não é usada na Bíblia. Antes, para este distúrbio, Mateus (4:24; 17:15) empregou formas da palavra grega se·le·ni·á·zo·mai, que literalmente significa “lunático”. Ao passo que a versão Almeida usa “lunático(s)”, certas traduções modernas empregam “epiléptico(s)”, em Mateus 4:24; 17:15. — BLH; NTP.

É interessante que The International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional) declare: “O significado do termo original seleniazomai, ‘lunático’, acha-se ligado à crença popular, ampla e estranhamente persistente, de que a lua, em certas fases, é prejudicial aos seres humanos, esp[ecialmente] no caso de doenças de caráter periódico ou remitente. Não existem dados pelos quais se possa determinar se, na época do N[ovo] T[estamento], esta palavra específica representava uma crença viva e ativa, ou tinha passado para o uso em que a metáfora original desaparece, e a palavra simplesmente indica o fato aludido, sem referência à ideia incorporada na etimologia. Ainda usamos a palavra ‘lunático’ para significar um doente mental, embora há muito tenhamos deixado de crer na influência da lua em tais casos.” — Editada por J. Orr, 1960, Vol. III, p. 1941.

Usar Mateus formas de se·le·ni·á·zo·mai não significa que ele sustentava conceitos supersticiosos, associando tal doença com certas fases da lua. Evidentemente, ele apenas empregou o termo grego de uso comum para indicar um epiléptico. Também, os sintomas descritos por Mateus, Marcos e Lucas, como presentes no caso do menino, certamente são os associados com a epilepsia.

ÉPOCAS, ESTAÇÕES. Uma estação é um período durante o qual se costuma fazer certo tipo de trabalho agrícola ou em que prevalece certo tipo de clima; a época é um tempo apropriado ou designado para alguma coisa.

Ao passo que a terra gira em torno do sol, a inclinação do eixo da terra num ângulo em relação ao plano da eclíptica produz um ciclo de estações climáticas. Como marcadores da passagem do tempo, os corpos celestes servem de indicadores das estações. (Gên 1:14) Gênesis 8:22 diz que as estações da terra "nunca cessarão". Para notar a correlação entre os meses do calendário judaico e os do gregoriano, bem como as festividades, o clima e as épocas agrícolas, veja CALENDÁRIO.

Intimamente relacionadas com as épocas agrícolas havia as anuais "épocas festivas", quando se celebravam as festividades estabelecidas pela Lei mosaica. (1Cr 23:31; 2Cr 31:3) Portanto, quando Paulo aconselhou alguns cristãos judeus, os quais 'observavam escrupulosamente dias, e meses, e épocas', ele se referiu a épocas festivas que faziam parte da Lei, não a simples épocas ou estações climáticas ou agrícolas. — Gál 4:10.

"Época" pode referir-se assim a um tempo fixo ou designado, ou a um período de certas características. (At 3:19 n.; Ro 8:18; Gál 6:9) Com o tempo, aquilo que constituía ensino salutar e conduta correta foi tornado bem claro aos cristãos. Concordemente, era a "época" de estar acordado. (Ro 13:11-14) 'Os tempos ou as épocas', ou períodos, em que a vontade de Jeová em certos assuntos seria realizada, eram de verdadeiro interesse para os seus adoradores (At 1:7), que os entendiam ao passo que eram progressivamente revelados. — 1Te 5:1.

Com respeito à morada das nações na terra, Deus "decretou os tempos designados" (At 17:26; "fixou as épocas de sua história", NE) por determinar quando certas mudanças deviam ocorrer, tais como quando chegou o tempo divinamente designado para desarraigar os habitantes cananeus da Terra da Promessa. — Gên 15:13-21; Je 25:8-11; Da 2:21; 7:12; veja TEMPOS DESIGNADOS DAS NAÇÕES.

EQUER [Membro [da família]]. Filho de Rão, primogênito de Jerameel, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 25, 27.

ER [Desperta; Acorda].

1. Primogênito de Judá com sua esposa cananeia. Seu pai tomou para ele Tamar por esposa, mas, porque Er se mostrou iníquo aos olhos de Jeová Deus, este o entregou à morte antes de ele poder gerar filhos. — Gên 38:1-7; 46:12.

2. Filho de Selá, terceiro filho de Judá com sua esposa cananeia. — Gên 38:2-5; 1Cr 4:21.

3. Antepassado de Jesus Cristo; filho de Jesus (José[s]) e pai de Elmadã. — Lu 3:28.

ERA. Veja IDADE.

ERÃ [O Despertado; O Acordado], ERANITAS. Erã era filho de Sutela, filho de Efraim, e antepassado dos eranitas. — Núm 26:35, 36.

ERASTO [Amado; Amável].

1. Cristão que ministrava a Paulo na sua terceira viagem missionária e a quem Paulo enviou da Ásia à Macedônia, junto com Timóteo. (At 19:22) É provável que este seja o Erasto que permaneceu em Corinto na época em que Paulo escreveu a sua segunda carta a Timóteo. — 2Ti 4:20.

2. Mordomo da cidade de Corinto, cujos cumprimentos Paulo incluiu na sua carta aos romanos. (Ro 16:23) Durante escavações feitas em Corinto, em 1929, o Professor T. L. Shear descobriu um calçamento com uma inscrição em latim, que reza: "Erasto, procurador [e] edil, colocou este calçamento às suas próprias custas." Embora não se saiba se este é o Erasto mencionado por Paulo, acredita-se que o calçamento tenha existido no primeiro século EC. Sugeriu-se que este mordomo também foi companheiro de viagem de Paulo (veja o N.º 1 acima). Todavia, visto que teria sido difícil para Erasto acompanhar Paulo e ao mesmo tempo cuidar dos seus deveres como mordomo, ou administrador, da cidade, aqueles que favorecem esta identificação geralmente chegam à conclusão de que Erasto ocupara esta posição oficial numa época anterior e que, portanto, Paulo se refere a ele por este título.

EREQUE. Uma das quatro cidades que constituíam 'o princípio do reinado de Ninrode' na terra de Sinear. (Gên 10:10) Ereque é hoje representada por um aglomerado de elevações num lugar chamado Warka pelos árabes e conhecido como Uruk pelos antigos acadianos da Mesopotâmia. Está situada a uns 177 km ao SE de Babilônia, na margem O do antigo leito do Eufrates (o Shatt-ek-Kar), ou a uns 6 km ao L do atual leito deste rio. Ali foi descoberto um antigo zigurate, junto com muitas elevações e ataúdes que parecem indicar que Ereque era antigamente lugar de sepultamento de reis assírios.

Habitantes de Ereque ("arquevitas", Al) estavam entre os povos transferidos para Samaria pelo imperador assírio Asenapar. — Esd 4:9, 10.

ERI [O Despertado; O Acordado], ERITAS. Quinto filho mencionado de Gade e antepassado dos eritas. — Gên 46:16; Núm 26:16.

ERMO. O termo hebraico para ermo (midh·bár) em geral se refere a uma terra pouco povoada, inculta. (Je 2:2) Podia incluir pastagens (Sal 65:12; Je 23:10; Êx 3:1), cisternas (2Cr 26:10), casas e até algumas cidades (1Rs 2:34; Jos 15:61, 62; Is 42:11). Embora frequentemente designe simples estepes, com matagais e grama, midh·bár também pode aplicar-se a regiões sem água, que poderiam ser classificadas como verdadeiros desertos. Outros termos hebraicos usados para designar tais regiões de modo mais específico são frequentemente encontrados em paralelos poéticos com midh·bár. — Sal 78:40; Je 50:12.

A palavra yeshi·móhn indica um lugar naturalmente desolado ou um deserto. (Sal 68:7; Is 43:19, 20) Evidentemente, é um termo mais forte do que midh·bár, indicando maior aridez, como na expressão "deserto [yeshi·món] vago, uivante". (De 32:10) Usado junto com o artigo definido, refere-se a regiões ermas, específicas. — Núm 21:20; 1Sa 23:19, 24; veja JESIMOM.

ʽAra·váh descreve terrenos áridos e estéreis, tais como os defronte de Jericó, do outro lado do Jordão. (Núm 22:1) Essas planícies desérticas talvez fossem o resultado da destruição florestal, e da falta de devida conservação e cultivo, ou talvez fossem o resultado de prolongadas secas, condições que transformam terras produtivas em infrutíferas terras desoladas. (Is 33:9; Je 51:43) Acompanhada do artigo definido, esta palavra denota também uma parte específica da Terra da Promessa. (Veja ARABÁ; ARABÁ, VALE DA TORRENTE DO.) Outro termo, tsi·yáh, descreve qualquer "região árida" e é usado em paralelismo com as palavras já mencionadas. — Sal 107:35; Is 35:1.

Mesmo as regiões que na Bíblia recebem a descrição de "deserto" raras vezes eram do tipo arenoso, tal como certas partes do deserto do Saara com dunas ondulantes de areias. Usualmente eram planícies relativamente sem árvores, áridas ou semiáridas, planaltos rochosos ou vales desolados, sem água, cercados por montes elevados ou picos calvos. — Jó 30:3-7; Je 17:6; Ez 19:13.

A nação de Israel, no seu Êxodo do Egito, foi guiada por Deus para o ermo ao longo do Mar Vermelho, induzindo Faraó a presumir que haviam perdido o rumo. (Êx 13:18-20; 14:1-3) Do outro lado do Mar Vermelho, e pelo restante dos 40 anos, Israel passou de um setor ermo para outro, inclusive as regiões ermas de Sur, Sim, Sinai, Parã e Zim (Êx 15:22; 16:1; 19:1; Núm 10:12; 20:1), ocasionalmente acampando junto a oásis, tais como em Elim, com suas 12 fontes e 70 palmeiras (Êx 15:27), e em Cades. — Núm 13:26; De 2:14; MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 541.

A própria Terra da Promessa, constituindo parte do chamado Crescente Fértil, estendia-se como um dedo de terra bem cultivada, delimitada num lado pelo mar Mediterrâneo e em dois lados por enormes regiões ermas — o deserto siro-árabe ao L e a península do Sinai ao S. (Êx 23:31) Dentro das fronteiras daquela terra havia setores ermos menores, por exemplo, junto a Dotã, um pouco ao S do vale de Jezreel, onde José foi lançado numa cisterna pelos seus irmãos (Gên 37:17, 22); o ermo de Judá, com certas partes ao redor das cidades de Zife, Maom e En-Gedi, ermos nos quais Davi procurou refugiar-se de Saul (Jz 1:16; 1Sa 23:14, 24; 24:1); e as regiões ermas ao lado L do Jordão, ligadas ao deserto siro-árabe (Núm 21:13; De 1:1; 4:43). Grande parte do abatimento tectônico atravessado pelo rio Jordão (hoje chamado de o Gor) é basicamente terra desértica.

Embora muitas das regiões ermas mencionadas na Bíblia sejam hoje terras desoladas, completamente estéreis, há evidência de que algumas delas nem sempre foram assim. Denis Baly, em The Geography of the Bible (A Geografia da Bíblia; 1957, p. 91), diz que "a natureza do tipo de vegetação deve ter sofrido mudanças muito grandes desde os tempos bíblicos". As condições originalmente bem equilibradas em que o solo, o clima e a vegetação formavam um ambiente estável, com pouca erosão do solo, foram desequilibradas pela destruição de florestas que nunca foram replantadas. Desaparecendo a sombra, e não havendo raízes para reter o solo, o calor abrasador do verão e as castigantes chuvas do inverno as destruíram. A terra ficou crestada pelo sol, arrastada pelo vento, açoitada por variações extremas de temperatura e levada embora pelas chuvas. As investigações arqueológicas mostram que muitas áreas, agora completamente estéreis, antigamente "incluíam pastagens, planícies e oásis, em que fontes e chuvas ocasionais, além da cuidadosa conservação da água, tornavam possível a construção de povoados e a manutenção de importantes rotas de caravanas". (The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible [O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete], editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 1, p. 828) Mesmo hoje, muitas destas áreas ermas ficam na primavera cobertas por um espesso gramado verde, embora no fim do verão o calor e a seca já o tenha queimado.

Condições no Ermo da Peregrinação. Embora as condições em algumas das regiões ermas possivelmente fossem bem mais favoráveis no passado remoto do que no tempo atual, Moisés podia falar a respeito da viagem de Israel através do Sinai como sendo "através do grande e atemorizante ermo de serpentes venenosas e de escorpiões, e de terra sedenta sem água". (De 1:19; 8:15; FOTOS, Vol. 1, p. 542) Era "terra das febres" (Os 13:5), terra de cova e de sombra tenebrosa. (Je 2:6) As regiões ermas mais áridas ou não eram habitadas (Jó 38:26) ou eram lugares em que habitavam os que moravam em tendas e onde vagueavam nômades. (1Cr 5:9, 10; Je 3:2) Havia ali sarças e espinheiros (Gên 21:14, 15; Êx 3:1, 2; Jz 8:7), lódãos espinhosos e matas de acácias espinhosas. — Êx 25:10; Jó 40:21, 22.

Os viajantes cansados, seguindo as veredas batidas (Je 12:12), talvez procurassem sombra debaixo dos galhos finos como varas da giesta-das-vassouras (1Rs 19:4, 5), ou sob um junípero anão de aspecto sombrio (Je 48:6), ou junto ao tronco nodoso duma tamargueira, com sua folhagem penada de pequeninas folhas sempre-verdes (Gên 21:33). Lá no alto, águias e outras aves de rapina davam voltas no céu sem nuvens (De 32:10, 11), ao passo que as víboras cornudas e as cobras-cuspideiras deslizavam sobre rochas e sob arbustos, lagartos de areia corriam em volta e grandes lagartos monitores se locomoviam desajeitadamente em pernas curtas e fortes. (Le 11:30; Sal 140:3; Is 34:15) Cabritos-monteses apareciam nos rochedos (1Sa 24:2); jumentos selvagens, zebras, camelos e avestruzes alimentavam-se com a esparsa vegetação; e até mesmo pelicanos e porcos-espinhos podiam ser vistos. (Jó 24:5; 39:5, 6; Je 2:24; La 4:3; Sof 2:13, 14) À noite, ao uivo dos chacais e dos lobos juntava-se o pio das corujas ou o zunido do curiango, aumentando a impressão de desolação e isolamento. (Is 34:11-15; Je 5:6) Aqueles que já dormiram numa região erma geralmente fizeram isso com pouco senso de segurança. — Veja Ez 34:25.

Com exceção de oásis espalhados, a península do Sinai é na maior parte uma região de areia, pedregulho e rocha. Nos uádis a vegetação é escassa. Antigamente, talvez houvesse mais chuvas e também mais vegetação. Todavia, sem os cuidados de Deus, os israelitas, possivelmente ascendendo a uns três milhões, nunca teriam sobrevivido nesta região descampada. Conforme Moisés lhes disse nas planícies de Moabe: "Guarda-te para que não te esqueças de Jeová, teu Deus . . . que te tirou da terra do Egito, da casa dos escravos, que te fez andar através do grande e atemorizante ermo de serpentes venenosas e de escorpiões, e de terra sedenta sem água, que te fez sair água da rocha de pederneira, que te alimentou no ermo com maná que teus pais não conheceram, para te humilhar e para te pôr à prova, a fim de fazer-te o bem nos teus dias posteriores." — De 8:11-16.

Ermo nas Escrituras Gregas. Aqui, o termo grego é·re·mos corresponde de modo geral ao hebraico midh·bár. (Lu 15:4) Descreve o ambiente ermo em que João, o Batizador, pregava (Mt 3:1), e os lugares solitários a que certo homem endemoninhado era impelido. (Lu 8:27-29) Jesus, depois de batizado, jejuou e foi tentado por Satanás numa região erma. (Mt 4:1; compare isso com Le 16:20-22.) Durante o seu ministério, Jesus, às vezes, retirava-se para o ermo a fim de orar. (Lu 5:16) No entanto, ele assegurou aos seus discípulos que a sua presença com poder régio não se limitaria a algum ermo solitário, mas se manifestaria em toda a parte. (Mt 24:26) O ermo ainda possuía seus perigos peculiares quando o apóstolo Paulo fazia as suas viagens missionárias. — 2Co 11:26; compare isso com At 21:38.

Usos Figurados. As regiões ermas ao L e ao SE da Palestina eram também fonte de fortíssimos ventos quentes, agora chamados de sirocos, palavra derivada da árabe (sharquiyyeh) para "vento oriental". Estes ventos procedentes do deserto têm um enorme efeito ressecante, absorvendo toda a umidade no ar e não raro carregando consigo uma fina poeira amarelada. (Je 4:11) Os sirocos ocorrem principalmente na primavera e no outono, e os da primavera podem ser bem destrutivos para a vegetação e as plantações. (Ez 17:10) Falando de Efraim, como a tribo que representava o apóstata reino setentrional de Israel, Jeová predisse que, mesmo que Efraim "mostre ser frutífero, virá um vento oriental . . . Sobe do ermo e secará sua fonte e drenará o seu manancial. Este rapinará o tesouro de todos os objetos desejáveis". Este devastador vento oriental, procedente do ermo, simbolizava o ataque que Israel sofreria da Assíria desde o L, saqueando os israelitas e levando-os cativos. — Os 13:12-16.

As próprias regiões ermas, caracteristicamente pouco habitadas, e evidenciando falta de atenção e cultivo por parte dos homens, frequentemente eram usadas para retratar os resultados destrutivos duma invasão inimiga. Por causa da infidelidade de Judá, os exércitos de Babilônia fariam das suas 'cidades santas um ermo, de Sião um mero ermo, de Jerusalém, um baldio desolado' (Is 64:10), seus pomares e seus campos cultivados todos assumindo aspecto de ermo. (Je 4:26; 9:10-12) Seus governantes principescos, que haviam sido iguais a majestosos cedros duma floresta, seriam cortados. (Je 22:6, 7; compare isso com Ez 17:1-4, 12, 13.) Por outro lado, em retribuição pelo seu ódio e sua oposição ao arranjo do reino de Deus, as nações inimigas, tais como Babilônia, Egito, Edom e outras, passariam por algo similar. Especialmente Babilônia foi destacada para se tornar "um ermo árido e uma planície desértica", desabitada, esquecida na sua desolação. — Je 50:12-16; Jl 3:19; Sof 2:9, 10.

Em contraste, a restauração de Judá, após o exílio de 70 anos, seria como converter uma região erma num jardim edênico, com pomares frutíferos e campos produtivos, regados por correntes e rios, e com juncos, árvores frondosas e flores desabrochadas, o que faria a terra parecer alegrar-se. — Is 35:1, 2; 51:3.

Pessoas. Referências similares a pessoas mostram que tais profecias se aplicam primariamente em sentido espiritual, em vez de literal. Assim, aquele que confia antes em homens do que em Jeová é comparado a uma árvore solitária numa planície desértica, sem esperança de ver o bem. Mas aquele que confia em Jeová é como uma "árvore plantada junto às águas", frutífera, luxuriante e segura. (Je 17:5-8) Estes contrastes fornecem também a base para um quadro mental do que constitui uma região erma.

"Ermo do mar." O "ermo [midh·bár] do mar", em Isaías 21:1, tem sido entendido por alguns comentadores como uma expressão que se refere à parte meridional da antiga Babilônia. Quando os rios Eufrates e Tigre anualmente transbordavam suas margens, esta região se tornava como que um 'mar ermo'.

Em Revelação. No livro de Revelação, o ermo é usado em sentido duplo: para representar solidão e refúgio contra atacantes, no caso da mulher simbólica que dá à luz o filho varão régio (Re 12:6, 14), e para representar o lar de feras, no caso da simbólica mulher "Babilônia, a Grande", que monta a fera de sete cabeças. — Re 17:3-6, 12-14.

ERMO DE JUDÁ. Veja JUDÁ, ERMO DE.

ERVA SALGADA [hebr.: mal·lú·ahh]. Este termo é mencionado apenas uma vez nas Escrituras como alimento consumido por aqueles considerados de pouca importância. (Jó 30:4) A palavra da língua original é considerada como derivando duma raiz que significa "sal", e também tem sido traduzida por "barrilheira" (AS, AT, Da), "ervas" (BLH, CBC, So), "grama" (Dy) e "malvas" (Al, BJ, BV, IBB). A tradução por "malvas" parece ter resultado da similaridade entre a palavra hebraica mal·lú·ahh e a palavra grega mo·ló·khe. Todavia, em Jó 30:4, os tradutores da Septuaginta grega não usaram mo·ló·khe, mas há·li·ma ("ervas salgadas", LXX, Bagster), e há·li·ma, assim como mal·lú·ahh, é considerada como se referindo quer ao sabor salgado da planta, quer à região onde cresce.

A planta mais frequentemente sugerida como correspondendo à mal·lú·ahh da Bíblia é a salgadeira (Atriplex halimus). Costumeiramente, este arbusto ramoso tem a altura de 1 a 2 m. A planta tem folhas pequenas, grossas e de sabor azedo, e, na primavera, dá pequenas flores purpúreas. Cresce em solo salino.

ERVAS AMARGAS [hebr.: mero·rím]. Os israelitas deviam comer junto com o cordeiro assado e o pão não levedado também ervas amargas, na noite da Páscoa (Êx 12:8), e este continuou a ser o arranjo em todas as posteriores celebrações da Páscoa. (Núm 9:11) Não se declara nada específico sobre a espécie ou as espécies de ervas amargas. Essas ervas amargas, pelo visto, tinham por fim lembrar aos israelitas a amarga experiência que tiveram durante a servidão egípcia.

O mesmo termo hebraico (mero·rím) ocorre em Lamentações 3:15 e usualmente é traduzido por "amarguras" ou "coisas amargas", embora alguns sugiram "ervas amargas" como tradução apropriada, para corresponder à menção do absinto, no mesmo versículo.

ERVAS DANINHAS. Em geral, plantas incômodas, que parecem não ter utilidade alguma no lugar onde crescem. Embora alguns peritos se tenham esforçado a relacionar plantas específicas com as diversas palavras das línguas originais, traduzidas por "ervas daninhas", "joio", etc., na Bíblia, não é possível fazer uma identificação exata.

A palavra hebraica bo'·sháh é considerada derivada duma raiz que significa "malcheiroso", e por isso provavelmente abrange uma variedade de plantas fedorentas, 'ervas malcheirosas'. O fiel Jó, de fato, declarou que, se seu proceder na vida não tivesse sido um de integridade, então, em vez de cevada, que crescesse uma erva malcheirosa. — Jó 31:40.

Outro termo hebraico, hhóh·ahh, é entendido como designando plantas espinhosas em geral, ervas espinhosas que crescem em solo cultivado e prontamente tomam posse de terras desoladas. (Jó 31:40; Is 34:13; Os 9:6) A mesma palavra aparece em Jó 41:2, onde parece aludir a um espinho enfiado na guelra dum peixe para poder carregá-lo. Hhóh·ahh é também usado em sentido ilustrativo. (Cân 2:2) A planta espinhosa na mão de um ébrio pode causar ferimento a ele e a outros; o mesmo se dá com gente estúpida que usa um provérbio de modo errado por não o entender. (Pr 26:9) O Rei Jeoás, de Israel, comparou a ação do orgulhoso Rei Amazias, de Judá, de querer lutar com ele, a uma planta espinhosa que pede uma aliança matrimonial com um cedro do Líbano. — 2Rs 14:8, 9; 2Cr 25:18.

A denominação hebraica shá·yith parece indicar uma variedade de ervas daninhas que crescem em terras abandonadas ou desoladas. (Is 5:6; 7:23-25; 27:4) Este termo, traduzido "ervas daninhas", é usado em sentido figurado para representar pessoas que, por sua infidelidade, se tornaram inúteis e próprias apenas para serem destruídas. — Is 9:18, 19; 10:17-19; compare isso com Da 4:20-22.

Em Provérbios 24:31, o plural do termo hebraico qim·móhs, comumente traduzido por "urtiga", parece indicar toda espécie de ervas daninhas. — Veja URTIGA.

O joio (gr.: zi·zá·ni·a) da ilustração de Jesus em Mateus 13:24-30, 36-43, geralmente é considerado ser o Lolium temulentum, que se parece muito ao trigo, até amadurecer, quando pode ser prontamente diferenciado do trigo pelas suas sementes pretas, menores. Isto, junto com o fato de que as raízes deste joio se entrelaçam com o trigo, torna bem desaconselhável arrancar o joio num estágio inicial. Se as sementes do joio ficam misturadas com os grãos de trigo, após a colheita, isto pode ter um efeito grave para quem come. Tontura e até mesmo envenenamento fatal têm sido atribuídos a se consumir pão contendo farinha de joio demais. As propriedades venenosas das sementes do joio são geralmente atribuídas a um fungo que cresce nelas.

O rei assírio Esar-Hadom, que fez muito para repovoar Samaria com estrangeiros.

ESÃ [possivelmente: Alguém Que se Apoia [em]]. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48, 52) Embora se desconheça sua localização exata, a tradução por "Soma", na Septuaginta grega (MS. Vaticano 1209), tem levado alguns peritos a identificá-la com Khirbet Samʻa (Horvat ʼesh-Shamʻah), a uns 15 km ao SSO de Jerusalém.

ESAR-HADOM [do assírio, significando "Assur Dá um Irmão"]. Um filho mais jovem e sucessor de Senaquerib, rei da Assíria. Numa das suas inscrições, Esar-Hadom confirma o relato bíblico sobre a morte do seu pai (Is 37:37, 38), dizendo: "Uma firme determinação sobreveio aos meus irmãos. Eles abandonaram os deuses e se voltaram para seus atos violentos, maquinando o mal. . . . Para obterem a realeza, mataram Senaquerib, seu pai." — Ancient Records of Assyria and Babylonia (Registros Antigos da Assíria e de Babilônia), de D. Luckenbill, 1927, Vol. II, pp. 200, 201.

Esar-Hadom declara que, antes da morte de seu pai, ele já havia sido escolhido como herdeiro presuntivo, e ele parece ter servido como vice-rei em Babilônia antes de se tornar rei da Assíria. Após o assassinato de seu pai, Esar-Hadom fala de perseguir os assassinos até a Armênia ("a terra de Ararate", 2Rs 19:37), onde os derrotou. Considera-se que seu reinado oficial tenha durado 12 anos.

Logo cedo no seu reinado, Esar-Hadom começou a restauração de Babilônia, que Senaquerib havia destruído. O templo de Esagila foi restaurado, e, sobre a própria cidade, Esar-Hadom diz: "Babilônia . . . eu construí de novo, ampliei, soergui, magnifiquei." — Ancient Records of Assyria and Babylonia, Vol. II, p. 244.

Seus registros relatam operações militares contra os gimirrai ou cimérios, que se crê terem sido descendentes de Gômer. (Veja Gên 10:2; Ez 38:6.) Saqueou também a cidade de Sídon, fundando uma nova cidade num lugar próximo, que ele chamou de Kar-Esarhaddon. Numa das suas inscrições alista uns 20 reis vassalos, inclusive Manassés de Judá (Menasi, rei de Yaudi).

O registro de 2 Crônicas 33:10-13 mostra que Manassés foi capturado pelos "chefes do exército que pertencia ao rei da Assíria" e levado para Babilônia. No passado, alguns pensavam que esta referência a Babilônia estivesse errada, achando-se que Nínive fosse o lugar para onde se levaria Manassés. Todavia, conforme se viu, Esar-Hadom, cujas inscrições mostram ter ele sido contemporâneo de Manassés, havia reconstruído Babilônia e se diz ter estado "muito menos interessado do que qualquer outro rei assírio no embelezamento de sua capital, Nínive". (The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible [O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete], editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 2, p. 125) Se Manassés foi capturado durante o reinado de Esar-Hadom, não havia nada de incongruente em ele ter sido levado para Babilônia, de cuja restauração Esar-Hadom se gabava com tanta jactância. Deve-se notar, porém, que o filho de Esar-Hadom, Assurbanipal, também menciona Manassés como tributário durante o seu reinado.

Os "Sessenta e Cinco Anos". Por ocasião da reconstrução do templo em Jerusalém, alguns dos habitantes não israelitas do país mencionaram ter sido levados a Samaria por "Esar-Hadom, rei da Assíria". (Esd 4:2) Que a transferência de pessoas, pelos assírios, para Samaria e de Samaria, continuou até o seu reinado é encarado por alguns como chave para se entender o período de "sessenta e cinco anos", mencionado em Isaías 7:8, referente à desolação de Efraim (que tinha por capital Samaria). O intervalo, desde o reinado de Tiglate-Pileser III (que iniciou a deportação de pessoas do reino setentrional de Israel pouco depois da profecia de Isaías) até o de Esar-Hadom, admitiria tal período de 65 anos até o total 'desbaratamento' de Efraim "para não ser povo".

Conquista do Egito. O notável feito militar de Esar-Hadom foi a conquista do Egito, vencendo o exército egípcio sob o governante etíope Tiraca (mencionado como "rei da Etiópia", em 2Rs 19:9) e tomando a cidade de Mênfis. Esar-Hadom acrescentou assim aos seus muitos títulos o de "Rei dos reis do Egito".

Embora Esar-Hadom organizasse o Egito em distritos e nomeasse governadores assírios sobre os príncipes destes distritos, em questão de dois anos se desenvolveu uma revolta. O rei assírio empreendeu uma segunda campanha para esmagar a rebelião, mas morreu em caminho, em Harã. Nas suas inscrições, Esar-Hadom havia dito: "Eu sou poderoso, eu sou todo-poderoso, eu sou um herói, eu sou gigantesco, eu sou colossal." (Ancient Records of Assyria and Babylonia, Vol. II, p. 226) Todavia, como todos os outros humanos imperfeitos, mostrou-se que ele era apenas súdito escravizado do domínio dos reis Pecado e Morte, que então o reivindicaram. — Veja Sal 146:3, 4; Ec 9:4; Ro 5:21.

Antes de morrer, Esar-Hadom fizera arranjos para assegurar uma sucessão suave ao trono por proclamar seu filho Assurbanipal príncipe herdeiro, ao passo que designou outro filho, Samas-sum-iuquin, para ser rei de Babilônia. De modo que, quando Esar-Hadom morreu, Assurbanipal tornou-se o próximo monarca assírio.

ESAÚ [Peludo]. Primogênito de Isaque e Rebeca; irmão gêmeo de Jacó e antepassado dos edomitas. Recebeu o nome de Esaú por causa da sua incomum aparência peluda ao nascer, mas foi-lhe dado o nome de Edom (que significa "Vermelho") por causa do cozido vermelho de lentilhas pelo qual vendeu a sua primogenitura. — Gên 25:25, 26, 30.

Mesmo já antes do nascimento dos gêmeos, em 1858 AEC, quando Isaque tinha 60 anos, os bebês lutaram no ventre da sua mãe. Em resposta à indagação de Rebeca, a respeito do significado disso, Jeová revelou-lhe que dois grupos nacionais seriam separados das suas entranhas e que o mais velho serviria ao mais jovem. — Gên 25:22, 23.

Desprezo por Assuntos Espirituais. Esaú tornou-se caçador hábil e aventureiro, "homem selvagem". Dessemelhante do seu irmão, o "inculpe" Jacó, Esaú tinha mentalidade carnal e era materialista. (Gên 25:27) Isaque, porém, amava Esaú, "porque significava caça para a sua boca". — Gên 25:28.

Certo dia, Esaú, cansado e faminto, veio do campo enquanto Jacó fazia um cozido. Em resposta ao pedido de Esaú: "Depressa, por favor, dá-me um bocado do vermelho — do vermelho aí", Jacó pediu que lhe vendesse sua primogenitura. Não tendo nenhum apreço por coisas sagradas, a saber, pela promessa de Jeová a Abraão a respeito do descendente, ou semente, por meio de quem todas as nações da terra abençoariam a si mesmas, Esaú, de modo impetuoso, por juramento, vendeu sua primogenitura a Jacó em troca de uma só refeição de cozido de lentilhas e pão. Por desprezar assim a sua primogenitura, considerando-a de pouco valor, Esaú mostrou uma total falta de fé. Talvez não quisesse ter parte em sofrer o cumprimento das palavras de Deus a respeito da semente de Abraão: "Teu descendente se tornará residente forasteiro numa terra que não é sua; e eles terão de servir-lhes, e estes certamente os atribularão por quatrocentos anos." — Gên 15:13; 25:29-34; He 12:16.

Esaú, à idade de 40 anos, fez os seus próprios arranjos de casamento. Por escolha sua, tornou-se polígamo, e, dessemelhante de seu pai Isaque, o qual deixara que seu pai Abraão lhe providenciasse uma esposa dentre adoradores de Jeová, Esaú tomou por esposas duas mulheres hititas, pagãs, Judite (Oolibama?) e Basemate (Ada?). Estas mulheres mostraram ser fonte de amargura de espírito tanto para Isaque como para Rebeca. — Gên 26:34, 35; 36:2; 24:1-4, 50, 51; veja BASEMATE N.º 1; JUDITE.

Concessão da Bênção a Jacó. Quando Isaque já estava avançado em idade, desejava conceder sua bênção ao filho mais velho, Esaú. Primeiro, Isaque mandou Esaú caçar um veado e preparar-lhe um prato gostoso. Esaú passou a fazer isso, visando receber a bênção de primogênito, embora, na realidade, não tivesse mais direito a esta bênção, por ter vendido a sua primogenitura. De modo que estava disposto a violar seu pacto juramentado, feito por ocasião da venda da primogenitura. Rebeca, sabendo o que Jeová lhe dissera antes do nascimento dos seus gêmeos, interveio, aconselhando Jacó a apresentar-se perante o pai como Esaú e assim conseguir a bênção que era sua por direito. Quando Jacó se apresentou ao seu pai cego, trajava vestes de Esaú, com peles de cabritinho nas mãos e nas partes sem pelo do pescoço. De modo que Isaque não o reconheceu. — Gên 25:23; 27:1-23.

Assim que Isaque terminara de abençoar Jacó, veio Esaú da caça e passou a preparar um prato gostoso para o pai. Quando entrou até seu pai, para receber desonestamente a bênção, e soube que Isaque abençoara Jacó, "Esaú começou a clamar de maneira extremamente alta e amargurada". Fervorosamente, mas com motivação egoísta, procurou obter do pai uma bênção, mas, mesmo irrompendo ele em lágrimas, isso não fez Isaque mudar de ideia e retrair a bênção que proferira sobre Jacó. É provável que Isaque reconheceu a mão de Jeová no assunto. Passou então a dizer a Esaú: "Eis que a tua morada achar-se-á longe dos solos férteis da terra e longe do orvalho dos céus acima. E viverás pela tua espada e servirás a teu irmão. Mas, há de dar-se que, quando tiveres ficado desassossegado, deveras romperás o seu jugo de cima do teu pescoço." — Gên 25:33; 27:30-40; He 12:17.

Esaú sabia que Jacó tinha direito à bênção, porque este obtivera legalmente o direito da primogenitura. (O testemunho arqueológico confirma que, entre povos antigos do Oriente Médio, existia o costume de trocar a primogenitura por alguma coisa material. Por exemplo, um texto procedente de Nuzi fala de um irmão receber três ovelhas em troca da sua participação na herança.) Mas Esaú, igual a Caim, abrigava animosidade contra seu irmão Jacó e aguardava uma oportunidade para matá-lo. Rebeca, pois, ao saber disso, aconselhou Jacó a fugir para Labão, irmão dela, em Harã. Ao procurar obter o consentimento de Isaque neste assunto, ela bondosamente preferiu não revelar a Isaque as intenções assassinas de Esaú, mas expressou seus sentimentos, de como se sentiria se Jacó tomasse uma esposa igual às filhas de Hete. Isaque chamou então Jacó, abençoou-o e mandou-o ir a Padã-Arã, aos parentes de Rebeca, para obter uma esposa. Ao ver isso, Esaú sentiu-se induzido a tomar uma terceira esposa, Maalate (Basemate?), filha de Ismael, filho de Abraão. — Gên 27:41-28:9; 36:3; veja BASEMATE N.º 2.

Eventos Posteriores. Em algum momento durante os 20 anos em que Jacó estava ausente, Esaú começou a desenvolver interesses em Seir, o campo de Edom. (Gên 32:3; Jos 24:4) Parece que só foi anos mais tarde que ele se mudou definitivamente para lá, levando para Seir sua família e todos os seus bens. (Gên 36:6-8) Quando Jacó retornou a Canaã, ficou bastante alarmado ao saber, pelos mensageiros que enviara, que Esaú, junto com 400 homens, estava vindo ao seu encontro. O motivo de Esaú vir com um grupo de 400 homens talvez fosse para impressionar seu irmão com a sua força superior, ou possivelmente para mostrar que ele era um poderoso maioral. Jacó, depois de orar a Jeová, mandou adiante de si um generoso presente de mais de 550 cabeças de gado. Jacó, ao ver Esaú, humildemente "foi curvar-se por terra, sete vezes, até chegar perto de seu irmão". Esaú foi então correndo ao seu encontro, abraçou Jacó, lançou-se ao pescoço dele e beijou-o. Ambos romperam em pranto. Esaú, no começo, recusou o presente de gado, de Jacó, dizendo: "Eu tenho muitíssimos, meu irmão. Continue teu o que é teu." Todavia, às instâncias de Jacó, Esaú finalmente aceitou o presente. Ele se ofereceu então a acompanhar Jacó, mas o seu irmão, com tato, rejeitou isso, bem como a proposta posterior de Esaú, de colocar à disposição de Jacó alguns dos seus homens, provavelmente para proteção. Esaú e seus homens partiram então e retornaram a Seir. O registro bíblico menciona que, uns 23 anos mais tarde, quando Isaque morreu, Esaú e Jacó sepultaram seu pai. — Gên 32:6, 7, 10-15; 33:1-3, 8, 9, 11-16; 35:29.

Ilustrados Princípios Divinos. A personalidade de Esaú mostra claramente que a escolha de Jacó como antepassado do Descendente (ou Semente) prometido não era arbitrária, nem era um favoritismo desarrazoado por parte de Jeová Deus. A falta de apreço de Esaú por coisas espirituais, junto com a sua forte tendência de satisfazer desejos carnais, tornaram Esaú inapto para estar na linhagem direta da Semente prometida. Daí, as palavras de Jeová, por meio do seu profeta Malaquias: "Mas a Jacó eu amei e a Esaú eu odiei." Esaú não consta entre os da nuvem de testemunhas fiéis alistadas em Hebreus, capítulo 11, quando Paulo diz: "Pela fé Abraão . . . morava em tendas, com Isaque e Jacó, herdeiros com ele da mesmíssima promessa." — Mal 1:2, 3; He 11:8, 9; 12:1.

Escolher Jeová a Jacó, em vez de a Esaú, mostra que a escolha Dele não depende dos ditames do homem. O apóstolo Paulo usa este incidente como ilustração de que os verdadeiros filhos de Abraão não necessariamente são os descendentes carnais, nem os que dependem das suas próprias obras, mas sim aqueles que têm fé igual a Abraão. — Ro 9:6-12.

Esaú é apresentado aos cristãos como exemplo de aviso, para que não se tornem culpados, assim como o materialista Esaú, de falta de apreço por coisas sagradas ou espirituais. — He 12:16; veja EDOM, EDOMITAS.

ESBÃ. Segundo filho mencionado do xeque Disom; descendente de Seir, o horeu. Os horeus eram os habitantes da terra de Seir antes de os filhos de Esaú os desapossarem e aniquilarem. — Gên 36:20, 26; 1Cr 1:38, 41; De 2:12.

ESBAAL. Veja IS-BOSETE.

ESBAI. Pai de Naarai, um dos poderosos das forças militares do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 37.

ESBIRRO. Ajudante oficial designado para escoltar um magistrado romano em público e para executar suas instruções. O termo grego rha·bdoú·khos significa literalmente "portador de vara". (At 16:35, 38; veja Int.) O termo romano era lictor, e, como sinal do cargo e símbolo da autoridade do magistrado, o lictor, numa colônia romana, carregava os fasces. Estes consistiam num feixe de varas de olmo ou de bétula amarradas em volta do cabo do machado, com o ferro do machado sobressaindo do lado do feixe.

Alguns dos deveres dos esbirros romanos eram de natureza policial, mas eles diferiam dos policiais atuais por estarem os esbirros estritamente ligados ao magistrado, com a responsabilidade de prestarlhe constante assistência. Não estavam diretamente sujeitos às ordens do povo, mas apenas às ordens do seu magistrado.

Quando o magistrado aparecia em público, seus esbirros anunciavam sua aproximação, abriam para ele passagem através da multidão e cuidavam de que ele recebesse o respeito devido à sua posição. Guardavam a casa dele. Entregavam mensagens do magistrado, convocavam ofensores para se apresentarem perante o magistrado e prendiam violadores da lei, às vezes açoitando-os.

Os esbirros, tecnicamente, eram nomeados para um só ano, mas na realidade costumavam servir por mais tempo. A maioria deles eram homens forros. Os esbirros romanos estavam eximidos do serviço militar e recebiam salário pelo seu serviço.

Visto que Filipos era colônia romana, era governada por magistrados civis, imperiais, e foram estes que deram a ordem de Paulo e Silas serem espancados com varas. No dia seguinte, os magistrados civis enviaram esbirros com ordens de soltar Paulo e Silas. Todavia, Paulo negou-se a aceitar o livramento da parte dos esbirros, mas exigiu que superiores deles, os magistrados civis, admitissem o erro cometido. — At 16:19-40; veja MAGISTRADO, I.

ESBOM.

1. Filho de Gade e neto de Jacó. (Gên 46:16) O relato paralelo em Números 26:16 alista Ozni, antepassado dos oznitas, em vez de Esbom, o que sugere que ambos os nomes se aplicam à mesma pessoa.

2. Filho de Bela e descendente de Benjamim. Esbom é chamado de um dos "cabeças da casa dos seus antepassados, homens poderosos, valentes". — 1Cr 7:6, 7.

ESCABELO. Banquinho baixo destinado a servir de descanso ou apoio para os pés, quando a pessoa está sentada. A palavra hebraica ké·vesh só aparece uma vez nas Escrituras e é usada com referência ao escabelo de ouro do trono do Rei Salomão. (2Cr 9:18) A expressão hebraica hadhóm ragh·lá·yim (literalmente: "banquinho para os pés") ocorre seis vezes e é usada figurativamente com relação ao templo (1Cr 28:2; Sal 99:5; 132:7; La 2:1), à Terra (Is 66:1) e aos inimigos a serem esmagados pelo governo do Messias (Sal 110:1). Tiago repreende aqueles que fazem distinções de classes na congregação, usando por ilustração um pobre a quem se diz: "Toma aquele assento ali, abaixo do meu escabelo." (Tg 2:3) Todas as outras ocorrências da palavra "escabelo" nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs são citações das Escrituras Hebraicas ou referências a elas. — Mt 5:35; At 7:49; "escabelo para os teus [ou: seus] pés", em Lu 20:43; At 2:35; He 1:13; 10:13.

ESCADA. A única referência bíblica a uma escada encontra-se em Gênesis 28:12, onde o termo hebraico sul·lám se aplica à escada que Jacó viu em sonho. O patriarca viu uma escada (ou o que talvez parecesse um lanço ascendente de escada de pedras) posta na terra, com o topo dela tocando nos céus. Anjos de Deus subiam e desciam pela escada, e acima dela havia uma representação de Jeová Deus. (Gên 28:13) Esta escada, com anjos nela, indica a existência de comunicação entre a terra e o céu, e que anjos ministram de maneira importante entre Deus e aqueles que têm a Sua aprovação.

Quando Jesus disse aos seus discípulos: "Eu vos digo em toda a verdade: Vereis o céu aberto e os anjos de Deus ascendendo e descendo para o Filho do homem", ele talvez pensasse na visão de Jacó. — Jo 1:51.

Escadas de sítio faziam parte do equipamento de sítio usado durante a guerra, e elas são frequentemente retratadas em monumentos egípcios e assírios. Um relevo de Nínive mostra os assírios usando escadas de sítio no ataque a Laquis.

Escadas também serviam para outros fins nos tempos antigos, tais como na construção. Por exemplo, são mostradas na estela de Ur-Nammu, que retrata a construção de um zigurate. Também, num relevo assírio de Tell Halaf, considerado do nono século AEC, mostra-se um homem subindo numa tamareira por meio duma escada.

ESCAMAS. Várias palavras hebraicas e gregas são apropriadamente traduzidas "escamas", mas essa expressão tem vários significados.

Escamas de animais. Escamas de animais são lâminas achatadas, rígidas, que constituem parte da cobertura do corpo de muitos peixes e répteis. A Lei decretava cerimonialmente puro como alimento "tudo o que tem barbatanas e escamas, nas águas". Os animais aquáticos que não as tivessem não podiam ser consumidos; eram "algo repugnante". (Le 11:9, 10, 12; De 14:9, 10) De modo que as escamas (hebr.: qas·qas·sím, plural de qas·qé·seth) eram um dos sinais facilmente reconhecíveis quanto a se certo peixe podia ser consumido. Embora haja quatro tipos de escamas de peixe, as mais comuns são as escamas ctenoides (de borda denteada) e as escamas cicloides (de borda arredondada). Estas estão dispostas em fileiras imbricadas, formando uma cobertura fina, leve e flexível.

A mesma palavra hebraica é usada em Ezequiel 29:4, onde o Faraó egípcio é simbolicamente descrito como aquilo que parece ser um crocodilo. O corpo inteiro do crocodilo é coberto por fortes placas córneas na sua pele de couro. Jó 41:15-17 aparentemente também se refere às escamas (Al, BLH, NM) do crocodilo, usando-se neste caso a palavra hebraica muitas vezes traduzida por "escudo". — Veja LEVIATÃ.

Escamas de armadura. É possível que uma cota de malha tivesse escamas (hebr.: qas·qas·sím, plural de qas·qé·seth) presas a ela. Essas escamas eram pequenas placas escalonadas de metal, o que tornava a placa da armadura relativamente flexível. — 1Sa 17:5; veja ARMAS, ARMADURA (Cota de malha).

Escamas nos olhos de Paulo. Quando Paulo foi curado da cegueira resultante de quando Jesus apareceu a ele, caíram dos olhos dele "o que pareciam escamas". (At 9:18) Alguns estudiosos apoiam a ideia de que nada de fato caiu dos olhos de Paulo, e que essa era apenas uma linguagem figurada para dizer que Paulo recuperou a visão. No entanto, várias traduções modernas indicam que algo realmente caiu dos olhos de Paulo. — AT, NM, RS, Sd, We.

ESCARLATE.

Veja CORES.

ESCÁRNIO, ZOMBARIA.

Ato de menosprezar ou expor a desprezo, desdém ou mofas. Há diversas palavras hebraicas e gregas que expressam vários graus de escárnio, a escolha da palavra dependendo das circunstâncias. Por isso, lemos na Bíblia a respeito de pessoas que mofam, caçoam, escarnecem, motejam, troçam, e divertem-se às custas de outros.

Zombadores, em geral, são detestados por outros. (Pr 24:9) Se eles não aceitarem repreensão, sofrerão o desastre. (Pr 1:22-27) E quão desprezíveis são aqueles que fazem pouco dos pobres, ou dos seus próprios pais! (Pr 17:5; 30:17) Os zombadores frequentemente se negam a aceitar censura (Pr 13:1) e não amam aqueles que os repreendem. (Pr 9:7, 8; 15:12) Todavia, devem ser disciplinados em benefício de outros. (Pr 9:12; 19:25, 29; 21:11) Em vez de se associar com tais ímpios, é melhor enxotá-los; muito mais felizes são aqueles que se negam a se sentar com zombadores ímpios. — Sal 1:1; Pr 22:10.

Escárnios Lançados Contra Servos de Deus. Servos fiéis de Jeová sofrem todo tipo de escárnio injustificado. Jó foi acusado falsamente de caçoar de outros (Jó 11:3), ao passo que, na realidade, era dele que se caçoava, se mofava e se ria por causa de seu proceder de integridade. (Jó 12:4; 17:2; 21:3) Caçoava-se e mofava-se de Davi. (Sal 22:7; 35:16) Do mesmo modo, Eliseu (2Rs 2:23), Neemias e os associados com ele (Ne 2:19; 4:1) e muitos outros, "receberam a sua provação por mofas" (He 11:36). Quando o Rei Ezequias, de Judá, enviou correios através das cidades de Efraim e de Manassés, exortando os habitantes a vir a Jerusalém para celebrar a Páscoa, muitos motejaram e caçoaram dos mensageiros. (2Cr 30:1, 10) De fato, esta era a maneira de os apóstatas de ambas as casas de Israel tratarem os profetas e mensageiros de Jeová Deus, até que o furor Dele os arrasou a todos. — 2Cr 36:15, 16.

Escarneceram de Jesus e de seus discípulos. Jesus Cristo, como Servo e Profeta de Deus, sofreu escárnios, risos, caçoadas e tratamento insolente, e até mesmo cuspiram nele, durante o seu ministério na terra. (Mr 5:40; Lu 16:14; 18:32) Os sacerdotes e governantes judeus eram especialmente odiosos na sua zombaria. (Mt 27:41; Mr 15:29-31; Lu 23:11, 35) Os soldados romanos participaram nesta zombaria quando ele lhes foi entregue. — Mt 27:27-31; Mr 15:20; Lu 22:63; 23:36.

Os desinformados e descrentes também mofavam dos discípulos de Jesus Cristo. (At 2:13; 17:32) O apóstolo Paulo, falando sobre os judeus caçoarem dos seus condiscípulos, recorda o quadro profético dos tempos antigos, em que Isaque, à idade de cerca de cinco anos, foi caçoado pelo seu meio-irmão Ismael, de 19 anos, o qual, por ciúme, "fazia caçoada" ("zombava", Al; "escarnecia", CBC) de Isaque. (Gên 21:9) Paulo faz a aplicação profética, dizendo: "Ora, nós, irmãos, somos filhos pertencentes à promessa, assim como Isaque foi. Mas, assim como então aquele nascido na maneira da carne começou a perseguir o nascido na maneira do espírito [visto que Deus interviera em causar o nascimento de Isaque], assim também é agora." (Gál 4:28, 29) Mais tarde, Paulo escreve: "De fato, todos os que desejarem viver com devoção piedosa em associação com Cristo Jesus também serão perseguidos." — 2Ti 3:12.

Suportar o escárnio com o ponto de vista correto. Jesus Cristo sabia desde o início que teria de enfrentar escárnios e que isso culminaria em ele ser morto. Mas, reconhecia que os vitupérios na realidade eram dirigidos contra Jeová, a quem ele representava, e isto era tanto mais doloroso para ele, porque 'fazia sempre as coisas que agradavam a seu Pai' (Jo 8:29), e ele se preocupava mais com a santificação do nome de seu Pai do que com qualquer outra coisa. (Mt 6:9) Por conseguinte, "quando estava sendo injuriado, não injuriava em revide. Quando sofria, não ameaçava, mas encomendava-se àquele que julga justamente". O apóstolo Pedro expressa este ponto ao escrever a cristãos, especialmente a escravos, exortando-os a não se deixarem levar a retaliar por causa de tal tratamento; pois Cristo é seu exemplo, "um modelo", diz Pedro, 'para seguirem de perto os seus passos'. — 1Pe 2:18-23; Ro 12:17-21.

Jeremias, o profeta de Deus, em certa ocasião na sua carreira, disse: "Tornei-me objeto de riso o dia inteiro; todos caçoam de mim." Ele enfraqueceu momentaneamente e pensou em parar com a sua obra profética por causa do incessante vitupério e zombaria. Mas, reconheceu que a zombaria era por causa da "palavra de Jeová", e a palavra de Deus no seu coração mostrou-se como um fogo aceso, que não podia mais conter. Por causa da sua fidelidade, Jeová estava com ele "como um poderoso terrível", e Jeremias foi fortalecido para prosseguir lealmente. — Je 20:7-11.

Jó era homem que mantinha de modo justo a sua integridade apesar de grandes escárnios. Mas, desenvolveu um ponto de vista errado e cometeu um erro, pelo qual foi corrigido. Eliú disse a respeito dele: "Que varão vigoroso é como Jó, que ingere a caçoada como água?" (Jó 34:7) Jó ficou preocupado demais com a sua própria justificação, em vez de com a de Deus, e tendeu a magnificar a sua própria justiça mais do que a de Deus. (Jó 35:2; 36:24) Ao ser alvo do severo escárnio de seus três "companheiros", Jó tendeu a considerar isso como dirigido contra ele em vez de contra Deus. Nisto era similar àquele que se expõe a zombarias e escárnios, e se agrada disso, aceitando-o como se bebesse água com prazer. Mais tarde, Deus explicou a Jó que esses escarnecedores na realidade (no fim de contas) estavam falando inveracidades contra Deus. (Jó 42:7) De modo similar, Jeová disse ao profeta Samuel, quando Israel exigiu um rei: "Não é a ti que rejeitaram, mas é a mim que rejeitaram como rei sobre eles." (1Sa 8:7) E Jesus disse aos seus discípulos: "Sereis pessoas odiadas por todas as nações [não por vossa causa, mas] por causa do meu nome." (Mt 24:9) Ter isso em mente habilitará o cristão a suportar escárnios com o espírito correto e o qualificará a receber a recompensa pela sua perseverança. — Lu 6:22, 23.

Escárnio Justificado. O escárnio pode ser merecido e bem justificado. Aquele que não é previdente ou que negligencia bons conselhos pode adotar um proceder tolo que o torna alvo de escárnio. Jesus apresentou um exemplo de tal homem, que começou a construir uma torre, sem primeiro calcular o custo. (Lu 14:28-30) Jeová pôs a nação de Israel 'por vitupério aos seus vizinhos, por caçoada e troça aos em volta' dela, e isso de modo justo, por causa da inconstância e desobediência dela para com Deus, mesmo a ponto de lançar vitupério sobre o nome de Deus entre as nações. (Sal 44:13; 79:4; 80:6; Ez 22:4, 5; 23:32; 36:4, 21, 22) O profeta Elias apropriadamente mofou dos sacerdotes de Baal por desafiarem a Jeová. (1Rs 18:26, 27) Depois de Senaqueribe ter escarnecido de Jeová e falado dele de modo ultrajante perante o Rei Ezequias e o povo de Jerusalém, inverteu-se a situação; escárnio, zombaria, vitupério e derrota ignominiosa sobrevieram a este orgulhoso rei assírio e seu exército. (2Rs 19:20, 21; Is 37:21, 22) De maneira similar, Moabe tornou-se alvo de escárnio. (Je 48:25-27, 39) As nações da Terra foram ao extremo de zombar de Jeová Deus, mas Ele se ri delas e caçoa delas por impudentemente resistirem à Sua soberania universal, ao colherem os maus frutos do seu proceder. — Sal 2:2-4; 59:8; Pr 1:26; 3:34.

Escarnecedores nos "Últimos Dias". Uma característica do sinal que marcaria os "últimos dias" seriam "ridicularizadores [literalmente: jogadores de esporte (com zombaria)] com os seus escárnios, procedendo segundo os seus próprios desejos ["seus próprios desejos de coisas ímpias"; Ju 17, 18] e dizendo: 'Onde está essa prometida presença dele? Ora, desde o dia em que os nossos antepassados adormeceram na morte, todas as coisas estão continuando exatamente como desde o princípio da criação'". (2Pe 3:3, 4) Obviamente, estes não acatam o conselho de Isaías 28:21, 22, advertindo do grave perigo de se zombar de Jeová.

"De Deus não se Mofa." O apóstolo Paulo avisa sobre o sério perigo que se corre ao tentar mofar de Deus, isto é, o perigo que sobrevém àquele que pensa que os princípios da administração de Deus podem ser tratados com desprezo ou podem ser relegados com bom êxito. Ele escreve aos cristãos gálatas: "Pois, se alguém acha que ele é alguma coisa, quando não é nada, está enganando a sua própria mente. . . . Não vos deixeis desencaminhar: De Deus não se mofa. Pois o que o homem semear, isso também ceifará; porque aquele que semeia visando a sua carne, ceifará da carne corrupção, mas aquele que semeia visando o espírito, ceifará do espírito vida eterna." — Gál 6:3-8.

O apóstolo mostra aqui que ninguém deve enganar-se com uma falsa avaliação de seu próprio valor, desconsiderando assim a Deus e a Palavra Dele. Ele deveria limpar a sua vida para andar pelo espírito conforme manda a Palavra. Quem não fizer isso, mas em vez disso prosseguir semeando com vistas a desejos carnais, 'aceita a benignidade imerecida de Deus e desacerta o propósito dela', e trata com desprezo as instruções de Deus. (2Co 6:1) Pode enganar a si mesmo e pensar que está a salvo. Todavia, Deus conhece o coração deste e o julgará concordemente.

ESCARPA. Elevação de terra ou de pedras, ou mesmo um paredão, erguido como baluarte em torno dum lugar.

O aterro de sítio (hebr.: so·leláh) era uma elevação de terra (e às vezes de pedra) erguida por um exército para formar um plano inclinado para levar aríetes e outro equipamento de sítio contra uma cidade fortificada. (2Sa 20:15) O rei assírio Senaqueribe levantou um aterro de sítio contra Laquis. Escavações em Laquis mostram que esta escarpa consistia principalmente em pedras assentadas com uma grande quantidade de argamassa. Todavia, Senaqueribe não conseguiu levantar um aterro de sítio contra Jerusalém. — 2Rs 19:32.

Aterros de sítio deveriam ser levantados por Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia, contra Jerusalém e contra Tiro. (Je 6:6; Ez 21:22; 26:7, 8) O sítio contra Jerusalém foi ilustrado profeticamente quando Ezequiel foi mandado gravar num tijolo um modelo de Jerusalém e erguer um aterro de sítio contra ela. — Ez 4:1, 2.

A escarpa (hebr.: ma·tsóhr) mencionada em Zacarias 9:3, 4, evidentemente tem referência às vigorosas fortificações de Tiro, que consistiam em muros altos construídos com grandes blocos de pedra. A cidade de Babilônia era extraordinariamente fortificada, tendo uma escarpa ou fortificação interna e outra externa, ambas de tijolos. — Veja BABILÔNIA N.º 1.

Em alguns casos, a escarpa (hebr.: hhehl) que uma cidade tinha como parte das suas fortificações era feita com a terra retirada quando se escavava um fosso em volta da cidade. O talude que se elevava do fosso em Hazor tinha uns 15 m de altura. Isto fazia com que o alto da fortificação estivesse quase 30 m acima do fundo do fosso. A cidade de Jerusalém tinha as suas próprias fortificações, inclusive uma escarpa. — Sal 122:7; 48:13; veja FORTIFICAÇÕES.

A ajuda ou "salvação" divina pode servir de proteção segura, comparável a muralhas e uma escarpa. Assim, com evidente referência a Jerusalém, Isaías 26:1 diz o que Jeová Deus faria a favor da cidade: "Ele põe a própria salvação por muralha e por escarpa."

ESCOL [Cacho [de Uvas]].

1. Irmão de Aner e de Manre, o amorreu. (Gên 14:13) Escol e seus irmãos eram confederados de Abraão na derrota duma coligação de reis orientais. — Gên 14:14, 24; veja ANER N.º 1.

2. Uádi ou vale de torrente, provavelmente situado a pouca distância ao N de Hébron. Foi deste vale que os espias israelitas carregaram consigo um grande cacho de uvas, e os vinhedos desta região ainda são famosos pela alta qualidade das suas uvas. (Núm 13:23, 24; 32:9; De 1:24) É possível que o nome resultasse deste acontecimento durante a viagem de espionagem.

ESCOLA. Instituição que fornece instrução. A palavra "escola" deriva da grega skho·lé, a qual basicamente significa "folga; lazer"; daí, aquilo para o qual se usa o lazer — palestras, preleções, estudo, aprendizado.

O Criador incumbiu os pais da responsabilidade de ensinar aos seus filhos o verdadeiro sentido da vida, tanto da vida física como da espiritual. No antigo Israel, ele reservou também a tribo de Levi para fornecer educação religiosa. — Veja EDUCAÇÃO.

Numa época posterior, desenvolveram-se entre os judeus lugares de instrução religiosa superior. Por exemplo, Saulo (Paulo) havia estudado aos pés de Gamaliel. Os judeus questionavam as qualificações de todo aquele que afirmava ensinar a lei de Deus, mas não tinha estudado nas escolas deles. — At 22:3; Jo 7:15.

Quando Paulo estava em Éfeso, proferia discursos na sinagoga durante uns três meses, visto que as sinagogas eram lugares onde se dava instrução. Mas, quando alguns se opuseram fortemente às boas novas, Paulo retirou seus discípulos para o auditório da escola de Tirano, onde passou a proferir diariamente discursos, durante dois anos. Não se fornecem pormenores sobre a finalidade para a qual esta escola fora estabelecida, mas parece que Paulo tinha à disposição essas instalações, talvez durante algumas horas por dia. — At 19:8-10 n.

Os locais de reunião da congregação cristã serviam de escolas nas quais se podiam considerar os rolos das Escrituras Hebraicas bem como os escritos dos apóstolos e seus associados. Poucos cristãos tinham a possibilidade de possuir todos os rolos hebraicos ou cópias de todas as cartas cristãs. As reuniões ofereciam a oportunidade para exame e consideração cabal desses. (Col 4:16) Cristãos pobres que não possuíam outro material de escrita provavelmente copiavam textos bíblicos para estudo e uso pessoal em óstracos, quer dizer, em cacos de cerâmica. Ao passo que ouviam a leitura das Escrituras ou tinham acesso aos rolos nas reuniões, podiam copiá-las a tinta em fragmentos de cerâmica. Ao mesmo tempo, a instrução provida à família inteira em casa continuava a ser uma parte vital da educação cristã. (Ef 6:4; 1Co 14:35) Nenhum arranjo separado para crianças, assim como as modernas "escolas dominicais", em parte alguma foi autoriza-do ou praticado pelos judeus ou pelos apóstolos cristãos.

ESCOLTA CARIANA. Corpo de soldados que ajudou Jeoiada a destronar Atalia e empossar Jeoás como rei de Judá. — 2Rs 11:4, 13-16, 19.

Muitos peritos acham que escolta cariana seja outro nome para os queretitas, mencionados como servindo nas forças militares de Davi e de Salomão. No conceito de alguns peritos, os queretitas operavam também como escolta especial para esses reis. (2Sa 8:18; 1Rs 1:38; 1Cr 18:17) Esta ligação da escolta cariana com os queretitas baseia-se adicionalmente no fato de que o texto massorético diz "escolta cariana" em 2 Samuel 20:23, ao passo que na nota marginal, bem como em muitos manuscritos hebraicos, consta "queretitas".

Existe um antigo distrito de Cária na parte SO da Ásia Menor. Visto que Ezequiel 25:16 e Sofonias 2:5 associam os queretitas com os filisteus, e visto que a tradução destes textos na Septuaginta grega reza "cretenses" em vez de queretitas, alguns acreditam que talvez os que faziam parte da escolta cariana tenham vindo originalmente do distrito de Cária por meio de Creta.

ESCORPIÃO [hebr.: ʽaq·ráv; gr.: skor·pí·os]. Pequeno animal (aracnídeo, não incluído entre os insetos pelos biólogos) classificado no mesmo grupo das aranhas. Mas, dessemelhante de outros aracnídeos, a fêmea é vivípara, não ovípara.

O escorpião tem oito pernas para andar; uma longa cauda estreita, segmentada, que termina num aguilhão curvo, venenoso; e um par de tenazes, parecidas às da lagosta, dotadas de pelos supersensíveis. A cauda usualmente fica erguida e arqueada para a frente sobre as costas do animal, oscilando em todas as direções. O escorpião usa o aguilhão na defesa e também para procurar sua presa. A vítima é agarrada pelas pinças e então, quando necessário, aguilhoada para morrer. Sendo animal noturno, o escorpião passa o dia escondido sob pedras, em fendas e gretas de prédios, e até sob capachos e camas, saindo à noite para se alimentar de aranhas e de insetos.

Das mais de 600 variedades de escorpiões, cujo tamanho geralmente varia de menos de 2,5 cm até 20 cm de comprimento, cerca de uma dezena foi encontrada na Palestina e na Síria. Embora a picada do escorpião usualmente não seja fatal para os humanos, há diversas variedades dele com veneno proporcionalmente mais potente do que o de muitas perigosas víboras do deserto. O tipo mais venenoso encontrado em Israel é o amarelo Leiurus quinquestriatus. A grande dor causada pela picada do escorpião é mencionada em Revelação (Apocalipse) 9:3, 5, 10, onde se descrevem gafanhotos simbólicos como tendo "a mesma autoridade que os escorpiões da terra têm", e a capacidade de atormentar homens assim como "um escorpião quando ataca um homem".

Os escorpiões eram comuns no ermo de Judá e na península do Sinai, com seu "atemorizante ermo". (De 8:15) Uma subida na fronteira SE de Judá, situada ao SO da extremidade meridional do Mar Morto, até mesmo foi chamada de Acrabim (que significa "Escorpiões"). — Núm 34:4; Jos 15:3; Jz 1:36.

Em 1 Reis 12:11, 14, e em 2 Crônicas 10:11, 14, o termo hebraico ʽaq·rab·bím, traduzido "azorragues", significa literalmente "escorpiões". O instrumento de punição a que se faz referência talvez fosse um azorrague de pontas afiadas.

Ilustrando que seu Pai celestial daria espírito santo aos que o pedissem, Jesus Cristo salientou que um pai humano não daria ao filho um escorpião quando este pedisse um ovo. (Lu 11:12, 13) Aos 70 discípulos que Jesus enviou, ele deu autoridade sobre coisas nocivas, representadas por serpentes e escorpiões. — Lu 10:19; compare isso com Ez 2:6.

ESCRAVO. As palavras das línguas originais traduzidas "escravo" ou "servo", na sua aplicação, não se limitam a pessoas que são propriedade de outros. A palavra hebraica ʽé·vedh pode referir-se a pessoas que são propriedade de seu semelhante. (Gên 12:16; Êx 20:17) Ou o termo pode designar súditos dum rei (2Sa 11:21; 2Cr 10:7), povos subjugados que pagavam tributo (2Sa 8:2, 6) e pessoas no serviço real, inclusive copeiros, padeiros, marinheiros, oficiais militares, conselheiros e outros assim, quer pertencentes a alguém, quer não (Gên 40:20; 1Sa 29:3; 1Rs 9:27; 2Cr 8:18; 9:10; 32:9). Ao se dirigir a outros de modo respeitoso, o hebreu, em vez de usar o pronome na primeira pessoa, às vezes falava de si mesmo como servo (ʽé·vedh) daquele a quem falava. (Gên 33:5, 14; 42:10, 11, 13; 1Sa 20:7, 8) ʽÉ·vedh era usado com respeito a servos ou adoradores de Jeová em geral (1Rs 8:36; 2Rs 10:23), e, mais especificamente, a representantes especiais de Deus, tais como Moisés. (Jos 1:1, 2; 24:29; 2Rs 21:10) Mesmo que não fosse adorador de Jeová, aquele que prestava serviço em harmonia com a vontade divina podia ser chamado de servo de Deus, um exemplo disso sendo o Rei Nabucodonosor. — Je 27:6.

O termo grego doú·los corresponde à palavra hebraica ʽé·vedh. É usado para se referir aos que são propriedade de outro (Mt 8:9; 10:24, 25; 13:27); a servos devotados de Deus e de seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, quer humanos (At 2:18; 4:29; Ro 1:1; Gál 1:10), quer angélicos (Re 19:10, onde aparece a palavra sýn·dou·los [coescravo]); e, em sentido figurado, aos que são escravos do pecado (Jo 8:34; Ro 6:16-20) ou da corrupção (2Pe 2:19).

A palavra hebraica ná·ʽar, igual ao termo grego pais, significa basicamente rapazinho ou moço, e pode também designar um servo ou um ajudante. (1Sa 1:24; 4:21; 30:17; 2Rs 5:20; Mt 2:16; 8:6; 17:18; 21:15; At 20:12) O termo grego oi·ké·tes denota um criado ou escravo (Lu 16:13), e a escrava ou serva é chamada pela palavra grega pai·dí·ske. (Lu 12:45) O particípio da raiz hebraica sha·ráth pode ser traduzido por termos tais como "ministro" (Êx 33:11) ou "servente". (2Sa 13:18) A palavra grega hy·pe·ré·tes pode ser traduzida por "criado", "oficial da justiça" ou "assistente". (Mt 26:58; Mr 14:54, 65; Jo 18:36) O termo grego the·rá·pon só ocorre em Hebreus 3:5 e significa subordinado ou assistente.

Antes da Era Comum. Guerra, pobreza e crime eram os fatores básicos que reduziam pessoas a um estado de servidão. Cativos de guerra frequentemente eram constituídos escravos pelos seus captores ou eram por eles vendidos em escravidão. (Veja 2Rs 5:2; Jl 3:6.) Na sociedade israelita, quando alguém ficava pobre, ele podia vender a si mesmo ou a seus filhos como escravos para saldar sua dívida. (Êx 21:7; Le 25:39, 47; 2Rs 4:1) O ladrão que não pudesse dar uma compensação era vendido pelas coisas que furtou, evidentemente recuperando a sua liberdade assim que todas as dívidas fossem saldadas. — Êx 22:3.

Ocasionalmente, escravos ocupavam uma posição de grande confiança e honra na casa. O idoso servo do patriarca Abraão (provavelmente Eliézer) administrava todos os bens do seu amo. (Gên 24:2; 15:2, 3) O descendente de Abraão, José, como escravo no Egito, ficou encarregado de tudo o que pertencia a Potifar, oficial da corte de Faraó. (Gên 39:1, 5, 6) Em Israel, havia a possibilidade de o escravo tornar-se rico e resgatar a si mesmo. — Le 25:49.

A respeito do recrutamento de trabalhadores, veja SERVIÇO COMPULSÓRIO; TRABALHOS FORÇADOS.

Leis que governavam as relações entre escravos e amos. Entre os israelitas, a posição do escravo hebreu diferia daquela do escravo estrangeiro, residente forasteiro ou colono. Ao passo que o não hebreu continuava como propriedade do amo e podia ser passado de pai para filho (Le 25:44-46), o escravo hebreu devia ser solto no sétimo ano de sua servidão ou no ano do jubileu, dependendo de qual vinha primeiro. Durante o tempo da sua servidão, o escravo hebreu devia ser tratado como trabalhador contratado. (Êx 21:2; Le 25:10; De 15:12) O hebreu que vendesse a si mesmo em escravidão a um residente forasteiro, a um membro da família dum residente forasteiro ou a um colono podia ser resgatado a qualquer hora, quer por ele mesmo, quer por alguém que tivesse o direito de resgate. O preço de resgate baseava-se no número de anos restantes até o ano do jubileu ou até o sétimo ano de servidão. (Le 25:47-52; De 15:12) Quando o amo concedia liberdade a um escravo hebreu, devia darlhe um presente para um bom começo como homem livre. (De 15:13-15) Se o escravo já tivesse a esposa quando se tornou tal, a esposa saía livre com ele. Todavia, se o amo lhe dera uma esposa (evidentemente uma mulher estrangeira, que não tinha direito de ser liberta no sétimo ano de servidão), ela e quaisquer filhos que tivessem continuavam propriedade do amo. Em tal caso, o escravo hebreu podia escolher continuar com o seu amo. Furava-se-lhe então a orelha com uma sovela, para indicar que continuaria em servidão por tempo indefinido. — Êx 21:2-6; De 15:16, 17.

Escravas hebreias. Certos regulamentos especiais se aplicavam à escrava hebreia. Ela podia ser tomada como concubina pelo amo ou designada para ser esposa de seu filho. Quando designada para ser esposa do filho do amo, a hebreia devia ser tratada com o direito devido a filhas. Mesmo que o filho tomasse outra esposa, não se devia diminuir o sustento, o vestuário e os direitos conjugais da primeira. Se o filho falhasse neste respeito, a mulher tinha direito à sua liberdade sem pagar um preço de redenção. Se o amo quisesse que a hebreia fosse resgatada, não se lhe permitia realizar isso por vendê-la a estrangeiros. — Êx 21:7-11.

Proteções e privilégios. A Lei protegia os escravos contra brutalidades. O escravo devia ser posto em liberdade se os maus-tratos do amo resultassem na perda de um dente ou de um olho. Visto que o valor costumeiro dum escravo era de 30 siclos (veja Êx 21:32), sua libertação significaria uma considerável perda para o amo, e, portanto, isso serviria como forte elemento dissuasivo contra abusos. Embora o amo pudesse espancar seu escravo, este, dependendo da decisão dos juízes, devia ser vingado caso morresse devido ao espancamento pelo seu amo. Todavia, se o escravo sobrevivesse um ou dois dias antes de morrer — isto indicava que o amo não intencionara matar o escravo, mas sim discipliná-lo — ele não devia ser vingado. (Êx 21:20, 21, 26, 27; Le 24:17) Parece também que, para o amo ser considerado isento de culpa, o espancamento não devia ter sido feito com um instrumento letal, visto que isso indicaria a intenção de matar. (Veja Núm 35:16-18.) Portanto, se o escravo sobrevivia um ou dois dias, havia uma dúvida razoável se a morte era resultado do castigo. Bater com uma vara, por exemplo, não seria normalmente fatal, conforme mostra a declaração em

Provérbios 23:13: "Não retenhas a disciplina do mero rapaz. Não morrerá se lhe bateres com a vara."

Os termos da Lei concediam aos escravos certos privilégios. Visto que todos os escravos do sexo masculino eram circuncidados (Êx 12:44; compare isso com Gên 17:12), podiam comer a Páscoa, e os escravos do sacerdote podiam comer coisas sagradas. (Êx 12:43, 44; Le 22:10, 11) Os escravos eram eximidos do trabalho no sábado. (Êx 20:10; De 5:14) Durante o ano sabático, eles tinham o direito de comer o que havia crescido de grãos caídos e uvas de videiras não podadas. (Le 25:5, 6) Deviam ter parte na alegria associada com os sacrifícios no santuário e na celebração de festividades. — De 12:12; 16:11, 14.

Posição dos Cristãos do Primeiro Século. No Império Romano, os escravos eram muito numerosos, havendo quem era dono de centenas e mesmo de milhares de escravos. A escravatura gozava da proteção do governo imperial. Os cristãos do primeiro século não tomavam nenhuma posição contra a autoridade governamental neste assunto, nem advogavam uma revolta dos escravos. Respeitavam o direito legal dos outros, inclusive de concristãos, de possuírem escravos. Foi por isso que o apóstolo Paulo mandou de volta o escravo fugitivo Onésimo. Por se ter tornado cristão, Onésimo retornou voluntariamente ao seu amo, sujeitando-se como escravo a um concristão. (Flm 10-17) O apóstolo Paulo também admoestou escravos cristãos a não se aproveitarem indevidamente da sua relação com amos crentes. Ele disse: "Os que tiverem donos crentes não os menosprezem, porque são irmãos. Ao contrário, sejam escravos com tanto mais prontidão, porque os que recebem o proveito do seu bom serviço são crentes e amados." (1Ti 6:2) Para o escravo era uma bênção ter um amo cristão, visto que seu dono tinha a obrigação de tratá-lo de modo justo e equitativo. — Ef 6:9; Col 4:1.

A aceitação do cristianismo por parte dos em servidão impunha-lhes a responsabilidade de serem escravos melhores, "não contradizendo, não praticando furto, mas exibindo . . . uma boa fidelidade". (Tit 2:9, 10) Mesmo que seus amos os tratassem de modo injusto, não deviam render-lhes serviço inferior. Por sofrerem por causa da justiça, imitavam o exemplo de Jesus Cristo. (1Pe 2:18-25) "Vós, escravos", escreveu o apóstolo Paulo, "em tudo sede obedientes aos que são os vossos amos em sentido carnal, não com atos apenas ostensivos, como para agradar a homens, mas com sinceridade de coração, com temor de Jeová. O que for que fizerdes, trabalhai nisso de toda a alma como para Jeová, e não como para homens". (Col 3:22, 23; Ef 6:5-8) Esta boa conduta para com seus amos impedia que se lançasse vitupério sobre o nome de Deus, por ninguém poder culpar o cristianismo de produzir escravos preguiçosos, imprestáveis. — 1Ti 6:1.

Naturalmente, a 'obediência do escravo em tudo' não podia incluir desobedecer à lei de Deus, visto que isso significaria temer mais os homens do que a Deus. Transgressões por parte de escravos, mesmo quando cometidas por ordem de um superior, não teriam 'adornado o ensino de nosso Salvador, Deus', mas teriam difamado e vilipendiado este ensino. (Tit 2:10) Assim, sua consciência cristã é que devia governar.

Na congregação cristã, todos, sem consideração da sua posição social, estavam no mesmo nível. Todos haviam sido ungidos pelo mesmo espírito e assim compartilhavam a mesma esperança quais membros de um só corpo. (1Co 12:12, 13; Gál 3:28; Col 3:11) O escravo cristão, embora mais limitado no que podia fazer na divulgação das boas novas, não se devia preocupar com isso. Caso se lhe oferecesse a oportunidade de obter a liberdade, porém, ele a aproveitaria e assim ampliaria seu campo de atividade cristã. — 1Co 7:21-23.

Escravização ao Pecado. Na ocasião em que o primeiro homem, Adão, desobedeceu à lei de Deus, ele renunciou ao perfeito controle sobre si mesmo e se entregou ao desejo egoísta de continuar com sua esposa pecaminosa e agradar a ela. Ceder Adão ao seu desejo pecaminoso fez deste desejo e do seu resultado, o pecado, o amo dele. (Compare isso com Ro 6:16; Tg 1:14, 15; veja PECADO.) Vendeu-se ao pecado. Visto que todos os seus descendentes ainda estavam nos seus lombos, Adão também os vendeu ao pecado. Foi por isso que o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Eu sou carnal, vendido sob o pecado." (Ro 7:14) Por este motivo, não há maneira de alguém dos descendentes de Adão tornar a si mesmo justo, nem mesmo por tentar guardar a Lei mosaica. Conforme o expressou o apóstolo Paulo: "O mandamento que era para a vida, este eu achei ser para a morte." (Ro 7:10) A incapacidade dos humanos de guardar perfeitamente a Lei mostrava que eram escravos do pecado e mereciam a morte, não a vida. — Veja MORTE.

Somente por se aproveitar da libertação tornada possível por meio de Jesus Cristo pode alguém emancipar-se ou obter a liberdade desta escravatura. (Compare isso com Jo 8:31-34; Ro 7:21-25; Gál 4:1-7; He 2:14-16; veja RESGATE.) Tendo sido comprados pelo sangue precioso de Jesus, os cristãos são escravos, ou servos, de Jeová Deus e do Seu Filho, obrigados a cumprir as ordens deles. — 1Co 7:22, 23; 1Pe 1:18, 19; Re 19:1, 2, 5; veja LIBERDADE; LIBERTO, HOMEM LIVRE.

ESCRAVO FIEL E DISCRETO.

Ao responder à pergunta dos apóstolos sobre a futura presença dele e a terminação do existente sistema de coisas, Jesus Cristo incluiu uma parábola, ou ilustração, que tratava de um "escravo fiel e discreto". O amo do escravo fiel designou-o sobre os seus domésticos, ou servos domésticos, para dar-lhes o seu alimento. Se fosse aprovado na volta do seu amo (evidentemente de uma viagem), o escravo seria recompensado por ser encarregado de todos os bens do seu amo. — Mt 24:3, 45-51.

Na ilustração paralela, em Lucas 12:42-48, o escravo é chamado de mordomo, isto é, de gerente ou administrador doméstico, alguém encarregado de servos, embora ele mesmo seja servo. Esta posição, nos tempos antigos, frequentemente era ocupada por um escravo fiel. (Veja Gên 24:2; também o caso de José, em Gên 39:1-6.) Na ilustração de Jesus, o mordomo, no começo, só foi encarregado da supervisão e do fornecimento no tempo apropriado dos alimentos ao corpo de ajudantes, ou servos, do amo, e, depois, por ter cuidado fiel e discretamente deste ministério, sua designação foi ampliada para abranger a supervisão de todos os bens do amo. Quanto à identificação do "amo" (gr.: ký·ri·os, também traduzido por "senhor"), Jesus já mostrara que ele mesmo ocupava tal posição com relação aos seus discípulos, e ocasionalmente estes se dirigiam a ele como tal. (Mt 10:24, 25; 18:21; 24:42; Jo 13:6, 13) Resta a pergunta sobre a quem se aplica a figura do escravo, ou mordomo, fiel e discreto, e o que representa distribuir ele alimentos aos domésticos.

"Escravo" está no singular. Mas isso não exige que o "escravo" aponte para apenas uma pessoa específica a ter um privilégio tão grande. As Escrituras trazem exemplos do uso de uma palavra no singular para se referir a um grupo. Vemos um exemplo disso quando Jeová se dirigiu à nação de Israel e disse: "Vós sois as minhas testemunhas [plural], . . . sim, meu servo [singular] a quem escolhi." (Is 43:10) Outro exemplo é o do "anticristo", que é um grupo formado por pessoas que são anticristos. (1Jo 2:18; 2Jo 7) Da mesma forma, o "escravo" é coletivo. Seria designado no tempo do fim como um canal para fornecer alimento espiritual "no tempo apropriado". (Mt 24:3, 45; Lu 12:42) No primeiro século, Jesus estabeleceu o modelo de como o alimento espiritual seria fornecido na congregação cristã. Assim como Jesus alimentou milhares pelas mãos de poucos discípulos, da mesma forma o alimento espiritual seria fornecido pelas mãos de poucos. (Mt 14:19; Mr 6:41; Lu 9:16) Jesus treinou os apóstolos para o papel que teriam depois do Pentecostes de 33 EC: eles seriam o canal que daria alimento espiritual. Mais tarde outros anciãos se juntaram aos apóstolos como um corpo governante para resolver problemas e organizar a obra de pregação e ensino das boas novas do Reino. (At 2:42; 8:14; 15:1, 2, 6-29) Depois da morte dos apóstolos, houve uma grande apostasia. Mas, no tempo do fim (mantendo o padrão estabelecido no primeiro século de alimentar muitos pelas mãos de poucos), Jesus escolheu um pequeno grupo de homens ungidos para servir como o "escravo fiel e discreto". O papel desse grupo é preparar e distribuir o alimento espiritual durante a presença de Jesus.

Os domésticos são todos os que se beneficiam do alimento espiritual e que fazem parte da congregação cristã, tanto os ungidos como os das "outras ovelhas". (Jo 10:16) Isso inclui os membros individuais do "escravo fiel e discreto", já que eles também recebem o alimento espiritual. Os que fazem parte do "escravo fiel e discreto" vão receber responsabilidades ainda maiores caso sejam considerados fiéis na prometida vinda do amo. Quando eles receberem sua recompensa celestial e se tornarem reis junto com Cristo, o amo os designará sobre "todos os seus bens". Junto com os outros dos 144.000, eles compartilharão da grande autoridade celestial de Cristo. — Mt 24:46, 47; Lu 12:43, 44.

ESCRAVO FIEL E PRUDENTE. Veja ESCRAVO FIEL E DISCRETO.

ESCRIBA. Secretário, ou copista das Escrituras; mais tarde, alguém instruído na Lei. A palavra hebraica so·fér, que deriva duma raiz que significa "contar", é traduzida "secretário", "escriba", "copista"; e a palavra grega gram·ma·teús é vertida por "escriba" e "instrutor público". O termo subentende alguém que tem instrução. A tribo de Zebulão tinha alguns que possuíam "o equipamento de escrevente", para contar e alistar tropas. (Jz 5:14; compare isso com 2Rs 25:19; 2Cr 26:11.) Havia escribas, ou secretários, relacionados com o templo. (2Cr 34:9, 13) O secretário do Rei Jeoás cooperou com o sumo sacerdote em contar o dinheiro contribuído e depois entregou-o àqueles que pagavam os trabalhadores que consertavam o templo. (2Rs 12:10-12) Baruque escrevia o que o profeta Jeremias ditava. (Je 36:32) Secretários do Rei Assuero, da Pérsia, trabalharam sob a direção de Hamã em assentar por escrito o decreto de destruição dos judeus, e sob Mordecai, quando se emitiu o decreto contrário. — Est 3:12; 8:9.

O escriba egípcio costumava ser homem da classe inferior, mas inteligente. Era bem instruído. Levava consigo seu equipamento, que consistia numa paleta com cavidades para tintas de diferentes cores, um jarro de água e um estojo para pincéis de junco. Ele conhecia os formulários legais e comerciais em uso. Recebia remuneração por preencher tais formulários, transcrever ditados, e assim por diante.

Em Babilônia, o escriba ocupava uma posição profissional. Seus serviços eram praticamente in-dispensáveis, visto que a lei exigia que transações comerciais fossem assentadas por escrito, devidamente assinadas pelas partes envolvidas e atestadas por testemunhas. O secretário ficava sentado perto do portão da cidade, onde se realizava a maioria dos negócios, com o estilo e uma massa de argila, pronto para vender seus serviços a quem quisesse. Os escribas registravam transações comerciais, escreviam cartas, preparavam documentos, cuidavam dos registros dos templos e realizavam outros deveres secretariais.

Os escribas hebreus atuavam como notários, preparavam certificados de divórcio e registravam outras transações. Pelo menos em tempos posteriores, não tinham remuneração fixa, de modo que se podia combinar isso com eles de antemão. Usualmente era uma das partes da transação que pagava a remuneração, mas às vezes ambas participavam nisso. Ezequiel, na sua visão, observou um homem com tinteiro de escrevente fazer um trabalho de marcação. — Ez 9:3, 4.

Copistas das Escrituras. Foi nos dias de Esdras, o sacerdote, que os escribas (soh·ferím, "soferins") começaram a ter destaque como grupo distinto. Eram copistas das Escrituras Hebraicas, muito cuidadosos no seu trabalho, e que tinham horror a erros. Com o passar do tempo, tornaram-se extremamente meticulosos, chegando até a contar não só as palavras copiadas, mas também as letras. Até alguns séculos depois de Cristo estar na Terra, o hebraico escrito consistia apenas em consoantes, e a omissão ou o acréscimo de uma única letra frequentemente transformaria uma palavra em outra. Quando descobriam o menor erro que fosse, o erro de escrita de uma única letra, toda aquela seção do rolo era rejeitada como imprópria para uso na sinagoga. Daí, esta seção era cortada e substituída por uma nova sem defeitos. Eles liam em voz alta cada palavra antes de escrevê-la. Escrever nem que fosse uma só palavra de memória era considerado um grave pecado. Introduziram-se absurdos de costumes. Diz-se que os escribas religiosos, com oração, limpavam a sua pena antes de escrever a palavra 'Elo·hím (Deus) ou 'Adho·naí (Soberano Senhor).

Mas, apesar deste extremo cuidado para evitar erros não intencionais, no decorrer do tempo, os soferins começaram a tomar liberdades, fazendo mudanças no texto. Em 134 passagens, os soferins mudaram o texto hebraico primitivo para rezar 'Adho·naí em vez de YHWH [JHVH; IHVH]. Em outras passagens usaram a palavra 'Elo·hím como substituto. Muitas das mudanças foram feitas pelos soferins por superstição relacionada com o nome divino e para evitar antropomorfismos, quer dizer, atribuir a Deus atributos humanos. (Veja JEOVÁ [Superstição oculta o nome].) Os massoretas, nome pelo qual os copistas vieram a ser conhecidos séculos depois dos dias de Jesus na Terra, notaram as alterações feitas pelos anteriores soferins, registrando-as nas margens ou no fim do texto hebraico. Estas notas marginais passaram a ser conhecidas como a Massorá. Em 15 passagens do texto hebraico, certas letras ou palavras foram marcadas pelos soferins com pontos extraordinários. O significado destes pontos extraordinários é controvertido.

Nos manuscritos hebraicos padrões, a Massorá, quer dizer, a escrita miúda nas margens da página ou no fim do texto, traz ao lado de diversas passagens hebraicas uma nota que reza: "Esta é uma das dezoito emendas dos soferins", ou palavras similares. Estas emendas foram evidentemente feitas porque as passagens originais do texto hebraico pareciam mostrar irreverência a Jeová Deus ou desrespeito para com os seus representantes terrestres. Não importava quão bem intencionadas fossem, tratava-se duma alteração injustificada da Palavra de Deus. Poderá encontrar a lista das ocorrências das emendas feitas pelos soferins no apêndice da Tradução do Novo Mundo com referências, página 1509.

Escribas Como Instrutores da Lei. No começo, os sacerdotes serviam como escribas. (Esd 7:1-6) Mas, dava-se muita ênfase na necessidade de todo judeu ter conhecimento da Lei. Portanto, aqueles que estudavam e obtinham muito conhecimento eram prestigiados, e esses eruditos, por fim, formaram um grupo independente, sendo que muitos deles não eram sacerdotes. No tempo em que Jesus veio à Terra, a palavra "escriba", portanto, designava uma classe de homens versados na Lei. Eles faziam do estudo sistemático da Lei e da explanação dela sua profissão. Evidentemente, faziam parte dos instrutores da Lei, os versados na Lei. (Lu 5:17; 11:45) Associavam-se geralmente com a seita religiosa dos fariseus, porque este grupo reconhecia as interpretações ou "tradições" dos escribas, as quais com o tempo se haviam desenvolvido num espantoso emaranhado de regulamentos minuciosos e técnicos. A expressão 'escribas dos fariseus' aparece diversas vezes nas Escrituras. (Mr 2:16; Lu 5:30; At 23:9) Isto talvez indique que alguns escribas eram saduceus, os quais criam apenas na Lei escrita. Os escribas dos fariseus zelosamente defendiam a Lei, mas adicionalmente sustentavam as tradições que se haviam desenvolvido, e eles dominavam o pensamento do povo em grau ainda maior do que os sacerdotes. Primariamente, os escribas estavam em Jerusalém, mas podiam também ser encontrados em toda a Palestina e em outras terras, entre os judeus da Dispersão. — Mt 15:1; Mr 3:22; veja Lu 5:17.

Os escribas eram prestigiados pelo povo e eram chamados "Rabi" (gr.: rhab·bei, "Meu Grande; Meu Excelente"; do hebr.: rav, que significa "muito", "grande"; título de respeito que se usava para dirigir-se a instrutores). Este termo é aplicado diversas vezes a Cristo nas Escrituras. Em João 1:38, é interpretado como significando "Instrutor". Jesus, de fato, era o instrutor dos seus discípulos, mas proibiu-lhes, em Mateus 23:8, cobiçarem esta designação ou a aplicarem a si mesmos qual título, como faziam os escribas. (Mt 23:2, 6, 7) Os escribas dos judeus, junto com os fariseus, foram fortemente condenados por Jesus por terem feito acréscimos à Lei e provido subterfúgios com que se esquivar da Lei, de modo que lhes disse: "Invalidastes a palavra de Deus por causa da vossa tradição." Citou um caso disso: Eles permitiam que alguém que deveria ajudar seu pai ou sua mãe evitasse isso — por alegar que os bens ou propriedades que tinha, com os quais poderia ajudar os pais, eram uma dádiva dedicada a Deus. — Mt 15:1-9; Mr 7:10-13; veja CORBÃ.

Jesus declarou que os escribas, assim como os fariseus, haviam acrescentado muitas coisas, tornando a Lei penosa para o povo cumprir, sobrecarregando as pessoas. Além disso, como classe, eles não tinham genuíno amor às pessoas, nem desejavam ajudá-las, não estando dispostos nem mesmo a mover um dedo para aliviar as cargas sobre o povo. Gostavam das aclamações do povo e dos títulos altissonantes. Sua religião era uma fachada, um rito, e eles eram hipócritas. Jesus mostrou quão difícil sua atitude e suas práticas tinham tornado eles obterem o favor de Deus, dizendo-lhes: "Serpentes, descendência de víboras, como haveis de fugir do julgamento da Geena?" (Mt 23:1-33) Os escribas tinham grande responsabilidade, porque conheciam a Lei. Mas, tiravam a chave do conhecimento. Não se contentavam de negar-se a reconhecer Jesus, de quem as cópias das Escrituras que usavam davam testemunho, mas aumentavam sua condição repreensível por lutar implacavelmente para impedir que outros o reconhecessem, sim, que escutassem Jesus. — Lu 11:52; Mt 23:13; Jo 5:39; 1Te 2:14-16.

Os escribas, como "rabis", no seu cargo, não somente eram responsáveis pelo desenvolvimento teorético da Lei e pelo ensino dela, mas tinham também autoridade jurídica, proferindo sentenças nos tribunais de justiça. Havia escribas na alta corte judaica, o Sinédrio. (Mt 26:57; Mr 15:1) Não deviam receber nenhuma remuneração pelos julgamentos, porque a Lei proibia presentes ou subornos. Alguns rabinos talvez tivessem herdado sua riqueza; quase todos tinham um ofício, do qual se orgulhavam, por serem capazes de se sustentar à parte do seu cargo rabínico. Embora não pudessem corretamente receber nada por trabalharem como juízes, eles talvez esperassem receber e recebessem remuneração por ensinar a Lei. Isto talvez possa ser inferido das palavras de Jesus, quando advertiu as multidões sobre a ganância dos escribas, também quando falou sobre o empregado que não se importava com as ovelhas. (Mr 12:37-40; Jo 10:12, 13) Pedro advertiu os pastores cristãos contra tirarem lucro do seu cargo. — 1Pe 5:2, 3.

Copistas das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Na carta do apóstolo Paulo aos colossenses, ele ordena que esta carta seja também lida na congregação dos laodicenses, em troca da enviada a Laodiceia. (Col 4:16) Sem dúvida, todas as congregações desejavam ler todas as cartas congregacionais dos apóstolos e de seus comembros no corpo governante cristão, de modo que se faziam cópias para posterior consulta e para dar-lhes maior divulgação. As antigas coleções das cartas de Paulo (cópias dos originais) são evidência de que se faziam muitas cópias delas e de que eram muito divulgadas.

Jerônimo, tradutor da Bíblia, do quarto século, e Orígenes, do terceiro século EC, dizem que Mateus escreveu seu Evangelho em hebraico. Dirigia-se primariamente aos judeus. Mas, havia muitos judeus helenizados entre os da Dispersão; portanto, é possível que o próprio Mateus traduzisse mais tarde seu Evangelho para o grego. Marcos escreveu seu Evangelho visando primariamente leitores gentios, conforme indicam suas explicações de costumes e ensinos judaicos, sua tradução de certas expressões que não seriam entendidas por leitores romanos, e por outras explanações. Tanto o Evangelho de Mateus como o de Marcos destinavam-se a ter ampla circulação, e, necessariamente, seriam feitas e distribuídas muitas cópias.

Os copistas cristãos, frequentemente, não eram profissionais, mas por terem respeito e muito apreço pelo valor dos inspirados escritos cristãos, copiavam-nos com cuidado. Exemplo típico da obra destes primitivos copistas cristãos é o fragmento mais antigo existente de qualquer parte das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o Papiro Rylands N.º 457. Escrito em ambos os lados, consiste em apenas 100 caracteres gregos e tem sido datado como já da primeira metade do segundo século EC. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 323) Embora aparente certa informalidade e não tenha pretensões de ser escrita sofisticada, é uma obra cuidadosa. É interessante que este fragmento é dum códice que provavelmente continha todo o Evangelho de João, ou umas 66 folhas, ao todo cerca de 132 páginas.

Um testemunho mais extenso, mas de data posterior, é dado pelos papiros bíblicos Chester Beatty. Estes consistem em partes de 11 códices gregos, produzidos entre o segundo e o quarto século EC.

Contêm partes de 9 livros bíblicos hebraicos e 15 cristãos. São bastante representativos por se encontrar neles uma variedade de estilos de escrita. Diz-se de um códice que ele é "a obra de um bom escriba profissional". De outro se diz: "A escrita é bem correta, e embora não tenha pretensões caligráficas, é a obra de um escriba competente." E de mais outro: "A mão é rude, mas em geral correta." — The Chester Beatty Biblical Papyri: Descriptions and Texts of Twelve Manuscripts on Papyrus of the Greek Bible (Os Papiros Bíblicos Chester Beatty: Descrições e Textos de Doze Manuscritos em Papiro da Bíblia Grega), de Frederic Kenyon, Londres, 1933, Fascículo I, Introdução Geral, p. 14; 1933, Fascículo II, Os Evangelhos e Atos, Texto, p. ix; 1936, Fascículo III, Revelação, Prefácio.

Mais importante do que estas características, porém, é sua matéria. De modo geral, corroboram aqueles manuscritos de velino, do quarto século, chamados de "Neutros", que são altamente conceituados pelos eruditos textuais Westcott e Hort; entre estes se encontram o Vaticano N.º 1209 e o Sinaítico. Além disso, eles não contêm nenhuma das notáveis interpolações encontradas em certos manuscritos de velino classificados, talvez erroneamente, de "Ocidentais".

Existem hoje milhares de manuscritos que datam especialmente do quarto século EC em diante. Que os copistas usavam de extremo cuidado pode ser visto pelos peritos que examinaram e compararam detidamente esses manuscritos. Alguns desses peritos fizeram recensões ou cotejos baseados nessas comparações. Essas recensões constituem os textos básicos para nossas traduções modernas. Os peritos Westcott e Hort declararam que "a quantidade daquilo que, em algum sentido, possa ser chamado de variação substancial é apenas uma pequena fração de toda a variação residuária, e dificilmente pode constituir mais do que uma milésima parte do texto inteiro". (The New Testament in the Original Greek [O Novo Testamento no Grego Original], Graz, 1974, Vol. II, p. 2) Sir Frederic Kenyon declarou a respeito dos papiros Chester Beatty: "A primeira e mais importante conclusão a que se chega do exame deles é a satisfatória, no sentido de que eles confirmam a essencial correção dos textos existentes. Não se revela nenhuma variação notável ou fundamental quer no Velho quer no Novo Testamento. Não existem importantes omissões ou acréscimos de passagens, e nem variações que afetem fatos ou doutrinas vitais. As variações do texto afetam assuntos menores, tais como a ordem de palavras ou as palavras exatas usadas." — Fascículo I, Introdução Geral, p. 15.

Por diversas razões, resta pouco da obra dos mais antigos copistas. Muitas das suas cópias das Escrituras foram destruídas durante o tempo em que Roma perseguia os cristãos. O desgaste pelo uso também foi responsável por isso. Igualmente, o clima quente e úmido de algumas regiões causou a rápida deterioração. Além disso, ao passo que os escribas profissionais do quarto século EC substituíam manuscritos de papiro por cópias de velino, não parecia haver necessidade de preservar as antigas cópias de papiro.

A tinta usada pelos copistas para a escrita era uma mistura de fuligem e goma, feita na forma duma massa e misturada com água para seu uso. A pena consistia num junco. A ponta, quando amolecida com água, parecia um pincel. Escrevia-se em couro e papiro, em forma de rolos; mais tarde, em forma de códice, em folhas, as quais, quando encadernadas, frequentemente tinham capa de madeira.

ESCRITA. Ato de escrever numa superfície letras ou caracteres que transmitem palavras ou ideias. O primeiro homem, Adão, foi dotado da capacidade de falar numa língua. Inicialmente, porém, haveria pouca ou nenhuma necessidade de ele escrever. Adão podia então fazer todas as comunicações oralmente, e, como homem perfeito, não precisava depender de um registro escrito para compensar uma memória imperfeita. Não obstante, Adão deve ter tido a capacidade de inventar algum meio de fazer um registro escrito. Mas a Bíblia não fornece nenhuma prova direta de que ele tivesse escrito, quer antes, quer depois da sua transgressão.

Apresentou-se a ideia de que as palavras, "este é o livro da história de Adão", talvez indicassem que Adão foi o escritor deste "livro". (Gên 5:1) Comentando a frase "esta é a história" ("estas são as origens"), que ocorre frequentemente em Gênesis, P. J. Wiseman observa: "É a sentença concludente de cada seção, e, portanto, aponta para trás, para a narrativa já registrada. . . . Normalmente se refere ao escritor da história ou ao proprietário da tabuinha que a continha." — New Discoveries in Babylonia About Genesis (Novas Descobertas em Babilônia Sobre Gênesis), 1949, p. 53.

Um exame do conteúdo destas histórias lança bastante dúvida sobre a exatidão do conceito apresentado por Wiseman. Por exemplo, segundo este conceito, a seção que começa em Gênesis, capítulo 36, versículo 10, concluiria com as palavras de Gênesis 37:2: "Esta é a história de Jacó." No entanto, quase todo o registro refere-se à descendência de Esaú e faz apenas referência incidental a Jacó. Por outro lado, a informação que se segue apresenta dados extensos sobre Jacó e sua família. Além disso, se a teoria fosse correta, isto significaria que Ismael e Esaú eram os escritores ou donos dos documentos mais extensos sobre os tratos de Deus com Abraão, Isaque e Jacó. Isto não parece razoável, porque faria com que aqueles que não tinham parte no pacto abraâmico fossem os que tinham o maior interesse neste pacto. Seria difícil de conceber que Ismael se preocupasse tanto com eventos associados com os da casa de Abraão, que fizesse empenho para conseguir um registro pormenorizado sobre eles, registro que abrangia muitos anos depois de ele ter sido despedido junto com a sua mãe Agar. — Gên 11:27b-25:12.

De modo similar, não haveria motivo algum para Esaú, que não apreciava coisas sagradas (He 12:16), ter escrito ou ter sido dono dum relato que tratava extensamente de eventos da vida de Jacó, eventos dos quais Esaú não fora testemunha ocular. (Gên 25:19-36:1) Também, não parece lógico concluir que Isaque e Jacó na maior parte desconsiderassem os tratos de Deus com eles, contentando-se em possuir apenas um breve registro das genealogias de outra pessoa. — Gên 25:13-19a; 36:10–37:2a.

A Escrita Antes do Dilúvio. Não há maneira de se saber definitivamente se algumas das histórias mencionadas no livro de Gênesis foram escritas antes do Dilúvio, e a Bíblia não contém nenhuma referência a escritos antediluvianos. No entanto, deve-se notar que a construção de cidades, o desenvolvimento de instrumentos musicais e o forjamento de instrumentos de ferro e de cobre tiveram início muito antes do Dilúvio. (Gên 4:17, 21, 22) Portanto, é razoável que os homens teriam poucas dificuldades em também desenvolver um método de escrita. Visto que havia originalmente apenas uma só língua (que mais tarde passou a ser conhecida como o hebraico; veja HEBRAICO) e visto que se sabe que os que continuavam a falar esta língua, os israelitas, usavam um alfabeto, isto sugere que a escrita alfabética podia ter existido antes do Dilúvio.

O rei assírio Assurbanipal falou sobre ler "inscrições em pedra da época anterior ao dilúvio". (Light From the Ancient Past [Luz do Passado Remoto], de J. Finegan, 1959, pp. 216, 217) Mas estas inscrições talvez simplesmente precedessem a uma inundação local de proporções consideráveis, ou talvez fossem relatos que supostamente contavam eventos de antes do Dilúvio. Por exemplo, aquilo que se chama de "A Lista dos Reis da Suméria", depois de mencionar que oito reis governaram por 241.-000 anos, declara: "(Daí) o Dilúvio varreu (a terra)." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 265) É bem evidente que este registro não é autêntico.

Segundo a cronologia bíblica, o Dilúvio global dos dias de Noé ocorreu em 2370 AEC. Arqueólogos têm atribuído datas anteriores a esta a numerosas tabuinhas de argila que desenterraram. Mas, estas tabuinhas de argila não são documentos datados. Portanto, as datas que se atribuem a elas são apenas conjecturas e não fornecem nenhuma base sólida para se determinar uma relação na corrente do tempo com o Dilúvio bíblico. Não se sabe definitivamente de nenhum artefato desenterrado que date de tempos antediluvianos. Os arqueólogos que têm atribuído objetos ao período antediluviano têm feito isso à base de achados que, no melhor dos casos, só podem ser interpretados como evidenciando uma grande inundação local.

A Escrita Após o Dilúvio. Após a confusão da língua original do homem em Babel, vieram à existência diversos sistemas de escrita. Os babilônios, os assírios e outros povos usavam a escrita cuneiforme (em forma de cunha), que se imagina ter sido desenvolvida pelos sumerianos à base da sua escrita pictográfica. Há evidência de que se usava mais de um sistema de escrita numa mesma época. Por exemplo, uma antiga pintura mural assíria retrata dois escribas, um fazendo com um estilo impressões cuneiformes numa tabuinha (provavelmente em acadiano) e o outro escrevendo com um pincel em pele ou papiro (possivelmente em aramaico). A escrita hieroglífica egípcia consistia em representações pictóricas e formas geométricas distintas. Embora a escrita hieroglífica continuasse a ser empregada para inscrições em monumentos e murais, duas outras formas de escrita (primeiro a hierática e depois a demótica) passaram a ser usadas. (Veja EGITO, EGÍPCIO.) Em sistemas não alfabéticos, a representação pictográfica (ou a sua posterior, muitas vezes irreconhecível, forma linear ou cursiva) podia representar o objeto retratado, uma ideia transmitida pelo objeto, ou outra palavra ou sílaba com a mesma pronúncia. Para ilustrar, o simples desenho de um olho poderia, em português, servir para dar a entender um "olho", o verbo "olhar", ou os substantivos "visão", "vigilância".

O sistema alfabético empregado pelos israelitas era fonético, cada símbolo consonantal representando determinado som consonantal. Os sons vocálicos, porém, tinham de ser supridos pelo leitor, sendo que o contexto determinava qual a palavra intencionada no caso de termos terem a mesma grafia, mas uma combinação diferente de sons vocálicos. Isto realmente não era problema; até mesmo modernos jornais, revistas e livros hebraicos omitem os sinais vocálicos quase que inteiramente.

Alfabetização Entre os Israelitas. Sacerdotes de Israel (Núm 5:23) e pessoas de destaque, tais como Moisés (Êx 24:4), Josué (Jos 24:26), Samuel (1Sa 10:25), Davi (2Sa 11:14, 15) e Jeú (2Rs 10:1, 6) sabiam ler e escrever, e o povo em geral, com algumas exceções, também era alfabetizado. (Veja Jz 8:14; Is 10:19; 29:12.) Embora fosse aparentemente figurativa, a ordem de os israelitas escreverem nas ombreiras das suas casas, implicava em serem alfabetizados. (De 6:8, 9) E a Lei exigia que o rei, ao assumir o trono, escrevesse para si uma cópia da Lei e a lesse diariamente. — De 17:18, 19; veja LIVRO.

Embora escritos hebraicos evidentemente fossem bastante comuns, encontraram-se poucas inscrições israelitas. Isto provavelmente se dá porque os israelitas não erigiram muitos monumentos para exaltar suas realizações. A maior parte da escrita, inclusive dos livros da Bíblia, sem dúvida foi feita com tinta em papiro ou pergaminho, e, portanto, não duraria muito no solo úmido da Palestina. A mensagem das Escrituras, porém, foi preservada durante os séculos por estas serem meticulosamente copiadas e recopiadas. (Veja COPISTA; ESCRIBA; MANUSCRITOS DA BÍBLIA.) Já a própria história da Bíblia remonta ao próprio começo do homem e mesmo antes. (Gên caps. 1, 2) Os registros gravados em pedra e os inscritos em tabuinhas de argila, prismas e cilindros, em alguns casos talvez sejam bem mais velhos do que o mais antigo manuscrito bíblico existente, mas esses registros realmente não afetam a vida das pessoas hoje em dia — muitos deles (como A Lista dos Reis da Suméria) contêm rematadas falsidades. Portanto, entre os escritos antigos, a Bíblia se destaca como sem igual na apresentação de uma mensagem significativa, que merece muito mais do que um interesse passageiro.

ESCRITURA, I. Conforme usada nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra grega gra·fé ("um escrito") refere-se apenas aos escritos sagrados da Palavra de Deus, a Bíblia. Havia outros documentos usados pelos escritores tanto das Escrituras Hebraicas como das Gregas, tais como registros genealógicos oficiais, públicos, histórias e assim por diante, mas estes não eram considerados inspirados ou em pé de igualdade com os escritos reconhecidos como canônicos. Até mesmo os apóstolos talvez tenham escrito outras cartas a certas congregações. Por exemplo, a declaração de Paulo em 1 Coríntios 5:9: "Eu vos escrevi na minha carta", dá a entender que ele escreveu uma carta anterior aos coríntios, a qual não existe agora. Tais escritos evidentemente não foram preservados pelo espírito santo de Deus para a congregação cristã por terem sido essenciais apenas para aqueles a quem se dirigiam.

A palavra grega grám·ma, que indica uma letra ou caráter do alfabeto, deriva do verbo grá·fo. Usada no sentido de "documento", às vezes é vertida por "escritura" em algumas traduções, em outras, por "escrito". Em João 5:47 e 2 Timóteo 3:15, a palavra é usada com referência a "escritos" inspirados das Escrituras Hebraicas. — Veja ESCRITURAS GREGAS CRISTÃS; ESCRITURAS HEBRAICAS.

Cristo e os Apóstolos Recorriam às Escrituras. Jesus Cristo e os escritores das Escrituras Cristãs frequentemente usavam a palavra gra·fé ao recorrer aos escritos de Moisés e dos profetas, como autoridade para o seu ensino ou sua obra, à base de que esses escritos foram inspirados por Deus. Não raro esses escritos hebraicos são como um todo chamados de "Escrituras". (Mt 21:42; 22:29; Mr 14:49; Jo 5:39; At 17:11; 18:24, 28) Às vezes se usava a forma singular, "Escritura", quando se citava determinado texto, referindo-se a ele como parte do inteiro conjunto de escritos nas Escrituras Hebraicas. (Ro 9:17; Gál 3:8) Outrossim, faz-se referência a um único texto como "escritura", no sentido de ser uma declaração de autoridade. (Mr 12:10; Lu 4:21; Jo 19:24, 36, 37) Em 2 Timóteo 3:16 e 2 Pedro 1:20, Paulo e Pedro parecem referir-se aos inspirados escritos tanto hebraicos como gregos como "Escritura". Pedro classifica os escritos de Paulo como parte das "Escrituras", em 2 Pedro 3:15, 16.

A expressão "escrituras proféticas" (Ro 16:26) talvez tenha referência ao caráter profético de todas as Escrituras Hebraicas. — Veja Re 19:10.

Personificadas. Visto que as Escrituras eram reconhecidas como inspiradas por Deus, como a sua Palavra, a voz de Deus — na realidade, Deus falando — elas, às vezes, eram personificadas como que falando com autoridade divina (assim como Jesus mencionou o espírito santo, ou a força ativa, de Deus, de forma personificada, e dizia que ensinava e dava testemunho [Jo 14:26; 15:26]). (Jo 7:42; 19:37; Ro 4:3; 9:17) Pelo mesmo motivo, fala-se das Escrituras como se possuíssem a qualidade da previsão e o poder ativo da pregação. — Gál 3:8; compare isso com Mt 11:13; Gál 3:22.

Essencial para os Cristãos. Visto que Jesus Cristo constantemente recorria às Escrituras Hebraicas para apoiar seu ensino, é importante que seus seguidores não se desviem delas. O apóstolo Paulo enfatiza o valor e a natureza essencial delas ao dizer: "Toda a Escritura é inspirada por Deus e proveitosa para ensinar, para repreender, para endireitar as coisas, para disciplinar em justiça, a fim de que o homem de Deus seja plenamente competente, completamente equipado para toda boa obra." — 2Ti 3:16, 17.

ESCRITURA, II. Acordo escrito, devidamente assinado e às vezes selado, contendo os termos legais para a realização de um objetivo intencionado; instrumento documentado para a transferência de imóveis. Na Bíblia, o único uso da palavra hebraica sé·fer, neste sentido específico, refere-se à compra feita por Jeremias de um campo pertencente ao seu primo Hanamel. — Je 32:6-15.

Os pormenores relacionados com a elaboração desta escritura são interessantes. O dinheiro da compra, "sete siclos e dez moedas de prata", foi pesado na presença de testemunhas. (Je 32:9) Presumindo-se que esta estipulação de 'sete e dez' era uma forma legal, significando 17 siclos de prata (c. US$ 37), o preço era razoável, quando se toma em consideração o tempo e as circunstâncias em que se vendeu a propriedade. Era tempo de guerra e de fome (poucos meses antes de Jerusalém ser capturada por Nabucodonosor).

Depois do pagamento em dinheiro, lavravam-se duas escrituras, presumivelmente idênticas, 'segundo o mandamento judicial e os regulamentos legais'. Uma delas era conhecida como "a escritura de compra, a que estava selada", e a outra era chamada de "a deixada aberta". (Je 32:11) Diz-se que apenas a primeira foi assinada por testemunhas, toda a transação ocorrendo "perante os olhos de todos os judeus sentados no Pátio da Guarda". (Je 32:12) Ambas as escrituras foram então colocadas num vaso de barro para preservação. — Je 32:14.

O costume de fazer escrituras em duplicata, mas selar apenas uma, era bem prático. Deixar uma escritura aberta permitia às partes interessadas consultá-la. Se fosse alguma vez danificada, ou sua autenticidade questionada, ou se houvesse suspeita de ter sido alterada, então se podia apresentar a cópia selada aos juízes da cidade, os quais, depois de examinar o selo, abriam-na e faziam a comparação entre os dois exemplares.

ESCRITURAS GREGAS CRISTÃS. Chamadas assim para diferenciá-las da Septuaginta grega, tradução pré-cristã das Escrituras Hebraicas. Esta última parte da Bíblia costuma ser chamada de Novo Testamento. — Veja BÍBLIA.

São 27 os livros canônicos que constituem as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Após a morte de Jesus, estes livros foram escritos, sob inspiração, por oito homens: Mateus, Marcos, Lucas, João, Paulo, Tiago, Pedro e Judas. Nem todos estes homens seguiam Jesus durante o seu ministério; de fato, tanto quanto se sabe com alguma certeza, apenas os três apóstolos, Mateus, João e Pedro, o fizeram. Marcos talvez tenha sido o "certo jovem" que seguiu Jesus à distância, depois de este ser preso. (Mr 14:51, 52) Em Pentecostes, Tiago, Judas e talvez Marcos estivessem presentes com eles. (At 1:13-15; 2:1) Mais tarde, o apóstolo Paulo foi convertido. Todos estes escritores passaram a ficar intimamente associados com o corpo governante da congregação do primeiro século em Jerusalém.

Em que língua foram esses livros originalmente escritos? Com exceção do livro de Mateus, que originalmente foi escrito em hebraico e depois traduzido para o grego, todos os outros 26 livros foram escritos no grego comum, o coiné, a língua internacional daqueles dias. — Veja MATEUS, BOAS NOVAS SEGUNDO.

Tampouco foi mera coincidência que estes inspirados homens cristãos, todos eles judeus naturais (Ro 3:1, 2), tiveram seus escritos enviados em grego. Não se tratava de comunicações particulares, mas destinavam-se a ter ampla divulgação, a serem lidas e estudadas por todas as congregações. (Col 4:16; 1Te 5:27; 2Pe 3:15, 16) Os escritores estavam sob ordens divinas de divulgar estas boas novas e este ensino até à parte mais distante da Terra, a lugares onde não se lia hebraico e latim. (Mt 28:19; At 1:8) Até mesmo em territórios mais perto da Palestina, havia um crescente número de não judeus entrando nas congregações locais. Também, ao citar as Escrituras Hebraicas, esses escritores frequentemente usavam a Septuaginta grega.

Os livros das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, alistados segundo o ano aproximado (EC) em que foram escritos, são como segue: Mateus, 41; 1 e 2 Tessalonicenses, 50 e 51; Gálatas, 50-52; 1 e 2 Coríntios, 55; Romanos, 56; Lucas, 56-58; Efésios, Colossenses, Filêmon, Filipenses, 60-61; Hebreus, Atos, 61; Tiago, antes de 62; Marcos 60-65; 1 Timóteo, Tito, 61-64; 1 Pedro, 62-64; 2 Pedro, 64; 2 Timóteo, Judas, 65; Revelação (Apocalipse), 96; João e 1, 2, 3 João, 98. Este período de menos de 60 anos é um contraste bastante grande com os quase 11 séculos que levou para completar as Escrituras Hebraicas.

Quando chegou o tempo de juntar estes livros das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs em um só volume, não foram reunidos na ordem em que foram escritos. Antes, foram colocados num arranjo lógico segundo o assunto, que pode ser classificado como (1) os cinco livros históricos dos Evangelhos e Atos, (2) as 21 cartas, e (3) a Revelação.

Os quatro Evangelhos (a palavra "Evangelho" significa "boas novas"), escritos por Mateus, Marcos, Lucas e João, fornecem-nos um relato histórico quádruplo da vida e da atividade de Jesus, sendo cada narrativa um relato independente. Os primeiros três deles são às vezes chamados de sinópticos (que significa "visão comum"), porque têm uma maneira relativamente similar de tratar do ministério de Jesus, em comparação com o Evangelho de João, contudo, cada um deles reflete o individualismo do escritor. O Evangelho de João preenche certos pormenores omitidos pelos outros três. Os Atos dos Apóstolos seguem então em sequência lógica, apresentando a história da congregação cristã desde que foi estabelecida em Pentecostes até quase 30 anos depois da morte de Jesus.

O funcionamento interno da congregação, seus problemas, sua pregação pública, seus outros privilégios e suas esperanças são considerados nas 21 cartas que seguem a parte histórica. Paulo é mencionado como o escritor de 13 cartas. A carta aos hebreus, em geral, também é atribuída a Paulo. Depois destes escritos, vem um grupo de cartas, a maioria das quais escrita a todas as congregações em geral, por Tiago, Pedro, João e Judas. Por último, como deleitoso clímax da Bíblia inteira, vem Revelação, com sua previsão de profundos eventos no futuro.

Até que ponto citaram os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs as Escrituras Hebraicas?

Os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs citaram as Escrituras Hebraicas centenas de vezes. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a Tradução do Novo Mundo apresenta como citações diretas 320 passagens das Escrituras Hebraicas. Segundo uma lista publicada por Westcott e Hort, o total das citações e referências ascende a umas 890. (The New Testament in the Original Greek [O Novo Testamento no Grego Original], Graz, 1974, Vol. I, pp. 581-595) Todos os escritores cristãos inspirados recorrem a exemplos das Escrituras Hebraicas. (1Co 10:11) Estes escritores cristãos, sem dúvida, usaram o nome divino, Jeová, ao citarem as Escrituras Hebraicas. Estes escritores posteriores reconheceram e incluíram as Escrituras Hebraicas como inspiradas por Deus e proveitosas para equipar completamente o homem de Deus para toda boa obra. — 2Ti 3:16, 17; 2Pe 1:20, 21.

Após a morte dos apóstolos, escritores não inspirados citaram profusamente as Escrituras Gregas, assim como os inspirados escritores cristãos da Bíblia haviam citado o que existia antes deles.

Para um estudo comparativo, há disponíveis mais de 13.000 manuscritos de papiro e de velino, contendo todas as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs ou parte delas, remontando desde o 2.º século até o século 16. Destes, uns 5.000 são em grego, e o restante em diversas outras línguas. Mais de 2.000 das cópias antigas contêm os Evangelhos, e mais de 700, as cartas de Paulo. Embora não existam hoje os próprios escritos originais, as cópias remontam ao segundo século, o que é muito próximo do tempo em que os originais foram escritos. Este vasto número de manuscritos tem habilitado peritos em grego, no decorrer dos anos, a produzir um texto grego altamente refinado das Escrituras, confirmando em muitos sentidos a confiabilidade e integridade de nossas atuais traduções das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. — Veja MANUSCRITOS DA BÍBLIA.

Esta grande quantidade de manuscritos induziram certo perito a observar: "O grosso das palavras do Novo Testamento se destaca acima de todos os processos discriminadores da crítica, porque está livre de variação, e só precisa ser transcrito. . . . Se trivialidades relativas, tais como mudanças de ordem, a inserção ou omissão do artigo com nomes próprios, e coisas assim, forem postas de lado, as palavras, em nossa opinião, ainda sujeitas à dúvida dificilmente chegam a constituir mais do que uma milésima parte do inteiro Novo Testamento." (The New Testament in the Original Greek, Vol. I, p. 561) A isto se pode acrescentar a observação de Jack Finegan: "A íntima relação de tempo entre os mais antigos manuscritos do Novo Testamento e os textos originais também não é nada menos que espantoso. . . . Para obtermos conhecimento dos escritos da maioria dos autores clássicos, dependemos de manuscritos dos quais o mais velho pertence ao tempo entre os séculos nove e onze A.D. . . . De modo que a certeza com que se confirma o texto do Novo Testamento excede à de qualquer outro livro antigo. As palavras que os escritores do Novo Testamento dirigiram ao seu mundo e tempo atravessaram as milhas e os séculos adicionais até nós substancialmente inalteradas na forma e certamente nada reduzidas em poder." — Light From the Ancient Past (Luz do Passado Remoto), 1959, pp. 449, 450.

Sendo parte integrante da escrita Palavra de Deus, as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs são de valor inestimável. Contêm quatro relatos sobre o ministério do Filho unigênito de Deus, inclusive sobre sua origem, seu ensino, seu exemplo, sua morte sacrificial e sua ressurreição. O registro histórico da formação da congregação cristã e o derramamento do espírito santo, que a habilitou a aumentar com tanto êxito, bem como os pormenores dos seus problemas e como foram solucionados — tudo isso é muito essencial para o atual funcionamento da verdadeira congregação cristã. Os respectivos livros, escritos independentemente para pessoas ou situações específicas, ou com intenção ou objetivo especial, fundem-se todos num grande conjunto unificado e completo, sem que faltem pormenores. Complementam e completam o cânon bíblico e são atualmente de importância, interesse e preocupação universais, primariamente para o Israel espiritual, que é a congregação de Deus, mas, adicionalmente, para todos os que procuram obter a aprovação de Deus.

ESCRITURAS HEBRAICAS. Os 39 livros divinamente inspirados, de Gênesis a Malaquias, segundo o atual arranjo costumeiro, constituem a maior parte da Bíblia.

Os livros das Escrituras Hebraicas, conforme aparecem na maioria das versões da Bíblia, podem ser divididos em três seções: (1) Históricos, Gênesis a Ester, 17 livros; (2) Poéticos, Jó a O Cântico de Salomão, 5 livros; (3) Proféticos, Isaías a Malaquias, 17 livros. Essas divisões são um tanto gerais, visto que a seção histórica contém partes poéticas (Gên 2:23; 4:23, 24; 9:25-27; Êx 15:1-19, 21; Jz 5), bem como proféticas (Gên 3:15; 22:15-18; 2Sa 7:11-16); a seção poética contém matéria histórica (Jó 1:1-2:13; 42:7-17), bem como profética (Sal 2:1-9; 110:1-7); e na seção profética encontram-se informações históricas e matéria poética (Is 7:1, 2; Je 37:11-39:14; 40:7-43:7; La 1:1-5:22).

Por combinarem e rearranjarem estes mesmos 39 livros numa ordem diferente, os judeus contavam apenas 24 ou 22 livros, e, segundo o seu cânon tradicional, agrupavam-nos do seguinte modo: Primeiro, havia a Lei (hebr.: Toh·ráh), também chamada de Pentateuco, consistindo em (1) Gênesis, (2) Êxodo, (3) Levítico, (4) Números e (5) Deuteronômio. (Veja PENTATEUCO.) Em segundo lugar vinham os Profetas (hebr.: Nevi'ím), divididos em os "Profetas Anteriores", (6) Josué, (7) Juízes, (8) Samuel (Primeiro e Segundo, juntos como um só livro), (9) Reis (Primeiro e Segundo, como um só livro), e os "Profetas Posteriores", subdivididos em Profetas "Maiores", (10) Isaías, (11) Jeremias e (12) Ezequiel, e (13) Doze Profetas "Menores" (num único livro composto de Oseias, Joel, Amós, Obadias, Jonas, Miqueias, Naum, Habacuque, Sofonias, Ageu, Zacarias e Malaquias). A terceira seção era chamada de Escritos Sagrados (Hagiógrafos, ou, em hebraico, Kethu·vím), começando com (14) Salmos, (15) Provérbios e (16) Jó; daí vinham os "Cinco Meguiloth" ou cinco rolos separados, a saber, (17) O Cântico de Salomão, (18) Rute, (19) Lamentações, (20) Eclesiastes e (21) Ester, seguidos por (22) Daniel, (23) Esdras-Neemias (juntos) e (24) Crônicas (Primeiro e Segundo, juntos como um só livro). O livro de Rute era às vezes anexado a Juízes, e Lamentações a Jeremias, para perfazer 22 livros, total correspondente ao número de letras no alfabeto hebraico, embora este não seja hoje o costumeiro arranjo nas Bíblias hebraicas.

Nem todos os primitivos catálogos tinham os livros das Escrituras Hebraicas na ordem acima. O motivo era que, naquele tempo, os respectivos livros encontravam-se em rolos separados. Para ilustrar: No Talmude Babilônico (Bava Batra 14*b*) declara-se: "Nossos Rabinos ensinavam: A ordem dos Profetas é: Josué, Juízes, Samuel, Reis, Jeremias, Ezequiel, Isaías e os Doze Profetas Menores." (Traduzido para o inglês por M. Simon e I. Slotki.) Isto talvez explique por que Jeremias precede Isaías em diversos manuscritos hebraicos escritos na Alemanha e na França.

Os Escritores. Todas as Escrituras Hebraicas foram escritas e compiladas por judeus, membros da nação 'incumbida das proclamações sagradas de Deus'. (Ro 3:1, 2) E, na maior parte, estas Escrituras pré-cristãs foram escritas em hebraico, com os seguintes pequenos trechos escritos em aramaico: Gênesis 31:47; Esdras 4:8 a 6:18 e 7:12-26; Jeremias 10:11; Daniel 2:4b a 7:28. Palavras aramaicas são também encontradas em Jó, em certos Salmos, em O Cântico de Salomão, em Jonas, em Ester e nos trechos hebraicos de Daniel. Também o livro de Ezequiel mostra influência aramaica.

Moisés escreveu e compilou os primeiros cinco livros da Bíblia. Além dele, pelo menos 31 escritores e compiladores participaram na escrita das Escrituras Hebraicas. Entre eles estão Josué, Samuel, Davi, Salomão, Isaías, Jeremias, Ezequiel, Daniel, Esdras e Neemias. Eles viveram num período de 1.100 anos, desde o 16.º até o 5.º século AEC, e tinham diversas ocupações, tais como de pastor, copista, governador, rei, profeta e sacerdote.

Alguns dos escritores da Bíblia foram testemunhas oculares dos incidentes que registraram; Moisés escreveu sobre suas experiências perante Faraó. (Êx 5:1-12:32) Recolheram certos dados históricos de registros anteriores por meio duma diligente pesquisa, como no caso da compilação de registros genealógicos. (1Cr 1-9) Muitas coisas, porém, tais como conhecimento a respeito da assembleia de hostes angélicas no céu e revelações no campo de profecia, eram assuntos que estavam além do domínio do conhecimento humano e só podiam ser conhecidos por inspiração direta de Deus. Isto, bem como a perfeita unidade do conjunto, apesar de ser a obra produto de muitos escritores de formações diversas, elaborada durante um período tão longo, atestam e demonstram que os escritores bíblicos deveras "falaram da parte de Deus conforme eram movidos por espírito santo". — 2Pe 1:21.

Cânon das Escrituras Hebraicas. Os livros das Escrituras Hebraicas não aparecem nas nossas Bíblias na ordem em que foram escritos. Joel, Amós e Jonas viveram cerca de dois séculos antes de Jeremias, Ezequiel e Daniel. Tampouco os títulos dos livros revelam sempre seu escritor. O livro de Jó, por exemplo, evidentemente foi escrito por Moisés; o livro de Rute, por Samuel. Pormenores sobre os respectivos livros, sobre quando e por quem cada um deles foi escrito, são apresentados na "Tabela dos Livros da Bíblia na Ordem em Que Foram Terminados", no artigo BÍBLIA. Veja os artigos sobre os respectivos livros para saber do conteúdo, da importância e do significado, da prova de autenticidade, e para obter outras informações.

O cânon das Escrituras Hebraicas já estava bem especificado no tempo em que Jesus Cristo estava na Terra, conforme evidenciado pelas suas declarações registradas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Por exemplo, ele citou o arranjo das três seções quando falou de "todas as coisas escritas na lei de Moisés, e nos Profetas, e nos Salmos". (Lu 24:44) Seus seguidores escreveram ou falaram sobre a "leitura pública da Lei e dos Profetas", as "Escrituras", 'a lei de Moisés e os Profetas', as "Escrituras sagradas" e "os escritos sagrados". — At 13:15; 18:24; 28:23; Ro 1:2; 2Ti 3:15; veja CÂNON.

Digno de nota é também o fato de que não se admitiu no cânon hebraico nenhum dos escritos apócrifos. Desde os dias de Esdras e Malaquias, no quinto século AEC, o cânon completo das Escrituras Hebraicas tem sido guardado e protegido contra a inclusão de quaisquer escritos de natureza duvidosa. (Veja APÓCRIFOS.) Os copistas de manuscritos, chamados soferins, mais tarde sucedidos pelos massoretas, exerciam um cuidado escrupuloso.

Originalmente, as Escrituras Hebraicas foram escritas sem vogais ou pontuação, e sem a nossa atual divisão em capítulos e versículos. Na segunda metade do primeiro milênio EC, os massoretas, que também eram copistas bíblicos muito cuidadosos, estabeleceram um sistema de sinais vocálicos e de acentos como ajuda na leitura e na pronúncia.

Preservação e Transmissão. Os soferins (escribas) judeus, embora meticulosos para evitar erros de cópia, fizeram certas emendas, ou correções, no texto onde, na opinião deles, o texto original parecia mostrar falta de reverência para com Deus ou desrespeito pelos Seus representantes. Em mais de 140 casos, os escribas judeus alteraram o Tetragrama (o equivalente consonantal do nome Jeová) para rezar ou "Soberano Senhor" ou "Deus". — Veja NM, apêndice, pp. 1502, 1509.

Hoje não existe nenhum dos escritos originais das Escrituras Hebraicas, mas há possivelmente 6.000 cópias manuscritas com todas as Escrituras Hebraicas ou partes delas. O Papiro Nash, que contém pequenos trechos de Deuteronômio, e muitos dos Rolos do Mar Morto, foram copiados antes de nossa Era Comum. Além de cópias das Escrituras em hebraico, fizeram-se muitas versões das Escrituras pré-cristãs, em muitas línguas, quer no todo, quer em parte. A primeira tradução propriamente dita foi a Septuaginta grega, começada por volta de 280 AEC. A Vulgata latina de Jerônimo também continha uma tradução antiga das Escrituras Hebraicas. A Tradução do Novo Mundo das Escrituras Hebraicas foi baseada na sétima, na oitava e na nona edição da Biblia Hebraica de Rudolf Kittel, que é a edição impressa do Códice de Leningrado B 19A, o mais antigo manuscrito completo das Escrituras Hebraicas.

Críticos da Bíblia fizeram muitos esforços na tentativa de desacreditar as Escrituras Hebraicas, classificando-as de falsificações ou então de simples folclore a que faltava autenticidade histórica. Um tipo de ataque tem sido a dissecação de diversos livros bíblicos no empenho de provar que foram escritos por mãos diferentes, como se a pessoa fosse incapaz de escrever em mais de um estilo. Tal argumento é inteiramente infundado, porque aqueles que escrevem poesia também podem escrever prosa, e vice-versa. O advogado que elabora um documento legal, fácil e rapidamente, muda de estilo quando conta alguma experiência pessoal. Quando os críticos afirmam que certos versículos, que eles tacham de "J" e em que ocorre o nome Jeová, não foram escritos pelos mesmos escritores dos versículos onde aparece o título "Deus" (hebr.: 'Elo·hím), os quais designam como "E", eles demonstram um raciocínio muito fraco.

Salientando a falácia da afirmação desses críticos, K. A. Kitchen, da Universidade de Liverpool, diz: "Em parte alguma do Antigo Oriente há alguma coisa de que se saiba definitivamente que paralele a elaborada história de fragmentária composição e fusão [texto composto] de literatura hebraica (ou assinalada por exatamente tal critério), conforme as hipóteses documentárias querem postular. E, inversamente, qualquer tentativa de aplicar o critério dos teóricos documentários a antigas composições orientais, que contêm histórias conhecidas, mas demonstram o mesmo fenômeno literário, resulta em óbvios absurdos." — Ancient Orient and Old Testament (Oriente Antigo e Velho Testamento), 1968, p. 115.

Importância. Nunca é demais enfatizar a importância das Escrituras Hebraicas, porque sem o seu código de leis, sua história e suas profecias, grande parte das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs teria sentido duvidoso. (Lu 24:27, 44) "Porque todas as coisas escritas outrora foram escritas para a nossa instrução." "Ora, estas coisas lhes aconteciam como exemplos e foram escritas como aviso para nós, para quem já chegaram os fins dos sistemas de coisas." (Ro 15:4; 1Co 10:11) Portanto, os escritores bíblicos cristãos repetidamente citavam os anteriores escritos bíblicos ou se referiam a eles, desta maneira dando prosseguimento a muitos dos temas e das promessas apresentados nas Escrituras Hebraicas e ampliando-os. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a Tradução do Novo Mundo apresenta como citações diretas 320 passagens das Escrituras Hebraicas.

Segundo uma lista publicada por Westcott e Hort, o total conjunto das citações e referências chega a umas 890.

Sem as Escrituras Hebraicas nos faltariam muitos pormenores sobre a origem do homem, a causa da morte e a promessa edênica de que a cabeça da serpente será esmagada pela semente da mulher. Sem as Escrituras Hebraicas não conheceríamos muitos dos pormenores sobre coisas tais como o Dilúvio dos dias de Noé, por que o sangue é sagrado, o pacto de Deus com Abraão, como Jeová lutou a favor do seu povo pactuado e a história do representativo reino teocrático.

ESCRIVÃO DA CIDADE. No governo municipal das cidades livres da Ásia Menor, sob o Império Romano, o escrivão da cidade (gr.: gram·ma·teús) era o funcionário público mais importante. Evidentemente, era eleito para o cargo pelo povo e atuava como o principal membro do governo municipal. Poderíamos compará-lo em alguns sentidos a um prefeito da atualidade, maneira em que algumas traduções vertem o termo. Por conseguinte, ele tinha muita influência nos assuntos da cidade, e seu cargo honroso era tido em maior estima pelo povo do que daria a entender o termo "secretário" ou "secretário da prefeitura", conforme usado em algumas traduções da Bíblia, em Atos 19:35, onde aparece gram·ma·teús num cenário e numa conotação que diferem do seu uso costumeiro quando aplicado a escribas judeus. A influência do escrivão da cidade é demonstrada na maneira em que esta autoridade em Éfeso acalmou a turba que se ajuntara contra Paulo e seus companheiros. — At 19:35-41.

O escrivão da cidade tinha acesso direto ao procônsul da província e servia de ligação entre o governo da cidade e a administração provincial, romana, da qual Éfeso era um dos centros. Isto habilitava o escrivão a atuar como intermediário entre o poder das autoridades romanas e o povo da cidade. Nas cidades asiáticas, o escrivão da cidade era responsável perante as autoridades romanas pela manutenção da lei e da ordem na sua jurisdição. Isto explica, pelo menos em parte, a preocupação expressa pelo escrivão da cidade quando o povo de Éfeso fora sublevado pelos prateiros efésios por causa da pregação do apóstolo Paulo. Era uma turba desordenada, uma assembleia ilegal no teatro. Havia a possibilidade de se levantar uma acusação de sedição, conforme o escrivão da cidade salientou ao povo. Ele temia que os romanos o considerassem pessoalmente responsável por isso.

ESCUDEIRO. Ajudante militar que carregava a armadura e as armas de um rei ou de outro líder, apoiava-o quando em perigo e estava às ordens dele. "Escudeiro" traduz a expressão hebraica no·sé' ke·lím, que significa literalmente "carregador de armadura ou de armas". (1Sa 14:6; compare isso com 1Sa 14:1.) Adversários feridos por um famoso guerreiro talvez recebessem o golpe fatal do escudeiro deste. (1Sa 14:13) Esses ajudantes eram escolhidos dentre soldados valentes, e alguns evidentemente eram muito devotados aos seus comandantes. — 1Sa 14:6, 7; 31:5.

O mortalmente ferido Abimeleque fez que o ajudante que carregava suas armas o matasse, para que não se dissesse: "Foi uma mulher que o matou." (Jz 9:52-54) Davi serviu algum tempo de escudeiro para o Rei Saul (1Sa 16:21), ao passo que um escudeiro posterior, que se negou a matar o governante moribundo, acompanhou Saul no suicídio. (1Sa 31:3-6) Escudeiros ajudaram também Jonatã e Joabe (1Sa 14:6-14; 2Sa 18:15; 23:37; 1Cr 11:39), e a guerreiros principais de diversas nações antigas, tais como o gigante filisteu, Golias. — 1Sa 17:7, 41.

ESCULTURA. Arte de esculpir madeira, pedra, metal e argila. Nos aspectos amplos deste assunto, esculpir e entalhar são termos intercambiáveis na tradução de diversas palavras hebraicas. No entanto, a palavra hebraica mais frequentemente usada, pé·sel, ocorre com referência a imagens esculpidas ou entalhadas.

A proibição dada a Israel de fazer imagens esculpidas com o objetivo de adorá-las foi declarada primeiro no Decálogo (Êx 20:4) e mais tarde foi repetida. "Maldito o homem que fizer uma imagem esculpida." (De 27:15; 4:16, 23; 5:8) Os profetas, vez após vez, salientaram a tolice de se fazerem e adorarem ídolos esculpidos, e condenavam tal prática. (Sal 97:7; Is 42:17; 44:9-20; 45:20; Je 10:14, 15; Na 1:14; Hab 2:18) Para o povo pactuado de Deus, reverenciar imagens esculpidas na sua adoração era dividir a devoção exclusiva que se devia a Jeová. Portanto, sempre que Israel se apartava de Deus e adorava as esculturas feitas pelas suas próprias mãos, compreensivelmente perdiam o favor divino. — Jz 18:18, 30, 31; 2Rs 21:7-9; 2Cr 33:7, 22; Ez 8:10.

Por outro lado, as obras esculpidas feitas para o tabernáculo e para o grande templo de Salomão não eram para ser adoradas, mas destinavam-se a fins decorativos e para transmitir um sentido simbólico. O próprio Jeová ordenou que se fizessem essas esculturas, e Ele colocou seu espírito sobre Bezalel e Ooliabe, artífices peritos escolhidos para supervisionar a construção do tabernáculo. (Êx 35:30, 31, 34) Objetos tais como o candelabro, os querubins na tampa da Arca, os entalhes nas joias do peitoral e a lâmina de ouro no turbante do sumo sacerdote são alguns dos exemplos de objetos esculpidos de ouro e de pedras preciosas no arranjo do tabernáculo. (Êx 25:18, 19, 31-40; 28:2, 21, 36) No templo de Salomão, havia esculturas em cedro, de querubins, de figuras de palmeiras, de flores e de ornamentos em forma de bagas, todos recobertos de ouro. (1Rs 6:18-35; 2Cr 2:7) De modo similar, havia uma grande quantidade de esculturas no templo pictórico visionado por Ezequiel. — Ez 41:17-20.

Por causa da condenação divina de ídolos e imagens esculpidas para adoração, não surpreende que os encontrados na Palestina por arqueólogos mostrem origem ou influência pagãs. Os israelitas não somente se abstinham de esculpir monumentos de seus grandes líderes, mas também se refreavam de entalhar relevos retratando suas vitórias militares. Todavia, relevos, estátuas e outras réplicas esculpidas, do Egito, da Assíria, de Babilônia e da Pérsia lançam luz sobre a adoração, a guerra e a vida cotidiana desses povos antigos. Algumas das coisas mais comuns encontradas revelam que os escultores usavam pedra, argila, madeira, vidro, marfim, gemas preciosas, ossos, argamassa, conchas, metais e alabastro para fabricar tronos, leões, colunas, joias, chancelas e selos, sarcófagos, tábuas de pedra, mobília, decorações murais e utensílios.

ESDRAS [Ajuda; Auxílio].

1. Sacerdote arônico, descendente de Eleazar e de Fineias, erudito, copista destro e instrutor da Lei, versado tanto no hebraico como no aramaico. Esdras tinha genuíno zelo pela adoração pura e "tinha preparado seu coração para consultar a lei de Jeová e para praticá-la, e para ensinar regulamento e justiça em Israel". (Esd 7:1-6, 10) Além de escrever o livro que leva seu nome, Esdras parece ter escrito os dois livros das Crônicas, e a tradição judaica atribui-lhe ter iniciado a compilação e a catalogação dos livros das Escrituras Hebraicas. Além disso, Esdras era notável pesquisador, citando cerca de 20 fontes de informações nos dois livros das Crônicas. Visto que muitos dos judeus se achavam bem espalhados nos dias de Esdras, era necessário fazer muitas cópias das Escrituras Hebraicas, e é provável que Esdras tenha sido pioneiro nesta obra.

Não se fornecem na Bíblia pormenores sobre a parte inicial da vida de Esdras. Ele vivia em Babilônia. Era duma família de sumos sacerdotes, mas não do ramo específico que ocupava o sumo sacerdócio logo após o retorno do exílio, em 537 AEC. O último dos antepassados de Esdras a ocupar este cargo foi Seraías, sumo sacerdote nos dias do Rei Zedequias, de Judá. Este Seraías havia sido morto por Nabucodonosor por ocasião da captura de Jerusalém em 607 AEC. (Esd 7:1, 6; 2Rs 25:18, 21) Em Babilônia, os judeus retiveram o respeito pelo sacerdócio, e, portanto, as famílias sacerdotais mantiveram sua identidade. Outrossim, a organização comunitária judaica, tendo anciãos por cabeças, continuava a funcionar. (Ez 20:1) A família de Esdras, bem como ele próprio, provavelmente estavam interessados em que Esdras fosse preparado com um conhecimento da lei de Deus. Concordemente, foi bem instruído.

Se for verdade, conforme alguns peritos acreditam, que um homem só podia tornar-se escriba aos 30 anos de idade, Esdras talvez tivesse mais de 30 anos em 468 AEC, quando foi a Jerusalém. Sem dúvida, viveu durante o governo de Assuero, no tempo de Mordecai e Ester, na época em que saiu o decreto de exterminar os judeus em todo o Império Persa. Havia muitos judeus morando em Babilônia, de modo que esta crise nacional deve ter causado um impacto indelével em Esdras, fortalecendo-lhe a fé no cuidado de Jeová pelo seu povo e na libertação deste por Ele, e isto lhe serviu de treinamento, amadurecendo-lhe o critério e a competência para realizar a tremenda tarefa que mais tarde lhe foi dada. — Est 1:1; 3:7, 12, 13; 8:9; 9:1.

Ida a Jerusalém. Foi em 468 AEC, 69 anos depois do retorno do restante fiel dos judeus de Babilônia sob a liderança de Zorobabel, que o rei persa Artaxerxes Longímano concedeu a Esdras "tudo o que solicitou" com respeito à ida a Jerusalém e à promoção da adoração pura ali. De acordo com a carta oficial do rei, os israelitas que de livre vontade desejassem acompanhar Esdras a Jerusalém deviam fazer isso. — Esd 7:1, 6, 12, 13.

Mesmo nos dias de Esdras, por que precisavam os judeus que deixaram Babilônia ter forte fé?

Muitos dos judeus tinham ficado prósperos em Babilônia, e as perspectivas oferecidas em Jerusalém não eram atraentes do ponto de vista material. Jerusalém era pouco povoada. O bom começo dado pelos judeus sob Zorobabel parece ter-se deteriorado. Um comentador, Dean Stanley, diz: "A própria Jerusalém estava esparsamente habitada e parecia ter interrompido a carreira que, sob os primeiros colonos, se abrira diante dela. . . . O certo é que, em resultado, quer da fraqueza original da crescente colonização, quer de novas incursões de tribos circunvizinhas, sobre que não temos nenhuma informação específica, as muralhas de Jerusalém ainda não estavam acabadas; havia enormes brechas nelas nos pontos em que os portões tinham sido queimados e não reparados; as encostas dos seus morros rochosos estavam atravancadas com as suas ruínas; o Templo, embora completo, ainda tinha escassa mobília e seus ornamentos eram inadequados." (Ezra and Nehemiah: Their Lives and Times [Esdras e Neemias: Sua Vida e Seu Tempo], de George Rawlinson, Londres, 1890, pp. 21, 22) Portanto, voltar a Jerusalém significava perda de posição, rompimento de vínculos, renúncia a um modo de vida mais ou menos confortável, e a estruturação duma nova vida numa terra distante, sob circunstâncias provadoras, difíceis e possivelmente perigosas, sem se mencionar a viagem longa e perigosa, visto que poderiam encontrar muitas tribos árabes hostis e outros inimigos. Exigia zelo pela adoração verdadeira, fé em Jeová e coragem para fazer a mudança. Acharam-se apenas uns 1.500 homens com suas respectivas famílias dispostos e em condições de ir, talvez umas 6.000 pessoas ao todo. A tarefa de Esdras, como seu líder, era difícil. Mas, o anterior proceder de Esdras na vida o havia preparado para isso, e ele se fortalecia conforme a mão de Jeová estava sobre ele. — Esd 7:10, 28; 8:1-14.

Jeová Deus proveu a ajuda material muito necessitada, porque a situação financeira em Jerusalém não era boa e os bens dos que viajavam com Esdras eram limitados. O Rei Artaxerxes e seus sete conselheiros foram induzidos a fazer uma contribuição voluntária, a ser usada para comprar animais sacrificiais, bem como suas ofertas de cereais e de bebida. Além disso, autorizou-se a Esdras receber contribuições para este fim no distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia. Caso sobrassem fundos, Esdras e os que o acompanhavam poderiam decidir como melhor usá-los. Os vasos para o serviço no templo deviam ser entregues integralmente em Jerusalém. Se fosse necessário, podiam-se obter fundos adicionais da tesouraria do rei. Os tesoureiros de além do Rio foram informados de que Esdras podia solicitar deles prata, trigo, vinho e azeite até certa quantidade, e sal sem limite, e que sua solicitação devia ser atendida prontamente. Outrossim, os sacerdotes e os trabalhadores no templo estavam isentos de tributação. Além disso, Esdras foi autorizado a designar magistrados e juízes, e devia-se executar o julgamento em todo aquele que não obedecesse à lei de Deus e à lei do rei, "quer para a morte, quer para o desterro, quer para uma multa de dinheiro, quer para o encarceramento". — Esd 7:11-26.

Reconhecendo a direção de Jeová nisso, Esdras imediatamente passou a agir segundo a sua comissão. Reuniu os israelitas nas margens do rio Aava, onde fez por três dias uma inspeção do povo. Verificou ali que, embora houvesse alguns sacerdotes nas suas fileiras, nenhum dos levitas não sacerdotais se oferecera, e eles eram muito necessários para o serviço no templo. Esdras demonstrou ali ter qualificações de líder. Sem se deixar abalar por esta situação, enviou imediatamente uma embaixada formal aos judeus em Casifia. Estes reagiram bem, fornecendo 38 levitas e 220 netineus. Estes, com sua família, sem dúvida, aumentaram a comitiva de Esdras para mais de 7.000 pessoas. — Esd 7:27, 28; 8:15-20.

Esdras proclamou então um jejum, a fim de procurar saber de Jeová o caminho certo. Embora a sua caravana levasse consigo muitas riquezas, Esdras não queria lançar nenhuma sombra sobre o nome de Jeová por solicitar uma escolta, depois de ter expressado ao rei sua plena fé na proteção de Jeová para seus servos. Depois de uma solicitação a Deus, convocou 12 dentre os chefes dos sacerdotes, pesando-lhes cuidadosamente a contribuição, a qual, segundo valores atuais, evidentemente era de mais de US$ 43.000.000, e confiou-a aos cuidados deles. — Esd 8:21-30.

A mão de Jeová, de fato, mostrou estar com Esdras e os com ele, protegendo-os contra "o inimigo no caminho", de modo que chegaram a salvo a Jerusalém. (Esd 8:22) Ele não teve nenhuma dificuldade de obter o reconhecimento dos sacerdotes e dos levitas que serviam no templo, aos quais entregou os objetos de valor que trouxera. — Esd 8:31-34.

Exorta Israel a Despedir Esposas Estrangeiras. Depois de oferecer sacrifícios no templo, Esdras soube dos príncipes que muitos do povo, dos sacerdotes e dos levitas que viviam naquela terra haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras. Assim que ouviu isso, Esdras rasgou a sua veste e sua túnica sem mangas, arrancando alguns cabelos da sua cabeça e da sua barba, e ficou sentado aturdido até a oferta de cereais da noitinha. Então, dobrando os joelhos e estendendo as palmas das mãos a Jeová, ele, na presença dos israelitas reunidos, fez confissão pública dos pecados do povo, começando com os dias dos seus antepassados. — Esd 8:35-10:1.

Depois, Secanias, falando em nome do povo, recomendou que concluíssem um pacto com Jeová, de despedir as esposas estrangeiras e os filhos que lhes nasceram, e depois ele disse a Esdras: "Levanta-te, porque o assunto cabe a ti, e nós estamos contigo. Sê forte e age." Concordemente, Esdras fez o povo jurar, e enviou-se mensagem a todos os anteriores exilados a virem a Jerusalém dentro de três dias, para corrigir este mal. Nesta ocasião, Esdras exortou os reunidos a fazer uma confissão a Jeová e a separar-se das esposas estrangeiras. Todavia, por causa do grande número de pessoas envolvidas nesta transgressão, não era possível cuidar disso imediatamente, mas, aos poucos, num período de uns três meses, eliminou-se a impureza. — Esd 10:2-17.

Com Neemias. Não há certeza se Esdras permaneceu em Jerusalém ou se retornou a Babilônia. Mas a má situação em que a cidade caiu, junto com a corrupção que infectara o sacerdócio, parecem indicar que ele estava ausente. Talvez fosse convocado por Neemias para retornar após a reconstrução das muralhas de Jerusalém. De qualquer modo, verificamos que ele aparece novamente em cena, mostrando-se que ele leu a Lei para o povo congregado e o instruiu. No segundo dia daquela assembleia, os cabeças do povo realizaram uma reunião especial com Esdras para obter compreensão da Lei. Realizou-se a Festividade das Barracas com regozijo. Depois da celebração por oito dias, designou-se o dia 24 de tisri como dia de abstinência e de confissão dos pecados, com oração. Sob a forte liderança e direção de Esdras e de Neemias, fez-se "um arranjo fidedigno", esta vez não oralmente, mas por escrito, atestado com o selo dos príncipes, dos levitas e dos sacerdotes. — Ne 8:1-9, 13-18; cap. 9.

Escritos. Os livros bíblicos das Crônicas, bem como o livro que leva o nome de Esdras, evidenciam que Esdras era pesquisador infatigável, tendo discernimento para cotejar as diversas versões das cópias da Lei então existentes. Demonstrou zelo incomum em pesquisar documentos oficiais da sua nação, e evidentemente deve-se aos seus esforços que hoje temos o registro exato fornecido pelas Crônicas. Temos de lembrar, porém, que ele tinha o espírito de inspiração de Deus e que Deus o guiava, visando a preservação de grande parte da história de Israel para o nosso benefício.

O zelo de Esdras pela justiça, sua confiança em Jeová, com oração, sua fidelidade em ensinar a lei de Deus a Israel e sua diligência em promover a adoração verdadeira fazem dele, como um dos da "tão grande nuvem de testemunhas", um excelente exemplo, digno de ser imitado. — He 12:1.

2. Sacerdote que retornou com Zorobabel de Babilônia a Jerusalém, em 537 AEC. — Ne 12:1, 13.

ESDRAS, LIVRO DE. Registro que mostra como Jeová cumpriu suas promessas de tirar Israel do exílio em Babilônia e de restabelecer a adoração verdadeira em Jerusalém. Inclui as ordens imperiais de restaurar a adoração de Jeová entre os judeus, depois da desolação de Jerusalém por 70 anos, e o relato sobre a obra realizada, apesar de obstáculos, para conseguir isso. Esdras, em todo o livro, apegou-se de perto ao objetivo acima. Evidentemente, este é o motivo das omissões do que aconteceu durante certos períodos de tempo, tais como entre os capítulos 6 e 7 do livro, porque o escritor não procurou fornecer um relato histórico completo sobre aqueles tempos.

Escritor. Esdras, como sacerdote, erudito, copista destro e homem que "tinha preparado seu coração . . . para ensinar regulamento e justiça em Israel" e para corrigir as coisas faltosas na adoração

A reconstrução do templo em Jerusalém e o restabelecimento da adoração verdadeira ali após o exílio babilônico.

Abrange um período de uns 70 anos após o retorno dos judeus do exílio em Babilônia.

Ciro emite o decreto de libertação, e um restante dos judeus exilados retorna a Jerusalém (em 537 AEC) para reconstruir o templo. (1:1–3:6)

A reconstrução do templo. (3:7–6:22)

- Lançado o alicerce no segundo ano após o retorno do exílio.
- Inimigos repetidas vezes interferem na reconstrução do templo e finalmente conseguem fazer a obra parar, até que os profetas Zacarias e Ageu, no segundo ano de Dario I (520 AEC), exortam o povo a recomeçar a construção.
- Uma investigação oficial nos registros persas, em Babilônia e em Ecbátana, revela que a reconstrução do templo fora autorizada por Ciro, de modo que Dario I decreta que a obra continue sem impedimento, estipulando a pena de morte para os violadores.
- No sexto ano de Dario I (515 AEC), a construção do templo é completada, após o que o edifício é inaugurado e a Páscoa é celebrada.

Esdras vai a Jerusalém (em 468 AEC) com presentes para o templo e para designar juízes. (7:1–8:36)

- O monarca persa Artaxerxes (Longímano) concede permissão para a viagem.
- Esdras e cerca de 1.500 homens, além de 258 levitas e netineus, de Casifia, partem do ponto de reunião junto ao rio Aava, levando ouro, prata e utensílios para o templo; chegam a Jerusalém uns três meses e meio mais tarde.

Purificação de Israel, inclusive do sacerdócio. (9:1–10:44)

- Ao saber da profanação resultante de casamentos com mulheres estrangeiras, Esdras faz confissão pública em oração a Jeová.
- Secanias admite o pecado e propõe que se faça um pacto para despedir as esposas estrangeiras e seus filhos.
- Ordena-se que todos os ex-exilados se reúnam em Jerusalém; toma-se então a decisão de que os príncipes investiguem progressivamente os casos individuais de profanação.
- Sacerdotes, levitas e o restante dos homens despedem as esposas estrangeiras e os filhos.

de Jeová, realizada entre os israelitas repatriados, estava eminentemente qualificado para escrever o livro que leva o seu nome. O poder régio que lhe fora concedido pelo rei da Pérsia dava-lhe motivo e autoridade adicionais para fazer a pesquisa necessária, e era lógico que um homem assim escrevesse um registro desta importante parte da história daquela nação. (Esd 7:6, 10, 25, 26) O livro, portanto, é honesto no uso da primeira pessoa para o escritor a partir do capítulo 7, versículo 27, até o fim do capítulo 9. A maioria dos peritos concorda que o livro de Esdras prossegue com a história lá onde Crônicas para, conforme mostra a comparação de 2 Crônicas 36:22, 23, com Esdras 1:1-3. Isto, novamente, indica que Esdras é o escritor dele. Também a tradição judaica atribui a escrita a Esdras.

Autenticidade. O livro de Esdras está incluído no cânon hebraico. Originalmente, estava junto com Neemias para constituir um só rolo. O Talmude Babilônico (Bava Batra 14*b*) segue esta tradição, mas, desde o século 16, Bíblias hebraicas impressas assinalam a separação, embora os judeus contem os dois livros como um só, no número total dos livros das Escrituras Hebraicas. A 62.ª edição da Bíblia pelo Centro Bíblico Católico chama o livro de Neemias também de II de Esdras. Em grego existe um livro apócrifo chamado Esdras III. Compõe-se de passagens de Segundo das Crônicas, de Esdras e de Neemias, bem como de certas lendas populares; há também um livro falsamente chamado Esdras IV.

A maior parte de Esdras foi escrita em hebraico. Mas uma boa parte é em aramaico, visto que Esdras copiou registros públicos e documentos oficiais. Estes incluíam cópias de cartas enviadas aos reis persas pelos funcionários "de além do Rio [Eufrates]", e as respostas e os decretos reais impondo ordens a estes funcionários. Esdras fornece também uma breve história de ligação entre esses documentos. O aramaico era a língua diplomática e a usada no comércio internacional nos dias de Esdras. Os trechos aramaicos encontram-se nos capítulos 4 a 7. Parte das informações de Esdras foi copiada de arquivos judaicos, e esta parte, naturalmente, é em hebraico. Esses fatos reforçam também o argumento a favor da autenticidade do relato de Esdras.

Esdras 7:23-26 registra que o governo persa aprovou a Lei de Moisés conforme aplicável aos judeus, e que os persas tiveram assim parte no restabelecimento da adoração verdadeira. As referências de Esdras aos reis persas colocam-nos na sua ordem exata. Hoje, a maioria dos peritos aceita a exatidão do livro, sendo que The New Westminster Dictionary of the Bible (O Novo Dicionário Bíblico de Westminster) diz francamente que "não há dúvida sobre a confiabilidade do conteúdo histórico". (Editado por H. Gehman, 1970, p. 291) O registro contido no livro, portanto, é fidedigno, e Esdras foi uma pessoa histórica.

Tempo e Situação. O livro de Esdras foi escrito por volta de 460 AEC, junto com os livros das Crônicas. Esdras começa por relatar o decreto de Ciro para o retorno dos judeus desde Babilônia. Foi no primeiro ano de Ciro que este rei persa fez a proclamação do retorno. (Esd 1:1) Judá e Jerusalém haviam ficado desoladas, sem habitantes, no outono setentrional de 607 AEC, quando aqueles que haviam sido deixados ali por Nabucodonosor se mudaram para o Egito. O 70.º ano da desolação de Jerusalém, o último sábado imposto àquela terra, terminaria no outono de 537 AEC. Por dois motivos, o decreto de Ciro deve ter sido emitido em fins de 538 AEC ou no começo de 537. A desolação tinha de durar até o fim do 70.º ano, e não se esperaria que os israelitas libertos viajassem na chuvosa estação do inverno, como teria acontecido se o decreto tivesse sido emitido uns poucos meses antes. Foi provavelmente emitido no começo da primavera de 537 AEC, a fim de dar aos judeus a oportunidade de viajar durante a estação seca, chegar a Jerusalém, e erigir o altar no primeiro dia do sétimo mês (tisri) do ano 537 AEC, no dia 29 de setembro, segundo o calendário gregoriano. — Esd 3:2-6.

Depois de descrever a Páscoa e a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, realizadas após a terminação do templo em 515 AEC, Esdras passa por alto o período subsequente, até o sétimo ano do reinado de Artaxerxes, rei da Pérsia, 468 AEC, quando Esdras entra pessoalmente em cena. Esdras usa a primeira pessoa desde o capítulo 7, versículo 27, até o fim do capítulo 9, mas muda para a terceira pessoa no capítulo 10, colocando-se em segundo plano, para se concentrar nas atividades de príncipes, dos sacerdotes, dos levitas e dos demais daqueles que haviam sido repatriados, especialmente tratando da correção da situação daqueles que se haviam casado com mulheres estrangeiras.

ESDRELOM. Veja JEZREEL, JEZREELITA N.º 5.

ESEQUE, I [Contenda]. Poço de água potável escavado pelos servos de Isaque no vale da torrente de Gerar. (Gên 26:20) Os pastores filisteus daquela região, porém, reivindicaram o poço como seu, e a resultante 'altercação' entre os dois grupos deu ao lugar o seu nome. (Gên 26:12-20) Desconhece-se hoje a sua localização exata.

ESEQUE, II [possivelmente: Agir Violentamente]. Descendente do Rei Saul. O registro bíblico menciona que este benjamita teve três filhos e que os filhos do seu primogênito, Ulão, "vieram a ser homens poderosos, valentes, entesando o arco, e tendo muitos filhos e netos, cento e cinquenta". — 1Cr 8:1, 33, 39, 40.

ESLI. Antepassado pós-exílico de Cristo; filho de Nagai e pai de Naum. — Lu 3:25.

ESMERALDA. Pedra preciosa, brilhante, transparente, que é uma variedade de berilo. A esmeralda compõe-se de silicato de alumínio e berílio, e de uma pequena quantidade de cromo, que dá a cor verde à pedra. Ela é ligeiramente mais dura do que o quartzo e costuma ser encontrada em forma nodular ou como cristais hexagonais distintos.

Os primitivos egípcios conheciam a esmeralda, que obtinham do Alto Egito. Ela estava provavelmente entre os objetos de valor que Israel recebera dos egípcios antes da sua partida do Egito. (Êx 12:35, 36) Mais tarde, uma esmeralda (hebr.: ba·ré·qeth) foi colocada como a terceira pedra na primeira fileira das pedras no "peitoral de julgamento" do sumo sacerdote. (Êx 28:2, 15, 17, 21; 39:10) O rei de Tiro, na endecha profética proferida por Ezequiel, é descrito como usando uma cobertura com "toda pedra preciosa", incluindo a esmeralda. — Ez 28:12, 13.

O apóstolo João, na sua visão do trono celestial de Jeová, usou a esmeralda para descrever o arco-íris que estava "ao redor do trono". (Re 4:1-3) Quando João viu "a cidade santa, Nova Jerusalém", ele observou que "os alicerces da muralha da cidade estavam adornados com toda sorte de pedra preciosa", sendo a quarta uma esmeralda (gr.: smá·ra·gdos). — Re 21:2, 10, 19.

ESMIRNA [Mirra]. Antiga cidade na costa O da Ásia Menor; agora chamada Izmir. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 946) Povoada cedo por gregos, foi destruída aproximadamente em 580 AEC pelo rei lídio Aliates. Mais de dois séculos depois, Alexandre, o Grande, planejou reconstruí-la como cidade grega, o que foi feito pelos seus sucessores em outro lugar. Esmirna tornou-se depois uma importante cidade comercial. Quando se tornou parte da província romana da Ásia, Esmirna, com seus belos prédios públicos, era famosa pela sua beleza. Possuía um templo de Tibério César e assim promovia a adoração do imperador.

Esmirna era a segunda das sete congregações cristãs na Ásia Menor às quais o glorificado Jesus Cristo orientou o apóstolo João a escrever uma mensagem. (Re 1:11) A congregação foi descrita como materialmente pobre, mas espiritualmente rica. Foi testada por tribulações, evidentemente perseguições, e foi blasfemada por alguns que se diziam judeus, mas que na realidade eram "sinagoga de Satanás". Todavia, apesar da sua pobreza e das suas tribulações, os cristãos da congregação de Esmirna foram encorajados a não temer as coisas que ainda iriam sofrer, mas a ser 'fiéis até a morte', a fim de receber "a coroa da vida". — Re 2:8-11.

ESPADA. Veja ARMAS, ARMADURA.

ESPÁLACE [hebr.: hhó·ledh]. Roedor de 15 a 30 cm de comprimento. O espálace (Spalax ehrenbergi) parece-se a uma massa cilíndrica de pernas curtas, sem cauda e sem pescoço, de pelo macio, grosso, geralmente de cor castanho-cinzenta amarelada. A cabeça é reconhecível pelo focinho sem pelos e dois pares de grandes dentes salientes. Sob a Lei, o espálace era impuro como alimento. — Le 11:29.

Embora numerosas traduções vertam hhó·ledh por "doninha" (Al, ALA, IBB, PIB) ou "toupeira" (BJ, CBC, MC), há base para se preferir "espálace". Em árabe, língua aparentada com o hebraico, uma palavra bem similar, khuld, significa "espálace". Também, hhó·ledh pode ser aparentado com o termo hebraico pós-bíblico que significa "cavar" ou "cavoucar". Isto se harmonizaria com a cavação característica do espálace.

Os espálaces vivem debaixo da terra e escavam lugares subterrâneos para dormir e grandes câmaras para armazenagem. Estas criaturas subsistem de matéria vegetal, primariamente raízes e bulbos. Diferem assim das toupeiras propriamente, que se alimentam de insetos e de minhocas, e não são consideradas naturais da Palestina.

ESPANCAMENTO. A Lei mosaica continha provisões para a punição por espancamento. Este era feito com um bastão ou uma vara. Os juízes deviam decidir o número de golpes a aplicar, segundo a má ação cometida, tomando também em consideração a intenção, as circunstâncias, e assim por diante. A posição foi prescrita: "O juiz tem de fazer que [o delinquente] seja deitado de bruços e que diante dele se lhe deem golpes correspondentes em número à sua ação iníqua." A punição era limitada a 40 golpes. (De 25:2, 3) O motivo de tal limitação era que mais do que isto degradaria a pessoa aos olhos dos seus patrícios. Este é um dos exemplos que mostra que a Lei dada por meio de Moisés não permitia punição cruel ou incomum. O objetivo da punição era corretivo, não vingativo e perverso, como as punições aplicadas por outras nações. Aquele que fazia o espancamento seria punido se excedesse o número legal de golpes. Portanto, os judeus restringiam os golpes a 39, para que não se ultrapassasse o limite por engano e assim se violasse a lei. — 2Co 11:24.

Permitia-se ao dono de escravos hebreu golpear seu escravo ou sua escrava com um pau, se o escravo fora desobediente ou rebelde. Mas, se o escravo falecesse sob o espancamento, o dono do escravo devia ser punido. Se o escravo sobrevivesse ao espancamento um ou dois dias, porém, isto seria evidência que indicaria que o dono do escravo não havia cogitado no coração praticar um assassinato. Ele tinha o direito de aplicar punição disciplinar, porque o escravo era "seu dinheiro". Dificilmente desejaria algum homem destruir totalmente sua própria propriedade valiosa, sofrendo com isso um prejuízo. Também, se o escravo morresse depois de um ou mais dias, não se teria certeza de a morte ter sido decorrente do espancamento ou de alguma outra causa. Portanto, se o escravo continuasse a viver um ou dois dias, o amo não seria punido. — Êx 21:20, 21.

Se um homem acusasse sua esposa de ter enganosamente afirmado ser virgem por ocasião do casamento, e a acusação dele fosse falsa, os anciãos da cidade, como juízes, deviam discipliná-lo e também impor-lhe uma multa, porque dera má reputação a uma virgem de Israel. Esta disciplina talvez fosse a aplicação de certo número de golpes. — De 22:13-19.

As Escrituras enfatizam repetidas vezes o valor de golpes como medida disciplinar. Provérbios 20:30 mostra que a disciplina pode penetrar fundo, resultando em bem para a pessoa. Reza: "Feridas de contusões é o que expurga o mal; e os golpes, as partes mais íntimas do ventre." O disciplinado assim devia reconhecer que agiu tolamente e devia mudar. (Pr 10:13; 19:29) O realmente sábio pode ser corrigido com palavras e evitará a necessidade de golpes.

Visto que toda a humanidade é dada à luz "em erro" e concebida "em pecado" (Sal 51:5), as Escrituras aconselham que a vara de autoridade parental tem de ser usada estritamente, às vezes na forma de vara literal. (Pr 22:15) Assim se pode poupar a criança do desfavor e da morte. — Pr 23:13, 14.

Parece que os judeus não continuaram a restringir-se à vara, mas, posteriormente, usavam açoites. (He 11:36) Esta é uma punição mais severa do que bater com varas, e embora fosse uma punição legalizada no tempo em que Jesus estava na terra, não se baseava na Lei. (Mt 10:17; 23:34) A Míxena, que supostamente é a elaboração duma tradição oral, descreve o processo do açoitamento:

"Atam-lhe as mãos a uma coluna em cada lado, e o ministro da sinagoga pega as vestimentas dele — se rasgarem, então estão rasgadas, se rasgarem totalmente, então estão totalmente rasgadas — de modo que ele exponha o peito. Coloca-se atrás dele uma pedra, na qual o ministro da sinagoga fica de pé com uma correia de couro de bezerro na mão, dobrada e redobrada, e duas [outras] correias que sobem e descem [estão presas] a ela.

"O comprimento e a largura do manípulo da correia são da largura de uma mão; e sua extremidade tem de chegar até o seu umbigo. Aplica-lhe um terço dos açoites na frente e dois terços atrás; e não pode golpeá-lo quando está de pé ou quando está sentado, mas somente quando está encurvado, porque está escrito: O juiz deve fazê-lo deitar-se. E aquele que bate, bate com uma só mão com toda a sua força.

". . . Se ele morrer debaixo da sua mão, o açoitador não é culpado. Mas, se lhe tiver dado um açoite demais e ele morrer, terá de fugir para o exílio por causa dele."

"Quantas surras aplicam no homem? Quarenta menos uma, porque está escrito: Por número, quarenta; [quer dizer,] um número perto dos quarenta." — Makkot 3:12-14, 10; traduzido para o inglês por H. Danby.

Uma forma incomum de açoitamento foi adotada por Gideão para com os 77 príncipes e anciãos de Sucote, que negaram provisões aos seus homens quando foi no encalço dos reis de Midiã. Evidentemente, ele fez açoites de espinhos e sarças do ermo para surrá-los. Diz-se que ele lhes deu "uma severa lição". — Jz 8:7, 14, 16.

Outras nações usavam uma forma mais severa de espancamento, e não se limitavam a 40 golpes. Os israelitas, no Egito, eram espancados pelos seus feitores egípcios, sem dúvida, bem severamente. — Êx 5:14, 16; 2:11, 12.

Os romanos usavam varas para o espancamento, arrancando-se primeiro a roupa exterior. (At 16:22, 23) A palavra grega traduzida 'espancar com varas', em Atos 16:22, é rha·bdí·zo, aparentada com rhá·bdos (vara; bastão). (Veja 1Co 4:21, Int.) Ambas estas palavras gregas estão aparentadas com rha·bdoú·khos, traduzido 'esbirro' em Atos 16:35, 38, que significa literalmente "portador de vara". — Veja Int.

Os romanos também usavam açoites. A vítima era esticada, evidentemente com as mãos atadas a um poste, com tiras de couro. (At 22:25, 29) O número de chicotadas aplicadas dependia inteiramente do comandante. A punição do açoitamento usualmente precedia o pregar em estaca. O relato diz que, depois de Pilatos ter cedido ao insistente clamor dos judeus, de que Jesus fosse pregado numa estaca, e ele lhes ter soltado Barrabás, "naquela ocasião, portanto, Pilatos tomou Jesus e o açoitou". (Jo 19:1; Mt 20:19) Os romanos usavam às vezes o açoite para 'examinar' as vítimas, a fim de obter confissões ou testemunho. (At 22:24, 25) Dois verbos gregos para "açoitar" são ma·sti·gó·o (Mt 10:17) e ma·stí·zo (At 22:25). Ambos são aparentados com má·stix, que pode significar "açoitar" em sentido literal (At 22:24; He 11:36), e, em sentido metafórico, "moléstia (doença) penosa". (Mr 3:10; 5:34) Todavia, era ilegal açoitar um cidadão romano. A Lex Valeria e a Lex Porcia, promulgadas diversas vezes entre 509 e 195 AEC, isentavam os cidadãos romanos do açoitamento — a Lex Valeria, quando o cidadão apelava para o povo; a Lex Porcia, sem tal apelação.

O instrumento mais terrível para o açoitamento era conhecido como o flagellum. Consistia num cabo em que se fixavam diversas cordas ou tiras de couro. Estas tiras tinham presas nelas pedaços dentados de osso ou de metal, para tornar os golpes mais dolorosos e eficazes. O substantivo grego fra·gél·li·on ("chicote"; Jo 2:15) derivava do latino flagellum. O verbo aparentado, fra·gel·ló·o, significa "chicotear". — Mt 27:26; Mr 15:15.

Jesus disse aos seus discípulos que seriam espancados nas sinagogas por causa do nome dele. (Mr 13:9) Esta profecia se cumpriu diversas vezes. Alguns dos apóstolos foram presos e levados perante o Sinédrio judaico, e foram chibateados, depois de se negarem a concordar em parar com a sua pregação. (At 5:40) Saulo, que depois se tornou o apóstolo Paulo, antes de se converter era feroz perseguidor dos cristãos, encarcerando-os e chibateando-os em uma sinagoga após outra. (At 22:19) O verbo grego usado nestes relatos (dé·ro) é aparentado com dér·ma ('pele'; He 11:37, Int) e significa basicamente "esfolar". — Veja Lu 12:47, Int.

Paulo foi espancado com varas na cidade de Filipos. Ele fez este incidente virar contra os seus perseguidores, aproveitando a oportunidade para defender e estabelecer legalmente as boas novas que pregava. Ele havia sido publicamente espancado e lançado na prisão, mas quando os magistrados descobriram que ele era cidadão romano, ficaram muito temerosos, porque não somente haviam chibateado um cidadão romano, mas haviam feito isso antes mesmo de ele ter sido condenado por um julgamento. Neste caso, também, Paulo e Silas haviam sido publicamente apresentados como malfeitores. Portanto, quando os magistrados mandaram que o carcereiro soltasse Paulo e Silas, Paulo respondeu: "Chibatearam-nos publicamente sem condenação, a homens que são romanos, e lançaram-nos na prisão; e agora nos lançam fora secretamente? Não, deveras, mas que venham eles mesmos e nos levem para fora." Os magistrados tinham de reconhecer pessoalmente seu erro. "De modo que os esbirros relataram estas declarações aos magistrados civis. Estes ficaram temerosos quando ouviram que os homens eram romanos. Consequentemente, vieram e suplicaram-lhes, e, depois de os trazerem para fora, solicitaram-lhes que partissem da cidade." (At 16:22-40) Assim foi vindicada a pregação das boas novas como não sendo violação da lei, porque os próprios magistrados, por tomarem tal ação, tornavam público que Paulo e Silas não haviam feito nada de errado. Paulo agiu assim, porque desejava 'estabelecer legalmente as boas novas'. — Fil 1:7.

Uso Figurado. O Rei Roboão comparou o modo como pretendia governar ao governo de seu pai Salomão, por metaforicamente se referir à punição mais severa com azorrague em contraste com chicotes. (No hebraico, a palavra para "azorrague" ['aq·rab·bím] significa literalmente "escorpiões", e, pelo visto, era um tipo de chicote com nós, ou com extremidades farpadas, parecidas ao aguilhão do escorpião, ou talvez com galhinhos nodosos ou espinhosos.) — 1Rs 12:11-14 n.

Quando Jeová fez com Davi um pacto para um reino, Ele disse a Davi que o trono ficaria estabelecido na sua linhagem, mas que, se a dinastia dele ou qualquer dos seus descendentes agisse de modo errado, iria "repreendê-lo com vara de homens e com pancadas dos filhos de Adão". (2Sa 7:14; Sal 89:32) Isto realmente ocorreu quando Jeová permitiu que os reis das nações gentias derrotassem os reis de Judá, especialmente quando Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia, tirou Zedequias do trono em Jerusalém. — Je 52:1-11.

Jeová disse que as nações que os israelitas deixassem de desapossar se tornariam 'como açoites nos seus lados'. (Jos 23:13) Isaías 10:24-26 mostra que, ao passo que o assírio usou a vara para golpear injustamente a Sião, Jeová brandiria contra o assírio "um chicote". Uma praga, uma doença ou uma calamidade enviada por Jeová como punição era chamada de flagelo. (Núm 16:43-50; 25:8, 9; Sal 106:29, 30) A disciplina da parte de Jeová é comparada a açoites. — He 12:6.

Isaías profetizou que o Messias carregaria as doenças e as dores daqueles que exercessem fé nele. Disse: "Por causa das suas feridas tem havido cura para nós." (Is 53:3-5) Pedro aplica esta profecia a Jesus Cristo, dizendo: "Ele mesmo levou os nossos pecados no seu próprio corpo, no madeiro, a fim de que acabássemos com os pecados e vivêssemos para a justiça. E 'pelos seus vergões fostes sarados.'" — 1Pe 2:24.

ESPANHA. País situado na península Ibérica, no SO da Europa. Depois de o apóstolo Paulo visitar os cristãos romanos, ele esperava ser escoltado parte do caminho para lá por seus concrentes em Roma. (Ro 15:23, 24, 28) Não há certeza sobre se o apóstolo realmente chegou à Espanha. Todavia, Clemente de Roma declarou (c. 95 EC) que Paulo chegou “ao extremo limite do oeste”, que pode ter incluído a Espanha. (The Ante-Nicene Fathers [Os Pais Antenicenos], Vol. I, p. 6: “A Primeira Epístola de Clemente aos Coríntios”, cap. V) Se é que chegou àquele país, a visita provavelmente ocorreu entre a soltura de Paulo do seu primeiro encarceramento em Roma (c. 61 EC) e o seu novo encarceramento ali por volta de 65 EC. Naquele tempo, a Espanha estava sob domínio romano. Alguns identificam Társis com a parte meridional da Espanha. — Veja TÁRSIS N.º 4.

ESPANTALHO. Objeto tal como um poste ou uma pilha de pedras, usualmente numa forma que sugere uma figura humana, posto num campo, de modo a espantar aves ou outros animais. Jeremias comparou os ídolos das nações ao “espantalho [hebr.: tó·mer] do pepinal”. (Je 10:5) A palavra tó·mer, em outro lugar, é vertida por “palmeira”. (Jz 4:5) Deveras, os ídolos das nações não eram nada mais do que um espantalho, uma falsidade. — ALA; BJ; MC; NM; PIB.

ESPANTO REVERENTE. Os verbos hebraicos ya·ré’ (Le 19:30; 26:2) e ‘a·ráts (Sal 89:7; Is 29:23; 47:12) podem transmitir o sentido de espanto ou temor reverente. O verbo ‘a·ráts frequentemente indica tremer de terror, medo ou espanto reverente, ou causar tal tremor. — Is 8:12; Sal 10:18; veja TEMOR.

A evidência discernível da presença de Jeová enchia os observadores de espanto reverente. Os israelitas, reunidos junto ao monte Sinai, viram a descida de uma nuvem escura, acompanhada por trovões, relâmpagos e o som duma buzina, que ficava cada vez mais alto. Todo o monte tremeu, e havia fumaça ascendendo dele. Esta demonstração de poder encheu os israelitas de temor; até mesmo Moisés tremeu. O objetivo desta manifestação da glória de Jeová era incutir nos israelitas um temor sadio, para que não pecassem. — Êx 19:9, 16-19; 20:18, 20; He 12:21.

As representações visionárias da glória de Jeová causavam um impacto que inspirava espanto reverente. A plataforma do carro celestial, acima da qual o profeta Ezequiel viu a glória de Jeová, cintilava como gelo que mete medo. Muito acima das cabeças das criaturas viventes, que eram representações de querubins, esta plataforma era como uma translúcida expansão, espantosa em tamanho e aparência. Através da translúcida plataforma, via-se o que parecia ser um trono de pedra de safira. A forma sentada no trono tinha o brilho amarelo do electro no fogo do refinador, estando toda a forma também cercada por uma claridade similar. Esta visão da glória de Jeová induziu Ezequiel a lançar-se com a face por terra em adoração reverente. — Ez 1:15-22, 25-28.

Somente Jeová merece tal espanto ou temor reverente, a ponto de a pessoa sentir-se movida a adorá-lo. (Sal 89:7; Is 29:23) Os cristãos são exortados a “prestar a Deus serviço sagrado . . . com temor piedoso e com espanto reverente [forma do gr. dé·os]”. (He 12:28) Os servos de Deus evidenciam tal espanto reverente por fervorosamente se esforçarem a agradá-lo, reconhecendo que ele chamará todos a contas e julgará imparcialmente. — 1Pe 1:17; Re 14:7.

Humanos e nações individuais também podem às vezes inspirar uma sensação de espanto reverente em outros, quer deliberadamente, quer não. Por exemplo, a sulamita causou uma impressão tão forte no Rei Salomão, que ele disse que ela era tão formidável como hostes militares ajuntadas em volta de estandartes, preparadas para a batalha. No registro disso, em O Cântico de Salomão 6:4, 10, o termo hebraico ’a·yóm denota algo “formidável”. Quando a nação dos caldeus saiu em batalha, ela era atemorizante. (Hab 1:6, 7) E Babilônia, por meio do profeta Isaías, foi profeticamente exortada a usar seus encantamentos e suas feitiçarias para assustar os que vinham contra ela, salvando-se assim da calamidade. Mas, todos os esforços de impedir a conquista haviam de falhar. (Is 47:12-15) Babilônia havia de cair diante dos exércitos sob o comando de Ciro, o persa. — Is 44:24-45:2.

Por causa do modo em que Jeová usava Moisés e lidava com ele, Moisés causava muito espanto (hebr.: moh·rá’) aos olhos do povo de Deus. (De 34:10, 12; Êx 19:9) Aqueles que exerciam fé tinham um temor salutar da autoridade de Moisés. Davam-se conta de que Deus falava por meio dele. Os israelitas deviam também ter espanto reverente do santuário de Jeová. (Le 19:30; 26:2) Isto significava que deviam ser reverentes para com o santuário, realizando a adoração do modo indicado por Jeová e comportando-se em harmonia com todas as ordens Dele.

ESPECIARIA. Qualquer dentre uma variedade de produtos vegetais aromáticos, incluindo aloés, bálsamo, cálamo, canela, cássia (canela-da-china), estoraque, gálbano, ládano, mirra e olíbano. Embora a Bíblia mencione também condimentos tais como cominho, hortelã, endro e sal, as palavras das línguas originais traduzidas por ‘aromas’ e “especiaria(s)” não são aplicadas a temperos alimentícios.

Especiarias eram empregadas para fabricar o óleo de santa unção e o incenso destinados exclusivamente para uso no santuário. (Êx 30:23-25, 34-37) Eram também usadas na preparação de cadáveres para o sepultamento, mencionando-se no caso de Jesus especificamente mirra e aloés. (Jo 19:39, 40; veja também Mr 16:1; Lu 23:56; 24:1.) Relacionada com o sepultamento do Rei Asa, de Judá, fez-se uma queima fúnebre extraordinariamente grande — não uma cremação, mas a queima de especiarias. (2Cr 16:14) Antigamente, especiarias eram acrescentadas a vinhos, para torná-los mais "capitosos". — Cân 8:2.

As especiarias de horta mencionadas em O Cântico de Salomão (5:1, 13; 6:2) talvez denotassem ervas aromáticas em geral, ou, conforme alguns peritos sugerem, o bálsamo (Commiphora opobalsamum). A "especiaria indiana" mencionada em Revelação (Apocalipse) 18:13 literalmente é "amomo", um arbusto aromático da família do gengibre.

ESPÉCIE. O registro da criação, encontrado no primeiro capítulo de Gênesis, revela que Jeová Deus criou as coisas vivas na terra "segundo as suas espécies". (Gên 1:11 n.) Perto do fim do sexto dia criativo, a terra já estava suprida de uma grande variedade de "espécies" básicas criadas, que incluíam formas de vida muito complexas. Estas foram dotadas da capacidade de reproduzir-se "segundo a(s) sua(s) espécie(s)", de maneira fixa e ordeira. — Gên 1:12, 21, 22, 24, 25; 1Co 14:33.

As "espécies" bíblicas parecem constituir divisões de formas de vida em que cada divisão permite o cruzamento fértil dentro de seus limites. Neste caso, os limites entre as "espécies" devem estar demarcados no ponto em que a fecundação deixa de ocorrer.

Em anos recentes, o termo "espécie" tem sido aplicado dum modo que, quando comparado com a palavra "espécie" na Bíblia, causa certa confusão. O sentido básico de "espécie" é "casta, natureza, qualidade, tipo". Na terminologia biológica, porém, aplica-se a um grupo de animais ou plantas capazes de cruzamento fértil, que possuem mutuamente uma ou mais características distintivas. De modo que pode haver muitas dessas espécies ou variedades dentro de uma única divisão das "espécies" de Gênesis.

Embora o registro bíblico da criação e as leis físicas implantadas nas coisas criadas por Jeová Deus permitam uma grande diversidade dentro das "espécies" criadas, não há apoio para as teorias que sustentam que novas "espécies" se formaram desde o período da criação. A regra imutável de que as "espécies" (mencionadas na Bíblia) não podem ser cruzadas é um princípio biológico que nunca foi questionado com bom êxito. Mesmo com a ajuda de modernas técnicas e manipulações de laboratório, não se formaram tais "espécies" novas. Além disso, o cruzamento das "espécies" criadas interferiria no propósito de Deus, de manter separados os grupos familiares, e destruiria a individualidade dos diversos tipos de criaturas e coisas viventes. Assim, em vista da nítida descontinuidade evidente entre as "espécies" criadas, cada grupo básico se destaca como unidade isolada, à parte de outras "espécies".

Desde os mais antigos registros humanos até agora, a evidência é no sentido de que cães ainda são cães, gatos continuam a ser gatos, e elefantes têm sido e sempre serão elefantes. A esterilidade continua a ser o fator delimitador quanto ao que constitui uma "espécie". Este fenômeno possibilita, por testes de esterilidade, determinar os limites entre todas as "espécies" hoje existentes. Por meio de tal teste natural de fecundidade é possível descobrir os parentescos primários dentre a vida animal e a vegetal. Por exemplo, a esterilidade constitui um abismo intransponível entre o homem e os animais. Experiências de reprodução têm demonstrado que a aparência não influi. O homem e o chimpanzé podem parecer-se um pouco, ter tipos de músculos e ossos comparáveis; todavia, a total incapacidade de hibridação do homem com a família dos macacos prova que são duas criações separadas e não são da mesma "espécie" criada.

Embora anteriormente se esperasse que a hibridação fosse a melhor maneira de produzir uma nova "espécie", em todos os casos de hibridação investigados, os pares sempre foram facilmente identificados como da mesma "espécie", como no caso do cruzamento duma égua com um jumento, que são membros da família dos equídeos. Exceto em casos raros, o mulo assim produzido é estéril e incapaz de reproduzir a variação de modo natural. Até mesmo Charles Darwin se viu obrigado pelos fatos a admitir: "Há uma [contestação] que constitui uma dificuldade evidente, é a distinção bem nítida das formas específicas, e a ausência de inumeráveis elos de transição que os liguem entre si." (A Origem das Espécies, Capítulo X, p. 289, tradução de Eduardo Fonseca; Hemus) E continua assim.

Embora as "espécies" específicas criadas talvez ascendam apenas a centenas, há muito mais variedades de animais e plantas na terra. As pesquisas modernas têm indicado que centenas de milhares de plantas diferentes são membros da mesma família. De modo similar, no reino animal, pode haver muitas variedades de gatos, todos pertencentes a uma só família de gatos ou "espécie" felina. O mesmo se dá com os homens, com os bovinos e com os cães, o que permite uma grande diversidade dentro de cada "espécie". Mas, resta o fato de que, não importa quantas variedades haja em cada família, nenhuma destas "espécies" pode misturar-se geneticamente com outra espécie.

As pesquisas geológicas fornecem evidência clara de que os fósseis considerados como figurando entre os espécimes mais antigos de certa criatura são muito similares aos seus atuais descendentes vivos. Baratas encontradas entre os fósseis de insetos supostamente mais antigos são virtualmente idênticas às atuais. Faltam totalmente "pontes" fósseis que liguem as "espécies". Cavalos, carvalhos, águias, elefantes, nozes, samambaias, e assim por diante, todos continuam dentro das mesmas "espécies" sem evoluírem em outras "espécies". O testemunho dos fósseis está inteiramente de acordo com a história bíblica da criação, o que mostra que Jeová criou as coisas vivas da terra em grandes números e "segundo as suas espécies" durante os últimos dias criativos. — Gên 1:20-25.

Em vista do precedente, torna-se claro que Noé pôde acomodar todos os animais necessários dentro da arca, a fim de serem preservados durante o Dilúvio. A Bíblia não diz que ele teve de preservar vivas todas as variedades dos animais. Antes, ela declara: "Das criaturas voadoras segundo as suas espécies e dos animais domésticos segundo as suas espécies, de todos os animais moventes do solo, segundo as suas espécies, dois de cada um virão a ti lá dentro para os preservares vivos." (Gên 6:20; 7:14, 15) Jeová Deus sabia que só era necessário salvar membros representativos das diferentes "espécies", visto que eles se reproduziriam em variedade depois do Dilúvio. — Veja ARCA N.º 1.

Depois do recuo das águas do Dilúvio, estas comparativamente poucas "espécies" básicas saíram da arca e se espalharam pela superfície da terra, por fim produzindo muitas variações das suas "espécies". Embora muitas variedades novas tenham surgido desde o Dilúvio, as "espécies" sobreviventes têm permanecido fixas e imutáveis, em harmonia com a imutável palavra de Jeová Deus. — Is 55:8-11.

ESPELHO. Antigos espelhos de mão (Is 3:23) às vezes eram de pedra polida, embora geralmente fossem de metal, tal como bronze ou cobre, e, mais tarde, de estanho, de prata e até de ouro. Foi provavelmente só no primeiro século EC que se introduziram espelhos de vidro. Visto que os antigos espelhos em geral eram de metal fundido, tinham de ser altamente polidos para ter uma boa superfície refletora. Talvez se usasse para este fim pó de pedra-pomes, aplicado depois periodicamente com uma esponja, que costumava ficar pendurada no próprio espelho. Todavia, os antigos espelhos de metal não tinham uma superfície refletora tão boa como os atuais espelhos de vidro. De modo que o apóstolo Paulo podia escrever apropriadamente: "Atualmente vemos em contorno indefinido por meio dum espelho de metal." — 1Co 13:12.

Uso Figurado. Às vezes, as Escrituras se referem a espelhos dum modo figurado ou ilustrativo. Em Jó 37:18, os céus são comparados figuradamente a um espelho de metal, cuja superfície brunida propicia um brilhante reflexo. O discípulo Tiago usou o espelho como figura da Palavra de Deus, quando instou com as pessoas a se tornarem, não apenas ouvintes da palavra, mas cumpridores dela. (Tg 1:22-25) E o apóstolo Paulo mostrou que os cristãos 'refletem como espelhos a glória de Jeová' em seu ministério. — 2Co 3:18; 4:1.

ESPELTA [hebr.: kus·sé·meth]. Espécie de trigo de qualidade inferior, cujos grãos não se separam facilmente da palha. A espelta (Triticum spelta) era antigamente cultivada no Egito (Êx 9:32), onde, segundo o historiador grego Heródoto (II, 36, 77), fazia-se pão com ela. (Veja Ez 4:9.) Os israelitas parecem tê-la plantado nas beiradas dos seus campos para servir como uma espécie de cerca. — Is 28:25.

ESPERANÇA. Pode significar confiança, fidúcia; desejo acompanhado da expectativa de se conseguir o que se deseja ou da crença de que este é alcançável; aquele em quem se depositam esperanças; fonte de expectativa esperançosa, ou de promessa; algo que se espera, ou objeto de esperança. A raiz verbal hebraica qa·wáh, da qual derivam termos traduzidos "esperança", significa basicamente "aguardar" com viva expectativa. (Gên 49:18) Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o sentido do termo grego el·pís (esperança) é "expectativa de algo bom".

Não Há Esperança Real sem Deus. A verdadeira esperança, conforme mencionada na Bíblia, é mais do que um mero desejo, o qual talvez não tenha nenhuma base ou perspectiva de realização. É também melhor do que a mera expectativa, porque aquilo que se aguarda nem sempre é desejável. A Bíblia mostra que as pessoas do mundo, em geral, não têm nenhuma esperança real, de base sólida; a humanidade vai para a morte, e sem o conhecimento duma provisão procedente de fonte mais elevada não há esperança quanto ao que o futuro trará. Salomão expressou a futilidade da situação do homem sem a intervenção de Deus como "a maior das vaidades! . . . Tudo é vaidade". — Ec 12:8; 9:2, 3.

O fiel patriarca Jó disse que há esperança até para uma árvore brotar de novo, mas que o homem, quando morre, desaparece permanentemente. No entanto, Jó indicou então que estava falando sobre o homem entregue a si mesmo; sem a ajuda de Deus, porque Jó expressou o desejo e a esperança de que Deus se lembrasse dele. (Jó 14:7-15) De modo similar, o apóstolo Paulo informa os cristãos de que eles, tendo a esperança da ressurreição, não deviam ficar "pesarosos como os demais que não têm esperança". (1Te 4:13) De novo, falando a cristãos gentios, Paulo salienta que eles, antes de obterem conhecimento da provisão de Deus por meio de Cristo, estavam apartados da nação com a qual Deus lidara no passado, e que então, como gentios, 'não tinham esperança e estavam sem Deus no mundo'. — Ef 2:12.

Expressões comumente feitas por aqueles que não têm esperança em Deus e na Sua promessa duma ressurreição dos mortos são similares às palavras dos habitantes desobedientes de Jerusalém, os quais, em vez de mostrar arrependimento e tristeza, quando confrontados com a ameaça da destruição da sua cidade, em julgamento da parte de Deus, entregaram-se a prazeres sensuais. Disseram: "Comamos e bebamos, pois amanhã morreremos." (Is 22:13) O apóstolo adverte contra ficar contaminado pela atitude de tais pessoas sem esperança. — 1Co 15:32, 33.

Esperanças Erradas. Paulo não negava que as pessoas do mundo nutrem algumas esperanças razoáveis que procuram alcançar, algumas de natureza elogiável. Antes, ele mostrou que, sem Deus, as esperanças da pessoa são inconsequentes; na realidade, no fim de contas, são fúteis.

No entanto, além das esperanças humanas menores, comuns e normais, há esperanças más. São as nutridas iniquamente. Em alguns casos, talvez pareçam cumprir-se, mas, na realidade, se cumprem apenas em sentido temporário, porque um provérbio declara: "A expectativa dos justos é alegria, mas a própria esperança dos iníquos perecerá." (Pr 10:28) Além disso: "Quando morre um homem iníquo, perece a sua esperança; e pereceu até mesmo a expectativa baseada na pujança." (Pr 11:7) Portanto, esperanças egoístas, e as baseadas no falso alicerce do materialismo, em mentiras, em tratos errados, ou no poder ou nas promessas de homens, certamente serão frustradas.

A Fonte de Esperança. Jeová Deus é a Fonte da verdadeira esperança e Aquele que é capaz de cumprir todas as suas promessas e as esperanças daqueles que confiam nele. É pela Sua benignidade imerecida que ele tem dado à humanidade 'consolo e boa esperança'. (2Te 2:16) Ele tem sido a esperança de homens justos de todas as eras. Foi chamado de "esperança de Israel" e de 'esperança dos antepassados' de Israel (Je 14:8; 17:13; 50:7), e nas Escrituras Hebraicas há muitas expressões de esperança, confiança e fé nele. Na sua benevolência para com o seu povo, mesmo quando este foi ao exílio por lhe desobedecer, ele lhe disse: "Eu mesmo conheço bem os pensamentos que tenho a vosso respeito, . . . pensamentos de paz, e não de calamidade, para dar-vos um futuro e esperança". (Je 29:11) A promessa de Jeová manteve viva a fé e a esperança dos israelitas fiéis durante o exílio babilônico; fortaleceu grandemente homens tais como Ezequiel e Daniel, porque Jeová dissera: "Existe esperança para o teu futuro, . . . e os filhos certamente retornarão ao seu próprio território." (Je 31:17) Esta esperança se cumpriu quando um fiel restante judaico retornou em 537 AEC para reconstruir Jerusalém e seu templo. — Esd 1:1-6.

É Correto Esperar uma Recompensa. A esperança do servo de Deus, de receber uma recompensa, não é egoísmo. Para alguém ter o conceito realístico e o entendimento correto sobre Deus, ele precisa saber que a benevolência e a generosidade são qualidades destacadas de Deus; precisa não somente crer que Deus existe, mas que ele também "se torna o recompensador dos que seriamente o buscam". (He 11:6) A esperança mantém o ministro cristão equilibrado e no serviço de Deus, sabendo que Jeová lhe proverá as necessidades cotidianas. O apóstolo Paulo salienta isso por citar os princípios estabelecidos na Lei. Paulo cita a lei de Deuteronômio 25:4: "Não deves açaimar o touro quando debulha." Acrescenta então: "Realmente, foi escrito por nossa causa, porque o homem que lavra deve lavrar em esperança e o homem que debulha deve fazê-lo na esperança de ser participante." — 1Co 9:9, 10.

Essencial para a Fé. A esperança é também essencial para a fé; é o alicerce e a base da fé. (He 11:1) A fé, por sua vez, torna a esperança mais viva e mais forte. Para fortalecer os cristãos, o apóstolo Paulo cita o belo exemplo de Abraão. A respeito de Abraão e sua esposa Sara, quando do ponto de vista humano já estavam além da esperança de ter filhos, diz-se: "Embora além de esperança, contudo, baseado na esperança, ele teve fé, para tornar-se pai de muitas nações, de acordo com o que se dissera: 'Assim será o teu descendente [ou: semente].'" Abraão sabia que, no que se referia a gerar filhos, o corpo dele e o de Sara estavam 'amortecidos'. Mas, ele não ficou fraco na fé. Por que não? "Por causa da promessa de Deus, não vacilou com falta de fé, mas tornou-se poderoso pela sua fé." — Ro 4:18-20.

O apóstolo aplica então aos cristãos o exemplo de fé e de esperança de Abraão, concluindo: "Exultemos, baseados na esperança da glória de Deus . . . e a esperança não conduz a desapontamento; porque o amor de Deus tem sido derramado em nossos corações por intermédio do espírito santo, que nos foi dado." — Ro 5:2, 5.

A Esperança Cristã. A esperança do cristão, e, de fato, da humanidade está em Jesus Cristo. Obter a vida duradoura no céu ou na terra só se tornou possível para a humanidade quando Cristo Jesus "lançou luz sobre a vida e a incorrupção por intermédio das boas novas". (2Ti 1:10) Os irmãos de Cristo, gerados pelo espírito, são informados de que eles têm esperança celestial por causa da grande misericórdia de Deus, o qual lhes deu "um novo nascimento para uma esperança viva por intermédio da ressurreição de Jesus Cristo dentre os mortos". (1Pe 1:3, 4; Col 1:5, 27; Tit 1:1, 2; 3:6, 7) Esta feliz esperança se cumprirá "na revelação de Jesus Cristo". (1Pe 1:13, 21; Tit 2:13) Cristo Jesus é por isso chamado pelo apóstolo Paulo de "nossa esperança". — 1Ti 1:1.

Esta esperança de vida eterna e de incorrupção daqueles que são "participantes da chamada celestial" (He 3:1) tem base sólida e é algo em que se pode confiar. É apoiada por duas coisas, nas quais é impossível que Deus minta, a saber, a sua promessa e o seu juramento, e a esperança está em Cristo, que agora é imortal nos céus. Por isso, fala-se desta esperança como "âncora para a alma, tanto segura como firme, e ela penetra até o interior da cortina [assim como o sumo sacerdote entrava no Santíssimo no Dia da Expiação], onde um precursor entrou a nosso favor, Jesus, que se tornou sumo sacerdote para sempre à maneira de Melquisedeque". — He 6:17-20.

Tem de ser desenvolvida e mantida. A necessidade de os cristãos se apegarem a esta "uma só esperança" (Ef 4:4) é constantemente enfatizada na Bíblia. Isto requer contínua diligência e o exercício da franqueza no falar, bem como "jactância" a respeito da própria esperança. (He 3:6; 6:11) A esperança é desenvolvida pela perseverança em tribulação; isto leva a uma condição aprovada perante Deus, de quem procede a esperança. (Ro 5:2-5) Ela é colocada lado a lado com a fé e o amor, como uma das três qualidades que caracterizam a congregação cristã desde o desaparecimento dos dons milagrosos do espírito, que havia na congregação do primeiro século. — 1Co 13:13.

Qualidades e benefícios. A esperança é indispensável para o cristão. Acompanha a alegria, a paz e o poder de espírito santo. (Ro 15:13) Promove a franqueza no falar na aproximação a Deus em busca da Sua benignidade imerecida e misericórdia. (2Co 3:12) Habilita o cristão a perseverar com alegria, não importa quais as condições existentes. (Ro 12:12; 1Te 1:3) Assim como o capacete protege a cabeça do guerreiro, assim a esperança da salvação protege as faculdades mentais, habilitando o cristão a manter a integridade. (1Te 5:8) A esperança é fortalecedora, porque, embora o cristão ungido enquanto na terra não possua a recompensa da vida celestial, seu desejo com expectativa é tão forte que, apesar de severas provações e dificuldades, ele continua aguardando pacientemente, com perseverança, a coisa esperada. — Ro 8:24, 25.

A esperança ajuda o cristão a levar uma vida limpa, porque sabe que Deus e Cristo, em quem tem esperança, são puros, e que ele não pode esperar ser semelhante a Deus e receber a recompensa, se praticar impureza ou injustiça. (1Jo 3:2, 3) É intimamente aliada à maior das qualidades, o amor, porque aquele que tem o verdadeiro amor de Deus também terá esperança em todas as promessas de Deus. E, além disso, esperará o melhor para os seus irmãos na fé, amando-os e confiando na sua sinceridade de coração em Cristo. — 1Co 13:4, 7; 1Te 2:19.

Superior à esperança sob a Lei. Antes de se dar a Lei a Israel, os antepassados fiéis daquela nação tinham esperança em Deus. (At 26:6, 7; Gên 22:18; Miq 7:20; 2Ti 1:3) Esperavam de Deus a provisão de vida. Quando a Lei veio, parecia no começo que aí haveria o cumprimento da sua esperança. Mas, ao contrário, a Lei expôs todos como pecadores perante Deus, e, por tornar manifestas as transgressões, condenou todos à morte. (Gál 3:19; Ro 7:7-11) A própria Lei era santa, não má; mas, pela sua própria santidade e justiça, expunha as imperfeições dos que estavam sob ela. (Ro 7:12) Conforme predito pelos profetas, era necessário que Deus trouxesse uma "melhor esperança" por meio de Jesus Cristo, pondo de lado a Lei e habilitando os que depositassem fé em Cristo a chegar-se a Deus. — He 7:18, 19; 11:40; compare isso com Je 31:31-34.

Esperança para toda a humanidade. A benignidade imerecida de Deus é adicionalmente magnificada porque a maravilhosa esperança que ela abriu para os irmãos espirituais de Jesus Cristo, de serem co-herdeiros dele da chamada celestial (He 3:1), está também intimamente vinculada a uma esperança de todos os da humanidade que desejam servir a Deus. O apóstolo Paulo, depois de delinear a esperança dos que têm a expectativa de se tornarem "filhos de Deus" celestiais e co-herdeiros de Cristo, explica: "A expectativa ansiosa da criação está esperando a revelação dos filhos de Deus. Porque a criação estava sujeita à futilidade, não de sua própria vontade, mas por intermédio daquele que a sujeitou, à base da esperança de que a própria criação também será liberta da escravização à corrupção e terá a liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus." — Ro 8:14, 17, 19-21.

Segundo as palavras de Paulo, em Romanos 8:20, 21, Jeová Deus não destruiu o ancestral do homem, Adão, por ocasião do pecado deste, mas permitiu que, dum pai imperfeito, nascessem homens, aos quais aguardava a futilidade, não por alguma falta deliberada deles próprios, mas por causa da imperfeição herdada. Todavia, Deus não os deixou sem esperança, mas bondosamente apre-sentou uma esperança por meio do prometido "descendente [lit.: semente]" (Gên 3:15; 22:18), que é Jesus Cristo. (Gál 3:16) A primeira vinda do Messias foi predita pela profecia de Daniel. (Da 9:24-27) A pregação de João, o Batizador, suscitou as expectativas da nação de Israel. (Mt 3:1, 2; Lu 3:15) Jesus cumpriu esta esperança pelo seu ministério, pela sua morte e pela sua ressurreição. Mas, a grande esperança da humanidade em geral, tanto dos vivos como dos mortos, está no Reino de Cristo, quando ele e seus co-herdeiros servirem quais reis e sacerdotes celestiais. Será então que os da humanidade que exercem fé, por fim, serão libertos da corrupção da imperfeição e do pecado, e atingirão plenamente a condição de "filhos de Deus". Sua esperança é reforçada por Deus ter ressuscitado seu Filho há mais de 1.900 anos. — At 17:31; 23:6; 24:15.

Jeová Deus proveu sua Palavra, a Bíblia, com instruções e exemplos, para que todos os homens tivessem esperança. (Ro 15:4; 1Co 10:11; 2Ti 3:16, 17) Esta esperança tem de ser proclamada a outros por aqueles que a têm; fazendo isso, o possuidor da esperança salva a si mesmo e aqueles que o escutam. — 1Pe 3:15; 1Ti 4:16.

ESPEVITADEIRAS. Implementos de ouro usados em conexão com as lâmpadas nos braços do(s) candelabro(s), no tabernáculo e no templo de Israel. (Êx 25:37, 38; 37:23; Núm 4:9; 1Rs 7:48, 49; 2Cr 4:19-21) As espevitadeiras são designadas pela palavra hebraica no dual, mel·qa·hhá·yim, derivada duma raiz que significa "tirar; arrancar". O uso da forma dual sugere um aparelho que possivelmente tinha duas peças. Por conseguinte, em Isaías 6:6, mel·qa·hhá·yim denota uma "tenaz", com a qual um serafim tirou do altar uma brasa viva.

Faz-se uma distinção entre "as espevitadeiras" e "os apagadores" em uso no templo. (1Rs 7:49, 50; 2Cr 4:21, 22) Embora não sejam descritas nas Escrituras, as espevitadeiras talvez fossem tenazes para segurar as mechas queimadas, ao passo que os apagadores talvez fossem utensílios parecidos a tesouras para cortar a parte queimada das mechas. No tabernáculo, essas aparas, seguradas por meio das espevitadeiras, eram depositadas nos porta-lumes, que pelo visto eram recipientes para conter tais pedaços até serem descartados. — Êx 37:23.

ESPINHEIRO. Veja ARBUSTO; ESPINHO, ESPINHEIRO.

ESPINHEIRO-DE-CASCA-BRANCA [hebr.: 'a·tádh]. A palavra hebraica é tomada como se referindo ao espinheiro-de-casca-branca ou ao ramno (Rhamnus), em A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament (Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento), de Brown, Driver e Briggs (1980, p. 31). O ramno palestino (Rhamnus palaestina) é um arbusto isolado, que atinge a altura de cerca de 1 a 2 m, com raminhos cheios de espinhos fortes e afiados. Embora seja comum nas regiões mais baixas e mais quentes do país, também é encontrado nas regiões montanhosas, tais como a de Jerusalém. Walter Baumgartner identifica 'a·tádh com o espinheiro-alvar ou Lycium europaeum, um espinheiro que atinge de 1 a 2 m de altura, tendo pequenas flores violetas e produzindo redondas frutinhas vermelhas, comestíveis. — Hebräisches und Aramäisches Lexikon zum Alten Testament (Léxico Hebraico e Aramaico do Velho Testamento), Leiden, 1967, p. 36; veja ESPINHO, ESPINHEIRO.

O espinheiro-de-casca-branca se destaca no relato de Juízes 9:8-15, no qual a oliveira, a figueira e a videira são contrastadas com este humilde espinheiro. Conforme evidencia o restante do capítulo, as plantas valiosas representam pessoas dignas, tais como os 70 filhos de Gideão, que não procuraram para si a posição de realeza sobre seus companheiros israelitas, ao passo que o espinheiro-de-casca-branca, que só serve como combustível, representa o reinado de Abimeleque, assassino de todos, exceto um, dos outros filhos de Gideão, seus irmãos. (Jz 9:1-6, 16-20) A sugestão de Jotão, de que as outras árvores figurativas procurassem refúgio na sombra do espinheiro-de-casca-branca, sem dúvida, era irônica, visto que este espinheiro baixo obviamente não podia dar sombra a árvores, especialmente não aos majestosos cedros mencionados.

Jotão avisou que podia sair fogo do espinheiro-de-casca-branca e 'consumir os cedros do Líbano', talvez aludindo à facilidade com que esta planta seca, sem folhas, podia pegar fogo nos meses quentes do verão. O Salmo 58:9 também menciona o espinheiro-de-casca-branca como combustível.

A palavra hebraica 'a·tádh aparece também como nome dum lugar em Gênesis 50:10. — Veja SARÇA.

ESPINHO, ESPINHEIRO. Espinheiro refere-se a diversas das numerosas plantas espinhosas. Mais de 70 variedades de plantas espinhosas foram relatadas como crescendo em Israel, entre elas o sanguissorba espinhoso, a alcaparreira espinhosa, o acanto, o espinheiro alvar e o pilriteiro. Embora os espinhos mostrassem ser incômodos para o homem, não eram inteiramente inúteis. Plantas espinhosas eram empregadas como sebes (Os 2:6) e como combustível (Ec 7:6), e serviam de forragem para jumentos, camelos e cabras. Em tempos mais recentes, assim como talvez fosse o caso antigamente, o espinheiro alvar e o espinheiro-de-casca-branca, em especial, têm sido usados para sebes, e o sanguissorba espinhoso tem sido retalhado para servir de combustível em fornos para cal. — Is 33:12.

Os efeitos do solo amaldiçoado, com seus espinhos e abrolhos, foi vivamente sentido pelos descendentes de Adão (Gên 3:17, 18), de modo que Lameque, pai de Noé, falou "da dor das nossas mãos, que resulta do solo que Jeová amaldiçoou". (Gên 5:29) Após o Dilúvio, Jeová abençoou Noé e os filhos dele, declarando seu propósito de que enchessem a terra. (Gên 9:1) Parece que se suspendeu a maldição de Deus sobre o solo. (Gên 13:10) No entanto, Jeová não disse a Noé e sua família, como fez no caso do perfeito Adão, que 'sujeitassem a terra'. (Compare Gên 1:28 com Gên 8:21-9:2.) Isto sugere que o homem imperfeito, sem orientação divina, nunca poderia subjugar a terra do modo como Deus intencionara originalmente. O homem continuaria a ter dificuldades em cultivar o solo, o que incluiria ter de combater plantas incômodas tais como espinheiros e abrolhos. Sem dúvida, a má administração dos recursos da terra, pelo homem, tem aumentado seus problemas neste respeito.

Na Terra da Promessa, 'uma terra que manava leite e mel' (Êx 3:8), os israelitas tinham de trabalhar para manter a terra livre de espinhos e de outras ervas daninhas, visto que estes prontamente tomam conta de terra negligenciada ou desolada. (Is 5:6; 7:23-25; 34:13) Por fim, pela desobediência a Jeová, Israel causou ruína espiritual à nação, a "herança" de Deus, e isto se refletiu tanto figurativa como literalmente em labutarem em vão, semeando trigo, mas ceifando espinhos. — Je 12:7, 13.

Conforme destacado pela ilustração de Jesus a respeito do semeador, os espinhos ameaçam o crescimento de safras cultivadas. (Mt 13:7; Lu 8:7) Portanto, antes de se cultivar um campo coberto de espinhos e abrolhos, essas plantas incômodas eram removidas, geralmente por se queimar o campo todo. (He 6:8) Os espinhos representavam também um perigo de incêndio. Especialmente na época da colheita, quando os espinhos, juntos ao cereal em pé, estão secos, eles prontamente pegam fogo e o campo inteiro pode ser consumido quando o fogo se espalha dos espinhos para os cereais em pé. — Êx 22:6.

Em zombaria, os soldados romanos trançaram uma coroa de espinhos e a colocaram na cabeça de Jesus. (Mr 15:17; Jo 19:2) Embora a planta específica em questão tenha sido relacionada por muitos com o Paliurus spina-christi, um arbusto que atinge a altura de 6 m e tem galhos flexíveis com espinhos duros, não é possível fazer uma identificação exata.

Uso Figurado. Frequentemente, "espinhos" são mencionados em sentido figurado, ilustrativo. Os assírios, mesmo que entrelaçados como espinhos, seriam devorados como o restolho inteiramente seco. (Na 1:10) Usam-se espinhos para indicar pessoas, mesmo governantes de más ações, que estão destinadas a receber um julgamento adverso. (2Rs 14:9, 10; Is 9:18, 19; 10:17-19) Os iníquos que se opõem aos servos de Jeová são retratados como sendo apagados qual fogo de espinheiros. (Sal 118:10, 12) Jesus Cristo mencionou espinhos quando ilustrou a verdade de que as pessoas são conhecidas pelos seus frutos. — Mt 7:16.

Espinhos designam pessoas e coisas que causam dano e que são aflitivas. (Núm 33:55; Pr 22:5; Ez 28:24) O "espinho na carne" de Paulo (2Co 12:7) talvez tenha sido um problema dos olhos ou de outra parte de seu corpo (veja At 23:1-5; Gál 4:15; 6:11), ou talvez os falsos apóstolos e outros perturbadores, que desafiavam o apostolado e a obra de Paulo. (Veja 2Co 11:5, 6, 12-15; Gál 1:6-9; 5:12; 6:17.) Jeová, por meio do seu profeta Jeremias, comparou o coração dos homens de Judá e dos habitantes de Jerusalém a um solo coberto de espinhos, quer dizer, de inverdades, de injustiças e de falta de retidão. (Je 4:1-4; compare isso com Os 10:12, 13.) Apropriadamente, a substituição de espinhos por árvores representa o restabelecimento do favor divino. — Is 55:13; veja ARBUSTO; ERVAS DANINHAS; ESPINHEIRO-DE-CASCA-BRANCA; LÓDÃO; SARÇA.

ESPINHOSO, ARBUSTO. Veja ARBUSTO; ESPINHO, ESPINHEIRO.

ESPIÕES. Pessoas que obtêm informações mediante observações secretas. Moisés, do acampamento de Israel no ermo de Parã, em 1512 AEC, enviou 12 maiorais (representando todas as tribos, exceto a de Levi) para fazer o reconhecimento da terra de Canaã. Jeová permitiu isso a pedido dos israelitas, que disseram: "Enviemos deveras homens na nossa frente para que nos façam o reconhecimento do país e nos tragam de volta informação sobre o caminho pelo qual devemos subir e sobre as cidades a que chegaremos." (De 1:22, 23) Provavelmente separados, talvez aos dois, percorreram o país ao N "até à entrada de Hamate", e ao O, em direção ao mar. (Núm 13:21; veja HAMATE.) Ao retornarem, embora todos concordassem que aquela terra deveras 'manava leite e mel', dez dos espias deram um relatório sem fé, que amedrontou os israelitas. Somente Josué e Calebe os exortaram a entrar na terra e a tomá-la. Por causa da falta de fé de Israel, deixando-se influenciar pelo mau relatório, Deus decretou que todos os homens de 20 anos de idade ou mais deviam morrer no ermo durante um período prolongado de 40 anos de peregrinação. Josué e Calebe foram eximidos, e a tribo de Levi não foi incluída. — Núm 13:1-33; 14:6-38; De 1:24-40.

Josué, em 1473 AEC, enviou dois espiões ao outro lado do Jordão para espionar Jericó. Raabe, a meretriz, ajudou os espiões e foi liberta junto com os da sua família quando Jericó caiu. (Jos 2:1-24; 6:1, 22-25; He 11:31) Outros casos de espionagem são mencionados em Juízes 1:22-26; 18:1-10, 14, 17; 1 Samuel 26:4. Os mensageiros que Davi enviou ao Rei Hanum, de Amom, foram acusados de serem espiões e foram maltratados. (2Sa 10:1-7) Absalão enviou espiões por todo o Israel, não tanto para obter informações para a sua conspiração contra Davi, quanto para suscitar apoio para a sua causa subversiva. — 2Sa 15:10-12.

O apóstolo Paulo escreveu a respeito da sua visita a Jerusalém com Barnabé e Tito, mencionando que naquela ocasião havia "falsos irmãos, introduzidos quietamente, que entraram furtivamente para espreitar a nossa liberdade, que temos em união com Cristo Jesus". — Gál 2:1-5.

ESPIRITISMO. Crença ou doutrina de que os espíritos dos humanos mortos, sobrevivendo à morte do corpo físico, podem comunicar-se e deveras se comunicam com os vivos, primariamente por intermédio de alguém (um médium) especialmente suscetível à influência deles. Tanto a Bíblia como a história secular revelam que o espiritismo existiu desde tempos bem primitivos. A religião do Egito estava permeada por ele. (Is 19:3) E a religião de Babilônia (cidade que também era o principal centro religioso da Assíria) era espírita. — Is 47:12, 13.

A palavra grega para "espiritismo" é far·ma·kí·a. O Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine; 1981, Vol. 4, pp. 51, 52) diz a respeito desta palavra: "(Ingl., farmácia, etc.) indicava principalmente o uso de medicamentos, drogas, encantamentos; daí, envenenamento; daí, feitiçaria, Gál. 5:20, V.R., 'bruxaria' (V.A., 'feitiçaria'), mencionada como 'uma das obras da carne'. Veja também Rev. [Apo.] 9:21; 18:23. Na Sept[uaginta], Êxo. 7:11, 22; 8:7, 18; Isa. 47:9, 12. Na feitiçaria, o uso de drogas, quer simples, quer potentes, era geralmente acompanhado de encantamentos e de invocações de poderes ocultos, sendo providos vários talismãs, amuletos, etc., professamente destinados a proteger o suplicante ou paciente da atenção e do poder dos demônios, mas, na realidade, para impressionar o suplicante com os misteriosos recursos e poderes do feiticeiro."

Sua Fonte. Uma das características principais do espiritismo é a alegada comunicação com os mortos. Visto que os mortos "não estão cônscios de absolutamente nada", a comunicação com tais mortos é realmente impossível. (Ec 9:5) A lei de Deus para Israel proibia que alguém indagasse dos mortos, e fazia da prática do espiritismo um crime capital. (Le 19:31; 20:6, 27; De 18:9-12; compare isso com Is 8:19.) E nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs faz-se a declaração de que aqueles que praticam o espiritismo "não herdarão o reino de Deus". (Gál 5:20, 21; Re 21:8) Por conseguinte, segue-se logicamente que qualquer alegada comunicação com os mortos, se não for mentira deliberada daquele que a alega, tem de ser duma fonte maligna, fonte esta que está em oposição a Jeová Deus.

A Bíblia indica claramente que espíritos iníquos, demônios, são esta fonte maligna. (Veja DEMÔNIO; POSSESSÃO DEMONÍACA.) Um caso pertinente é o de "certa serva" na cidade de Filipos. Ela costumava dar muito lucro aos seus amos por praticar "a arte do vaticínio", uma das coisas relacionadas com o espiritismo. (De 18:11) O relato diz claramente que a fonte de suas predições não era Deus, mas "um demônio de adivinhação", um espírito iníquo. Portanto, quando o apóstolo Paulo expulsou esse espírito iníquo, esta moça perdeu seus poderes de predição. (At 16:16-19) A respeito da expressão grega pý·tho·na, aqui traduzida por "um demônio de adivinhação", Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Vol. 1, p. 328) diz: "Píton, na mitologia grega, era o nome da serpente ou dragão pítio, morando em Pito, ao sopé do monte Parnaso, guardando o oráculo de Delfos, e morto por Apolo. Daí, o nome foi transferido para o próprio Apolo. Mais tarde, a palavra foi aplicada a adivinhos ou vaticinadores, considerados como inspirados por Apolo. Visto que os demônios são os agentes que inspiram a idolatria, I Cor. IO:20, a jovem em Atos I6:I6 estava possessa por um demônio que instigava o culto de Apolo, e assim tinha 'um espírito de adivinhação'."

Em Israel. Embora Deus tivesse legislado estritamente contra o espiritismo, de vez em quando apareciam médiuns espíritas na terra de Israel. Eram provavelmente estrangeiros que vinham ao país, ou alguns daqueles que haviam sido poupados da destruição pelos israelitas. O Rei Saul removeu-os do país durante o seu reinado, mas, evidentemente, perto do fim do seu governo, alguns médiuns espíritas começaram novamente a operar. Saul demonstrou quanto ele se havia afastado de Deus quando foi consultar "em En-Dor uma . . . dona de mediunidade espírita". — 1Sa 28:3, 7-10.

Visita do Rei Saul a uma médium. Quando Saul se dirigiu à médium, o espírito de Jeová já por algum tempo fora removido dele, e, de fato, Deus não lhe respondia às indagações por meio de sonhos, nem pelo Urim (usado pelo sumo sacerdote), nem por profetas. (1Sa 28:6) Deus não queria ter mais nada que ver com ele; e Samuel, profeta de Deus, não vira Saul já por bastante tempo, desde antes de Davi ser ungido para ser rei. De modo que seria desarrazoado pensar que Samuel, mesmo se ainda estivesse vivo, viesse agora dar conselhos a Saul. E Deus certamente não faria com que Samuel, a quem não havia enviado a Saul antes da sua morte, voltasse dentre os mortos para falar com Saul. — 1Sa 15:35.

Que Jeová de modo algum aprovaria ou cooperaria com a ação de Saul é mostrado pela sua declaração posterior por meio de Isaías: "E caso vos digam: 'Recorrei aos médiuns espíritas ou aos que têm espírito de predição, que chilram e fazem pronunciações em voz baixa', não é a seu Deus que qualquer povo devia recorrer? Acaso se deve recorrer a pessoas mortas a favor de pessoas vivas? À lei e à atestação!" — Is 8:19, 20.

Portanto, quando o relato diz: "Quando a mulher viu 'Samuel', começou a clamar ao máximo da sua voz", obviamente relata o evento do ponto de vista da médium, que foi enganada pelo espírito que se fazia de Samuel. (1Sa 28:12) Quanto ao próprio Saul, aplicou-se o princípio declarado pelo apóstolo Paulo: "Assim como não aprovaram reter Deus com um conhecimento exato, Deus entregou-os a um estado mental reprovado, para fazerem as coisas que não são próprias . . . Embora estes conhecessem muito bem o decreto justo de Deus, de que os que praticam tais coisas merecem a morte, não somente persistem em fazê-las, mas também consentem com os que as praticam." — Ro 1:28-32.

O Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário Sobre o Velho Testamento), de C. F. Keil e F. Delitzsch (1973, Vol. II, Primeiro Samuel, p. 265) refere-se à Septuaginta grega, em 1 Crônicas 10:13, que acrescentou as palavras "e Samuel, o profeta, lhe respondeu". (Bagster) O Commentary apoia o conceito subentendido por estas palavras não inspiradas na Septuaginta, mas acrescenta: "Todavia, os padres, os reformadores e os primitivos teólogos cristãos, com raríssimas exceções, julgaram não ter havido real aparecimento de Samuel, mas apenas um imaginário. De acordo com a explanação dada por Efraem Syrus, uma imagem aparente de Samuel se apresentou ao olho de Saul por meio das artes demoníacas. Lutero e Calvino adotaram este mesmo conceito, e os mais antigos teólogos protestantes os acompanhavam em considerar tal aparição como não sendo nada mais do que um espectro diabólico, um fantasma, ou um espectro diabólico em forma de Samuel, e o anúncio de Samuel como não sendo senão uma revelação diabólica, feita com permissão divina, em que a verdade se acha misturada com a falsidade."

Numa nota de rodapé (Primeiro Samuel, pp. 265, 266), este Commentary diz: "Assim, Lutero diz . . . 'O Samuel suscitado por uma vaticinadora ou feiticeira, em 1 Sam. xxviii. 11, 12, certamente era apenas um espectro do diabo; isso não somente porque as Escrituras declaram que foi algo realizado por uma mulher cheia de diabos (pois, quem acreditaria que as almas dos crentes, que estão na mão de Deus, . . . estavam sob o poder do diabo, e de simples homens?), mas também porque isso era evidentemente contrário à ordem de Deus, de que Saul e a mulher inquirissem os mortos. O Espírito Santo por si mesmo não pode fazer nada contrário a isto, nem pode Ele ajudar os que agem em oposição a isso.' Também Calvino considera a aparição apenas como um espectro . . .: 'Isto é certo', diz ele, 'que não foi realmente Samuel, porque Deus nunca permitiria que Seus profetas fossem sujeitos a tal conjura diabólica. Pois, aqui, uma feiticeira suscita o falecido da sepultura. Imaginaria alguém que Deus quisesse que Seu profeta fosse exposto a tal ignomínia; como se o diabo tivesse poder sobre os corpos e as almas dos santos, guardados por Ele? Diz-se que as almas dos santos estão repousando . . . em Deus, aguardando a sua feliz ressurreição. Além disso, devemos crer que Samuel levou consigo a sua capa à sepultura? Por todos estes motivos, parece evidente que a aparição não era nada mais que um espectro, e que os sentidos da própria mulher foram assim enganados, a ponto de pensar que ela via a Samuel, ao passo que realmente não era ele.' Os anteriores teólogos ortodoxos também questionavam a realidade da aparição do falecido Samuel pelos mesmíssimos motivos."

O Poder de Jesus sobre os Demônios. Quando Jesus estava na Terra, provou ser o Messias, o Ungido de Deus, por expulsar os demônios de pessoas possessas. Fazia isso sem um rito especial ou sessão espírita, ou alguma forma de magia. Simplesmente ordenava aos demônios sair, e eles obedeciam à sua voz. Embora a contragosto, os demônios se viram obrigados a reconhecer a autoridade dele (Mt 8:29-34; Mr 5:7-13; Lu 8:28-33), assim como Satanás reconheceu a autoridade de Jeová quando Jeová lhe permitiu afligir Jó para uma prova, mas ordenou que Satanás não matasse Jó. (Jó 2:6, 7) Também, Jesus realizava esta obra gratuitamente. — Mt 8:16, 28-32; Mr 1:34; 3:11, 12; Lu 4:41.

Refuta a falsa acusação dos fariseus. Depois de uma dessas curas feitas por Jesus, seus inimigos, os fariseus, o acusaram: "Este não expulsa os demônios senão por meio de Belzebu, o governante dos demônios." Mas, o relato diz: "Conhecendo os pensamentos deles, disse-lhes: 'Todo reino dividido contra si mesmo cai em desolação, e toda cidade ou casa dividida contra si mesma não permanece. Do mesmo modo, se Satanás expulsa a Satanás, ele ficou dividido contra si mesmo; como permanecerá então o seu reino? Ainda mais, se eu expulso os demônios por meio de Belzebu, por meio de quem os expulsam os vossos filhos? É por isso que eles serão os vossos juízes.' " — Mt 12:22-27.

Os fariseus se viam obrigados a admitir que era preciso poder sobre-humano para expulsar os demônios. Mas, queriam impedir que o povo cresse em Jesus. Por isso, atribuíam o poder dele ao Diabo. Jesus levou então o argumento deles às últimas consequências por mostrar qual seria o resultado lógico de tal argumento. Respondeu que, se ele fosse agente do Diabo, desfazendo o que Satanás fazia, então Satanás realmente estaria agindo contra si mesmo (o que nenhum rei humano faria) e cairia logo. Além disso, chamou atenção para os "filhos" ou discípulos deles, que também afirmavam expulsar demônios. Se o argumento dos fariseus fosse verdadeiro, que aquele que expulsava demônios o fazia pelo poder de Satanás, então os próprios discípulos deles agiam sob o poder deste, algo que os fariseus, naturalmente, não estavam dispostos a admitir. Jesus disse que, portanto, os próprios "filhos" deles eram os juízes que condenavam tanto a eles como o argumento deles. Jesus disse então: "Mas, se é por meio do espírito de Deus que eu expulso os demônios, o reino de Deus vos tem realmente alcançado." — Mt 12:28.

Jesus completou seu argumento por salientar que ninguém podia invadir a casa dum homem forte (Satanás) e apoderar-se dos seus bens, a menos que tivesse poder para amarrar o homem forte. A acusação falsa dos fariseus provocou o aviso sobre o pecado contra o espírito santo, visto que era pelo espírito de Deus que Jesus expulsava os demônios, e que, quando os fariseus falavam contra a obra dele, eles não somente expressavam ódio de Jesus, mas também falavam contra a evidente demonstração do espírito santo de Deus. — Mt 12:29-32.

O que Jesus disse a respeito da expulsão de demônios não deve ser entendido como significando que os "filhos" dos fariseus e todos os outros que afirmavam expulsar demônios necessariamente eram instrumentos de Deus. Jesus mencionou pessoas que perguntariam: "Senhor, Senhor, não profetizamos em teu nome e não expulsamos demônios em teu nome, e não fizemos muitas obras poderosas em teu nome?" Mas ele lhes responderia: "Nunca vos conheci! Afastai-vos de mim, vós obreiros do que é contra a lei." (Mt 7:22, 23) Não sendo verdadeiros discípulos de Jesus Cristo, esses obreiros do que é contra a lei seriam filhos do Diabo. (Veja Jo 8:44; 1Jo 3:10.) Portanto, quem afirmasse expulsar demônios não seria instrumento de Deus, mas agente do Diabo. Satanás, por usar pessoas como exorcistas, até mesmo fazendo isso em nome de Jesus (veja a tentativa dos sete filhos de Ceva, em Atos 19:13-16), não estaria dividido contra si mesmo. Antes, por meio dessa obra aparentemente boa, desfazendo o caso de possessão demoníaca, Satanás se transformaria em "anjo de luz", promovendo assim seu poder e sua influência sobre os enganados. — 2Co 11:14.

"Quem não é contra nós, é por nós." Numa ocasião, o apóstolo João disse a Jesus: "Instrutor, vimos certo homem expulsar demônios pelo uso de teu nome, e tentamos impedi-lo, porque não nos acompanhava." Este homem, evidentemente, era bem-sucedido em expulsar demônios, porque Jesus disse: "Ninguém há que faça uma obra poderosa à base do meu nome que logo possa injuriar-me." Portanto, Jesus ordenou que não tentassem impedi-lo, "pois quem não é contra nós, é por nós". (Mr 9:38-40) Nem todos os que criam em Jesus acompanhavam pessoalmente a ele e os seus apóstolos no ministério. Naquela época, pela vontade de Deus, vigorava o pacto da Lei, e Deus, por meio de Jesus Cristo, ainda não havia inaugurado o novo pacto e o começo da congregação cristã de chamados. Apenas a partir de Pentecostes de 33 EC, depois de Jesus, por meio do seu sacrifício, ter removido a Lei, era necessário que aquele que servisse em nome de Cristo se associasse com esta congregação, cujos membros eram batizados em Cristo. (At 2:38-42, 47; Ro 6:3) Então, em vez de Deus tratar com a nação carnal de Israel, como havia feito até aquele tempo, ele reconheceu a congregação cristã como sua "nação santa". — 1Pe 2:9; 1Co 12:13.

Obra da Carne. Embora os praticantes do espiritismo talvez pensem que este seja uma 'prática espiritual', a Palavra de Deus não o chama de obra do espírito ou de parte dos frutos deste, mas de obra da carne. Note as coisas detestáveis com as quais é classificado: "fornicação, impureza, conduta desenfreada, idolatria, prática de espiritismo [literalmente: drogaria], inimizades, rixa, ciúme, acessos de ira, contendas, divisões, seitas, invejas, bebedeiras, festanças e coisas semelhantes a estas". Ele agrada aos desejos da carne pecaminosa, não às coisas do espírito, e o apóstolo adverte que "os que praticam tais coisas não herdarão o reino de Deus". — Gál 5:19-21, Int.

Causará a destruição eterna dos seus praticantes. Quanto à Babilônia, a Grande, que será lançada no mar para nunca mais ser achada, um dos pecados de que ela é acusada é declarado em Revelação [Apocalipse]: "Todas as nações foram desencaminhadas pelas tuas práticas espíritas." (Re 18:23) A respeito da destruição eterna daqueles que praticam o espiritismo, a Revelação diz: "Quanto aos covardes, e aos que não têm fé, e aos que são repugnantes na sua sujeira, e aos assassinos, e aos fornicadores, e aos que praticam o espiritismo [literalmente: drogadores], e aos idólatras, e a todos os mentirosos, terão o seu quinhão no lago que queima com fogo e enxofre. Este significa a segunda morte." — Re 21:8, Int.

Artes Mágicas, uma Prática Relacionada. Relacionadas com o espiritismo há as artes mágicas. Em Éfeso, muitos creram na pregação de Paulo, e "um número considerável dos que haviam praticado artes mágicas trouxeram os seus livros e os queimaram diante de todos". (At 19:19) A palavra grega para "artes mágicas" é pe·rí·er·ga, "curiosidades", literalmente, "coisas que estão ao redor do trabalho", e assim supérfluas, quer dizer, as artes daqueles que perscrutam coisas proibidas, com a ajuda de espíritos malignos. — Int; Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words, Vol. 1, p. 261.

Profecia Contra Jerusalém. Numa pronúncia contra Jerusalém por causa da sua infidelidade, Jeová disse: "E terás de ficar rebaixada de modo que falarás desde a própria terra, e tua declaração soará baixo, como que do pó. E tua voz terá de tornar-se como a de um médium espírita, da própria terra, e tua própria declaração chilrará desde o pó." (Is 29:4) Isto apontava para o tempo em que inimigos viriam contra Jerusalém e a reduziriam a uma condição muito baixa, como que esmagada na terra. Por conseguinte, quaisquer pronunciações que os habitantes de Jerusalém fizessem viriam lá do fundo do seu rebaixamento. Seria como se um médium espírita falasse de modo a fazer parecer que um som suave, abafado, baixo, sussurrante e fraco viesse do pó da terra. No entanto, conforme Isaías 29:5-8 mostra, Jerusalém seria liberta.

ESPÍRITO. A palavra grega pneú·ma (espírito) deriva de pné·o, que significa "respirar ou soprar", e crê-se que a palavra hebraica rú·ahh (espírito) derive duma raiz que tem o mesmo sentido. Rú·ahh e pneú·ma, portanto, significam basicamente "fôlego", mas têm significados ampliados além do sentido básico. (Veja Hab 2:19; Re 13:15.) Podem também significar vento; a força vital nas criaturas viventes; o espírito que a pessoa revela ter; pessoas espirituais, inclusive Deus e suas criaturas angélicas; e a força ativa de Deus, ou Seu espírito santo. (Veja Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], de Koehler e Baumgartner, Leiden, 1958, pp. 877-879; Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament [Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento], de Brown, Driver e Briggs, 1980, pp. 924-926; Theological Dictionary of the New Testament [Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento], editado por G. Friedrich, traduzido para o inglês por G. Bromiley, 1971, Vol. VI, pp. 332-451.) Todos estes significados têm uma coisa em comum: todos se referem a algo invisível para a visão humana e que dá evidência de força em ação. Tal força invisível é capaz de produzir efeitos visíveis.

Outra palavra hebraica, nesha·máh (Gên 2:7), também significa "fôlego", mas tem sentido mais limitado do que rú·ahh. A palavra grega pno·é parece ter um sentido limitado similar (At 17:25) e foi usada pelos tradutores da Septuaginta para verter nesha·máh.

Vento. Consideremos primeiro o sentido que talvez seja mais fácil de compreender. O contexto, em muitos casos, mostra que rú·ahh significa "vento", como "vento oriental" (Êx 10:13), os "quatro ventos". (Za 2:6) A menção de coisas tais como nuvens, tempestades, o vento levar palha, ou coisas de natureza similar, que aparecem no contexto, frequentemente torna evidente este sentido. (Núm 11:31; 1Rs 18:45; 19:11; Jó 21:18) Por se usarem os quatro ventos para significar as quatro direções — leste, oeste, norte e sul — rú·ahh às vezes pode ser traduzido 'direção' ou 'lado'. — 1Cr 9:24; Je 49:36; 52:23; Ez 42:16-20.

Jó 41:15, 16, diz a respeito das escamas bem ajustadas do leviatã que "nem mesmo o ar [werú·ahh] pode penetrar entre elas". Aqui, novamente, rú·ahh representa ar em movimento, não apenas ar num estado parado ou imóvel. De modo que está presente a ideia de uma força invisível, a característica básica da palavra hebraica rú·ahh.

Evidentemente, o único caso em que, nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra pneú·ma é usada no sentido de "vento" é em João 3:8.

O homem não pode controlar o vento; não pode orientá-lo, dirigi-lo, restringi-lo ou possuí-lo. Por causa disso, "vento [rú·ahh]" frequentemente representa aquilo que é incontrolável ou inalcançável pelo homem — algo elusivo, transitório, fútil, de nenhum benefício genuíno. (Veja Jó 6:26; 7:7; 8:2; 16:3; Pr 11:29; 27:15, 16; 30:4; Ec 1:14, 17; 2:11; Is 26:18; 41:29.) Veja uma consideração mais plena disso sob VENTO.

Pessoas Espirituais. Deus é invisível aos olhos humanos (Êx 33:20; Jo 1:18; 1Ti 1:17), e ele está vivo e exerce insuperável força em todo o Universo. (2Co 3:3; Is 40:25-31) Cristo Jesus declara: "Deus é Espírito [Pneú·ma]." O apóstolo escreve: "Ora, Jeová é o Espírito." (Jo 4:24; 2Co 3:17, 18) O templo edificado sobre Cristo como pedra angular de alicerce é um "lugar para Deus habitar por espírito". — Ef 2:22.

Isto não significa que Deus seja uma força impessoal, incorpórea, assim como o vento. As Escrituras atestam inconfundivelmente que ele tem personalidade; possui também um lugar, de modo que Cristo podia falar de 'ir para o Pai', a fim de que pudesse 'aparecer por nós perante a pessoa de Deus [literalmente: "face de Deus"]'. — Jo 16:28; He 9:24; compare isso com 1Rs 8:43; Sal 11:4; 113:5, 6; veja JEOVÁ (A Pessoa Identificada pelo Nome).

A expressão "meu espírito" (ru·hhí), usada por Deus em Gênesis 6:3, pode significar "eu, o Espírito", assim como seu uso de "minha alma" (naf·shí) tem o sentido de "eu, a pessoa", ou "minha pessoa". (Is 1:14; veja ALMA [Deus Como Tendo Alma].) Ele contrasta assim a sua posição espiritual, celestial, com a do homem terreno, carnal.

O Filho de Deus. O "filho unigênito" de Deus, a Palavra, era uma pessoa espiritual assim como seu Pai, portanto, 'existindo em forma de Deus' (Fil 2:5-8), mais tarde, porém, "se tornou carne", residindo entre a humanidade como o homem Jesus. (Jo 1:1, 14) Ao completar a sua carreira terrestre, foi "morto na carne, mas vivificado no espírito". (1Pe 3:18) Seu Pai o ressuscitou, concedendo o pedido do seu Filho, de este ser glorificado junto ao Pai com a glória que tivera na sua existência pré-humana (Jo 17:4, 5), e Deus o fez um "espírito vivificante". (1Co 15:45) O Filho tornou-se assim novamente invisível aos olhos humanos, morando "em luz inacessível, a quem nenhum dos homens tem visto nem pode ver". — 1Ti 6:14-16.

Outras criaturas espirituais. Anjos são chamados pelos termos rú·ahh e pneú·ma em diversos textos. (1Rs 22:21, 22; Ez 3:12, 14; 8:3; 11:1, 24; 43:5; At 23:8, 9; 1Pe 3:19, 20) Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a maioria dessas referências são a criaturas espirituais iníquas, demônios. — Mt 8:16; 10:1; 12:43-45; Mr 1:23-27; 3:11, 12, 30.

O Salmo 104:4 diz que Deus "faz os seus anjos espíritos, seus ministros, um fogo devorador". Algumas traduções preferiram verter isso assim: "Faz dos ventos seus mensageiros, dos seus ministros um fogo abrasador", ou de modo similar. (Al, BJ, IBB, PIB) Tais traduções do texto hebraico não são inadmissíveis (veja Sal 148:8); no entanto, a citação deste texto pelo apóstolo Paulo (He 1:7) coincide com a da Septuaginta grega e se harmoniza com a primeira versão acima. (No texto grego de Hebreus 1:7, usa-se o artigo definido [tous] antes de "anjos", não antes de "espíritos [pneú·ma·ta]", tornando os anjos o assunto discutido.) Barnes' Notes on the New Testament (Notas Sobre o Novo Testamento, de Barnes; 1974) diz: "Deve-se presumir que [Paulo], que tinha sido educado no conhecimento da língua hebraica, deve ter tido melhor oportunidade de saber qual era sua lídima construção [referindo-se ao Salmo 104:4], do que nós; e é moralmente certo de que ele empregaria este trecho, num argumento, conforme era comumente entendido por aqueles a quem ele escrevia — isto é, àqueles que estavam familiarizados com a língua e a literatura hebraicas." — Veja He 1:14.

Os anjos de Deus, embora capazes de se materializar em forma humana e de aparecer a homens, não são por natureza materiais ou carnais, e por isso são invisíveis. São ativamente vivos e capazes de exercer grande força, e os termos rú·ahh e pneú·ma, portanto, descrevem-nos aptamente.

Efésios 6:12 fala sobre a pugna cristã, "não contra sangue e carne, mas contra os governos, contra as autoridades, contra os governantes mundiais desta escuridão, contra as forças espirituais iníquas nos lugares celestiais". A última parte do texto grego reza literalmente: "Para com as (coisas) espirituais [gr.: pneu·ma·ti·ká] da iniquidade nos [lugares] celestiais." A maioria das traduções modernas reconhece que não se faz aqui referência simplesmente a algo abstrato, "iniquidade espiritual" (KJ), mas refere-se à iniquidade de pessoas espirituais. De modo que temos traduções tais como "as forças espirituais do mal, nas regiões celestes" (ALA), "as hostes espirituais da iniquidade nas regiões celestes" (VB), "os Espíritos do Mal, que povoam as regiões celestiais" (BJ), "as forças sobre-humanas do mal nos céus" (NE).

A Força Ativa de Deus; Espírito Santo. A grandíssima maioria das ocorrências de rú·ahh e pneú·ma está relacionada com o espírito de Deus, sua força ativa, seu espírito santo.

Não é uma pessoa. Foi só no quarto século EC que o ensino de o espírito santo ser uma pessoa e parte da "Divindade" tornou-se dogma oficial da igreja. Os primitivos "pais" da igreja não ensinavam isso; Justino, o Mártir, do segundo século EC, ensinava que o espírito santo era 'uma influência ou um modo de agir da Deidade'; Hipólito tampouco atribuiu personalidade ao espírito santo. As próprias Escrituras estão unidas em mostrar que o espírito santo de Deus não é uma pessoa, mas é a força ativa de Deus, pela qual ele realiza seus propósitos e executa sua vontade.

Deve-se primeiro notar que as palavras "no céu: o Pai, a Palavra, e o Espírito Santo; e estes três são um" (Al), encontradas em traduções mais antigas em 1 João 5:7, na realidade são acréscimos espúrios ao texto original. Uma nota de rodapé em A Bíblia de Jerusalém, uma tradução católica, diz que este acréscimo está "ausente dos antigos mss [manuscritos] gregos, das antigas versões e dos melhores mss da Vulg. [Vulgata]". A Textual Commentary on the Greek New Testament (Comentário Textual sobre o Novo Testamento Grego), de Bruce Metzger (1975, pp. 716-718), delineia em pormenores a história dessa passagem espúria. Declara que a passagem é primeiro encontrada num tratado intitulado Liber Apologeticus, do quarto século, e que ela aparece em manuscritos do latim antigo e na Vulgata das Escrituras, a partir do sexto século. As traduções modernas, como um todo, tanto católicas como protestantes, não incluem essas palavras no corpo principal do texto, por reconhecerem sua natureza espúria. — IBB, MC, PIB.

Personificação não prova personalidade. É verdade que Jesus falou do espírito santo como "ajudador" e falou de tal ajudador como 'ensinando', 'dando testemunho', 'dando evidência', 'guiando', 'falando', 'ouvindo' e 'recebendo'. Ao fazer isso, o grego original mostra que Jesus, às vezes, aplicava o pronome pessoal masculino a este "ajudador" (paracleto). (Veja Jo 14:16, 17, 26; 15:26; 16:7-15.) No entanto, não é incomum, nas Escrituras, que aquilo que realmente não é pessoa seja personalizado ou personificado. A sabedoria é personificada no livro de Provérbios (1:20-33; 8:1-36); e formas pronominais femininas são usadas para ela no original hebraico, como também em muitas traduções. A sabedoria é também personificada em Mateus 11:19 e em Lucas 7:35, onde é apresentada como tendo tanto "obras" como "filhos". O apóstolo Paulo personalizou o pecado e a morte, e também a benignidade imerecida, como 'reinando'. (Ro 5:14, 17, 21; 6:12) Fala do pecado como "recebendo induzimento", 'produzindo cobiça', 'seduzindo' e 'matando'. (Ro 7:8-11) Todavia, é óbvio que Paulo não queria dizer que o pecado era realmente uma pessoa.

Assim, também, as palavras de Jesus sobre o espírito santo, no relato de João, têm de ser tomadas em harmonia com o contexto. Jesus personalizou o espírito santo ao falar daquele espírito como "ajudador" (que em grego é o substantivo masculino pa·rá·kle·tos). Portanto, João apresenta as palavras de Jesus corretamente como se referindo a este aspecto de "ajudador" do espírito com pronome pessoal masculino. Por outro lado, no mesmo contexto, quando usa a palavra grega pneú·ma, João emprega um pronome neutro para se referir ao espírito santo, a própria palavra pneú·ma sendo neutra. Assim, temos no uso que João faz do pronome pessoal masculino em associação com pa·rá·kle·tos um exemplo de concordância com as regras gramaticais, não uma expressão de doutrina. — Jo 14:16, 17; 16:7, 8.

Não tem identificação como pessoa. Visto que o próprio Deus é Espírito e é santo, e visto que todos os seus fiéis filhos angélicos são espíritos e são santos, é evidente que, se o "espírito santo" fosse pessoa, as Escrituras deveriam razoavelmente fornecer alguns meios para diferenciar e identificar tal pessoa espiritual dentre todos esses outros 'espíritos santos'. Seria de esperar que, pelo menos, se usasse o artigo definido para ele em todos os casos onde não é chamado de "espírito santo de Deus", ou não é modificado por alguma expressão similar. Isto pelo menos o distinguiria como O Espírito Santo. Mas, ao contrário, em grande número de casos, a expressão "espírito santo" aparece no grego original sem o artigo, indicando assim ausência de personalidade. — Veja At 6:3, 5; 7:55; 8:15, 17, 19; 9:17; 11:24; 13:9, 52; 19:2; Ro 9:1; 14:17; 15:13, 16, 19; 1Co 12:3; He 2:4; 6:4; 2Pe 1:21; Ju 20, Int e outras traduções interlineares.

Como se batiza em seu "nome". Em Mateus 28:19, mencionam-se "o nome do Pai, e do Filho, e do espírito santo". Um "nome" pode significar algo diferente de um nome pessoal. Em português, quando dizemos "em nome da lei", ou "em nome do bom senso", não nos referimos a uma pessoa como tal. Por "nome", em tais expressões, queremos dizer 'aquilo que a lei representa, ou sua autoridade', e 'aquilo que o bom senso representa ou exige'. O termo grego para "nome" (ó·no·ma) também pode ter este sentido. Assim, ao passo que algumas traduções (KJ; AS; Tr) seguem literalmente o texto grego, em Mateus 10:41, e dizem que aquele que "receber um profeta no nome dum profeta receberá a recompensa dum profeta; e aquele que receber um homem justo no nome dum homem justo receberá a recompensa dum homem justo", traduções mais modernas dizem: "Quem recebe um profeta na qualidade de profeta", e: "Quem recebe um justo na qualidade de justo", ou algo similar. (BJ, BMD, BV, NM) Neste respeito, Word Pictures in the New Testament (Quadros Verbais no Novo Testamento; 1930, Vol. I, p. 245), de Robertson, diz sobre Mateus 28:19: "O uso de nome (onoma) aqui é um uso comum na Septuaginta e nos papiros para simbolizar poder ou autoridade." Portanto, o batismo 'em o nome do espírito santo' subentende o reconhecimento deste espírito como tendo por fonte a Deus e como exercendo sua função segundo a vontade divina.

Outra evidência de sua natureza impessoal. Evidência adicional contrária à ideia de personalidade atribuída ao espírito santo é o modo em que é usado em associação com outras coisas impessoais, tais como água e fogo (Mt 3:11; Mr 1:8); e fala-se de cristãos como batizados "em espírito santo". (At 1:5; 11:16) Insta-se com as pessoas a ficarem 'cheias de espírito', em vez de vinho. (Ef 5:18) Assim, também, fala-se de pessoas como 'cheias' dele, junto com qualidades tais como sabedoria e fé (At 6:3, 5; 11:24), ou alegria (At 13:52); e espírito santo é inserido, ou intercalado, entre diversas de tais qualidades, em 2 Coríntios 6:6. É bem improvável que se fizessem tais expressões se o espírito santo fosse uma pessoa divina. Quanto a o espírito 'dar testemunho' (At 5:32; 20:23), deve-se notar que se diz a mesma coisa a respeito da água e do sangue, em 1 João 5:6-8. Ao passo que alguns textos se referem ao espírito como 'dando testemunho', 'falando' ou 'dizendo' coisas, outros textos tornam claro que ele falou por meio de pessoas, sem ter voz pessoal própria. (Veja He 3:7; 10:15-17; Sal 95:7; Je 31:33, 34; At 19:2-6; 21:4; 28:25.) De modo que pode ser comparado a ondas de rádio, que podem transmitir uma mensagem de alguém falando ao microfone e fazer sua voz ser ouvida por outros a grande distância, na realidade, 'falando' a mensagem por meio dum alto-falante. Deus, por seu espírito, transmite suas mensagens e comunica sua vontade à mente e ao coração dos seus servos na Terra, os quais, por sua vez, podem transmitir esta mensagem a mais outros.

Diferençado de "poder". Portanto, rú·ahh e pneú·ma, quando usados com referência ao espírito santo de Deus, referem-se à força ativa invisível de Deus, pela qual ele realiza seu propósito e vontade divinos. É "santo", porque procede Dele, não duma fonte terrestre, e está livre de toda a corrupção, como "o espírito de santidade". (Ro 1:4) Não é o "poder" de Jeová, porque esta palavra portuguesa traduz mais corretamente outros termos nas línguas originais (hebr.: kó·ahh; gr.: dý·na·mis). Rú·ahh e pneú·ma são palavras usadas em íntima associação, ou mesmo em paralelo, com esses termos que significam "poder", o que mostra que há uma inerente interligação entre eles, e, ainda assim, uma nítida diferença. (Miq 3:8; Za 4:6; Lu 1:17, 35; At 10:38) "Poder", basicamente, é a habilidade ou capacidade de atuar ou de fazer coisas, e pode ser latente, dormente ou inativamente residente em alguém ou em alguma coisa. "Força", por outro lado, descreve mais especificamente energia projetada e exercida sobre pessoas ou coisas, e pode ser definida como "uma influência que produz ou tende a produzir movimento, ou a mudança de movimento". "Poder" pode ser assemelhado à energia acumulada numa bateria, ao passo que "força" pode ser comparada à corrente elétrica que flui de tal bateria. "Força", portanto, representa mais exatamente o sentido dos termos hebraico e grego relacionados com o espírito de Deus, e isto é corroborado pela consideração das Escrituras.

Seu Uso na Criação. Jeová Deus realizou a criação do Universo material por meio de seu espírito, ou força ativa. A respeito do planeta Terra, nos seus primitivos estágios formativos, o registro declara que "a força ativa [ou "espírito" (rú·ahh)] de Deus movia-se por cima da superfície das águas". (Gên 1:2) O Salmo 33:6 diz: "Pela palavra de Jeová foram feitos os próprios céus, e pelo espírito de sua boca, todo o exército deles." Igual a um poderoso sopro, o espírito de Deus pode ser enviado para exercer poder, embora não haja contato corporal com aquilo sobre o que age. (Veja Êx 15:8, 10.) Ao passo que um artífice humano usaria a força das suas mãos e dos seus dedos para produzir algo, Deus usa seu espírito. Por isso, fala-se de tal espírito também como "mãos" ou "dedos" de Deus. — Compare Sal 8:3; 19:1; Mt 12:28, com Lu 11:20.

A ciência moderna chama a matéria de energia organizada, como feixes de energia, e reconhece que "a matéria pode ser transformada em energia, e a energia pode ser transformada em matéria". (Enciclopédia Delta Universal, Vol. 9, p. 5140) A imensidão do Universo que o homem já conseguiu discernir por meio de seus telescópios dá uma leve ideia da inesgotável fonte de energia encontrada em Jeová Deus. Conforme escreveu o profeta: "Quem mediu as proporções do espírito de Jeová?" — Is 40:12, 13, 25, 26.

Fonte da vida animada, da faculdade de reprodução. Não somente a criação inanimada, mas também toda a criação animada deve sua existência e vida à operação do espírito de Jeová, que produziu as criaturas viventes originais por meio das quais todas as atuais criaturas viventes vieram à existência. (Compare isso com Jó 33:4; veja neste artigo a seção "Fôlego; Fôlego de Vida; Força de Vida".) Jeová usou seu espírito santo para reavivar as faculdades reprodutivas de Abraão e de Sara, e por isso se podia falar de Isaque como tendo "nascido na maneira do espírito". (Gál 4:28, 29) Deus, por seu espírito, também transferiu a vida de seu Filho do céu para a Terra, induzindo a concepção no ventre da virgem judia, Maria. — Mt 1:18, 20; Lu 1:35.

Espírito Usado a Favor dos Servos de Deus. Uma das principais operações do espírito de Deus envolve sua capacidade de informar, de iluminar, de revelar coisas. Por isso, Davi podia orar: "Ensina-me a fazer a tua vontade, porque tu és o meu Deus. Teu espírito é bom; guie-me ele na terra da retidão." (Sal 143:10) Bem antes, José havia fornecido a interpretação dos sonhos proféticos de Faraó, habilitado para isso pela ajuda de Deus. O governante egípcio reconheceu a operação do espírito de Deus sobre José. (Gên 41:16, 25-39) Este poder iluminador do espírito é especialmente notável nas profecias. As profecias, conforme mostra o apóstolo, não procederam de interpretação humana das circunstâncias ou dos eventos; não resultaram de alguma habilidade inata dos profetas, de explicar o sentido e o significado destes, ou de predizer o aspecto de eventos futuros. Antes, esses homens "eram movidos por espírito santo" — induzidos, movidos ou guiados pela força ativa de Deus. (2Pe 1:20, 21; 2Sa 23:2; Za 7:12; Lu 1:67; 2:25-35; At 1:16; 28:25; veja PROFECIA; PROFETA.) Do mesmo modo, também as Escrituras inspiradas, na sua inteireza, foram 'inspiradas por Deus', expressão que traduz a grega the·ó·pneu·stos, que significa literalmente 'sopradas por Deus'. (2Ti 3:16) O espírito operava de diversas maneiras na comunicação com esses homens e em orientá-los, em alguns casos fazendo-os ter visões ou sonhos (Ez 37:1; Jl 2:28, 29; Re 4:1, 2; 17:3; 21:10), mas em todos os casos operando sobre a mente e o coração deles, para motivá-los e guiá-los segundo o propósito de Deus. — Da 7:1; At 16:9, 10; Re 1:10, 11; veja INSPIRAÇÃO.

Portanto, o espírito de Deus não somente dá revelação e entendimento da vontade de Deus, mas também energiza Seus servos a realizar coisas em harmonia com esta vontade. Este espírito atua como força impulsora que os move e impele, assim como Marcos diz que o espírito "impeliu" Jesus a ir para o ermo, após o seu batismo. (Mr 1:12; compare isso com Lu 4:1.) Pode ser como um "fogo" dentro deles, fazendo-os ficar "fervorosos" com esta força (1Te 5:19; At 18:25; Ro 12:11), em certo sentido aumentando neles 'energia' ou pressão para realizar certa obra. (Veja Jó 32:8, 18-20; 2Ti 1:6, 7.) Recebem "o poder do espírito", ou "poder por intermédio de seu espírito". (Lu 2:27; Ef 3:16; compare isso com Miq 3:8.) No entanto, não se trata apenas dum impulso inconsciente, cego, porque afeta também a mente e o coração deles, de modo que podem cooperar inteligentemente com a força ativa que lhes é dada. O apóstolo podia assim dizer a respeito daqueles que haviam recebido o dom de profecia, na congregação cristã, que "os dons do espírito dos profetas hão de ser controlados pelos profetas", a fim de manter a boa ordem. — 1Co 14:31-33.

Variedade de operações. Assim como se pode usar uma corrente elétrica para realizar uma enorme variedade de tarefas, assim o espírito de Deus é usado para comissionar e habilitar pessoas a fazer uma ampla variedade de coisas. (Is 48:16; 61:1-3) Conforme Paulo escreveu a respeito dos dons milagrosos do espírito nos seus dias: "Ora, há variedades de dons, mas há o mesmo espírito; e há variedades de ministérios, contudo há o mesmo Senhor; e há variedades de operações, contudo é o mesmo Deus quem realiza todas as operações em todas as pessoas. Mas a manifestação do espírito é dada a cada um com um objetivo proveitoso." — 1Co 12:4-7.

O espírito tem força ou capacidade habilitadora; pode habilitar pessoas para um serviço ou para um cargo. Embora Bezalel e Ooliabe talvez conhecessem os ofícios antes da sua designação relacionada com a fabricação do equipamento do tabernáculo e das vestes sacerdotais, o espírito de Deus 'encheu-os com sabedoria, entendimento e conhecimento', para que a obra fosse feita da maneira intencionada. Aumentou suas habilidades naturais e o conhecimento que já tivessem, e habilitou-os a instruir outros. (Êx 31:1-11; 35:30-35) O plano arquitetônico para o posterior templo foi dado a Davi por inspiração, quer dizer, pela operação do espírito de Deus, habilitando assim Davi a empreender uma extensa obra preparatória para o projeto. — 1Cr 28:12.

O espírito de Deus agiu sobre Moisés e por meio dele para profetizar e para realizar atos milagrosos, bem como para liderar a nação e atuar como juiz dela, prefigurando assim o papel futuro de Cristo Jesus. (Is 63:11-13; At 3:20-23) No entanto, Moisés, como humano imperfeito, achou pesada a carga de responsabilidade, e Deus 'tirou um pouco do espírito que havia sobre Moisés e o colocou sobre 70 anciãos', para que ajudassem a levar a carga. (Núm 11:11-17, 24-30) O espírito tornou-se também ativo em Davi a partir do momento em que foi ungido por Samuel, guiando-o e preparando-o para o seu futuro reinado. — 1Sa 16:13.

Josué ficou "cheio do espírito de sabedoria" como sucessor de Moisés. Mas o espírito não produziu nele a capacidade de profetizar ou de realizar obras milagrosas ao ponto que fizera com Moisés. (De 34:9-12) Todavia, habilitou Josué a liderar Israel na campanha militar que resultou na conquista de Canaã. De maneira similar, o espírito de Jeová "envolveu" outros homens, 'impelindo-os' como lutadores a favor do povo de Deus, lutadores tais como Otniel, Gideão, Jefté e Sansão. — Jz 3:9, 10; 6:34; 11:29; 13:24, 25; 14:5, 6, 19; 15:14.

O espírito de Deus energizou homens a falar a Sua mensagem de verdade com destemor e coragem perante opositores e ao risco da sua vida. — Miq 3:8.

Ser o espírito de Deus 'derramado' sobre os do seu povo é evidência do Seu favor, e resulta em bênçãos e os torna prósperos. — Ez 39:29; Is 44:3, 4.

Julgar e executar julgamento. Deus, por meio do seu espírito, faz o julgamento de homens e de nações; executa também o julgamento decretado — punindo ou destruindo. (Is 30:27, 28; 59:18, 19) Em tais casos, rú·ahh pode apropriadamente ser vertido por "sopro", como quando Jeová fala de fazer 'irromper um sopro [rú·ahh] de vendavais' no seu furor. (Ez 13:11, 13; compare isso com Is 25:4; 27:8.) O espírito de Deus pode alcançar qualquer lugar, agindo a favor ou contra aqueles que recebem Sua atenção. — Sal 139:7-12.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 1:4, os "sete espíritos" de Deus são mencionados como estando diante do Seu trono, e depois se dão sete mensagens, cada uma concluindo com a admoestação de que se "ouça o que o espírito diz às congregações". (Re 2:7, 11, 17, 29; 3:6, 13, 22) Estas mensagens contêm pronúncias de julgamento, esquadrinhadoras do coração, e promessas de recompensa pela fidelidade. Mostra-se o Filho de Deus como tendo esses "sete espíritos de Deus" (Re 3:1); e estes são chamados de "sete lâmpadas de fogo" (Re 4:5), e também de sete olhos do cordeiro que é morto, "olhos que significam os sete espíritos de Deus, os quais têm sido enviados à terra inteira". (Re 5:6) Visto que em outros textos proféticos se usa sete como representando totalidade (veja NÚMERO, NUMERAL), parece que estes sete espíritos simbolizam a plena capacidade ativa de observação, discernimento ou percepção do glorificado Jesus Cristo, o Cordeiro de Deus, habilitando-o a inspecionar toda a Terra.

A Palavra de Deus é a "espada" do espírito (Ef 6:17), que revela o que a pessoa realmente é, expondo ocultas qualidades ou atitudes do coração, e induzindo-a a abrandar o coração e harmonizar-se com a vontade de Deus expressa por esta Palavra, ou então a endurecer seu coração em rebelião. (Veja He 4:11-13; Is 6:9, 10; 66:2, 5.) Portanto a Palavra de Deus desempenha um papel importante na predição de julgamentos adversos, e visto que a palavra ou mensagem de Deus tem de ser cumprida, o cumprimento desta palavra produz uma ação semelhante à do fogo em palha, e como a dum malho que despedaça o rochedo. (Je 23:28, 29) Cristo Jesus, como principal Porta-Voz de Deus, como "A Palavra de Deus", declara as mensagens divinas de julgamento e está autorizado a ordenar a execução desses julgamentos nos assim julgados. Sem dúvida, este é o sentido das referências a ele eliminar os inimigos de Deus "com o espírito [a força ativa] de sua boca". — Veja 2Te 2:8; Is 11:3, 4; Re 19:13-16, 21.

O espírito de Deus atua como "ajudador" da congregação. Conforme Jesus prometeu, quando ascendeu ao céu, ele solicitou ao Pai o espírito santo, ou a força ativa de Deus, e se lhe concedeu autoridade de usar este espírito. 'Derramou-o' sobre os seus discípulos fiéis no dia de Pentecostes, continuando a fazer isso depois para com aqueles que se voltavam para Deus por meio do Seu Filho. (Jo 14:16, 17, 26; 15:26; 16:7; At 1:4, 5; 2:1-4, 14-18, 32, 33, 38) Assim como tinham sido batizados em água, agora foram todos 'batizados em um só corpo' por este único espírito, como que sendo imersos nele, do mesmo modo em que se pode meter um pedaço de ferro num campo magnético e assim magnetizá-lo. (1Co 12:12, 13; compare isso com Mr 1:8; At 1:5.) Embora o espírito de Deus já antes tivesse operado nos discípulos, conforme se evidenciou por poderem expulsar demônios (veja Mt 12:28; Mr 3:14, 15), operava agora neles de maneira aumentada e mais intensa, e em modos novos, como nunca antes. — Veja Jo 7:39.

Cristo Jesus, como Rei messiânico, tem "o espírito de sabedoria e de compreensão, o espírito de conselho e de potência, o espírito de conhecimento e do temor de Jeová". (Is 11:1, 2; 42:1-4; Mt 12:18-21) Esta força a favor da justiça é manifestada no seu uso da força ativa, ou espírito, de Deus, em dirigir a congregação cristã na Terra, sendo Jesus, por designação de Deus, Cabeça, Dono e Senhor dela. (Col 1:18; Ju 4) Este espírito, como "ajudador", deu então maior entendimento da vontade e do propósito de Deus, e esclareceu-lhes a Sua Palavra profética. (1Co 2:10-16; Col 1:9, 10; He 9:8-10) Foram energizados para servirem como testemunhas em toda a Terra (Lu 24:49; At 1:8; Ef 3:5, 6); foram-lhes concedidos milagrosos 'dons do espírito', habilitando-os a falar em línguas estrangeiras, a profetizar, a curar e a realizar outras atividades, que tanto facilitariam a sua proclamação das boas novas como serviriam de evidência de sua comissão e apoio divinos. — Ro 15:18, 19; 1Co 12:4-11; 14:1, 2, 12-16; compare isso com Is 59:21; veja DONS DADOS POR DEUS (Dons do Espírito).

Jesus, como Superintendente da congregação, usava o espírito de forma governamental — orientando a escolha de homens para missões especiais e para servir na superintendência, no ensino e no "reajustamento" da congregação. (At 13:2-4; 20:28; Ef 4:11, 12) Induziu-os, bem como restringiu-os, indicando em que lugar deviam concentrar seus esforços ministeriais (At 16:6-10; 20:22), e tornou-os escritores eficazes de 'cartas de Cristo, inscritas com o espírito de Deus em tábuas carnais, em corações humanos'. (2Co 3:2, 3; 1Te 1:5) Conforme prometido, o espírito reavivou-lhes a memória, estimulou-lhes as faculdades mentais e tornou-os denodados em dar testemunho mesmo perante governantes. — Veja Mt 10:18-20; Jo 14:26; At 4:5-8, 13, 31; 6:8-10.

Quais "pedras viventes", estavam sendo constituídos num templo espiritual alicerçado em Cristo, por meio do qual se ofereceriam "sacrifícios espirituais" (1Pe 2:4-6; Ro 15:15, 16) e se entoariam cânticos espirituais (Ef 5:18, 19), e no qual Deus moraria por espírito. (1Co 3:16; 6:19, 20; Ef 2:20-22; compare isso com Ag 2:5.) O espírito de Deus é uma força unificadora de enorme potência, e enquanto esses cristãos lhe permitiam livre atuação entre eles, unia-os pacificamente em vínculos de amor e de devoção com Deus, com o Filho dele e uns com os outros. (Ef 4:3-6; 1Jo 3:23, 24; 4:12, 13; compare isso com 1Cr 12:18.) O dom do espírito não os preparava para atividades mecânicas, assim como fizera com Bezalel e com outros, que fabricaram e produziram estruturas e equipamentos materiais, mas equipava-os para obras espirituais de ensino, de orientação, de pastoreio e de aconselhamento. O templo espiritual que eles constituíam devia ser adornado pelos lindos frutos do espírito de Deus, e estes frutos de "amor, alegria, paz, longanimidade, benignidade, bondade, fé", bem como qualidades similares, era prova positiva de que o espírito de Deus operava neles e entre eles. (Gál 5:22, 23; compare isso com Lu 10:21; Ro 14:17.) Este era o fator básico e primário que produzia boa ordem e orientação eficaz entre eles. (Gál 5:24-26; 6:1; At 6:1-7; compare isso com Ez 36:26, 27.) Sujeitavam-se à 'lei do espírito', força eficaz a favor da justiça, que operava para manter afastadas as práticas da carne inerentemente pecaminosa. (Ro 8:2; Gál 5:16-21; Ju 19-21) Confiavam na operação do espírito de Deus sobre eles, não em habilidades carnais ou na sua formação. — 1Co 2:1-5; Ef 3:14-17; Fil 3:1-8.

Quando surgiam questões, o espírito santo era ajudador em chegarem a uma decisão, como no caso da circuncisão, decidido pelo corpo, ou conselho, de apóstolos e anciãos em Jerusalém. Pedro contou que se concedera o espírito a pessoas incircuncisas das nações; Paulo e Barnabé relataram as operações do espírito no seu ministério entre tais pessoas; e Tiago, cuja memória, sem dúvida, foi ajudada por espírito santo, trouxe à atenção a profecia inspirada de Amós, que predizia que pessoas das nações seriam chamadas pelo nome de Deus. Assim, todo o impulso ou ímpeto do espírito santo de Deus apontava numa só direção, e, assim, reconhecendo isso, ao escrever a carta transmitindo sua decisão, este corpo ou conselho disse: "Pois, pareceu bem ao espírito santo e a nós mesmos não vos acrescentar nenhum fardo adicional, exceto as seguintes coisas necessárias." — At 15:1-29.

Unge, gera, dá 'vida espiritual'. Assim como Deus ungira Jesus com o seu espírito santo, por ocasião do batismo de Jesus (Mr 1:10; Lu 3:22; 4:18; At 10:38), assim ungiu agora os discípulos de Jesus. Esta unção com o espírito era para eles "penhor" da herança celestial, para a qual foram assim chamados (2Co 1:21, 22; 5:1, 5; Ef 1:13, 14), e dava-lhes testemunho de que haviam sido 'gerados', ou produzidos, por Deus para serem seus filhos, com a promessa de vida espiritual nos céus. (Jo 3:5-8; Ro 8:14-17, 23; Tit 3:5; He 6:4, 5) Foram purificados, santificados e declarados justos "no nome de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo e com o espírito de nosso Deus", espírito que habilitara Jesus a prover o sacrifício resgatador e tornar-se sumo sacerdote de Deus. — 1Co 6:11; 2Te 2:13; He 9:14; 1Pe 1:1, 2.

Por causa desta chamada e herança celestial, os seguidores de Jesus, ungidos com espírito, tinham uma vida espiritual, embora ainda vivessem como criaturas carnais, imperfeitas. Foi evidentemente a isto que o apóstolo se referiu quando contrastou os pais terrestres com Jeová Deus, o "Pai de nossa vida espiritual [literalmente: "Pai dos espíritos"]". (He 12:9; compare isso com o versículo 23.) Eles, quais co-herdeiros de Cristo, que hão de ser ressuscitados da morte em corpo espiritual, levando a imagem celestial dele, devem viver na Terra como "um só espírito" em união com ele, sua Cabeça, não permitindo que os desejos ou as tendências imorais da sua carne sejam a força que os controla, algo que talvez até mesmo resulte em se tornarem "uma só carne" com uma meretriz. — 1Co 6:15-18; 15:44-49; Ro 8:5-17.

Obter e reter o espírito de Deus. O espírito santo é a "dádiva gratuita" de Deus, que ele de bom grado concede aos que sinceramente o buscam e pedem. (At 2:38; Lu 11:9-13) O fator-chave é o coração reto (At 15:8), mas o conhecimento dos requisitos de Deus e a conformidade com eles também são fatores essenciais. (Veja At 5:32; 19:2-6.) Uma vez que o cristão recebe o espírito de Deus, não deve 'contristá-lo' por desprezá-lo (Ef 4:30; compare isso com Is 63:10), adotando um rumo contrário à sua orientação, fixando o coração em objetivos diferentes daquele para o qual ele aponta e impele, rejeitando a inspirada Palavra de Deus e seu conselho e aplicação a si mesmo. (At 7:51-53; 1Te 4:8; compare isso com Is 30:1, 2.) Com hipocrisia, alguém poderia "trapacear" o espírito santo por meio do qual Cristo dirige a congregação, e aqueles que deste modo 'fazem uma prova' do poder do espírito santo tomam um rumo desastroso. (At 5:1-11; contraste isso com Ro 9:1.) A oposição deliberada contra a manifestação evidente do espírito de Deus e a rebelião contra ele podem significar blasfêmia contra este espírito, o que é um pecado imperdoável. — Mt 12:31, 32; Mr 3:29, 30; compare isso com He 10:26-31.

Fôlego; Fôlego de Vida; Força de Vida. O relato sobre a criação do homem declara que Deus formou o homem do pó do solo e passou a "soprar [forma de na·fáhh] nas suas narinas o fôlego [forma de nesha·máh] de vida, e o homem veio a ser uma alma [né·fesh] vivente." (Gên 2:7; veja ALMA.) Né·fesh pode ser traduzido literalmente por "alguém que respira", quer dizer, "criatura que respira", quer humana, quer animal. Nesha·máh, de fato, é usado para significar "coisa [ou criatura] que respira", e, como tal, é usado como virtual sinônimo de né·fesh, "alma". (Veja De 20:16; Jos 10:39, 40; 11:11; 1Rs 15:29.) O registro em Gênesis 2:7 usa nesha·máh para descrever como Deus fez o corpo de Adão ter vida, de modo que o homem se tornou "uma alma vivente". Outros textos, porém, mostram que estava envolvido mais do que a simples inalação de ar, isto é, mais do que apenas introduzir ar nos pulmões e expeli-lo dali. Assim, em Gênesis 7:22, ao descrever a destruição de vida humana e animal fora da arca, por ocasião do Dilúvio, lemos: "Morreu tudo em que o fôlego [forma de nesha·máh] da força [ou: "espírito" (rú·ahh)] da vida estava ativo nas suas narinas, a saber, todos os que estavam em solo seco." Nesha·máh, "fôlego", é assim diretamente associado ou relacionado com rú·ahh, que aqui descreve o espírito, ou a força de vida, que é ativa em todas as criaturas viventes — almas humanas ou animais.

Conforme declara o Theological Dictionary of the New Testament (Vol. VI, p. 336): "Pode-se discernir o fôlego apenas pelo movimento [como pelo movimento do tórax ou pela expansão das narinas], e é também um sinal, uma condição ou agente de vida, que parece estar esp[ecialmente] ligado à respiração." Portanto, nesha·máh, ou "fôlego", tanto é produto de rú·ahh, ou força de vida, como também é um dos meios principais para sustentar esta força de vida nas criaturas viventes. Por exemplo, sabe-se, à base de estudos científicos, que a vida está presente em cada uma dos cem trilhões de células do corpo, e que, embora bilhões de células morram cada minuto, prossegue a constante reprodução de novas células vivas. A força de vida, ativa em todas as células vivas, depende do oxigênio que a respiração traz ao corpo, oxigênio que é transportado a todas as células pela corrente sanguínea. Sem oxigênio, algumas células começam a morrer já depois de alguns minutos, outras depois de um período mais longo. Embora a pessoa possa passar sem respirar por alguns minutos e ainda assim sobreviver, sem a força de vida nas células ela está morta, não podendo ser revivificada por habilidades humanas. As Escrituras Hebraicas, inspiradas pelo Projetista e Criador do homem, evidentemente usam rú·ahh para denotar esta força vital, que é o próprio princípio da vida, e nesha·máh para representar a respiração que a sustenta.

Visto que a respiração está tão inseparavelmente interligada com a vida, nesha·máh e rú·ahh são usados em evidente paralelo, em diversos textos. Jó expressou a sua determinação de evitar a injustiça "enquanto estiver ainda em mim todo o meu fôlego [forma de nesha·máh], e o espírito [werú·ahh] de Deus estiver em minhas narinas". (Jó 27:3-5) Eliú disse: "Se [Deus] ajuntar a si o espírito [forma de rú·ahh] e o fôlego [forma de nesha·máh] do tal, toda a carne expirará [isto é, "expelirá o ar"] juntamente, e o próprio homem terreno retornará mesmo ao pó." (Jó 34:14, 15) De modo similar, o Salmo 104:29 diz a respeito das criaturas da Terra, humanas e animais: "Se [tu, Deus] lhes tiras o espírito, expiram e retornam ao seu pó." Em Isaías 42:5, fala-se de Jeová como "Aquele que estirou a terra e seu produto, Aquele que dá respiração ao povo sobre ela e espírito aos que andam nela". A respiração (nesha·máh) sustenta a existência deles; o espírito (rú·ahh) energiza o homem e é a força de vida que o habilita a ser uma criatura animada, a mover-se, a andar e a estar ativamente vivo. (Veja At 17:28.) Não é como os ídolos sem vida, sem respiração, inanimados, de fabricação humana. — Sal 135:15, 17; Je 10:14; 51:17; Hab 2:19.

Embora nesha·máh (fôlego) e rú·ahh (espírito; força ativa; força de vida) sejam às vezes usados em sentido paralelo, não são idênticos. É verdade que o "espírito", ou rú·ahh, às vezes é mencionado como se fosse a própria respiração (nesha·máh), mas isto parece ocorrer simplesmente porque a respiração é a principal evidência visível da força de vida no corpo da pessoa. — Jó 9:18; 19:17; 27:3.

Neste respeito, em Ezequiel 37:1-10, apresenta-se a visão simbólica do vale de ossos secos, ossos que se juntam, ficam cobertos de tendões, carne e pele, mas, "quanto a fôlego [werú·ahh], não havia neles nenhum". Ezequiel foi mandado profetizar "ao vento [ha·rú·ahh]", dizendo: "Entra dos quatro ventos [forma de rú·ahh], ó vento, e sopra sobre estes mortos para que revivam." A referência aos quatro ventos mostra que vento é neste caso a tradução apropriada de rú·ahh. Todavia, quando este "vento", que simplesmente é ar em movimento, penetrou nas narinas dos mortos da visão, ele se tornou "fôlego", que também é ar em movimento. Assim, traduzir rú·ahh por "fôlego", neste ponto do relato (v. 10), também é mais apropriado do que vertê-lo por "espírito" ou "força de vida". Ezequiel também podia ver aqueles corpos começar a respirar, embora não pudesse ver a força de vida, ou espírito, energizá-los. Conforme mostram os versículos 11-14, esta visão foi simbólica da revivificação espiritual (não física) do povo de Israel, que por algum tempo estava num estado de morte espiritual por causa do seu exílio babilônico. Visto que já estavam fisicamente vivos e respiravam, é lógico traduzir rú·ahh por "espírito" no versículo 14, onde Deus declara que porá 'seu espírito' no seu povo, para que este revivesse, falando-se em sentido espiritual.

Uma visão simbólica similar é apresentada no capítulo 11 de Revelação. Apresenta-se o quadro de "duas testemunhas" que são mortas e cujos cadáveres são deixados jazer na rua por três dias e meio. Daí, "entrou neles espírito [ou fôlego, pneú·ma] de vida da parte de Deus, e puseram-se de pé". (Re 11:1-11) Esta visão recorre novamente a uma realidade física para ilustrar uma revivificação espiritual. Mostra também que a palavra grega pneú·ma, assim como a hebraica rú·ahh, pode representar a força de vida da parte de Deus, a qual anima a alma ou pessoa humana. Conforme declara Tiago

2:26: "O corpo sem espírito [pneú·ma·tos] está morto." — Int.

Portanto, quando Deus criou o homem no Éden e soprou nas narinas dele "o fôlego [forma de neshamáh] de vida", é evidente que, além de encher de ar os pulmões do homem, Deus fez com que a força de vida, ou espírito (rú·ahh), vitalizasse todas as células do corpo de Adão. — Gên 2:7; compare isso com Sal 104:30; At 17:25.

Esta força de vida é transmitida de pais para filhos por meio da concepção. Visto que Jeová era a Fonte original desta força de vida para o homem, e o Autor do processo de procriação, a vida da pessoa pode ser corretamente atribuída a Ele, embora seja recebida, não direta, mas indiretamente, por meio dos pais. — Veja Jó 10:9-12; Sal 139:13-16; Ec 11:5.

A força de vida, ou espírito, é impessoal. Conforme observado, as Escrituras se referem a rú·ahh, ou força de vida, como existente não somente nos humanos, mas também nos animais. (Gên 6:17; 7:15, 22) Eclesiastes 3:18-22 mostra que o homem morre do mesmo modo que os animais, porque "todos eles têm apenas um só espírito [werú·ahh], de modo que não há nenhuma superioridade do homem sobre o animal", quer dizer, quanto à força de vida comum a ambos. Sendo assim, é evidente que o "espírito", ou força de vida (rú·ahh), conforme usado neste sentido, é impessoal. Como ilustração, poder-se-ia compará-lo a outra força invisível, a eletricidade, que pode ser usada para fazer funcionar diversos tipos de máquinas — fazendo com que fogões produzam calor, ventiladores gerem vento, computadores solucionem problemas, televisores produzam imagens, vozes e outros sons — contudo, esta corrente elétrica nunca assume quaisquer das características das máquinas em que opera ou é ativa.

Assim, o Salmo 146:3, 4, diz que, quando do homem 'sai o espírito [forma de rú·ahh], ele volta ao seu solo; neste dia perecem deveras os seus pensamentos'. O espírito, ou força de vida, que estava ativo nas células do corpo do homem, não retém quaisquer características daquelas células, tais como as células cerebrais, e o papel que desempenham no processo do raciocínio. Se o espírito, ou força de vida (rú·ahh; pneú·ma), não fosse impessoal, então significaria que os filhos de certas mulheres, ressuscitados pelos profetas Elias e Eliseu, na realidade, tiveram existência consciente em outra parte, no período em que estiveram mortos. O mesmo se teria dado também com Lázaro, que foi ressuscitado uns quatro dias depois de seu falecimento. (1Rs 17:17-23; 2Rs 4:32-37; Jo 11:38-44) Neste caso, seria razoável que eles se lembrassem de tal existência consciente durante aquele período, e, ao serem ressuscitados, teriam-na descrito, falando sobre ela. Nada indica que qualquer deles tenha feito isso. Portanto, a personalidade do morto não é perpetuada na força de vida, ou espírito, que para de funcionar nas células do falecido.

Eclesiastes 12:7 declara que, ao morrer, o corpo da pessoa retorna ao pó, "e o próprio espírito retorna ao verdadeiro Deus que o deu". A própria pessoa nunca esteve com Deus no céu; o que "retorna" a Deus, portanto, é a força vital que habilitou a pessoa a viver.

Em vista da natureza impessoal da força de vida, ou espírito, encontrada na pessoa (como também na criação animal), é evidente que a declaração de Davi, no Salmo 31:5, citada por Jesus por ocasião da sua morte (Lu 23:46): "À tua mão confio o meu espírito", significava que pedia a Deus que guardasse a força de vida, ou cuidasse dela. (Veja At 7:59.) Não é necessário que haja uma transmissão real ou literal, de alguma força, desde este planeta para a presença celeste de Deus. Assim como se disse que o cheiro fragrante de sacrifícios de animais era 'cheirado' por Deus (Gên 8:20, 21), embora esse cheiro sem dúvida permanecesse dentro da atmosfera da Terra, assim também, Deus podia "ajuntar a si", ou aceitar como confiado a ele, o espírito ou a força de vida em sentido figurado, quer dizer, sem uma transmissão literal de força vital desde a Terra. (Jó 34:14; Lu 23:46) Confiar alguém assim seu espírito a Deus evidentemente significa, portanto, que deposita Nele a sua confiança, de receber no futuro o restabelecimento desta força de vida por meio da ressurreição. — Veja Núm 16:22; 27:16; Jó 12:10; Sal 104:29, 30.

Impelente Inclinação Mental. Tanto rú·ahh como pneú·ma são palavras usadas para designar a força que induz a pessoa a demonstrar certa atitude, disposição ou emoção, ou a tomar certa ação ou adotar certo proceder. Ao passo que esta força dentro da pessoa é em si mesma invisível, ela produz efeitos visíveis. Este uso dos termos hebraico e grego traduzidos por "espírito" e basicamente relacionados com o fôlego ou o ar em movimento, é em considerável grau paralelo a certas expressões em português. Assim, falamos de alguém 'assumir ares', ou demonstrar um 'ar de tranquilidade', ou 'ter um mau espírito'. Falamos de 'quebrantar o espírito de alguém', no sentido de desencorajá-lo ou desanimá-lo. Conforme aplicado a um grupo de pessoas e à força prevalecente que as move, talvez digamos que 'estão imbuídas do espírito da ocasião', ou talvez mencionemos 'o espírito de tumulto' que as contagia. Em sentido metafórico, talvez falemos duma 'atmosfera de descontentamento' ou de 'ventos de mudança e de revolução que varrem uma nação'. Com tudo isso referimo-nos a esta força ativante, invisível, que age nas pessoas, induzindo-as a falar e a agir do modo como o fazem.

Similarmente, lemos a respeito da "amargura de espírito" de Isaque e Rebeca, por causa do casamento de Esaú com mulheres hititas (Gên 26:34, 35) e do espírito triste que sobreveio a Acabe, tirando-lhe o apetite. (1Rs 21:5) O "espírito de ciúme" podia induzir um homem a encarar a esposa com suspeita, até mesmo acusando-a de adultério. — Núm 5:14, 30.

O sentido básico, de uma força que move alguém e o "impele" ou "induz" a ações e palavras, é também visto na referência a Josué como "homem em quem há espírito" (Núm 27:18), e a Calebe, como demonstrando ter "um espírito diferente" daquele da maioria dos israelitas, que haviam ficado desmoralizados pelo relatório mau de dez espias. (Núm 14:24) Elias era homem de muito impulso e força no seu serviço zeloso a Deus, e Eliseu procurou obter duas parcelas do espírito de Elias, como sucessor dele. (2Rs 2:9, 15) João, o Batizador, demonstrou ter o mesmo vigoroso impulso e enérgico zelo que Elias havia demonstrado, e isto resultou em João produzir um forte efeito nos seus ouvintes; por isso se podia dizer que ele saíra "com o espírito e o poder de Elias". (Lu 1:17) Em contraste, a riqueza e a sabedoria de Salomão tiveram um efeito tão sobrepujante e emocionante sobre a rainha de Sabá, que "se mostrou não haver mais espírito nela". (1Rs 10:4, 5) Neste mesmo sentido fundamental, o espírito da pessoa pode ser 'incitado' ou 'despertado' (1Cr 5:26; Esd 1:1, 5; Ag 1:14; compare isso com Ec 10:4), ficar "agitado" ou "irritado" (Gên 41:8; Da 2:1, 3; At 17:16), 'acalmar-se' (Jz 8:3), 'afligir-se', 'debilitar-se' (Jó 7:11; Sal 142:2, 3; compare isso com Jo 11:33; 13:21) ou ser 'reanimado' (Gên 45:27, 28; Is 57:15, 16; 1Co 16:17, 18; 2Co 7:13; compare isso com 2 Co 2:13).

Coração e espírito. Frequentemente, relaciona-se o coração com o espírito, indicando um vínculo específico. Visto que se mostra que o coração figurativo tem a capacidade de pensar e de ter motivação, e de estar intimamente relacionado com emoções e afeições (veja CORAÇÃO), sem dúvida, tem uma grande participação no desenvolvimento do espírito (a inclinação mental predominante) que se demonstra ter. Êxodo 35:21 coloca o coração e o espírito em paralelo ao dizer que "todo aquele cujo coração o impelia, . . . todo aquele cujo espírito o incitava", trouxe contribuições para a construção do tabernáculo. Inversamente, quando souberam das poderosas obras de Jeová a favor de Israel, 'os corações dos cananeus começaram a derreter-se e em ninguém se levantou ainda espírito', isto é, não havia incentivo para tomar alguma ação contra as forças israelitas. (Jos 2:11; 5:1; compare isso com Ez 21:7.) Fazem-se também referências 'à dor de coração e ao quebrantamento do espírito' (Is 65:14), ou expressões similares. (Veja Sal 34:18; 143:4, 7; Pr 15:13.) Evidentemente, por causa do poderoso efeito da força ativante sobre a mente, Paulo admoesta: "Deveis ser feitos novos na força que ativa [forma de pneú·ma] a vossa mente, e . . . vos deveis revestir da nova personalidade, que foi criada segundo a vontade de Deus, em verdadeira justiça e lealdade." — Ef 4:23, 24.

Enfatiza-se fortemente a necessidade vital de se controlar o espírito. "Como uma cidade arrombada, sem muralha, é o homem que não domina seu espírito." (Pr 25:28) Quando provocada, a pessoa pode agir como aquele estúpido que impacientemente 'deixa sair todo o seu espírito', ao passo que o sábio "o mantém calmo até o último". (Pr 29:11; compare isso com 14:29, 30.) Moisés deixou-se provocar indevidamente, quando os israelitas, em certa ocasião, "amarguraram-lhe o espírito", e ele "começou a falar precipitadamente com os seus lábios", para o seu próprio prejuízo. (Sal 106:32, 33) Assim, "melhor é o vagaroso em irar-se do que o homem poderoso, e aquele que controla seu espírito, do que aquele que captura uma cidade". (Pr 16:32) Para isso, a humildade é essencial (Pr 16:18, 19; Ec 7:8, 9), e "quem é humilde de espírito segurará a glória". (Pr 29:23) O conhecimento e o discernimento mantêm o homem "de espírito frio", controlando sua língua. (Pr 17:27; 15:4) Jeová faz "a avaliação dos espíritos" e julga aqueles que deixam de 'guardar-se quanto ao seu espírito'. — Pr 16:2; Mal 2:14-16.

Espírito demonstrado por um grupo de pessoas. Assim como uma pessoa pode mostrar certo espírito, assim também um grupo ou conjunto de pessoas pode manifestar certo espírito, uma inclinação mental predominante. (Gál 6:18; 1Te 5:23) A congregação cristã deve estar unida em espírito, refletindo o espírito da sua Cabeça, Cristo Jesus. — 2Co 11:4; Fil 1:27; compare isso com 2Co 12:18; Fil 2:19-21.

Paulo menciona "o espírito do mundo" em contraste com o espírito de Deus. (1Co 2:12) O mundo, sob o controle do Adversário de Deus (1Jo 5:19), mostra o espírito de satisfazer os desejos da carne decaída, de egoísmo, resultando em inimizade com Deus. (Ef 2:1-3; Tg 4:5) Como o Israel infiel, a motivação impura do mundo promove a fornicação, quer física, quer espiritual, junto com idolatria. — Os 4:12, 13; 5:4; Za 13:2; compare isso com 2Co 7:1.

ESPÍRITO SANTO. Veja ESPÍRITO.

ESPONJA. Esqueleto absorvente, resistente, elástico, de certos animais aquáticos encontrados em abundância nas águas do mar Mediterrâneo oriental e em outras partes. Provavelmente, obtinham-se as esponjas (no passado, bem como ainda no presente) por meio de mergulhadores, que as retiravam à mão de rochas submersas. Depois que o animal morria e se decompunha dentro de seu esqueleto, a esponja era lavada cabalmente até restar apenas o esqueleto.

A capacidade da esponja de absorver e soltar líquidos tornava-a comercialmente importante nos tempos antigos. Quando Jesus Cristo estava na estaca de tortura, ofereceram-lhe vinho acre contido numa esponja na ponta duma cana. — Mt 27:48; Mr 15:36; Jo 19:29.

ESPOSA. Mulher casada. Em hebraico, 'ish·sháh, significa "mulher" (literalmente: homem feminino) ou "esposa"; a esposa era chamada de "possuída por um marido". (Is 62:4 n.) Em grego, gy·né pode significar "esposa", ou pode significar "mulher", quer casada, quer não. Jeová Deus proveu o primeiro homem, Adão, duma esposa por tomar uma costela dele e construir desta uma mulher. Ela tornou-se assim osso dos ossos do homem e carne da sua carne. Era o complemento de Adão e foi criada como ajudadora dele. (Gên 2:18, 20-23) Deus tratava diretamente com Adão, e Adão, por sua vez, transmitia os mandamentos de Deus à sua esposa. Por ter sido criado primeiro e por ter sido criado à imagem de Deus, ele tinha prioridade como cabeça e era para ela o porta-voz de Deus. A chefia dele devia ser exercida em amor, e a mulher, como ajudadora, devia cooperar no mandato procriativo dado ao casal. — Gên 1:28; veja MULHER.

Após o pecado, primeiro de Eva, que, em vez de ser ajudadora do seu esposo, mostrou-se tentadora, e depois de seu esposo, Adão, que a acompanhou na transgressão, Deus proferiu julgamento sobre a mulher, dizendo: "Aumentarei grandemente a dor da tua gravidez; em dores de parto darás à luz filhos, e terás desejo ardente de teu esposo, e ele te dominará." (Gên 3:16) Desde então, entre muitos povos da terra, a mulher de fato tem sido dominada pelo seu esposo, muitas vezes de modo bem duro, e, em vez de ela ser companheira e ajudadora, em muitos casos tem sido tratada mais como serva.

Entre os Antigos Hebreus. Entre os antigos hebreus, o homem era cabeça da casa e era o dono (hebraico: bá·'al) da sua esposa, e a mulher era a possuída (be'u·láh). Entre os servos de Deus, a esposa ocupava um lugar digno e honroso. Mulheres piedosas de espírito e habilidade, embora sujeitas à chefia do esposo, tinham muita margem e liberdade de ação, e sentiam-se felizes no seu lugar; eram abençoadas por serem usadas por Jeová Deus em realizar serviços especiais para ele. Exemplos dentre as muitas esposas fiéis, na Bíblia, são Sara, Rebeca, Débora, Rute, Ester e Maria, mãe de Jesus.

Proteção da esposa sob a Lei. Ao passo que o esposo ocupava a posição superior no arranjo marital, os requisitos de Deus estipulavam que ele provesse a família em sentido material e espiritual, e cuidasse dela. Também, quaisquer transgressões da família refletiam sobre ele; por conseguinte, tinha uma pesada responsabilidade. E embora tivesse maiores privilégios do que a esposa, a lei de Deus protegia a esposa e dava-lhe certos privilégios extraordinários, de modo que ela podia levar uma vida feliz e produtiva.

Uns poucos exemplos das provisões da Lei referentes à esposa eram: Tanto o esposo como a esposa podiam ser mortos por adultério. Se o esposo suspeitava infidelidade secreta por parte da esposa, ele podia levá-la perante o sacerdote, para que Jeová Deus julgasse a questão, e se a mulher era culpada, os órgãos reprodutivos dela atrofiavam; por outro lado, se ela não era culpada, exigia-se que o esposo a engravidasse, reconhecendo assim publicamente a inocência dela. (Núm 5:12-31) O esposo podia divorciar-se da esposa, se encontrasse algo indecente da parte dela. Isto provavelmente incluía coisas tais como mostrar grave desrespeito para com ele ou lançar vitupério sobre a família ou sobre a do pai dele. Mas a esposa ficava protegida pelo requisito de que ele tinha de dar-lhe por escrito um certificado de divórcio. Ela estava então livre para se casar com outro homem. (De 24:1, 2) Se a esposa fazia um voto que seu esposo achava imprudente ou prejudicial para o bem-estar da família, ele podia anulá-lo. (Núm 30:10-15) Isto, porém, servia de salvaguarda para a esposa, impedindo que tomasse alguma ação precipitada que talvez a metesse em dificuldades.

A poligamia era permitida sob a Lei mosaica, mas era regulamentada, de modo que a esposa ficava protegida. O esposo não podia transferir o direito de primogênito do filho da esposa menos amada para o filho da esposa favorita. (De 21:15-17) Quando uma filha israelita era vendida pelo pai como serva e o amo dela a tomasse como concubina, o dono dela podia permitir que fosse resgatada, se ela não lhe agradava, mas não podia vendê-la a um povo estrangeiro. (Êx 21:7, 8) Se ele ou seu filho a tivesse tomado como concubina e depois se tivesse casado com outra, devia-se provê-la de alimento, roupa e abrigo, bem como conceder-lhe os deveres conjugais. — Êx 21:9-11.

Quando o esposo maliciosamente acusava a esposa de ter falsamente afirmado ser virgem por ocasião do casamento e a acusação dele se mostrasse falsa, ele era punido e tinha de pagar ao pai dela o dobro da taxa de casamento por virgens, e nunca, em todos os seus dias, podia divorciar-se dela. (De 22:13-19) Quando um homem seduzia uma virgem não prometida em casamento, exigia-se dele pagar o preço de casamento ao pai dela, e, se o pai o permitia, casar-se com ela, nunca, em todos os seus dias, podendo depois divorciar-se dela. — De 22:28, 29; Êx 22:16, 17.

Embora a posição da esposa na sociedade hebraica fosse um pouco diferente da atual condição da esposa na sociedade ocidental, a fiel esposa hebreia gostava da sua posição e do seu trabalho. Ela ajudava o marido, criava os filhos, administrava a casa, e encontrava muitas coisas que davam satisfação e prazer, podendo expressar plenamente sua natureza e seus talentos femininos.

Descrição da Boa Esposa. A condição feliz e as atividades da esposa fiel são descritas em Provérbios 31. Diz-se que, para seu marido, ela é mais valiosa do que corais. Ele pode confiar nela. Ela é diligente — tecendo, fazendo roupas para a sua família, cuidando das compras das coisas necessárias para a família, trabalhando no vinhedo, administrando a casa com servos, ajudando outros em necessidade, vestindo sua família de modo atraente, até mesmo produzindo lucro com o seu trabalho, equipando a família para eventuais emergências, expressando-se com sabedoria e benevolência, e, pelo temor de Jeová e por boas obras, recebendo o louvor do esposo e dos filhos, honrando assim o esposo e a família no país. Deveras, quem achou uma boa esposa achou uma coisa boa e obtém boa vontade da parte de Jeová. — Pr 18:22.

Na Congregação Cristã. Na congregação cristã, a norma é que o marido deve ter apenas uma esposa viva. (1Co 7:2; 1Ti 3:2) Ordena-se às esposas estarem em sujeição ao marido, quer ele seja crente cristão, quer não. (Ef 5:22-24) As esposas não devem negar o dever conjugal, porque, assim como no caso do marido, também a esposa não "exerce autoridade sobre o seu próprio corpo". (1Co 7:3, 4) Instrui-se às esposas que deixem que seu adorno primário seja o da pessoa secreta do coração, produzindo os frutos do espírito, a fim de que talvez, já pela mera conduta delas, o marido incrédulo seja ganho para o cristianismo. — 1Pe 3:1-6.

Uso Figurado. Em sentido figurado, Jeová chamou Israel de sua esposa, em razão do pacto com esta nação. (Is 54:6) O apóstolo Paulo chama a Jeová de Pai dos cristãos gerados pelo espírito, e chama "a Jerusalém de cima" de mãe deles, como se Jeová estivesse casado com ela para produzir cristãos gerados pelo espírito. (Gál 4:6, 7, 26) A congregação cristã é chamada de noiva, ou esposa, de Jesus Cristo. — Ef 5:23, 25; Re 19:7; 21:2, 9.

ESROM [Pátio; Povoação].

1. Filho de Rubem e cabeça ancestral dos "esronitas". — Gên 46:9; Êx 6:14; Núm 26:4-6; 1Cr 5:3.

2. Filho de Peres e cabeça de família dos "esronitas" de Judá; antepassado do Rei Davi e de Jesus Cristo. (Gên 46:12; Núm 26:20, 21; Ru 4:18-22; Mt 1:3; Lu 3:33) À idade de 60 anos, Esrom tomou por esposa a filha de Maquir, e por meio dela tornou-se pai de Segube. (1Cr 2:21) Seus filhos Jerameel, Rão e Quelubai (Calebe) parecem ter nascido antes disso. — 1Cr 2:9, 18, 25.

Segundo a versão do texto massorético em 1 Crônicas 2:24, Esrom morreu em Calebe-Efrata, e depois disso, sua viúva Abias deu à luz Assur, pai de Tecoa. No entanto, alguns peritos acham que o texto massorético não preserva a versão original, visto que Esrom está alistado entre as 70 "almas da casa de Jacó, que vieram ao Egito", e, por isso, deve ter morrido naquele país (Gên 46:12, 26, 27), e parece-lhes pouco provável que um lugar no Egito tivesse o nome hebraico de Calebe-Efrata. Por isso, muitos tradutores emendaram 1 Crônicas 2:24 para corresponder mais à versão da Septuaginta grega e da Vulgata latina. A Bíblia de Jerusalém verte este texto: "Depois que morreu Hesron, Caleb casou-se com Éfrata, esposa de seu pai Hesron, que lhe gerou Asur, pai de Técua." A tradução, em inglês, de J. B. Rotherham reza: "E depois da morte de Esrom, Calebe entrou em Efrata, e a esposa de Esrom era Abias, que lhe deu à luz Assur, pai de Tecoa." Portanto, segundo estas alterações, "Assur" ou é "filho" de Esrom com Abias, ou é "filho" de Calebe com Efrata.

3. Cidade na fronteira meridional de Judá, situada entre Cades-Barneia e Adar. (Jos 15:1-3) Todavia, o relato paralelo em Números 34:4 não alista Esrom e Adar separadamente, mas reza "Hazar-Adar", dando a entender que Esrom, ou Hazar, provavelmente ficava perto de Adar, se é que não era o mesmo lugar. — Veja ADAR, II N.º 2.

ESRONITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Esrom]. Esta designação é aplicada tanto à família descendente de Esrom, filho de Rubem (Gên 46:9; Núm 26:4-6) como a quem descendia de Esrom, neto de Judá. — Gên 46:12; Núm 26:21.

ESTACA DE TORTURA. Instrumento tal como aquele em que Jesus Cristo morreu por ser pregado nele. (Mt 27:32-40; Mr 15:21-30; Lu 23:26; Jo 19:17-19, 25) No grego clássico, a palavra (staurós), traduzida por "estaca de tortura" na Tradução do Novo Mundo, denota primariamente uma estaca, ou poste, ereto, e não há nenhuma evidência de que os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs a usassem para indicar uma estaca com travessa. — Veja PREGAR EM ESTACA; Int, pp. 1149-1151.

O livro The Non-Christian Cross (A Cruz Não Cristã), de John Denham Parsons, declara: "Não existe uma única sentença em qualquer dos inúmeros escritos que formam o Novo Testamento que, no grego original, forneça sequer evidência indireta no sentido de que o stauros usado no caso de Jesus fosse diferente do stauros comum; muito menos no sentido de que consistisse, não em um só pedaço de madeira, mas em dois pedaços pregados juntos em forma de uma cruz. . . . É um tanto desencaminhante, da parte de nossos mestres, traduzirem a palavra stauros por 'cruz' ao verterem os documentos gregos da Igreja para a nossa língua nativa, e apoiarem tal medida por incluírem 'cruz' em nossos léxicos como sendo o significado de stauros, sem explicarem cuidadosamente que esse, de qualquer modo, não era o significado primário dessa palavra nos dias dos Apóstolos, que não se tornou seu significado primário senão muito depois disso, e só se tornou tal, se é que se tornou, porque, apesar da falta de evidência corroborativa, presumiu-se, por uma razão ou outra, que o stauros específico em que Jesus foi executado tinha esse determinado formato." — Londres, 1896, pp. 23, 24.

Por Que Jesus Tinha de Morrer numa Estaca. Na ocasião em que Jeová Deus deu a sua lei aos israelitas, estes se comprometeram a acatar os termos dela. (Êx 24:3) Todavia, por serem descendentes do pecador Adão, não conseguiram fazer isso perfeitamente. Por este motivo, passaram a estar sob a maldição da Lei. Para remover deles esta maldição especial, Jesus tinha de ser pendurado numa estaca como se fosse um criminoso amaldiçoado. Sobre isso escreveu o apóstolo Paulo: "Todos os que dependem de obras da lei estão sob maldição; porque está escrito: 'Maldito é todo aquele que não continuar em todas as coisas escritas no rolo da Lei, a fim de as fazer.' . . . Cristo nos livrou da maldição da Lei por meio duma compra, por se tornar maldição em nosso lugar, porque está escrito: 'Maldito é todo aquele pendurado num madeiro.'" — Gál 3:10-13.

Uso Figurado. "Estaca de tortura" às vezes representa sofrimentos, vergonha ou tortura sofridos por se ser seguidor de Jesus Cristo. Conforme Jesus disse: "Aquele que não aceita a sua estaca de tortura e não me segue não é digno de mim." (Mt 10:38; 16:24; Mr 8:34; Lu 9:23; 14:27) A expressão "estaca de tortura" é também usada de modo a representar a morte de Jesus na estaca, o que tornou possível a redenção do pecado e a reconciliação com Deus. — 1Co 1:17, 18.

A morte de Jesus na estaca de tortura constituía a base para a eliminação da Lei, a qual tinha separado os judeus dos não judeus. Portanto, por aceitarem a reconciliação tornada possível pela morte de Jesus, tanto judeus como não judeus podiam tornar-se para 'Deus um só corpo, por intermédio da estaca de tortura'. (Ef 2:11-16; Col 1:20; 2:13, 14) Isto mostrou ser uma pedra de tropeço para muitos judeus, visto que insistiam em que a circuncisão e a aderência à Lei mosaica eram essenciais para se obter a aprovação de Deus. Foi por isso que o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Irmãos, se eu ainda pregasse a circuncisão, por que estaria ainda sendo perseguido? Então, deveras, a pedra de tropeço da estaca de tortura foi abolida." (Gál 5:11) "Todos os que querem apresentar uma aparência agradável na carne são os que tentam compelir-vos a ser circuncidados, apenas para que não sejam perseguidos pela estaca de tortura do Cristo, Jesus. Que nunca ocorra que eu me jacte, exceto da estaca de tortura de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo, por intermédio de quem o mundo tem sido para mim pregado numa estaca, e eu para o mundo." (Gál 6:12, 14) Paulo foi perseguido pelos judeus por confessar que a morte de Jesus na estaca de tortura constituía a única base para se obter a salvação. Em consequência desta confissão, para o apóstolo, o mundo era algo pregado numa estaca, condenado ou morto, ao passo que o mundo o encarava com ódio, como criminoso pregado numa estaca.

Aqueles que adotam o cristianismo, mas que depois passam a levar uma vida imoral, mostram que são "inimigos da estaca de tortura do Cristo". (Fil 3:18, 19) As ações deles demonstram que não têm nenhum apreço pelos benefícios resultantes da morte de Jesus numa estaca de tortura. Eles têm "pisado o Filho de Deus" e têm 'considerado de pouco valor o sangue do pacto com que foram santificados'. — He 10:29.

ESTAÇÕES. Veja ÉPOCAS, ESTAÇÕES.

ESTÁDIO. A palavra grega (stá·di·on), traduzida assim, denota uma medida linear equivalente a 185 m (625 pés romanos) ou 1/8 de milha romana. (A milha romana equivale a 1.479,5 m.) (Re 14:20; 21:16) Este é o comprimento aproximado tanto do estádio (campo esportivo) ático como do romano. Em 1 Coríntios 9:24, o termo stá·di·on (estádio) é traduzido por "corrida", sendo de um estádio o comprimento da pista de corrida grega. O estádio da pista olímpica, porém, tinha realmente 192 m.

ESTANHO. Metal de um branco levemente azulado, que é muito maleável. Dentre os seis produtos do antigo forno metalúrgico, o estanho tinha o mais baixo ponto de fundição, apenas 232°C. (Ez 22:18, 20) A palavra hebraica original, bedhíl, significa "aquilo que é separado ou dividido", quer dizer, dos metais preciosos, pela fundição; é também traduzido por "refugo". — Is 1:25.

Não havia minas de estanho na Palestina. A primeira referência ao estanho, logo depois do Êxodo, o inclui entre os valiosos despojos de guerra tirados dos midianitas. (Núm 31:2, 22) Os tírios obtinham estanho de Társis. (Ez 27:12) A maior parte do pesado e escuro óxido de estanho, chamado cassiterita, vinha de areias fluviais da Espanha e da Inglaterra. O estanho, pelo que parece, era usado para fazer prumos, porque em Zacarias 4:10 (que fala do "prumo") o texto massorético reza, "a pedra [ou: o peso], o estanho". Em Amós 7:7, 8, a palavra hebraica traduzida por "prumo" pode significar estanho ou chumbo. A maior utilidade do estanho, porém, era como agente endurecedor; em antigos espécimes de bronze encontrou-se uma liga de cobre com 2 a 18 por cento de estanho.

ESTAOL [possivelmente: Lugar de se Indagar [de Deus]]. Cidade na Sefelá, designada a Judá. (Jos 15:20, 33) Foi mais tarde alistada como cidade na fronteira de Dã. (Jos 19:40, 41) O juiz Sansão foi primeiro impelido pelo espírito de Jeová nesta região, e, quando faleceu, foi sepultado ali. (Jz 13:25; 16:31) Os 5 danitas que espionaram Laís e os 600 que subsequentemente a capturaram partiram de Estaol e de Zorá. — Jz 18:1, 2, 7, 11, 27.

Os peritos geralmente identificam Estaol com o hoje parcialmente ocupado lugar de Eshwaʽ (Eshta'ol). Fica numa plataforma de rocha a uns 21 km ao O de Jerusalém.

ESTAOLITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Estaol]. Habitantes de Estaol, de Judá, que descenderam de Sobal através das famílias de Quiriate-Jearim. — 1Cr 2:53.

ESTÁQUIS [Espiga]. Um homem na congregação cristã de Roma, por volta de 56 EC, a quem Paulo chama de "meu amado" e a quem envia seus cumprimentos. — Ro 16:9.

ESTÁTER. Moeda de prata com que se pagou o imposto do templo por Jesus e por seu apóstolo Pedro. Valendo quatro dracmas, equivalia naquele tempo ao salário de quatro dias de trabalho. (Mt 17:24, 27) Muitos peritos acham tratar-se da tetradracma cunhada em Antioquia, na Síria, ou em Tiro. A tetradracma tíria, aproximadamente do tamanho do meio dólar estadunidense, ostentava a cabeça do deus Melcart no anverso, tendo no verso uma águia pousada no leme dum navio, e a inscrição "Tiro, a Santa e Invencível". A efígie do Imperador Augusto constava na tetradracma de Antioquia.

ESTÁTUA. Veja IMAGEM (ESTÁTUA).

ESTATUTO. Regra ou lei — divina ou humana — formalmente estabelecida e registrada. (Gên 26:5; Sal 89:30-32; Da 6:15) A Bíblia revela que Jeová Deus é o supremo Legislador. — Is 33:22; veja LEGISLADOR; LEI.

ESTÉFANAS [duma raiz que significa "coroa; grinalda"]. Um dos membros maduros da congregação em Corinto, capital da província romana da Acaia, na Grécia meridional. Paulo batizou pessoalmente a família de Estéfanas como "primícias" do seu ministério naquela província. (1Co 1:16; 16:15) Uns cinco anos mais tarde, por volta de 55 EC, Estéfanas, junto com mais dois irmãos de Corinto, visitaram Paulo em Éfeso, e talvez fosse por meio deles que Paulo soube das condições aflitivas sobre as quais escreveu na sua primeira carta canônica aos coríntios. (1Co 1:11; 5:1; 11:18) Também, talvez fosse pela mão deles que esta carta foi entregue em Corinto. — 1Co 16:17.

ESTEMOA, ESTEMO [possivelmente: Lugar de Escutar [isto é, a palavra de Deus]].

1. Filho de Isbá, ou, possivelmente, cidade de Judá, cujos habitantes na maioria descendiam de Isbá. — 1Cr 4:17.

2. Maacatita e descendente de Hodias. — 1Cr 4:19.

3. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá, também chamada Estemo. Embora originalmente designada a Judá, foi depois aquinhoada aos levitas, junto com seus pastios. (Jos 15:50; 21:14; 1Cr 6:57) Corresponde à atual aldeia de es Samuʽ (Eshtemoaʽ), situada a uns 15 km ao SSO de Hébron. Talvez seja a mesma que a N.º 1.

Estemoa era um dos lugares frequentados por Davi como fugitivo, e depois da sua vitória sobre os incursores amalequitas, ele enviou aos amigos ali um presente tirado dos despojos. — 1Sa 30:26-28.

ESTER. Jovem órfã judia, da tribo de Benjamim, cujo nome hebraico era Hadassa (que significa "Murta"); descendente dos deportados de Jerusalém junto com o Rei Joaquim (Jeconias), em 617 AEC. (Est 2:5-7) Era filha de Abiail, tio de Mordecai. (Est 2:15) Seu guardião era seu primo mais velho, Mordecai, um dos "servos do rei que estavam no portão do rei", do palácio em Susã, durante o reinado do rei persa Assuero (Xerxes I, no quinto século AEC). (Est 2:7; 3:2) Depois de Assuero ter deposto a rainha Vasti por sua desobediência, ele ordenou que se ajuntassem todas as virgens belas para um período de massagens especiais e de tratamento de beleza, a fim de que o rei pudesse escolher uma delas para substituir Vasti como rainha. Ester estava entre as levadas à casa do rei e confiadas aos cuidados de Hegai, guardião das mulheres. Segundo a orientação de Mordecai, ela manteve em segredo que era judia. (Est 2:8, 10) Ester foi escolhida como rainha no sétimo ano do reinado de Assuero. (Est 2:16, 17) Ela sempre mantinha contato com Mordecai, seguindo os conselhos dele. Falou ao rei em nome de Mordecai, quando este descobriu uma trama contra o rei. — Est 2:20, 22.

No 12.º ano de Assuero, Hamã, o agagita, que era primeiro-ministro, planejou o aniquilamento de todos os judeus nos 127 distritos jurisdicionais do império. Recebeu autorização do rei para emitir um decreto para executar isso. (Est 3:7-13) Seguindo a informação e o conselho de Mordecai, Ester revelou ao rei a intenção iníqua da trama de Hamã. A reação de Hamã aumentou a fúria do rei, e Hamã foi pendurado num madeiro. (Est 4:7-7:10) O rei, a pedido de Ester, emitiu um segundo decreto, autorizando os judeus a lutar pela sua vida no dia marcado para a matança deles. (Est 8:3-14) Por causa do edito do rei e por medo de Mordecai, que substituiu Hamã como primeiro-ministro, os governadores e autoridades do império ajudaram os judeus a obter uma vitória completa sobre os seus inimigos. (Est 9) As instruções de Mordecai, confirmadas por Ester, ordenaram aos judeus celebrar anualmente a Festa de Purim, costume guardado até o dia de hoje. — Est 9:20, 21, 29.

Embora o livro de Ester não mencione o nome de Deus, é evidente, das ações de Mordecai e de Ester, que ambos eram servos fiéis do verdadeiro Deus Jeová. Ester demonstrou ter as qualidades de quem confia na lei de Deus. Ela era "bonita de figura e bela de aparência" (Est 2:7), no entanto, mais importante é o fato de que ela manifestava o adorno da "pessoa secreta do coração, na vestimenta incorruptível dum espírito quieto e brando". (1Pe 3:4) Por isso, obteve o favor de Hegai, guardião das mulheres, bem como do próprio rei. Ela não achava que adornos ostentosos fossem a coisa importante, e, por conseguinte, "não solicitou nada senão o que Hegai . . . passou a mencionar". (Est 2:15) Usou de muito tato e autodomínio. Era submissa ao seu esposo, Assuero, dirigindo-se a ele com tato e respeito, quando a vida dela e a do seu povo estavam em perigo. Mantinha-se calada quando era sábio fazer isso, mas falava firme e destemidamente quando era necessário, e na hora certa. (Est 2:10; 7:3-6) Aceitava os conselhos de seu maduro primo Mordecai, mesmo quando segui-los punha em perigo a sua própria vida. (Est 4:12-16) Seu amor e sua lealdade para com os do seu povo, os judeus, que também eram o povo pactuado de Deus, foram demonstrados quando ela agiu a favor deles. — Veja MORDECAI N.º 2.

ESTER, LIVRO DE. Livro das Escrituras Hebraicas, cujo título deriva do nome de seu principal personagem, embora algumas cópias da Vulgata latina o chamem de "Assuero", segundo o rei persa que aparece de modo destacado no relato. Os judeus o chamam de Meghil·láth ʼEs·tér, ou simplesmente de o Meghil·láh, que significa "rolo; rolo escrito", porque constitui para eles um rolo muito estimado.

O Escritor do Livro. As Escrituras não revelam quem escreveu o livro de Ester. Alguns peritos atribuem o livro a Esdras, mas o peso da evidência aponta para Mordecai. Mordecai estava em condições de conhecer todos os fatos pormenorizados, mencionados na narrativa, relacionados com os assuntos pessoais dele e os de Ester, com a atuação dos membros da família de Hamã, e especialmente com os acontecimentos no castelo de Susã. Depois da sua promoção para primeiro-ministro do governo persa, ele tinha acesso aos documentos oficiais mencionados no relato, e, assim como Daniel, Esdras e Neemias, em outros períodos, ocupavam posições oficiais no governo da Pérsia e escreveram livros bíblicos que descrevem a relação dos judeus com aquela potência mundial, assim Mordecai, com a bênção de Jeová, era o mais provável de ter escrito o livro de Ester.

Circunstâncias Históricas. O relato fixa o tempo dos eventos relatados nele durante o reinado de Assuero, que governou enquanto o Império Persa se estendia desde a Índia até a Etiópia e incluía 127 províncias ou distritos jurisdicionais. (Est 1:1) Estes fatos, e a sua inclusão no cânon por Esdras, restringem a sua cobertura ao período do reino de um dos seguintes três reis conhecidos na história secular: Dario I, o persa, Xerxes I e Artaxerxes Longímano. Todavia, sabe-se que tanto Dario I como Artaxerxes Longímano favoreceram os judeus antes do 12.º ano dos seus respectivos reinados, o que não se ajusta ao Assuero do livro, visto que ele aparentemente não estava bem familiarizado com os judeus e a religião deles, nem estava inclinado a favorecê-los. Portanto, acredita-se que o Assuero do livro de Ester seja Xerxes I, filho do rei persa Dario, o Grande. Algumas traduções (BLH, PIB) até mesmo colocam "Xerxes" em vez de "Assuero" no texto.

No livro de Ester, os anos de reinado deste rei parecem ser contados a partir da sua corregência com o seu pai Dario, o Grande. Visto que os primeiros eventos relatados no livro de Ester ocorreram no terceiro ano do seu reinado, e o remanescente do relato abrange o restante do seu reinado, o livro evidentemente abrange o período de 493 AEC a cerca de 475 AEC. — Veja PÉRSIA, PERSAS (Os Reinados de Xerxes e de Artaxerxes).

O livro de Ester foi escrito algum tempo depois do 12.º ano de Xerxes, e, evidentemente, até o fim do reinado de Xerxes (c. 475 AEC). O estilo vívido do livro sugere que o escritor era testemunha ocular. Além disso, a forte inferência de que o escritor tinha acesso a documentos governamentais (Est 10:2) torna bem provável que o livro tenha sido escrito em Susã, na província de Elão, então parte da Pérsia. Sua mistura de palavras persas e caldaicas com hebraicas enquadra-se no já mencionado tempo de escrita, bem como em ser a terra da Pérsia o lugar em que foi escrito.

Esdras talvez levasse o livro de Babilônia para Jerusalém, em 468 AEC, porque a Grande Sinagoga de Jerusalém o tinha no cânon antes de terminar o período dela por volta de 300 AEC.

Autenticidade e Canonicidade. A autoridade canônica do livro de Ester é por alguns posta em dúvida, porque não se faz menção nem alusão a ele nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Mas esta não é uma objeção conclusiva, porque as mesmas circunstâncias existem com relação a outros livros de canonicidade bem atestada, tais como Esdras e Eclesiastes. Melito de Sardes, Gregório Nazianzeno e Atanásio estão entre aqueles que o omitem da sua lista de livros canônicos. Todavia, Jerônimo, Agostinho e Orígenes mencionam o livro por nome. Ele existe na coleção Chester Beatty, encontrando-se os livros de Ezequiel, Daniel e Ester em um só códice, o qual provavelmente foi compilado na primeira metade do terceiro século EC. Sua autoridade nunca parece ter sido duvidada pelos judeus ou pelos primitivos cristãos, como um todo. Os judeus, nas Bíblias deles, mais frequentemente o colocam nos Hagiógrafos (os Escritos) entre Eclesiastes e Daniel.

Posteriormente, inseriram-se no livro acréscimos apócrifos. Alguns peritos datam a origem destes de aproximadamente 100 AEC, cerca de 300 anos depois de se ter fixado o cânon das Escrituras Hebraicas, de acordo com o conceito tradicional.

O livro de Ester é acusado de exageros por sua menção de um banquete durante 180 dias, no terceiro ano do reinado de Assuero. (Est 1:3, 4) No entanto, mencionou-se que uma festa tão longa talvez tivesse sido realizada para acomodar os numerosos

DESTAQUES DE ESTER

Relato vívido de como Ester, com a orientação de seu primo mais velho, Mordecai, foi usada por Deus para livrar os judeus do extermínio.

Evidentemente, foi escrito por Mordecai, e parece abranger os anos 493–c. 475 AEC.

Ester torna-se rainha em Susã.

Quando o Rei Assuero (evidentemente Xerxes I) manda chamar a Rainha Vasti, durante um banquete real, para poder exibir a lindeza dela, ela persistentemente se nega a comparecer; o rei a destitui de ser rainha. (1:1-22)

Ester é escolhida dentre todas as outras belas virgens do domínio e é feita rainha; sob a orientação de Mordecai, ela não revela que é judia. (2:1-20)

Hamã conspira para exterminar todos os judeus, mas a situação se inverte.

Hamã, o agagita, é enaltecido pelo rei acima de todos os outros príncipes, mas Mordecai se recusa a se curvar diante dele. (3:1-4)

Enfurecido com a recusa de Mordecai, Hamã trama aniquilar todos os judeus no império; o rei é induzido a concordar, a data é fixada e o decreto é emitido. (3:5-15)

Mordecai instrui Ester a apelar pessoalmente para o rei, embora possa pôr em perigo a sua vida ao comparecer perante este sem ser convidada. (4:1-17)

Ester é acolhida favoravelmente pelo rei; ela convida o rei e Hamã a um banquete; daí, ela pede que retornem para outro banquete no dia seguinte. (5:1-8)

No entanto, a alegria de Hamã é estragada porque Mordecai se recusa novamente a se curvar diante dele, de modo que Hamã erige um madeiro muito alto e planeja instar com o rei para pendurar nele Mordecai, antes do banquete no dia seguinte. (5:9-14)

Naquela noite, quando o rei não consegue dormir, ele manda que se leiam para ele os registros, e fica sabendo que Mordecai não fora recompensado quando denunciou uma trama para assassinar o rei; de manhã, quando Hamã chega, o rei pergunta-lhe o que se deve fazer a um homem em quem o rei se agrada; pensando ser ele tal homem, Hamã faz pródigas sugestões; depois se manda que o próprio Hamã confira publicamente tal honra a Mordecai. (6:1-13; 2:21-23)

No banquete daquele dia, Ester faz o rei saber que Hamã vendeu tanto a ela como o seu povo para serem destruídos; furioso, o rei ordena que Hamã seja pendurado no madeiro erigido para Mordecai. (6:14-7:10)

Mordecai é promovido, e os judeus são libertos.

Mordecai recebe o anel de sinete tirado de Hamã. (8:1, 2)

Com a aprovação do rei, emite-se um decreto, permitindo que os judeus se defendam e que aniquilem seus inimigos no dia fixado para a sua própria destruição; muitos milhares de inimigos dos judeus são mortos. (8:3-9:19)

Decreta-se que esta libertação seja comemorada todo ano. (9:20-32)

Mordecai torna-se o segundo depois do rei e trabalha para o bem do seu povo. (10:1-3) funcionários das muitas províncias, os quais, por causa dos seus deveres, não podiam ter estado ali em toda a sua duração nem todos ao mesmo tempo. Na realidade, o texto não diz que o banquete durou tanto tempo, mas que o rei mostrou-lhes as riquezas e a glória do seu reino durante 180 dias. Menciona-se um banquete em 1:3 e 1:5. Talvez não se queira indicar dois banquetes, mas que o versículo 3 se refira ao banquete de sete dias para todos os que estavam no castelo, no fim da grande assembleia. — Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário Sobre o Velho Testamento), de C. Keil e F. Delitzsch, 1973, Vol. III, Ester, pp. 322-324.

Em vista da ausência de uma menção direta de Deus, neste livro, alguns levantam a acusação de que o livro é irreligioso. Todavia, ele fala de jejuns e de um "clamor por socorro" por parte dos judeus, subentendendo-se oração. (Est 4:3, 16; 9:31) Também, há indícios de Deus manobrar os eventos no caso da insônia do rei numa ocasião oportuna (6:1) e na possível alusão a um propósito divino em Ester tornar-se rainha. (4:14) Além disso, negar-se Mordecai terminantemente a se curvar diante do inimigo de Deus, Hamã, o qual, sendo agagita, talvez fosse um amalequita da realeza, é evidência de que Mordecai adorava a Jeová. — 3:1-6; Êx 17:14.

Evidência da história e da arqueologia. Descobertas históricas e arqueológicas acrescentaram sua voz em confirmação da autenticidade do livro de Ester. Bastam uns poucos exemplos. O modo em que os persas honravam um homem é descrito de forma autêntica. (Est 6:8) As cores reais persas eram o branco e o azul (ou violeta). Em Ester 8:15 lemos que Mordecai usava "vestimenta real de pano azul e de linho", e uma capa roxa.

Ester tomou "sua posição no pátio interno da casa do rei, defronte da casa do rei, enquanto o rei estava sentado no seu trono real, na casa real, defronte da entrada da casa. E aconteceu que, assim que o rei viu Ester, a rainha, parada no pátio, ela obteve favor aos seus olhos". (Est 5:1, 2) Escavações feitas revelaram que os pormenores desta descrição são exatos. Havia um corredor desde a Casa das Mulheres até o pátio interno, e do lado oposto do pátio, defronte do corredor, havia o salão, ou a sala do trono, do palácio. O trono achava-se situado no centro da parede mais afastada, e deste ponto de observação o rei podia olhar por cima do anteparo e ver a rainha à espera duma audiência. Pormenores adicionais no livro mostram um conhecimento íntimo do palácio por parte do escritor. É evidente que são infundadas as objeções levantadas ao livro à base de ele não ser histórico e de ser inexato quanto aos modos e costumes persas.

Uma evidência muito forte da autenticidade do livro é a Festividade de Purim, ou de Sortes, comemorada pelos judeus até o dia de hoje; no seu aniversário, o livro inteiro é lido nas suas sinagogas. Diz-se que uma inscrição cuneiforme, evidentemente de Borsipa, menciona um oficial persa de nome Mardukâ (Mordecai?), que estava em Susa (Susã) no fim do reinado de Dario I ou no começo do reinado de Xerxes I. — Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft (Revista de Ciência do Velho Testamento), 1940/41, Vol. 58, pp. 243, 244; 1942/43, Vol. 59, p. 219.

ESTERCO. O excremento de humanos, de aves e de animais é representado por diversas palavras nas línguas bíblicas. Nas Escrituras, o esterco frequentemente tem associações figuradas.

Havia um "lugar privativo" ou "latrina" à disposição dos soldados de Israel, fora dos acampamentos do seu exército, e eles deviam cobrir seu excremento. (De 23:12-14) Isto preservava a pureza do exército perante Jeová e também ajudava a prevenir que se espalhassem doenças infecciosas transmitidas por moscas.

Um dos portões de Jerusalém era o "Portão dos Montes de Cinzas", chamado em muitas Bíblias de "Portão do Esterco". (Ne 2:13; 3:13, 14; 12:31) Ficava a uns mil côvados (445 m) ao L do Portão do Vale, e, portanto, ao S do monte Sião. Este portão era provavelmente chamado assim por causa do lixo acumulado no vale de Hinom, situado abaixo dele e para o qual dava acesso; o lixo da cidade possivelmente era levado para fora dela através deste portão.

Alguns dos povos nômades talvez usassem esterco como combustível. Ezequiel, apresentando uma cena profética do sítio de Jerusalém, objetou quando Deus lhe mandou que usasse excremento humano como combustível para assar pão. Deus bondosamente permitiu-lhe usar em vez disso estrume de gado. (Ez 4:12-17) Isto parece indicar que não era costume fazer isso em Israel.

Esterco era usado como estrume para fertilizar o solo. Parece que se misturavam esterco e palha numa "estrumeira", possivelmente por serem pisados por animais. (Is 25:10) Um modo de adubar uma figueira era 'cavar em volta dela e pôr-lhe estrume'. — Lu 13:8.

De modo geral, o esterco era encarado como refugo ofensivo, algo a ser eliminado. Expressivas de quão ofensivo ele era, dando também força à ideia da eliminação, são as palavras de Jeová a respeito da errante casa do Rei Jeroboão, de Israel: "Farei deveras uma varredura atrás da casa de Jeroboão, assim como se varre o esterco até se dar cabo dele." — 1Rs 14:10.

Transformar a casa de um homem em latrina pública era o maior insulto e uma punição. (Esd

6:11; Da 2:5; 3:29) Durante o teste da divindade, no alto do monte Carmelo, Elias mofou dos profetas de Baal, o qual não respondia, dizendo: "Deve estar preocupado com algum assunto, e tem excremento e precisa ir à privada." (1Rs 18:27) Mais tarde, Jeú mandou demolir a casa de Baal, e "fizeram dela latrinas". — 2Rs 10:27.

Esterco ou estrume é também empregado como símile para indicar o fim ignominioso de uma pessoa ou de uma nação. (2Rs 9:36, 37; Sal 83:10; Je 8:1, 2; 9:22; 16:4) Jeová Deus predisse que, durante a sua controvérsia com as nações, os mortos por Ele não seriam lamentados, nem recolhidos ou enterrados, mas se tornariam "como estrume sobre a superfície do solo". — Je 25:31-33; compare isso com Sof 1:14-18.

De acordo com a Lei, nenhuma oferta pelo pecado, cujo sangue era levado ao santuário para fazer expiação, devia ser consumida pelo sacerdote. Os restos do animal morto e seu esterco deviam ser queimados num lugar limpo, fora do acampamento. (Le 4:11, 12; 6:30; 16:27) Isto se dava porque nada daquele animal devia ser usado para outra coisa, nem se devia permitir que se decompusesse. Era "limpo", isto é, santificado a Jeová e por isso tinha de ser queimado num lugar limpo. — Veja He 13:11-13.

Paulo, que estimava muito as coisas espirituais e que prezava grandemente sua esperança em Cristo, declarou: "Por causa dele tenho aceito a perda de todas as coisas e as considero como uma porção de refugo, para que eu possa ganhar a Cristo e ser achado em união com ele." (Fil 3:8, 9) A palavra grega, traduzida aqui por "refugo" (ský·ba·lon), denota quer excremento, quer coisas que sobraram duma festa, tiradas da mesa e jogadas fora. Mesmo que o apóstolo pensasse neste último sentido, sua avaliação de "todas as coisas" como "refugo" enfatiza o grande valor que dava a ganhar a Cristo e a ser achado em união com ele. — Veja POMBA, ESTERCO DE.

A respeito da expressão "ídolos sórdidos [estercorais]", veja ÍDOLO, IDOLATRIA (Conceito Sobre Idolatria).

ESTERILIDADE. As palavras hebraicas ʽa·qár e gal·múdh ("estéril"; Gên 11:30; Is 49:21) transmitem a ideia da incapacidade de ter filhos. Também, em Provérbios 30:16, a esterilidade é descrita literalmente como "impedimento da madre". (NM n.) A palavra "estéril" em grego é stei·ros. (Lu 1:7, 36) Fala-se da esterilidade também como "amortecimento da madre". — Ro 4:19.

O mandato original de Jeová para Adão e Eva, mais tarde repetido aos filhos de Noé, incluía a ordem: "Sede fecundos e tornai-vos muitos." (Gên 1:28; 9:7) Uma mulher casada não ter filhos era encarado, na antiguidade, como vitupério, aflição, punição, e um dos maiores infortúnios. "Dá-me filhos, senão serei uma mulher morta", rogou Raquel ao seu marido Jacó. — Gên 30:1.

Ser Jeová capaz de tornar fecunda uma mulher estéril é demonstrado pelas palavras de Jacó a Raquel: "Estou eu no lugar de Deus, que te negou o fruto do ventre?" Por fim, somos informados: "Deus lembrou-se de Raquel, e Deus a atendeu, abrindo-lhe a madre. E ela ficou grávida e deu à luz um filho." (Gên 30:2, 22, 23) Podem-se citar outros casos que mostram o poder de Jeová, de dar filhos a mulheres que padeciam de esterilidade natural durante um longo período de tempo: Sara (Gên 11:30; 17:19; 21:1, 2); Rebeca (Gên 25:21); a mãe de Sansão (Jz 13:2, 3); Ana (1Sa 1:10, 11; 2:5); uma mulher sunamita (2Rs 4:14-17); e Elisabete (Lu 1:7, 36). Com a bênção de Jeová, os israelitas, durante a sua estada no Egito, proliferaram tanto, que os egípcios ficaram alarmados, pensando que em pouco tempo seriam excedidos em número. (Êx 1:7-12, 18-21) Deu-se também crédito a Jeová, por Rute, antepassada de Davi, poder conceber. — Ru 4:13.

Quando Jeová retinha sua bênção, até mesmo o solo tornava-se um ermo estéril e desolado. Por outro lado, com a bênção divina, o solo era capaz de produzir abundantes safras. (Le 26:3-5) De modo similar, com a rica bênção de Jeová, prometeu-se que "não existirá na tua terra nenhuma mulher que sofra aborto, nem mulher estéril". (Êx 23:26; De 7:13, 14; 28:4, 11; Sal 127:3-5; 128:3) Inversamente, em certa ocasião, Jeová "cerrara totalmente cada madre" da casa de Abimeleque, quando este pensou em tomar Sara por esposa. — Gên 20:17, 18.

Por causa da terrível aflição predita a sobrevir à Jerusalém do primeiro século, Jesus disse que as "mulheres estéreis" sentir-se-iam felizes, aliviadas, por não sofrerem a angústia de ver seus filhos sofrer. — Lu 23:29.

Isaías e o salmista profetizaram a respeito duma mulher estéril, cujo vitupério e vergonha seriam esquecidos, porque ela daria à luz muitos filhos, todos eles ensinados por Jeová. (Sal 113:9; Is 54:1-15) O apóstolo Paulo aplica as palavras de Isaías à mulher "livre", isto é, à "Jerusalém de cima". — Gál 4:26-31.

ESTÊVÃO [duma raiz que significa "coroa; grinalda"]. Primeiro mártir cristão. Embora seu nome seja grego, era um dos do fiel restante judeu, que aceitou e seguiu o Messias. — At 7:2.

Sua Designação para um Ministério Especial. O nome de Estêvão aparece primeiro no registro bíblico em relação com a designação de homens para responsabilidades de serviços especiais na congregação cristã de Jerusalém. O relato reza: "Ora, naqueles dias, aumentando os discípulos, surgiram resmungos da parte dos judeus que falavam grego contra os judeus que falavam hebraico, porque as suas viúvas estavam sendo passadas por alto na distribuição diária." Os apóstolos viram a necessidade de se dar atenção especial a este assunto, e deram esta instrução à congregação: "Portanto, irmãos, procurai vós mesmos, dentre vós, sete homens acreditados, cheios de espírito e de sabedoria, para que os possamos designar para esta incumbência necessária." Daí, estes homens qualificados foram escolhidos, e eles foram designados pelos apóstolos. — At 6:1-6.

Portanto, Estêvão recebeu de forma especial a designação para um ministério. Ele e os outros seis designados para "esta incumbência necessária", a distribuição de alimentos, talvez já fossem anciãos, ou superintendentes. Estes homens estavam "cheios de espírito e de sabedoria", necessários nesta emergência específica, porque não se tratava apenas da distribuição mecânica de alimentos (possivelmente na forma de cereais e de outros alimentos básicos), mas também de uma questão de administração. Tais deveres talvez exigissem que esses homens tratassem da compra, dos registros, e assim por diante. Assim, embora tal obra, em escala menor ou em outras circunstâncias, pudesse ter sido cuidada por um di·á·ko·nos, um "servo ministerial", não por um superintendente, ou ancião, a situação neste caso era delicada, já havendo dificuldades e diferenças na congregação. Portanto, exigia homens de notável critério, discrição, entendimento e experiência. A defesa feita por Estêvão perante o Sinédrio indica as suas qualificações.

Enquanto Estêvão cuidava desses deveres ministeriais designados, ele continuava vigorosamente a sua pregação cristã. O cronista Lucas relata que "Estêvão, cheio de graça e de poder", e que "realizava grandes portentos e sinais entre o povo", sofreu amarga oposição dos judeus da chamada Sinagoga dos Libertos, e de outros da Ásia e da África. Mas, Estêvão falou com tanta sabedoria e espírito, que esses eram incapazes de refutá-lo. Assim como se fizera no caso de Jesus, os inimigos providenciaram secretamente falsas testemunhas para acusar Estêvão de blasfêmia, perante o Sinédrio. — Veja LIBERTO, HOMEM LIVRE.

Sua Defesa Perante o Sinédrio. Estêvão recapitulou destemidamente os tratos de Deus com os hebreus, desde o tempo de seu antepassado Abraão, e concluiu com fortes acusações contra seus ouvintes, os líderes religiosos. Quando estes se sentiram feridos no coração, por causa da veracidade das acusações, e começaram a ranger os dentes contra ele, Estêvão foi favorecido por Deus com uma visão da glória Dele, e de Jesus à mão direita de Deus. Quando descreveu esta visão, os reunidos gritaram e avançaram à uma contra ele, e lançaram-no fora da cidade. Daí, deitando suas roupas aos pés de Saulo, apedrejaram Estêvão até ele morrer. Pouco antes de Estêvão 'adormecer na morte', ele orou: "Jeová, não lhes imputes este pecado." Vieram certos homens reverentes e o sepultaram, e lamentaram a sua morte. Irrompeu então uma grande perseguição contra os cristãos, que os espalhou (embora os apóstolos permanecessem em Jerusalém) e que resultou na difusão das boas novas. — At 6:8-8:2; 11:19; 22:20.

O relato que Estêvão apresentou perante o Sinédrio inclui diversos fatos a respeito da história judaica, que não são encontrados nas Escrituras Hebraicas: A educação que Moisés recebeu no Egito, sua idade de 40 anos quando fugiu de lá, os 40 anos de duração da sua estada em Midiã, antes de retornar ao Egito, e o papel desempenhado pelos anjos na transmissão da Lei mosaica. — At 7:22, 23, 30, 32, 38.

Estêvão foi o primeiro a dar testemunho de que observara, numa visão especial, Jesus retornado ao céu e à mão direita de Deus, conforme profetizado no Salmo 110:1. — At 7:55, 56.

ESTILO. Instrumento de escrita usado para fazer impressões em materiais tais como argila ou cera. (Sal 45:1; Is 8:1; Je 8:8) O estilo usado para a escrita cuneiforme era dotado duma ponta quer quadrada, quer em forma de cunha, e era comumente feita de junco ou de madeira rija.

Era necessário um estilo ou um cinzel de metal, ou de outro material duro, para talhar ou gravar letras em pedra ou em metal. O patriarca Jó declarou: "Quem dera agora que as minhas palavras fossem assentadas por escrito! Quem dera que fossem inscritas num livro! Com um estilo de ferro e com chumbo, que fossem talhadas na rocha para sempre!" (Jó 19:23, 24) Pelo visto, Jó queria que suas palavras fossem gravadas em rocha e as letras talhadas enchidas de chumbo, para torná-las mais duráveis. Séculos mais tarde, Jeová falou dos pecados de Judá como gravados com estilo de ferro, quer dizer, registradas indelevelmente. — Je 17:1.

ESTOICOS. Filósofos, alguns dos quais Paulo encontrou quando pregava na feira em Atenas. Embora os conceitos deles tivessem mudado um pouco com o passar do tempo, os estoicos basicamente sustentavam que a matéria e a força (esta última às vezes chamada de providência, razão ou Deus) eram os princípios elementares no universo. Para os estoicos, todas as coisas, mesmo vícios e virtudes, eram materiais. Não crendo em Deus como Pessoa, pensavam que todas as coisas faziam parte duma deidade impessoal e que a alma humana emanava de tal fonte. Achando que a alma sobrevivia à morte do corpo, alguns estoicos criam que ela, por fim, seria destruída junto com o universo; outros, que ela, por fim, seria reabsorvida por esta deidade. Os estoicos sustentavam que, para o homem atingir o alvo mais elevado, a felicidade, ele devia usar seu raciocínio para entender as leis que governam o universo e harmonizar-se com elas. Portanto, para eles, levar uma vida de virtude significava 'seguir a natureza'. O homem verdadeiramente sábio, no conceito deles, era indiferente à dor ou ao prazer, independente de riquezas ou de pobreza, e coisas assim. O destino, pensavam eles, governava os assuntos humanos, e se os problemas parecessem insuperáveis, não haveria objeção ao suicídio.

Zenão de Cítio, Chipre, depois de se associar por algum tempo com os cínicos, estabeleceu esta escola separada de filosofia por volta de 300 AEC. Seus discípulos derivaram o nome de estoicos de Stoa Poikile (Pécilo), o pórtico pintado, em Atenas, onde ele ensinou. A filosofia estoica foi adicionalmente desenvolvida em especial por Cleanto e por Crisipo, e foi amplamente aceita entre os gregos e os romanos, havendo entre os seus adeptos Sêneca, Epicteto e o imperador romano Marco Aurélio. Floresceu até cerca de 300 EC.

Iguais aos epicureus, os estoicos não criam na ressurreição, conforme ensinada pelos cristãos. Portanto, quando Paulo proclamou as boas novas sobre Jesus e a ressurreição, chamaram-no de "paroleiro" e disseram que ele parecia ser "publicador de deidades estrangeiras". Mais tarde, depois de ter sido levado ao Areópago, Paulo citou escritos dos estoicos Arato de Cilícia (em Fenômenos) e Cleanto (em Hino a Zeus), dizendo: "Pois, por meio [de Deus] temos vida, e nos movemos, e existimos, assim como disseram certos dos poetas entre vós: 'Pois nós também somos progênie dele.'" — At 17:17-19, 22, 28.

ESTOM. Filho de Meir; descendente de Quelube, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 11, 12.

ESTÔMAGO. Parte larga do tubo digestivo nos humanos e nos animais. Em alguns animais, o estômago inclui quatro compartimentos. Sob a Lei, quem sacrificasse um animal tinha de dar o estômago (hebr.: qe·váh) ao sacerdote. (De 18:3) Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o apóstolo Paulo recomendou que Timóteo usasse de um pouco de vinho por causa do seu estômago (gr.: stó·ma·khos). — 1Ti 5:23.

Em alguns dos casos em que se usam as palavras hebraicas traduzidas por "ventre" e "entranhas", elas evidentemente incluem o estômago. (Pr 13:25; Jon 1:17) O mesmo se dá com o uso de "ventre" nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, por exemplo, em Romanos 16:18 e 1 Coríntios 6:13. — Veja VENTRE.

ESTOPA. Entende-se que a palavra original hebraica assim traduzida se refere a fibras grosseiras e curtas de linho. A estopa queima prontamente. Quando Dalila amarrou Sansão com tendões úmidos, ele os rompeu facilmente, "assim como se rompe o fio retorcido da estopa quando cheira fogo". (Jz 16:8, 9) Jeová decretou que dentre o seu antigo povo os iníquos e as obras destes pereceriam juntos, dizendo: "O homem vigoroso há de tornar-se estopa, e o produto da sua atividade, uma faísca; e ambos hão de acender-se ao mesmo tempo, sem haver quem os apague." — Is 1:24, 31.

ESTORAQUE [hebr.: liv·néh]. O nome hebraico desta árvore significa "branco", e a aparentada palavra árabe, lubna, é aplicada ao estoraque (Styrax officinalis). O estoraque cresce como arbusto alto, ou pequena árvore, raras vezes ultrapassando 6 m de altura. É abundante na Síria, onde Jacó fez uso de suas varas (Gên 30:37), e em toda a Palestina, frequentemente crescendo em encostas secas e em lugares rochosos, onde sua sombra é apreciada. (Os 4:13) Suas folhas ovais, em longos raminhos flexíveis, são verdes na parte de cima, mas de um branco lanoso na parte de baixo. As flores vistosas, com suas pétalas brancas e sua deleitosa fragrância, são bem similares às flores de laranjeira.

ESTORAQUE, GOTAS DE. Gotas de estoraque (hebr.: na·táf) eram um dos ingredientes do incenso limitado ao uso sagrado. (Êx 30:34) A forma verbal, aparentada, significa 'gotejar'. (Jz 5:4) A Septuaginta grega verteu esta palavra por sta·kté, que significa "óleo de mirra", do verbo grego stá·zo, "gotejar". De modo que os termos hebraico e grego indicam que se tratava dum bálsamo que goteja de árvores resinosas. A Vulgata latina verteu a palavra por stacte.

A árvore específica que fornecia essas gotas é incerta. Entre as fontes sugeridas encontram-se o liquidâmbar oriental (Liquidambar orientalis) e a pistácia-lentisco (Pistacia lentiscus).

ESTRADA REAL. Estrada da qual os israelitas prometeram não se desviar, se recebessem permissão de passar através do território edomita e do domínio amorreu do Rei Síon. (Núm 20:17; 21:21, 22; De 2:26, 27) Esta estrada deve ter-se estendido desde o golfo de 'Aqaba pelo menos até o Jaboque, a evidente fronteira N do território de Síon, e muitos acreditam que ela tenha ido até Damasco, ao N, correspondendo de modo geral à pavimentada estrada principal, romana, construída pelo Imperador Trajano, no segundo século EC. Com exceção dos necessários ajustes para o trânsito moderno, a estrada atual, chamada Tariq es-Sultan(i), acompanha de perto a antiga estrada principal, romana, da qual ainda existem alguns trechos.

Evidentemente, a parte setentrional desta estrada, de Hésbon a Astarote, era chamada de "caminho de Basã". — Núm 21:33; De 3:1.

ESTRADAS. Os termos mesil·láh (estrada principal) e dé·rekh (estrada), no hebraico, e o termo hodós (caminho; estrada), em grego, são todos usados com referência a uma via pública, um caminho ou uma rota, geralmente entre vilas ou cidades. — Veja CAMINHO, O.

Desde tempos antigos, estradas principais e estradas comuns, inclusive diversas importantes rotas comerciais, ligavam cidades e reinos na região da Palestina. (Núm 20:17-19; 21:21, 22; 22:5, 21-23; Jos 2:22; Jz 21:19; 1Sa 6:9, 12; 13:17, 18; veja ESTRADA REAL.) Aquela que é considerada como tendo sido a principal rota saía do Egito para as cidades filisteias de Gaza e Ascalom, virando aos poucos para o nordeste em direção a Megido. Continuava até Hazor, ao N do mar da Galileia, e depois seguia até Damasco. Esta rota através da Filístia era a mais curta do Egito para a Terra da Promessa. Mas Jeová, bondosamente, guiou os israelitas por outro caminho, para que não fossem desanimados por um ataque filisteu. — Êx 13:17.

Na Terra da Promessa, a manutenção dum bom sistema de estradas assumia importância maior para os israelitas, visto que havia apenas um centro de adoração para a nação inteira. Portanto, muitos israelitas, todo ano, tinham de viajar uma distância considerável para cumprir o requisito da Lei, de que todos os varões se reunissem para as três festividades sazonais. (De 16:16) Adicionalmente, no lugar que Jeová escolhesse, teriam de ser apresentados dízimos, contribuições e quaisquer ofertas, quer voluntárias, quer obrigatórias. (De 12:4-7) Depois de Salomão construir o templo, este lugar era Jerusalém. Assim, quando os israelitas percorriam as estradas na ida e na volta de Jerusalém, havia boas oportunidades para o pai ensinar aos filhos varões a lei de Deus. — De 6:6, 7.

Tinha de se dar atenção também à manutenção das estradas que levavam às seis cidades de refúgio. Estas estradas tinham de ser bem sinalizadas e mantidas livres de obstáculos, que talvez pudessem impedir o avanço do homicida desintencional. (De 19:3) Segundo a tradição judaica, postes indicadores da direção para a cidade de refúgio eram colocados em todas as encruzilhadas. — Talmude Babilônico, Makkot 10*b*.

Embora a Bíblia não forneça nenhuma descrição das estradas antigas, ela deveras contém alusões à sua construção e manutenção. Ocasionalmente, é possível que morros e outras irregularidades tenham sido nivelados, e as estradas tenham sido desobstruídas de pedras e aterradas. (Is 40:3, 4; 57:14; 62:10) O historiador Josefo afirma que o Rei Salomão pavimentou com pedras pretas as estradas que levavam a Jerusalém. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), VIII, 187 (vii, 4).

Todavia, não se sabe nada de definitivo sobre a estrutura das antigas estradas, até os dias do Império Romano. Os romanos distinguiram-se como construtores de estradas, ligando seu vasto império para facilitar o movimento de seus exércitos. Suas estradas eram pavimentadas com pedras chatas, e os leitos de estrada usualmente tinham três camadas: (inferior) pedregulho, (intermediária) lajes assentadas com argamassa, e (superior) concreto e pedra britada. As estradas declinavam do centro para os lados e estavam equipadas com marcos miliários, meios-fios e valas de drenagem. Também se podiam encontrar poços em intervalos convenientes. Seguindo linhas quase retas, as estradas romanas passavam por cima de morros em vez de em volta deles. A famosa estrada principal romana, a Via Ápia, tinha uns 5,5 m de largura e estava pavimentada com grandes blocos de lava. O apóstolo Paulo, em caminho para Roma, como prisioneiro, percorreu esta estrada, da qual ainda hoje se usam alguns trechos. — At 28:15, 16; veja ÁPIO, FEIRA DE.

As palavras de Isaías 19:23, sobre vir a haver "uma estrada principal saindo do Egito para a Assíria", apontavam para as relações amigáveis que haveria entre essas duas terras. Ao realizar o livramento dos do seu povo, Jeová como que fez para eles estradas principais para fora das terras do seu cativeiro. — Is 11:16; 35:8-10; 49:11-13; Je 31:21.

ESTRANGEIRO. Pessoa de origem não israelita, um gentio; em hebraico, nokh·rí ou ben-ne·khár, literalmente, "filho dum (país) estrangeiro". (De 14:21; Êx 12:43 n.) Os estrangeiros entre os hebreus consistiam em trabalhadores contratados, comerciantes, cativos de guerra, cananeus não executados ou não expulsos da Terra da Promessa, e diversos tipos de pessoas de passagem. — Jos 17:12, 13; Jz 1:21; 2Sa 12:29-31; 1Rs 7:13; Ne 13:16.

Embora os direitos dos estrangeiros fossem limitados pelo pacto da Lei, deviam ser tratados com justiça e equidade, e deviam ser acolhidos com hospitalidade, conquanto não desobedecessem flagrantemente as leis do país. O estrangeiro, por não ter vínculos efetivos com Israel, era diferente do prosélito circunciso, que se tornara membro da congregação de Israel por aceitar inteiramente as responsabilidades do pacto da Lei. De modo similar, o estrangeiro era diferente do colono que passara a ter residência semitemporária na Terra da Promessa, e que, portanto, não só estava sob certas restrições legais, mas também usufruía certos direitos e privilégios. — Veja RESIDENTE FORASTEIRO.

Enquanto os israelitas eram residentes forasteiros em Canaã e no Egito, muitos não israelitas faziam parte das casas dos filhos de Jacó e de seus descendentes. Isto se deu devido à contratação de servos que moravam com a família e pela compra de escravos, os quais, pelos termos do pacto feito com Abraão, tinham de ser circuncidados. (Gên 17:9-14) Alguns dos envolvidos em casamentos mistos, junto com seus filhos, estavam incluídos na grande mistura de gente que acompanhou os israelitas no Êxodo. — Êx 12:38; Le 24:10; Núm 11:4.

Depois de Israel se ter estabelecido na Terra da Promessa, era necessário lidar com estrangeiros, tais como os cananeus que não tinham sido expulsos. (Jz 2:2, 3) Negociantes e artífices também começaram a viajar para a terra de Israel. (Ez 27:3, 17; 2Sa 5:11; 1Rs 5:6-18) É provável que aumentassem os trabalhadores contratados ao passo que os israelitas se tornaram mais prósperos no desenvolvimento da Terra da Promessa. (Veja De 8:11-13; Le 22:10.) Estrangeiros começaram a ser incluídos nos exércitos israelitas, e, neste respeito, esses passaram a estimar seus líderes hebreus e a respeitar a religião israelita, como se deu no caso dos geteus, dos queretitas e dos peletitas. — 2Sa 15:18-21.

Provisões do Pacto da Lei. No pacto da Lei, Jeová forneceu uma legislação básica para regulamentar os tratos com estrangeiros e para proteger a comunidade israelita e a integridade dos seus cidadãos e dependentes tanto em sentido econômico, como religioso e político. Os israelitas não deviam ter nenhuma associação social com estrangeiros, especialmente não em sentido religioso (Êx 23:23-25; De 7:16-26; Jos 23:6, 7), e não deviam celebrar nenhum pacto com eles ou com os deuses deles. (Êx 34:12-15; 23:32; De 7:2) Vez após vez, Jeová enfatizou a necessidade absoluta de não se curvarem diante dos deuses dos estrangeiros (Êx 20:3-7; 23:31-33; 34:14), nem pesquisarem as suas práticas religiosas ou se interessarem por elas. — De 12:29-31.

Alianças matrimoniais com estrangeiros eram proibidas, principalmente por causa do perigo de se corromper a adoração pura. (Êx 34:16; De 7:3, 24; Jos 23:12, 13) Todos os habitantes das cidades das sete nações cananeias deviam ser destruídos. (De 7:1; 20:15-18) Mas, ao se capturar uma cidade que não era das sete proscritas nações cananeias, o soldado israelita podia tomar uma virgem da cidade por esposa, depois de ela ter passado por um período de purificação. Em tais casos, realmente não se celebraria uma aliança com uma tribo ou família estrangeira, visto que os pais dela foram mortos quando a cidade foi tomada. — De 21:10-14; Núm 31:17, 18; De 20:14.

Uma restrição adicional era que nenhum estrangeiro incircunciso podia comer a Páscoa. (Êx 12:43) No entanto, parece que os estrangeiros podiam oferecer sacrifícios por intermédio do arranjo sacerdotal, desde que a própria oferta satisfizesse as normas divinas. (Le 22:25) Naturalmente, essas pessoas nunca podiam entrar no santuário (Ez 44:9), mas podiam ir a Jerusalém e 'orar em direção à casa de Deus', e provavelmente não fariam isso de mãos vazias, quer dizer, sem uma oferta sacrificial acompanhante. — 1Rs 8:41-43.

Em assuntos governamentais, o estrangeiro não tinha nenhuma posição política e nunca podia tornar-se rei. (De 17:15) Ao passo que o israelita, o residente forasteiro e o colono podiam aproveitar-se do asilo provido nas cidades de refúgio para o homicida desintencional, não se faz nenhuma menção de tal provisão para o estrangeiro. — Núm 35:15; Jos 20:9.

Embora se proibisse aos israelitas consumir um animal que morrera sem que fosse sangrado, este podia ser legalmente vendido a um estrangeiro. (De 14:21) Durante os anos sabáticos, o israelita não podia ser pressionado para pagar dívidas, mas o estrangeiro não estava incluído neste arranjo e podia ser pressionado a pagar. (De 15:1-3) Ao passo que não se devia cobrar juros a um coisraelita, estes podiam ser cobrados ao estrangeiro. — De 23:20.

Motivo de Dificuldades. No tempo de Josué e no período dos juízes que se seguiu, havia muitos estrangeiros no país e estes eram motivo de constantes dificuldades. (Jos 23:12, 13) Os estrangeiros cananeus remanescentes após a conquista israelita foram sujeitos a trabalhos forçados de escravo (Jos 16:10; 17:13; Jz 1:21, 27-35), mas, visto que os israelitas não os expulsaram do país, nem erradicaram a adoração deles, conforme Jeová havia ordenado (Jz 2:1, 2), os cananeus, em geral, continuaram a praticar suas religiões idólatras e degradantes. Em resultado disso, os israelitas foram continuamente induzidos à adoração falsa (Sal 106:34-39), especialmente à adoração de Baalins e das imagens de Astorete. (Jz 2:11-13) Esses estrangeiros cananeus continuavam em Israel mesmo durante o tempo de Davi e até o reinado de Salomão, quando ainda eram postos a trabalhos forçados no templo e em outros projetos de construção de Salomão. — 1Rs 9:20, 21; veja TRABALHOS FORÇADOS.

Contrário à ordem divina, Salomão tomou muitas esposas estrangeiras, que gradualmente lhe desviaram o coração da adoração pura de Jeová para a de deuses estrangeiros. (1Rs 11:1-8) A intrusão da religião falsa no mais alto nível governamental teve repercussões fatais. Resultou na divisão da nação e finalmente no exílio em Babilônia, ao passo que reis sucessivos, tanto de Judá como de Israel, conduziram o povo à adoração falsa. Isto culminou em se cumprirem na nação as maldições preditas como sanções inescapáveis pelas violações da Lei. — 1Rs 11:9-11; 2Rs 15:27, 28; 17:1, 2; 23:36, 37; 24:18, 19; De 28:15-68.

Após a restauração dum restante fiel de israelitas do exílio em Babilônia, muitos israelitas tomaram para si esposas estrangeiras. (Esd 9:1, 2; Ne 13:23-25) Este proceder errado exigiu um vigoroso expurgo de esposas estrangeiras e de seus filhos, sob a direção de Esdras e de Neemias. (Esd 10:2-4, 10-19, 44; Ne 13:1-3, 27-30) Agiu-se também contra outros estrangeiros culpados de impropriedades. — Ne 13:7, 8, 16-21.

Os babilônios conquistadores haviam tratado mui rudemente os judeus, por ocasião da destruição de Jerusalém. (La 2:5-12, 19-22) Depois da libertação, os judeus estavam em constante conflito com os estrangeiros em volta deles, na Terra da Promessa, sendo especialmente hostilizados pelos governantes gregos da Síria. No empenho dos judeus, de manter sua adoração restabelecida, tiveram de resistir às ferrenhas perseguições por parte de Antíoco IV Epifânio, quando este tentava helenizar os judeus. Nos séculos pós-exílicos, os israelitas estavam numa constante luta pela independência, o que criou um zelo pelo judaísmo, e, por parte de alguns, um intenso espírito nacionalista. Estes fatores, junto com o medo de misturar sua raça por casamentos com estrangeiros, provavelmente contribuíram para o desvio do espírito liberal para com os estrangeiros, bem evidente nas Escrituras Hebraicas. — Veja 1Rs 8:41-43; 2Cr 6:32, 33; Is 56:6, 7.

Durante o Primeiro Século EC. Especialmente pela influência dos seus líderes religiosos, desenvolveu-se o alheamento e o rígido exclusivismo que existiam entre os judeus no primeiro século EC. A evidência desta atitude se vê no desprezo que eles tinham pelos samaritanos, um povo de ascendência mista de israelitas e estrangeiros. Por via de regra, os judeus 'não tinham tratos com os samaritanos', nem mesmo para pedir um gole de água deles. (Jo 4:9) Jesus, porém, tornou claro o erro de tal conceito extremo. — Lu 10:29-37.

O estabelecimento do novo pacto, à base do sacrifício resgatador de Cristo, acabou com a separação legal entre judeu e gentio. (Ef 2:11-16) Todavia, mesmo depois de Pentecostes de 33 EC, os primitivos discípulos eram vagarosos em compreender este fato. O conceito judaico comum ou padrão foi expresso por Pedro ao gentio Cornélio: "Vós bem sabeis quão ilícito é para um judeu juntar-se ou chegar-se a um homem de outra raça." (At 10:28) João 18:28 mostra que entrar na casa dum gentio era considerado pelos judeus como ato que causava aviltamento cerimonial. Embora a Lei dada por meio de Moisés não estabelecesse nenhuma injunção específica contra tal associação mínima, tal conceito era comum entre os judeus e em especial entre os seus líderes religiosos. Levou algum tempo para os primitivos cristãos judeus se livrarem das restrições impostas pelas atitudes prevalecentes e reconhecerem o fato salientado pelo apóstolo Paulo, de que, para os que têm a 'nova personalidade cristã', não há "nem grego nem judeu, circuncisão nem incircuncisão, estrangeiro, cita, escravo, homem livre, mas Cristo é todas as coisas e em todos". — Gál 2:11-14; Col 3:10, 11.

A palavra grega para "estrangeiro" é bár·ba·ros, referindo-se basicamente a alguém que não falava grego. — Veja BÁRBARO.

ESTRANHO. Veja RESIDENTE FORASTEIRO.

ESTRELA. A palavra hebraica koh·kháv, bem como as gregas a·stér e á·stron, são aplicadas em sentido geral a qualquer corpo luminoso no espaço, exceto o sol e a lua, para os quais se usam outros nomes.

A Vastidão do Universo. Acredita-se que a galáxia em que se encontra a Terra, comumente chamada de Via Láctea, tenha o diâmetro de uns 100.000 anos-luz e contenha mais de 100.000.000.000 de estrelas semelhantes ao nosso sol. A estrela mais próxima à Terra, uma do grupo de Alfa Centauro, dista mais de 40.000.000.000.000 km. No entanto, esta imensidade parece relativamente pequena em vista da estimativa de que haja 100.000.000.000 de galáxias em todo o universo. Cerca de 10.000.000.000 delas estão ao alcance de telescópios modernos.

A vastidão da criação estelar dá infinita força e significado à declaração do Criador, em Isaías 40:26: "Levantai ao alto os vossos olhos e vede. Quem criou estas coisas? Foi Aquele que faz sair o exército delas até mesmo por número, chamando a todas elas por nome. Devido à abundância de energia dinâmica, sendo ele também vigoroso em poder, não falta nem sequer uma delas." (Compare isso com Sal 147:4.) O reverente salmista sentiu-se induzido a dizer: "Quando vejo os teus céus, trabalhos dos teus dedos, a lua e as estrelas que preparaste, que é o homem mortal para que te lembres dele, e o filho do homem terreno para que tomes conta dele?" — Sal 8:3, 4.

Idade. O fato de os raios de estrelas e galáxias remotas, milhões de anos-luz distantes, atingirem agora telescópios gigantescos na terra indica que a criação desses corpos astrais ocorreu milhões de anos no passado, visto que de outro modo esses raios ainda não teriam chegado ao nosso planeta. Esta criação evidentemente está incluída na declaração inicial em Gênesis 1:1: "No princípio Deus criou os céus e a terra." O versículo 16 não contradiz isso ao dizer que, durante o quarto "dia" ou período criativo, "Deus passou a fazer . . . as estrelas." A palavra "fazer" (hebr.: 'a·sáh) não tem o mesmo sentido da palavra "criar" (hebr.: ba·rá'). — Veja CRIAÇÃO.

Número de Estrelas. Ao falar com o homem, Deus usou as estrelas para indicar um número incontável, comparável aos grãos de areia à beira do mar. (Gên 22:17; 15:5; Êx 32:13; compare isso com Ne 9:23; Na 3:15, 16; He 11:12.) Visto que as estrelas bem discerníveis ao olho nu ascendem apenas a alguns milhares, esta comparação era considerada por muitos, no passado, como desproporcional. Todavia, a evidência mostra hoje que o número de estrelas de fato é comparável a todos os grãos de areia em toda a terra.

É de interesse notar que, embora Moisés dissesse que Israel havia visto um certo cumprimento desta promessa abraâmica, os recenseamentos da população, conforme registrados na Bíblia, nunca incluíram o número total dos que havia na nação. (De 1:10; 10:22; 28:62) Menciona-se mais tarde que Davi se refreou especificamente de contar o número "dos de vinte anos de idade e para baixo, porque Jeová prometera fazer Israel tantos quantas as estrelas dos céus". (1Cr 27:23) Esse conceito da inumerabilidade destes corpos celestes distingue os escritos bíblicos como inigualáveis em comparação com os conceitos contemporâneos de povos antigos.

Arranjo Ordeiro. Além disso, a maneira ordeira do arranjo desses corpos celestes é enfatizada em diversos textos, fazendo-se referência a "estatutos", "regulamentos" e "órbitas" ("cursos", Al). (Je 31:35-37; Jz 5:20; compare isso com Ju 13.) As tremendas forças que determinam as posições relativas de certas estrelas, segundo as leis físicas, são indicadas pelas perguntas que Deus fez a Jó: "Podes atar as cadeias da constelação de Quima, ou podes soltar as próprias cordas da constelação de Quesil? Podes fazer sair a constelação de Mazarote no seu tempo fixado? E quanto à constelação de Ás ao lado dos seus filhos, acaso podes guiá-los? Chegaste a conhecer os estatutos dos céus, ou poderias estabelecer a sua autoridade na terra?" (Jó 38:31-33; veja ÁS, CONSTELAÇÃO DE; MAZAROTE, CONSTELAÇÃO DE; QUESIL, CONSTELAÇÃO DE; QUIMA, CONSTELAÇÃO DE.) Neste respeito, O Novo Dicionário da Bíblia declara: "Asseveramos, por conseguinte, que a Bíblia coerentemente tem em vista um universo que é plenamente racional, vastíssimo em grandeza, fazendo contraste com o típico ponto de vista dos homens contemporâneos sobre o mundo, no qual o mundo não era racional e não era maior do que poderia ser provado pelos sentidos desarmados do homem." — Editado por J. D. Douglas, 1966, Vol. 1, p. 558.

A expressão do apóstolo Paulo sobre a diferença entre estrelas específicas pode ser avaliada ainda mais à luz da astronomia atual, que mostra o contraste existente na cor, no tamanho, na quantidade de luz emitida, na temperatura e até na densidade relativa das estrelas. — 1Co 15:40, 41.

Adoração de Estrelas. Embora a adoração de estrelas prevalecesse entre as nações antigas do Oriente Médio, o conceito bíblico dos servos fiéis de Deus era que estes corpos astrais simplesmente eram corpos materiais sujeitos a leis e controle divinos, não dominando o homem, mas servindo de luzeiros e de indicadores do tempo. (Gên 1:14-18; Sal 136:3, 7-9; 148:3) Ao advertir Israel contra fazer qualquer representação do verdadeiro Deus Jeová, Moisés ordenou-lhes a não ficarem seduzidos a adorar o sol, a lua e as estrelas, "os quais Jeová, teu Deus, tem repartido a todos os povos debaixo dos céus inteiros". (De 4:15-20; compare isso com 2Rs 17:16; 21:5; 23:5; Sof 1:4, 5.) Nações pagãs identificavam seus respectivos deuses com determinadas estrelas e assim adotavam um conceito nacionalista a respeito destes corpos estelares. Sacute e Caivã, mencionados em Amós 5:26 como deuses adorados pelo Israel apóstata, são considerados nomes babilônicos do planeta Saturno, chamado Refã na citação que Estêvão fez deste texto. (At 7:42, 43) A adoração de estrelas tinha especial destaque em Babilônia, mas mostrou-se inútil na época da destruição dela. — Is 47:12-15.

"Estrela" Vista Após o Nascimento de Jesus. Os "astrólogos das regiões orientais", portanto, da vizinhança de Babilônia, cuja visita ao Rei Herodes, após o nascimento de Jesus, resultou na matança de todos os meninos em Belém, obviamente não eram servos ou adoradores do verdadeiro Deus. (Mt 2:1-18; veja ASTRÓLOGOS.) Com respeito à "estrela" (gr.: a·stér) vista por eles, apresentaram-se muitas sugestões quanto a ter sido um cometa, um meteoro, uma supernova, ou, mais popularmente, uma conjunção de planetas. Nenhum de tais corpos celestes, logicamente, poderia ter-se 'detido por cima do lugar onde estava a criancinha', identificando assim a casa específica na aldeia de Belém onde se encontrava a criança. É também notável que apenas esses astrólogos pagãos 'viram' a estrela. Sua condenada prática de astrologia e o resultado funesto da sua visita, pondo em perigo a vida do futuro Messias, certamente admitem, e até mesmo tornam aconselhável, considerar que tenham sido orientados por uma fonte adversa aos propósitos de Deus relacionados com o prometido Messias. Por certo, é razoável perguntar se aquele que "persiste em transformar-se em anjo de luz", cuja operação é "com toda obra poderosa, e sinais e portentos mentirosos", que fora capaz de fazer uma serpente parecer falar, e que foi chamado por Jesus de "homicida quando começou", não podia também fazer com que astrólogos 'vissem' um objeto estelar que primeiro os guiou, não a Belém, mas a Jerusalém, onde morava um inimigo mortal do prometido Messias. — 2Co 11:3, 14; 2Te 2:9; Gên 3:1-4; Jo 8:44.

Uso Figurado. Na Bíblia, usam-se estrelas em sentido figurado, e em metáforas ou símiles, para representar pessoas, como no sonho de José, em que seus pais foram representados pelo sol e pela lua, e seus 11 irmãos por 11 estrelas. (Gên 37:9, 10) Jó 38:7 equipara "as estrelas da manhã", que gritavam de júbilo por ocasião da fundação da terra, com os angélicos "filhos de Deus". O ressuscitado e enaltecido Jesus chamou a si mesmo de "resplandecente estrela da manhã" e prometeu dar "a estrela da manhã" aos seus seguidores vencedores, evidentemente indicando uma participação com ele na sua posição e glória celestiais. (Re 22:16; 2:26, 28; compare isso com 2Ti 2:12; Re 20:6.) Os sete "anjos" das congregações, aos quais se entregam mensagens escritas, são simbolizadas por sete estrelas na mão direita de Cristo. (Re 1:16, 20; 2:1; 3:1) "O anjo do abismo", chamado Abadon, também é representado por uma estrela. — Re 9:1, 11; veja ABADON.

Na expressão proverbial no capítulo 14 de Isaías, o jactancioso e ambicioso rei de Babilônia (quer dizer, a dinastia babilônica de reis, representada por Nabucodonosor), chamado de "brilhante" (hebr.: heh·lél; "Lúcifer", BMD; Fi), é apresentado como enaltecendo seu trono "acima das estrelas de Deus". (Is 14:4, 12, 13; veja BRILHANTE, O.) A metáfora de "estrela" é usada para se referir profeticamente aos reis davídicos de Judá (Núm 24:17), e a história bíblica mostra que a dinastia babilônica, por um tempo, elevava-se acima desses reis de Judá por conquistar Jerusalém. Uma profecia similar, em Daniel, capítulo 8, descreve o "chifre" pequeno de uma futura potência pisoteando certas estrelas do "exército dos céus" e avançando contra o Príncipe do exército e seu santuário (Da 8:9-13); ao passo que em Daniel, capítulo 12, por símile, "os perspicazes" que levam outros à justiça são retratados como raiando "como as estrelas" no "tempo do fim". (Da 12:3, 9, 10) Em contraste, os que se desviam imoralmente da verdade são comparados a "estrelas sem rumo fixo". — Ju 13.

O escurecimento das estrelas, bem como do sol e da lua, é uma figura frequentemente usada nos avisos proféticos de desastre resultando do julgamento por parte de Deus. (Is 13:10; Ez 32:7; Re 6:12, 13; 8:12; compare isso com Jó 9:6, 7.) O obscurecimento de tais luzeiros é também usado, em Eclesiastes 12:1, 2, na descrição dos anos desvanecentes da pessoa idosa. Em outras partes, fala-se de estrelas como caindo ou lançadas para a terra. (Mt 24:29; Re 8:10; 9:1; 12:4) "Sinais" no sol, na lua e nas estrelas são preditos como evidência do tempo do fim. — Lu 21:25.

"Estrela da Alva." A expressão "estrela da alva" (gr.: fo·sfó·ros) ocorre uma vez, em 2 Pedro 1:19, e tem sentido similar a "estrela da manhã". Essas estrelas, em certas estações do ano, são as últimas estrelas a surgir no horizonte oriental antes de o sol nascer, e assim proclamam a alvorada de um novo dia. A anterior referência de Pedro à visão da transfiguração de Jesus em glória magnificente sugere uma relação com a entrada dele no poder régio como "a raiz e a descendência de Davi, e a resplandecente estrela da manhã [a·stér]". — Re 22:16; 2:26-28.

'Estrelas Lutaram Contra Sísera.' O relato em Juízes 5:20 tem causado discussões com respeito à frase: "Desde o céu lutaram as estrelas, desde as suas órbitas lutaram contra Sísera." Alguns encaram isso como apenas uma referência poética à ajuda divina. (Veja Jz 4:15; Sal 18:9.) Outras sugestões incluem chuvas de meteoritos, ou a dependência de Sísera de predições astrológicas, que se mostraram falsas. Visto que o registro bíblico não pormenoriza a maneira em que as estrelas "lutaram", parece ser suficiente considerar a declaração como mostrando alguma ação divina, de natureza milagrosa, a favor do exército de Israel.

ESTUPRO. O estupro, ou violação, é definido como relações sexuais ilícitas sem o consentimento da mulher de qualquer idade ou condição, por força, violência, intimidação ou decepção quanto à natureza do ato.

Jeová advertiu a respeito das consequências que sobreviriam a Israel se o povo desobedecesse à Sua lei. Ele predisse que, além de padecerem doenças e calamidades, cairiam nas mãos dos seus inimigos, e disse: "Ficarás noivo duma mulher, mas outro homem a violentará [forma de sha·ghál]." (De 28:30) Isto se deu quando Jeová, por causa da desobediência deles, removeu sua proteção da nação e as nações pagãs invadiram as cidades dela. (Veja Za 14:2.) Também se predisse que Babilônia sofreria tal tratamento, o que ocorreu quando ela caiu diante dos medos e dos persas. (Is 13:1, 16) Segundo a Lei, isso não aconteceria a nações subjugadas por Israel, porque se proibia aos soldados ter relações sexuais durante uma campanha militar. — 1Sa 21:5; 2Sa 11:6-11.

Um caso de estupro múltiplo na cidade de Gibeá, de Benjamim, nos dias dos juízes, deu início a uma série de eventos em retribuição, que quase resultou na exterminação da tribo de Benjamim. Homens imprestáveis da cidade, de desejos sexuais pervertidos, exigiam ter relações sexuais com um visitante levita. Em vez de se submeter a isso, ele lhes deu a sua concubina, a qual anteriormente havia cometido fornicação contra ele. Os homens abusaram dela a noite inteira, até ela morrer. O termo hebraico ʽa·náh, traduzido por "violentar" neste relato, também tem os sentidos de "atribular", "humilhar" e "oprimir". — Jz caps. 19, 20.

Amnom, filho do Rei Davi, violentou sua meia-irmã Tamar, o que fez com que Absalão, irmão de Tamar, mandasse matá-lo. (2Sa 13:1-18) Quando o ardiloso Hamã, o agagita, foi exposto diante do rei persa Assuero por sua traição contra os judeus, e especialmente contra a rainha de Assuero, Ester, o rei ficou enfurecido. Hamã, sabendo que não podia esperar nenhuma misericórdia do rei, em desespero, lançou-se sobre o leito em que Ester se achava, suplicando. Quando o rei entrou de novo na sala, viu Hamã ali e clamou: "Há de se violar também a rainha, estando eu na casa?" Imediatamente, sentenciou Hamã à morte. A sentença foi executada, e Hamã evidentemente foi depois pendurado no madeiro que erigira para pendurar nele o primo de Ester, Mordecai. (Est 7:1-10) No registro da declaração do rei (Est 7:8) usa-se a palavra hebraica ka·vásh; ela significa "sujeitar" (Gên 1:28; Je 34:16), mas pode também significar "violar".

Sob a Lei, se uma moça noiva cometesse fornicação com outro homem, tanto ela como o homem deviam ser mortos. Mas, se a moça gritasse por socorro, tomava-se isto como prova da sua inocência. O homem era morto pelo seu pecado de a ter violentado, e a moça ficava inocentada. — De 22:23-27.

ETÃ [Perseverante; Sempre Fluindo].

1. Um de quatro homens, cuja sabedoria, embora grande, era superada pela de Salomão. (1Rs 4:31) Este Etã talvez fosse o escritor do Salmo 89, porque o cabeçalho identifica Etã, o ezraíta, como escritor. Em 1 Crônicas 2:6, Etã, Hemã, Calcol e Dara são todos chamados de filhos de Zerá, da tribo de Judá, e possivelmente são os mesmos homens mencionados em Primeiro Reis. Etã é chamado de pai de Azarias. — 1Cr 2:8; veja EZRAÍTA.

2. Pai de Adaías e filho de Zima, levita da família de Gersom. — 1Cr 6:41-43.

3. Filho de Quisi (1Cr 6:44) ou Cusaías (1Cr 15:17), levita da família de Merari. Etã era cantor e tocador de címbalo. (1Cr 15:19) Por causa da sua íntima associação com Hemã, sugeriu-se que Etã era o Jedutum designado por Davi para servir perante o tabernáculo em Gibeão, e que seu nome foi mudado de Etã para Jedutum após a sua designação. (Compare 1Cr 15:17, 19, com 1Cr 16:39-41 e 25:1.) — Veja JEDUTUM N.º 1.

ETANIM. [provavelmente: [Correntes] Perseverantes; [Correntes] Sempre Fluindo]. Era o sétimo mês lunar do calendário sagrado dos israelitas, mas o primeiro do calendário secular. (1Rs 8:2) Correspondia a parte de setembro e parte de outubro. Após o exílio babilônico, foi chamado de tisri, nome que não aparece no registro bíblico, mas é encontrado em escritos pós-exílicos.

Falando sobre a festividade que começava no dia 15 deste mês (ou por volta da primeira parte de outubro), o historiador Josefo escreve: "No dia quinze deste mesmo mês, quando se atinge o ponto de virada para a estação do inverno, Moisés pede que cada família arrume tendas, apreensivo por causa do frio e como proteção contra as inclemências do ano." — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), III, 244 (x, 4).

Início do Ano Agrícola. Ao passo que abibe (ou nisã) se tornou o primeiro mês do ano no calendário sagrado judaico após o Êxodo do Egito, etanim continuou a ser encarado como o primeiro mês num sentido secular ou agrícola. Neste mês, quase todas as colheitas tinham sido terminadas, marcando o fim do ano agrícola. As chuvas temporãs que depois caíam amoleciam o solo para a aração que se seguia e que indicava o início de novas operações agrícolas. Jeová referiu-se a etanim como virada do ano, ao falar da festividade do recolhimento como ocorrendo "à saída do ano" e "na volta do ano". (Êx 23:16; 34:22) É também notável que não era no mês de abibe, mas sim neste mês de etanim que começava o ano do jubileu. — Le 25:8-12.

Tisri, nome posterior aplicado a este mês, significa "Começo do Ano", e o dia 1.º de tisri ainda é celebrado pelos judeus como seu Ano-Novo, ou Rosh Hashanah ("Cabeça do Ano").

Mês Festivo. Etanim era também mês de festividades. O primeiro dia era o "dia de toque de trombeta". (Le 23:24; Núm 29:1) Visto que toda lua nova era normalmente anunciada com um toque de trombeta, neste dia provavelmente havia adicionais ou extensos toques de trombeta. (Núm 10:10) No dia 10 de etanim celebrava-se o anual Dia da Expiação. (Le 16:29, 30; 23:27; Núm 29:7) Do dia 15 ao dia 21 havia a Festividade das Barracas, ou Festividade do Recolhimento, seguida no dia 22 por uma assembleia solene. (Le 23:34-36) Assim, uma grande parte do mês de etanim era ocupada por essas ocasiões festivas.

Eventos em Etanim. Visto que a Bíblia, do primeiro livro em diante, apresenta dados cronológicos, e visto que a primeira menção de anos de vida ocorre em relação com a vida de Adão, parece que o uso antigo do mês chamado etanim, como mês inicial do ano, fornece alguma base para se crer que a vida de Adão começou neste mês. (Gên 5:1-5) Foi no primeiro dia do primeiro mês (mais tarde chamado etanim) que Noé, depois de já ter passado mais de dez meses na arca, removeu a cobertura da arca e observou que as águas do Dilúvio se tinham escoado de cima do solo. (Gên 8:13) Mais de 1.300 anos depois, Salomão inaugurou o completado templo em Jerusalém no mês de etanim. (1Rs 8:2; 2Cr 5:3) Após a destruição de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, o assassinato do governador Gedalias e a subsequente fuga dos israelitas remanescentes para o Egito, no mês de etanim, marcou a desolação total de Judá. (2Rs 25:25, 26; Je 41:1, 2) Estes eventos estavam envolvidos nos motivos do "jejum do sétimo mês" mencionado em Zacarias 8:19. Setenta anos mais tarde, por volta do mesmíssimo mês, os israelitas exilados, libertos, haviam retornado de Babilônia para iniciar a reconstrução do templo em Jerusalém. — Esd 3:1, 6.

As evidências indicam também que o nascimento de Jesus, bem como seu batismo e sua unção, ocorreram durante este mês. — Veja JESUS CRISTO.

ETÃO. O segundo lugar de acampamento alistado por Moisés na marcha de Israel para fora do Egito. (Êx 13:20; Núm 33:3-7) Foi em Etão, "na beirada do ermo", que os israelitas mudaram de direção, 'voltando para trás' em direção a Pi-Hairote, onde ocorreu a travessia do mar. (Núm 33:7, 8) Isto parece indicar que Etão talvez fosse o ponto de saída do Egito, se os israelitas não tivessem sido divinamente orientados a mudar de rumo.

Este recuo fez Faraó raciocinar que os israelitas estavam 'vagueando em confusão pelo ermo' e deu-lhe o incentivo para persegui-los. Isto levou a Deus executar o julgamento nos egípcios, no Mar Vermelho. — Êx 14:1-4.

Alguns peritos se têm esforçado a situar Etão na extremidade oriental do uádi Tumilat, ao N dos lagos Amargos. Todavia, isto se dá porque eles relacionam o hebraico Etão ('E·thám) com a palavra do egípcio antigo para fortaleza (htm). Mesmo que esta relação fosse correta, havia diversos lugares aos quais se aplicava este nome egípcio. Visto que Etão não se encontrava na rota setentrional para fora do Egito, que teria passado "pelo caminho da terra dos filisteus" (Êx 13:17), só se pode dizer que deve ter ficado em algum ponto ao N do Mar Vermelho, e evidentemente na fronteira da região erma que constitui a parte NO da península do Sinai.

A comparação de Números 33:8 com Êxodo 15:22 parece indicar que a região erma junto a Etão corresponde ao "ermo de Sur". Ou, se os nomes não forem intercambiáveis, então, dependendo qual a região que era maior, o ermo de Etão talvez incluísse o de Sur, ou então era parte do ermo de Sur. — Veja SUR; ÉTÃO.

ÉTÃO [Lugar de Aves de Rapina].

1. Povoação de simeonitas dentro do território de Judá. (1Cr 4:24, 32) Sua localização é incerta, embora alguns a relacionem com Tell ʽEitum (Tel ʽAitun), situada no centro do território de Judá, a uns 44 km ao O de En-Gedi e na mesma distância ao SO de Jerusalém.

2. O rochedo Étão, onde Sansão morou depois de incendiar os campos dos filisteus. Foi deste rochedo que 3.000 homens de Judá o levaram, voluntariamente amarrado, de volta aos filisteus. (Jz 15:8-13) Embora não seja possível fazer uma identificação positiva do rochedo de Étão, não se pode totalmente descartar uma ligação com a cidade (N.º 3, abaixo). Todavia, apenas a uns 4 km ao ESE da localização sugerida da cidade natal de Sansão, Zorá (Jz 13:2), encontra-se ʽAraq Ismaʽin, um rochedo isolado, com uma caverna alta, que oferece uma vista ampla da Sefelá mais abaixo. Apropriado com relação ao significado do nome, este talvez seja o lugar do rochedo de Étão.

3. Cidade de Judá situada provavelmente em Khirbet el-Khokh, num morro a uns 2,5 km ao SO de Belém. Parece que Étão e Belém haviam sido povoadas por parentes chegados. (1Cr 4:3, 4; veja ATROTE-BETE-JOABE.) Segundo Josefo, o Rei Salomão frequentemente, de manhã, saía de carro de Jerusalém esses 13 km até Étão, onde havia jardins e regatos. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], VIII, 186 [vii, 3]) Étão foi reconstruída e fortificada pelo sucessor de Salomão, Roboão. (2Cr 11:5, 6) Segundo o Talmude, um aqueduto ligava Jerusalém com uma fonte ao O de Étão. — Talmude Babilônico, Yoma 31*a;* Talmude da Palestina (de Jerusalém), Yoma 41*a.*

ETBAAL [Com Baal]. Rei dos sidônios, pai de Jezabel, esposa do Rei Acabe. (1Rs 16:31) Por dar sua filha a Acabe em casamento, Etbaal entrou numa aliança política com ele. Evidentemente, Etbaal é o Itobal mencionado na citação que Josefo faz do historiador Menandro, como sacerdote da deusa Astarteia (Astorete). Este sacerdote conseguiu o reinado por assassinar Feles, descendente de Hirão, rei de Tiro, com quem Salomão tivera relações comerciais com respeito à construção do templo. Dizse que Etbaal governou durante 32 dos 48 anos da sua vida. (Against Apion [Contra Apião], I, 123 [18]) Um indício da expansão comercial ocorrida durante o seu reinado é a referência de Menandro à construção de Auza, na Líbia, por Etbaal. Menandro menciona também que, durante o reinado de Etbaal, houve uma seca que durou um ano. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), VIII, 324 (xiii, 2).

ETE-CAZIM. Lugar que demarcava a fronteira de Zebulão. (Jos 19:10, 13) Embora se desconheça hoje a sua localização exata, alguns o identificam provisoriamente com a moderna Kafr Kanna, a uns 20 km ao O do mar da Galileia.

ETER. Cidade da Sefelá, no território de Judá, mas aquinhoada a Simeão. (Jos 15:33, 42; 19:1-9) Atualmente, em geral é identificada com Khirbet el-ʽAter (Tel ʽEter), a cerca de 1,5 km ao NO de Beit Jibrin (Eleuterópolis; Bet Guvrin). O relato de Josué 19:7 é quase paralelo ao de 1 Crônicas 4:32, e, neste último texto, Eter parece ser chamado de Toquém.

Algumas obras de referência consideram que houve duas cidades chamadas Eter, a de Josué 15:42, situada entre Libna e Maresa (em Khirbet el-ʽAter, mencionada acima), e a outra, mencionada em Josué 19:7, situada perto de Ziclague, ao S. Ao passo que as outras cidades mencionadas em Josué 19:7 estão todas no S, e muitas daquelas de Josué 15:42 estão mais ao N, pode-se notar, porém, que em ambos os textos menciona-se a cidade de Asã, de modo que se torna difícil fazer uma distinção precisa.

ETIÓPIA [gr.: Ai·thi·o·pí·a, “Região de Faces Queimadas”], ETÍOPE. Etiópia era o nome aplicado pelos antigos gregos à região da África ao S do Egito. Assim, em geral, correspondia ao nome hebraico “Cus”, que abrangia primariamente o Sudão atual e a parte mais ao sul do Egito atual. Em textos egípcios, esta região era também conhecida pelo nome de Keesh. Quando se fez a tradução Septuaginta, os tradutores usaram a palavra grega “Etiópia” para verter a hebraica “Cus” em todas as passagens, com exceção de duas. (Gên 10:6-8; 1Cr 1:8-10) A King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime) segue esta maneira de traduzir a palavra em todos os casos, exceto em Isaías 11:11, onde usa “Cush [Cus]” em vez de “Ethiopia [Etiópia]”; a Revised Standard Version (Versão Padrão Revisada) igualmente segue a Septuaginta, exceto em Gênesis 2:13 e em Ezequiel 38:5. Algumas traduções (NM, BJ) preferem Cus (Cuch) em mais outros textos, onde a identificação com a antiga Etiópia não pode ser confirmada pelo contexto. O nome Cus pode também aplicar-se a povos da Arábia. — Veja CUS N.º 2; CUSITA.

A região originalmente designada pelo nome de Etiópia consiste agora de planícies semi-áridas no N, de savanas e planaltos na região central, e de floresta pluvial tropical na parte sulina. Outrora, capitais da antiga Etiópia eram Napata e Méroe. Méroe era a sede do reino em que o direito ao reinado era transmitido pela linhagem feminina, em vez de pela masculina. A rainha-mãe era assim aquela de quem seu filho real derivava seu direito ao trono, e às vezes ela talvez fosse a virtual governante do país. O nome Candace é mencionado por escritores gregos e latinos como título usado por diversas dessas rainhas etíopes, evidentemente inclusive pela mencionada em Atos 8:27.

Em que sentido era eunuco o etíope a quem Filipe pregou?

O eunuco etíope, que estava ‘sobre os tesouros’ da Rainha Candace, e a quem Filipe pregou, obviamente era prosélito judeu, circunciso. (At 8:27-39) De modo que não era encarado como gentio, e por isso não precedeu a Cornélio como primeiro gentio incircunciso convertido ao cristianismo. (At 10) Para o etíope poder adorar no templo em Jerusalém, ele deve ter sido convertido à religião judaica e circuncidado. (Êx 12:48, 49; Le 24:22) Visto que a Lei mosaica proibia a entrada de pessoas castradas na congregação de Israel (De 23:1), é evidente que o etíope não era eunuco em sentido carnal. A palavra hebraica para “eunuco” (sa·rís), em sentido amplo e especial, também significava oficial, como em Gênesis 39:1, onde um oficial de Faraó, Potifar, homem casado, é chamado sa·rís. Se o oficial etíope tivesse sido eunuco em sentido real, não teria sido prosélito e Filipe não o teria batizado, visto que ainda não se começara a levar as boas novas aos gentios incircuncisos.

A Etiópia (Cus) é uma das terras às quais os exilados judeus foram espalhados após a conquista babilônica de Judá. (Is 11:11) Portanto, este oficial etíope talvez estivesse em contato com pessoas judaicas na sua região, ou talvez no Egito, onde moravam muitos judeus. Sua cópia do rolo de Isaías provavelmente era da Septuaginta grega, originalmente feita em Alexandria, no Egito. Visto que o reino etíope ficara parcialmente helenizado, a partir do tempo de Ptolomeu II (308-246 AEC), não era incomum que este oficial soubesse ler a língua grega. Tornar-se ele prosélito judeu, e sua subsequente conversão ao cristianismo, cumpriam o Salmo 68:31.

A Língua Etíope. Continua indeterminada a língua original da Etiópia; por volta do fim do oitavo século AEC, usava-se a escrita hieroglífica egípcia nas inscrições etíopes oficiais. Uma língua e escrita nativa chamada meroítica, é conhecida desde o século antes do início da Era Comum, e durante alguns séculos posteriores. O idioma chamado etíope era a língua vernácula durante a Era Comum até o século 14. É de origem semítica, assim como o atual idioma da Etiópia moderna, chamado amárico.

ETNÃ [Paga; Dádiva]. Filho de Assur com sua esposa Hela. Etnã era da tribo de Judá e da família de Esrom. — 1Cr 2:3-5, 9, 24; 4:5, 7.

ETNI [Paga; Dádiva]. Descendente de Levi através de seu filho Gersom; filho de Zerá e antepassado do músico Asafe. — 1Cr 6:39-43.

ÊUBULO [provavelmente: Bom Conselho]. Um dos irmãos cristãos que estava em Roma na época do último encarceramento do apóstolo Paulo e que é mencionado como enviando saudações a Timóteo. — 2Ti 4:21.

EÚDE.

1. Descendente de Jediael, da tribo de Benjamim, por meio de Bilã; homem poderoso, valente. — 1Cr 7:6, 10, 11.

2. Eúde, filho de Gera, da tribo de Benjamim (Jz 3:15), foi escolhido por Deus para livrar a nação da servidão ao Rei Eglom, de Moabe, que já durava 18 anos, opressão que Deus permitira "porque faziam o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová". — Jz 3:12-14.

Quando os israelitas começaram a clamar a Jeová por ajuda, Deus suscitou "um salvador" na pessoa de Eúde. No tempo devido, os israelitas enviaram a Eglom o tributo por meio de Eúde, o qual fizera para si uma espada de dois gumes, "tendo o comprimento de um côvado [hebr.: gó·medh]", na realidade uma medida linear sobre a qual, neste caso, não há certeza. Alguns acham ter sido um côvado menor, de cerca de 38 cm. Eúde era canhoto, ou, literalmente, "homem fechado (impedido) de sua mão direita". Mas, isto não significa que Eúde era aleijado, pois esta fraseologia é usada com relação a 700 guerreiros benjamitas, sendo muito improvável que tivessem um defeito físico, mas eles eram "canhotos", e, evidentemente, ambidestros. (Jz 3:15, 16 n.; 20:16; compare isso com 1Cr 12:2.) A Bíblia não diz especificamente que Eúde era ambidestro, embora isso seja possível. Não obstante, por ser canhoto, cingiu-se da espada sobre a coxa direita, por baixo da sua veste.

Depois da apresentação do tributo, Eúde mandou embora os portadores do tributo, mas retornou de onde havia as pedreiras de Gilgal. Eúde chegou-se então a Eglom, quando o rei moabita estava sentado no seu quarto de terraço, e disse-lhe: "Tenho para ti uma palavra de Deus." Interessado, Eglom levantou-se do seu trono. Daí, Eúde "estendeu então a mão esquerda, e tirou a espada da sua coxa direita", cravando-a na barriga do obeso Eglom, o que resultou em que "o cabo entrou após a lâmina, de modo que a gordura se fechou sobre a lâmina". Um homem destro provavelmente tiraria a espada do lado esquerdo, pela frente do corpo. De modo que não é provável que Eglom esperasse que Eúde puxasse uma espada da coxa direita, usando a mão esquerda. Com o governante inimigo então morto, Eúde fugiu pela abertura de ventilação, depois de cerrar e trancar atrás de si as portas do quarto de terraço. Quando os servos de Eglom por fim abriram a porta, descobriram que "seu senhor estava caído morto por terra". — Jz 3:15-25.

Eúde, tendo escapado para a região montanhosa de Efraim, convocou um exército de israelitas, dizendo-lhes: "Segui-me, porque Jeová vos entregou na mão os vossos inimigos, os moabitas." Depois de capturar os vaus do Jordão, os israelitas cortaram a retirada dos moabitas para a sua terra. Sem dúvida, já grandemente desmoralizados pela morte de seu rei, 10.000 moabitas foram abatidos pelos israelitas, "cada qual robusto e cada qual homem valente; e não escapou nem sequer um". Depois de Moabe ter sido subjugado sob a mão de Israel e a liderança de Eúde, "o país teve sossego por oitenta anos". — Jz 3:26-30.

Eúde não é especificamente chamado de "juiz Eúde"; antes, é mencionado como "salvador". (Jz 3:15) Mas Otniel foi chamado tanto de "salvador" como de "juiz" (Jz 3:9, 10), e aquele período era o dos juízes. De modo que Eúde, aparentemente, não só era tido como "salvador", mas também como juiz.

3. Nome que aparece entre os descendentes de Benjamim, em 1 Crônicas 8:1, 6.

EUFRATES. O mais longo e mais importante rio do SO da Ásia, chamado Firat Nehri em turco, nome bem parecido ao hebraico Peráth e ao antigo persa Ufratu. É primeiro mencionado em Gênesis 2:14 como um dos quatro rios que, outrora, tinham sua fonte no Éden.

Fronteira do Território Designado a Israel. Na declaração de Deus a Abraão, ele pactuou dar à semente de Abraão a terra "desde o rio do Egito até o grande rio, o rio Eufrates". (Gên 15:18) Esta promessa foi repetida à nação de Israel. (Êx 23:31; De 1:7, 8; 11:24; Jos 1:4) Primeiro Crônicas 5:9 declara que certos descendentes de Rubem, no período anterior ao reinado de Davi, estenderam sua morada "até onde se entra no ermo junto ao rio Eufrates".

Todavia, visto que o Eufrates dista uns 800 km, quando se viaja "ao leste de Gileade" (1Cr 5:10), isto talvez simplesmente signifique que os rubenitas estenderam seu território ao L de Gileade até a beira do deserto Sírio, que prossegue até o Eufrates. (CBC reza: "até à entrada do deserto, que vai até o Eufrates"; BJ: "atingia a beira do deserto que o Eufrates limita".) De modo que parece que a promessa de Jeová só se cumpriu plenamente durante os reinados de Davi e de Salomão, quando as fronteiras do domínio de Israel se estendiam para incluir o reino arameu de Zobá e assim atingiam as margens do Eufrates, evidentemente ao longo do trecho que atravessa a Síria setentrional. (2Sa 8:3; 1Rs 4:21; 1Cr 18:3-8; 2Cr 9:26) Por causa do seu destaque, muitas vezes era simplesmente chamado de "o Rio". — Jos 24:2, 15; Sal 72:8.

Nascentes e Curso. Com a extensão de uns 2.700 km, o Eufrates tem duas nascentes principais. Uma, conhecida como Cara Su, nasce no NE da Turquia, a uns 100 km da extremidade SE do Mar Negro. A outra, Murat Nehri, nasce a meio caminho entre o lago Van e o monte Ararate. Aproximadamente a meio caminho entre os dois rios fica o vale do rio Araques, considerado por alguns como relacionado com o rio Giom, de Gênesis 2:13. Os cursos do Cara Su e do Murat Nehri são bastante paralelos numa direção ocidental, até se juntarem perto da cidade de Keban, numa elevação de uns 610 m acima do nível do mar.

Deste ponto em diante, as correntes formam juntas o Eufrates propriamente dito. Já tendo percorrido uns 640 km de terreno montanhoso, desde as nascentes do Murat Nehri, o rio se volta então para o sul por uns 480 km, sendo sua corrente interrompida por diversas cataratas e corredeiras, até emergir finalmente na planície síria, num ponto perto da antiga Carquemis.

Vau em Carquemis. Carquemis guardava o vau principal usado por exércitos ou caravanas passando do N da Mesopotâmia para o N da Síria. Carquemis era uma importante cidade-fortaleza, que mais tarde caiu sob controle assírio. (Is 10:5-9) O Faraó Neco tomou a cidade por volta de 629 AEC, combatendo o exército de Josias em Megido e matando este rei de Judá em caminho para lá. (2Rs 23:29; 2Cr 35:20-24) Três ou quatro anos mais tarde (625 AEC), as tropas de Nabucodonosor cruzaram o Eufrates e derrotaram os egípcios em Carquemis, dando início ao completo declínio de qualquer domínio do Egito na Siro-Palestina. — Je 46:2, 6, 10; 2Rs 24:7.

De Carquemis até o golfo Pérsico. O Eufrates, junto a Carquemis, dista apenas uns 160 km do mar Mediterrâneo; no entanto, o rio faz depois uma curva e segue o rumo SE, dirigindo-se para o golfo Pérsico, a mais de 1.100 km de distância. O curso "médio" do Eufrates estende-se desde Carquemis até a cidade de Hit, na região de poços de betume, seu fluxo sendo engrossado pelas águas dos rios Balique e Cabur. Abaixo de Hit, o rio atravessa a fértil planície mesopotâmica, e uns 80 km abaixo de Hit, na vizinhança de Bagdá, chega a 40 km do rio Tigre. Neste curso inferior do Eufrates, o rio se dissipa em extensos pantanais e em canais arruinados, e seu fluxo se torna lento.

O Eufrates e o Tigre finalmente se juntam perto de Basra, e a partir desta junção e até o golfo Pérsico o rio é conhecido como Xat-al-Arab (Chatt-al-Arab). De acordo com Plínio e outros antigos historiadores, o Eufrates tinha originalmente sua desembocadura no mar separada daquela do Tigre. (Natural History [História Natural], VI, XXVI, 128-131) Acredita-se em geral que o aluvião depositado pelos dois rios formou gradualmente a região do delta na cabeceira do golfo Pérsico, e que a costa original ficava muito mais ao N, talvez atingindo até a antiga cidade de Ur dos Caldeus, lar original de Abraão.

As águas do Eufrates atingem seu nível mais baixo em setembro, e depois sobem constantemente de nível até maio, quando atingem o nível normal mais alto. Por causa do degelo da neve, ocorrem inundações na primavera. O transbordamento anual tanto do Eufrates como do Tigre, sem dúvida, é a base da descrição de Babilônia feita por Isaías como "o ermo do mar". (Is 21:1, 2) Nos tempos antigos, este transbordamento era controlado por diques e eclusas, que desviavam as águas para canais de irrigação e açudes. Estes canais constituíam uma rede de irrigação entre o Eufrates e o Tigre, a qual assegurava a produtividade da maior parte da Babilônia inferior. No decorrer dos séculos, os canais, em geral, ficaram assoreados e entupidos, com a resultante deterioração agrícola; o acúmulo de sal no solo, por causa das águas de irrigação, também contribuiu para a gradual ruína do antigamente fértil vale.

Principais Cidades. Ao longo das margens do Eufrates havia muitas das antigas cidades, inclusive Ur, Ereque, Quis e Babilônia. O curso do rio evidentemente mudou um pouco para o O, de modo que a maioria dos antigos sítios agora estão alguns quilômetros distantes ao L dele.

A grande cidade de Babilônia foi originalmente construída em ambas as margens do Eufrates, e as águas do rio foram usadas para constituir um largo e fundo fosso de defesa cercando a cidade, e também para formar uma rede de canais dentro das muralhas da cidade. Na ocasião da queda de Babilônia, em 539 AEC, Ciro desviou as águas do Eufrates para que suas tropas pudessem marchar pelo leito do rio para dentro da insuspeitosa cidade. Assim, as águas do Eufrates se 'secaram'. (Is 44:27, 28; 45:1) Em símbolo, a mesma coisa é profetizada como resultando do derramamento da "tigela" do sexto anjo sobre "o grande rio Eufrates", conforme descrito em Revelação (Apocalipse) 16:12. O capítulo seguinte descreve a destruição da simbólica "Babilônia, a Grande", da qual se diz que "está sentada sobre muitas águas", as quais representam "povos, e multidões, e nações, e línguas". — Re 17:1, 5, 15-18.

Uma Fronteira; Visitada por Jeremias. Assim como o rio Eufrates servia de fronteira setentrional da disputada região da Palestina e da Síria, pela qual lutaram o Egito e Babilônia, assim, no tempo do Império Persa, ele serviu para separar o Oriente do Ocidente, conforme indicado pela expressão "além do Rio". (Esd 4:10, 11; 5:3; 6:6; Ne 2:7) Com o tempo, o Eufrates passou também a constituir a fronteira oriental do Império Romano.

O texto de Jeremias 13:1-7 tem sido assunto de muitas discussões, visto que uma viagem de Jeremias de Jerusalém ao rio Eufrates, mesmo até o seu ponto mais próximo, a certa distância ao S de Carquemis, representaria uma viagem de mais de 500 km na ida e na volta, e o texto indica que ele possivelmente fez a viagem duas vezes (embora não se declare o tempo entre uma e outra). Uma tradução em inglês, publicada pela Sociedade Publicadora Judaica, simplesmente translitera a palavra hebraica como "Perath", e alguns sugerem que esta não se refere ao Eufrates, mas à cidade de Pará (Jos 18:23), perto de Anatote, a alguns quilômetros de Jerusalém. No entanto, a repetição do nome Peráth (Eufrates) quatro vezes no relato evidentemente mostra que o lugar mencionado tinha alguma relação significativa com o quadro profético encenado, ao passo que a obscura aldeia de Pará dificilmente daria significado especial ao evento. Embora alguns salientem que neste texto não se usa a palavra hebraica na·hár (rio) em conexão com Peráth, deve-se notar que também está faltando em Jeremias 51:63, mas ali a referência é obviamente ao rio Eufrates. Por isso, não parece haver nenhum bom motivo para se presumir que o relato em Jeremias 13:1-7 se refira a outra coisa, em vez de ao rio Eufrates.

É bem possível que esconder Jeremias o cinto perto do rio tenha ocorrido pelo menos na região geral da travessia do Eufrates pelos exércitos babilônicos sob Nabucodonosor, na sua marcha que por fim levou à desolação de Judá e de Jerusalém. De qualquer modo, a viagem, ou possivelmente duas, até o Eufrates, por Jeremias, certamente deve ter dado muito peso à mensagem de aviso que esta ação devia transmitir ao povo espiritualmente corrupto do reino de Judá. — Veja Je 2:18, 19.

EUNICE [duma raiz que significa "vencer"]. Uma judia crente, filha de Loide. Era esposa dum grego descrente e mãe de Timóteo. (At 16:1) É bem provável que o apóstolo Paulo conhecesse Eunice em Listra, na Ásia Menor, na sua primeira viagem missionária, e que então, em resultado da sua pregação, ela e sua mãe Loide se tornaram cristãs. (At 14:4-18) A fé de Eunice era "sem qualquer hipocrisia". (2Ti 1:5) Embora casada com um marido pagão, era exemplar em ensinar seu filho Timóteo "desde a infância . . . os escritos sagrados", e quando ela se tornou cristã, sem dúvida o instruiu concordemente. (2Ti 3:15) Visto que o marido de Eunice era grego, os pais de Timóteo não o fizeram ser circuncidado. — At 16:3.

EUNUCO. A palavra hebraica sa·rís e a grega eu·noú·khos, quando usadas em sentido literal, aplicam-se a um varão castrado. Esses eram designados nas cortes reais como ajudantes, ou guardiães, da rainha, do harém e das mulheres. (Est 2:3, 12-15; 4:4-6, 9) Por causa da sua associação com os da casa do rei, os eunucos dotados de certas habilidades frequentemente atingiam altos postos. Em sentido lato, o termo também denotava qualquer oficial designado a deveres na corte do rei, sem indicar que esses homens eram eunucos em sentido literal.

Sob o pacto da Lei, não se permitia ao eunuco tornar-se parte da congregação do povo de Deus. (De 23:1) Por conseguinte, não há nenhuma indicação de que algum israelita ou residente forasteiro entre o povo tenham sido feitos eunucos para o serviço no palácio dos reis israelitas. Sob a Lei, os escravos deviam ser circuncidados, não castrados. Todavia, era costume de nações pagãs orientais fazer eunucos de alguns dos meninos capturados na guerra.

O oficial da corte encarregado do tesouro da rainha da Etiópia, e a quem Filipe pregou, é chamado de eunuco. Ele era prosélito da religião judaica, que viera a Jerusalém para adorar a Deus. Mas, visto que, sob a Lei, nenhum castrado era aceito na congregação de Israel, o termo eu·noú·khos não se aplicaria aqui literalmente, mas no sentido de "oficial da corte". (At 8:26-39; De 23:1) Ebede-Meleque, o etíope que resgatou o profeta Jeremias do encarceramento numa cisterna, era eunuco na corte do Rei Zedequias. Pareceria que também aqui o termo tinha o frequente sentido de oficial. Ebede-Meleque parece ter sido homem de autoridade. Ele apelou diretamente ao Rei Zedequias a favor de Jeremias e recebeu o comando de 30 homens para a operação de resgate. — Je 38:7-13.

Jeová predisse consoladoramente o tempo em que os eunucos seriam aceitos por ele como seus servos, e, se obedientes, teriam um nome melhor do que filhos e filhas. Com a abolição da Lei por Jesus Cristo, todos os que exercessem fé, sem consideração da sua posição ou condição anterior, poderiam tornar-se filhos espirituais de Deus. Eliminaram-se as distinções carnais. — Is 56:4, 5; Jo 1:12; 1Co 7:24; 2Co 5:16.

Jesus Cristo falou sobre três classes de eunucos, em Mateus 19:12, dizendo: "Pois há eunucos que nasceram tais da madre de sua mãe, e há eunucos que foram feitos eunucos pelos homens, e há eunucos que se fizeram eunucos por causa do reino dos céus. Dê lugar a isso aquele que pode dar lugar a isso." Aqueles de quem se diz que "se fizeram eunucos" por causa do reino são os que exercem autodomínio, a fim de concentrar-se no serviço de Deus. O apóstolo recomenda isso como o proceder "melhor" para os cristãos que não ficam 'inflamados de paixão'. Ele disse que estes podiam servir o Senhor com mais constância, "sem distração". (1Co 7:9, 29-38) Esses "eunucos" não são pessoas que se castraram fisicamente ou que foram emasculados; antes, permanecem voluntariamente no estado de solteiro. A Bíblia não recomenda o voto de celibato, e 'proibir o casar-se' é condenado como um dos sinais de apostasia. De fato, alguns dos apóstolos eram homens casados. — 1Ti 4:1-3; 1Co 9:5; Mt 8:14; Mr 1:30; Lu 4:38; veja OFICIAL DA CORTE.

EURO-AQUILÃO. Violento vendaval do nordeste que se abateu sobre o navio em que Paulo navegava em caminho de Bons Portos para Fênix, um porto na costa meridional de Creta. (At 27:14) Este vento, conhecido aos marujos mediterrâneos como vento gregal, é o vento mais violento naquele mar e seria extremamente perigoso para um navio de grandes velas, que facilmente poderia emborcar em tal tempestade. Por este motivo, quando o navio não podia mais manter a proa contra o vento, os marujos, com medo de encalhar nas areias movediças ao largo da costa sententrional da África, "arriaram os aparelhos e eram assim impelidos". (At 27:15-17) Os cinco tipos de vento gregal reconhecidos pelos meteorologistas são produzidos pelas zonas de baixa pressão sobre a Líbia ou sobre o golfo de Gabes, que provocam fortes correntes de ar desde a Grécia. Traduções da Bíblia baseadas no Texto Recebido, tais como a King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime; veja Tr), chamam o vento de "Euroclydon" (de eú·ros [vento sudeste ou leste] e klý·don [vaga do mar]). Todavia, a palavra Eu·ra·ký·lon, traduzida por "Euro-aquilão" (do latim eurus [vento leste (ou sudeste)] e aquilo [vento norte]), é encontrado em alguns dos melhores manuscritos. "Euro-aquilão" é uma tradução melhor, visto que indica um vento do ENE.

ÊUTICO [Afortunado; Bem-sucedido]. Um jovem de Trôade que é a última pessoa mencionada nas Escrituras como ressuscitada milagrosamente. Por ocasião da visita de Paulo a Trôade, na sua terceira viagem missionária, ele prolongou seu discurso aos irmãos até à meia-noite. Êutico, vencido pelo cansaço e possivelmente pelo calor das muitas lâmpadas e do apinhamento no quarto de andar superior, caiu num sono profundo e despencou duma janela do terceiro pavimento. O médico Lucas, escritor de Atos e evidentemente testemunha ocular do que aconteceu, relata que Êutico não estava apenas desacordado, mas "foi apanhado morto". Adotando um proceder similar ao de Eliseu, quando ressuscitou o filho da sunamita, Paulo lançou-se sobre Êutico e o abraçou. As palavras de Paulo: "Parai de levantar um clamor, pois a sua alma está nele", indica que se restaurara a vida de Êutico. — At 20:7-12; veja também 2Rs 4:34.

EVA [Vivente; pelo visto, palavra aparentada com o verbo hebraico hha·yáh, "viver"]. Primeira e última mulher das obras criativas terrestres de Deus, de que há relato.

Jeová, o Criador, sabia que não era bom que o homem continuasse só. Todavia, antes de passar a criar a mulher, Deus trouxe ao homem diversos animais da terra, bem como criaturas voadoras. Adão deu-lhes nomes, mas não achou nenhuma ajudadora entre eles. Foi então que Jeová fez com que Adão caísse num profundo sono, removeu uma costela do seu lado, e, depois de ter fechado a carne, construiu uma mulher da costela retirada do homem. Sem dúvida, informado por revelação direta de Deus, seu Criador e Pai, de como a mulher veio à existência, Adão teve prazer em aceitá-la como sua esposa, dizendo: "Esta, por fim, é osso dos meus ossos e carne da minha carne", conforme até os seus próprios sentidos lhe evidenciavam. Adão chamou a sua esposa, seu complemento, de 'ishsháh (mulher, ou, literalmente, homem feminino), "porque do homem foi esta tomada". (Gên 2:18-23) Daí, Deus proferiu sua bênção paternal sobre os dois: "Sede fecundos e tornai-vos muitos, e enchei a terra, e sujeitai-a." Deviam ter em sujeição também a criação animal. (Gên 1:28) A mulher, por ser obra das mãos de Deus, era perfeitamente adequada para ser complemento do seu marido, Adão, e também para ser mãe.

Engano e Desobediência. Veio então o dia em que a mulher, quando não estava na companhia do seu marido, encontrou-se perto da árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau. Ali, uma cautelosa e humilde serpente, usada por um espírito invisível como porta-voz visível, perguntou com aparente inocência: "É realmente assim que Deus disse, que não deveis comer de toda árvore do jardim?" A mulher respondeu corretamente, sem dúvida instruída assim por seu cabeça marital, o qual era de uma só carne com ela. Mas, quando a serpente contradisse a Deus e declarou que a violação da ordem de Deus resultaria em ser igual a Deus, sabendo o que é bom e o que é mau, a mulher começou a encarar a árvore dum ponto de vista diferente. Ora, "a árvore era boa para alimento e . . . algo para os olhos anelarem, sim, a árvore era desejável para se contemplar". Além disso, a serpente dissera que Eva seria como Deus, se comesse da árvore. (Veja 1Jo 2:16.) Totalmente enganada pela serpente, e com o forte desejo das perspectivas relacionadas com o comer do fruto proibido, ela tornou-se transgressora da lei de Deus. (1Ti 2:14) Como tal, chegou-se então ao marido e induziu-o a se juntar a ela na desobediência a Deus. Adão escutou a voz da sua esposa. — Gên 3:1-6.

O efeito imediato da transgressão deles foi a vergonha. De modo que usaram folhas de figueira, a fim de fazer para si coberturas para os lombos. Tanto Adão como sua esposa foram esconder-se entre as árvores do jardim quando ouviram a voz de Jeová. Quando diretamente interrogada por Deus sobre o que tinha feito, a mulher declarou que ela havia comido por ter sido enganada pela serpente. Ao proferir sentença sobre ela, Jeová indicou que a gravidez e o parto seriam acompanhados por maior dor; ela teria desejo ardente do seu marido e ele a dominaria. — Gên 3:7-13, 16.

Depois de terem violado a lei de Deus, Adão, segundo se relata, chamou a sua esposa de Eva, "porque ela havia de tornar-se a mãe de todos os viventes". (Gên 3:20) Antes de expulsar Adão e Eva do jardim do Éden para enfrentar as dificuldades do solo amaldiçoado, Jeová lhes mostrou benignidade imerecida por prover-lhes vestes compridas de peles. — Gên 3:21.

Tinha Eva razão em dizer que produzira seu filho Caim "com o auxílio de Jeová"?

Por ocasião do nascimento do seu primeiro filho, Caim, fora do Paraíso, Eva exclamou: "Produzi um homem com o auxílio de Jeová." (Gên 4:1) Eva é a primeira pessoa de que se relata ter usado o nome de Deus, indicando que o nome Jeová era conhecido aos primeiros humanos. Mais tarde, ela deu à luz Abel, bem como outros filhos e filhas. Quando Adão tinha 130 anos de idade, Eva deu à luz um filho a quem chamou de Sete, dizendo: "Deus designou outro descendente [lit.: semente] em lugar de Abel, visto que Caim o matou." Ela podia corretamente expressar-se assim tanto por ocasião do nascimento de Caim como do de Sete, porque Deus dera a ela e a Adão as faculdades reprodutivas, e, em razão da benignidade imerecida de Deus, de não os matar imediatamente quando transgrediram a ordem Dele, ela pôde dar à luz. Com o nascimento de Sete encerra o registro de Gênesis referente a Eva. — Gên 4:25; 5:3, 4.

Personagem Real. Que Eva realmente viveu e não era uma personagem de ficção é confirmado pelo próprio Cristo Jesus. Quando interrogado pelos fariseus a respeito do divórcio, Jesus chamou à atenção o relato de Gênesis relativo à criação de macho e fêmea. (Mt 19:3-6) Além disso, há as palavras de Paulo dirigidas aos coríntios, expressando temor de que a mente deles fosse de algum modo corrompida, "assim como a serpente seduziu Eva pela sua astúcia". (2Co 11:3) Daí, ao considerar o lugar correto da mulher na congregação cristã, Paulo apresenta como motivo de não se permitir "que a mulher ensine ou exerça autoridade sobre o homem" o fato de que Adão foi formado primeiro, e que ele não foi enganado, "mas a mulher foi totalmente enganada e veio a estar em transgressão". — 1Ti 2:12-14.

EVANGELIZADOR. Pregador do evangelho, ou das boas novas; mensageiro do que é bom. A palavra grega eu·ag·ge·li·stés (evangelizador) é intimamente aparentada com a palavra eu·ag·gé·li·on, "boas novas" ou "evangelho". (Veja BOAS NOVAS; também Na 1:15, n.; Mt 4:23, n.) Jeová é o Grande Evangelizador, ou Portador de boas novas. Depois da queda de Adão no pecado, era boas novas saber, em Gênesis 3:15, que haveria um descendente, ou semente, para esmagar a cabeça da serpente. Isto dava esperança à humanidade. (Ro 8:20) Ampliando a promessa a respeito da semente de Abraão, Jeová declarou-lhe boas novas. (Gál 3:8; Gên 12:1-3) Em Isaías 52:7, profetizou-se que haveria um "portador de boas novas" com respeito ao retorno dos judeus de Babilônia. Este texto é citado pelo apóstolo Paulo com respeito à obra evangelizadora dos cristãos. (Ro 10:15) O anjo Gabriel foi evangelizador ao anunciar a Zacarias as boas novas do vindouro nascimento de João, o Batizador, e a Maria, o de Jesus. Um anjo foi evangelizador para os pastores por ocasião do nascimento de Jesus. (Lu 1:18-38; 2:10) João, o Batizador, era evangelizador, porque se registra que "declarava as boas novas ao povo". (Lu 3:18) Todos os discípulos de Jesus participavam no ministério público da declaração das boas novas e por isso eram evangelizadores. — At 8:4.

Evangelizadores Missionários Especiais. Embora todos os cristãos sejam comissionados a ser evangelizadores, a palavra é usada de modo especial em Efésios 4:8, 11, 12, onde Paulo descreve as "dádivas em homens", que Cristo deu à congregação, quando ascendeu ao alto: "E ele deu alguns como apóstolos, alguns como profetas, alguns como evangelizadores, alguns como pastores e instrutores, . . . para a edificação do corpo do Cristo." A obra específica de tais evangelizadores era a de ser missionários. Frequentemente, eles abriam campos novos, onde as boas novas não haviam sido anteriormente pregadas. Os evangelizadores precedem os pastores e os instrutores na listagem em Efésios 4:11, porque, depois de as boas novas terem sido pregadas e se terem feito discípulos, os pastores e instrutores, daí em diante, fazem uma obra adicional de edificação.

Filipe é mencionado em especial como evangelizador. Ele foi com muito bom êxito pioneiro da obra na cidade de Samaria, após Pentecostes. Filipe foi orientado por um anjo para pregar as boas novas a respeito de Cristo ao eunuco etíope, a quem ele batizou. Daí, Filipe foi levado pelo espírito para pregar em Asdode e em todas as cidades no caminho para Cesareia. (At 8:5, 12, 14, 26-40) Paulo fez muita evangelização. (2Co 10:13-16) Timóteo era evangelizador, ou missionário, e Paulo deu ênfase especial à evangelização na sua exortação de despedida a Timóteo: "Tu, porém, mantém os teus sentidos em todas as coisas, sofre o mal, faze a obra dum evangelizador, efetua plenamente o teu ministério." Timóteo, que se empenhava com outros cristãos na pregação das boas novas, também realizava a obra de pastoreio e de ensino como superintendente em Éfeso. — 2Ti 4:5; 1Ti 1:3.

Evangelização no "Tempo do Fim". A mais extensa evangelização já empreendida tem de ser realizada no "tempo do fim", segundo a declaração expressa de Jesus, em Mateus 24:14: "Estas boas novas do reino serão pregadas em toda a terra habitada . . . e então virá o fim." No tempo atual, as nações têm missionários economistas, políticos e médicos, e outros semelhantes. Mas os cristãos têm a ordem de pregar o Reino de Deus e de fazer discípulos de Jesus Cristo. (2Ti 4:2; 1Co 9:16; 1Pe 1:12, 25; 4:17) O anjo que voa pelo meio do céu com boas novas eternas proclama: "Temei a Deus e dai-lhe glória, porque já chegou a hora do julgamento por ele, e assim, adorai Aquele que fez o céu, e a terra, e o mar, e as fontes das águas." (Re 14:6, 7) Estas são as boas novas que o evangelizador, ou missionário, cristão deve divulgar. Assim como a Bíblia descreve como missionários a certas pessoas, tais como Filipe, o evangelizador, em sentido especial, alguns cristãos, atualmente, talvez façam uma obra missionária em sentido especial, indo até mesmo a outros países para pregar. (At 21:8) Não obstante, todos os cristãos têm a comissão e a obrigação de ser evangelizadores onde quer que se encontrem, por pregarem as boas novas a toda sorte de homens. — Ro 10:9, 10.

EVI. Um dos cinco reis ou maiorais midianitas que foram mortos quando o exército de Israel, sob Moisés, lutou para executar a vingança de Jeová contra Midiã, por este ter seduzido Israel a se achegar a Baal de Peor. Esses reis midianitas eram caudilhos (ou duques), aliados ou vassalos de Síon, rei dos amorreus. Seu território foi dado à tribo de Rubem. — Núm 25:17, 18; 31:8; Jos 13:15, 21.

EVIL-MERODAQUE [do babilônio, significando "Adorador de Marduque"]. Rei babilônio que sucedeu a Nabucodonosor no trono, em 581 AEC. No ano em que se tornou rei, Evil-Merodaque mostrou bondade para com Joaquim, rei de Judá, por soltá-lo da casa de detenção. Isto foi no 37.º ano do exílio de Joaquim em Babilônia. Evil-Merodaque concedeu-lhe uma posição de favor acima de todos os outros reis que estavam em cativeiro em Babilônia. (2Rs 25:27-30; Je 52:31-34) Josefo afirma que Evil-Merodaque considerava Joaquim um dos seus amigos mais íntimos.

Existe também testemunho arqueológico a respeito de Evil-Merodaque (Avil-Marduque, Amil-Marduque). Por exemplo, uma inscrição encontrada num vaso perto de Susa reza: "Palácio de Amil-Marduque, Rei de Babilônia, filho de Nabucodonosor, Rei de Babilônia." (Mémoires de la mission archéologique de Susiane [Memórias da Missão Arqueológica de Susa], de V. Scheil, Paris, 1913, Vol. XIV) Beroso, citado por Josefo, atribui-lhe um reinado de dois anos. O próprio Josefo dá-lhe 18 anos. Supostamente morto em resultado duma conspiração, Evil-Merodaque foi substituído por Neriglissar (Nergal-Sarezer). Falta uma confirmação confiável destes pormenores.

EVÓDIA [Bom Caminho; Próspera]. Mulher na congregação cristã de Filipos, que lutara lado a lado com o apóstolo Paulo e outros "nas boas novas". Pelo visto, Evódia tinha certa dificuldade em resolver um problema que surgira entre ela e Síntique, e Paulo admoestou essas duas mulheres cristãs "a serem da mesma mentalidade no Senhor". — Fil 4:2, 3.

EXECRAÇÃO. Veja MALDIZER.

EXECUÇÃO, EXECUTOR. Para que leis, mandamentos e comissões tenham vigência e valor, eles precisam ser legalmente postos em vigor.

A execução usualmente se refere à aplicação de penalidades, especialmente da pena de morte, impostas para a violação de leis. A Lei Suprema não só tem um Legislador, mas também um Executor da Lei: "Jeová é o nosso Juiz, Jeová é o nosso Legislador, Jeová é o nosso Rei." "Há um que é legislador e juiz." (Is 33:22; Tg 4:12) De modo que o próprio Jeová é o executor do julgamento e da vingança nos violadores da Sua lei. — Êx 12:12; De 10:17, 18; Ez 25:11-17; 2Te 1:6-9; Ju 14, 15.

Jeová delegou também a outros certos poderes de execução. Por exemplo: "Exigirei de volta vosso sangue das vossas almas. . . . Da mão de cada um que é seu irmão exigirei de volta a alma do homem. Quem derramar o sangue do homem, pelo homem será derramado o seu próprio sangue, pois à imagem de Deus fez ele o homem." (Gên 9:5, 6) Neste respeito, certas responsabilidades de executor recaíam sobre "o vingador do sangue". (Núm 35:19; veja VINGADOR DO SANGUE.) Dependendo das circunstâncias, a autoridade de executor às vezes cabia aos sacerdotes de Israel (Núm 5:15-31) ou à congregação inteira, tomando as testemunhas oculares a dianteira na execução do delinquente. (Le 24:14-16; De 17:2-7) O poder de execução estava também nas mãos dos juízes e dos reis, ou de alguém designado por eles. — Jz 8:20, 21; 2Sa 1:15; 1Cr 14:16; 2Rs 9:6-9; 10:24-28; Je 21:12; 22:3.

Os antigos governantes estavam cercados de guarda-costas de confiança, aos quais se podia confiar a execução dos editos de seu amo. Potifar era um dos que ocupavam tal posição. (Gên 37:36; 41:12) Foi um dos guarda-costas de Herodes que decapitou João, o Batizador. — Mr 6:27.

Em Israel, a execução da pena de morte era por apedrejamento ou pela espada. (Le 20:2; 2Sa 1:15) O Rei messiânico de Jeová, o Senhor Jesus Cristo, e outros dos seus leais associados celestiais, são executores legalmente constituídos, autorizados como tais pelo "Juiz de toda a terra". — Gên 18:25; Sal 149:6-9; Re 12:7-9; 19:11-16; 20:1-3.

EXÉRCITO. Grande corpo de homens organizados e treinados para travar guerra em terra. O costumeiro termo hebraico para "exército" (tsa·vá') é usualmente usado com referência a forças armadas humanas (Núm 1:3), mas também pode denotar criaturas espirituais nos céus (1Rs 22:19) e os corpos celestes, físicos. (De 4:19) A palavra hebraica hhá·yil, evidentemente derivada duma raiz que significa "perdurar" (Jó 20:21), é usada para se referir a uma "força militar" ou a uma "força combatente" (2Sa 8:9; 1Cr 20:1), mas ela significa também "capacidade; energia vital; recursos; riqueza". (1Cr 9:13; Pr 31:29; De 33:11; Is 8:4; Ez 28:4) A palavra hebraica gedhúdh denota uma "guerrilha" ou "tropas". (2Sa 22:30; 2Cr 25:9) Dentre os quatro termos gregos referentes a um exército, nas Escrituras, três (stra·ti·á, strá·teu·ma e stra·tó·pe·don) derivam da raiz grega stra·tós, que basicamente se refere a um exército acampado, em contraste com um disposto em fileiras combatentes. Stra·tó·pe·don, que contém o elemento pé·don (solo; terra), é apropriadamente vertido por 'exército acampado'. (Lu 21:20) O termo grego pa·rem·bo·lé (de pa·rá [ao lado de] e bál·lo [lançar]) refere-se literalmente à distribuição ou disposição dos soldados em ordem de combate. Pode significar "exército", "quartel" ou "acampamento". — He 11:34; At 21:34; Re 20:9.

Desde o tempo de Abraão, os servos pré-cristãos de Jeová se empenhavam em guerra armada. Depois de o elamita Quedorlaomer e seus aliados terem levado o sobrinho de Abraão, Ló, e os da sua casa, Abraão convocou seu exército de "homens treinados, trezentos e dezoito escravos", e, junto com seus confederados vizinhos, foi no encalço deles até Dã, a uns 200 km ao NNE. Daí, dividiu suas forças e atacou de noite, uma estratégia repetidas vezes usada nos tempos bíblicos. — Gên 14:13-16.

Israelita. A nação de Israel, mais de 400 anos depois, partiu do Egito com muita pressa, mas em bem organizada "formação de batalha", possivelmente como um exército de cinco corpos, composto dum corpo principal, com vanguarda, retaguarda e duas alas laterais. (Êx 6:26; 13:18) O exército egípcio que foi em perseguição deles consistia em "seiscentos carros seletos e todos os outros carros do Egito". Cada carro usualmente levava três homens, um para guiar os cavalos e dois para lutar, provavelmente arqueiros, visto que o arco era a principal arma ofensiva dos egípcios. A cavalaria os acompanhava. (Êx 14:7, 9, 17) Segundo Josefo (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], II, 324 [xv, 3]), os hebreus foram "perseguidos por 600 carros, junto com 50.000 cavalarianos e por infantaria pesada de até 200.000 homens". — Veja AJUDANTE DE ORDENS.

Pouco depois do Êxodo, os israelitas travaram o seu primeiro combate militar como povo liberto. Os amalequitas os atacaram em Refidim, na região do monte Sinai. Sob a direção de Moisés, Josué reuniu rapidamente uma força combatente. A batalha durou a maior parte do dia, e, apesar da sua inexperiência na arte da guerra, Jeová deu a vitória a Israel. — Êx 17:8-14.

Cerca de um ano após o Êxodo, fez-se uma contagem dos habilitados para o serviço no exército, dos varões de 20 anos de idade para cima. O censo totalizou 603.550. (Núm 1:1-3, 45, 46) Uma contagem similar, perto do fim da peregrinação no ermo, mostrou que o contingente do exército tinha caído um pouco, para 601.730. (Núm 26:2, 51) Os levitas estavam eximidos do serviço no exército, e por isso não foram incluídos nestes números, mas foram contados em separado. — Núm 1:47-49; 3:14-39; 26:57, 62.

Eximições. Além da tribo de Levi, concediam-se eximições do serviço militar aos seguintes: (1) o homem que "construiu uma casa nova e não a inaugurou"; (2) "o homem que plantou um vinhedo e não começou a fazer uso dele"; (3) "o homem que ficou noivo duma mulher e não a tomou"; (4) aquele que se casa "não deve sair para o exército, [mas] . . . deve permanecer dispensado na sua casa por um ano"; (5) "o homem que é temeroso e receoso de coração". — De 20:5-8; 24:5.

Arranjos do exército depois da conquista de Canaã. Depois da ocupação geral de Canaã, havia pouca necessidade de um grande exército efetivo; as escaramuças de fronteira costumavam ser resolvidas pelas tribos locais envolvidas. Quando se tornava necessário reunir uma unificada força combatente maior, de diversas tribos, Jeová suscitava juízes para assumir o comando. A convocação às armas era realizada de maneiras diferentes: por toques de trombeta, por mensageiros, ou por sinais para mover os combatentes à ação. — Núm 10:9; Jz 3:27; 6:35; 19:29; 1Sa 11:7.

Parece que os guerreiros providenciavam as suas próprias armas: espadas, lanças, dardos, fundas, arcos e flechas. Em geral, os homens eram responsáveis pela sua própria alimentação; por isso, Jessé mandou provisões aos seus filhos no exército de Saul. (1Sa 17:17, 18) Há um caso, porém, em que 10 por cento dos voluntários foram separados para obterem provisões para os demais. — Jz 20:10.

A presença de Jeová no acampamento de Israel exigia santidade — limpeza cerimonial por parte dos soldados. (De 23:9-14) Visto que, sob a Lei, relações sexuais tornavam o homem impuro até o dia seguinte, tanto Davi como Urias tiveram o cuidado de evitar ter relações sexuais enquanto em serviço ativo. (Le 15:16-18; 1Sa 21:1-6; 2Sa 11:6-11) Os exércitos das nações pagãs frequentemente estupravam as mulheres das cidades conquistadas, mas isso não se dava com os soldados vitoriosos de Israel. Tampouco se lhes permitia, antes de passar um mês, casar-se com uma mulher cativa. — De 21:10-13.

Afinal, as vitórias de Israel dependiam de Jeová, mas era necessário um bom comando do exército. Esta responsabilidade recaía sobre os oficiais designados, e sobre os chefes de mil e de cem. Designavam-se sacerdotes para dar encorajamento, bem como orientação e objetivo às campanhas. (Núm 31:6, 14; De 20:2-4, 9) Durante os dias dos juízes, aquele que era suscitado por Jeová liderava pessoalmente o exército na batalha. O juiz também planejava as táticas e a estratégia. Dispunha suas forças de diversas maneiras: divisão em unidades (usualmente três), ataques de surpresa, emboscadas, ataques frontais, ocupação de vaus de rios, e assim por diante. — Jos 8:9-22; 10:9; 11:7; Jz 3:28; 4:13, 14; 7:16; 9:43; 12:5.

Sob a monarquia. Não satisfeito com o arranjo teocrático sob os juízes, o povo queria ser 'igual a todas as nações', com um rei que saísse na sua frente e travasse suas batalhas. (1Sa 8:20) Todavia, Samuel os avisou que esse não lutaria sozinho; tomaria os filhos deles 'e os poria como seus nos seus carros e entre os seus cavaleiros, e alguns teriam de correr na frente dos seus carros'. (1Sa 8:11, 12; veja CORREDORES (BATEDORES).) O rei era o comandante supremo, sendo o chefe do exército o segundo em autoridade. — 1Sa 14:50.

O tamanho e a força do exército de Saul variavam segundo as demandas. Em certa ocasião, ele escolheu 3.000 homens, dos quais 1.000 foram postos sob o comando do seu filho Jonatã. (1Sa 13:2) Para outra façanha, reuniram-se 330.000. (1Sa 11:8) Mas, em comparação com os altamente mecanizados exércitos dos filisteus, os quais, segundo o texto massorético, podiam convocar 30.000 carros, 6.000 cavaleiros e "povo em multidão como os grãos de areia", assim como fizeram em Micmás, Israel parecia mal equipado. "Aconteceu que no dia da batalha não se achava nem espada nem lança na mão de qualquer um do povo", com exceção de Saul e Jonatã. — 1Sa 13:5, 22.

Durante o reinado de Davi, o exército de Israel foi grandemente melhorado, tanto em tamanho como em eficiência. Foram bem mais de 300.000 homens equipados para a guerra que vieram a Hébron e entregaram o reinado de Saul a Davi. (1Cr 12:23-38) No exército de Davi serviam também não israelitas. — 2Sa 15:18; 20:7.

Davi reteve muitos dos anteriores planos organizacionais do exército, tais como ele mesmo ocupar o posto de comandante supremo, nomeando comandantes de campo, tais como Joabe, Abner e Amasa, que tinham sob o seu comando os chefes de mil e de cem. (2Sa 18:1; 1Rs 2:32; 1Cr 13:1; 18:15) Todavia, Davi instituiu alguns planos novos, seus. Um sistema de rodízio mensal fornecia 12 grupos de 24.000 (num total de 288.000), de modo que o soldado, normalmente, servia apenas durante um mês por ano. (1Cr 27:1-15) Isto não significava, porém, que todos os 24.000 de determinado mês procediam da mesma tribo, mas, antes, cada tribo fornecia sua parte da quota mensal durante o ano.

Unidades de cavalaria e de carros. Carros, plataformas móveis de disparos, eram altamente valorizados pelos babilônios, pelos assírios e pelos egípcios, por causa da sua velocidade e maneabilidade. Tornaram-se assim símbolos apropriados do poderio militar dos principais impérios mundiais. Sob Davi, o maior comandante militar de Israel, o exército inteiro era composto de soldados de infantaria, com armas manuais — espada, lança, arco ou funda. Davi deve ter-se lembrado do conselho de Jeová, de não confiar no cavalo para obter a vitória (De 17:16; 20:1), que os cavalos e os carros de Faraó foram 'atirados no mar' por Jeová (Êx 15:1, 4), e que Jeová abriu as comportas do céu sobre os "novecentos carros de guerra com foices de ferro", de Sísera, de modo que 'a torrente do Quisom arrastou' o inimigo. — Jz 4:3; 5:21.

Portanto, assim como Josué jarretou cavalos capturados e queimou carros do inimigo, Davi também fez com os cavalos capturados de Hadadezer, rei de Zobá. Jarretou todos, menos cem, dos muitos cavalos capturados do rei de Zobá. (Jos 11:6-9; 2Sa 8:4) Davi explicou num cântico que seus inimigos se preocupavam com carros e cavalos, "nós, porém, faremos menção do nome de Jeová, nosso Deus". "Para a salvação, o cavalo é uma ilusão." (Sal 20:7; 33:17) Conforme diz o provérbio: "O cavalo é algo preparado para o dia da batalha, mas a salvação pertence a Jeová." — Pr 21:31.

Com a chegada do domínio de Salomão, escreveu-se um novo capítulo nos anais do exército de Israel. O reinado dele era comparativamente pacífico, todavia ele multiplicou cavalos e carros. (Veja CARRO.) Na maior parte, estes cavalos eram comprados e importados do Egito. Cidades inteiras tiveram de ser construídas em todo o território para acomodar estas novas divisões militares. (1Rs 4:26; 9:19; 10:26, 29; 2Cr 1:14-17) No entanto, Jeová nunca abençoou esta inovação de Salomão, e quando este morreu e o reino foi dividido, veio o declínio do exército de Israel. Conforme Isaías escreveu mais tarde: "Ai dos que descem ao Egito por auxílio, os que confiam em meros cavalos e os que põem a sua confiança em carros de guerra, por serem numerosos, e em corcéis, por serem muito fortes, mas que não atentaram para o Santo de Israel e que não buscaram o próprio Jeová." — Is 31:1.

Durante o reino dividido. Após a divisão do reino, houve constantes hostilidades entre Judá e Israel. (1Rs 12:19, 21) Abias, sucessor de Roboão, tinha apenas 400.000 homens no seu exército quando Jeroboão veio contra ele com 800.000. Apesar de superado em número na proporção de dois contra um, os do reino meridional mostraram-se bem-sucedidos "porque se estribaram em Jeová". Israel perdeu 500.000 homens. — 2Cr 13:3-18.

Além da luta intertribal, havia o antagonismo externo das nações pagãs ao redor. Israel viu-se obrigado a manter um exército permanente, por causa das relações exteriores hostis com a Síria ao norte. (2Rs 13:4-7) Também Judá tinha de resistir aos avanços de exércitos pagãos. Em certa ocasião, o Egito invadiu Judá e levou muitos despojos. (1Rs 14:25-27) Em outra ocasião, a Etiópia veio contra Judá com um exército de 1.000.000 de homens e 300 carros. As forças do Rei Asa eram apenas 580.000 homens, mas quando ele "começou a invocar a Jeová, seu Deus", "Jeová derrotou os etíopes", e nem sequer um destes ficou vivo. — 2Cr 14:8-13.

Novamente, quando Moabe, Amom e os amonins vieram contra Jeosafá, este, embora tivesse uma força de 1.160.000 homens, "pôs a sua face a buscar a Jeová", que lhe assegurou: "A batalha não é vossa, mas de Deus." (2Cr 17:12-19; 20:1-3, 15) Naquela ocasião se fez história militar, porque um coro de vozes treinadas 'saía na frente dos homens armados', cantando: "Louvai a Jeová." As forças inimigas, em confusão, destruíram-se mutuamente. — 2Cr 20:21-23.

Romano. O exército romano, calculado em 300.000 homens durante o reinado de Augusto, estava organizado de modo bem diferente daqueles de anteriores impérios. A parte principal do estabelecimento militar romano era a legião. Era uma grande unidade independente, um exército completo em si mesmo, em vez de uma parte especializada de uma força maior. Às vezes, as legiões lutavam juntas, combinando seus recursos e sua força sob um comando central, como no caso em que quatro legiões foram combinadas sob Tito para o sítio de Jerusalém, em 70 EC. Mas, usualmente, a legião atuava sozinha na sua tarefa específica. Suplementando os legionários havia não cidadãos de todas as partes do império, que constituíam a auxilia, frequentemente voluntários do distrito local. Auxiliares, apoiados pelas legiões, eram posicionados ao longo das fronteiras. Ao receber baixa honrosa, concedia-se ao membro da auxilia a cidadania romana.

O número de legiões variava em épocas diferentes, de 25 ou menos para até 33. Também oscilava o número de soldados que compunham a legião, de uns 4.000 até 6.000; no primeiro século, a força costumava ter 6.000. Por esta razão, a "legião", conforme usada nas Escrituras, parece significar um número grande, indefinido. (Mt 26:53; Mr 5:9; Lu 8:30) Toda legião tinha seu próprio comandante, responsável exclusivamente perante o imperador, e sob ele havia seis tribunos, chamados quiliarcas (comandantes militares, NM). — Mr 6:21; Jo 18:12; At 21:32-23:22; 25:23; veja COMANDANTE MILITAR.

A legião era dividida em dez coortes, ou destacamentos. Assim, as Escrituras falam do "destacamento italiano" e do "destacamento de Augusto".

(At 10:1; 27:1; veja AUGUSTO, DESTACAMENTO DE.) Quando Herodes Agripa morreu, em 44 EC, havia cinco coortes em Cesareia. Subdividida ainda mais, a legião tinha 60 centúrias, usualmente cada uma de 100 homens, sob o comando dum centurião (oficial do exército, NM). Estes oficiais eram especialmente valiosos, cabendo-lhes a responsabilidade de treinar os soldados. (Mt 8:5-13; 27:54; At 10:1; 21:32; 22:25, 26; 23:17, 23; 24:23; 27:1, 6, 11, 31, 43; veja OFICIAL DO EXÉRCITO.) Em cada legião havia dez oficiais de posto especial, que atuavam como guarda-costas, correios, e às vezes como executores. — Mr 6:27.

As legiões romanas possuíam diversos estandartes e insígnias com imagens de águias ou de animais; mais tarde, acrescentaram-se estatuetas do imperador. Esses pendões tinham significado religioso, eram considerados sagrados e santos a ponto de serem adorados, e eram guardados à custa da vida humana. Era por estes motivos que os judeus se opunham violentamente à sua presença em Jerusalém.

Os Conhecidos Como Primitivos Cristãos. Os primitivos cristãos negavam-se a servir no exército romano, tanto nas legiões como na auxilia, considerando tal serviço totalmente incompatível com os ensinos do cristianismo. Diz Justino, o Mártir, do segundo século EC, no seu "Diálogo com o Judeu Trífon" (CX): "Nós, que estávamos cheios de guerra, e de matança mútua, e de toda iniquidade, transformamos cada um de nós, em toda a terra, as nossas armas guerreiras, — as nossas espadas em relhas de arado, e as nossas lanças em implementos de lavoura." (The Ante-Nicene Fathers [Os Pais Antenicenos], Vol. I, p. 254) No seu tratado "A Grinalda, ou De Corona" (XI), ao considerar "se a guerra é mesmo apropriada para os cristãos", Tertuliano (c. 200 EC) argumentou à base das Escrituras a ilegalidade até mesmo da própria vida militar, concluindo: "Proscrevo para nós a vida militar." — The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 1957, Vol. III, pp. 99, 100.

"Uma cuidadosa análise de toda a informação disponível mostra que, até o tempo de Marco Aurélio [121-180 EC], nenhum cristão tornou-se soldado; e nenhum soldado, depois de tornar-se cristão, permanecia no serviço militar." (The Rise of Christianity [A Ascensão do Cristianismo], de E. W. Barnes, 1947, p. 333) "Ver-se-á logo que a evidência da existência de um único soldado cristão entre 60 e cerca de 165 A.D. é extremamente insignificante; . . . até o reinado de Marco Aurélio, pelo menos, nenhum cristão se tornava soldado após seu batismo." (The Early Church and the World [A Igreja Primitiva e o Mundo], de C. J. Cadoux, 1955, pp. 275, 276) "No segundo século, o cristianismo . . . tinha afirmado a incompatibilidade do serviço militar com o cristianismo." (A Short History of Rome [Breve História de Roma], de G. Ferrero e C. Barbagallo, 1919, p. 382) "O comportamento dos cristãos era muito diferente daquele dos romanos. . . . Visto que Cristo havia pregado a paz, recusavam-se a tornar-se soldados." (Our World Through the Ages [Nosso Mundo no Decurso das Eras], de N. Platt e M. J. Drummond, 1961, p. 125) "Os primitivos cristãos pensavam ser errado lutar, e não serviam no exército mesmo quando o Império precisava de soldados." (The New World's Foundations in the Old [Os Alicerces do Novo Mundo se Acham no Antigo], de R. e W. M. West, 1929, p. 131) "Os cristãos . . . evitavam cargos públicos e o serviço militar." (Introdução editorial para "Perseguição dos Cristãos na Gália, A.D. 177", em The Great Events by Famous Historians [Os Grandes Eventos Contados por Historiadores Famosos], editado por R. Johnson, 1905, Vol. III, p. 246) "Ao passo que eles [os cristãos] inculcavam as máximas da obediência passiva, recusavam-se a tomar qualquer parte ativa na administração civil ou na defesa militar do império. . . . Era impossível que os cristãos, sem renunciarem a um dever mais sagrado, pudessem assumir o caráter de soldados, de magistrados ou de príncipes." — The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (O Declínio e a Queda do Império Romano), de Edward Gibbon, Vol. I, p. 416.

Celestial. Exércitos celestiais, no sentido de multidões bem organizadas, referem-se não só às estrelas literais, porém, mais frequentemente, às poderosas hostes de criaturas espirituais, angélicas, sob o comando supremo de Jeová Deus. (Gên 2:1; Ne 9:6) A expressão "Jeová dos exércitos" ocorre 283 vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas, primeiro em 1 Samuel 1:3, e duas vezes se encontra o seu equivalente nas Escrituras Gregas. (Ro 9:29; Tg 5:4; veja JEOVÁ DOS EXÉRCITOS.) Ao se considerarem os guerreiros angélicos, usam-se termos militares tais como "legiões", "carros de guerra", "cavaleiros", e assim por diante. (2Rs 2:11, 12; 6:17; Mt 26:53) Em tamanho, o corpo dos exércitos invisíveis de Jeová inclui "dezenas de milhares, milhares repetidos vez após vez", de carros de guerra. (Sal 68:17) Como força combatente, são invencíveis. "O príncipe do exército de Jeová", com espada desembainhada, apareceu a Josué e deu instruções sobre como Jericó seria capturada. (Jos 5:13-15) Um único anjo destes exércitos celestiais matou 185.000 assírios em uma só noite. (2Rs 19:35) Quando irrompeu guerra no céu, Miguel e seus anjos lançaram Satanás e seus demônios para a vizinhança da terra. (Re 12:7-9, 12) Ademais, não haverá escapatória quando "os exércitos . . . no céu" seguirem o "Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores", ao trazer destruição sobre "a fera e os reis da terra, e os seus exércitos". (Re 19:14, 16, 19, 21) Ao mesmo tempo, porém, este poderoso exército invisível de Jeová dá proteção aos seus servos fiéis na terra. — 2Rs 6:17; Sal 34:7; 91:11; Da 6:22; Mt 18:10; At 12:7-10; He 1:13, 14.

EXÍLIO. Expulsão do próprio país nativo ou do lar por decreto de autoridade; no hebraico, literalmente, "partida". Caim, que matou seu irmão Abel, foi amaldiçoado por ser banido do solo para se tornar errante e fugitivo na terra. Ele havia sido lavrador, mas, depois disso, o solo não corresponderia ao cultivo por ele. — Gên 4:2, 3, 11-14.

Israel foi informado de que Jeová levaria a nação ao exílio, se ela se tornasse infiel ao pacto que fizera com ela por meio de Moisés. (De 28:36, 37, 64; 29:28) De modo que Deus era realmente a Autoridade que decretou o exílio do seu povo em diversos casos, embora permitisse que os exércitos de outras nações fossem seus instrumentos. Estas ocasiões foram: (1) O exílio de Israel por meio dos assírios (2Rs 15:29; 18:9-12); (2) o exílio de Judá em Babilônia (2Rs 25:8-11, 21); (3) o exílio judaico às mãos dos romanos (Lu 21:20-24).

Israel. Tiglate-Pileser III levou habitantes de Naftali ao exílio na Assíria, antes de terminar o domínio do Rei Peca, de Israel, por volta de 759 AEC. Rubenitas, gaditas e os da metade oriental da tribo de Manassés também foram levados pelo rei da Assíria, evidentemente na mesma época. (2Rs 15:29; 1Cr 5:4-6, 26) Salmaneser V sitiou mais tarde Samaria, e, depois de três anos, em 740 AEC, ou ele ou seu sucessor, Sargão II, deportou grande número dos habitantes e "trouxe gente de Babilônia, e de Cuta, e de Ava, e de Hamate, e de Sefarvaim, e os fez morar nas cidades de Samaria, em lugar dos filhos de Israel". — 2Rs 17:5, 6, 24.

Judá. Em 617 AEC, o Rei Nabucodonosor levou ao exílio em Babilônia a corte real e os principais homens de Judá. (2Rs 24:11-16) Cerca de dez anos mais tarde, em 607 AEC, na queda de Jerusalém diante de Babilônia, Nebuzaradã, chefe da guarda pessoal babilônica, levou a maior parte dos remanescentes e dos desertores dos judeus com ele para Babilônia, exílio do qual apenas um restante retornou 70 anos mais tarde. — 2Rs 25:11; Je 39:9; Is 10:21, 22; veja CATIVEIRO.

Após a queda de Babilônia, muitos dos judeus não retornaram à sua pátria, e, portanto, a dispersão continuou. No tempo de Assuero (Xerxes I, rei da Pérsia, que governou 127 distritos jurisdicionais, desde a Índia até a Etiópia), Hamã, levantando uma acusação contra eles, disse: "Há um povo disperso e separado entre os povos em todos os distritos jurisdicionais do teu domínio real." — Est 1:1; 3:8.

No Primeiro Século EC. No primeiro século EC havia colônias de judeus em Tessalônica, Atenas, Corinto, Éfeso, Roma e Babilônia, bem como em outras cidades. (At 17:1, 16, 17; 18:1, 4, 19) Muitos judeus moravam em Babilônia, onde Pedro pregou. (1Pe 5:13) Josefo registra que "um grande número" de judeus encontravam-se em Babilônia no primeiro século AEC. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XV, 14 [ii, 2]) Em 49, ou no começo de 50 EC, o imperador romano Cláudio baniu todos os judeus de Roma. Isto afetou também os judeus que se tornaram cristãos, entre eles Áquila e Priscila (Prisca), que Paulo encontrou em Corinto por volta de 50 EC, pouco depois do edito de Cláudio. (At 18:2) Eles acompanharam Paulo a Éfeso, e na época em que ele escreveu de Corinto a concristãos em Roma (c. 56 EC), eles evidentemente estavam de volta em Roma, porque Cláudio havia morrido e Nero governava então. Muitos dos outros judeus também tinham voltado a Roma. — At 18:18, 19; Ro 16:3, 7, 11.

No cumprimento da profecia de Jesus, em Lucas 21:24, o exército romano, sob Tito, em 70 EC, cercou Jerusalém, que então estava superlotada de judeus de muitos países, reunidos para a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados. Os romanos sitiaram e finalmente destruíram a cidade; 1.100.000 judeus pereceram e 97.000 foram levados cativos, sendo espalhados entre as nações.

ÊXODO. Libertação da nação de Israel da servidão no Egito. Jeová falou a Abraão (antes de 1933 AEC), depois de prometer que o descendente (lit.: a semente) de Abraão herdaria a terra, e disse: "Sabe com certeza que o teu descendente [literalmente: semente] se tornará residente forasteiro numa terra que não é sua; e eles terão de servir-lhes, e estes certamente os atribularão por quatrocentos anos. Mas eu estou julgando a nação à qual servirão, e depois sairão com muitos bens. . . . Na quarta geração, porém, voltarão para cá, porque ainda não se completou o erro dos amorreus." — Gên 15:13-16.

É evidente que o início do período de 400 anos de tribulação tinha de aguardar o aparecimento do prometido "descendente". Embora Abraão visitasse anteriormente o Egito durante uma época de fome em Canaã e tivesse algumas dificuldades com o Faraó ali, não tinha então filhos. (Gên 12:10-20) Não muito depois da declaração de Deus sobre os 400 anos de tribulação, quando Abraão tinha 86 anos (em 1932 AEC), sua escrava e concubina egípcia deu-lhe um filho, Ismael. Mas, foi 14 anos mais tarde (1918 AEC) que a esposa livre de Abraão, Sara, deu-lhe um filho, Isaque, e Deus designou este filho como aquele por meio de quem viria o Descendente (Semente) prometido. Todavia, ainda não chegara o tempo de Deus para dar a Abraão ou a seus descendentes a terra de Canaã, de modo que eles, como predito, eram 'residentes forasteiros numa terra que não era sua'. — Gên 16:15, 16; 21:2-5; He 11:13.

Tempo do Êxodo. Portanto, quando começaram os 400 anos de tribulação, e quando terminaram? A tradição judaica faz a contagem a partir do nascimento de Isaque. Mas a evidência real da tribulação só veio no dia em que Isaque foi desmamado. A evidência aponta para 1913 AEC, quando Isaque tinha cerca de 5 anos de idade, e Ismael, cerca de 19, como data do início da tribulação. Foi então que Ismael, "aquele nascido na maneira da carne começou a perseguir o nascido na maneira do espírito". (Gál 4:29) Ismael, que era parcialmente egípcio, com ciúme e ódio, começou a 'fazer caçoada' de Isaque, o menino, o que era muito mais do que apenas uma altercação entre crianças. (Gên 21:9) Outras traduções descrevem a ação de Ismael como "zombaria" ou "gracejos maliciosos". (Al; PIB n.) A tribulação do descendente de Abraão continuou durante a vida de Isaque. Embora Jeová abençoasse Isaque já como homem adulto, este, não obstante, foi perseguido pelos habitantes de Canaã e obrigado a se mudar de lugar em lugar, por causa das dificuldades que lhe causavam. (Gên 26:19-24, 27) Por fim, durante os anos posteriores da vida de Jacó, filho de Isaque, o predito "descendente" (ou semente) passou a morar no Egito. Com o tempo, eles passaram a ficar em escravidão.

Por meio de que evidência interna fixa a Bíblia a data do Êxodo de Israel do Egito?

O período de 400 anos de tribulação se estendeu assim de 1913 AEC até 1513 AEC. Foi também um período de graça, ou de tolerância divina, concedido aos cananeus, dos quais os amorreus eram uma das principais tribos. Até esta última data se completaria o erro deles; seria evidente que mereciam ser totalmente expulsos do país. Como passo preliminar desta expulsão, Deus voltaria sua atenção para o seu povo no Egito, libertando-o da servidão e encaminhando-o de volta à Terra da Promessa. — Gên 15:13-16.

O período de 430 anos. Outra maneira de calcular é fornecida na declaração de Êxodo 12:40, 41: "E a morada dos filhos de Israel, que haviam morado no Egito, foi de quatrocentos e trinta anos. E sucedeu, ao fim dos quatrocentos e trinta anos, sim, sucedeu neste mesmo dia que todos os exércitos de Jeová saíram da terra do Egito." A nota de rodapé, sobre Êxodo 12:40, diz a respeito da expressão "que haviam morado": "No hebr[aico], este verbo está no pl[ural]. O pronome relativo 'ashér, 'que', pode aplicar-se aos 'filhos de Israel', em vez de à 'morada'." A Septuaginta grega verte o versículo 40: "Mas a morada dos filhos de Israel [em] que eles haviam morado na terra do Egito e na terra de Canaã [era] de quatrocentos e trinta anos de duração." O Pentateuco Samaritano reza: ". . . na terra de Canaã e na terra do Egito." Todas estas versões indicam que o período de 430 anos abrangeu um tempo mais longo do que a morada dos israelitas no Egito.

O apóstolo Paulo mostra que este período de 430 anos (em Êx 12:40) começou na época da validação do pacto abraâmico e terminou com o Êxodo. Paulo diz: "Outrossim, digo o seguinte: Quanto ao pacto [abraâmico] anteriormente validado por Deus, a Lei, que veio à existência quatrocentos e trinta anos depois [no mesmo ano do Êxodo], não o invalida, de modo a abolir a promessa. . . . ao passo que Deus a deu bondosamente a Abraão por intermédio duma promessa." — Gál 3:16-18.

Quanto tempo decorreu então desde a validação do pacto abraâmico até os israelitas se mudarem para o Egito? Em Gênesis 12:4, 5, verificamos que Abraão tinha 75 anos de idade quando saiu de Harã e cruzou o Eufrates em caminho para Canaã, ocasião em que entrou em vigor o pacto abraâmico, a promessa que lhe fora feita anteriormente em Ur dos Caldeus. Daí, à base das referências genealógicas em Gênesis 12:4; 21:5; 25:26, e da declaração de Jacó, em Gênesis 47:9, pode-se ver que se passaram 215 anos entre a validação do pacto abraâmico e a mudança de Jacó, com a família, para o Egito. Isto mostra que os israelitas realmente moraram 215 anos no Egito (1728-1513 AEC). Esta cifra se harmoniza com outros dados cronológicos.

Desde o Êxodo até a construção do templo. Mais duas declarações cronológicas se harmonizam com este ponto de vista e o apoiam. Salomão iniciou a construção do templo no quarto ano do seu reinado (1034 AEC), e em 1 Reis 6:1 se declara que isto foi "no quadringentésimo octogésimo ano" depois do Êxodo (1513 AEC).

'Cerca de 450 anos.' Depois há o discurso que Paulo proferiu perante uma assistência em Antioquia da Pisídia, registrado em Atos 13:17-20, no qual ele menciona um período de "cerca de quatrocentos e cinquenta anos". Sua palestra sobre a história israelita começa com o tempo em que Deus "escolheu os nossos antepassados", quer dizer, desde o tempo em que Isaque realmente nasceu para ser o descendente (ou: semente) da promessa (1918 AEC). (O nascimento de Isaque definitivamente resolveu a questão, que estivera em dúvida por causa da esterilidade de Sara, quanto a quem Deus reconheceria como a semente.) Com este ponto de partida, Paulo passa então a recapitular os atos de Deus a favor da Sua nação escolhida, até o tempo em que Ele "deu-lhes juízes, até Samuel, o profeta". O período de "cerca de quatrocentos e cinquenta anos", portanto, evidentemente se estendeu desde o nascimento de Isaque, em 1918 AEC, até o ano 1467 AEC, ou 46 anos depois do Êxodo em 1513 AEC (sendo que 40 anos foram passados na peregrinação no ermo, e 6 anos na conquista da terra de Canaã). (De 2:7; Núm 9:1; 13:1, 2, 6; Jos 14:6, 7, 10) Isto perfaz um total que claramente se enquadra na cifra redonda do apóstolo, de "cerca de quatrocentos e cinquenta anos". Ambas as referências cronológicas, portanto, apoiam o ano de 1513 AEC como o ano do Êxodo e se harmonizam também com a cronologia bíblica a respeito dos reis e dos juízes de Israel. — Veja CRONOLOGIA (Desde 1943 AEC até o Êxodo).

Outros conceitos. Esta data do Êxodo, 1513 AEC, e, portanto, a invasão de Canaã e a queda de Jericó em 1473 AEC, 40 anos após o Êxodo, tem sido considerada por alguns críticos como muito cedo, sendo que eles situariam esses eventos mais adiante, até nos séculos 14 e mesmo 13 AEC. Todavia, embora alguns arqueólogos situem a queda de Jericó no século 13 AEC, não fazem isso à base de quaisquer antigos documentos históricos ou de testemunho neste respeito, mas sim à base de cerâmica encontrada. Tal cálculo de períodos, por meio de cerâmica, obviamente é especulativo, e isto é demonstrado por pesquisas feitas em Jericó. O que se achou ali levou a conclusões e datações contraditórias por parte dos arqueólogos. — Veja ARQUEOLOGIA (Diferenças na datação); CRONOLOGIA (Datação Arqueológica).

Algo similar se dá com os egiptólogos, havendo entre eles diferenças de séculos na datação das dinastias do Egito, tornando suas datas inúteis para qualquer período específico. Por isso, é impossível identificar com confiança o Faraó específico do Êxodo, alguns dizendo que foi Tutmés III, outros, Amenotep II, Ramsés II, e assim por diante, mas, em cada caso, numa base muito incerta.

Autenticidade do Relato do Êxodo. Uma das objeções levantadas ao relato do Êxodo tem sido que os Faraós do Egito nada registraram sobre o Êxodo. Todavia, isto não é algo incomum, porque reis de tempos mais modernos têm registrado apenas suas vitórias e não suas derrotas, e muitas vezes têm tentado apagar tudo o que era histórico, mas contrário à sua imagem pessoal ou nacionalista, ou à ideologia que tentam inculcar no povo. Mesmo em tempos modernos, governantes têm tentado obliterar as obras e a reputação de seus predecessores. Tudo o que era considerado embaraçoso ou desagradável foi omitido nas inscrições egípcias ou foi apagado o mais breve possível. Um exemplo disso é a retirada com cinzel do nome e da representação da Rainha Hatshepsut, por seu sucessor Tutmés III, num monumento de pedra descoberto em Deir al-Bahri, no Egito. — Veja Archaeology and Bible History (Arqueologia e História Bíblica), de J. P. Free, 1964, p. 98, e a foto ao lado da p. 94.

Mâneto, sacerdote egípcio que evidentemente odiava os judeus, escreveu na língua grega, por volta de 280 AEC. O historiador judeu Josefo cita Mâneto como dizendo que os antepassados dos judeus "entraram no Egito aos miríades e subjugaram os habitantes", e então Josefo diz que Mâneto "passa a admitir que eles foram depois expulsos do país, ocuparam o que agora é a Judeia, fundaram Jerusalém e construíram o templo". — Against Apion (Contra Apião), I, 228 (26).

Embora o relato de Mâneto, em geral, não seja muito histórico, é significativo que ele mencione os judeus estarem no Egito e saírem de lá, e que, em escritos adicionais, segundo Josefo, ele identifica Moisés com Osarsif, sacerdote egípcio, indicando que, embora monumentos egípcios não registrem este fato, os judeus estiveram no Egito e Moisés foi seu líder. Josefo fala de outro historiador egípcio, Queremon, que diz que José e Moisés foram expulsos do Egito ao mesmo tempo; Josefo menciona também um certo Lisímaco, que conta uma história similar. — Against Apion, I, 228, 238 (26); 288, 290 (32); 299 (33); 304-311 (34).

O Número Envolvido no Êxodo. Em Êxodo 12:37, apresenta-se o número redondo de 600.000 "varões vigorosos a pé", além de "pequeninos". No censo real feito cerca de um ano após o Êxodo, conforme registrado em Números 1:2, 3, 45, 46, eles somavam 603.550 varões de 20 anos para cima, além dos levitas (Núm 2:32, 33), dos quais havia 22.000 varões de um mês de idade para cima. (Núm 3:39) O termo hebraico geva·rím (varões vigorosos) não inclui mulheres. (Veja Je 30:6.) "Pequeninos" deriva da palavra hebraica taf, e refere-se a alguém andando com passinhos miúdos. (Veja Is 3:16.) A maioria desses "pequeninos" tinham de ser carregados ou pelo menos não podiam marchar durante a viagem inteira.

"Na quarta geração." Temos de lembrar-nos de que Jeová disse a Abraão que, na quarta geração, seus descendentes retornariam a Canaã. (Gên 15:16) Em todos os 430 anos, desde quando entrou em vigor o pacto abraâmico até o Êxodo, houve mais de quatro gerações, mesmo quando se considera a vida longa que se usufruía naquele tempo, segundo o registro. Mas foi apenas 215 anos que os israelitas estiveram realmente no Egito. As 'quatro gerações' após a entrada no Egito podem ser calculadas do seguinte modo, usando-se como exemplo apenas uma só tribo de Israel, a de Levi: (1) Levi, (2) Coate, (3) Anrão e (4) Moisés. — Êx 6:16, 18, 20.

O número dos que saíram do Egito, a saber, 600.000 varões vigorosos, além de mulheres e crianças, significa que pode ter havido mais de três milhões de pessoas. Embora alguns disputem isso, não é de forma alguma desarrazoado. Porque, embora houvesse apenas quatro gerações de Levi a Moisés, quando encarado do ponto de vista da duração de vida desses homens, que viveram muito, cada um deles pode ter visto diversas gerações ou diversas séries de filhos nascidos durante a sua vida. Mesmo na atualidade, um homem de 60 ou 70 anos frequentemente tem netos e até mesmo bisnetos (assim, quatro gerações vivendo contemporaneamente).

Aumento extraordinário. A narrativa relata: "E os filhos de Israel tornaram-se fecundos e começaram a pulular; e multiplicavam-se e tornavam-se mais fortes numa proporção extraordinariamente grande, de modo que o país ficou cheio deles." (Êx 1:7) De fato, tornaram-se tantos, que o rei do Egito disse: "Eis que o povo dos filhos de Israel é mais numeroso e mais forte do que nós." "Mas, quanto mais os oprimiam, tanto mais se multiplicavam e tanto mais se espalhavam, de modo que sentiam um pavor mórbido por causa dos filhos de Israel." (Êx 1:9, 12) Também, quando nos damos conta de que se praticavam a poligamia e o concubinato, e que alguns israelitas se casaram com egípcias, torna-se evidente como pôde ocorrer um aumento a ponto de haver uma população masculina adulta de 600.000.

Setenta almas da família imediata de Jacó desceram ao Egito ou nasceram ali pouco depois. (Gên 46) Se excluirmos o próprio Jacó, seus 12 filhos, sua filha Diná, sua neta Sera, os três filhos de Levi e possivelmente outros, do número de chefes de família que começaram a multiplicar-se no Egito, dos 70 nos restariam apenas 50. (Os filhos de Levi estão excluídos, visto que os levitas não foram contados entre o posterior número de 603.550.) Assim, partindo do número bem moderado de 50 chefes de família, e tomando em consideração a declaração bíblica de que "os filhos de Israel tornaram-se fecundos e começaram a pulular; e multiplicavam-se e tornavam-se mais fortes numa proporção extraordinariamente grande, de modo que o país ficou cheio deles" (Êx 1:7), podemos facilmente demonstrar como 600.000 homens em idade militar, entre 20 e 50 anos de idade, podiam estar vivendo na época do Êxodo. Considere o seguinte:

Em vista das famílias grandes que então havia e do desejo dos israelitas de ter filhos para cumprir a promessa de Deus, não é desarrazoado considerarmos no nosso cálculo que cada chefe de família, em média, tinha dez filhos (cerca da metade deles meninos), durante o período de vida entre 20 e 40 anos de idade. Encarando isso de modo conservador, poderíamos considerar que cada um dos originais 50 que se tornaram chefes de família teve filhos só 25 anos depois de sua entrada no Egito. E, visto que a morte ou outras circunstâncias podiam impedir que alguns filhos varões chegassem a ser filhos produtivos, ou podiam impedir terem eles filhos antes de atingirem o limite de 40 anos que fixamos, poderíamos também reduzir em 20 por cento o número de meninos nascidos que se tornavam pais. Expresso de modo simples, isto significa que, num período de 20 anos, apenas 200 filhos, em vez de 250, nascidos aos originais 50 chefes de família que calculamos, teriam seus próprios filhos.

O decreto de Faraó. Pode-se considerar mais um fator: O decreto de Faraó, de destruir todos os meninos logo ao nascerem. Este decreto parece ter tido pouco efeito e sido de pouca duração. Arão nasceu uns três anos antes de Moisés (ou em 1597 AEC), e, pelo visto, não vigorava então um decreto assim. A Bíblia declara definitivamente que o decreto de Faraó não teve muito êxito. As mulheres hebreias Sifrá e Puá, que provavelmente eram as principais parteiras, encarregadas das outras, não cumpriram a ordem do rei. Pelo visto, não instruíram as parteiras sob elas conforme se lhes ordenara. O resultado foi: "O povo tornava-se cada vez mais numeroso e tornava-se muito forte." Faraó ordenou então a todo o seu povo que lançasse todo menino israelita recém-nascido no rio Nilo. (Êx 1:15-22) Mas, parece que a população egípcia não odiava os hebreus tanto assim. Até mesmo a filha de Faraó resgatou Moisés. Por outro lado, Faraó talvez chegasse logo à conclusão de que perderia escravos valiosos se seu decreto continuasse em vigor. Sabemos que, mais tarde, o Faraó do Êxodo negou-se a deixar os hebreus sair pela mesmíssima razão de que ele os valorizava como trabalhadores escravos.

No entanto, para tornar nosso número ainda mais conservador, podemos reduzir em quase um terço os meninos que sobreviveram durante um período de cinco anos em que possivelmente vigorava o malsucedido edito de Faraó.

Um cálculo. Mesmo fazendo essas concessões, a população ainda aumentaria de maneira acelerada, e isso com a bênção de Deus. O número dos meninos nascidos durante cada período de cinco anos, a partir de 1563 AEC (isto é, 50 anos antes do Êxodo) e até 1533 (ou 20 anos antes do Êxodo) seria como segue:

AUMENTO DA POPULAÇÃO MASCULINA

A.E.C.		Filhos Nascidos
desde 1563 até 1558		47.350
desde 1558 até 1553		62.300
desde 1553 até 1548		81.800
desde 1548 até 1543		103.750
desde 1543 até 1538		133.200
desde 1538 até 1533		172.250
	Total	600.650*

*Teorética população masculina da idade de 20 a 50 anos, por ocasião do Êxodo (1513 AEC).

Pode-se notar que mesmo um pequeno ajuste no método do cálculo, como, por exemplo, aumentando em um o número dos filhos nascidos, em média, a cada pai, faria com que esta cifra ultrapassasse um milhão.

Quão significativo era o número dos que saíram do Egito sob a liderança de Moisés?

Além dos 600.000 varões vigorosos mencionados na Bíblia, havia um grande número de homens mais idosos, e um número ainda maior de mulheres e crianças, bem como "uma vasta mistura de gente" de não israelitas. (Êx 12:38) De modo que a população total saindo do Egito possivelmente era de mais de três milhões de pessoas. Não surpreende que a realeza egípcia detestasse perder um número tão grande de escravos. Perderam assim uma valiosa vantagem econômica.

O registro bíblico atesta que havia um temível número de homens combatentes: "Moabe ficou muito amedrontado por causa do povo, porque eram muitos; e Moabe começou a ter um pavor mórbido dos filhos de Israel." (Núm 22:3) O temor dos moabitas, naturalmente, baseava-se em parte no fato de que Jeová fizera tais maravilhas para Israel, mas também por causa do seu grande número, que não se podia dizer que fossem apenas alguns milhares. O número da população dos israelitas realmente mudou muito pouco durante a peregrinação no ermo, porque muitos morreram no ermo em resultado da infidelidade. — Núm 26:2-4, 51.

No censo feito pouco depois do Êxodo, os levitas foram contados em separado, e, de um mês de idade para cima, somaram 22.000. (Núm 3:39) Talvez se faça a pergunta por que, entre todas as outras 12 tribos, havia apenas 22.273 primogênitos masculinos de um mês de idade para cima. (Núm 3:43) Pode-se entender isso facilmente quando se reconhece que não se contavam os chefes de família, também que, por causa de poligamia, o homem talvez tivesse muitos filhos, mas apenas um primogênito, e que se contava o filho primogênito do homem e não o da mulher.

Questões Envolvidas. Segundo a promessa de Deus a Abraão, chegara Seu tempo devido para libertar a nação de Israel do "forno de fundição de ferro" do Egito. Jeová considerava Israel seu filho primogênito, em virtude da promessa que fizera a Abraão. Quando Jacó desceu ao Egito, junto com sua família, ele foi voluntariamente, mas os seus descendentes tornaram-se mais tarde escravos. Como nação, eram prezados por Jeová, como filho primogênito, e Jeová tinha o direito legal de libertá-los do Egito sem necessidade de pagar algo. — De 4:20; 14:1, 2; Êx 4:22; 19:5, 6.

Faraó, opondo-se ao propósito de Jeová, não quis perder a grande nação de trabalhadores escravos. Além disso, quando Moisés se dirigiu a ele, em nome de Jeová, com o pedido de mandar embora os israelitas para que celebrassem no ermo uma festividade para Jeová, Faraó respondeu: "Quem é Jeová, que eu deva obedecer à sua voz para mandar Israel embora? Não conheço Jeová." (Êx 5:2) Faraó considerava-se deus e não reconhecia a autoridade de Jeová, embora, sem dúvida, muitas vezes antes ouvisse os hebreus usar este nome. O povo de Jeová conhecia o nome Dele desde o começo; Abraão até mesmo dirigiu-se a Deus como Jeová. — Gên 2:4; 15:2.

O caso suscitado aqui pela atitude e pelas ações de Faraó levantou a questão da Divindade. Era então necessário que Jeová Deus se enaltecesse acima dos deuses do Egito, inclusive Faraó, que era reverenciado como deus. Fez isso por trazer sobre o Egito as Dez Pragas que resultaram no livramento de Israel. (Veja DEUSES E DEUSAS [As Dez Pragas].) Na época da última praga, a morte dos primogênitos, ordenou-se aos israelitas que estivessem preparados na refeição pascoal para marchar para fora do Egito. Embora saíssem às pressas, pressionados pelos egípcios, os quais disseram: "A bem dizer já estamos todos mortos!" eles não saíram de mãos vazias. (Êx 12:33) Levaram consigo suas manadas e seus rebanhos, sua massa de farinha antes de ser fermentada, e suas amassadeiras. Além disso, os egípcios concederam aos israelitas tudo o que pediram, dando-lhes objetos de prata e objetos de ouro, e capas. Incidentalmente, isso não era roubar os egípcios. Estes não tinham nenhum direito de escravizar Israel, de modo que deviam salários ao povo. — Êx 12:34-38.

Junto com Israel saiu "uma vasta mistura de gente". (Êx 12:38) Todos eram adoradores de Jeová, porque tinham de estar preparados para partir com Israel enquanto os egípcios enterravam seus mortos. Haviam observado a Páscoa, senão teriam estado ocupados com os ritos de luto e de sepultamento do Egito. Até certo ponto, este grupo talvez se compusesse daqueles que de algum modo eram aparentados com os israelitas por casamento. Por exemplo, muitos homens israelitas se haviam casado com mulheres egípcias, e mulheres israelitas se haviam casado com homens egípcios. Um caso pertinente é aquele do homem que foi morto no ermo por ultrajar o nome de Jeová. Ele era filho dum egípcio, e sua mãe era Selomite, da tribo de Dã. (Le 24:10, 11) Pode-se notar também que Jeová deu instruções permanentes a respeito dos requisitos para residentes forasteiros e escravos comerem a Páscoa quando Israel entrasse na Terra da Promessa. — Êx 12:25, 43-49.

Rota do Êxodo. Os israelitas devem ter estado em diversas localidades quando iniciaram a marcha para fora do Egito, não estando todos no começo num único grupo compacto. Alguns se juntaram talvez ao grupo principal em marcha ao longo do caminho. Ramessés, quer a cidade, quer um distrito deste nome, foi o ponto de partida, a primeira etapa indo até Sucote. (Êx 12:37) Alguns peritos sugerem que, embora Moisés iniciasse a marcha em Ramessés, os israelitas vieram de toda a terra de Gósen e tiveram seu ponto de encontro em Sucote. — MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 536.

Os israelitas haviam partido às pressas do Egito, instados pelos egípcios; não obstante, de modo algum estavam desorganizados: "Mas, foi em formação de batalha que os filhos de Israel subiram da terra do Egito", quer dizer, possivelmente igual a um exército de cinco agrupamentos: vanguarda, retaguarda, corpo principal e duas alas. Além da hábil liderança de Moisés, Jeová manifestou sua própria liderança, pelo menos já no acampamento de Etão, por providenciar uma coluna de nuvem para guiá-los de dia, tornando-se ela uma coluna de fogo para dar-lhes luz à noite. — Êx 13:18-22.

Pela rota mais curta, teria sido uma viagem por terra de uns 400 km, da vizinhança ao N de Mênfis até, digamos, Laquis, na Terra da Promessa. Mas, esta rota teria levado os israelitas ao longo do litoral do Mediterrâneo e pela terra dos filisteus. Em épocas anteriores, os antepassados deles, Abraão e Isaque, tiveram dificuldades com os filisteus. Deus, sabendo que eles talvez ficassem desanimados por um ataque filisteu, visto que não estavam familiarizados com a guerra, e também porque tinham suas famílias e rebanhos consigo, ordenou que Israel retrocedesse e acampasse diante de Pi-Hairote, entre Migdol e o mar, à vista de Baal-Zefom. Acamparam ali junto ao mar. — Êx 14:1, 2.

A rota exata seguida pelos israelitas de Ramessés até o Mar Vermelho não pode hoje ser fixada com exatidão, visto que os locais mencionados no relato não podem ser especificados. A maioria das obras de referência preferem mostrar que eles atravessaram o que hoje é conhecido como o uádi Tumilat, na região do Delta do Egito. Esta rota, porém, depende principalmente da identificação de Ramessés com um lugar na extremidade NE da região do Delta. Mas, conforme declara o professor de egiptologia John A. Wilson: "Infelizmente, os peritos não concordam com respeito à localização exata de Ramessés. Os faraós chamados Ramsés, especialmente Ramsés II, foram generosos em dar seu nome a cidades. Além disso, escavaram-se referências a esta cidade em cidades do Delta, as quais não podem seriamente reivindicar ser o lugar." — The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete), editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 4, p. 9.

Sugeriram-se diversos lugares, cada qual gozando, por algum tempo, de popularidade, mas depois foram descartados em favor de outra possibilidade. O lugar de Tânis (a moderna San el-Hagar), a 56 km ao SO de Port Said, cidade na costa do Mediterrâneo, é popular, mas também é Qantir, a uns 20 km mais ao S. Quanto ao primeiro lugar, Tânis, deve-se notar que um texto egípcio alista Tânis e (Per-)Ramessés como lugares distintos, não o mesmo, e que pelo menos parte do material desenterrado em Tânis apresenta evidência de proceder de outros lugares. De modo que John A. Wilson declara adicionalmente que "não há nenhuma garantia de que as inscrições que levam o nome de Ramessés sejam originárias dali". A respeito tanto de Tânis, como de Qantir, pode-se dizer que as inscrições relacionadas com Ramsés II, encontradas nestes lugares, apenas mostram uma associação com este Faraó, mas não provam que qualquer um destes lugares seja a Ramsés bíblica construída pelos israelitas como lugar de armazenagem, mesmo antes do nascimento de Moisés. (Êx 1:11) Conforme se mostra no artigo RAMSÉS, RAMESSÉS, o conceito de que Ramsés II seja o Faraó do Êxodo tem pouca evidência a seu favor.

A rota através do uádi Tumilat também tem tido boa recepção por causa da moderna teoria popular de que a travessia do Mar Vermelho realmente não ocorreu no Mar Vermelho, mas num lugar ao N dele. Alguns peritos até mesmo advogam a travessia no lago Serbonis, ou perto dele, na costa do Mediterrâneo, de modo que, depois de saírem do uádi Tumilat, os israelitas teriam virado para o N em direção à costa. Este conceito está em flagrante contradição com a declaração específica na Bíblia, de que o próprio Deus guiou os israelitas para longe da rota que os levaria à terra dos filisteus. (Êx 13:17, 18) Outros também favorecem uma rota através do uádi Tumilat, mas argumentam a favor duma travessia do "mar" na região dos lagos Amargos, ao N de Suez.

Mar Vermelho, não 'mar de canas'. Este último conceito baseia-se no argumento de que o termo hebraico yam-súf (traduzido por "Mar Vermelho") significa literalmente "mar de juncos, ou canas", e que, portanto, os israelitas atravessaram, não o braço do Mar Vermelho conhecido como golfo de Suez, mas um mar de canas, um lugar pantanoso, tal como a região dos lagos Amargos. Com esta afirmação, porém, eles não concordam com os tradutores da antiga Septuaginta grega, que traduziram yam-súf pelo nome grego e·ry·thrá thá·las·sa, que significa literalmente "Mar Vermelho". Muito mais importante, porém, é que tanto Lucas, que foi o escritor de Atos (citando Estêvão), como o apóstolo Paulo, usaram este mesmo nome grego ao relatarem os eventos do Êxodo. — At 7:36; He 11:29; veja MAR VERMELHO.

Além disso, não teria havido um grande milagre, se atravessassem um mero brejo, e os egípcios não poderiam ter sido "tragados" pelo Mar Vermelho quando "as águas empoladas passaram a cobri-los", de modo que desceram 'às profundidades como pedra'. (He 11:29; Êx 15:5) Este milagre estupendo não só foi mencionado mais tarde por Moisés e por Josué, mas o apóstolo Paulo disse que os israelitas foram batizados em Moisés, por meio da nuvem e do mar. Isto indica que estavam completamente cercados por água, havendo o mar em ambos os lados deles, e a nuvem acima e atrás deles. (1Co 10:1, 2) Indica também que o corpo de água era muito mais profundo do que algo que se poderia atravessar vadeando.

A rota do Êxodo depende na maior parte de dois fatores: onde se encontrava naquele tempo a capital egípcia, e a identificação do corpo de água onde ocorreu a travessia. Visto que as inspiradas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs usam a expressão "Mar Vermelho", há todos os motivos para se crer que este era o corpo de água que Israel atravessou. Quanto à capital egípcia, o lugar mais provável é Mênfis, sede principal do governo durante a maior parte da história do Egito. (Veja MÊNFIS.) Neste caso, o ponto de partida da marcha do Êxodo deve ter estado suficientemente perto de Mênfis para Moisés ser convocado perante Faraó, após a meia-noite da Páscoa, e para depois chegar a tempo a Ramessés, a fim de iniciar a marcha em direção a Sucote, antes de terminar o dia 14 de nisã. (Êx 12:29-31, 37, 41, 42) A tradição judaica mais antiga, registrada por Josefo, é no sentido de que a marcha começou a curta distância ao N de Mênfis. — Jewish Antiquities, (Antiguidades Judaicas) II, 315 (xv, 1).

A rota através do uádi Tumilat ficaria tanto ao N de Mênfis, que tornaria impraticáveis as circunstâncias acima mencionadas. Por esta razão, muitos dos mais antigos comentadores têm sugerido uma das bem conhecidas rotas de "peregrinos" que atravessam o Egito, tal como a rota el Haj, do Cairo até Suez (antigo Clysma, mais tarde Kolsum), na cabeceira do golfo de Suez.

Onde se partiu o Mar Vermelho para permitir a passagem de Israel?

Deve-se notar que, depois de chegarem à segunda etapa da sua viagem, Etão, "na extremidade do ermo", Deus ordenou a Moisés 'que voltassem e se acampassem diante de Pi-Hairote, junto ao mar'. Esta manobra faria Faraó acreditar que os israelitas estavam "vagueando em confusão". (Êx 13:20; 14:1-3) Os peritos que favorecem a rota el Haj como a mais provável salientam que o verbo hebraico para "voltar" é enfático e não significa apenas "desviar" ou "desviar-se", mas tem mais o sentido de retornar, ou pelo menos o de um desvio marcante. Eles sugerem que, ao chegarem a um ponto ao N da cabeceira do golfo de Suez, os israelitas inverteram sua linha de marcha e deram volta para o lado E de Jebel 'Ataqah, uma cadeia de montanhas beirando o lado O do golfo. Uma grande massa de gente, tal como os israelitas, não encontraria nenhum modo eficaz de sair rapidamente de tal posição, se fosse perseguida desde o N, e assim estaria encurralada, com o mar bloqueando seu caminho.

A tradição judaica do primeiro século EC apresenta a ideia de tal quadro. (Veja PI-HAIROTE.) No entanto, o que é mais importante é que tal situação se encaixa no quadro geral apresentado pela própria Bíblia, ao passo que os conceitos populares de muitos peritos não se encaixam. (Êx 14:9-16) Parece evidente que a travessia deve ter ocorrido suficientemente longe da cabeceira do golfo (ou braço ocidental do Mar Vermelho), para que as forças de Faraó não pudessem simplesmente contornar a extremidade do golfo e facilmente sobrevir aos israelitas do outro lado dele. — Êx 14:22, 23.

Faraó havia mudado de ideia sobre a soltura dos israelitas, assim que soubera da sua partida. Por certo, a perda de tal nação escrava significava um grave golpe econômico para o Egito. Não seria difícil os seus carros alcançarem esta nação inteira em marcha, especialmente visto ela ter 'voltado'. Então, animado com a ideia de que Israel vagueava confuso no ermo, foi confiante no encalço deles.

Com uma força-elite de 600 carros seletos, todos os outros carros do Egito levando guerreiros, e com seus cavalarianos e todas as suas forças militares, alcançou Israel em Pi-Hairote. — Êx 14:3-9.

Em sentido estratégico, a posição dos israelitas parecia muito ruim. Estavam evidentemente encurralados entre o mar e as montanhas, com os egípcios bloqueando o caminho de retorno. Nesta situação, aparentemente encurralados, o medo atingiu o coração dos israelitas e eles começaram a queixar-se de Moisés. Deus interveio então para proteger Israel por transferir a nuvem da vanguarda para a retaguarda. Dum lado, o dos egípcios, havia escuridão; doutro lado, iluminava a noite para Israel. Enquanto a nuvem impedia que os egípcios atacassem, Moisés, às ordens de Jeová, ergueu seu bastão, e as águas do mar se partiram, propiciando o leito seco do mar como caminho para Israel. — Êx 14:10-21.

Largura e profundidade do lugar da travessia. Visto que Israel atravessou o mar em uma só noite, dificilmente se pode presumir que as águas se partiram para formar só um canal estreito. Antes, o canal pode ter tido um quilômetro ou mais de largura. Tal grupo, mesmo em formação de marcha bem compacta, junto com quantas carroças tivessem, com sua bagagem e com seu gado, ainda que apertado, ocuparia talvez uma área de 8 km quadrados, ou mais. Portanto, parece que a abertura do mar permitiu aos israelitas atravessá-lo com uma frente bastante ampla. No caso de uma frente de 1,5 km, a extensão da coluna de israelitas provavelmente teria sido de 5 km ou mais. Se a frente foi de cerca de 2,5 km, a extensão talvez fosse de uns 3 km, ou mais. Tal coluna levaria várias horas para entrar no leito do mar e atravessá-lo. Embora não marchassem em pânico, mas mantivessem sua formação de batalha, sem dúvida avançavam com considerável pressa.

Se não fosse a nuvem, os egípcios teriam facilmente alcançado e massacrado muitos. (Êx 15:9) Depois de os israelitas terem entrado no mar e a nuvem atrás deles ter passado para a frente, para revelar isso aos egípcios, estes foram em perseguição deles. Isto novamente enfatiza a necessidade de uma considerável largura e extensão do leito seco do mar, porque a força militar de Faraó era grande. Determinada a causar destruição e a recapturar seus anteriores escravos, toda a força penetrou bem no leito do mar. Daí, durante a vigília da madrugada, que se estendia de cerca das 2 às 6 horas da manhã, Jeová olhou desde a nuvem e começou a lançar em confusão o acampamento dos egípcios, desprendendo as rodas dos carros deles. — Êx 14:24, 25.

Os israelitas, até a aproximação da manhã, chegaram a salvo à margem oriental do Mar Vermelho. Ordenou-se então a Moisés que estendesse a mão, a fim de que as águas voltassem sobre os egípcios. Então, "o mar começou a voltar ao seu estado normal", e os egípcios fugiram do encontro com ele. Isto também indica que as águas se haviam aberto amplamente, porque um canal estreito os teria sobrepujado imediatamente. Os egípcios fugiram das muralhas de água que se fechavam, seguindo para a margem ocidental, mas as águas continuavam a convergir até que sua profundidade cobriu totalmente todos os carros de guerra e os cavalarianos pertencentes às forças militares de Faraó; nem mesmo um só deles se deixou sobrar.

É óbvio que uma inundação tão sobrepujante teria sido impossível num brejo. Outrossim, num brejo raso, os cadáveres não seriam arrastados para a margem, assim como realmente aconteceu, a ponto de que "Israel chegou a ver os egípcios mortos à beira do mar". — Êx 14:22-31; MAPA e FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 537.

As águas "solidificaram-se". Segundo a descrição bíblica, as águas empoladas solidificaram-se para deixar Israel passar. (Êx 15:8) Esta palavra, "solidificaram-se", é usada na tradução da Bíblia do Centro Bíblico Católico (versão Maredsous) e na dos Missionários Capuchinhos, bem como na American Standard Version, na King James Version, e em outras. Conforme definido no Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Terceiro Novo Dicionário Internacional de Webster; 1981), solidificar-se significa "passar dum estado fluido para um estado sólido, pelo, ou como se fosse pelo, frio . . .: congelar . . .: tornar (um líquido) viscoso ou da consistência de geleia; coalhar, coagular". A palavra hebraica aqui traduzida por 'solidificar-se' é usada em Jó 10:10 com referência a coalhar leite. Portanto, não necessariamente significa que as paredes de água ficaram solidamente congeladas, mas que a consistência da substância solidificada talvez fosse como gelatina ou coalho. Não havia nada visível segurando as águas do Mar Vermelho em cada lado dos israelitas, de modo que a água tinha a aparência de estar solidificada, endurecida, coalhada ou engrossada, para poder ficar como parede em cada lado e não cair numa inundação sobre os israelitas, o que os destruiria. Foi assim que parecia a Moisés quando um forte vento L dividiu as águas e secou a bacia, de modo que ela não era lamacenta, nem congelada, mas podia facilmente ser atravessada pela multidão.

O caminho aberto no mar era bastante grande para que todos os israelitas, possivelmente ascendendo a três milhões, pudessem passar para as margens orientais até a manhã. Daí, as águas solidificadas começaram a ser soltas e a avançar empoladas de ambos os lados, sobrepujando os egípcios, ao passo que Israel, na margem oriental, presenciava a libertação, sem igual, por parte de Jeová, de toda uma nação das mãos duma potência mundial. Davam-se conta do cumprimento literal das palavras de Moisés: "Os egípcios que hoje deveras vedes, nunca mais vereis, não, nunca mais." — Êx 14:13.

Assim, por meio duma demonstração espetacular de poder, Jeová enalteceu seu nome e libertou Israel. Salvo na margem L do Mar Vermelho, Moisés liderou os filhos de Israel num cântico, ao passo que sua irmã Miriã, a profetisa, tomou um pandeiro na mão e liderou todas as mulheres com pandeiros e em danças, respondendo em cântico aos homens. (Êx 15:1, 20, 21) Realizara-se a total separação de Israel dos seus adversários. Ao saírem do Egito, não se permitiu que sofressem dano de homem ou animal; nenhum cão rosnou contra os israelitas ou agitou a língua contra eles. (Êx 11:7) Embora a narrativa de Êxodo não mencione que Faraó pessoalmente entrou no mar com as suas forças militares e foi destruído, o Salmo 136:15 declara que Jeová "se desembaraçou de Faraó e da sua força militar dentro do Mar Vermelho".

Típico de Eventos Posteriores. Ao tirar Israel do Egito, conforme prometido a Abraão, Deus considerou a nação de Israel como seu filho, assim como dissera a Faraó: 'Israel é meu primogênito.' (Êx 4:22) Mais tarde, Jeová disse: "Quando Israel era rapaz, então o amei, e do Egito chamei o meu filho." (Os 11:1) Esta referência ao Êxodo também foi uma profecia que teve cumprimento nos dias de Herodes, quando José e Maria retornaram do Egito com Jesus, após a morte de Herodes, e se estabeleceram em Nazaré. O historiador Mateus aplica a profecia de Oseias a esta ocorrência, dizendo a respeito de José: "Lá ficou até o falecimento de Herodes, para que se cumprisse o que fora falado por Jeová por intermédio do seu profeta, dizendo: 'Do Egito chamei o meu filho.'" — Mt 2:15.

O apóstolo Paulo alista o Êxodo entre as coisas que ele diz terem sobrevindo a Israel como exemplos ou tipos. (1Co 10:1, 2, 11) Portanto, parece ser simbólico de algo maior. O Israel natural é usado na Bíblia como simbólico do Israel espiritual, o Israel de Deus. (Gál 6:15, 16) Também, Moisés falou sobre o profeta a vir, que seria semelhante a ele. (De 18:18, 19) Os judeus esperavam que este fosse um grande líder e libertador. O apóstolo Pedro identifica Jesus Cristo como o Moisés Maior. (At 3:19-23) A libertação de Israel no Mar Vermelho e a destruição do exército egípcio, portanto, devem ser significativas da libertação do Israel espiritual dos seus inimigos do Egito simbólico, por um grande milagre, pelas mãos de Jesus Cristo. E assim como a obra realizada por Deus no Mar Vermelho resultou no enaltecimento do Seu nome, o cumprimento desses eventos típicos, numa realidade muito maior, darão fama muito maior e muito mais extensa ao nome de Jeová. — Êx 15:1.

ÊXODO, LIVRO DE. Segundo rolo do Pentateuco, também chamado de Segundo Livro de Moisés. Em hebraico, passou a ser conhecido como Shemóhth, "Nomes", por causa da sua frase inicial, We'él·leh shemóhth: "Ora, estes são os nomes." "Êxodo" é a forma latinizada do grego; significa "Saída; Partida", isto é, dos israelitas do Egito.

Este livro obviamente é uma continuação de Gênesis, começando com a expressão "ora" (literalmente: "e"), e depois alista novamente os nomes dos filhos de Jacó, tirados do registro mais completo de Gênesis 46:8-27. Êxodo foi escrito em 1512 AEC, um ano depois de os israelitas partirem do Egito e acamparem no ermo de Sinai. O livro abrange um período de 145 anos, desde a morte de José, em 1657 AEC, até a construção do tabernáculo, em 1512 AEC.

Escritor. Que Moisés escreveu Êxodo nunca foi questionado pelos judeus. As expressões egípcias usadas indicam um escritor contemporâneo daqueles tempos, e não um judeu nascido mais tarde.

Exatidão, Veracidade. Com respeito ao escritor de Êxodo, "pode-se discernir uma íntima familiaridade com o Egito Antigo. A posição dos egípcios com respeito aos estrangeiros — sua separação deles, todavia, a permissão para que ficassem em seu país, seu ódio especial por pastores, a suspeita quanto a serem espiões os estrangeiros vindos da Palestina — seu governo interno, seu caráter firmado, o poder do Rei, a influência dos Sacerdotes, as grandes obras, a utilização de estrangeiros na construção delas, o uso de tijolos, . . . e de tijolos com palha, . . . os feitores, a embalsamação dos cadáveres, a consequente importação de especiarias, . . . os prantos violentos, . . . os combates com cavalos e carros . . . — estes são apenas alguns dentre os muitos pontos que podem ser observados como marcando íntimo conhecimento dos modos e costumes egípcios por parte do autor do Pentateuco." — The Historical Evidences of the Truth of the Scripture Records (As Evidências Históricas da Verdade dos Registros das Escrituras), de George Rawlinson, 1862, pp. 290, 291.

Tem-se questionado o relato de a filha de Faraó banhar-se no Nilo (Êx 2:5), mas Heródoto (II, 35) diz (como também mostram monumentos antigos) que, no antigo Egito, as mulheres não sofriam nenhuma restrição. Também, os egípcios acreditavam que havia nas águas do Nilo uma virtude soberana. Às vezes, Faraó ia ao rio evidentemente com o fim de prestar adoração. Foi ali que ele pelo menos duas vezes foi contatado por Moisés, durante as Dez Pragas. — Êx 7:15; 8:20.

Quanto à ausência de evidência em monumentos egípcios, da permanência dos israelitas no Egito, isto não surpreende, visto que um estudo dos monumentos ali existentes revela que os egípcios não registravam assuntos desfavoráveis para eles. No entanto, um testemunho muito mais forte do que a evidência em monumentos de pedra é o monumento vivo da observância da Páscoa pelos judeus, os quais têm comemorado o Êxodo assim durante toda a sua história.

Há uma forte base para se aceitar a exatidão histórica e a narrativa geral apresentadas em Êxodo. Segundo Westcott e Hort, Jesus e os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs citam ou mencionam o Êxodo mais de 100 vezes. A integridade do escritor Moisés atesta a autenticidade do livro. Ele indica com a maior candura as suas próprias fraquezas, sua hesitação e seus erros, não atribuindo nada dos milagres, da liderança e da organização à sua própria perícia, embora fosse reconhecido pelos egípcios como alguém grande, e, em geral, fosse muito respeitado por Israel. — Êx 11:3; 3:10-12; 4:10-16.

A mão divina é revelada na permanência de Israel no Egito e no seu Êxodo. Dificilmente se poderia achar um lugar melhor para o rápido crescimento de Israel em se tornar uma poderosa nação. Se tivessem permanecido em Canaã, teriam ficado sujeitos a muitas guerras com os habitantes cananeus, enquanto que no território da primeira potência mundial, no tempo do seu apogeu, ficaram protegidos pelo poderio dela. Moravam na melhor parte do país, o que contribuiu para a sua saúde e a sua fertilidade, bem como até certo ponto para o seu desenvolvimento intelectual.

Mas, a sua situação no Egito não era ideal para o desenvolvimento moral e espiritual; tampouco era adequada para serem constituídos em nação sob domínio teocrático, com um sacerdócio para oferecer sacrifícios e para ensinar. Além disso, a promessa de Deus, de dar a terra de Canaã à semente

DESTAQUES DE ÊXODO

Registro de como Jeová libertou Israel da opressiva escravidão no Egito e o organizou em nação teocrática.

Escrito por Moisés em 1512 AEC, cerca de um ano após Israel ter partido do Egito.

Israel sofre tirânica escravidão no Egito. (1:1-3:1)

Por decreto real, os israelitas são feitos escravos, sob tirania; decreta-se a morte de todos os bebês do sexo masculino ao nascerem.

Moisés é adotado pela filha de Faraó e assim é poupado da morte, mas é ensinado pela sua própria mãe.

Moisés mata um egípcio opressivo, foge para Midiã, torna-se ali pastor.

Jeová liberta Israel pela mão de Moisés. (3:2-15:21)

Moisés, junto ao arbusto ardente, é comissionado como libertador, para falar e agir em nome de Jeová.

Ele retorna ao Egito; comparece com Arão perante Faraó, dizendo-lhe que Jeová mandou que enviasse Israel para adorá-Lo no ermo; Faraó se recusa e aumenta a opressão.

Jeová renova a promessa de libertar os israelitas e dar-lhes a terra de Canaã, aumentando assim o apreço deles pelo Seu nome Jeová.

Dez Pragas, anunciadas por Moisés e Arão, sobrevêm ao Egito; após as primeiras três, somente os egípcios sofrem as pragas; durante a décima, morrem todos os primogênitos do sexo masculino, tanto dos egípcios como dos seus animais, ao passo que Israel celebra a Páscoa.

Usando uma coluna de nuvem de dia e uma coluna de fogo de noite, Jeová guia Israel para fora do Egito; abre o Mar Vermelho para que atravessem em terra seca, depois afoga Faraó e seu exército, quando estes tentam cruzar o leito do mar em perseguição.

Jeová organiza Israel em nação teocrática. (15:22-40:38)

Fazem-se para Israel, no ermo, provisões de água potável, bem como de carne e maná; em conexão com a provisão do maná, institui-se o sábado.

À sugestão de Jetro, Moisés escolhe homens qualificados para servirem quais chefes, ajudando-o na obra de julgamento.

Junto ao monte Sinai, Jeová convida a nação a entrar numa relação pactuada com ele; ela concorda de bom grado; Jeová dá uma atemorizante demonstração da Sua glória.

Por meio de Moisés, dão-se os Dez Mandamentos e outras leis, especificando os requisitos de Jeová para Israel.

Faz-se o pacto da Lei sobre o sangue de animais sacrificados; o povo diz: “Tudo o que Jeová falou estamos dispostos a fazer e a ser obedientes.”

Deus dá instruções para a construção do tabernáculo e sua mobília, bem como sobre a confecção das vestimentas dos sacerdotes e a investidura do sacerdócio.

Enquanto Moisés está no monte Sinai, o povo passa a adorar um bezerro de ouro; Moisés destroça as tábuas de pedra que Deus lhe dera; os levitas se mostram leais; cerca de 3.000 idólatras são mortos.

Moisés vê a manifestação da glória de Jeová, ouve Deus declarar Seu nome.

Constrói-se o tabernáculo e sua mobília com ofertas voluntárias de materiais; o tabernáculo é erigido em 1.º de nisã de 1512 AEC, e Jeová manifesta a sua aprovação.

de Abraão, tinha de ser cumprida, e chegara o tempo de Deus para isso. Israel devia ser constituído em uma grande nação, tendo a Jeová por seu Rei. O livro de Êxodo relata como Jeová realizou este propósito. — Êx 15:13-21.

Rolos do Mar Morto. Dentre os manuscritos encontrados junto ao Mar Morto, 15 contêm fragmentos do livro de Êxodo. Um fragmento (4QEx[f]) tem sido datado como de cerca de 250 AEC. Dois dos fragmentos, que se crê datem do segundo ou do terceiro século AEC, foram escritos em antigos caracteres hebraicos, usados antes do exílio babilônico.

EXPANSÃO. A respeito do segundo período ou "dia" criativo, Gênesis 1:6-8 declara: "E Deus prosseguiu, dizendo: 'Venha a haver uma expansão [hebr.: ra·qí·a'] entre as águas e ocorra uma separação entre águas e águas.' Deus passou então a fazer a expansão e a fazer separação entre as águas que haviam de ficar debaixo da expansão e as águas que haviam de ficar por cima da expansão. E assim se deu. E Deus começou a chamar a expansão de Céu." Mais adiante, o registro fala de luzeiros aparecerem na "expansão dos céus", e mais tarde ainda, de criaturas voadoras voarem sobre a terra, "na face da expansão dos céus". — Gên 1:14, 15, 17, 20.

A Septuaginta grega usou a palavra ste·ré·o·ma (que significa "uma estrutura firme e sólida") para traduzir a hebraica ra·qí·a', e a Vulgata latina usou o termo latino firmamentum, que também transmite a ideia de algo sólido e firme. A versão Almeida, atualizada, e as traduções da Imprensa Bíblica Brasileira, do Centro Bíblico Católico, e a versão Matos Soares, bem como outras, também traduzem ra·qí·a' pela palavra "firmamento". No entanto, em inglês, a versão Rei Jaime, na margem, apresenta a alternativa de "expansão", e a Versão Padrão Americana apresenta "expansão" na nota de rodapé. Outras traduções apoiam tal tradução — "expansão" (Al; A Lei de Moisés e as "Haftarot"; An; Fn; NM; Ro; Yg); "expansión" (VM [espanhola]; "étendue [extensão ou expansão]" (Segond; Ostervald [francesa]).

Alguns se empenham em mostrar que o antigo conceito hebraico do universo incluía a ideia duma abóbada sólida, que se estendia sobre a terra, com buracos de eclusas pelos quais podia passar a chuva, e com estrelas fixadas dentro desta abóbada sólida, publicando-se diagramas de tal conceito em dicionários bíblicos e em algumas traduções da Bíblia. Comentando esta atitude, The International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional) declara: "Mas tal suposição realmente se baseia mais nas ideias prevalecentes na Europa durante a Era do Obscurantismo do que em quaisquer declarações reais do V[elho] T[estamento]." — Editada por J. Orr, 1960, Vol. I, p. 314.

Embora seja verdade que o radical (ra·qá'), de que deriva ra·qí·a', é regularmente usado no sentido de "achatar por bater" algo sólido, quer com a mão, quer com o pé ou com algum instrumento (veja Êx 39:3; Ez 6:11), em alguns casos não é raciocínio lógico excluir o uso figurado desta palavra. Assim, em Jó 37:18, Eliú pergunta a respeito de Deus: "Podes junto com ele achatar [tar·qí·a'] o céu nublado, duro como um espelho fundido?" Que isso não quer dizer o achatamento literal de alguma abóbada celestial sólida pode ser visto no fato de que a palavra "céu" deriva aqui duma palavra (shá·hhaq) que também é traduzida por "camada fina de pó" ou "nuvens" (Is 40:15; Sal 18:11), e em vista da qualidade nebulosa daquilo que é 'achatado', é evidente que o escritor bíblico compara o céu apenas figuradamente a um espelho de metal, cuja superfície brunida dá um reflexo brilhante. — Veja Da 12:3.

Assim, também, no caso da "expansão" produzida no segundo "dia" criativo, não se descreve nenhuma substância sólida como sendo achatada por bater, mas, antes, a criação dum espaço aberto, ou divisão, entre as águas que cobriam a terra e outras águas acima da terra. Descreve assim a formação da expansão atmosférica em volta da terra e indica que, em certa época, não havia nenhuma divisão clara ou um espaço aberto, mas que todo o globo se encontrava anteriormente envolto em vapor aquoso. Isto se harmoniza também com o raciocínio científico sobre os estágios primitivos da formação do planeta e com o conceito de que, em certa época, toda a água da terra existia em forma de vapor atmosférico por causa do extremo calor na superfície da terra naquele tempo.

Que os escritores hebreus da Bíblia não concebiam o céu como originalmente formado de metal brunido é evidente do aviso dado a Israel por meio de Moisés, de que, caso desobedecessem a Deus: "Teus céus por cima da tua cabeça têm de tornar-se em cobre e a terra debaixo de ti em ferro", descrevendo-se assim metaforicamente o efeito do intenso calor e da severa seca sobre o céu e a terra de Israel. — De 28:23, 24.

Similarmente, é óbvio que os antigos hebreus não sustentavam nenhum conceito pagão sobre a existência de "janelas" literais na arcada do céu, pelas quais descesse a chuva sobre a terra. De modo bem exato e científico, o escritor de Jó cita Eliú descrevendo o processo pelo qual se formam as nuvens de chuva, ao declarar, em Jó 36:27, 28: "Pois ele puxa para cima as gotas de água; filtram como chuva para a sua neblina, de modo que as nuvens [shehha·qím] pingam, destilam abundantemente sobre a humanidade." Do mesmo modo, a expressão "comportas ['arub·bóth] dos céus" indica claramente uma expressão figurada. — Compare isso com Gên 7:11; 2Rs 7:1, 2, 19; Mal 3:10; veja também Pr 3:20; Is 5:6; 45:8; Je 10:13.

Ezequiel, na sua visão dos arranjos celestes, descreve "a semelhança duma expansão igual à cintilação de gelo que mete medo", sobre a cabeça das quatro criaturas viventes. Este relato está cheio de expressões figuradas. — Ez 1:22-26; 10:1.

Embora a formação da expansão, ou atmosfera, ao redor da terra, não envolvesse um 'achatamento' de algo tão sólido como uma substância metálica, ainda assim deve ser lembrado que a mistura gasosa que compõe a atmosfera da terra é tão real como o solo e a água, e tem peso próprio (além de conter água e inúmeras partículas de materiais sólidos, tais como pó). O peso de todo o ar em volta da terra tem sido calculado em mais de 5.200.000.000.000.000 de toneladas métricas. (The World Book Encyclopedia [A Enciclopédia do Livro Mundial], 1987, Vol. 1, p. 156) A pressão atmosférica ao nível do mar é de cerca de 1 kg por cm². A atmosfera oferece também resistência, de modo que a maioria dos meteoros que atingem o imenso envoltório de ar em torno da terra se queimam pela fricção criada por ela. De modo que o sentido transmitido pela palavra hebraica ra·qí·a' certamente está em harmonia com os fatos conhecidos.

Nos Salmos diz-se que "a expansão" junto com "os céus" contam os trabalhos de Deus e declaram o Seu louvor. — Sal 19:1.

EXPIAÇÃO. A palavra "expiação", na aplicação bíblica, significa cobertura de pecados. Termos referentes à expiação aparecem muitas vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas, especialmente nos livros de Levítico e Números. Ka·fár é a palavra hebraica para fazer expiação, e é provável que originalmente significasse "cobrir", embora também se tenha sugerido "apagar".

O Homem Necessita de Expiação. O homem necessita que se cubram ou expiem os pecados, por causa do pecado herdado (1Rs 8:46; Sal 51:5; Ec 7:20; Ro 3:23), sendo que a responsabilidade por este não recai sobre Deus, mas sobre o próprio homem. (De 32:4, 5) Adão, que perdeu a vida eterna em perfeição humana, legou à sua prole o pecado e a morte (Ro 5:12), e os descendentes de Adão, portanto, vieram a estar sob a condenação à morte. Se a humanidade havia de recuperar a oportunidade de usufruir a vida eterna, então, em harmonia com o princípio jurídico que Jeová mais tarde incluiu na Lei mosaica, a saber, o igual pelo igual, se exigiria uma expiação exata pelo que Adão havia perdido. — De 19:21.

"Expiação", conforme usada na Bíblia, contém a ideia básica de "cobertura" ou "troca", e que aquilo que se dá em troca, ou que serve de "cobertura", por alguma coisa tem de ser seu igual. Assim, aquilo que compensa algo perdido, ou a que se perdeu o direito, tem de ser igual a esta outra coisa, cobrindo-a cabalmente como seu equivalente exato. Não pode haver excesso, nem falta. Nenhum humano imperfeito podia fornecer tal cobertura ou expiação para devolver a vida humana perfeita a alguém ou a todos os da humanidade. (Sal 49:7, 8) Para fazer expiação satisfatória por aquilo que Adão perdeu, teria de ser providenciada uma oferta pelo pecado com o valor exato de uma vida humana perfeita.

Jeová Deus instituiu um sistema de expiação entre os israelitas que tipificou uma provisão maior de expiação. É Jeová, não o homem, quem merece o crédito por determinar e revelar o meio de expiação para cobrir o pecado herdado e eximir da resultante condenação à morte.

Sacrifícios de Expiação. Segundo a orientação de Deus, os israelitas deviam oferecer sacrifícios como ofertas pelo pecado, a fim de fazer expiação. (Êx 29:36; Le 4:20) De significado especial era o anual Dia da Expiação, em que o sumo sacerdote de Israel oferecia sacrifícios de animais e fazia expiação para si mesmo, para os outros levitas e para as tribos não sacerdotais de Israel. (Le 16) Os animais sacrificiais tinham de ser imaculados, indicando a necessidade de perfeição por parte do seu antítipo. Também que a expiação é um assunto dispendioso, se evidencia em que se oferecia a vida da vítima, derramando-se seu sangue para fazer expiação. (Le 17:11) As ofertas pelo pecado feitas pelos israelitas e os diversos aspectos do anual Dia da Expiação, sem dúvida, incutiam na mente deles a seriedade da sua condição pecaminosa e da grande necessidade que tinham de uma expiação completa. Todavia, sacrifícios de animais não podiam inteiramente expiar o pecado humano, porque os animais são inferiores ao homem, o qual recebeu o domínio sobre eles. — Gên 1:28; Sal 8:4-8; He 10:1-4; Veja EXPIAÇÃO, DIA DA; OFERTAS.

Cumprimento em Cristo Jesus. As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs relacionam claramente a expiação completa dos pecados humanos com Jesus Cristo. Nele têm cumprimento os tipos e as sombras da Lei mosaica, visto que ele é Aquele que foi indicado pelos diversos sacrifícios de animais da

Lei. Jesus, como humano perfeito, sem pecados, foi a oferta pelo pecado de todos os descendentes de Adão, os quais por fim serão libertos do pecado e da morte herdados. (2Co 5:21) Cristo "ofereceu um só sacrifício pelos pecados, perpetuamente", (He 10:12), e ele é inquestionavelmente "o Cordeiro de Deus, que tira o pecado do mundo". (Jo 1:29, 36; 1Co 5:7; Re 5:12; 13:8; compare isso com Is 53:7.) O perdão depende do derramamento de sangue (He 9:22), e os cristãos que andam na luz têm a garantia de que "o sangue de Jesus, . . . Filho [de Deus], purifica-nos de todo o pecado". — 1Jo 1:7; He 9:13, 14; Re 1:5.

A vida humana perfeita de Jesus, oferecida em sacrifício, é a antitípica oferta pelo pecado. É a coisa valiosa que realiza a compra da humanidade, remindo-a do pecado e da morte herdados. (Tit 2:13, 14; He 2:9) O próprio Cristo declarou: "O Filho do homem veio, não para que se lhe ministrasse, mas para ministrar e dar a sua alma como resgate [gr.: lý·tron] em troca de muitos." (Mr 10:45; veja RESGATE.) Seu sacrifício expiou exatamente aquilo que o pecador Adão perdeu, visto que Jesus era perfeito, e, portanto, o equivalente de Adão antes de este primeiro homem pecar. — 1Ti 2:5, 6; Ef 1:7.

Tornada possível a reconciliação. O pecado humano causa uma separação entre Deus e o homem, porque Jeová Deus não aprova o pecado. A brecha entre o homem e seu Criador só podia ser sanada pelo cumprimento do requisito duma verdadeira "cobertura", ou expiação, para esse pecado. (Is 59:2; Hab 1:13; Ef 2:3) Mas, Jeová Deus tornou possível a reconciliação entre si mesmo e a humanidade pecadora por meio do homem perfeito Jesus Cristo. De modo que o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Exultemos também em Deus por intermédio de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo, por meio de quem temos agora recebido a reconciliação." (Ro 5:11; veja RECONCILIAÇÃO.) Para se obter o favor de Jeová Deus, é necessário aceitar a Sua provisão de reconciliação por meio de Jesus Cristo. Só assim é possível chegar a ter uma posição comparável à de Adão antes de ele pecar. O amor de Deus é revelado em ele tornar possível tal reconciliação. — Ro 5:6-10.

Justiça satisfeita por propiciação. Ainda assim, a justiça exigia uma satisfação. O homem, embora criado perfeito, decaiu deste estado por causa do pecado, e, assim, Adão e seus descendentes passaram a estar sob a condenação de Deus. A justiça e a fidelidade a princípios de justiça exigiram que Deus executasse a sentença da sua lei no desobediente Adão. Mas o amor induziu Deus a intencionar um arranjo substituto, pelo qual se satisfizesse a justiça, e, no entanto, sem violação da justiça, os descendentes arrependidos do pecador Adão pudessem ser perdoados e alcançar a paz com Deus. (Col 1:19-23) Por isso, Jeová "enviou seu Filho como sacrifício propiciatório pelos nossos pecados". (1Jo 4:10; He 2:17) Propiciação é aquilo que torna algo propício, ou favorável. O sacrifício propiciatório de Jesus remove o motivo de Deus condenar a criatura humana e torna possível conceder-lhe o favor e a misericórdia de Deus. Esta propiciação elimina a acusação de pecado e a resultante condenação à morte no caso do Israel espiritual e de todos os outros que se valem dela. — 1Jo 2:1, 2; Ro 6:23.

A ideia duma substituição tem destaque em certos textos bíblicos relacionados com a expiação. Por exemplo, Paulo observou que "Cristo morreu pelos nossos pecados, segundo as Escrituras" (1Co 15:3), e que "Cristo nos livrou da maldição da Lei por meio duma compra, por se tornar maldição em nosso lugar [os judeus], porque está escrito: 'Maldito é todo aquele pendurado num madeiro.'" (Gál 3:13; De 21:23) Pedro comentou: "Ele mesmo levou os nossos pecados no seu próprio corpo, no madeiro, a fim de que acabássemos com os pecados e vivêssemos para a justiça. E 'pelos seus vergões fostes sarados'." (1Pe 2:24; Is 53:5) Pedro escreveu também: "Cristo morreu uma vez para sempre quanto aos pecados, um justo pelos injustos, a fim de conduzir-vos a Deus." — 1Pe 3:18.

A provisão amorosa requer uma reação de fé. O amor tem sido exemplificado por Deus e por Cristo com relação à provisão da completa expiação pelos pecados humanos herdados. (Jo 3:16; Ro 8:32; 1Jo 3:16) Todavia, para alguém se beneficiar com isso, ele precisa estar realmente arrependido e exercer fé. Jeová não se agradou dos sacrifícios de Judá quando foram oferecidos sem a atitude correta. (Is 1:10-17) Deus enviou Cristo "como oferta de propiciação por intermédio da fé no seu sangue". (Ro 3:21-26) Aqueles que com fé aceitam a provisão de expiação feita por Deus por meio de Jesus Cristo podem obter a salvação; os que a rejeitam não a podem obter. (At 4:12) E, para todo aquele que 'pratica o pecado deliberadamente, depois de ter recebido o conhecimento exato da verdade, não há mais nenhum sacrifício pelos pecados, mas há uma certa expectativa terrível de julgamento'. — He 10:26-31.

EXPIAÇÃO, DIA DA. O Dia da Expiação (hebr.: yohm hak·kip·pu·rím, "dia das coberturas") era um dia de propiciação ou de se cobrirem os pecados, comemorado por Israel no dia 10 do sétimo mês do ano sagrado, ou em 10 de tisri. (Tisri corresponde aproximadamente a setembro-outubro.) Neste dia, o sumo sacerdote de Israel oferecia sacrifícios como cobertura de pecados para si mes-mo, para os outros levitas e para o povo. Era também a ocasião de se limpar o tabernáculo ou os posteriores templos dos efeitos poluidores do pecado.

O Dia da Expiação era uma ocasião de santo congresso e de jejum, conforme indicado pelo fato de que o povo devia então 'atribular a sua alma'. Este era o único jejum imposto pela Lei mosaica. Era também um sábado, uma ocasião de se abster dos trabalhos regulares. — Le 16:29-31; 23:26-32; Núm 29:7; At 27:9.

Apenas em um único dia do ano, no Dia da Expiação, se permitia ao sumo sacerdote entrar no compartimento do Santíssimo do tabernáculo ou do templo. (He 9:7; Le 16:2, 12, 14, 15) O ano do jubileu, quando ocorria, começava com o Dia da Expiação. — Le 25:9.

Arão, irmão de Moisés, era o sumo sacerdote de Israel quando esta observância foi instituída, no ermo da península do Sinai, no século 16 AEC. Aquilo que se lhe mandou fazer forneceu o modelo para as observâncias posteriores do Dia da Expiação. A visualização dos impressionantes eventos deste dia torna possível um melhor entendimento do que ele significava para os israelitas. Sem dúvida, eles se sentiram então induzidos à maior conscientização de sua pecaminosidade e da necessidade duma redenção, bem como a maior apreço da abundante misericórdia de Jeová em fazer este arranjo para cobrir os pecados deles, do ano que passara.

Aspectos do Dia da Expiação. Arão devia entrar no lugar santo com um novilho como oferta pelo pecado e com um carneiro como oferta queimada. (Le 16:3) No Dia da Expiação, ele deixava de lado suas vestes sacerdotais, banhava-se em água, e vestia-se de sagradas vestes de linho. (Le 16:4) A seguir, o sumo sacerdote tirava sortes sobre dois bodes (cabritinhos) exatamente iguais na sua condição sadia e imaculada, obtidos da assembleia dos filhos de Israel. (Le 16:5, 7) O sumo sacerdote tirava sortes sobre eles para determinar qual dos dois seria sacrificado para Jeová e qual seria solto no ermo, levando os pecados como o 'bode para Azazel'. (Le 16:8, 9; compare isso com 14:1-7; veja AZAZEL.) Daí, sacrificava o novilho como oferta pelo pecado para si mesmo e para a sua casa, que incluía toda a tribo de Levi, da qual sua casa fazia parte. (Le 16:6, 11) Depois tomava incenso perfumado e o porta-lume com brasas tiradas do altar e ia para dentro da cortina, entrando no Santíssimo. O incenso era queimado no compartimento mais recôndito, onde estava situada a arca do testemunho, estendendo-se a nuvem do incenso queimado por cima da tampa de ouro da Arca, em que havia dois querubins moldados em ouro. (Le 16:12, 13; Êx 25:17-22) Este ato preparava o caminho para Arão depois entrar de novo com segurança no Santíssimo.

Arão, ao retornar do Santíssimo, tomava um pouco do sangue do novilho, entrava neste compartimento com ele e espargia parte do sangue com o dedo sete vezes perante a tampa, no lado L. Assim se completava a expiação para o sacerdócio, que tornava os sacerdotes limpos e aptos para mediar entre Jeová e Seu povo. — Le 16:14.

O bode em que caiu a sorte "para Jeová" era sacrificado como oferta pelo pecado para o povo. (Le 16:8-10) O sumo sacerdote levava então o sangue do bode para Jeová ao Santíssimo, usando-o ali para fazer expiação para as 12 tribos não sacerdotais de Israel. De maneira similar ao que se fazia com o sangue do novilho, o sangue do bode era espargido "em direção à tampa e diante da tampa" da Arca. — Le 16:15.

Deste modo Arão fazia também expiação pelo lugar santo e pela tenda de reunião. Daí, tomando um pouco do sangue do novilho e do 'bode para Jeová', fazia expiação para o altar da oferta queimada, pondo um pouco deste sangue sobre os chifres do altar. Tinha também de "espargir um pouco do sangue sobre ele com o seu dedo, sete vezes, e purificá-lo e santificá-lo das impurezas dos filhos de Israel". — Le 16:16-20.

O sumo sacerdote voltava então sua atenção para o outro bode, o bode para Azazel. Punha ambas as mãos sobre a cabeça dele, confessava sobre ele "todos os erros dos filhos de Israel e todas as suas revoltas em todos os seus pecados", punha estes sobre a cabeça dele e então o enviava "ao ermo pela mão de um homem preparado". Deste modo, o bode levava os erros dos israelitas ao ermo, onde desaparecia. (Le 16:20-22) Depois, o homem que levara o bode embora tinha de lavar suas vestes e banhar-se em água, antes de reentrar no acampamento. — Le 16:26.

Arão entrava então na tenda de reunião, despia-se da roupa de linho, banhava-se e trajava a sua vestimenta costumeira. A seguir, oferecia sua oferta queimada e a oferta queimada do povo (usando os carneiros mencionados em Le 16:3, 5), fazendo expiação, e fazia a gordura da oferta pelo pecado fumegar sobre o altar. (Le 16:23-25) Jeová Deus sempre reivindicava para si a gordura dos sacrifícios, e os israelitas eram proibidos de comê-la. (Le 3:16, 17; 4:31) O que restava das carcaças do novilho e do bode da oferta pelo pecado era levado do pátio do tabernáculo para um lugar fora do acampamento, onde era queimado. Aquele que as queimava tinha de lavar suas vestes e banhar-se em água, após o que podia entrar no acampamento. (Le 16:27, 28) Sacrifícios adicionais daquele dia são mencionados em Números 29:7-11.

Cessação da Observância Legítima. Ao passo que os aderentes do judaísmo ainda celebram o Dia da Expiação, esta celebração tem pouca semelhança com a que Deus instituiu, pois eles não têm tabernáculo, nem altar, nem Arca do Pacto, não se fazem sacrifícios de novilhos e de bodes, e não há sacerdócio levítico. Os cristãos, porém, reconhecem que os servos de Jeová não se acham agora sob tal obrigação. (Ro 6:14; He 7:18, 19; Ef 2:11-16) Além disso, a destruição do templo de Jerusalém em 70 EC obrigou a cessação dos ofícios do verdadeiro sacerdócio levítico, e não há agora nenhum meio de se determinar quem poderia corretamente atuar como tais sacerdotes. The Encyclopedia Americana (A Enciclopédia Americana; 1956, Vol. XVII, p. 294) declara a respeito dos levitas: "Após a destruição do templo na dispersão, desapareceram da história, misturando-se com a multidão dos cativos espalhados pelo mundo romano."

Cumprimento Antitípico. Quando era apropriadamente observado, o anual Dia da Expiação, assim como outros aspectos da Lei mosaica, servia de quadro de algo muito maior. O exame cuidadoso desta celebração à luz das observações inspiradas do apóstolo Paulo mostra que Jesus Cristo e sua obra redentora a favor da humanidade foram tipificados pelo sumo sacerdote de Israel e pelos animais usados na cerimônia. Paulo, na sua carta aos hebreus, mostra que Jesus Cristo é o grande Sumo Sacerdote antitípico. (He 5:4-10) O apóstolo indica também que a entrada do sumo sacerdote no Santíssimo, em um dia no ano, com o sangue de animais sacrificiais, prefigurou a entrada de Jesus Cristo no próprio céu, com o seu próprio sangue, fazendo assim expiação por aqueles que exercem fé no seu sacrifício. Naturalmente, Cristo, não tendo pecado, não precisava oferecer um sacrifício por qualquer pecado pessoal, assim como fazia o sumo sacerdote de Israel. — He 9:11, 12, 24-28.

Arão sacrificava o novilho para os sacerdotes e para o restante da tribo de Levi, espargindo seu sangue no Santíssimo. (Le 16:11, 14) De forma comparável, Cristo apresentou o valor do seu sangue humano a Deus, no céu, onde podia ser aplicado em benefício daqueles que passariam a governar com ele quais sacerdotes e reis. (Re 14:1-4; 20:6) O bode para Jeová também era sacrificado e seu sangue espargido perante a Arca no Santíssimo, com o fim de beneficiar as tribos não sacerdotais de Israel. (Le 16:15) De modo similar, o único sacrifício de Jesus Cristo também beneficia a humanidade, além do Israel espiritual, sacerdotal. Eram necessários dois bodes, porque apenas um não podia servir de sacrifício e ainda ser usado para levar embora os pecados de Israel. Ambos os bodes eram mencionados como uma só oferta pelo pecado (Le 16:5) e eram tratados de modo similar até se lançar sorte sobre eles, o que indica que constituíam juntos um só símbolo. Jesus Cristo não somente foi sacrificado, mas também leva embora os pecados daqueles pelos quais morreu sacrificialmente.

O apóstolo Paulo demonstrou que, ao passo que não era possível que o sangue de touros e de bodes removesse pecados, Deus preparou para Jesus um corpo (que ele se mostrou disposto a sacrificar quando se apresentou para o batismo), e que, segundo a vontade divina, os seguidores de Cristo foram "santificados por intermédio da oferta do corpo de Jesus Cristo, uma vez para sempre". (He 10:1-10) Assim como aquilo que sobrava dos corpos do novilho e do bode oferecidos no Dia da Expiação era por fim queimado fora do acampamento de Israel, o apóstolo observa que Cristo sofreu (por ser pregado numa estaca) fora do portão de Jerusalém. — He 13:11, 12.

Portanto, é evidente que, embora o Dia da Expiação judaico não produzisse a eliminação completa e permanente do pecado, nem mesmo para Israel, os diversos aspectos daquela celebração anual tinham caráter típico. Prefiguravam a grandiosa expiação pelos pecados feita por Jesus Cristo, o Sumo Sacerdote confessado pelos cristãos. — He 3:1; veja EXPIAÇÃO; RESGATE.

EXPRESSÃO PROVERBIAL. O termo hebraico traduzido "expressão proverbial" ou "dito proverbial" (ma·shál), em geral, é considerado derivado dum radical que significa "ser semelhante" ou "ser comparável" (Sal 49:12), e, de fato, muitas expressões proverbiais usam símiles ou comparações. Alguns peritos relacionam o termo traduzido "expressão proverbial" com o verbo hebraico que significa "governar; dominar"; de modo que às vezes pode ser considerado a declaração dum governante, uma expressão que subentende poder, ou que indica superioridade no emprego da mente. Coerente com isso é que o Rei Salomão, conhecido pela sua sabedoria, podia falar 3.000 provérbios e registrou muitas dessas expressões proverbiais. — 1Rs 4:32.

Entre os israelitas havia expressões populares ou frequentemente usadas que eram cheias de significado por causa das circunstâncias que as cercavam. Em geral, essas expressões proverbiais eram declaradas de modo conciso. (1Sa 10:12) Nem todas, porém, expressavam conceitos corretos, e havia algumas das quais Jeová discordava especificamente. — Ez 12:22, 23; 18:2, 3.

Alguns ditados tornaram-se expressões comuns de zombaria ou desprezo para com certas pessoas. (Hab 2:6) Em tais casos dizia-se que mesmo o alvo do escárnio, quer pessoa, quer algo inanimado, era "expressão proverbial". Assim, os israelitas foram avisados de que, se deixassem de escutar a Jeová e de obedecer aos Seus mandamentos, tanto eles como o seu templo se tornariam uma expressão proverbial entre as nações. (De 28:15, 37; 1Rs 9:7; 2Cr 7:20) A atitude expressa para com uma nação que se tornou uma expressão proverbial é bem indicada na Bíblia nas declarações acompanhantes, que mostram que Israel se tornaria vitupério, alvo de caçoada, de troça, de humilhação e de escárnio. (Sal 44:13-15; Je 24:9) Aqueles que se tornavam uma expressão proverbial passavam assim a ser assunto de cantos de bebedores de bebida inebriante e alguém a quem se cuspia na face. (Sal 69:11, 12; Jó 17:6) É evidente que aquele que se tornava uma expressão proverbial ficava assim reduzido a uma condição bem baixa.

Nem todas as expressões proverbiais eram declaradas em uma ou duas sentenças curtas, incisivas. No capítulo 14 de Isaías está registrada uma expressão mais extensa, retratando vividamente e com comparações acertadas os efeitos desastrosos do orgulho do rei de Babilônia. Com sarcasmo mordaz, expõe ao ridículo aquele que se considerava o "brilhante, filho da alva".

Quando a símile ou comparação numa expressão proverbial de início era um pouco obscura ou intrigante, também podia ser chamada de enigma. (Sal 78:2) Isto se deu com aquela que Ezequiel foi inspirado a dizer a Israel, na qual comparou o proceder desta nação em relação com Babilônia e o Egito a uma videira plantada por uma águia, e que mais tarde procurava avidamente alcançar outra. — Ez 17:2-18.

Alguns ditos proverbiais, tais como os de Jó, foram expressos em estilo poético. (Jó 27:1; 29:1) As ideias que Jó foi inspirado a expressar não foram assentadas no estilo conciso característico da maioria dos provérbios, mas foram elaboradas em poemas altamente instrutivos, cheios de linguagem figurada.

Deus fez também com que Balaão proferisse uma série de ditos proverbiais, e estes também foram assentados por escrito na forma de poesia. (Núm 23:7, 18; 24:3, 15, 20, 21, 23) Longe de expressar zombaria para com Israel, nestes ditos proverbiais, Balaão 'abençoou-o até o limite', embora profetizasse calamidades para outros povos. (Núm 23:11) O aspecto proverbial, aqui, não se deve a alguma repetição popular do que Balaão disse, nem porque suas declarações fossem expressões concisas de sabedoria. Antes, foram chamados de ditos proverbiais por causa da força e do rico significado daquilo que se disse, junto com seu uso de uma variedade de semelhanças e comparações, em algumas das suas declarações.

EXPULSÃO. Excomunhão ou desassociação judicial de infratores, que assim deixam de ser membros ou associados de uma comunidade ou organização. No caso de sociedades religiosas, é um princípio e um direito inerentes nelas, e é análoga aos poderes de pena capital, de banimento e de exclusão do rol de membros, exercidos por entidades políticas ou municipais. Na congregação de Deus é exercida para manter a pureza doutrinal e moral da organização. O exercício deste poder é necessário para a continuação da existência da organização e especialmente da congregação cristã. A congregação tem de permanecer pura e manter o favor de Deus, a fim de ser usada por ele e de representá-lo. Senão, Deus expulsaria ou deceparia a congregação inteira. — Re 2:5; 1Co 5:5, 6.

A Ação de Jeová. Jeová Deus, em numerosos casos, recorreu à expulsão ou desassociação. Sentenciou Adão à morte, e expulsou tanto a ele como a sua esposa Eva do jardim do Éden. (Gên 3:19, 23, 24) Caim foi banido e tornou-se errante e fugitivo na terra. (Gên 4:11, 14, 16) Os anjos que pecaram foram lançados no Tártaro, uma condição de densa escuridão, na qual são reservados para o julgamento. (2Pe 2:4) Vinte e três mil fornicadores foram decepados de Israel em um único dia. (1Co 10:8) Acã foi morto às ordens de Jeová por furtar algo devotado a Jeová. (Jos 7:15, 20, 21, 25) Corá, o levita, junto com Datã e Abirão, da tribo de Rubem, foram decepados por motivo de rebelião, e Miriã ficou atacada de lepra e por fim poderia ter morrido nesta condição, se Moisés não tivesse suplicado por ela. Mesmo assim, ela foi expulsa do acampamento de Israel, ficando de quarentena por sete dias. — Núm 16:27, 32, 33, 35; 12:10, 13-15.

Sob a Lei Mosaica. Alguém podia ser decepado, isto é, morto, por violações graves ou deliberadas da lei de Deus dada por meio de Moisés. (Le 7:27; Núm 15:30, 31) A apostasia, a idolatria, o adultério, comer sangue e o assassinato estavam entre os delitos que acarretavam esta penalidade. — De 13:12-18; Le 20:10; 17:14; Núm 35:31.

Sob a Lei, para se executar a penalidade do decepamento, precisava haver evidência apresentada pela boca de pelo menos duas testemunhas. (De 19:15) Exigia-se que estas testemunhas fossem os primeiros a apedrejar o culpado. (De 17:7) Isto demonstraria seu zelo pela lei de Deus e pela pureza da congregação de Israel, e também serviria para dissuadir testemunho falso, descuidado ou precipitado.

O Sinédrio e as sinagogas. Durante o ministério terrestre de Jesus, as sinagogas serviam de tribunais para julgar violadores da lei judaica. O Sinédrio era o tribunal de maior instância. Sob o domínio romano, os judeus não tinham o grau de autoridade que haviam usufruído sob o governo teocrático. Mesmo quando o Sinédrio julgava alguém merecedor da morte, nem sempre podia executar a sentença de morte, por causa das restrições impostas pelos romanos. As sinagogas judaicas tinham um sistema de excomunhão, ou de desassociação, de três passos ou três nomes. O primeiro passo era a pena de nid·dúy, de duração relativamente curta, inicialmente de apenas 30 dias. Quem sofria esta pena era proibido de usufruir certos privilégios. Podia ir ao templo, mas ali sofria certas restrições, e todos, fora da sua própria família, tinham ordens de se manter afastados 4 côvados (c. 2 m) dele. O segundo passo era hhé·rem, que significava algo devotado a Deus ou proscrito. Era um julgamento mais severo. O ofensor não podia ensinar, nem ser ensinado, em companhia de outros, nem podia fazer transações comerciais além da compra das necessidades da vida. Todavia, não era totalmente expulso da organização judaica, e havia uma possibilidade de ele voltar. Finalmente, havia sham·mat·tá', seu decepamento total da congregação. Alguns acham que as últimas duas formas de excomunhão não tinham diferença entre si.

Alguém expulso como iníquo, decepado inteiramente, era considerado merecedor da morte, embora os judeus talvez não tivessem a autoridade de executá-lo. No entanto, a forma de decepamento que usavam era uma arma muito poderosa na comunidade judaica. Jesus predisse que seus seguidores seriam expulsos da sinagoga. (Jo 16:2) O medo de serem expulsos, ou "excomungados", impediu alguns judeus, até mesmo governantes, de confessar Jesus. (Jo 9:22, n.; 12:42) Um exemplo de tal ação por parte da sinagoga foi o caso do cego curado, que falou em favor de Jesus. — Jo 9:34.

Durante a época do seu ministério terrestre, Jesus deu instruções sobre o proceder a ser adotado caso se cometesse contra alguém um pecado grave, mas o pecado fosse de natureza tal que, se corretamente resolvido, não precisaria envolver a congregação judaica. (Mt 18:15-17) Incentivou fazer-se um esforço sério para ajudar o transgressor, ao mesmo tempo também resguardando esta congregação de persistentes pecadores. A única congregação de Deus em existência naquele tempo era a congregação de Israel. 'Falar à congregação' não significava que a nação inteira, ou mesmo todos os judeus em determinada comunidade, julgavam o transgressor. Esta responsabilidade cabia a anciãos dos judeus. (Mt 5:22) O transgressor que se negasse a acatar mesmo esses responsáveis, devia ser considerado "apenas como homem das nações e como cobrador de impostos", cuja associação os judeus evitavam. — Veja At 10:28.

Congregação Cristã. As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, baseadas nos princípios das Escrituras Hebraicas, por ordem expressa e por precedente, autorizam a expulsão, ou desassociação, da congregação cristã. A congregação, por exercer esta autoridade dada por Deus, mantém-se limpa e em boa situação perante Deus. O apóstolo Paulo, com a autoridade de que fora investido, ordenou a expulsão dum fornicador incestuoso, que tomara a esposa de seu pai. (1Co 5:5, 11, 13) Exerceu também contra Himeneu e Alexandre a autoridade de os desassociar. (1Ti 1:19, 20) Diótrefes, porém, evidentemente tentava usar de modo errado a desassociação. — 3Jo 9, 10.

Algumas das transgressões que podem fazer com que alguém seja desassociado da congregação cristã são fornicação, adultério, homossexualismo, ganância, extorsão, furto, mentira, bebedice, injúria, espiritismo, assassinato, idolatria, apostasia e causar divisões na congregação. (1Co 5:9-13; 6:9, 10; Tit 3:10, 11; Re 21:8) Aquele que promove uma seita é misericordiosamente advertido uma primeira e uma segunda vez, antes de se tomar a ação de desassociá-lo. Na congregação cristã, aplica-se o princípio estipulado na Lei, a saber, que duas ou três testemunhas têm de confirmar a evidência contra o acusado. (1Ti 5:19) Os condenados de uma prática de pecado são repreendidos biblicamente perante os "espectadores", por exemplo, aqueles que deram testemunho a respeito da conduta pecaminosa, para que todos estes também tenham temor salutar de tal pecado. — 1Ti 5:20; veja REPREENSÃO.

A congregação cristã é também admoestada pelas Escrituras a parar de se associar socialmente com aqueles que são desordeiros e que não andam corretamente, mas que não são considerados merecedores duma expulsão total. Paulo escreveu à congregação tessalonicense a respeito de tais: "Parai de associar-vos com ele, para que fique envergonhado. Contudo, não o considereis como inimigo, mas continuai a admoestá-lo como irmão." — 2Te 3:6, 11, 13-15.

No entanto, a respeito daquele que era cristão, mas que mais tarde repudiou a congregação cristã ou foi expulso dela, o apóstolo Paulo ordenou: 'Cessai de ter convivência com' tal; e o apóstolo João escreveu: "Nunca o recebais nos vossos lares, nem o cumprimenteis." — 1Co 5:11; 2Jo 9, 10.

Os expulsos podem ser novamente recebidos na congregação, se manifestarem sincero arrependimento. (2Co 2:5-8) Isto também é uma proteção para a congregação, impedindo que ela seja sobrepujada por Satanás, passando do extremo de tolerar a transgressão para o outro extremo de se tornar dura e implacável. — 2Co 2:10, 11.

Quanto à expulsão de demônios, veja ESPIRITISMO; POSSESSÃO DEMONÍACA.

EXTORSÃO. Ato ou prática de tirar ou obter algo de alguém não disposto ou relutante, pelo uso ilegal da intimidação, quer pelo emprego de força ou de ameaças, quer por outro uso indevido de poder. O sentido básico da palavra grega traduzida por 'extorsor' (hár·pax) é "arrebatador". (1Co 5:10, Int) A Bíblia adverte repetidas vezes contra buscar obter lucro injusto, especialmente por parte daqueles que ocupam posições de responsabilidade ou oficiais. — Êx 18:21; Pr 1:19; 15:27.

No entanto, na Palestina, sob o domínio romano, cobradores de impostos, judeus, frequentemente eram culpados de extorsão. Sua posição lhes oferecia amplas oportunidades de enriquecer-se injustamente (e, sem dúvida, também a seus amos romanos) às custas do povo. Jesus, numa ilustração, talvez aludisse a isso quando falou sobre um fariseu autojusto, que orava ao lado de um cobrador de impostos e que se elogiava perante Deus como não sendo extorsor. (Lu 18:11) Os cobradores de impostos que vieram a João, o Batizador, perguntar sobre o que deviam fazer foram aconselhados: "Não reclameis mais do que a taxa do imposto." — Lu 3:13.

Quando Zaqueu, rico cobrador de impostos, acolheu Jesus como convidado na sua casa, ele se arrependeu e se desviou do seu proceder mau, dizendo: "O que for que eu extorqui de qualquer um por meio de acusação falsa, eu restituo quatro vezes mais." (Lu 19:2, 8; veja ACUSAÇÃO.) A Lei, porém, exigia em tais casos de arrependimento e de admissão de culpa apenas a devolução de 120 por cento ao defraudado. — Le 6:2-5.

A extorsão está alistada nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs junto com a fornicação, o adultério, a idolatria, a ganância, o furto, a bebedice, a injúria e o homossexualismo, como coisas que impedem que aquele que faz delas uma prática entre no Reino de Deus. O apóstolo Paulo, escrevendo à congregação em Corinto, disse que anteriormente alguns deles haviam feito tais coisas, mas foram então lavados. Portanto, embora não pudessem evitar algum contato com tal tipo de pessoas no mundo, deviam deixar de se associar com alguém assim, que afirmasse ser "irmão", e tinham de removê-lo da congregação. — 1Co 5:9-11; 6:9-11.

A atitude cristã para com pagar algo extorquido em forma de suborno é ilustrada no caso do apóstolo Paulo. O governador romano Félix tentou extorquir dinheiro de Paulo por prolongar por dois anos a detenção dele na prisão. Paulo apercebeu-se disso, mas não ofereceu nada a Félix. Por fim, Félix foi sucedido no cargo pelo Governador Festo. — At 24:26, 27.

EZBAI. Veja ESBAI.

EZEM. Lugar da Judeia dado à tribo de Simeão como cidade encravada. (Jos 15:21, 29; 19:1, 3; 1Cr 4:24, 28, 29) Alguns peritos o identificam com Umm el-ʽAzem, a uns 25 km ao SSE de Berseba.

EZEQUIAS [Jeová Fortalece].

1. Rei de Judá, 745-717 AEC. Pelo que parece, tornou-se rei quando seu pai Acaz morreu, no "terceiro ano de Oseias", rei de Israel (talvez significando o terceiro ano de Oseias como rei tributário sob Tiglate-Pileser III), contando seu reinado oficialmente a partir de nisã do ano seguinte (745 AEC). (2Rs 18:1) Profetas contemporâneos do reinado de Ezequias eram Isaías, Oseias e Miqueias. (Is 1:1; Os 1:1; Miq 1:1) Ezequias se destacou como rei que "se apegava a Jeová", fazendo o que era direito aos olhos de Jeová e seguindo Seus mandamentos. Desde o início do seu reinado, ele se mostrou zeloso a favor da promoção da adoração verdadeira, não somente em Judá, mas em todo o território de Israel. Por ele seguir os caminhos de Jeová, assim como fizera Davi, seu antepassado, podia-se dizer de Ezequias que "depois dele não se mostrou haver nenhum igual a ele entre todos os reis de Judá, mesmo aqueles que vieram a ser antes dele". Por causa disso, "Jeová mostrou estar com ele". — 2Rs 18:3-7.

Contribuições Literárias. Ezequias também é conhecido por seu interesse em compilar alguns dos Provérbios de Salomão, conforme reza a introdução da seção agora conhecida como capítulos 25 a 29 de Provérbios: "Estes são provérbios de Salomão transcritos pelos homens de Ezequias, rei de Judá." (Pr 25:1) Ele escreveu o cântico de agradecimento registrado em Isaías 38:10-20, depois que Jeová o curou da sua doença mortífera. Nele menciona "minhas seleções para instrumentos de cordas". (V. 20) Alguns acham que Ezequias escreveu o Salmo 119. Se isso for correto, então parece que este salmo foi escrito quando Ezequias era príncipe, não sendo ainda rei.

Situação na Época da Ascensão de Ezequias. Quando Ezequias ascendeu ao trono, o reino de Judá estava no desfavor de Deus, pois Acaz, pai de Ezequias, havia cometido muitos atos detestáveis perante Jeová e havia permitido que a adoração de deuses falsos grassasse sem restrições em Judá. Por isso, Jeová permitira que aquela terra sofresse às mãos dos seus inimigos, especialmente da segunda potência mundial, a Assíria. Acaz havia despojado o templo e o palácio, para dar um suborno ao rei da Assíria. Pior ainda, havia retalhado os utensílios do templo, fechado as portas dele e feito altares para si mesmo "em cada esquina de Jerusalém", oferecendo sacrifícios a outros deuses. Acaz, por aliança, havia colocado seu reino sob a proteção do rei da Assíria durante o seu reinado. (2Rs 16:7-9; 2Cr 28:24, 25) Mas Ezequias, logo cedo no seu reinado, "passou a rebelar-se contra o rei da Assíria". — 2Rs 18:7.

Por ocasião da ascensão de Ezequias ao trono de Judá, o reino setentrional de Israel, das dez tribos, estava em condições ainda piores. Por causa dos graves pecados de Israel, Jeová permitira que sofresse duros apertos, tornando-se tributário da Assíria, e não demoraria muito até que a Assíria tragasse Israel e levasse seu povo ao exílio. — 2Rs 17:5-23.

Seu Zelo pela Adoração Verdadeira. Ezequias demonstrou seu zelo pela adoração de Jeová assim que ascendeu ao trono, à idade de 25 anos. Seu primeiro ato foi reabrir e consertar o templo. Daí, convocando os sacerdotes e os levitas, disse-lhes: "Está agora achegado ao meu coração concluir um pacto com Jeová, o Deus de Israel." Era um pacto de fidelidade, como se o pacto da Lei, embora ainda vigente, mas negligenciado, fosse inaugurado de novo em Judá. Com grande vigor, passou a organizar os levitas nos seus serviços, e restabeleceu os arranjos para instrumentos musicais e para o canto de louvores. Era nisã, o mês de se celebrar a Páscoa, mas o templo, bem como os sacerdotes e os levitas, estavam impuros. Até o dia 16 de nisã já se limpara o templo e se restauraram os seus utensílios. Teve de se fazer então uma expiação especial por todo o Israel. Primeiro, os príncipes trouxeram sacrifícios, ofertas pelo pecado para o reino, o santuário e o povo, seguidos por milhares de ofertas queimadas apresentadas pelo povo. — 2Cr 29:1-36.

Visto que a impureza do povo impedia sua celebração da Páscoa na época normal, Ezequias valeu-se da lei que permitia os impuros celebrarem a Páscoa um mês mais tarde. Convocou não somente Judá, mas também Israel, por meio de cartas enviadas por correios ao país inteiro, desde Berseba até Dã. Os correios se confrontaram com motejos por parte de muitos; mas alguns, especialmente de Aser, Manassés e Zebulão, humilharam-se a ponto de comparecer, bem como alguns de Efraim e de Issacar. Além disso, estavam presentes muitos adoradores não israelitas de Jeová. Provavelmente, era difícil para alguns, do reino setentrional, que estavam a favor da adoração verdadeira, estar presentes. Eles, iguais aos mensageiros, enfrentariam oposição e zombaria, visto que o reino das dez tribos estava num estado decadente, mergulhado na adoração falsa e fustigado pela ameaça assíria. — 2Cr 30:1-20; Núm 9:10-13.

Após a Páscoa, celebrou-se a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados por sete dias, com uma alegria acompanhante tão grande, que a congregação inteira decidiu prolongá-la por mais sete dias. Mesmo em tempos tão perigosos, prevaleceu a bênção de Jeová, de modo que "veio a haver grande alegria em Jerusalém, pois desde os dias de Salomão, filho de Davi, rei de Israel, não houve nada igual a isso em Jerusalém". — 2Cr 30:21-27.

Que se tratava duma genuína restauração e reavivamento da adoração verdadeira e não apenas uma reunião emocional passageira se vê no que se seguiu. Antes de retornarem para casa, os celebrantes saíram e destroçaram as colunas sagradas, demoliram os altos e os altares, e cortaram os postes sagrados em todo o Judá e Benjamim, e até mesmo em Efraim e Manassés. (2Cr 31:1) Ezequias deu o exemplo por esmiuçar a serpente de cobre que Moisés tinha feito, porque o povo fizera dela um ídolo, fazendo fumaça sacrificial a ela. (2Rs 18:4) Depois da grande festividade, Ezequias assegurou a continuação da adoração verdadeira por organizar as turmas sacerdotais e providenciar o sustento dos serviços no templo; exortou à obediência à Lei com respeito aos dízimos e as contribuições das primícias aos levitas e aos sacerdotes, o que o povo apoiou de todo o coração. — 2Cr 31:2-12.

Aumenta a Pressão Assíria. Durante aqueles tempos estrênuos, quando a Assíria arrasava tudo em seu caminho, Ezequias confiava em Jeová, o Deus de Israel. Rebelou-se contra o rei da Assíria e golpeou as cidades filisteias, que evidentemente se haviam aliado à Assíria. — 2Rs 18:7, 8.

Foi no quarto ano de Ezequias (742 AEC), que Salmaneser, rei da Assíria, iniciou o sítio de Samaria. Samaria foi tomada no sexto ano de Ezequias (740 AEC). O povo do reino das dez tribos foi deportado, e os assírios trouxeram outros para ocupar o país. (2Rs 18:9-12) Isto deixou o reino de Judá, representando o governo teocrático e a adoração verdadeira de Deus, como uma pequena ilha cercada por inimigos hostis.

Senaqueribe, filho de Sargão II, teve a ambição de acrescentar aos seus troféus de guerra a conquista de Jerusalém, especialmente visto que Ezequias se havia retirado da aliança fei-ta com a Assíria pelo seu pai, o Rei Acaz. No 14.º ano do reinado de Ezequias (732 AEC), Senaqueribe veio "contra todas as cidades fortificadas de Judá e passou a tomá-las". Ezequias ofereceu pagamento a Senaqueribe, a fim de salvar a ameaçada cidade de Jerusalém, exigindo então Senaqueribe a enorme soma de 300 talentos de prata (c. US$ 1.982.000) e 30 talentos de ouro (c. US$ 11.560.000). Para pagar esta soma, Ezequias se viu obrigado a dar toda a prata encontrada no templo e no tesouro real, além dos metais preciosos com que o próprio Ezequias fizera revestir as portas e as ombreiras do templo. Isto satisfez o rei da Assíria, mas apenas temporariamente. — 2Rs 18:13-16.

Obras de Construção e de Engenharia. Em face do iminente ataque do cobiçoso Senaqueribe, Ezequias demonstrou sabedoria e estratégia militar. Tapou todas as fontes e mananciais de água fora da cidade de Jerusalém, a fim de que, no caso dum sítio, os assírios sofressem de escassez de água. Reforçou as fortificações da cidade e "fez armas de arremesso em abundância, bem como escudos". Mas, não depositava confiança neste equipamento militar, porque, ao reunir os chefes militares e o povo, incentivou-os, dizendo: "Sede corajosos e fortes. Não tenhais medo nem fiqueis aterrorizados por causa do rei da Assíria e por causa de toda a massa de gente com ele; pois conosco há mais do que os que estão com ele. Com ele há um braço de carne, mas conosco está Jeová, nosso Deus, para nos ajudar e para travar as nossas batalhas." — 2Cr 32:1-8.

Uma das mais notáveis façanhas de engenharia dos tempos antigos foi o aqueduto de Ezequias. Ia desde a fonte de Giom, ao L da parte setentrional da Cidade de Davi, num trajeto bastante irregular, por uns 533 m, até o reservatório de água de Siloé, no vale do Tiropeom, abaixo da Cidade de Davi, mas dentro duma nova muralha acrescentada à parte meridional da cidade. (2Rs 20:20; 2Cr 32:30) Os arqueólogos encontraram uma inscrição em antigos caracteres hebraicos na parede do túnel estreito que tinha a altura média de 1,8 m. A inscrição reza, em parte: "E esta foi a maneira em que foi perfurado: — Enquanto [. . .] ainda (havia) [. . .] machado(s), cada homem em direção ao seu companheiro, e quando ainda faltavam três côvados para serem perfurados, [ouviu-se] a voz dum homem chamando seu companheiro, pois havia uma sobreposição na rocha à direita [e à esquerda]. E quando o túnel foi aberto, os cavouqueiros cortaram (a rocha), cada homem em direção ao seu companheiro, machado contra machado; e a água fluiu da fonte em direção ao reservatório por 1.200 côvados, e a altura da rocha acima da(s) cabeça(s) dos cavouqueiros era de 100 côvados." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. B. Pritchard, 1974, p. 321) De modo que o túnel foi cortado na rocha de ambas as extremidades, encontrando-se no meio — uma verdadeira façanha de engenharia.

Fracasso de Senaqueribe em Jerusalém. Conforme as expectativas de Ezequias, Senaqueribe decidiu atacar Jerusalém. Enquanto Senaqueribe, com seu exército, sitiava a bem fortificada cidade de Laquis, ele enviou uma parte do seu exército, junto com uma representação de chefes militares, para exigir a capitulação de Jerusalém. O porta-voz do grupo era Rabsaqué (que não era seu nome, mas seu título militar), que falava fluentemente o hebraico. Em voz alta, ele zombava de Ezequias e escarnecia de Jeová, gabando-se de que Jeová não podia livrar Jerusalém do rei da Assíria, assim como tampouco os deuses das outras nações puderam salvar as terras dos seus adoradores. — 2Rs 18:13-35; 2Cr 32:9-15; Is 36:2-20.

Ezequias ficou muito aflito, mas continuou a confiar em Jeová e a apelar para Ele no templo, enviando também alguns dos cabeças do povo ao profeta Isaías. A resposta de Isaías, da parte de Jeová, foi que Senaqueribe ouviria uma notícia e voltaria à sua própria terra, onde por fim seria morto. (2Rs 19:1-7; Is 37:1-7) No ínterim, Senaqueribe havia partido de Laquis para Libna, onde soube que Tiraca, rei da Etiópia, saíra para lutar contra ele. Não obstante, Senaqueribe enviou por mensageiros cartas a Ezequias, continuando com suas ameaças e escarnecendo de Jeová, o Deus de Israel. Ao receber as cartas muito vituperadoras, Ezequias as estendeu perante Jeová, o qual novamente lhe respondeu por meio de Isaías, escarnecendo por sua vez de Senaqueribe e assegurando que os assírios não entrariam em Jerusalém. Jeová disse: "Eu certamente defenderei esta cidade para a salvar por minha própria causa e por causa de Davi, meu servo." — 2Rs 19:8-34; Is 37:8-35.

Durante a noite, Jeová enviou seu anjo, o qual destruiu 185.000 da elite das tropas de Senaqueribe, "todo homem poderoso, valente, e todo líder e chefe no acampamento do rei da Assíria, de modo que ele retornou com face envergonhada à sua própria terra". Assim se eliminou eficazmente a ameaça de Senaqueribe contra Jerusalém. Mais tarde, "sucedeu que, curvando-se ele na casa de Nisroque, seu deus, Adrameleque e Sarezer, seus próprios filhos, golpearam-no com a espada". — 2Cr 32:21; Is 37:36-38.

Descobriram-se inscrições descrevendo a derrota infligida por Senaqueribe às forças etíopes.

Rezam: "Quanto a Ezequias, o judeu, ele não se submeteu ao meu jugo, eu sitiei 46 de suas cidades fortes . . . e conquistei[-as] . . . A ele mesmo fiz prisioneiro em Jerusalém, sua residência real, como a um pássaro numa gaiola." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 288) Ele não afirma ter capturado Jerusalém. Isto apoia o relato bíblico da revolta de Ezequias contra a Assíria e o fracasso de Senaqueribe quanto a tomar Jerusalém. Segundo o costume das inscrições de reis pagãos, de se enaltecerem, Senaqueribe, nesta inscrição, exagera o montante de prata pago por Ezequias como tendo sido 800 talentos, em contraste com os 300 da Bíblia.

Prolongamento Milagroso da Vida de Ezequias. Por volta do tempo em que Senaqueribe fez as suas ameaças contra Jerusalém, Ezequias padeceu dum furúnculo maligno. Foi instruído pelo profeta Isaías a ordenar seus assuntos em preparação para o seu falecimento. Na época, Ezequias ainda não tinha filho varão, e, portanto, parecia que a linhagem real de Davi estava em perigo de ser interrompida. Ezequias orou a Jeová fervorosamente, com lágrimas, em vista do que Jeová mandou Isaías de volta para informar Ezequias que se lhe acrescentariam 15 anos de vida. Deu-se um sinal milagroso, fazendo-se com que a sombra causada pelo sol retrocedesse dez degraus na "escada de Acaz". (Veja SOL.) No terceiro ano depois disso, Ezequias tornou-se pai dum filho chamado Manassés, o qual mais tarde lhe sucedeu no trono. — 2Rs 20:1-11, 21; 21:1; Is 38:1-8, 21.

Erro e Arrependimento de Ezequias. O registro bíblico declara que "Ezequias nada retribuiu de acordo com o benefício que se lhe concedeu, porque o seu coração se ensoberbeceu e veio a haver indignação contra ele e contra Judá e Jerusalém". (2Cr 32:25) A Bíblia não diz se a sua soberba estava, ou não, relacionada com o seu ato imprudente de mostrar todo o tesouro da sua casa e todo o seu domínio aos mensageiros do rei babilônio Berodaque-Baladã (Merodaque-Baladã), enviados a Ezequias depois de ele se ter restabelecido da sua doença. Ezequias talvez mostrasse toda esta riqueza para impressionar o rei de Babilônia como possível aliado contra o rei da Assíria. Naturalmente, isto podia estimular a cobiça dos babilônios. O profeta Isaías era contra qualquer aliança com a secular inimiga de Deus, Babilônia, ou de alguma forma de dependência dela. Quando Isaías soube como Ezequias havia tratado os mensageiros babilônios, ele proferiu a profecia inspirada por Jeová, de que os babilônios, com o tempo, levariam tudo para Babilônia, inclusive alguns dos descendentes de Ezequias. No entanto, Ezequias humilhou-se e Deus permitiu bondosamente que a calamidade não ocorresse nos seus dias. — 2Rs 20:12-19; 2Cr 32:26, 31; Is 39:1-8.

Nos dias do profeta Jeremias, alguns dos cabeças do povo, em Jerusalém, falaram favoravelmente sobre Ezequias, por ele ter dado atenção a Miqueias, de Moresete, profeta de Jeová. — Je 26:17-19.

2. Antepassado do profeta Sofonias, possivelmente o Rei Ezequias. — Sof 1:1.

3. Homem de Israel, cujos descendentes retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel. Provavelmente não se tratava do próprio Rei Ezequias. (Esd 2:1, 2, 16; Ne 7:6, 7, 21) Pode ter sido um descendente deste Ezequias que era um dos cabeças do povo que atestaram com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 17.

EZEQUIEL [Deus Fortalece]. Filho de Buzi, um sacerdote. Ele estava entre os cativos levados a Babilônia por Nabucodonosor, junto com Joaquim, em 617 AEC. Suas primeiras visões da parte de Deus lhe vieram no "trigésimo ano, no quarto mês, no quinto dia do mês", no "quinto ano do exílio do Rei Joaquim". Ele profetizou aos judeus que moravam junto ao rio Quebar, que alguns eruditos modernos creem ter sido um dos grandes canais babilônicos. O "trigésimo ano" parece referir-se à idade de Ezequiel. Ele começou com seus deveres como profeta neste tempo. — Ez 1:1-3.

Sendo de família sacerdotal, sem dúvida estava bem familiarizado com o templo, os arranjos deste e todas as atividades realizadas nele, bem como era versado na Lei. É provável que Ezequiel igualmente conhecesse bem a Jeremias e suas profecias, porque Jeremias era profeta em Jerusalém durante a juventude de Ezequiel. Por outro lado, também, Ezequiel tivera a vantagem de viver em Judá durante parte do reinado do justo Rei Josias, que destruiu os altares e as imagens entalhadas de Baal, empreendeu consertar o templo e intensificou sua reforma a favor da adoração pura em Judá, quando o livro da Lei (evidentemente um original escrito por Moisés) foi encontrado no templo. — 2Cr 34.

Antes de Babilônia destruir Jerusalém, em que lugares estratégicos fez Jeová que estivessem seus profetas?

A vida profética de Ezequiel foi contemporânea de Jeremias e Daniel. Jeremias serviu como profeta de Deus para os judeus em Jerusalém e Judá, entrando em contato com os reis corruptos de Judá. Daniel, que se encontrava na corte de Babilônia e mais tarde da Medo-Pérsia, recebeu profecias a respeito da sucessão de potências mundiais e a derrota delas às mãos do Reino de Deus. Ezequiel serviu entre o povo judeu e seus cabeças em Babilônia, e prosseguiu ali a obra dos profetas. Assim, enquanto os judeus em Jerusalém tinham o benefício do templo com o seu sumo sacerdote e o profeta sacerdotal Jeremias, os em Babilônia não foram abandonados por Jeová. Ezequiel era profeta de Deus para eles, e embora não realizasse serviços sacrificiais, estava ali como conselheiro e instrutor na lei de Deus.

Havia também uma íntima relação entre a obra profética de Jeremias e a de Ezequiel, visto que ambos refutavam, e tentavam tirar da mente dos judeus em Jerusalém e em Babilônia, a ideia de que Deus ia acabar logo com o domínio babilônico e que Jerusalém não ia cair. Jeremias até mesmo mandou uma carta aos cativos na terra de Babilônia, dizendo-lhes que se estabelecessem e estivessem em paz em Babilônia, porque tinha de passar um período de 70 anos antes de eles serem libertos. Sem dúvida, Ezequiel soube das palavras desta carta. Também, talvez ouvisse a leitura do livro que Jeremias mandou mais tarde, predizendo a queda de Babilônia. — Je 29; 51:59-64.

Profetizou a um Povo "Obstinado". Os cativos em Babilônia estavam numa situação melhor perante Jeová do que os judeus remanescentes em Judá, conforme ilustrado pelas cestas de figos bons e de figos ruins, que Jeremias viu. (Je 24) No entanto, mesmo assim, Ezequiel não recebera nenhuma tarefa fácil, porque os israelitas cativos também faziam parte da casa rebelde. Conforme se disse a Ezequiel, ele 'estava morando entre os obstinados, e coisas que o picavam, e entre escorpiões'. (Ez 2:6) À ordem de Jeová, ele passou a morar entre os exilados em Tel-Abibe, junto ao rio Quebar. (Ez 3:4, 15) Embora os judeus fossem exilados, moravam nas suas próprias casas. (Je 29:5) Puderam continuar organizados em sentido religioso, pelo menos até certo ponto. Os anciãos de Judá puderam visitar Ezequiel diversas vezes. (Ez 8:1; 14:1; 20:1) Mesmo ao chegar o tempo da restauração, no fim dos 70 anos, muitos destes judeus não quiseram deixar Babilônia.

Um dos motivos da falta de desejo de retornar, pelo menos por parte de alguns dos judeus em Babilônia, talvez fosse o materialismo. Os arquivos duma grande casa comercial, "Murashu e Filhos", foram descobertos por uma expedição norte-americana no lugar dum canal do Eufrates perto de Nipur, que alguns peritos acreditam ter ficado perto de Quebar. Inscrições encontradas ali contêm diversos nomes judaicos, o que indica que os israelitas haviam ficado bem estabelecidos e que um bom número deles havia ficado envolvido nas atividades comerciais de Babilônia.

Morte da Esposa. Ezequiel diz que recebeu sua comissão junto ao rio Quebar no quinto ano do exílio do Rei Joaquim (ou em 613 AEC). Ele profetizou pelo menos por 22 anos, até cerca de 591 AEC, sendo sua última profecia datada do 27.º ano do exílio. (Ez 29:17) Pelo visto, Ezequiel era feliz no casamento. Daí, Jeová disse-lhe: "Filho do homem, eis que te tiro a coisa desejável aos teus olhos por meio dum golpe." (Ez 24:16) A esposa dele talvez tivesse sido infiel a ele ou a Jeová, mas, não importa qual o motivo da sua morte, ordenou-se a Ezequiel que não chorasse, mas que suspirasse sem palavras. Mandou-se que Ezequiel usasse sua cobertura para a cabeça e que não adotasse nenhum sinal ou evidência de luto. Isto se destinava realmente a ser um sinal para os israelitas ali no cativeiro babilônico, de que Jeová profanaria seu santuário de que os israelitas tanto se orgulhavam, e que, contrário à esperança deles, Jerusalém seria destruída. — Ez 24:17-27.

"Vigia." Ezequiel recebeu sua comissão de profetizar de modo similar a Isaías. Recebeu uma visão espantosa de Jeová no seu trono, assistido por criaturas viventes com quatro faces e quatro asas, acompanhadas por rodas dentro de rodas, que se moviam ao lado das criaturas viventes. Jeová falou então, dirigindo-se a Ezequiel como "filho do homem", para lembrar ao profeta que ele era apenas homem terreno. (Ez caps. 1, 2; compare isso com Is 6.) Ele foi enviado como vigia para os da casa de Israel, para avisá-los do seu caminho iníquo. Embora estes fossem de coração muito duro, ainda assim era necessário dar o aviso, para que soubessem que Jeová tinha um profeta no meio deles. Mesmo negando-se eles a escutar, se ele deixasse de avisá-los com as palavras que Jeová lhe deu, ele seria responsabilizado pela vida deles — teria culpa de sangue. — Ez 3:7, 17, 18; 2:4, 5; 33:2-9.

Encenações Vivas e Ilustrações. Ezequiel frequentemente profetizava por meio de encenações, apresentações de ações simbólicas, bem como por visões, alegorias ou parábolas. Uma das encenações mais notáveis foi a de respectivamente 390 e 40 dias do sítio de Jerusalém, que contém uma importante profecia sobre o tempo. Exigia obediência, paciência e muita fé executar estes avisos pictóricos perante um povo sem fé e zombador. Durante o sítio de Jerusalém, Ezequiel voltou sua atenção profética para as nações pagãs que odiavam Israel, e que participariam na queda de Israel e se alegrariam por causa disso; ele descreveu a punição que Jeová lhes daria. Após a queda de Jerusalém, o tom das profecias de Ezequiel mudou. Depois duma forte condenação dos gananciosos pastores de Israel, e de Seir, ele dirigiu suas atividades proféticas para a edificação da fé na promessa de Deus, de que Israel seria reavivado, reajuntado e unido, e que o glorioso pastoreio do "servo Davi", de Jeová, os abençoaria por tempo indefinido sob um pacto de paz. (Ez 37) Ezequiel fornece então uma descrição pormenorizada do templo reconstruído, segundo a "planta" que lhe foi dada por Jeová. Este templo visionário era profético de algo no futuro bem distante, porque não se construiu realmente tal templo. — Ez 40-48.

Semelhanças com a Obra de Jesus Cristo. Há semelhanças nas obras feitas por Ezequiel e por Jesus. Tanto Ezequiel como Jesus tiveram de confrontar-se com um povo indiferente, de coração duro, com uma mensagem de condenação, que incluía uma mensagem de esperança para aqueles que se desviassem do seu proceder iníquo. Ezequiel foi informado de que as pessoas viriam para ouvir as suas palavras, mas o coração delas não reagiria. (Ez 33:30-32) Do mesmo modo, muitas multidões vieram para ouvir Jesus falar, mas poucas pessoas reagiram com apreço aos ensinos dele. Ezequiel pregava aos cativos em Babilônia. Jesus declarou que sua comissão era pregar livramento aos cativos (Lu 4:18); explicou claramente aos judeus que eles se encontravam em servidão espiritual e que precisavam de libertação, que ele foi enviado a dar. (Jo 8:31-36) Igual a Ezequiel, nunca repreendeu os judeus com as suas próprias palavras, mas falou aquilo que Jeová lhe mandara dizer. — Jo 5:19, 30.

A Esperança de Ezequiel. Ezequiel foi fiel a Deus, cumprindo cada ordem que recebeu, embora sua tarefa fosse difícil. Ele está entre aqueles profetas que perseveraram pela fé e que procuraram "alcançar um lugar melhor, isto é, um pertencente ao céu". (He 11:16) Embora não fosse da classe que constitui o Reino dos céus (Mt 11:11), Ezequiel aguardava o tempo do estabelecimento do Reino messiânico e no tempo devido receberá, pela ressurreição, o cumprimento da promessa de Deus e a bênção do governo messiânico. (He 11:39, 40) Ezequiel foi notável em energia, coragem, obediência e zelo pela adoração de Deus.

EZEQUIEL, LIVRO DE. Este notável livro leva o nome do profeta que o escreveu. Ezequiel, filho de Buzi, um sacerdote, talvez completasse a escrita do livro em Babilônia por volta do ano 591 AEC. Abrange um período de aproximadamente 22 anos, de 613 a cerca de 591 AEC. — Ez 1:1-3; 29:17.

O livro de Ezequiel distingue-se em visões, símiles e alegorias, ou parábolas, e especialmente na realização de ações simbólicas, como quando Ezequiel foi mandado por Deus a gravar um desenho de Jerusalém num tijolo e então encenar um sítio armado contra ela, como sinal para Israel. (Ez 4:1-17) Outras ações simbólicas envolviam a junção de duas varetas, representando as duas casas de Israel (37:15-23), e Ezequiel cavar um buraco numa parede e sair com a sua bagagem, representando o cativeiro de Jerusalém. (12:3-13) A ilustração de Oolá e Oolibá é uma das vívidas alegorias do livro. (Cap. 23) Outro aspecto notável do livro de Ezequiel é o cuidado meticuloso de Ezequiel em datar as suas profecias, não só indicando o ano do exílio do Rei Joaquim, mas também o mês e o dia do mês. — 1:1, 2; 29:1; 30:20; 31:1; 32:1; 40:1.

Autenticidade. Prova da autenticidade do livro encontra-se no cumprimento das suas profecias. (Para exemplos, veja AMONITAS; EDOM, EDOMITAS; TIRO.) Testemunho adicional da autenticidade do livro provém da arqueologia. O famoso arqueólogo norte-americano W. F. Albright escreveu: "Dados arqueológicos têm . . . demonstrado a originalidade substancial dos Livros de Jeremias e de Ezequiel, de Esdras e de Neemias, além de dúvida; têm confirmado o quadro tradicional dos eventos, bem como sua ordem." — The Bible After Twenty Years of Archeology (1932-1952) (A Bíblia Após Vinte Anos de Arqueologia [1932-1952]), 1954, p. 547.

A autenticidade do livro de Ezequiel é apoiada por sua harmonia com os outros livros da Bíblia. Embora não seja citado ou mencionado diretamente por nenhum dos escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, não obstante, as alusões a algumas das suas declarações, bem como expressões similares, são frequentes. Ezequiel e Jesus falaram de se secar uma árvore viçosa. (Ez 17:24; Lu 23:31) Tanto Ezequiel como Jesus falaram dum julgamento das pessoas como ovelhas e cabritos. (Ez 34:17; Mt 25:32, 33) O livro de Revelação (Apocalipse) usa muitas ilustrações similares às de Ezequiel. — Compare Ez 1:28 com Re 4:3; Ez 10:3, 4, com Re 15:8; Ez 12:25 com Re 10:6; Ez 37:10 com Re 11:11.

Deve-se notar que entre os papiros bíblicos, gregos, Chester Beatty encontra-se um códice que contém, entre outras partes da Bíblia, Ezequiel, Daniel e Ester. Todos estes se encontram em um só códice, o qual, conforme parece provável, consistia originalmente em 118 folhas. É uma cópia escrita por dois escribas, possivelmente na primeira metade do terceiro século, indicando a substancial integridade do livro de Ezequiel assim como nos foi transmitido.

Visto que Jeremias e Ezequiel eram contemporâneos, suas profecias têm muitas coisas em co-

DESTAQUES DE EZEQUIEL

Profecias a respeito da destruição de Jerusalém por Babilônia e o restabelecimento dum restante fiel. Um tema central é que as pessoas "terão de saber que eu sou Jeová".

Escrito em Babilônia — a maior parte durante os seis anos antes de Jerusalém ser destruída em 607 AEC, e parte dele só por volta de 591 AEC.

Jeová comissiona Ezequiel (então exilado em Babilônia) como vigia. (1:1–3:27)

- Recebe uma espantosa visão da glória de Jeová, bem como de querubins de quatro faces e acompanhados por rodas cheias de olhos nas cambotas.
- Responsabilidade séria como vigia.

Profecias de aviso contra Judá e Jerusalém infiéis. (4:1–24:27)

- Manda-se que Ezequiel encene o vindouro sítio de Jerusalém, por se deitar sobre o seu lado esquerdo, diante dum tijolo gravado, por 390 dias, e por 40 dias deitado sobre o seu lado direito, subsistindo de pequenas porções de alimento e água.
- O país, inclusive os lugares usados para idolatria, será destruído; os infiéis perecerão, sobrevivendo um restante; nem ouro nem prata será de valor para prover escape.
- Por se realizarem práticas idólatras nos recintos do templo, Jeová decide expressar seu furor, sem compaixão; apenas os marcados pelo secretário vestido de linho serão poupados.
- A fuga do Rei Zedequias e do povo é ilustrada por Ezequiel levar sua bagagem através dum buraco cavado numa parede.
- O julgamento de Jeová contra profetas e profetisas falsos.
- Enigma das águias e da videira indica consequências amargas, porque o povo se volta para o Egito em busca de ajuda.
- O julgamento de Jeová será de acordo com as ações de cada um, e não, conforme afirmado erroneamente, apenas pelos pecados dos pais.
- A coroa do iníquo Zedequias será removida e o domínio real da linhagem de Davi cessará até que venha Aquele que tem o direito legal.
- As infiéis Samaria e Jerusalém são retratadas como duas prostitutas, Oolá e Oolibá; Jerusalém receberá tratamento severo dos seus anteriores amantes.
- A sitiada Jerusalém é comparada a uma panela aquecida, e os seus habitantes à carne dentro dela.

Profecias contra nações circunvizinhas, algumas das quais Jeová prevê que se regozijarão com a queda de Jerusalém. (25:1–32:32)

- Amom, Moabe, Edom e a Filístia serão desolados.
- Tiro será sitiada por Nabucodonosor, e, com o tempo, se tornará um lugar desolado; a destruição é comparada ao afundamento dum bom navio junto com a sua carga; a dinastia tíria terminará por causa da arrogância e da traição.
- O Egito será saqueado por Nabucodonosor, em pagamento pelos serviços que prestou como executor do julgamento divino contra Tiro; Faraó e sua massa de gente são comparados a um cedro a ser derrubado.

Profecias de libertação e restauração do povo de Deus. (33:1–48:35)

- Jeová ajuntará seu povo, suas ovelhas, e suscitará seu servo Davi para pastoreá-lo.
- Ao passo que Edom será desolado, a terra de Israel florescerá como o jardim do Éden.
- Os israelitas, como exilados em Babilônia, se parecem a ossos secos, sem vida, mas serão ressuscitados.
- A união de duas varetas, uma representando José e a outra Judá, ilustra que o povo exilado será reunificado sob o servo de Deus, Davi.
- Os do povo restabelecido de Jeová sofrerão o ataque de Gogue, mas Jeová promete protegê-los e destruir as forças de Gogue.
- Ezequiel recebe a visão de um templo e suas particularidades; um rio flui do templo para o Mar Morto, onde as águas são curadas e se desenvolve uma indústria pesqueira; árvores ao longo das margens do rio produzem fruto comestível e folhas curativas.
- Delineia-se a repartição das terras; descreve-se a cidade "O Próprio Jeová Está Ali".

mum. (Compare Ez 18:2 com Je 31:29; Ez 24:3 com Je 1:13; Ez 34:2 com Je 23:1.) Daniel e Ezequiel, também contemporâneos, usam expressões similares nos seus escritos. Ezequiel, enquanto amarrado com cordas, profetizou sobre o reino de Judá e designou "um dia por um ano", correspondendo cada dia da profecia a um ano no cumprimento. (Ez 4:4-8) Daniel falou dum toco de árvore enfaixado com bandas, uma profecia referente ao Reino, e especificou o período até a remoção das bandas. (Da 4:23) Outra profecia de tempo, de Daniel, foi a das 70 semanas, relacionada com a vinda do Messias, o Líder, profecia que também usou um dia para simbolizar um ano no cumprimento. — Da 9:24-27.

Disposição da Matéria. As profecias e visões de Ezequiel, na maior parte, estão dispostas tanto em ordem cronológica como tópica. Os quatro versículos do capítulo 29:17-20 estão fora da sua ordem cronológica (veja Ez 29:1; 30:20), mas cabem ali em sentido tópico, junto com a profecia contra o Egito. Até o décimo mês do nono ano do primeiro exílio, o ponto central em torno do qual giravam as profecias de Ezequiel era a completa queda e desolação de Jerusalém, havendo apenas breves referências à restauração. Este é o teor dos primeiros 24 capítulos. Durante o sítio de Jerusalém, o profeta voltou sua atenção principalmente para proferir calamidades contra as nações pagãs, previstas por Jeová Deus como se regozijando com a queda de Jerusalém. Depois da chegada da notícia de que Jerusalém tinha caído, o profeta soa o glorioso tom da restauração, tema predominante no restante do livro. — 33:20, 21.

O livro de Ezequiel revela que a religião falsa de Babilônia tinha sido introduzida nos recintos do templo de Jeová, especialmente na forma de adoração do deus babilônico Tamuz. (Ez 8:13, 14) Além dessa detestável adoração falsa no próprio templo de Jeová, os judeus apóstatas encheram a terra de Judá de violência. Não surpreende, portanto, que Ezequiel, na sua visão, ouve a chamada para os executores da parte de Jeová virem com suas armas maçadoras e ficarem de pé junto ao altar no pátio interno do templo. Jeová dá-lhes então ordens para passarem pelo meio da infiel Jerusalém e matarem todos os não marcados como adoradores de Jeová: "O idoso, o jovem, e a virgem, e a criancinha, e as mulheres — para a ruína. Mas não vos aproximeis de nenhum homem em quem haja o sinal, e deveis principiar desde o meu santuário." (9:6) Ezequiel relata que os executores da parte de Jeová principiaram por matar primeiro os 70 homens idosos que adoravam esculturas idólatras na parede duma câmara no pátio interno. Todas as mulheres sentadas junto ao portão, chorando o deus babilônico Tamuz, e os apóstatas adoradores do Sol, junto ao pórtico do templo, também foram mortos. (8:7-9:8) A visão de Ezequiel foi apenas uma previsão do que sobreviria a Jerusalém quando Jeová a fizesse beber da Sua mão o copo do vinho do Seu furor por meio do Seu servo executor, o Rei Nabucodonosor (Nabucodorosor), e os exércitos dele. — Je 25:9, 15-18.

As profecias de restauração, de Ezequiel, devem ter dado consolo aos judeus exilados. No 25.º ano do seu exílio (593 AEC), Ezequiel teve uma notável visão a respeito dum novo templo de Jeová, cujo modelo procedeu do próprio Jeová Deus, e duma cidade adjacente chamada Jeová-Samá, que significa "O Próprio Jeová Está Ali". (Ez 40:1-48:35) No meio duma terra de idolatria pagã, isto reforçou a esperança dos exilados judeus arrependidos para novamente adorarem o Deus verdadeiro, Jeová, no seu templo.

A profecia de Ezequiel enfatiza o tema da Bíblia, que é defender a soberania de Jeová e santificar o nome dele por meio do Reino messiânico. Salienta que, embora Deus permitisse um período longo de vaga no trono de Davi, Ele não havia abandonado seu pacto com Davi, referente a um reino. O Reino seria dado Àquele que tem o direito legal. Deste modo, Ezequiel, assim como Daniel, indicou aos judeus a esperança do Messias. (Ez 21:27; 37:22, 24, 25) Jeová fez com que Ezequiel dissesse mais de 60 vezes que as pessoas "terão de saber que eu sou Jeová". Ezequiel enaltece o nome memorial de Deus por usar 217 vezes a expressão "Soberano Senhor Jeová". — Ez 2:4, n.

EZER.

1. [possivelmente: Armazenar]. Xeque horeu na terra de Seir. (Gên 36:20, 21, 30) Os horeus foram mais tarde desapossados e aniquilados pelos filhos de Esaú. (De 2:22) O nome Ezer, neste caso, possivelmente significa "Armazenar", por causa duma diferença na grafia do hebraico original. Em 1 Crônicas 1:38, tem sido impresso de forma errada como "Ezar" em muitas edições modernas da Versão Rei Jaime, em inglês, embora fosse correto na edição de 1611, bem como em outras das primeiras edições. [2-6: Ajuda]

2. Provavelmente um filho de Efraim, morto junto com seu irmão Eleade pelos homens de Gade, "porque desceram para tomar seu gado". — 1Cr 7:20, 21.

3. Filho de Hur, da tribo de Judá, e "pai" de Husá. Husá ou era uma pessoa ou era uma cidade de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 4; veja HUSÁ.

4. O principal dos 11 gaditas valentes que se separaram para o lado de Davi no ermo, enquanto ele se achava restrito por causa de Saul. Ezer, sendo cabeça, evidentemente era o maior, e, portanto, "igual a mil". — 1Cr 12:1, 8, 9, 14.

5. Filho de Jesua, príncipe de Mispá, que participou em reparar um setor da muralha de Jerusalém, sob Neemias, em 455 AEC. — Ne 3:19.

6. Um dos sacerdotes no cortejo constituído por Neemias na inauguração da reconstruída muralha de Jerusalém, em 455 AEC. — Ne 12:31, 41, 42.

EZIOM-GÉBER. Lugar mencionado primeiro como lugar dum acampamento israelita perto do fim dos 40 anos que a nação passou no ermo. O próximo acampamento foi em Cades, no ermo de Zim. (Núm 33:35, 36) De Cades, pediu-se ao rei de Edom autorização para passar pela sua terra, mas esta foi negada. (Núm 20:14-22) Conforme Moisés contou mais tarde: "Passamos assim longe dos nossos irmãos, os filhos de Esaú, que moram em Seir, do caminho do Arabá, de Elate e de Eziom-Géber." (De 2:8) Tanto Elate (Elote) como Eziom-Géber são em outros lugares indicados como situados à cabeceira do golfo de ʽAqaba, o braço NE do Mar Vermelho. — 1Rs 9:26; 2Cr 8:17.

Em harmonia com Deuteronômio 2:8, o relato anterior, em Números 21:4, descreve os israelitas como “a avançar desde o monte Hor [onde Arão morreu] pelo caminho do Mar Vermelho para contornar a terra de Edom”. Alguns peritos sugerem que os israelitas, depois de deixarem o monte Hor, foram até a extremidade meridional do Mar Morto e subiram pelo vale da torrente de Zerede (a fronteira entre Edom e Moabe). Muitos comentaristas, porém, sustentam que os textos precedentes exigem uma rota mais contornante, para evitar a terra propriamente dita de Edom, rota que os levou de volta “pelo caminho do Mar Vermelho”, e, portanto, à região de Eziom-Géber. Sugerem que a rota seguida levou os israelitas para o S, em direção ao golfo de ʽAqaba, e que, ao atingirem um ponto ao N de Eziom-Géber, eles provavelmente se viraram para o NE, seguindo através do uádi Yatm, contornando assim a extremidade meridional da cordilheira meridional de Edom.

Durante o Reinado de Salomão. A próxima menção de Eziom-Géber ocorre mais de 400 anos depois, no reinado de Salomão (1037-998 AEC). Neste lugar no golfo, Salomão mandou construir e lançou uma frota de navios, com tripulação da Fenícia e de Judá. O rei fenício Hirão, de Tiro, também ativamente empenhado em navegação, cooperou com Salomão neste empreendimento. (1Rs 9:26-28; 10:11) Cerca de um século mais tarde, o Rei Jeosafá (936-c. 911 AEC) tentou reavivar esta indústria de navegação baseada em Eziom-Géber, mas fracassou, conforme Jeová predissera, seus navios sofrendo naufrágio. — 1Rs 22:48, 49; 2Cr 20:36, 37.

Pode-se notar que tanto no caso de Salomão como no de Jeosafá alguns dos navios se destinavam a ir não só a Ofir, mas também a Társis. (2Cr 9:21; 20:36, 37) Visto que há forte evidência de que Társis ficava na Espanha, alguns duvidam de que navios saindo de Eziom-Géber pudessem ter feito tal viagem nos tempos antigos. Sobre isso, veja o artigo TÁRSIS N.º 4, onde se apresenta a possibilidade da existência dum canal do Nilo para o Mar Vermelho. Tal canal poderia também explicar como o Rei Hirão podia enviar não somente homens, mas “navios” a Eziom-Géber e Elote (Elate) para o uso de Salomão. (2Cr 8:17, 18) Por outro lado, sugeriu-se também que esses navios talvez fossem mandados para um ponto na costa filisteia, desmantelados e transportados por terra até o golfo de ʽAqaba, onde eram reconstruídos. Os que sustentam tal conceito salientam que os cruzados, mais tarde, usaram um método similar. Quer por algum canal entre o Nilo e o Mar Vermelho, quer por rota terrestre, parece provável que pelo menos a madeira tenha sido suprida de florestas em outra parte, visto que a região ao redor de Eziom-Géber tem palmeirais, mas não árvores adequadas para a construção de navios.

Localização. Não se pode determinar com certeza exatamente onde ficava a antiga Eziom-Géber. A maioria dos peritos aceitam Tell el-Kheleifeh (ʽEzyon Gever), a uns 500 m do golfo de ʽAqaba e a mais de 3 km ao NO da moderna cidade de ʽAqaba, como a possibilidade mais provável. Escavações feitas ali encontraram cinco períodos principais de ocupação, o mais antigo calculado como remontando ao tempo de Salomão. No entanto, os arqueólogos não encontraram nada que datasse além deste período, portanto, nada remontando ao tempo do Êxodo. Por este motivo, alguns concluem que a Eziom-Géber dos dias de Moisés ou se encontrava em outro ponto, ou que, por serem as construções nativas estruturas simples, de tijolos de barro, o primeiro povoado se dissolveu na terra, sem deixar vestígios.

Depósito. Os que escavaram em Tell el-Kheleifeh encontraram restos de um maciço portão de cidade e também uma estrutura que especificaram confiantemente como tendo sido o centro duma grande indústria de mineração e fundição de cobre; eles atribuíram a operação desta ao Rei Salomão. Mais recentemente, reconheceu-se que esta identificação era incorreta, e embora evidentemente se fizesse alguma fundição de cobre naquela região, os arqueólogos acreditam agora que a construção, sem dúvida, era um grande depósito. Tal depósito fortificado seria conveniente neste ponto, onde se cruzavam importantes rotas marítimas e terrestres, para abrigar o ouro, as pedras preciosas e a madeira chamada algum, de Ofir, até serem transportados por caravanas até o seu destino. (1Rs 9:26; 10:11, 12) Outros pormenores sobre este lugar podem ser encontrados sob ARQUEOLOGIA (Palestina e Síria).

EZNITA. Veja JOSEBE-BASSEBETE.

EZRA [Ajuda; Auxílio]. Nome que aparece numa lista de descendentes de Judá. Jeter, Merede, Efer e Jalom são identificados como filhos de Ezra. — 1Cr 4:1, 17.

EZRAÍTA [Nativo]. Designação aplicada a Etã (1Rs 4:31; Sal 89:cab.) e a Hemã (Sal 88:cab.), ambos famosos pela sua sabedoria. Etã e Hemã são identificados em 1 Crônicas 2:3-6 como descendentes de Judá através de Zerá. De modo que a designação “ezraíta” parece ser outra palavra para “zeraíta”. (Núm 26:20) O Targum de Jonatã interpreta “ezraíta” como “filho de Zerá”.

EZRI [Minha Ajuda; Meu Auxílio]. Filho de Quelube e encarregado dos lavradores dos campos do rei, durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 27:26.

F

FÁBULA. História falsa, ficção, mito, invenção, falsidade; da palavra grega mý·thos. Mý·thos ocorre em 1 Timóteo 1:4; 4:7; 2 Timóteo 4:4; Tito 1:14; 2 Pedro 1:16.

Mý·thos é o contrário de a·lé·thei·a, "verdade", significando a essência manifesta, verídica, dum assunto. Em Gálatas 2:5, "a verdade das boas novas" contrasta o ensino verdadeiro do evangelho com as deturpações dele. Os apóstolos advertiram os cristãos contra o perigo de ser desviado da verdade para histórias falsas, visto que estas não tinham nenhuma base em fatos, mas eram as imaginações de homens. O judaísmo estava cheio de tais histórias falsas, sendo que as tradições dos anciãos constituíam a chamada lei oral que passou a ser incorporada no Talmude. O judaísmo, o principal opositor do cristianismo no primeiro século, tinha sido grandemente influenciado por filosofias e ensinos pagãos.

Como exemplo de uma dessas histórias falsas, considere a seguinte do Talmude Palestino (ou: de Jerusalém): "R. Samuel b. Nahman, em nome de R. Jonathan, disse: As tábuas [em que Moisés recebeu os Dez Mandamentos] tinham seis palmos de comprimento e três de largura: e Moisés segurava dois palmos, e Deus dois, de modo que havia um espaço de dois palmos entre os dedos deles; e quando os israelitas adoravam o bezerro, Deus tentou arrebatar as tábuas das mãos de Moisés; mas as mãos de Moisés eram tão fortes, que ele as arrebatou Dele." A história prossegue dizendo que, então, "as letras saíram voando" das tábuas; em resultado, visto que "a escrita as sustentava", as tábuas "tornaram-se pesadas demais para as mãos de Moisés e caíram, e se quebraram". — Ta'anit, V, pp. 116, 117, traduzido para o inglês por A. W. Greenup.

Os escritos apócrifos abundam em histórias falsas, fictícias, tais como aquela sobre Daniel matar um grande dragão com uma mistura de breu, gordura e pelos (Apêndices a Daniel 14:22-26, CBC), e outra sobre Tobias conseguir do coração, do fel e do fígado dum enorme peixe poderes para curar e para exorcismar demônios. — Tobias 6:2-9, 19, CBC.

Os Cristãos Devem Rejeitar Fábulas. Em 1 Timóteo 1:4, Paulo manda que os cristãos não prestem atenção a histórias falsas. Estas podem levar os cristãos a se envolverem em pesquisas de nenhum benefício real e podem desviar sua mente da verdade. Algumas destas histórias falsas são do tipo contado por mulheres velhas cuja vida foi passada em práticas do mundo. Estas histórias violam as normas santas e justas de Deus. (1Ti 4:6, 7; Tit 1:14) O apóstolo Pedro, em 2 Pedro 1:16, refere-se a histórias falsas (que não são apenas fictícias, mas também engenhosa e astutamente inventadas, com o fim de possivelmente desviar o cristão) e as contrasta com o relato verídico, fatual, da transfiguração, da qual ele foi testemunha ocular. (Mr 9:2) Paulo, em 2 Timóteo 4:3, 4, predisse que, numa época futura, as pessoas voluntariamente se desviariam para histórias falsas, preferindo-as à verdade.

FACA, CUTELO. Instrumento cortante, de um ou dois gumes. Em épocas passadas, as facas usadas nas terras bíblicas eram de pedra (especialmente de pederneira), cobre, bronze ou ferro.

O termo hebraico ma·'akhé·leth, que se refere literalmente a um utensílio usado para comer, é também aplicado a facas grandes, tais como as usadas em cortar os cadáveres de animais sacrificiais. Um "cutelo" (hebr.: ma·'akhé·leth) foi o instrumento que o fiel Abraão empunhou quando estava para sacrificar Isaque (Gên 22:6, 10), e o mesmo tipo foi usado por certo levita para cortar em 12 pedaços o corpo da sua falecida concubina. (Jz 19:29) Também, Provérbios 30:14 fala sobre "uma geração cujos dentes são espadas e cujas mandíbulas são cutelos", empregando assim o mesmo termo hebraico como figura de rapacidade.

"Facas de pederneira" foram feitas por Josué para circuncidar os filhos de Israel em Gibeate-Aralote. (Jos 5:2-4) Parte do termo hebraico que designa esse tipo de faca é hhé·rev, geralmente traduzido por "espada". (Compare isso com Jos 5:2 n.) A costumeira faca de pederneira "dos cananeus" tinha uns 15 cm de comprimento, possuía uma quina ao longo das duas superfícies, e tinha dois gumes.

Escribas e secretários dos tempos antigos usavam um tipo de faca para apontar as penas de junco e para fazer rasuras. Jeremias 36:23 fala sobre o uso da "faca do secretário" para retalhar o rolo dum livro preparado por Jeremias sob a direção de Jeová.

Muitas das antigas facas de cobre têm lâmina reta, de 15 a 25 cm de comprimento; descobriram-se também algumas com pontas curvas. Os punhos frequentemente eram de uma peça só com a lâmina. Outros punhos eram de madeira e presos à lâmina.

Provérbios 23:1, 2, faz referência figurativa a uma faca, recomendando que se 'ponha uma faca à garganta' quando se come na presença dum rei, evidentemente para enfatizar a necessidade de frear o apetite em tal situação.

FACE. As palavras hebraica e grega para "face" ou "rosto" (hebr.: pa·néh; gr.: pró·so·pon) são usadas em diversos sentidos, assim como se dá também em português.

Muitas vezes a referência é à face literal, a parte anterior da cabeça. (Gên 50:1; Mt 6:16, 17; Tg 1:23) De modo similar, pode referir-se à frente ou parte dianteira de alguma coisa. (Êx 26:9; 2Sa 10:9; Ez 2:9, 10, onde o termo hebraico para "face" é traduzido "parte dianteira" ou "frente".) Ou talvez se faça referência à superfície (Is 14:21; Jó 38:30; At 17:26) ou à aparência externa de alguma coisa. — Lu 12:56; Tg 1:11.

Atitude ou Posição. A expressão facial da pessoa é uma indicação importante da sua disposição mental e dos seus sentimentos. Por isso, muitas vezes se usa "face" para descrever a atitude de Deus e do homem em diversas circunstâncias ou para indicar a posição da pessoa conforme vista por Deus e por outros. Alguns dos usos frequentes são apresentados aqui:

'Procurar a face' significava desejar uma audiência perante outro, como perante Deus ou perante um governante terrestre, implorando atenção favorável ou ajuda. (Sal 24:6; 27:8, 9; 105:4; Pr 29:26; Os 5:15) Os hebreus falavam de 'levantar a face de alguém', querendo dizer "ter consideração para com" tal. — 1Sa 25:35; veja IMPARCIALIDADE.

'Abrandar a face de outrem' indica mitigar a sua ira ou obter seu favor e sua boa vontade. — Êx 32:11; Sal 119:58.

'Iluminar a face' para com alguém expressa favor (Núm 6:25; compare isso com Sal 80:7), e 'pôr alguém diante da sua face' indica atenção favorável. — Sal 41:12; compare isso com Sal 140:13.

"Face a face" pode indicar associação ou comunicação íntimas. Assim, Moisés teve o privilégio de tal associação íntima com Deus e de ser usado de modo tão poderoso por Deus, que ele é chamado de profeta "a quem Jeová conhecia face a face". (De 34:10-12) Embora se diga que Moisés contemplou "a aparência de Jeová" e que Jeová falou com ele "boca a boca", ainda assim, Moisés nunca viu literalmente a face de Jeová. Antes, conforme mostra o contexto, o que deu base para tal expressão era que Deus falava a Moisés por meio de porta-vozes angélicos numa comunicação aberta, verbal (em vez de por visões ou sonhos). (Núm 12:6-8; Êx 33:20; At 7:35, 38; Gál 3:19; compare isso com Gên 32:24-30; Os 12:3, 4.) Moisés lembrou aos israelitas que Deus falara com eles "face a face", visto que ouviram junto ao Sinai a voz forte, embora nenhum deles realmente visse a Jeová. — De 5:4; 4:11-15; He 12:19.

Em contraste, Jesus, na sua existência pré-humana, havia estado pessoalmente com seu Pai, e ele indicou que os anjos, filhos espirituais de Deus, também observam "o rosto" de Deus, ao servirem nas Suas cortes celestiais. (Jo 1:18; 8:57, 58; Mt 18:10; compare isso com Lu 1:19.) Assim, também os chamados para serem co-herdeiros de Cristo nos céus, no tempo devido, veem a Jeová Deus. — 1Jo 3:1-3.

Comparando o entendimento que os da primitiva congregação cristã tinham do propósito de Deus com o entendimento mais pleno que obtêm ao receberem sua recompensa celestial e então chegarem a compreender o propósito divino na sua inteireza, ao passo que se cumprem as profecias, o apóstolo Paulo disse: "Pois, atualmente vemos em contorno indefinido por meio dum espelho de metal, mas então será face a face." — 1Co 13:12; compare isso com 2Co 3:18; 4:6.

Dizer ou fazer algo 'na face de alguém' indica ação direta, um confronto aberto (De 7:10; Jó 21:31), e, em sentido desfavorável, pode dar a entender audácia e desrespeito. (Jó 1:11; Is 65:3) Uma expressão relacionada é 'a censura da face'. — Sal 80:16.

'Fixar ou voltar a face' tem o sentido de se pretender alcançar certo alvo, objetivo ou desejo (Gên 31:21; 1Rs 2:15; 2Rs 12:17), e encerra a ideia duma forte intenção e determinação. (2Cr 20:3; Da 11:16-19; Lu 9:51-53) Daniel 'pôs a sua face para Jeová' no sentido de seriamente procurá-lo, recorrendo a Ele em busca de ajuda. (Da 9:3; compare isso com 2Co 1:11.) Uma forte determinação frequentemente se reflete no semblante pela firmeza dos lábios e do queixo, bem como pelo olhar fixo. Isaías 'fez a sua face como pederneira' na sua determinação de não deixar que as tentativas inimigas o desviassem do seu ministério designado. (Is 50:7) Os rebeldes de Judá "endureceram as suas faces mais do que um rochedo" na sua obstinação e recusa de aceitar a correção. (Je 5:3) Por outro lado, 'pôr Jeová sua face contra' os violadores da sua justa lei significava serem rejeitados e condenados, resultando em calamidade ou morte. — Le 17:10; 20:3-6; Je 21:10; compare isso com 1Pe 3:12.

'Esconder a face' tem diversos sentidos, dependendo das circunstâncias. Esconder Jeová Deus a sua face muitas vezes significa a retirada do seu favor ou do seu poder sustentador. Isto pode ocorrer em consequência de desobediência da pessoa ou do grupo de pessoas envolvidas, tal como a nação de Israel. (Jó 34:29; Sal 30:5-8; Is 54:8; 59:2) Em alguns casos pode denotar que Jeová se refreia de se revelar por ação ou por resposta, aguardando o seu próprio tempo devido. (Sal 13:1-3) O pedido de Davi: "Esconde a tua face dos meus pecados", solicitava a Deus o perdão ou relevamento de tais transgressões. — Sal 51:9; compare isso com Sal 10:11.

Esconder ou cobrir um humano ou um anjo a sua face pode expressar humildade, ou temor e respeito reverentes. (Êx 3:6; 1Rs 19:13; Is 6:2) Pode também ser sinal de luto. (2Sa 19:4) Em contraste, Elifaz falsamente deu a entender que a prosperidade de Jó o tornara arrogante, de modo que, na realidade, 'cobria a sua face com a gordura'. (Jó 15:27) Como no caso de Hamã, cobrir outro a face da pessoa podia representar vergonha ou possivelmente condenação. — Est 7:8; compare isso com Sal 44:15; Je 51:51.

'Afastar a face' talvez demonstre indiferença insultante ou desprezo. (2Cr 29:6; Je 2:27; 32:33) Deus manifesta seu desdém por aqueles que rejeitam seu conselho por mostrar-lhes "as costas, e não a face", no dia do desastre deles. — Je 18:17.

'Cuspir na face [no rosto]' de outro era um ato especialmente significativo de vitupério ou humilhação. — Núm 12:14; De 25:9; Is 50:6; Mt 26:67.

A Pessoa ou Presença de Alguém. Visto que a face, ou rosto, é a parte mais distintiva da pessoa, identificando-a mais do que qualquer outro aspecto do corpo, bem como sendo bem expressiva da sua personalidade, a palavra "face", às vezes, era usada metonimicamente para significar a própria pessoa. Por exemplo, veja 2 Samuel 7:9; 17:11; e Atos 3:19, onde as expressões "diante de ti" (na frase "de diante de ti"), "tua própria pessoa" e "pessoa" vêm de palavras originais hebraica ou grega para "tua face" ou "face". Em outros casos, face pode referir-se à presença da pessoa, como em Atos 3:13.

"Os pães da proposição" no tabernáculo são chamados literalmente de pães da face, em hebraico (Êx 25:30), quer dizer, eram os pães da presença de Jeová. Esta expressão enfatizava sua proximidade do povo, conforme representada no santuário.

Outros Usos e Termos. O termo grego para "face" ou "rosto" (pró·so·pon) às vezes denota a "aparência externa" da pessoa, em razão de sua riqueza ou pobreza, de sua posição elevada ou humilde, e de coisas similares. — Mt 22:16; 2Co 5:12; Gál 2:6.

A palavra hebraica 'af (nariz; narinas) às vezes refere-se à região do nariz e assim é traduzida por "rosto", usualmente no contexto de curvar-se. (Gên 3:19; 19:1; 48:12) A palavra hebraica 'á·yin (olho) é usada ao se falar de Jeová ao aparecer ao seu povo, figurativamente, "face a face". — Núm 14:14 n.

"Face" refere-se também a cada um dos lados do rosto acima das mandíbulas e abaixo dos olhos; em hebraico lehhí e em grego si·a·gón. A Bíblia fala de bater na face, ou dar bofetada, não tanto para infligir dano físico, como para castigar, vituperar ou insultar. Assim, Micaías, profeta de Jeová, recebeu uma bofetada por profetizar consequências más para o iníquo Rei Acabe, de Israel. (1Rs 22:24; 2Cr 18:23) Jó recebeu bofetadas vituperadoras daqueles que o desrespeitavam e escarneciam durante a sua provação às mãos de Satanás. — Jó 16:10.

Os profetas Isaías e Miqueias profetizaram a respeito de o Messias ser golpeado na face e de se lhe arrancarem o cabelo das faces, tudo indicativo do amargo vitupério que seus inimigos lançariam sobre ele. (Is 50:6; Miq 5:1) Isto foi cumprido em Jesus Cristo pelos judeus, no julgamento dele perante o Sinédrio, e mais tarde pelos soldados romanos, pouco antes de ele ser morto na estaca de tortura. (Mt 26:67, 68; Jo 18:22, 23; 19:3) Mas, Jesus não revidou, nem respondeu com palavras amarguradas, iradas.

Jesus dera aos seus discípulos o conselho: "Ouvistes que se disse: 'Olho por olho e dente por dente.' No entanto, eu vos digo: Não resistais àquele que é iníquo; mas, a quem te esbofetear a face direita, oferece-lhe também a outra." (Mt 5:38, 39) Jesus não estava ali ensinando o pacifismo ou negando o direito de autodefesa contra dano físico, mas estava ensinando que o cristão não precisa retribuir golpe por golpe, revidar, vingar-se. Estava inculcando o princípio de se evitarem altercações por não responder ou reagir do mesmo modo. Uma bofetada não tem por objetivo causar dano físico, mas apenas insultar ou provocar briga. Jesus não estava dizendo que, se alguém socasse o cristão no queixo, ele deveria levantar-se do chão e oferecer a outra face como alvo. O que Jesus estava dizendo era que, se alguém tentasse provocar uma briga ou uma discussão com o cristão, por bater nele com a mão aberta ou por feri-lo com palavras insultantes, seria errado retaliar. Isto está em harmonia com as declarações dos apóstolos, dando ênfase adicional a este princípio. — Ro 12:17-21; 1Pe 3:9.

FALA, PALAVRA. Veja LINGUAGEM ULTRAJANTE.

FALCÃO [hebr.: nets]. Os hodiernos lexicógrafos acreditam que o termo hebraico nets se aplica aos falcões, embora alguns achem que abran-ge também os gaviões, que são muito similares aos falcões, embora classificados pelos ornitólogos como "família" separada. Como predador, comedor de cobras, lagartos, pequenos mamíferos e outras aves, "o falcão segundo a sua espécie" ("as diferentes espécies de gavião", BJ) estava entre as aves decretadas 'impuras' na Lei mosaica. — Le 11:16; De 14:15.

Alguns falcões rivalizam com o andorinhão como os voadores mais velozes da família das aves, sendo que alguns observadores atribuem a certo falcão uma velocidade de mergulho de 290 km/h. Entre os falcões encontrados na Palestina encontra-se o falcão-peregrino (Falco peregrinus), migrador bastante comum. Há também o um pouco maior falcão-lanário (Falco biarmicus), antigamente abundante nos rochedos e nas gargantas rochosas desde o monte Hermom até a região do Mar Morto. Ocasionalmente se veem falcões-sacres (Falco cherrug) no Negebe ocidental.

O comum e menor peneireiro-de-dorso-malhado (Falco tinnunculus), de uns 36 cm de comprimento, também é membro do mesmo gênero que o falcão. É abundante o ano inteiro nos centros agrícolas e nos jardins da Palestina; nidifica até mesmo em prédios grandes nas cidades.

Jó 39:26 descreve o falcão 'esvoaçando e estendendo suas asas ao vento sulino', e alguns entendem isso como se referindo a uma migração para o sul ("abrir as suas asas no seu voo para o Sul", BLH), o que se aplicaria ao peneireiro menor, da família dos falconídeos, e, até certo ponto, ao falcão-peregrino. Outros, porém, acham que o texto descreve a ave como virando-se para o vento, e, pela força das suas asas, voando contra ele e ascendendo cada vez mais. Diz-se que os falcões "ascendem a grande altura, sempre esforçando-se de subir mais do que qualquer outra ave que estejam perseguindo", a fim de mergulhar com impetuosa velocidade sobre a sua presa mais abaixo, e, ao fazer isso, muitas vezes "aproveitam-se do vento, e, por voarem contra ele, ascendem como uma pipa". (Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Encyclopedia [Nova Enciclopédia Padrão de Funk e Wagnalls], 1931, Vol. XI, p. 329, 330) De modo similar, o peneireiro às vezes é chamado de helicóptero, "porque paira (fica no mesmo lugar) no ar enquanto caça. Esta ave encara o vento e bate as asas enquanto observa o solo em busca de presa". — The World Book Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia do Livro Mundial), 1987, Vol. 11, p. 237.

O falcão ocupava uma posição muito destacada na religião do Egito. Tornou-se símbolo de Hórus, o deus com cabeça de falcão, do Egito, o qual, junto com Ísis e Osíris, constituíam a principal trindade ou "sagrada família" entre os deuses e as deusas do Egito. Sempre se usava o símbolo do falcão na escrita do título dos faraós, e, em alguns casos, estes governantes eram considerados encarnações de Hórus. Dentre as centenas de aves mumificadas encontradas no Egito, o falcão, especialmente o peneireiro, é uma das mais numerosas. Heródoto disse que aquele que matasse um falcão no Egito, mesmo que acidentalmente, era morto.

FALTA, ACHAR FALTA. Uma falta é um descuido, uma falha, um defeito, um erro, uma imperfeição; pode significar deixar de fazer o que é direito; também, responsabilidade pela falha ou pela transgressão. (Êx 5:16; Sal 50:20; Mt 18:15) Biblicamente, o termo falta com frequência se refere a um caso de culpa ou a uma causa específica para desaprovação.

Achar Falta. A expressão "achar falta", ou "ralhar", ocorre tanto nas Escrituras Hebraicas como nas Gregas Cristãs. Em hebraico, traduz o verbo riv, que significa "contender" em sentido físico, verbal ou jurídico. De modo que é vertido por 'altercar', 'contender' e 'pleitear uma causa' (Gên 26:20; De 33:7; 1Sa 24:15), bem como "ralhar". — Ne 5:7; 13:11, 17, 25; Sal 103:9; veja ALTERCAÇÃO.

A palavra grega ai·tí·a, que ocorre na expressão "achar falta", é também traduzida "causa", "acusação" e "motivo". (At 13:28; 25:18; Mt 19:3) Pilatos, depois de interrogar Jesus Cristo por causa da acusação levantada pelos judeus, não achou evidência de culpa e anunciou aos judeus três vezes: "Não acho falta nele." (Jo 18:38; 19:4, 6) "Achar falta" também traduz a palavra grega mém·fo·mai, que significa "culpa; culpar". — Ro 9:19; He 8:8.

Os Tratos de Jeová com a Humanidade Faltosa. O que Jeová Deus faz é perfeito, sem falta (hebr.: ta·mím, referindo-se a algo são, perfeito, sem defeito), assim como são todas as suas palavras e todos os seus atos. (De 32:4 n.) Por este motivo, e por causa da sua onipotência, ele pode dizer, como na ocasião em que corrigiu Jó: "Acaso devia haver contenda da parte do caturra [literalmente, alguém que sempre acha defeito, discute, questiona] com o Todo-Poderoso?" (Jó 40:1, 2) O apóstolo Paulo salienta que Deus tem o direito de lidar com Suas criaturas conforme Ele bem entender, assim como o oleiro faz o tipo de vasos que ele quer produzir. Deus tolera "vasos do furor" para certa finalidade, assim como fez com Faraó, ao passo que tem misericórdia com "vasos de misericórdia", e nós não podemos de direito questionar a atuação de Deus neste respeito. — Ro 9:14-24.

Por outro lado, os modos de agir e as realizações do homem muitas vezes são faltosos. O pecado e o erro são o legado que todos os homens herdaram de Adão. (Ro 5:12; Sal 51:5) Mas Jeová, ele mesmo sem defeito, "conhece bem a nossa formação, lembra-se de que somos pó", e é misericordioso. (Sal 103:13, 14) Ele considerou o fiel e obediente Noé "sem defeito entre os seus contemporâneos". (Gên 6:9) Ordenou a Abraão: "Anda diante de mim e mostra-te sem defeito." (Gên 17:1) Embora ambos estes homens fossem imperfeitos e morressem, eram considerados por Jeová, que "vê o que o coração é", como não tendo faltas. (1Sa 16:7; compare isso com 2Rs 20:3; 2Cr 16:9.) Ordenou a Israel: "Deves mostrar-te sem defeito para com Jeová, teu Deus." (De 18:13; 2Sa 22:24) Ele deu seu imaculado Filho (He 7:26) como sacrifício resgatador, e, à base disso, Ele pode classificar de 'justos' ou sem falta, aqueles que exercem fé e são obedientes, mantendo ao mesmo tempo sua posição como Juiz justo e sem falta. — Ro 3:25, 26; veja INTEGRIDADE; PERFEIÇÃO.

O Pacto da Lei. O apóstolo Paulo diz que a Lei é "espiritual" e "excelente" (Ro 7:14; 1Ti 1:8), e, depois de considerar o décimo mandamento dela, declara que "a lei . . . é santa, e o mandamento é santo, e justo, e bom". (Ro 7:7-12) Então, por que diz ele também: "Se aquele primeiro pacto tivesse sido sem defeito [ou: culpa], não se teria procurado lugar para um segundo"? (He 8:7) Paulo passa a explicar: "Ele [Jeová, por intermédio de Jeremias] acha falta [ou: culpa] no povo." (He 8:8, 9; compare isso com Je 31:31, 32.) Em outro lugar, ele mostra que havia certa incapacidade por parte da Lei, estando ela "fraca por intermédio da carne". (Ro 8:3) Também, ele demonstra de forma lógica que não podia vir a haver perfeição por meio do sacerdócio levítico, o qual, junto com a lei segundo a qual atuava, tinha de ser mudado; que "a Lei não fez nada perfeito"; e que suas dádivas e seus sacrifícios "não [eram] capazes de aperfeiçoar o homem que presta serviço sagrado, no que se refere à sua consciência". — He 7:11, 12, 19; 9:9.

Lidar com as Faltas Uns dos Outros. A Bíblia nos aconselha a 'continuar a suportar-nos uns aos outros e a perdoar-nos uns aos outros liberalmente, se alguém tiver razão para queixa contra outro'. (Col 3:13) Se todas as nossas faltas fossem levadas em conta contra nós, todos estaríamos condenados. Muitas faltas podem ser desconsideradas; o cristão certamente não devia estar ansioso de tornar públicas as faltas de seus irmãos. As Escrituras dizem a respeito dum iníquo: "Estás sentado e falas contra o teu próprio irmão, e divulgas um defeito contra o filho da tua mãe." — Sal 50:16, 20.

Entretanto, Jesus Cristo instruiu seus discípulos sobre o que fazer no caso de certos pecados graves. Como primeiro passo, ele aconselhou: "Se o teu irmão cometer um pecado, vai expor a falta dele [literalmente: "repreende-o"] entre ti e ele só. Se te escutar, ganhaste o teu irmão." Jesus passou então a delinear os passos a tomar se este primeiro esforço falhar. — Mt 18:15-17; veja também Gál 6:1.

Ministério sem Falta. O apóstolo Paulo, muito grato e apreciativo do glorioso tesouro do ministério, exerceu cuidado para glorificar este ministério por vigiar de perto todo aspecto da sua vida e conduta. Ele disse na sua carta à congregação em Corinto: "De modo algum damos qualquer causa para tropeço, para que não se ache falta no nosso ministério." (2Co 6:3) Homens que desafiavam o apostolado de Paulo se haviam associado com a congregação ali e se haviam empenhado muito em achar faltas em Paulo e em caluniá-lo, a fim de menosprezá-lo e destruir sua autoridade apostólica sobre a congregação. Reconhecendo isso e sabendo também o perigo e as dificuldades causadas por se achar falta em questões de dinheiro, ele assegurou à congregação que enviava Tito e outro irmão de confiança, designados pelas congregações para administrar as contribuições. Paulo escreveu: "Estamos assim evitando que algum homem ache falta em nós em conexão com esta contribuição liberal a ser administrada por nós." — 2Co 8:16-21.

FAMÍLIA.

O termo hebraico mish·pa·hháh (família), além de se referir ao conjunto dos membros duma família, também significa, por extensão, uma tribo, um povo ou uma nação. A palavra grega pa·tri·á também tem alcance amplo. Jeová Deus é o originador do arranjo da família. Ele é o Pai da sua família celestial e Aquele a quem 'toda família na terra deve o seu nome'. (Ef 3:14, 15) Isto se dá porque Jeová estabeleceu a primeira família humana, e foi por este meio que ele se propôs encher a terra. Além disso, Ele permitiu que Adão, embora pecador, tivesse uma família, e tivesse filhos "à sua semelhança, à sua imagem". (Gên 5:3) Na Bíblia, Jeová tem desde então esclarecido que Ele dá muita importância à divinamente concedida faculdade de procriação, o meio pelo qual o homem pode dar continuidade ao seu nome e à sua linhagem na terra. — Gên 38:8-10; De 25:5, 6, 11, 12.

Estrutura e Conservação da Família. Na antiga sociedade hebraica, a família era a unidade básica. A família era um pequeno governo; o pai, como chefe dela, era responsável perante Deus, e a mãe, de forma subordinada, era a administradora dos filhos na família. (At 2:29; He 7:4) A família, em escala menor, era o reflexo da grandiosa família de Deus. Deus é representado na Bíblia como marido, sendo a "Jerusalém de cima" a mãe de seus filhos. — Gál 4:26; compare isso com Is 54:5.

A família, nos tempos patriarcais, pode ser comparada em alguns aspectos com uma corporação moderna. Havia algumas coisas que eram propriedade pessoal de membros da família. Mas, na maior parte, a propriedade era um bem comum, administrado pelo pai. O mal cometido por um membro da família era considerado um mal cometido contra a própria família, especialmente contra seu chefe. Lançava vitupério sobre ele, e ele era responsável, como juiz da família, a tomar a necessária ação na questão. — Gên 31:32, 34; Le 21:9; De 22:21; Jos 7:16-25.

A monogamia era o padrão original fixado por Jeová para a família. Embora mais tarde se praticasse a poligamia, esta sempre foi contrária ao princípio original estabelecido por Deus. Todavia, ele a tolerou até a chegada do seu tempo devido para restabelecer o padrão original, o que ele fez na congregação cristã. (1Ti 3:2; Ro 7:2, 3) Sob o pacto da Lei, ele reconheceu a existência da poligamia e a regulamentou, de modo que a unidade familiar ainda foi mantida intata e funcionando. Mas, foi o próprio Jeová quem disse: "Por isso é que o homem deixará seu pai e sua mãe, e tem de se apegar à sua esposa, e eles têm de tornar-se uma só carne." E foi o seu Filho quem citou estas palavras e passou a dizer: "De modo que não são mais dois, mas uma só carne. Portanto, o que Deus pôs sob o mesmo jugo, não o separe o homem." (Gên 2:24; Mt 19:4-6) O registro indica que Adão tinha apenas uma só esposa, que se tornou "a mãe de todos os viventes". (Gên 3:20) Os três filhos de Noé, que começaram a repovoar a terra após o Dilúvio global, eram todos filhos do mesmo pai e da mesma mãe, e cada filho passou pelo Dilúvio com apenas uma só esposa. — Gên 8:18; 9:1; 1Pe 3:20.

Sob o Pacto da Lei. Ao dar os Dez Mandamentos a Israel, Deus deu atenção à integridade da unidade familiar. "Honra a teu pai e a tua mãe" é o quinto mandamento, o primeiro com promessa. (De 5:16; Ef 6:2) O filho que se rebelasse contra seus pais era rebelde contra o arranjo governamental estabelecido por Deus, bem como contra o próprio Deus. Se golpeasse seu pai ou sua mãe, ou os amaldiçoasse, ou caso se mostrasse incorrigível, ele devia ser morto. (Êx 21:15, 17; Le 20:9; De 21:18-21) Os filhos deviam ter o devido temor dos pais, e o filho que tratasse o pai ou a mãe com desprezo era maldito. — Le 19:3; De 27:16.

O sétimo mandamento: "Não deves cometer adultério", proibia qualquer união sexual de alguém casado com outra pessoa fora do vínculo marital. (Êx 20:14) Todos os filhos deviam nascer dentro da família. O filho ilegítimo não era reconhecido, nem se permitia aos seus descendentes tornar-se membros da congregação de Israel até a décima geração. — De 23:2.

Embora o sétimo mandamento, ao proibir o adultério, servisse para resguardar a unidade familiar, o décimo mandamento, por proibir os desejos errados, protegia adicionalmente a integridade da família da própria pessoa, bem como a casa e família do outro homem. As coisas mais comuns da vida familiar eram protegidas por este mandamento, a saber, casa, esposa, servos, animais e outras propriedades. — Êx 20:17.

Sob a Lei, guardava-se um cuidadoso registro de genealogias. A integridade da família era ainda mais enfatizada pela questão da herança de terras ancestrais. As genealogias eram especialmente importantes na linhagem familiar de Judá, e, mais tarde, na linhagem de Davi, descendente de Judá. Por causa da promessa de que o Messias, o Rei, viria através destas famílias, guardava-se zelosamente o registro da relação familiar. E embora a Lei não abolisse a poligamia, a integridade da família era protegida e sua genealogia era mantida intacta por leis estritas que governavam a poligamia. De modo algum se tolerava a libertinagem ou a promiscuidade. Os filhos nascidos de poligamia ou concubinato eram filhos legítimos, genuínos, do pai. — Veja CONCUBINA.

A Lei proibia especificamente alianças matrimoniais com as sete nações cananeias que deviam ser expulsas do país. (De 7:1-4) Por deixar de acatar esta ordem, a nação de Israel foi enlaçada pela adoração de deuses falsos e finalmente levada ao cativeiro pelos seus inimigos. Salomão é um exemplo destacado de alguém que pecou neste respeito. (Ne 13:26) Esdras e Neemias empreenderam reformas enérgicas entre aqueles dos israelitas repatriados que contaminaram sua família e o próprio Israel por casamentos com esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 9:1, 2; 10:11; Ne 13:23-27.

Quando Deus enviou seu Filho unigênito à terra, fez com que este nascesse numa família humana. Providenciou que ele tivesse um pai adotivo temente a Deus e uma mãe amorosa. Jesus, como menino, estava sujeito aos pais, e os respeitava e lhes obedecia. (Lu 2:40, 51) Mesmo quando morria na estaca de tortura ele mostrou respeito e preocupação amorosa pela mãe, a qual então evidentemente era viúva, dizendo-lhe: "Mulher, eis o teu filho!", e ao discípulo a quem amava: "Eis a tua mãe!", evidentemente providenciando assim que este discípulo tomasse conta dela na sua própria casa. — Jo 19:26, 27.

Como indica a Bíblia a importância da família na congregação cristã?

Na congregação cristã, a família é reconhecida como unidade básica da sociedade cristã. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs dedica-se muito espaço a instruções com respeito à relação familiar. Novamente, o homem é dignificado com a chefia da família, a esposa estando em sujeição ao marido, administrando a família sob a supervisão geral dele. (1Co 11:3; 1Ti 2:11-15; 5:14) Comparando Jesus ao marido e chefe de família da sua 'esposa' congregacional, Paulo admoesta os maridos a exercerem a chefia com amor, e aconselha as esposas a respeitarem o marido e a se sujeitarem a ele. (Ef 5:21-33) Ordena-se aos filhos obedecerem aos pais, e especialmente o pai é incumbido da responsabilidade de criar os filhos na disciplina e regulação mental de Jeová. — Ef 6:1-4.

O homem usado como superintendente na congregação cristã, se casado, tem de demonstrar elevados padrões como chefe de família, presidindo a ela corretamente e tendo em sujeição os filhos, que não devem ser desregrados, nem acusados de devassidão, pois, pergunta Paulo: "Deveras, se um homem não souber presidir à sua própria família, como tomará conta da congregação de Deus?" visto que a congregação é similar a uma família. (1Ti 3:2-5; Tit 1:6) As esposas são exortadas a amar o marido e os filhos, a serem operosas em casa e a se sujeitarem ao seu próprio marido. — Tit 2:4, 5.

Jesus predisse que a oposição à verdade de Deus dividiria as famílias. (Mt 10:32-37; Lu 12:51-53) Mas, o apóstolo Paulo admoestou fortemente os crentes contra dissolverem a relação marital, fazendo o apelo à base do bem-estar do cônjuge incrédulo, bem como dos filhos. Destacou o grande valor do relacionamento familiar, ao salientar que Deus encara os filhos pequenos como santos, mesmo que o cônjuge incrédulo não tenha sido purificado dos seus pecados pela fé em Cristo. De fato, o incrédulo talvez esteja praticando algumas das coisas que Paulo diz que os cristãos haviam praticado antes de aceitar as boas novas a respeito do Cristo. (1Co 7:10-16; 6:9-11) O apóstolo resguarda também a unidade da família cristã por dar instruções aos maridos e às esposas a respeito de renderem os deveres conjugais. — 1Co 7:3-5.

A associação nos relacionamentos familiares mostrou ser uma bênção para muitos em conexão com o cristianismo, "pois, esposa, como sabes se não hás de salvar o teu marido? Ou, marido, como sabes se não hás de salvar a tua esposa?" (1Co 7:16) Isto se evidencia também no teor dos cumprimentos de Paulo a diversas famílias. Alguns crentes tinham o privilégio de usar o lar da família como lugar para a congregação se reunir. (Ro 16:1-15) Filipe, o missionário cristão, era pai de família, tendo quatro filhas cristãs fiéis. Ele foi abençoado por hospedar por algum tempo o apóstolo Paulo e seus cotrabalhadores no seu lar em Cesareia. (At 21:8-10) A própria congregação cristã é chamada de "família de Deus". Seu principal membro e cabeça é Jesus Cristo, e esta "família" o reconhece como o Descendente, ou Semente, por meio de quem todas as famílias da terra abençoarão a si mesmas. — 1Ti 3:15; Ef 2:19; Col 1:17, 18; Gên 22:18; 28:14.

As Escrituras inspiradas predisseram um feroz ataque à instituição da família, com o consequente colapso da moral e da sociedade humana fora da congregação cristã. Paulo classifica o 'proibir casar-se' como parte de doutrinas inspiradas por demônios "nos períodos posteriores". Ele prediz para os "últimos dias" uma condição em que prevaleceriam a desobediência aos pais, a deslealdade e a ausência de "afeição natural", mesmo entre aqueles que têm "uma forma de devoção piedosa". Ele adverte os cristãos a se afastarem de tais. — 1Ti 4:1-3; 2Ti 3:1-5.

Babilônia, a Grande, inimiga da "mulher" de Deus (Gên 3:15; Gál 4:27) e da "noiva" de Cristo (Re 21:9), é uma grande organização-"meretriz", que comete fornicação com os reis da terra. Ser ela "a mãe das meretrizes e das coisas repugnantes da terra" indica que suas "filhas" são meretrizes, também, que ela provoca grande desrespeito pelas instituições e mandamentos de Jeová Deus, inclusive seus requisitos que contribuem para a integridade da família. (Re 17:1-6) Ela tem feito esforços para induzir outros ao meretrício e tem conseguido produzir muitas filhas 'meretrizes', na tentativa de impedir que Cristo tenha uma "noiva" pura. Todavia, a "noiva" dele sai vitoriosa, pura, justa, digna de estar na "família" de Jeová como "esposa" de Jesus Cristo, para a bênção e o regozijo de todo o universo. — 2Co 11:2, 3; Re 19:2, 6-8; veja CASAMENTO e outros relacionamentos familiares sob as respectivas designações.

FANUEL [do hebr.: "Penuel", que significa "Face de Deus"]. Descendente de Aser, cuja filha Ana era profetisa no templo em Jerusalém quando José e Maria levaram Jesus para lá. — Lu 2:36.

FAQUISTAS. Os "faquistas" eram membros duma fanática facção política, judaica, existente no primeiro século EC, que se empenhava em ma-tanças políticas organizadas. Quando os judeus se levantaram contra Paulo em Jerusalém, durante a sua última visita ali, o comandante militar Cláudio Lísias suspeitou que o apóstolo fosse o egípcio que antes atiçara uma sedição e conduzira 4.000 "faquistas" para o ermo. — At 21:30-38; 23:26, 27.

A expressão grega traduzida "faquistas" significa literalmente "sicários". A palavra grega para "sicários" (si·ká·ri·oi) vem da latina sicarii, a qual, por sua vez, deriva de sica (punhal).

Segundo o historiador judeu Josefo, os "faquistas", ou sicários, especialmente durante as festividades, com punhais escondidos sob as vestes, misturavam-se com as multidões em Jerusalém e esfaqueavam seus inimigos em plena luz do dia. Daí, para evitar suspeitas, juntavam-se aos que expressavam indignação contra essas matanças. Josefo indica adicionalmente que os sicários tiveram papel destacado na revolta contra Roma. Em 66 EC, um bando de sicários, sob o comando de Eleazar, filho de Jairo, tomou e massacrou a guarnição romana de Massada. Este bando de patriotas fanáticos continuou seu desafio a Roma até 73 EC, ano em que se romperam as defesas de Massada. Os romanos, porém, não precisaram lançar um ataque contra a própria fortaleza. Para evitar serem capturados, os sicários haviam realizado um sistemático massacre suicida de 960 homens, mulheres e crianças. Sobreviveram apenas duas mulheres e cinco crianças, que se esconderam numa caverna.

FARAÓ. Título dado aos reis do Egito. Deriva duma palavra egípcia para "Casa Grande". Nos mais antigos documentos do Egito, esta palavra evidentemente designava o palácio real, e, no decorrer do tempo, passou a aplicar-se ao chefe do governo, o rei. Os peritos sustentam que esta última aplicação surgiu por volta dos meados do segundo milênio AEC. Neste caso, significaria que Moisés usou o termo conforme se aplicava nos seus dias (1593-1473 AEC), ao registrar o relato da visita de Abraão ao Egito. (Gên 12:14-20) Por outro lado, é inteiramente possível que este título já se aplicasse assim nos dias de Abraão (2018-1843 AEC), se não em documentos oficiais, pelo menos no uso comum. O primeiro documento em que o título é vinculado com o nome pessoal do rei procede do reinado de Sisaque, que governou contemporaneamente com Salomão e Roboão. Na Bíblia, este título é similarmente vinculado com o nome no caso do Faraó Neco (2Rs 23:29) e do Faraó Hofra (Je 44:30), do fim do sétimo século e do começo do sexto século AEC. Por volta deste tempo, documentos egípcios também inseriam o título nos cartuchos especialmente reservados para se escrever o nome real.

Os faraós mencionados na Bíblia são Sisaque, Sô, Tiraca, Neco e Hofra, sendo cada um destes considerado nesta obra sob artigos separados. Há certa dúvida sobre se Zerá, o etíope, era, ou não, um governante do Egito. Outros faraós são deixados anônimos. Por causa da condição confusa da cronologia egípcia (veja CRONOLOGIA [Cronologia Egípcia]; EGITO, EGÍPCIO [História]), não é possível relacionar com certeza estes faraós com os da história secular. Estes faraós anônimos incluem: Aquele que tentou tomar a esposa de Abraão, Sara (Gên 12:15-20); o faraó que promoveu a ascensão de José à condição de autoridade (Gên 41:39-46); o faraó (ou faraós) do período da opressão dos israelitas antes do retorno de Moisés de Midiã (Êx caps. 1, 2); o faraó que governou durante as Dez Pragas e no tempo do Êxodo (Êx 5-14); o pai de Bitia, esposa de Merede, da tribo de Judá (1Cr 4:18); o faraó que deu asilo a Hadade, de Edom, no tempo de Davi (1Rs 11:18-22); o pai da esposa egípcia de Salomão (1Rs 3:1); e o faraó que golpeou Gaza nos dias de Jeremias, o profeta (Je 47:1).

Os egípcios encaravam o faraó governante como deus, filho do deus-sol Rá, e não apenas como representante dos deuses. Era considerado como encarnação do sucessor de Osíris, o deus Hórus, de cabeça de falcão. Entre os títulos pomposos que lhe eram atribuídos estavam "o sol de dois mundos", "Senhor da Coroa", "o poderoso deus", "descendente de Rá", "o eterno", e muitos, muitos outros. (History of Ancient Egypt [História do Antigo Egito], de G. Rawlinson, 1880, Vol. I, pp. 373, 374; History of the World [História do Mundo], de J. Ridpath, 1901, Vol. I, p. 72) Na frente da sua coroa estava presa uma imagem do sagrado uraeus (ureio), ou cobra, que supostamente cuspia fogo e destruição sobre os inimigos do faraó. Frequentemente, a imagem do faraó era colocada em templos entre as de outros deuses. Há até mesmo quadros egípcios de faraós reinantes adorando sua própria imagem. A palavra de Faraó, como deus, era lei, e ele não governava segundo um código de lei, mas por decreto. Não obstante, a história mostra que seus supostos poderes absolutos eram consideravelmente limitados por outras forças dentro do império, inclusive pelo sacerdócio, pela nobreza e pelos militares. Estes pontos ajudam a entender quão difícil foi a tarefa de Moisés, de comparecer perante Faraó para apresentar as solicitações e avisos de Jeová. — Veja Êx 5:1, 2; 10:27, 28.

Nada indica que a filha de Faraó, dada a Salomão em casamento, tivesse abandonado sua adoração falsa. (1Rs 3:1; 11:1-6) Esses casamentos muitas vezes eram usados pelos antigos reis (como também por hodiernos) como meio de reforçar suas relações com outros reinos. O registro não mostra se a proposta inicial da aliança partiu de Salomão ou de Faraó. (Veja ALIANÇA.) Comparar Salomão a donzela sulamita a uma égua nos carros de Faraó reflete a fama que os carros do Egito tinham naquele tempo. — Cân 1:9; compare isso com 1Rs 10:29.

A profecia de Isaías, escrita no oitavo século AEC, descreve um estado confuso, desconcertante, como existente ou prestes a existir no Egito e da parte dos conselheiros de Faraó. (Is 19:11-17) A história secular mostra fricção e rupturas internas no Egito a partir do tempo de Isaías e até o século seguinte. Embora o infiel Judá, contrário à palavra de Jeová, às vezes recorresse ao Egito em busca de ajuda militar, os jactanciosos faraós mostraram ser como uma "cana esmagada" quanto a dar apoio sólido. — Is 30:2-5; 31:1-3; Ez 29:2-9; compare isso com Is 36:4, 6.

FARDO. Algo que se carrega; uma carga, literal ou figurativa. Nas Escrituras usam-se diversas palavras hebraicas e gregas para "fardo" ou "carga", às vezes relacionadas com o material carregado, mas frequentemente com coisas figurativas tais como responsabilidade, culpa ou uma mensagem de Deus. O fardo costuma ser encarado como carga pesada. Dentre os diversos radicais hebraicos relacionados com fardo e carga, há um (ka·védh) que significa basicamente "ser grave [pesado; molesto]". (Gên 18:20; compare isso com 1Sa 4:18; Êx 10:14.) Outro, o verbo na·sá', significa "colocar; transportar" (Gên 45:19; 47:30) e é a raiz de mas·sá', vertida "carga". (Núm 4:15; 2Cr 35:3) O verbo sa·vál, traduzido por "levar fardos" em Gênesis 49:15, é aparentado com sab·bál ("carregadores" [Ne 4:10]) e sé·vel ("fardo" [Ne 4:17]; "serviço compulsório" [1Rs 11:28]).

Colocaram-se chefes de trabalho forçado sobre os israelitas no Egito, "com o objetivo de oprimi-los nos seus fardos", e para compeli-los a carregar e usar materiais de construção tais como argamassa argilosa e tijolos. (Êx 1:11-14; 2:11) Mas, Jeová os fez "sair de debaixo dos fardos dos egípcios". (Êx 6:6; Sal 81:6) Quando o tabernáculo e seus objetos eram mudados de um lugar para outro, os levitas coatitas, gersonitas e meraritas tinham cargas específicas para transportar. (Núm 4) Mais tarde, Salomão veio a ter 70.000 carregadores na sua grande força de trabalhadores. (1Rs 5:15; 2Cr 2:18) Carregadores também eram necessários e foram usados quando o Rei Josias reparou o templo (2Cr 34:12, 13), e, anos mais tarde, quando Neemias supervisionou a reconstrução da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 4:17; veja SERVIÇO COMPULSÓRIO.

Muitas vezes, nos tempos antigos, usavam-se animais para levar cargas, e mandou-se aos israelitas que, ao verem o jumento de alguém que os odiava deitado sob a carga, em vez de abandoná-lo, 'deviam sem falta conseguir soltá-lo'. (Êx 23:5) A quantidade de material que um animal pode carregar é chamada de carga, tal como "a carga de um par de mulos". — 2Rs 5:17.

Uso Figurado. A palavra hebraica mas·sá', frequentemente usada para uma carga ou um fardo literal, pode denotar uma "mensagem ponderosa", tal como aquela que a mãe do Rei Lemuel lhe deu em correção. (Pr 31:1) Pode também referir-se a uma pronúncia. (Is 13:1; 14:28; Ez 12:10; Na 1:1) Usualmente, a pronúncia é uma denúncia de iniquidade, e, portanto, é como um pesado fardo de julgamento.

Quem é fiel a Deus pode lançar sobre Jeová seu fardo figurativo, ou o quinhão que recebeu de coisas tais como provações e preocupações. Assim, Davi declarou: "Lança teu fardo sobre o próprio Jeová, e ele mesmo te susterá. Nunca permitirá que o justo seja abalado." (Sal 55:22; compare isso com 1Pe 5:6, 7.) Também Davi se sentiu induzido a exclamar: "Bendito seja Jeová, que diariamente carrega o fardo para nós, o verdadeiro Deus de nossa salvação." — Sal 68:19.

Um "fardo" pode ser uma responsabilidade imposta por Cristo. (Re 2:24) Pareceu bem ao espírito santo e ao corpo governante cristão não acrescentar nenhum "fardo" adicional aos cristãos, exceto as coisas necessárias, quer dizer, 'persistirem em abster-se de coisas sacrificadas a ídolos, e de sangue, e de coisas estranguladas, e de fornicação'. — At 15:28, 29.

Em outro sentido, Paulo assegurou aos coríntios que não iria tornar-se um fardo para eles, nem buscava os bens deles, mas 'de bom grado se gastaria e seria completamente gasto' em prol da alma deles. (2Co 12:14-18) Paulo, como apóstolo de Cristo, de modo justificável, poderia ter-se tornado "um fardo dispendioso" para os cristãos em Tessalônica. No entanto, ele nem mesmo comia de graça o alimento de alguém e podia lembrar-lhes que, "por labor e labuta, noite e dia, trabalhávamos para não impor a nenhum de vós um fardo dispendioso", não porque lhe faltasse autoridade para isso, mas para dar um exemplo que eles pudessem imitar. — 2Te 3:7-10.

Jesus denunciou os escribas e os fariseus, dizendo: "Amarram cargas pesadas e as põem nos ombros dos homens, mas eles mesmos não estão dispostos nem a movê-las com o dedo." (Mt 23:2, 4) Jesus referia-se evidentemente às minuciosas regras e pesadas tradições que estes homens impunham ao povo comum, sem estarem dispostos a levantar mesmo que fosse apenas um pequeno regulamento para lhe facilitar as coisas para este. — Mt 23:13, 23, 24.

Por outro lado, Jesus libertou espiritualmente as pessoas de tais tradições opressivas. (Jo 8:31, 32) Convidava os que labutavam e que estavam sobrecarregados a vir a ele, a tomar sobre si o jugo dele e a tornar-se seus discípulos, porque era de temperamento brando e humilde de coração, e eles achariam assim revigoramento para a sua alma. Disse: "Meu jugo é benévolo e minha carga é leve." (Mt 11:28-30) Cristo não era duro ou opressivo, mas bondoso, e os que se chegavam a ele eram tratados corretamente. O jugo de Cristo, em comparação com aquele que os tradicionalistas religiosos impunham ao povo, seria comparativamente leve. Jesus talvez quisesse dizer também que aqueles que estavam cansados do fardo do pecado e do erro deviam chegar a ele para receber revigoramento espiritual. Levar a "carga" leve de Jesus evidentemente envolvia também conhecer os requisitos divinos e cumpri-los, algo que Jesus fazia com prazer durante a sua vida e seu ministério terrestres. (Jo 17:3; 4:34) Paulo, mais tarde, comparou a carreira cristã com estar numa pista de corrida e exortou os concrentes a se aliviarem, dizendo-lhes que pusessem de lado "todo peso e o pecado que facilmente nos enlaça", e que 'corressem com perseverança a carreira que se nos apresenta', ao passo que olhassem atentamente para "o Agente Principal e Aperfeiçoador da nossa fé, Jesus". — He 12:1, 2.

Levar os Fardos de Outros. Paulo escreveu aos gálatas: "Prossegui em levar os fardos [ou: "coisas penosas"; literalmente: "coisas pesadas"] uns dos outros e cumpri assim a lei do Cristo." (Gál 6:2 n.) Aqui, para "fardos", o apóstolo usou a palavra bá·re, plural de bá·ros, palavra grega sempre usada para indicar algo penoso ou pesado. Certamente, o pecado e, portanto, o fardo, de alguém dar um "passo em falso" (mencionado no versículo anterior), não seria leve, mas pesado. No entanto, no versículo 5, o apóstolo declara: "Pois cada um levará a sua própria carga", isto é, sua carga de responsabilidade. Para "carga", Paulo usou aqui a palavra grega for·tí·on, que se refere a algo levado ou carregado, sem qualquer referência ao peso do objeto. De modo que fez uma distinção entre "fardos" e "carga" nestes versículos. Isto indicaria que, se um cristão entrasse em dificuldades espirituais muito difíceis para ele suportar, concrentes o auxiliariam, ajudando assim a levar os fardos de outro. Tais pessoas demonstrariam amor e cumpririam assim a lei do Cristo. (Jo 13:34, 35) Isto se harmoniza com o que Paulo acabava de dizer, conforme registrado em Gálatas 6:1, a respeito de tentar restabelecer espiritualmente um homem, algo que pode ser possível por meio de amor, benignidade e oração. (Veja Tg 5:13-16.) Todavia, conforme o apóstolo passou a mostrar, levar os fardos uns dos outros não significa levar a carga de responsabilidade espiritual de outra pessoa para com Deus. No mesmo contexto, Paulo torna claro que a pessoa está enganando a sua própria mente se acha que é alguma coisa, quando não é nada, e o apóstolo exorta o cristão a provar "quais são as suas próprias obras", pois "então terá causa para exultação, apenas com respeito a si próprio e não em comparação com outra pessoa". (Gál 6:3, 4; compare isso com 2Co 10:12.) É então que o apóstolo observa que "cada um levará a sua própria carga" de responsabilidade perante o Juiz Supremo, Jeová Deus.

FARINHA. Veja MOINHO, MÓ.

FARISEUS. Destacada seita religiosa do judaísmo, que existia no primeiro século EC. Segundo alguns peritos, o nome significa literalmente "Separados; Separatistas", referindo-se talvez a se evitar impureza cerimonial ou a manter-se separado dos gentios. Não se sabe com exatidão quando os fariseus tiveram início. Os escritos do historiador judeu Josefo indicam que no tempo de João Hircano I (da segunda metade do segundo século AEC) os fariseus já constituíam um corpo influente. Josefo escreveu: "E sua influência é tão grande junto às massas, que até mesmo quando falam contra um rei ou um sumo sacerdote, imediatamente são cridos." — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XIII, 288 (x, 5).

Josefo fornece também pormenores sobre as crenças dos fariseus. Ele observa: "Eles creem que almas têm poder de sobreviver à morte e que há recompensas e punições debaixo da terra para os que levaram uma vida de virtude ou uma de vício: encarceramento eterno é o destino das almas más, ao passo que as almas boas recebem passagem fácil para uma nova vida." (Jewish Antiquities, XVIII, 14 [i, 3]) "Eles sustentam que toda alma é imperecível, mas que só a alma dos bons passa para outro corpo, ao passo que a alma dos iníquos sofre punição eterna." Sobre as ideias deles a respeito do destino ou da providência, Josefo relata: "[Eles] atribuem tudo ao Destino e a Deus; acreditam que agir corretamente ou de outro modo depende, na realidade, na maior parte dos homens, mas que em cada ação o Destino coopera." — The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), II, 162, 163 (viii, 14).

As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs revelam que os fariseus jejuavam duas vezes por semana, pagavam escrupulosamente o dízimo (Mt 9:14; Mr 2:18; Lu 5:33; 11:42; 18:11, 12) e não concordavam com os saduceus que diziam "não haver nem ressurreição, nem anjo, nem espírito". (At 23:8) Orgulhavam-se de ser justos (na realidade, autojustos) e desprezavam o povo comum. (Lu 18:11, 12; Jo 7:47-49) A fim de impressionar outros com a sua justiça, os fariseus ampliavam suas caixinhas com textos, que usavam como proteção, e alargavam as orlas das suas vestes. (Mt 23:5) Amavam o dinheiro (Lu 16:14) e desejavam ter destaque e títulos lisonjeiros. (Mt 23:6, 7; Lu 11:43) Os fariseus eram tão preconcebidos na sua aplicação da Lei, que tornavam-na pesada para o povo, insistindo em que fosse observada segundo os conceitos e as tradições deles. (Mt 23:4) Perdiam completamente de vista os assuntos importantes, a saber, a justiça, a misericórdia, a fidelidade e o amor a Deus. (Mt 23:23; Lu 11:41-44) Os fariseus faziam muito empenho de fazer prosélitos. — Mt 23:15.

As questões principais sobre as quais contenderam com Cristo Jesus envolviam a observância do sábado (Mt 12:1, 2; Mr 2:23, 24; Lu 6:1, 2), a aderência à tradição (Mt 15:1, 2; Mr 7:1-5) e a associação com pecadores e cobradores de impostos (Mt 9:11; Mr 2:16; Lu 5:30). Parece que os fariseus pensavam que a associação com pessoas que não observavam a Lei segundo o conceito deles resultava em aviltamento. (Lu 7:36-39) Por isso, quando Cristo Jesus se associava e até mesmo comia com pecadores e cobradores de impostos, isto os induziu a objetar. (Lu 15:1, 2) Os fariseus achavam falta em Jesus e nos seus discípulos porque estes não praticavam a lavagem tradicional das mãos. (Mt 15:1, 2; Mr 7:1-5; Lu 11:37, 38) Mas, Jesus expôs os raciocínios errados deles e mostrou que eram violadores da lei de Deus, por aderirem a tradições inventadas pelo homem. (Mt 15:3-11; Mr 7:6-15; Lu 11:39-44) Os fariseus, em vez de se alegrarem e de glorificarem a Deus com respeito às curas milagrosas realizadas por Cristo Jesus no sábado, ficaram cheios de ira por causa do que eles julgavam ser uma violação da lei do sábado, e por isso tramaram matar Jesus. (Mt 12:9-14; Mr 3:1-6; Lu 6:7-11; 14:1-6) A um cego que Jesus tinha curado no sábado, disseram a respeito de Jesus: "Este não é homem de Deus, porque não observa o sábado." — Jo 9:16.

A atitude demonstrada pelos fariseus mostrava que eles não eram justos e puros no íntimo. (Mt 5:20; 23:26) Iguais aos demais judeus, precisavam arrepender-se. (Veja Mt 3:7, 8; Lu 7:30.) Mas a maioria deles preferiu permanecer espiritualmente cega (Jo 9:40) e intensificou sua oposição ao Filho de Deus. (Mt 21:45, 46; Jo 7:32; 11:43-53, 57) Havia fariseus que acusavam falsamente a Jesus de expulsar demônios por meio do governante dos demônios (Mt 9:34; 12:24) e de ser testemunha falsa. (Jo 8:13) Certos fariseus tentaram intimidar o Filho de Deus (Lu 13:31), exigiram que lhes mostrasse um sinal (Mt 12:38; 16:1; Mr 8:11), esforçaram-se a enlaçá-lo na sua palavra (Mt 22:15; Mr 12:13; Lu 11:53, 54) e de outro modo tentaram testá-lo por meio de perguntas (Mt 19:3; 22:34-36; Mr 10:2; Lu 17:20). Jesus, por fim, silenciou as interrogações deles por perguntar-lhes como era possível que o senhor de Davi também fosse filho de Davi. (Mt 22:41-46) A turba que mais tarde prendeu Jesus no jardim de Getsêmani incluía fariseus (Jo 18:3-5, 12, 13), e havia fariseus entre os que pediram que Pilatos fizesse o sepulcro de Jesus seguro para que seu cadáver não pudesse ser furtado. — Mt 27:62-64.

Durante o ministério terrestre de Cristo Jesus, os fariseus exerciam tanta influência, que pessoas de destaque tinham medo de confessá-lo abertamente. (Jo 12:42, 43) Um destes temerosos evidentemente foi Nicodemos, ele mesmo fariseu. (Jo 3:1, 2; 7:47-52; 19:39) Pode ter havido também fariseus que não mostravam amarga oposição ou que mais tarde se tornaram cristãos. Por exemplo, o fariseu Gamaliel deu conselho contra a interferência na obra dos cristãos (At 5:34-39), e o fariseu Saulo (Paulo) de Tarso tornou-se apóstolo de Jesus Cristo. — At 26:5; Fil 3:5.

FARPAR. Um dos dois "rios de Damasco" que Naamã considerava superiores a "todas as águas de Israel". (2Rs 5:12) Mencionar Naamã o Farpar em segundo lugar talvez indique que este era a corrente menor. Este rio usualmente é associado com o Nahr el-ʼAʽwaj. Além do Nahr Barada (identificado com o Abana), é o único rio independente na região de Damasco. Mas o volume de água do ʼAʽwaj é de cerca de uma quarta parte do de Barada. As correntes menores que se unem para formar o ʼAʽwaj emergem nas encostas orientais do monte Hermom e se juntam a uns 30 km ao SO de Damasco. Deste ponto em diante, o rio serpenteia através dum profundo canal rochoso até finalmente se perder num pântano ao SE de Damasco. A distância em linha reta abrangida por este rio (incluindo suas fontes) é de cerca de 64 km.

A principal objeção levantada à identificação acima é que o ʼAʽwaj na realidade não é um 'rio de Damasco', visto que corre uns 15 km ou mais ao S desta cidade. Por este motivo, alguns preferem identificar o Farpar com o Nahr Taura, um braço do Nahr Barada. Todavia, a referência de Naamã a Damasco pode ter incluído a planície de Damasco, atravessada pelo Nahr el-ʼAʽwaj.

FAVAS [hebr.: pohl]. O termo hebraico corresponde ao árabe ful e é identificado com a fava, Vicia faba, planta anual cultivada extensamente na Síria e na Palestina. Este tipo de leguminosa tem sido encontrado em sarcófagos egípcios de múmias, indicando sua utilização no Egito desde a antiguidade.

A planta é robusta e ereta, atinge uma altura de cerca de 1 m e produz um suave perfume quando em flor. As vagens maduras são grandes e intumescidas, e as sementes são marrons ou pretas. Plantadas depois das primeiras chuvas outonais, usualmente são colhidas em fins da primavera, perto do fim da colheita da cevada e do trigo. As plantas são joeiradas de forma bem semelhante aos cereais. Como alimento, as vagens ainda verdes podem ser cozidas inteiras como legume, ao passo que as sementes maduras frequentemente são cozidas com azeite e carne.

Quando Davi se retirou de Jerusalém e cruzou o Jordão, por causa da revolta de Absalão, seu grupo foi acolhido em Maanaim por uma delegação que ofereceu voluntariamente equipamento e alimentos, inclusive favas. (2Sa 17:24-29) Mandou-se a Ezequiel misturar favas com lentilhas e grãos para fazer um pão grosseiro a ser comido por peso, retratando condições de fome. — Ez 4:9, 10.

FÉ. A palavra "fé" traduz a grega pí·stis, que primariamente transmite a ideia de confiança, fidúcia, firme persuasão. Dependendo do contexto, a palavra grega pode também ser entendida como significando "fidelidade". — 1Te 3:7; Tit 2:10.

As Escrituras nos dizem: "A fé é a expectativa certa de coisas esperadas, a demonstração evidente de realidades, embora não observadas." (He 11:1) "Expectativa certa" traduz a palavra grega hy·pó·sta·sis. Este termo é comum em antigos documentos comerciais de papiro. Transmite a ideia de algo subjacente a condições visíveis e que garante uma posse futura. Em vista disso, Moulton e Milligan sugerem a seguinte versão: "A fé é o título de propriedade de coisas esperadas." (Vocabulary of the Greek Testament [Vocabulário do Testamento Grego], 1963, p. 660) A palavra grega é·leg·khos, vertida por "demonstração evidente", transmite a ideia de produzir evidência que demonstra alguma coisa, especialmente algo contrário ao que aparenta ser. Esta evidência torna assim claro aquilo que não se discerniu antes e deste modo refuta aquilo que apenas aparentava ser assim. "A demonstração evidente", ou a evidência para se ter convicção, é tão positiva ou poderosa, que se diz que ela é a fé.

A fé, portanto, é a base de esperança e a evidência para se ter convicção a respeito de realidades não vistas. Todo o conjunto de verdades transmitidas por Jesus Cristo e seus discípulos inspirados constitui a "fé" cristã. (Jo 18:37; Gál 1:7-9; At 6:7; 1Ti 5:8) A fé cristã baseia-se na completa Palavra de Deus, que inclui as Escrituras Hebraicas, as quais Jesus e os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs frequentemente citaram em apoio das suas declarações.

A fé baseia-se em evidência concreta. As obras criativas visíveis atestam a existência de um Criador invisível. (Ro 1:20) As ocorrências reais durante o ministério e a vida terrestre de Jesus Cristo identificam-no como o Filho de Deus. (Mt 27:54; veja JESUS CRISTO.) O registro que Deus forneceu às suas criaturas terrestres serve de base válida para se crer que ele com certeza fará provisões para os seus servos, e seus antecedentes como Dador e Restaurador da vida fornecem ampla evidência da credibilidade da esperança da ressurreição. (Mt 6:26, 30, 33; At 17:31; 1Co 15:3-8, 20, 21) Outrossim, a fidedignidade da Palavra de Deus e o cumprimento exato das suas profecias incutem confiança na realização de todas as Suas promessas. (Jos 23:14) Assim, destas muitas maneiras, "a fé segue à coisa ouvida". — Ro 10:17; compare isso com Jo 4:7-30, 39-42; At 14:8-10.

De modo que a fé não é credulidade. A pessoa que talvez zombe da fé usualmente tem ela mesma fé em amigos provados e de confiança. O cientista tem fé nos princípios do seu ramo de ciência. Baseia novas experiências nas descobertas passadas e espera obter novas descobertas à base das coisas já confirmadas como verdadeiras. Do mesmo modo, o lavrador prepara o solo e lança sementes, esperando, como em anos anteriores, que a semente brote e que as plantas cresçam ao receberem a necessária umidade e luz solar. Portanto, a fé na estabilidade das leis naturais que governam o universo realmente constitui a base para os planos e as atividades do homem. O sábio escritor de Eclesiastes alude a esta estabilidade: "Também o sol raiou e o sol se pôs, e vem ofegante ao seu lugar onde vai raiar. O vento vai para o sul e faz o giro para o norte. Gira e gira continuamente em volta, e o vento retorna logo aos seus giros. Todas as torrentes hibernais correm para o mar, contudo, o próprio mar não está cheio. Ao lugar de onde correm as torrentes hibernais, para lá elas voltam a fim de sair correndo." — Ec 1:5-7.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra 'a·mán e outras intimamente aparentadas com ela transmitem o sentido de fidedignidade, fidelidade, firmeza, constância, estar firmemente estabelecido, duradouro. (Êx 17:12; De 28:59; 1Sa 2:35; 2Sa 7:16; Sal 37:3) Um substantivo aparentado com ela ('eméth) usualmente denota "verdade", mas também "fidelidade" ou "fidedignidade". (2Cr 15:3 n.; 2Sa 15:20; compare isso com Ne 7:2 n.) O conhecido termo "Amém" (hebr.: 'a·mén) também deriva de 'a·mán. — Veja AMÉM.

Exemplos Antigos de Fé. Cada um dos da "tão grande nuvem de testemunhas", mencionada por Paulo (He 12:1), tinha uma base válida para ter fé. Por exemplo, Abel certamente conhecia a promessa de Deus a respeito dum "descendente [lit.: semente]", que machucaria a cabeça da "serpente". E ele observava evidências tangíveis do cumprimento da sentença de Jeová proferida contra seus pais no Éden. Fora do Éden, Adão e sua família comiam pão no suor do seu rosto, porque o solo era amaldiçoado, e, portanto, produzia espinhos e abrolhos. É provável que Abel observasse o desejo ardente que Eva tinha de seu marido e que Adão dominava sua esposa. Sem dúvida, sua mãe comentava a acompanhante dor da sua gravidez. Daí, também, a entrada do jardim do Éden estava sendo guardada por querubins e pela lâmina chamejante duma espada. (Gên 3:14-19, 24) Tudo isso constituía uma "demonstração evidente", que dava a Abel a certeza de que haveria libertação por meio da 'semente da promessa'. Portanto, induzido pela fé, "ofereceu a Deus um sacrifício", que mostrou ser de maior valor do que o de Caim. — He 11:1, 4.

Abraão tinha uma base firme para ter fé na ressurreição, porque ele e Sara passaram por um restabelecimento milagroso das suas faculdades reprodutivas, o que, em certo sentido, era comparável a uma ressurreição, permitindo que a linhagem de Abraão continuasse através de Sara. Isaque nasceu em resultado desse milagre. Quando se lhe mandou que oferecesse Isaque, Abraão tinha fé em que Deus ressuscitaria seu filho. Baseava esta fé na promessa de Deus: "O que será chamado teu descendente [ou: semente] será por intermédio de Isaque." — Gên 21:12; He 11:11, 12, 17-19.

Evidência de convicção genuína estava também envolvida no caso daqueles que vieram ou foram levados a Jesus para ser curados. Mesmo que não tivessem sido testemunhas oculares, pelo menos teriam ouvido falar das obras poderosas de Jesus. Daí, à base do que viram ou ouviram, concluíram que Jesus podia curar também a eles. Outrossim, estavam familiarizados com a Palavra de Deus e assim sabiam dos milagres realizados pelos profetas em tempos passados. Ao ouvirem Jesus falar, alguns concluíram que ele era "O Profeta" e outros que ele era "o Cristo". Em vista disso, era bem apropriado que Jesus, ocasionalmente, dissesse aos curados: "A tua fé te fez ficar bom." Se essas pessoas não tivessem exercido fé em Jesus, não se teriam dirigido a ele, e, portanto, não teriam sido curadas. — Jo 7:40, 41; Mt 9:22; Lu 17:19.

Do mesmo modo, a grande fé do oficial do exército que rogou a Jesus a favor do seu servo fundava-se em evidência, à base da qual ele concluiu que bastava Jesus 'dizer a palavra' para resultar na cura do seu servo. (Mt 8:5-10, 13) Todavia, notamos que Jesus curou a todos os que se chegaram a ele, não exigindo maior ou menor fé segundo a doença deles, nem deixando de curar a qualquer destes com a desculpa de que não podia curá-los porque a fé deles não era bastante forte. Jesus realizou estas curas como testemunho, para firmar a fé. No seu próprio território, onde se expressava muita infidelidade, ele preferiu não realizar muitas obras poderosas, não por não ser capaz disso, mas porque o povo se negava a escutar e não o merecia. — Mt 13:58.

Fé Cristã. Para ser aceitável a Deus, é agora necessário exercer fé em Jesus Cristo, e isto torna possível obter uma condição justa perante Deus. (Gál 2:16) Os que não têm tal fé são rejeitados por Jeová. — Jo 3:36; compare isso com He 11:6.

A fé não é propriedade de todos, visto que é fruto do espírito de Deus. (2Te 3:2; Gál 5:22) E a fé cristã não é estática, mas cresce. (2Te 1:3) Portanto, a solicitação dos discípulos de Jesus: "Dá-nos mais fé", era bem apropriada, e ele de fato lhes deu base para maior fé. Forneceu-lhes maior evidência e entendimento em que basear a sua fé. — Lu 17:5.

Toda a vida do cristão realmente é governada pela fé, habilitando-o a vencer obstáculos montanhescos que impediriam seu serviço a Deus. (2Co 5:7; Mt 21:21, 22) Além disso, precisa haver obras coerentes com a fé e em demonstração dela, mas não se requerem obras da Lei mosaica. (Tg 2:21-26; Ro 3:20) Provações podem fortalecer a fé. A fé serve de escudo protetor na guerra espiritual do cristão, ajudando-o a vencer o Diabo e a ser vencedor do mundo. — 1Pe 1:6, 7; Ef 6:16; 1Pe 5:9; 1Jo 5:4.

Mas a fé não pode ser pressuposta, porque a falta de fé é 'o pecado que tão facilmente enlaça'. Manter a fé firme requer travar uma luta árdua por ela, resistir aos homens que poderiam mergulhar a pessoa na imoralidade, combater as obras da carne, evitar o laço do materialismo, evitar filosofias e tradições de homens, que poderiam destruir a fé, e, acima de tudo, olhar "atentamente para o Agente Principal e Aperfeiçoador da nossa fé, Jesus". — He 12:1, 2; Ju 3, 4; Gál 5:19-21; 1Ti 6:9, 10; Col 2:8.

FEBE [Puro; Brilhante; Radiante]. Irmã cristã da congregação de Cencreia, do primeiro século. Paulo, na sua carta aos cristãos em Roma, 'recomenda-lhes' esta irmã e pede que lhe deem toda a ajuda necessária, porque ela "se mostrou defensora de muitos, sim, de mim mesmo". (Ro 16:1, 2) Pode ser que Febe tenha entregue a carta de Paulo em Roma, ou, então, que tenha acompanhado o portador.

Paulo refere-se a Febe como "ministra da congregação que está em Cencreia". Isto suscita a questão de em que sentido se usa aqui o termo di·á·ko·nos (ministro). Alguns tradutores encaram o termo em sentido oficial e por isso o vertem por "diaconisa" (BJ; LR; MC). Mas as Escrituras não contêm nenhuma provisão para servas ministeriais. A tradução da Liga de Estudos Bíblicos, bem como outras, vertem o termo em sentido geral como aquela "que está a serviço". No entanto, a referência de Paulo evidentemente tem algo que ver com a divulgação das boas novas, o ministério cristão, e se referiu a Febe como ministra associada com a congregação em Cencreia. — Veja At 2:17, 18.

Febe serviu como "defensora de muitos". O termo traduzido por "defensora" (pro·stá·tis) tem o sentido básico de "protetora" ou "socorredora", de modo que dá a entender não mera cordialidade, mas ir em auxílio de outros em necessidade. Pode também ser vertido por "patrocinadora". A liberdade que Febe tinha para viajar e para prestar serviço notável na congregação talvez indique que ela era viúva e possivelmente dona de certa riqueza material. De modo que ela pode ter estado em condições de usar a sua influência na comunidade a favor dos cristãos que fossem acusados erroneamente, defendendo-os assim; ou talvez lhes tenha provido refúgio em épocas de perigo, servindo de protetora. O registro não fornece pormenores.

FEBRE. Elevação anormal da temperatura do corpo. A febre pode ser um indício da presença duma doença. Embora febre alta possa resultar em perda de peso, de fluídos do corpo e de sal, acompanhada de dores de cabeça e de outros incômodos, a febre, por si só, frequentemente faz parte da luta do organismo contra uma infecção. Todavia, quando um dos sintomas destacados duma doença é febre alta, o nome da febre pode indicar isso, como no caso da febre amarela e da febre do dengue.

A malária é uma das doenças febris mais comuns (isto é, doenças acompanhadas por febre) no Oriente Médio. A disenteria é outra doença febril, uma que é especificamente mencionada na Bíblia. (At 28:8) Esta enfermidade caracteriza-se por uma severa inflamação do cólon, às vezes produzindo a evacuação de sangue e muco. Em Levítico 26:16, a palavra hebraica qad·dá·hhath é traduzida por "febre ardente"; em Mateus 8:14, o verbo grego py·rés·so significa "atacada de febre", ou, literalmente, "ardendo em febre".

Embora a Lei com suas provisões visasse primariamente o benefício espiritual de Israel e mantê-lo separado das nações pagãs, um exame dos regulamentos alimentares e sanitários da Lei revela que ela tinha um efeito benéfico secundário por proteger a nação contra as causas e a difusão de muitas doenças, inclusive certas doenças infecciosas, febris.

(1) A alimentação dos hebreus normalmente não incluía muita carne, mas quando a família queria abater um animal doméstico para obter carne, levava o animal ao santuário (a menos que a família morasse muito longe, depois da entrada na Terra da Promessa). (Le 17:3-5; De 12:20-27) Eles comiam a carne depois de o sacerdote ter oferecido parte dela no altar e recebido a sua porção. Alguns sacrifícios de participação em comum deviam ser consumidos no mesmo dia. Outros não podiam ser consumidos depois do segundo dia, mas a carne tinha de ser queimada. Tomando-se em consideração o clima quente da Palestina e a falta de refrigeração, estes requisitos protegiam os israelitas contra doenças febris que podiam resultar de toxinas produzidas na multiplicação rápida de certos organismos, como o Staphylococcus aureus e a Salmonella, em carne que não é conservada sob refrigeração. (2) A carne de certos animais proibidos, tais como porcos, lebres, animais e aves necrófagos, roedores, e certos animais aquáticos e peixes, é conhecida como possível fator contribuinte para diversas doenças frequentemente acompanhadas por febre. (Le 11:1-31) (3) Os regulamentos sanitários ajudavam a proteger os utensílios de cozinha e também o suprimento de água potável contra a contaminação, fonte de febre tifoide e outras doenças febris. (Le 11:32-38) (4) Quem tocasse no cadáver dum animal que tivesse morrido sozinho ou quem comesse dele tinha de purificar-se, prevenindo assim a difusão de organismos identificados com certas doenças febris. (Le 11:39, 40) (5) As leis que ordenavam a cada pessoa cobrir as matérias fecais, também cobrir o sangue com pó, protegiam contra doenças febris tais como a hepatite. (Le 17:13; De 23:12, 13) (6) As leis de moral praticamente eliminariam todas as doenças sexualmente transmissíveis, as quais podem afetar todos os órgãos do corpo e que frequentemente são acompanhadas por febre. (Le 18:20, 22, 23) (7) As leis de quarentena resultavam em impedir a difusão de doenças infecciosas. — Le 13; Núm 19:11, 12, 16; 31:19.

Jeová advertiu os israelitas que, se agissem contrário aos mandamentos dele, sofreriam esgotamento por motivo de fome, fator contribuinte em muitas doenças febris; padeceriam de tuberculose e febre ardente, inflamação e calor febril; sofreriam de furúnculos, erupções da pele (doenças que frequentemente vêm acompanhadas de febre) e cegueira. (Le 26:14-16; De 28:22, 27) Tudo isso se cumpriu depois das repetidas rebeliões de Israel contra Jeová e das suas violações das leis Dele. — Ez 4:16, 17; 33:10.

Quando Jesus Cristo esteve na terra, ele curou muitos doentes que padeciam de febre. Um caso foi o da sogra do apóstolo Simão Pedro. (Mt 8:14, 15; Mr 1:29-31) Lucas, evidentemente porque era médico, traz à atenção o grau de febre neste caso, classificando-a de "febre alta". (Lu 4:38) Em certa ocasião, em Caná, Jesus curou o filho dum assistente do Rei Herodes Ântipas, embora o menino febril, às portas da morte, estivesse a uns 26 km de distância, em Cafarnaum. Em resultado disso, o homem e toda a sua família tornaram-se crentes. — Jo 4:46-54.

O apóstolo Paulo usou o poder de curar, dado por Deus, um dos dons milagrosos dado por meio de Jesus Cristo a certos membros da primitiva congregação cristã (1Co 12:7-9, 11, 30), para curar o pai de Públio, homem principal e proprietário de terras da ilha de Malta, que sofria de febre e de disenteria. Ao saberem disso, os nativos da ilha vieram a Paulo, e ele curou muitos de suas diversas doenças. — At 28:7-9.

FECHADURA. Dispositivo para trancar uma porta ou um portão para impedir a entrada. (Jz 3:23, 24; Ne 3:3, 6, 13-15) A fechadura dos tempos antigos usualmente consistia em uma lingueta de madeira, tipo ferrolho, que deslizava transversalmente por uma cavidade numa escora vertical presa à porta. Para trancar a porta, a lingueta era enfiada num encaixe na ombreira da porta e presa por pinos de madeira ou de ferro que caíam em buracos na lingueta. Para destrancar a porta, inseria-se uma chave para levantar os pinos, possibilitando assim a volta da lingueta à sua posição destrancada. O encaixe, ou buraco, em que se enfiava a lingueta foi mencionado pela donzela sulamita ao contar o sonho que teve, no qual seu amado pastor foi mantido afastado dela por uma porta trancada. — Cân 5:2-5; veja CHAVE.

FEIRA, MERCADO. Uma praça que servia como centro de compras e vendas, e como lugar para reuniões públicas nas cidades e vilas do antigo Oriente Médio e do mundo romano. Nas cidades gregas e romanas, estátuas e prédios públicos, inclusive edifícios religiosos, cercavam a praça. Parece que se resolviam algumas questões jurídicas nestas feiras. (Veja At 16:19-21.) Na feira podiam-se também obter notícias, tanto locais como do exterior, pois era ali que as pessoas se reuniam e falavam sobre os mais recentes acontecimentos. — Veja At 17:17-21.

Nas feiras, ou praças de mercado, da Palestina, podia-se encontrar crianças brincando. (Mt 11:16; Lu 7:32) Homens desempregados, bem como os dispostos a serem contratados por um dia, talvez ficassem por ali. (Veja Mt 20:3, 4.) Os orgulhosos escribas e fariseus queriam ser notados pelas multidões ali e ser cumprimentados em harmonia com a sua presumida posição elevada. (Mt 23:2, 6, 7; Mr 12:38; Lu 11:43; 20:46) Ao retornarem do mercado, os fariseus tradicionalistas e outros judeus purificavam-se por aspersão antes de comerem alguma coisa. — Mr 7:3, 4.

Cristo Jesus, enquanto na terra, curou pessoas nas feiras. (Mr 6:56) E o apóstolo Paulo, em Atenas, raciocinava diariamente, "na feira, com os que por acaso estivessem ali". — At 17:16, 17; veja ÁPIO, FEIRA DE.

FEITICEIRO. Veja MAGIA E FEITIÇARIA.

FEITIÇO. Veja ENCANTAMENTO.

FEL. Líquido produzido pelo fígado e armazenado na vesícula biliar, pequeno saco em forma de pera situado debaixo do lado direito do fígado. A vesícula biliar pode conter de uma só vez cerca de 43 g de fel, ou bílis. É um líquido extremamente amargo, amarelo ou esverdeado, que o organismo usa na digestão. O fel passou a ser associado com aquilo que é amargo ou venenoso, e esta palavra é usada assim na Bíblia. — At 8:23.

Jó, descrevendo a sua experiência dolorosa e amarga, fala figurativamente da sua vesícula biliar como derramada na terra. (Jó 16:1, 13) Mais tarde, Zofar, em linguagem figurada, insinua a acusação de que Jó tem agido iniquamente e que o seu "alimento" será nele como "o fel [ou veneno] de najas". Adverte-o de que uma arma lhe passará "pelo fel [vesícula biliar]". (Jó 20:1, 14, 25) A palavra hebraica traduzida por "fel" é aparentada com a palavra para "amargo". — De 32:32; Jó 13:26.

A palavra grega para fel, ou bílis, é kho·lé. — Veja PLANTA VENENOSA.

FELICIDADE. Felicidade é uma condição de bem-estar caracterizada por uma relativa permanência, por emoções que vão desde o mero contentamento até uma profunda e intensa alegria de viver, e pelo desejo natural de que continue. Difere assim do mero prazer, o qual pode derivar de simples contato e estímulo casual.

A palavra hebraica para "feliz" é 'é·sher (Sal 40:4), ao passo que o verbo aparentado, 'a·shár, significa "chamar feliz". (Gên 30:13) Estes termos hebraicos são usados com referência a humanos. Frequentemente, denotam o resultado duma ação positiva, tal como a de ter consideração para com alguém humilde ou de ter temor a Jeová. (Sal 41:1; 112:1) A palavra grega vertida por "feliz" é ma·ká·ri·os.

As felicidades descritas nos Salmos e nos Provérbios, e especialmente as proferidas por Jesus Cristo no seu Sermão do Monte, são muitas vezes chamadas de "beatitudes" ou "bem-aventuranças". Todavia, "felicidade" é a tradução mais exata dos termos bíblicos usados, porque tanto o hebraico como o grego têm palavras distintas para "abençoar; bendizer" (hebr.: ba·rákh; gr.: eu·lo·gé·o). Além disso, "abençoado, bendito" contêm a ideia da ação de abençoar ou bendizer, ao passo que "feliz" traz à mente o estado ou a condição resultante da bênção de Deus. Muitas versões modernas vertem 'a·shár e ma·ká·ri·os por "feliz", "felicidade". (BJ, BLH, BV, CBC, CK, JB, NM e outras versões.) Ma·ká·ri·os é traduzido por "feliz" em CBC e PIB, em Atos 26:2 e Romanos 14:22.

Jeová e Jesus Cristo. Jeová é o "Deus feliz", e Seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, é chamado de "o feliz e único Potentado". (1Ti 1:11; 6:15) Apesar de a soberania de Jeová ter sido desafiada pela introdução da iniquidade, tanto no céu como na Terra (veja JEOVÁ), ele tem certeza do cumprimento dos seus propósitos; nada pode ser feito além do que a sua vontade permite. (Is 46:10, 11; 55:10, 11) Sua longanimidade em permitir condições que estão no seu poder de mudar tem tido um objetivo ou fim específico; por isso, ele é feliz. O apóstolo Paulo escreve: "Deus, pois, embora tendo vontade de demonstrar o seu furor e de dar a conhecer o seu poder, tolerou com muita longanimidade os vasos do furor, feitos próprios para a destruição, a fim de dar a conhecer as riquezas de sua glória nos vasos de misericórdia, que ele preparou de antemão para glória." — Ro 9:22-24.

Portanto, conforme o salmista exclama: "A glória de Jeová mostrará ser por tempo indefinido. Jeová se alegrará com os seus trabalhos." (Sal 104:31) Ele é o maior e principal Dador, que nunca muda, nem permite que sua generosidade e sua atitude misericordiosa, amorosa, se transformem em amargura por causa da ingratidão de criaturas. "Toda boa dádiva e todo presente perfeito vem de cima, pois desce do Pai das luzes celestiais, com quem não há variação da virada da sombra." (Tg 1:17) Seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, que deposita plena confiança no seu Pai e sempre faz as coisas que Lhe agradam, é feliz. (Jo 8:29) Mesmo quando padecia provações e sofrimentos, Jesus tinha alegria íntima. — He 12:2; compare isso com Mt 5:10-12.

Em que se baseia a verdadeira felicidade?

Todas as felicidades prometidas na Bíblia dependem duma relação correta com Deus; todas elas são alcançadas à base do amor a Deus e do serviço fiel prestado a ele. A verdadeira felicidade não pode ser alcançada à parte da obediência a Jeová. Sua bênção é essencial para a felicidade, como uma das suas 'boas dádivas' e dos seus 'presentes perfeitos'.

Não se encontra felicidade no acúmulo de riqueza material ou de poder. Jesus disse: "Há mais felicidade em dar do que há em receber." (At 20:35) Àquele que mostra consideração para com o de condição humilde, tendo assim a felicidade de dar, se promete: "O próprio Jeová o guardará e preservará vivo. Será chamado feliz na terra." (Sal 41:1, 2) As coisas que contribuem para a verdadeira felicidade são o conhecimento de Jeová, a sabedoria provinda dele, e até mesmo Sua correção e disciplina. (Pr 2:6; 3:13, 18; Sal 94:12) A pessoa realmente feliz confia em Jeová (Pr 16:20), agrada-se da Sua lei e anda nela (Sal 1:1, 2; 112:1), observa o juízo (Sal 106:3) e teme a Deus (Sal 128:1).

Nação Feliz. A felicidade pode ser o quinhão de toda uma nação, ou povo, se esta nação realmente segue a Jeová como seu Deus e obedece às leis Dele. (Sal 33:12; 144:15) A nação de Israel, depois da administração justa de Davi e durante o tempo em que o Rei Salomão acatava a lei de Jeová, estava segura e feliz, igual "aos grãos de areia junto ao mar, comendo e bebendo, e alegrando-se". (1Rs 4:20, 25; 10:8; 2Cr 9:7) Isto demonstra a influência dum governo justo sobre uma nação. (Veja Pr 29:2, 18.) Jesus tornou claro o requisito para a felicidade nacional aos judeus nacionalistas, os quais pensavam que, por serem descendentes carnais de Abraão e Jacó, eles eram 'a nação feliz, cujo Deus é Jeová'. (Sal 33:12) Ele lhes disse claramente que o Reino de Deus seria tirado deles e "dado a uma nação que produza os seus frutos". (Mt 21:43) O apóstolo Pedro aplicou mais tarde o termo "nação" aos que são os espirituais em união com Cristo, dizendo: "Vós sois 'raça' escolhida, sacerdócio real, nação santa, povo para propriedade especial, para que divulgueis as excelências daquele que vos chamou da escuridão para a sua maravilhosa luz." — 1Pe 2:9.

Conselho de Cristo sobre a Felicidade. Jesus iniciou notavelmente seu Sermão do Monte por enumerar nove felicidades, mencionando qualidades que colocam a pessoa no favor de Deus, com a perspectiva de herdar o Reino dos céus. (Mt 5:1-12) Nestas felicidades, é notável que nem a condição em que alguém se encontra por causa do tempo ou do imprevisto, nem os atos puramente humanitários que talvez realize, trazem a bênção de felicidade. A verdadeira felicidade provém das coisas que têm que ver com a espiritualidade, a adoração de Deus e o cumprimento das promessas de Deus. Por exemplo, Jesus diz: "Bem-aventurados os pobres de espírito . . ." (Al), ou, vertido de modo mais compreensível: "Felizes os cônscios de sua necessidade espiritual, porque a eles pertence o reino dos céus." (Mt 5:3) Ele prossegue: "Felizes os que pranteiam, porque serão consolados." (Mt 5:4) É evidente que ele não se referia a todos os que pranteiam por algum motivo. O pranto seria por motivo de seu estado espiritual pobre, sua condição pecaminosa e as circunstâncias aflitivas resultantes da pecaminosidade humana, bem como da sua fome e sede da justiça. Tais pranteadores seriam notados e favorecidos por Deus com a bênção de satisfação espiritual que Ele lhes daria, assim como Jesus prometeu: "Serão saciados." — Veja 2Co 7:10; Is 61:1-3; Ez 9:4.

No livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), Jesus Cristo, por meio dum mensageiro angélico, proclama sete felicidades. (Re 1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7; 22:14) O livro declara, na sua introdução: "Feliz é quem lê em voz alta, e os que ouvem as palavras desta profecia e observam as coisas escritas nela" (Re 1:3), e na sua conclusão diz: "Felizes aqueles que lavam as suas vestes compridas para que tenham a autoridade de ir às árvores da vida e para que obtenham entrada na cidade [Nova Jerusalém] pelos portões dela." — Re 22:14.

Deleitar-se em Jeová. Em resumo, é evidente que aqueles que obtêm verdadeira felicidade são a "nação santa" de Deus (1Pe 2:9), junto com todos os outros associados com esta nação, que servem e obedecem a Jeová de coração. O salmista diz: "Alegrai-vos em Jeová, ó justos, e dai graças à sua santa recordação." (Sal 97:12) O apóstolo Paulo repete esta admoestação ao escrever à congregação cristã: "Alegrai-vos sempre no Senhor. Mais uma vez direi: Alegrai-vos!" (Fil 4:4) Portanto, a pessoa não pode encontrar felicidade na sua riqueza ou na sua sabedoria, nem nas suas realizações ou no seu poder. Encontra-a no conhecimento de Jeová, que aconselha: "Não se jacte o sábio da sua sabedoria, nem se jacte o poderoso da sua potência. Não se jacte o rico das suas riquezas. Mas quem se jacta, jacte-se da seguinte coisa: de ter perspicácia e de ter conhecimento de mim, que eu sou Jeová, Aquele que usa de benevolência, de juízo e de justiça na terra; porque é destas coisas que me agrado." — Je 9:23, 24.

FÉLIX [do lat.: Feliz]. Procurador da província romana da Judeia, que manteve Paulo preso por dois anos, depois da última visita de Paulo a Jerusalém, por volta de 56 EC. Tácito indica que Félix serviu juntamente com Cumano no cargo de procurador por alguns anos, e, depois, como único procurador da Judeia. (Anais, XII, LIV; Clássicos Jackson, Vol. XXV, pp. 298, 299) Josefo não faz menção de Félix servir em conjunto com Cumano, e, por este motivo, a maioria dos peritos diz que Félix começou a servir como procurador em 52 EC. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XX, 137 [vii, 1]; The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], II, 247, 248 [xii, 8]) Não obstante, à base dos anos de serviço de Félix, Paulo podia dizer-lhe: "Esta nação te tem tido como juiz por muitos anos." — At 24:10.

Historiadores seculares dizem que Félix tinha sido escravo, que seu primeiro nome era Antônio, que o Imperador Cláudio concedeu a ele e Palas, o irmão dele, a liberdade, e que ele era autoridade cruel e imoral. Tácito o descreveu como alguém que "praticava toda espécie de crueldade e lascívia, exercendo o poder de rei com todos os instintos dum escravo". (The Histories [As Histórias], V, IX) Relata-se que ele maquinou o assassinato do sumo sacerdote Jonatã. Suetônio diz que Félix tornou-se marido de três rainhas. (The Lives of the Caesars [A Vida dos Césares], Cláudio, XXVIII) Esta descrição concorda com o que aprendemos na Bíblia sobre Félix.

Depois da prisão de Paulo, Cláudio Lísias, comandante militar romano, temendo pela segurança do seu prisioneiro, se permitisse que Paulo ficasse em Jerusalém, enviou apressadamente o apóstolo a Cesareia, sob forte guarda, 'mandando que os acusadores falassem contra ele' perante Félix. (At 23:23-30) Cinco dias mais tarde, o sumo sacerdote Ananias, certo Tértulo, bem como outros desceram de Jerusalém com acusações absurdas contra Paulo. Félix presidiu ao julgamento, adiando a sentença. Ele ordenou que Paulo continuasse detido, mas com abrandamento da detenção, e que não se proibisse a ninguém do povo de Paulo servi-lo. — At 24:1-23.

Félix, mais tarde, "mandou buscar Paulo e o escutou sobre a crença em Cristo Jesus". Foi nesta ocasião, possivelmente na presença de Drusila, esposa de Félix, que Paulo falou "sobre a justiça e o autodomínio, e o julgamento por vir". Ao ouvir estas coisas, "Félix ficou amedrontado" e disse ao apóstolo: "Por ora vai-te embora, mas, quando eu tiver um tempo oportuno, mandarei buscar-te novamente." Com frequência, durante um período de dois anos, Félix mandava trazer Paulo e conversava com ele, esperando futilmente que o apóstolo lhe desse dinheiro como suborno para ser solto. — At 24:24-27.

Os judeus ressentiam-se muito da administração de Félix. Possivelmente em 58 EC, "Félix foi sucedido por Pórcio Festo; e, visto que Félix desejava ganhar o favor dos judeus, deixou Paulo preso". (At 24:27) Todavia, este gesto por parte de Félix não mitigou as feridas que havia infligido aos judeus; nem impediu que eles mandassem uma delegação a Roma, para insistir na sua causa contra ele. Escapar ele da punição, depois de chamado de volta a Roma, é atribuído apenas à posição favorecida e à influência de seu irmão Palas perante Nero.

Reinos ao Redor de Israel

NA SUA morada na terra que Deus lhe deu, a nação de Israel se viu rodeada por nações que adoravam falsos deuses. Os israelitas haviam saído do Egito, onde animais eram deificados. Ao leste e ao sudeste deles encontravam-se agora Amom, Moabe e Edom — parentes distantes dos israelitas, mas idólatras. Os filisteus politeístas ocupavam a planície costeira ao oeste. Ao norte de Israel, junto à costa, encontravam-se os fenícios, cujas práticas religiosas incluíam a sodomia, a bestialidade e o sacrifício de crianças. E a religião dos sírios destacava representações nuas de deusas cujos gestos enfatizavam a sua sexualidade. A fim de continuar a ser aceitável a Jeová, Israel tinha de manter-se separado das nações em sua volta.

Como salvaguarda para os israelitas, Jeová deu-lhes a Lei mosaica, que constituía um 'muro de separação', para mantê-los apartados das nações que os rodeavam. (Ef 2:14) Não deviam formar alianças com tais nações, nem unir-se em casamento com elas, nem imitar as práticas religiosas delas. (2Cr 16:7; 2Rs 17:13-15) Na medida em que os israelitas obedeciam a essas leis, eles permaneciam um povo santo.

No entanto, pessoas das nações em volta não ficavam impedidas de adorar o verdadeiro Deus. Podiam abandonar seus modos idólatras e tornar-se adoradores de Jeová. "Deus não é parcial." (At 10:34) Ao passo que Jeová mantinha Israel separado, Ele realizava seu propósito de finalmente abençoar pessoas de todas as nações. — Gên 22:18.

O Reino Dividido

APENAS 120 anos depois de Saul se tornar o primeiro rei de Israel, a nação foi dividida. Por quê? Por causa da apostasia do Rei Salomão. Desejoso de agradar às suas esposas estrangeiras, Salomão permitiu que se infiltrasse na nação uma flagrante idolatria, e construiu 'altos' para falsos deuses. Este ecumenismo era abominável para Jeová. Todavia, leal ao seu pacto com Davi, Deus não interrompeu a dinastia davídica. Antes, decretou que se arrancasse da nação parte dela. — 1Rs 11:7-13.

Isto ocorreu em 997 AEC, quando as ações do teimoso filho de Salomão, Roboão, incitaram dez tribos a se rebelar e a constituir um reino, mormente na parte setentrional do país, mas também incluindo as cidades encravadas de Simeão, espalhadas por Judá. Somente as tribos de Benjamim e de Levi permaneceram leais ao reino meridional em Judá.

Jeroboão, primeiro rei do reino setentrional, temia perder a lealdade do seu povo, se este continuasse sua adoração em Jerusalém, de modo que instituiu sua própria religião. Colocou bezerros de ouro em Dã, no extremo norte, e em Betel, apenas a 17 km ao norte de Jerusalém. Empossou também seu próprio sacerdócio e providenciou seus próprios 'dias santificados'. — 1Rs 12:26-33.

Israel tornou-se assim um país dividido, tanto em sentido político como em sentido religioso, uma terra vulnerável à agressão estrangeira e assolada por guerra civil. Cortado da adoração pura de Jeová, o reino de dez tribos mergulhou fundo na corrupção moral e espiritual. Contudo, Jeová continuou a enviar seus profetas para exortá-lo a se arrepender.

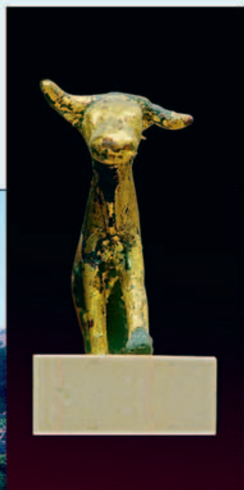
A adoração de Baal tinha destaque no reino setentrional. Esta representação desse falso deus foi encontrada em Ras Xamra, na Síria. Em sua mão direita, ele segura uma clava, aparentemente provocando uma tempestade. Em sua mão esquerda está um raio estilizado com uma ponta de lança e uma planta no topo, fazendo alusão aos benefícios da tempestade.



Beitin, perto da antiga Betel (a pouca distância de Jerusalém). Em Betel, Jeroboão erigiu um bezerro de ouro para adoração (sem dúvida maior do que este bezerro de bronze exibido no Louvre).

As Atividades Proféticas de Elias e de Eliseu

ELIAS era um profeta que demandou uma prova de divindade no monte Carmelo. O reino setentrional estava sendo corrompido pela adoração de Baal. Mas Elias corajosamente desafiou 450 profetas de Baal para provarem que Baal era o verdadeiro Deus. Horas de orações frenéticas da parte deles não produziram nada. Daí, Elias arrumou o sacrifício, encharcou-o repetidas vezes com água, e orou a Jeová. Quando prontamente caiu fogo do céu, consumindo o sacrifício e secando a água, o povo exclamou: "Jeová é o verdadeiro Deus!" Em seguida, Elias ordenou que os profetas de Baal fossem mortos. — 1Rs 18:18-40.

Todavia, Elias ficou com medo quando soube que a Rainha Jezabel tramava matá-lo. Ele fugiu uns 150 km para Berseba e depois percorreu mais 300 km até o monte Sinai. Jeová não rejeitou Elias por sua temporária falta de coragem, mas assegurou-lhe que ainda havia obra profética para ele realizar. — 1Rs 19:1-18.

Eliseu foi o sucessor de Elias. Quando Eliseu foi cercado por carros de guerra sírios, ele teve fé para reconhecer que os realmente cercados eram os exércitos sírios — por uma hoste de carros angélicos! — 2Rs 6:15-17.

Nações Inimigas Que Atacavam Israel

AO REDOR de Israel havia nações inimigas decididas a se apoderar da herança dele. Seria Israel absorvido por elas? Enquanto Israel permanecia fiel, tinha uma decidida vantagem. "O próprio Jeová lutava por Israel." — Jos 10:14.

Isto foi vividamente demonstrado durante o governo do Rei Jeosafá (936-c. 911 AEC). As forças conjuntas de Amom, Moabe e Monte Seir vieram contra Judá. Jeosafá apelou para Jeová: "Eis que . . . [chegam] para nos expulsar da nossa posse que nos fizeste possuir. Ó nosso Deus, não executarás neles o julgamento?" Ele, de fato, o faria! Assegurou-se a Judá: "A batalha não é vossa, mas de Deus." Jeová confundiu os inimigos, fazendo com que se matassem uns aos outros. — 2Cr 20:1-23.

Finalmente, depois de lutar por séculos a favor de Israel, Jeová permitiu que nações inimigas o conquistassem. Em 740 AEC, os assírios acabaram com o reino de dez tribos, "porque os filhos de Israel pecaram contra Jeová". (2Rs 17:7-18) Daí, em 607 AEC, por causa da desobediência do reino de duas tribos, este foi destruído pelos babilônios. (2Rs 21:10-15; 22:16, 17) Este período da história de Israel enfatiza a importância de se obedecer a Jeová.

MEGIDO, situada estrategicamente e dominando importantes rotas comerciais e militares, era um foco de interesse internacional em tempos bíblicos. A planície ao sopé do morro em que era situada tornou-se o lugar de muitas batalhas decisivas. Portanto, é apropriado que o livro de Revelação chame a vindoura “guerra do grande dia de Deus, o Todo-Poderoso”, de Har-Magedon (do hebr., significando “Monte de Megido”). Entretanto, esta guerra não será travada junto à literal Megido. Ela envolverá os “reis de toda a terra habitada”. (Re 16:14, 16) Esta vez, nenhum governante humano sairá vencedor. Será o Reino de Deus que se mostrará triunfante sobre todos eles, vindicando a Jeová Deus, o Todo-Poderoso, como Soberano Universal.

O Império Assírio

A ASSÍRIA era um império em cuja história predominam as conquistas militares, frequentemente conjugadas com o tratamento sadístico dispensado aos cativos. Uma das principais influências na vida assíria era a religiosa, e a guerra era encarada como verdadeira expressão da sua religião. O historiador W. B. Wright relata: "Lutar era o negócio daquela nação, e os sacerdotes eram fomentadores incessantes da guerra. Eram sustentados principalmente pelos despojos da conquista, dos quais uma porcentagem fixa era invariavelmente destinada a eles, antes de outros partilharem deles, pois esta raça de saqueadores era excessivamente religiosa." — Ancient Cities (Cidades Antigas), 1886, p. 25.

Tanto a Bíblia como a história secular relatam repetidos contatos entre Israel e a Assíria. Com o tempo, Israel foi obrigado a pagar tributo ao rei da Assíria. Daí, em 740 AEC, Samaria, capital do reino setentrional, foi conquistada, e então milhares foram mandados ao exílio. Permitir Jeová esta ocorrência reflete o nível baixo a que o Israel apóstata tinha decaído. Mas, quando Senaqueribe tentou acrescentar Jerusalém à sua lista de conquistas, um anjo de Jeová aniquilou em uma única noite 185.000 soldados da Assíria. (Is 36:1–37:38) Conforme predito por profetas de Jeová, a Assíria, com o tempo, tornou-se uma ruína desolada, e Babilônia lhe sucedeu no cenário do mundo. — Is 23:13; Sof 2:13.

Fiel à profecia bíblica, Nínive (com a elevação de Cuiunjic em primeiro plano) tornou-se "uma cidade devastada". (Na 2:10) Uma tabuinha da Crônica Babilônica (acima) conta pormenores do saque da antigamente grande cidade pelos babilônios. (Crônica Babilônica M.B. [Museu Britânico] 21901, também conhecida como A Crônica de Gadd ou A Crônica da Queda de Nínive.)

A ARQUEOLOGIA é de interesse para o estudante da Bíblia. Por quê? Porque, em muitos casos, os achados dos arqueólogos têm ajudado a melhorar nosso entendimento da vida nos tempos bíblicos e das línguas originais em que as Escrituras foram escritas.

Ocasionalmente, os achados arqueológicos até mesmo têm silenciado aqueles que criticaram a exatidão de certos eventos ou de certas declarações na Bíblia. Por exemplo, existiam mesmo um rei babilônio chamado Belsazar e um rei assírio chamado Sargão? Até o século 19, estes nomes só eram conhecidos no registro bíblico. (Is 20:1; Da 5:1) Mas as descobertas do palácio de Sargão em Corsabade, e a agora famosa Crônica de Nabonido, confirmaram a historicidade desses governantes.

Isto não significa que a prova da autenticidade da Bíblia depende das descobertas da arqueologia. O arqueólogo israelense Yohanan Aharoni observou: "Quando se trata de interpretação histórica ou histórico-geográfica, o arqueólogo sai do domínio das ciências exatas, e precisa depender de critérios e hipóteses para chegar a um quadro histórico compreensivo." Assim, na avaliação de seus achados, os arqueólogos ocasionalmente discordam da Bíblia.

Deveria isso lançar dúvidas sobre a autenticidade da Bíblia? De modo algum. A fé que depende apenas da interpretação dos achados arqueológicos é deveras fraca. A prova de que a Bíblia é divinamente inspirada é encontrada dentro da própria Bíblia, e não na arqueologia.

O calendário de Gezer, tido como sendo do décimo século AEC, é um dos mais antigos exemplos de antiga escrita hebraica.

Sargão II, de cuja existência os críticos duvidaram por muito tempo, tornou-se bem conhecido aos arqueólogos.

FENÍCIA [provavelmente duma raiz que significa “palmeira”]. A faixa litorânea ao longo da margem oriental do Mediterrâneo entre a Síria e Israel, limitada ao L pelos montes do Líbano. Correspondia aproximadamente ao atual país do Líbano. Durante muitos anos, a principal cidade da antiga Fenícia era Sídon, mas ela foi mais tarde suplantada em importância por Tiro, cidade fundada por colonos de Sídon. — Veja SÍDON, SIDÔNIOS; TIRO.

Aspectos Geográficos. As planícies costeiras deste longo e estreito país eram cortadas, em alguns pontos, pelos contrafortes de montanhas, que se estendiam até o mar. As planícies eram bem regadas por diversos rios originários da cadeia de montanhas que constituía o limite natural ao longo da fronteira oriental. Ali havia diversos cumes de mais de 3.000 m de altitude, o mais alto tendo 3.350 m, cumes que durante boa parte do ano eram cobertos por neve. Antigamente, extensas florestas e pomares de diversos tipos cobriam grande parte do país — cedros e pinheiros, bem como carvalhos, faias, amoreiras, figueiras, oliveiras e tamareiras.

Origem e Nome. A história dos fenícios começa após o Dilúvio com o neto de Noé, Canaã, filho de Cã. Canaã tornou-se progenitor de 11 tribos, uma delas, os sidônios, sendo descendentes do primogênito de Canaã, Sídon. (Gên 10:15-18; 1Cr 1:13-16) Portanto, os sidônios eram cananeus. (Jos 13:4-6; Jz 10:12) Eles mesmos, bem como outros, chamavam a sua terra de Canaã. Numa moeda do tempo de Antíoco Epifânio, descreve-se a cidade siro-fenícia de Laodiceia como “uma cidade-mãe de Canaã”.

Todavia, com o tempo, os gregos preferiram chamar esses sidônios cananeus ainda por outro nome, o de fenícios. De modo que cananeu, sidônio e fenício eram nomes às vezes usados intercambiavelmente para o mesmo povo. Na profecia de Isaías, por exemplo, a Fenícia é chamada de “Canaã”. — Is 23:11; CBC; PIB; NM n.

Terra de Comerciantes Navegantes. Os fenícios figuravam entre os grandes povos navegadores do mundo antigo. Seus navios tinham boa navegabilidade para o seu tamanho. Tinham proa e popa altas, boca larga, e podiam ser movidos a vela ou a remo. (Ez 27:3-7) Os navios fenícios realizavam grande parte do comércio no Mediterrâneo. No século 11 AEC, Salomão empregou fenícios, “servos de Hirão”, para acompanhar seus navios a Társis (Espanha). (2Cr 9:21) Marinheiros fenícios foram também usados a bordo da frota que Salomão enviou de Eziom-Géber a Ofir. (1Rs 9:26-28; 10:11) No sétimo século AEC, barcos fenícios ainda navegavam até Társis e traziam de lá prata, ferro, estanho e chumbo. — Ez 27:12.

Artes e Ofícios. Os metalúrgicos fenícios eram peritos em fundir, moldar e cinzelar objetos de ouro e de prata. Outros artesãos se especializavam em esculpir madeira e marfim, modelar objetos de vidro, tecer lã e linho, e tingir tecidos. A Fenícia era especialmente famosa por sua indústria de tintura de púrpura. Mantos de púrpura régia ou tíria obtinham os mais altos preços, pois, mesmo para poucos metros de tecido, eram necessários muitos milhares de moluscos múrices, os quais, cada um, produziam apenas uma só gota de corante. O corante variava em matiz, dependendo de onde ao longo das margens do Mediterrâneo o molusco era apanhado, e este fato, junto com as habilidades especiais dos mestres-tintureiros fenícios, que frequentemente usavam um processo de tingimento duplo ou triplo, resultava em muitas variedades de tecidos caros, procurados por pessoas de elevada posição e da nobreza. — Ez 27:2, 7, 24.

No tempo de Davi e de Salomão, os fenícios eram famosos como talhadores de pedras para construções e como madeireiros peritos no abatimento das majestosas árvores das suas florestas. — 2Sa 5:11; 1Rs 5:1, 6-10, 18; 9:11; 1Cr 14:1.

Religião. Como cananeus, os fenícios praticavam uma religião muito degradada, que girava em torno do deus da fertilidade, Baal; envolvia sodomia, bestialidade e prostituição cerimonial, bem como abomináveis ritos de sacrifício de crianças. (Veja FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 737; CANAÃ, CANANEU N.º 2 [A Conquista Israelita da Terra da Promessa].) A cidade fenícia de Baalbec (c. 65 km ao NE de Beirute) tornou-se um dos grandes centros de adoração politeísta no mundo antigo; nos tempos romanos, erigiram-se ali grandes templos dedicados a diversos deuses e deusas, cujas ruínas podem ser vistas hoje.

Na primavera setentrional de 31 EC, certos habitantes da Fenícia demonstraram fé por viajarem por terra até a Galileia, a fim de ouvir Jesus e ser curados dos seus padecimentos. (Mr 3:7-10; Lu 6:17) Mais ou menos um ano depois, Jesus visitou as planícies costeiras da Fenícia e ficou tão impressionado com a fé duma mulher siro-fenícia que morava ali, que curou milagrosamente a filha dela, possessa de demônio. — Mt 15:21-28; Mr 7:24-31.

Quando irrompeu perseguição na Judéia, após o martírio de Estêvão, alguns cristãos fugiram para a Fenícia. Ali, por algum tempo, proclamavam as boas novas apenas a judeus. Mas, depois da conversão de Cornélio, começaram a surgir congregações mistas de judeus e não judeus, tanto ao longo da costa fenícia como em outras partes do Império Romano. O apóstolo Paulo visitou algumas destas congregações na Fenícia no decurso das suas viagens; a última visita registrada a crentes ali foi em Sídon, quando ele estava a caminho de Roma, como prisioneiro, por volta de 58 EC. — At 11:19; 15:3; 21:1-7; 27:1-3.

FÊNIX [duma raiz que significa "palmeira"]. "Um porto de Creta." (At 27:12) O navio graneleiro em que Paulo viajava a Roma como prisioneiro tentou velejar de Bons Portos para Fênix (Fenice) para invernar ali. Apanhado por uma tempestade, naufragou subsequentemente na ilha de Malta. — At 27:13-28:1.

Quanto à localização de Fênix, a narrativa em Atos indica apenas que ficava ao O de Bons Portos, do lado S de Creta, e que oferecia ancoragem segura durante o inverno. Assim sendo, propuseram-se dois lugares. Um é Loutro, do lado L de um cabo, a uns 65 km ao O de Bons Portos, e o outro é Fineca, no lado oposto do mesmo cabo. O texto grego literal descreve o porto em Fênix como "que olha na direção [ka·tá] do vento sudoeste e na direção [ka·tá] do vento noroeste". Os peritos que preferem Loutro interpretam isso como significando olhar "na direção" ou "para" (ka·tá) o lado para onde os ventos SO e NO sopram. (At 27:12 n.) Encarando isso assim, diz-se que o porto está aberto 'para o NE e o SE' (ALA, NM), descrição que poderia ajustar-se à grande entrada semicircular do porto de Loutro. Fineca, por causa da sua estrutura, não é hoje usada como porto, embora a sua formação talvez fosse afetada por mudanças geológicas nas redondezas. Todavia, Fineca tem duas enseadas, uma para o SO e a outra para o NO. Assim, os que preferem este lugar entendem a expressão "olhar para" como significando a direção de onde se originam os ventos, em vez de aquela em que sopram.

FERA. Veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

FERMENTO. Substância acrescentada à massa de farinha ou a líquidos para provocar a fermentação; especialmente uma parte da massa fermentada, reservada para fazer pão. Este tipo de agente fermentador é especificado pela palavra hebraica se'ór ("massa lêveda"; Êx 12:15) e pela palavra grega zý·me ("fermento"; Lu 13:21). A coisa levedada era designada pela palavra hebraica hha·méts. — Le 2:11.

O vinho, o suco fermentado de uvas ou de outras frutas, já há muito é conhecido da humanidade. Naturalmente, o vinho fermenta sem o acréscimo de fermento.

Os primitivos egípcios faziam cerveja, que requer um agente fermentador para a sua produção, e eles coziam pães tanto levedados como não levedados. Os hebreus provavelmente conheciam a "cerveja de trigo". (Is 1:22; Os 4:18, NM; Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], de L. Koehler e W. Baumgartner, Leiden, 1958, p. 646) É possível que a levedura obtida dos esporos de certos fungos tenha servido como um dos agentes fermentadores para esses produtos. Escavações feitas no Egito trouxeram à tona pão poroso com células mortas de levedura. Diz-se também que os egípcios usavam natrão (carbonato de sódio) na fabricação de pão. O carbonato de sódio não produziria a fermentação assim como a massa lêveda, mas proveria bolhas de gás para fazer o pão crescer. No Egito, assim como em Israel, o costume primário na fabricação de pão parece ter sido guardar um pouco da massa, deixá-la fermentar, e usar a resultante massa lêveda para fermentar outra massa.

Na Lei de Deus para Israel. Nenhuma oferta de cereais que os israelitas apresentassem por fogo a Jeová devia ser "levedada". (Le 2:11) Todavia, podia-se usar fermento relacionado com ofertas de agradecimento de participação em comum, nas quais o ofertante voluntariamente fazia a apresentação no espírito de gratidão pelas muitas bênçãos de Jeová. A refeição devia ser alegre; normalmente consumia-se pão levedado em ocasiões felizes. Junto com a carne (isto é, o animal) oferecida, e os pães não fermentados, o ofertante trazia bolos de forma anular, de pão levedado, os quais não eram colocados no altar, mas eram consumidos por ele e pelo sacerdote oficiante. — Le 7:11-15.

Na apresentação das primícias da colheita do trigo, no dia de Pentecostes, o sumo sacerdote movia diante de Jeová dois pães fermentados de trigo. (Le 23:15-21) É digno de nota que, no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, os primeiros membros da congregação cristã, a saber, os discípulos de Jesus Cristo, tirados dentre os judeus, foram ungidos com espírito santo. Jesus Cristo, como o grande Sumo Sacerdote de Jeová Deus, pôde apresentar perante Ele os primeiros dos seus irmãos gerados pelo espírito. Estes foram tirados dentre a humanidade pecadora. (At 2:1-4, 41) Cerca de três anos e quatro meses mais tarde, foram ungidos com espírito santo os primeiros conversos gentios, incircuncisos, Cornélio e sua casa, os quais foram assim apresentados a Deus. Estes também provinham da humanidade pecadora. — At 10:24, 44-48; Ro 5:12.

A Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados ocupava os sete dias após o dia da Páscoa, a saber, 15-21 de abibe, ou nisã. Durante esses dias, não se devia achar nas casas dos israelitas, nem ser "visto" com eles, nada fermentado, nem massa lêveda. (Êx 12:14-20; 13:6, 7; 23:15) Isto servia para lembrar-lhes sua apressada libertação do Egito, pela mão de Jeová, quando não tiveram tempo para deixar a massa fermentar, mas, na sua pressa, a carregaram junto com suas amassadeiras. — Êx 12:34.

Significado Simbólico. "Fermento" é muitas vezes usado na Bíblia para indicar pecado ou corrupção. Jesus Cristo disse aos seus discípulos: "Vigiai-vos do fermento dos fariseus e dos saduceus", e: "Vigiai-vos do fermento dos fariseus, que é a hipocrisia." No começo, os discípulos não entenderam que Jesus usava um simbolismo, mas, por fim, discerniram que ele os avisava de ficarem de guarda contra doutrinas falsas e práticas hipócritas, "o ensino dos fariseus e dos saduceus", o qual tinha efeito corrompedor. (Mt 16:6, 11, 12; Lu 12:1) Ele mencionou também Herodes (evidentemente incluindo seus partidários) num dos seus avisos, dizendo: "Mantende os olhos abertos, acautelai-vos do fermento dos fariseus e do fermento de Herodes." (Mr 8:15) Jesus denunciou destemidamente os fariseus como hipócritas, preocupados com a ostentação. (Mt 23:25-28) Indicou o conceito doutrinal errôneo dos saduceus. Expôs a hipocrisia e traição política dos partidários de Herodes. — Mt 22:15-21; Mr 3:6.

O apóstolo Paulo usou o mesmo simbolismo quando ordenou à congregação cristã em Corinto que expulsasse da congregação um homem imoral, declarando: "Não sabeis que um pouco de fermento leveda a massa toda? Retirai o velho fermento, para que sejais massa nova, conforme estiverdes livres do levedo. Pois, deveras, Cristo, a nossa páscoa, já tem sido sacrificado." Ele mostrou então claramente o que queria dizer com "fermento": "Consequentemente, guardemos a festividade, não com o velho fermento, nem com o fermento da maldade e iniquidade, mas com os pães não fermentados da sinceridade e da verdade." (1Co 5:6-8) Paulo usou ali o significado pictórico da judaica Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, que seguia imediatamente à celebração da Páscoa. Assim como um pouco de massa levedada logo leveda toda a massa, ou fornada, de pão, assim a congregação, como corpo, se tornaria impura aos olhos de Jeová, se ela não eliminasse esta influência corrompedora do homem imoral. Tinha de agir para tirar o "fermento" do seu meio, assim como os israelitas não podiam ter fermento na sua casa durante a festividade.

O fermento era associado com corrupção, mesmo na mente de povos da antiguidade que não eram hebreus. Por exemplo, Plutarco, biógrafo grego, falou dele como sendo "em si mesmo também o produto da corrupção, e produz corrupção na massa de farinha com que é misturado". — Moralia, IV, "As Questões Romanas", 109.

Foi com ironia que Jeová disse ao transgressor Israel, nos dias de Amós: "Com o levedado fazei fumegar um sacrifício de agradecimento e proclamai ofertas voluntárias." (Am 4:5) Deus lhes dizia que toda a adoração que prestavam em Betel e em Gilgal constituía uma transgressão contra Ele, de modo que podiam muito bem ir ao cúmulo de oferecer no altar pão levedado, bem como não levedado — sem restrições. Tudo isso ainda seria em vão, porque estavam cometendo idolatria.

FERRO. Um dos mais antigos metais conhecidos do homem. Atualmente, é classificado como o mais abundante, o mais útil e o mais barato de todos os metais. É o quarto mais abundante elemento na crosta da terra, ao passo que se diz que o núcleo da terra é quase 90 por cento ferro. O registro bíblico revela que era usado na fabricação de ferramentas, pregos, portões, armas, grilhões, instrumentos de escrita e até mesmo deuses falsos.

Ferro puro, no comércio, é incomum. O ferro-gusa contém cerca de 3 por cento de carbono, além de pequenas quantidades de outros elementos. O ferro forjado tem muito menos carbono. (Jó 40:18) As muitas variedades de aço são simples ligas de ferro com carbono e outros aditivos, para dar-lhe características especiais. "Aço", na Versão Rei Jaime, em inglês, é erro de tradução em lugar de "cobre". (2Sa 22:35; Jó 20:24; Sal 18:34; Je 15:12) Por causa dos rudimentares fornos e métodos de fundição, o ferro nos tempos bíblicos nunca era totalmente purificado, mas era uma liga de carbono e de outros elementos. Tubalcaim, do quarto milênio AEC, foi a primeira pessoa de que se sabe ter forjado e trabalhado ferro. — Gên 4:22.

O ferro de meteoritos era um dos tipos usados pelo homem nos seus primórdios. Encontraram-se em túmulos egípcios contas de ferro, que mostraram ter a composição de meteoritos. Mas o homem não estava limitado a esta fonte para obter suprimentos. Minerava óxidos e sulfetos de ferro, e fundia estes, apesar das elevadas temperaturas necessárias para fundir ferro. (Jó 28:2; Ez 22:20; veja REFINAÇÃO, REFINADOR.) Todavia, seu emprego era bastante limitado, em comparação com o cobre e com o bronze, que podiam ser trabalhados a frio. Não obstante, o ferro, sem dúvida, era especialmente prezado por causa da sua grande dureza e utilidade. O ferro estava entre os despojos de guerra que os israelitas muito apreciavam. (Núm 31:22; Jos 6:19, 24; 22:8) Todavia, seu quinhão havia de incluir mais do que apenas ferro dos despojos. Moisés prometeu que, ao chegarem à Palestina, eles encontrariam depósitos de ferro, e assim sucedeu. (De 8:9) Outras fontes de ferro mencionadas na Bíblia incluem Társis, bem como "Vedã e Javã de Uzal". — Ez 27:12, 19.

Na sua conquista da Terra da Promessa, os israelitas se viram confrontados com carros de guerra equipados com foices de ferro. (Jos 17:16, 18; Jz

1:19) Em certo ponto, durante o reinado de Saul, "não se achava ferreiro [metalúrgico] em toda a terra de Israel". Por causa duma proscrição imposta pelos filisteus, somente o rei e seu filho Jonatã tinham espada; Israel se via obrigado a levar todos os seus implementos de metal para baixo, aos filisteus, para serem afiados. — 1Sa 13:19-22.

Mais tarde, porém, o Rei Davi reuniu enormes quantidades de ferro para uso na construção do templo. Sob o reinado de Salomão, contribuiu-se "ferro no valor de cem mil talentos", ou segundo muitas traduções, "cem mil talentos de ferro". (1Cr 22:14, 16; 29:2, 7) Se a referência for ao valor do ferro, e se os talentos eram de prata, então o ferro valia US$ 660.600.000. Se a referência for ao peso do ferro, então eram cerca de 3.420 toneladas métricas.

Uso Figurado. O forno de fundição de ferro é símbolo de opressão dura e ardente (De 4:20; 1Rs 8:51; Je 11:4); jugos de ferro, servidão inquebrantável. (De 28:48; Je 28:13, 14) Em sentido figurado, o ferro simboliza dureza (Le 26:19; De 28:23), obstinação (Is 48:4; Je 6:28), força (Je 1:18; Da 7:7; Re 9:9), poder régio e autoridade judicial (Sal 2:9; Re 2:27; 12:5; 19:15).

FERRUGEM. Camada avermelhada, porosa e quebradiça que se forma sobre o ferro quando quimicamente atacado pelo ar úmido; por extensão, camada produzida por corrosão em diversos outros metais. O ferro enferruja, e diz-se que o cobre e a prata se corroem, mesmo o ouro pode ser atacado por certos ácidos ou elementos. A palavra hebraica hhel·'áh, traduzida "ferrugem" (NM; PIB) ou "escuma" (Al), deriva duma palavra que significa "desenvolver uma doença" (2Cr 16:12); portanto, com referência a metal, indica ferrugem. (Ez 24:6, 11, 12) A palavra grega bró·sis significa "ato de comer" (Mt 6:19, 20), ao passo que i·ós significa tanto "veneno" (Ro 3:13; Tg 3:8) como "ferrugem". — Tg 5:3.

Ezequiel comparou Jerusalém a uma panela de boca larga, de cobre, "cuja ferrugem está nela". Esta ferrugem representava a impureza, a conduta desenfreada e o derramamento de sangue pelos quais Jerusalém era responsável. Deu-se a ordem, depois de se cozinhar a carne na panela, de "[pô-la] vazia sobre as brasas para que fique aquecida; e seu cobre tem de ficar candente e sua impureza terá de ser fundida no meio dela. Seja consumida a sua ferrugem [o seu cobre se torne candente, funda-se a sua imundícia dentro dela e se consuma a sua ferrugem; ALA]". — Ez 24:3-12.

Jesus Cristo disse no seu Sermão do Monte: "Parai de armazenar para vós tesouros na terra, onde a traça e a ferrugem [bró·sis] consomem, e onde ladrões arrombam e furtam. Antes, armazenai para vós tesouros no céu, onde nem a traça nem a ferrugem consomem, e onde ladrões não arrombam nem furtam." (Mt 6:19, 20) A riqueza material acumulada não é usada para nenhum fim benéfico; ociosa, pode enferrujar e por fim não ser de nenhum proveito, nem mesmo para o seu dono. De fato, conforme Tiago adverte os ricos que confiam na riqueza material: "Vossas riquezas apodreceram . . . Vosso ouro e vossa prata estão corroídos, e a sua ferrugem [i·ós] será por testemunho contra vós e consumirá as vossas carnes. Algo como fogo é o que armazenastes nos últimos dias. Eis que os salários devidos aos trabalhadores que ceifaram vossos campos, mas que são retidos por vós, estão clamando, e os clamores por ajuda, da parte dos ceifeiros, chegaram aos ouvidos de Jeová dos exércitos." (Tg 5:2-4) Em vez de usarem suas riquezas de modo correto, retêm-nas injustamente. Quanto mais tempo fizerem isso, e quanto maior a corrosão e ferrugem acumulada, tanto maior o testemunho contra eles perante o trono de julgamento de Deus. Jesus recomendou o oposto a tal falta de uso da riqueza material, ao dizer: "Fazei para vós amigos por meio das riquezas injustas, para que, quando estas vos falharem, vos recebam nas moradias eternas." — Lu 16:9.

FESTA. Veja FESTIVIDADE; REFEIÇÃO.

FESTANÇA. A palavra grega kó·mos, traduzida "festança", ocorre três vezes nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs e sempre em sentido mau ou desfavorável. O Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament (Léxico Grego-Inglês do Novo Testamento), de Joseph Thayer, salienta que, em antigos escritos gregos, o termo é aplicado a "um desfile noturno e ruidoso de foliões meio bêbedos, os quais, depois do jantar, desfilam pelas ruas com tochas e música, em honra de Baco ou de outra deidade [ou vencedor nos jogos], e cantam e tocam música diante das casas de seus amigos e suas amigas". (1889, p. 367) Tal conduta licenciosa e imoderada, com desfiles pelas ruas, similares às modernas celebrações carnavalescas em certos países, era comum nas cidades gregas no tempo dos apóstolos. Portanto, era apropriado dar aos verdadeiros adoradores um conselho alertador.

Festanças, ou folias, definitivamente não são apropriadas para os cristãos; são condenadas pela Palavra de Deus. Antes de se tornarem cristãos, alguns daqueles a quem Pedro escreveu a sua carta, habitantes de províncias de influência grega na Ásia Menor (1Pe 1:1), procediam "em ações de conduta desenfreada, em concupiscências, em excessos com vinho, em festanças, em competições no beber e em idolatrias ilegais". Mas, ao se tornarem cristãos, pararam com estas coisas. (1Pe 4:3, 4) A festança, ou folia, com sua crassa sensualidade e dissolução, era 'obra pertencente à escuridão', em que os cristãos não iriam andar. — Ro 13:12-14.

A Bíblia não denega a alegria e o divertimento. Manda-se que o homem se alegre no seu Criador, que o marido se alegre com a sua esposa, o trabalhador, com o seu trabalho, e o lavrador, com os frutos de seu labor. (Sal 32:11; Pr 5:18; Ec 3:22; De 26:10, 11) Alimento e bebida podem acompanhar a alegria e contribuir para ela (Ec 9:7; Sal 104:15), todavia, deve prevalecer a moderação. (Pr 23:20; 1Ti 3:2, 11; 1Co 10:31) Divertir-se a ponto de ficar embriagado, junto com cenas de desordem e sensualidade, é festança, ou folia. Paulo incluiu as festanças entre "as obras da carne", cujos praticantes "não herdarão o reino de Deus". — Gál 5:19-21.

FESTIVIDADE. As festividades constituíam parte integrante da verdadeira adoração de Deus, determinadas por Jeová para o seu povo escolhido, Israel, pela mão de Moisés. A palavra hebraica hhagh, traduzida por "festividade", possivelmente deriva dum verbo que denota movimento ou forma circular, dança de roda, e, portanto, a celebração duma festividade ou festa periódica. Moh·ʽédh, também vertido por "festividade", refere-se basicamente ao tempo ou lugar fixo de reunião. — 1Sa 20:35; 2Sa 20:5.

As festividades, e dias especiais similares, poderiam ser esboçados como segue:

FESTIVIDADES EM ISRAEL

ANTES DO EXÍLIO

FESTIVIDADES ANUAIS

1. Páscoa, 14 de abibe (nisã).
2. Pães Não Fermentados, 15-21 de abibe (nisã).
3. Semanas, ou Pentecostes, 6 de sivã.
4. Toque de Trombeta, 1.º de etanim (tisri).
5. Dia da Expiação, 10 de etanim (tisri).
6. Barracas, 15-21 de etanim (tisri), com uma assembleia solene no dia 22.

FESTIVIDADES PERIÓDICAS

1. Sábado semanal.
2. Lua nova.
3. Ano sabático (a cada 7 anos).
4. Ano do jubileu (a cada 50 anos).

APÓS O EXÍLIO

1. Festividade da Dedicação, 25 de quisleu.
2. Festividade de Purim, 14, 15 de adar.

As Três Grandes Festividades. As três principais "festividades periódicas [sazonais]", às vezes chamadas de festividades de peregrinação, por se reunirem todos os varões em Jerusalém, ocorriam em épocas fixas e eram designadas pela palavra hebraica moh·ʽédh. (Le 23:2, 4) Mas a palavra muitas vezes usada para se referir exclusivamente às três grandes festividades é hhagh, que não só conota uma ocorrência periódica, mas também uma ocasião de grande regozijo. Estas três grandes festividades eram:

(1) A Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados (Êx 23:15). Esta festividade começava no dia após a Páscoa e se estendia de 15 a 21 de abibe (nisã), inclusive. A Páscoa ocorria no dia 14 de nisã e realmente era por si só um dia a ser observado, mas, visto que era quase concomitante à Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, as duas juntas frequentemente eram chamadas de Páscoa. — Mt 26:17; Mr 14:12; Lu 22:7.

(2) A Festividade das Semanas ou (conforme foi chamada mais tarde) de Pentecostes, celebrada no 50.º dia a contar de 16 de nisã, isto é, em 6 de sivã. — Êx 23:16a; 34:22a.

(3) A Festividade das Barracas (Tendas) ou do Recolhimento. Esta ocorria no sétimo mês, de 15 a 21 de etanim (tisri), inclusive, com uma assembleia solene no dia 22. — Le 23:34-36.

O tempo, o lugar e o modo em que deviam ser realizadas foram todos determinados por Jeová. Conforme é subentendido pela expressão "festividades periódicas [sazonais] de Jeová", estavam associadas com diversas estações do ano calendar sagrado — o início da primavera, o fim da primavera e o outono. Quão significativo era isso, porque nestas épocas as primícias dos campos e dos vinhedos davam grande alegria e felicidade aos habitantes da Terra da Promessa, e dava-se assim reconhecimento a Jeová como o generoso Provisor de todas as coisas boas!

Observâncias Comuns a Estas Festividades. O pacto da Lei exigia que todos os varões comparecessem "perante Jeová, teu Deus, no lugar que ele escolher", todo ano, durante cada uma das três grandes festividades anuais. (De 16:16) O lugar finalmente escolhido como centro das festividades foi Jerusalém. Não se especificou nenhuma pena para o não comparecimento individual, com exceção da Páscoa; deixar de comparecer a ela resultava na pena de morte. (Núm 9:9-13) Não obstante, o descaso por quaisquer das leis de Deus, inclusive suas festividades e sábados, resultaria em julgamento e aflição nacionais. (De 28:58-62) A própria Páscoa tinha de ser observada em 14 de nisã, ou, em certas circunstâncias, um mês mais tarde.

Embora as mulheres não estivessem sob a obrigação, como estavam os varões, de fazer as viagens anuais às festividades, ainda assim há exemplos de festividades a que assistiram mulheres, tais como Ana, mãe de Samuel (1Sa 1:7), e Maria, mãe de Jesus. (Lu 2:41) As mulheres israelitas que amavam a Jeová assistiam a essas festividades sempre que possível. De fato, não só os pais de Jesus compareciam regularmente, mas eram acompanhados por seus parentes e conhecidos. — Lu 2:44.

Jeová prometeu: "Ninguém desejará a tua terra enquanto subires três vezes por ano para ver a face de Jeová, teu Deus." (Êx 34:24) Embora não ficasse homem para guardar as cidades e as terras, mostrou-se veraz que nenhuma nação estrangeira jamais subiu para tomar a terra dos judeus durante as suas festividades, antes da destruição de Jerusalém, em 70 EC. Todavia, em 66 EC, depois da rejeição de Cristo pela nação judaica, Céstio Galo matou 50 pessoas em Lida durante a Festividade das Tendas.

Nenhum dos varões presentes devia comparecer de mãos vazias; devia trazer uma dádiva "proporcional à bênção de Jeová, teu Deus, que ele te tiver dado". (De 16:16, 17) Também se devia comer em Jerusalém a 'segunda' décima parte (em contraste com a que era dada para o sustento dos levitas [Núm 18:26, 27]) do cereal, do vinho e do azeite do ano em curso, bem como o primogênito da manada e do rebanho; estes deviam ser compartilhados com os levitas. Todavia, caso a viagem ao lugar da festividade fosse longe demais, a Lei estipulava que esses bens podiam ser convertidos em dinheiro; então, este dinheiro podia ser usado para comprar alimento e bebida a serem consumidos enquanto junto ao santuário. (De 14:22-27) Essas ocasiões eram oportunidades de se demonstrar lealdade a Jeová e deviam ser celebradas com alegria; o residente forasteiro, o menino órfão de pai e a viúva deviam ser incluídos. (De 16:11, 14) Naturalmente, isso dependia de os varões de tais residentes forasteiros serem adoradores circuncisos de Jeová. (Êx 12:48, 49) Além das ofertas diárias, sempre se ofereciam sacrifícios especiais, e enquanto se faziam as ofertas queimadas e os sacrifícios de participação em comum, tocavam-se trombetas. — Núm 10:10.

Pouco antes da construção do templo, o sacerdócio foi reorganizado pelo Rei Davi, que providenciou a divisão do grande quadro de centenas de sacerdotes arônicos em 24 turmas, junto com ajudantes levíticos. (1Cr 24) Cada turma, ou divisão, de trabalhadores treinados, mais tarde, servia duas vezes por ano no templo, uma semana por vez, sendo os arranjos necessários feitos pelo cabeça da casa paterna. Segundo Crônicas 5:11 indica que todas as 24 turmas de sacerdotes serviram juntas na dedicação do templo, que ocorreu durante a Festividade das Barracas, ou das Tendas. (1Rs 8:2; Le 23:34) Alfred Edersheim diz que, em dias festivos, qualquer sacerdote era bem-vindo a se apresentar e ajudar no serviço do templo, mas que, durante a Festividade das Tendas (Barracas), se requeria que todas as 24 divisões estivessem presentes. — The Temple (O Templo), 1874, p. 66.

Durante estas ocasiões festivas, recaía sobre os sacerdotes, os levitas e os netineus, que serviam com eles, uma enorme quantidade de trabalho. Um exemplo do trabalho que faziam é indicado na descrição da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados realizada pelo Rei Ezequias, depois de ele ter limpado o templo, celebração que, naquela ocasião, foi prolongada por mais sete dias. O relato diz que o próprio Ezequias contribuiu para o sacrifício 1.000 novilhos e 7.000 ovelhas, e que os príncipes contribuíram 1.000 novilhos e 10.000 ovelhas. — 2Cr 30:21-24.

Certos dias destas festividades eram assembleias solenes, ou santos congressos; estes eram sábados, e, similar aos sábados semanais, exigia-se a total cessação de atividades comuns. Absolutamente nenhum trabalho secular devia ser feito. Uma exceção com relação ao arranjo do sábado regular era que certo trabalho, tal como a preparação de alimentos, ilícito nos dias do sábado semanal, era permitido em conexão com a preparação para as observâncias festivas. (Êx 12:16) Neste respeito existe uma diferença entre os "santos congressos" das festividades e os regulares sábados semanais (e o sábado no décimo dia do sétimo mês, o Dia da Expiação, uma ocasião de jejum), nos quais não se permitia nenhuma espécie de trabalho, nem mesmo acender fogo "em nenhum dos vossos lugares de morada". — Compare Levítico 23:3, 26-32, com os versículos 7, 8, 21, 24, 25, 35, 36, e com Êxodo 35:2, 3.

Importância das Festividades na Vida de Israel. As festividades desempenhavam um papel importantíssimo na vida nacional dos israelitas. Enquanto ainda estavam em servidão ao Egito, Moisés disse a Faraó que o motivo de exigir que os israelitas e seu gado recebessem permissão de deixar o Egito era que "temos uma festividade para com Jeová". (Êx 10:9) O pacto da

Lei incorporava muitas instruções pormenorizadas sobre a observância das festividades. (Êx 34:18-24; Le 23:1-44; De 16:1-17) Em harmonia com as ordens de Deus, as festividades ajudavam todos os presentes a ter em mente a palavra de Deus e a não se envolver tanto nos seus assuntos pessoais, a ponto de se esquecerem do aspecto espiritual mais importante da sua vida diária. Estas festividades também lhes lembravam que eram um povo para o nome de Jeová. A viagem de ida e volta às festividades, naturalmente, oferecia muitas oportunidades para falarem sobre a bondade do seu Deus e as bênçãos que usufruíam diária e sazonalmente. As festividades ofereciam tempo e oportunidade para meditação, associação e conversas sobre a lei de Jeová. Ampliavam o conhecimento da terra dada por Deus, aumentavam a compreensão e o amor ao próximo entre os israelitas, e promoviam a união e a adoração limpa. As festividades eram ocasiões de felicidade. A mente dos presentes enchia-se dos pensamentos e modos de agir de Deus, e todos os que participavam nelas com sinceridade recebiam uma rica bênção espiritual. Por exemplo, considere a bênção para os milhares que assistiram à Festividade de Pentecostes em Jerusalém, em 33 EC. — At 2:1-47.

As festividades simbolizavam felicidade para os judeus. Antes do exílio em Babilônia, tempo em que a nação, em geral, já tinha perdido de vista o real objetivo espiritual das festividades, os profetas Oseias e Amós relacionaram a predita vindoura desolação de Jerusalém com a cessação destas observâncias alegres e felizes ou a transformação delas em ocasiões de pranto. (Os 2:11; Am 8:10) Depois da queda de Jerusalém, Jeremias lamentou que "os caminhos de Sião são luto, porque não há quem venha à festividade". As festividades e o sábado estavam então 'esquecidos'. (La 1:4; 2:6) Isaías descreveu de antemão a condição feliz dos exilados que retornaram de Babilônia em 537 AEC, dizendo: "Vireis a ter uma canção igual à da noite em que a pessoa se santifica para uma festividade." (Is 30:29) Todavia, não foi muito tempo depois do seu restabelecimento na terra que Jeová Deus lhes dera que de novo corromperam as festividades Dele, de modo que Ele, por meio do profeta Malaquias, advertiu os sacerdotes que o esterco das suas festividades seria espalhado sobre as faces deles. — Mal 2:1-3.

Os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs fazem diversas referências e alusões às festividades, às vezes dando-lhes uma aplicação feliz, simbólica e profética para os cristãos. No entanto, não se impunha aos cristãos a guarda dessas festividades em sentido literal. — Col 2:16, 17; veja as festividades sob os seus respectivos nomes.

FESTIVIDADE DA DEDICAÇÃO. A observância da Festividade da Dedicação (hebr.: hhanuk·káh) comemora a recuperação da independência judaica do domínio siro-grego e da rededicação do templo de Jerusalém a Jeová, templo que havia sido dessacrado por Antíoco IV Epifânio (ou: Epifanes), que chamou a si mesmo de The·ós E·pi·fa·nés ("Deus Manifesto"). Construiu um altar no alto do grande altar em que antes se apresentavam diariamente as ofertas queimadas. (1 Macabeus 1:54-59, CBC) Nesta ocasião (25 de quisleu de 168 AEC), para mostrar seu ódio a Jeová, o Deus dos judeus, e seu desprezo por Ele, e para profanar ao máximo o templo Dele, Antíoco sacrificou porcos no altar e mandou aspergir o caldo feito de parte da carne deles em todo o templo. Queimou também os portões do templo, derrubou as câmaras dos sacerdotes e levou embora o altar de ouro, bem como a mesa dos pães da proposição e o candelabro de ouro. O templo de Zorobabel foi rededicado ao deus pagão Zeus, do Olimpo.

Dois anos mais tarde, Judas Macabeu recapturou a cidade e o templo. O santuário estava desolado; nos pátios do templo crescia mato. Judas derrubou o antigo altar profanado e construiu um novo altar de pedras não lavradas. Judas mandou fazer vasos do templo e levou o altar de incenso, a mesa dos pães da proposição e o candelabro para dentro do templo. Depois de se expurgar o templo da profanação, houve a rededicação em 25 de quisleu de 165 AEC, exatamente no mesmo dia, três anos depois, em que Antíoco havia feito seu sacrifício no altar para adorar o deus pagão. Restabeleceram-se as diárias e contínuas ofertas queimadas. — 1 Macabeus 4:36-54; 2 Macabeus 10:1-9, CBC.

Costumes da Festividade. A própria natureza da festividade a tornava uma ocasião de grande alegria. Há alguma semelhança com a Festividade das Barracas na maneira em que era observada. A celebração durava oito dias, a partir de 25 de quisleu. (1 Macabeus 4:59) Havia muita iluminação nos pátios do templo, e todas as moradias particulares eram iluminadas com lâmpadas decorativas. O Talmude refere-se a ela como a "Festa das Luzes". Posteriormente, alguns tinham o costume de expor oito lâmpadas na primeira noite e depois reduzir este número, tirando cada noite uma; outros começavam com uma e as aumentavam para oito. As lâmpadas eram colocadas perto das portas que davam para a rua, não só para iluminar a casa por dentro, mas também para que todos do lado de fora vissem a luz. O acender das lâmpadas era acompanhado por cantos que elogiavam a Deus, o Libertador de Israel. Josefo diz sobre a iniciação da festividade: "Tinham tanto prazer na renovação dos seus costumes e em inesperadamente receberem o direito de ter seu próprio serviço, depois de tanto tempo, que fizeram uma lei, para que seus descendentes celebrassem por oito dias a restauração dos serviços do templo. E desde aquele tempo até o presente, temos observado esta festividade, que chamamos a festividade das Luzes, dando-lhe este nome, segundo acho, pelo fato de que o direito à adoração nos surgiu num tempo em que dificilmente nos atrevíamos a esperar isso." (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XII, 324, 325 [vii, 7] Permitia-se trabalhar, visto que o dia não era considerado um sábado.

Houve duas dedicações anteriores do templo, a do primeiro templo, de Salomão, e a do segundo templo, construído por Zorobabel, que foram celebradas solenemente após o término da construção. Mas, não havia depois nenhuma festividade de aniversário em comemoração disso, assim como havia para esta rededicação do segundo templo por Judas Macabeu. Dessemelhante das três grandes festividades a que todos os varões tinham a obrigação de assistir em Jerusalém, a Festividade da Dedicação podia ser celebrada nas respectivas cidades deles, assim como se dava com a Festividade de Purim. (Êx 23:14-17; Est 9:18-32) No país inteiro, eles se reuniam nas suas sinagogas com cântico e júbilo, levando ramos de árvores, ao passo que as sinagogas e os lares particulares eram iluminados por muitas luzes. Os judeus celebram esta festividade até hoje.

Significado para os Cristãos. Jesus visitou o templo na época da Festividade da Dedicação, no último inverno do seu ministério, em 32 EC. O relato reza: "Nesse tempo ocorreu em Jerusalém a festividade da dedicação. Era inverno, e Jesus estava andando no templo, na colunata de Salomão." (Jo 10:22, 23) Quisleu, o nono mês, corresponde a novembro-dezembro. Os judeus sabiam, naturalmente, que esta festividade ocorria no inverno. Por conseguinte, a menção do inverno, aqui, talvez se refira mais às condições meteorológicas, do que à estação do ano, como razão de Jesus escolher um abrigo para o seu ensino, na "colunata de Salomão". Esta colunata coberta encontrava-se no lado L do pátio externo dos gentios, onde muitas pessoas se reuniam. — At 3:11; 5:12.

Nas Escrituras inspiradas não há nenhuma declaração direta de que Jeová desse a Judas a vitória e dirigisse o reparo que este fez no templo, a remobiliação dele, a fabricação dos utensílios e finalmente a rededicação dele. No entanto, para as profecias a respeito de Jesus e seu ministério se cumprirem, e para os sacrifícios levíticos continuarem até se realizar o grande sacrifício do Filho de Deus, o templo tinha de estar de pé e seus serviços em funcionamento no tempo do aparecimento do Messias. (Jo 2:17; Da 9:27) Jeová havia usado homens de nações estrangeiras, tais como Ciro, para executar certos propósitos referentes à Sua adoração. (Is 45:1) Com quanto maior prontidão poderia ele usar um homem do seu povo dedicado, os judeus.

Não importa qual seja o caso, os serviços no templo eram realizados durante o ministério de Jesus Cristo. O templo de Zorobabel fora reconstruído (substituído) mais primorosamente por Herodes. Por este motivo, e por abominarem Herodes, os judeus usualmente mencionam apenas dois templos, o de Salomão e o de Zorobabel. Nem nas palavras de Jesus, nem em quaisquer dos escritos dos seus discípulos, encontramos alguma condenação da Festividade da Dedicação. No entanto, ela não é imposta aos cristãos que estão no novo pacto. — Col 2:16; Gál 4:10, 11; He 8:6.

FESTIVIDADE DA LUA NOVA. A ordem de Deus a Israel era que, em cada lua nova, que marcava o início dos meses lunares do calendário judaico, se tocassem trombetas sobre as suas ofertas queimadas e os seus sacrifícios de participação em comum. (Núm 10:10) Nestes dias deviam ser oferecidos sacrifícios especiais, além do contínuo sacrifício diário. A oferta da lua nova devia consistir em uma oferta queimada de dois novilhos, um carneiro e sete cordeiros de um ano, com as correspondentes ofertas de cereal e de vinho, bem como um cabritinho para uma oferta pelo pecado. — Núm 28:11-15.

Isto é tudo o que foi ordenado no Pentateuco a respeito da sua observância, mas a observância da lua nova desenvolveu-se com o tempo, tornando-se uma importante festividade nacional. Em Isaías 1:13, 14, é colocada ao lado dos sábados e das épocas festivas. Pelo menos no tempo dos profetas posteriores, nos dias da lua nova o povo não se empenhava em negócios, conforme indicado em Amós 8:5. Isto era mais do que as Escrituras exigiam para os dias de lua nova. Mesmo assim, conforme mostram os últimos dois textos citados, a observância da lua nova pelos judeus, naquele tempo, já se tornara mero formalismo, odioso aos olhos de Jeová.

O dia da lua nova era um dia especial para as pessoas se reunirem e festejarem. Isto se vê no argumento de Saul, quando Davi não compareceu à mesa de Saul no dia da lua nova. Saul disse a si mesmo: "Aconteceu alguma coisa, de modo que não está limpo, por não ter sido purificado." (1Sa 20:5, 18, 24, 26) Embora se pudessem realizar certos tipos de trabalho neste dia, que não podiam ser realizados no sábado, era encarado como dia para a consideração de assuntos espirituais. O povo reunia-se em congresso (Is 1:13; 66:23; Sal 81:3; Ez 46:3), ou visitava profetas ou homens de Deus. — 2Rs 4:23.

A observância do dia da lua nova não envolvia a adoração da lua, conforme era praticada por algumas nações pagãs, nem tinha qualquer relação com a astrologia. — Jz 8:21; 2Rs 23:5; Jó 31:26-28.

Isaías escreveu sobre um tempo futuro em que toda a carne se ajuntaria para se curvar diante de Jeová nos dias da lua nova. (Is 66:23) Na profecia de Ezequiel, durante o tempo do exílio em Babilônia, quando ele recebeu a visão de um templo, Jeová disse-lhe: "Quanto ao portão do pátio interno, que dá para o leste, deve continuar fechado pelos seis dias de trabalho e deve ser aberto no dia de sábado, e deve ser aberto no dia da lua nova. E o povo da terra tem de curvar-se à entrada daquele portão, perante Jeová, nos sábados e nas luas novas." — Ez 46:1, 3.

Atualmente, os judeus celebram a lua nova com muitas cerimônias minuciosas e lhe dão muita importância. Mostra-se, porém, aos cristãos, que eles não têm a obrigação de observar uma lua nova ou um sábado, que são apenas parte duma sombra de coisas vindouras, sendo a realidade encontrada em Jesus Cristo. As festividades do Israel natural têm significado simbólico e um cumprimento com muitas bênçãos, por meio do Filho de Deus. — Col 2:16, 17.

FESTIVIDADE DAS BARRACAS. Também conhecida como a Festividade das Tendas (Tabernáculos), ou do Recolhimento, ou chamada de "festividade de Jeová", em Levítico 23:39. As instruções para a sua observância encontram-se em Levítico 23:34-43, Números 29:12-38 e Deuteronômio 16:13-15. A festividade ocupava os dias 15-21 de etanim, com uma assembleia solene no dia 22. Etanim (tisri; setembro-outubro) era originalmente o primeiro mês do calendário judaico, mas, após o Êxodo do Egito, tornou-se o sétimo mês do ano sagrado, visto que abibe (nisã; março-abril), anteriormente o sétimo mês, foi constituído em primeiro mês. (Êx 12:2) A Festividade das Barracas celebrava o recolhimento dos frutos do solo, "os produtos da terra", os quais incluíam cereais, azeite e vinho. (Le 23:39) É chamada de "a festividade do recolhimento na volta do ano". O santo congresso, no oitavo dia, marcava o encerramento solene do ciclo de festividades do ano. — Êx 34:22; Le 23:34-38.

Na realidade, a Festividade das Barracas marcava para Israel o fim da parte principal do ano agrícola. Portanto, era uma ocasião de regozijo e de agradecimento por todas as bênçãos que Jeová lhes tinha dado nos frutos de todas as suas safras. Também, visto que o Dia da Expiação fora observado apenas cinco dias antes, o povo teria a sensação de paz com Jeová. Embora apenas os varões estivessem obrigados a estar presentes, famílias inteiras compareciam. Requeria-se de todos eles morarem em barracas (hebr.: suk·kóhth) durante os sete dias da festividade. Cada família costumava ocupar uma barraca. (Êx 34:23; Le 23:42) Estas eram armadas nos pátios das casas, nos terraços das moradias, nos pátios do templo, nas praças públicas e nas estradas dentro do raio da jornada de um sábado, a partir da cidade. Os israelitas deviam usar "o fruto de árvores esplêndidas", folhas de palmeiras, galhos de árvores ramosas e de choupos. (Le 23:40) Nos dias de Esdras, usavam-se folhas de oliveira e de árvore oleaginosa, de murta (bem fragrante) e folhas de palmeiras, bem como ramos de outras árvores, para construir estas estruturas temporárias. O fato de todos, tanto ricos como pobres, morarem em barracas, até mesmo tomando suas refeições nelas durante os sete dias, e que as barracas eram todas dos mesmos materiais, tirados dos morros e vales do país, salientaria a igualdade de todos em relação com a festividade. — Ne 8:14-16.

No dia anterior à festividade, 14 de etanim, a maioria dos celebrantes, se não todos eles, já havia chegado a Jerusalém. O dia 14 era o de preparativos, a menos que este dia fosse um sábado semanal, caso em que os preparativos podiam ser feitos antes. Todos estavam atarefados com a construção das barracas, com a purificação, em cuidar das ofertas que cada um trouxera, e com companheirismo alegre. A cidade de Jerusalém e seus arredores ofereciam uma aparência única e pitoresca, havendo barracas em toda a cidade, bem como nas estradas e nos jardins ao redor de Jerusalém. A colorida beleza das frutas e das folhas, junto com a fragrância da murta, contribuía para o ambiente festivo. Todos estavam na expectativa, aguardando o som do toque de trombeta da posição elevada do templo, no começo da noitinha outonal, anunciando o advento da festividade.

Durante esta festividade, o número de sacrifícios oferecidos era maior do que em qualquer outra festividade do ano. O sacrifício nacional, começando com 13 novilhos no primeiro dia e diminuindo um por dia, totalizava 70 novilhos sacrificados, além de 119 cordeiros, carneiros e cabritos, em adição às ofertas de cereais e de vinho. Durante a semana, os presentes também apresentavam milhares de ofertas individuais. (Núm 29:12-34, 39) No oitavo dia, em que não se podia fazer nenhum trabalho laborioso, apresentavam-se um novilho, um carneiro e sete cordeiros de um ano, como oferta queimada, junto com ofertas de cereais e de bebida, bem como um cabrito como oferta pelo pecado. — Núm 29:35-38.

Nos anos sabáticos, lia-se a Lei para todo o povo durante a festividade. (De 31:10-13) É provável que a primeira das 24 turmas de sacerdotes estabelecidas por Davi começasse a servir no templo depois da Festividade das Barracas, visto que o templo construído por Salomão foi inaugurado por ocasião desta festividade, em 1026 AEC. — 1Rs 6:37, 38; 1Cr 24:1-18; 2Cr 5:3; 7:7-10.

A característica distintiva da Festividade das Barracas, a natureza primária dela, era o agradecimento alegre. Era o desejo de Jeová que seu povo se alegrasse com ele. "Tendes de alegrar-vos perante Jeová, vosso Deus." (Le 23:40) Era uma festividade de agradecimento pelo recolhimento — não somente dos cereais, mas também do azeite e do vinho, que contribuíam muito para o deleite da vida. Durante esta festividade, os israelitas podiam meditar no coração em que sua prosperidade e a abundância de coisas excelentes não resultavam do seu próprio poder. Não, era o cuidado de Jeová, seu Deus, com eles que lhes dera esta prosperidade. Deviam refletir profundamente nestas coisas, para que não acontecesse que, conforme Moisés disse, "teu coração deveras se enalteça e deveras te esqueças de Jeová, teu Deus, que te tirou da terra do Egito, da casa dos escravos". Moisés declarou também: "E tens de lembrar-te de Jeová, teu Deus, porque é ele quem te dá o poder para produzir riqueza, a fim de cumprir seu pacto que jurou aos teus antepassados, como no dia de hoje." — De 8:14, 18.

Ordenou-se a Israel morar uma semana em barracas, "para que as vossas gerações saibam que foi nas barracas que fiz os filhos de Israel morar quando os fiz sair da terra do Egito. Eu sou Jeová, vosso Deus." (Le 23:42, 43) Podiam relembrar com alegria e gratidão o cuidado que Jeová Deus teve para com eles no ermo, quando Ele lhes forneceu abrigo, quando 'os fez andar através do grande e atemorizante ermo de serpentes venenosas e de escorpiões, e de terra sedenta sem água, que lhes fez sair água da rocha de pederneira, que os alimentou no ermo com maná que seus pais não conheciam'. (De 8:15, 16) Isto lhes dava motivos para se alegrarem com o continuamente crescente cuidado e abundância que Deus lhes dava.

Modalidades Acrescentadas Posteriormente. Um costume que veio a ser adotado mais tarde, ao qual possivelmente se alude nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs (Jo 7:37, 38), mas não nas Escrituras Hebraicas, era o de tirar água do reservatório de água de Siloé e de derramá-la, junto com vinho, sobre o altar, por ocasião do sacrifício matutino. De acordo com a maioria dos peritos, isto se fazia em sete dias da festividade, mas não no oitavo dia. O sacerdote descia ao reservatório de água de Siloé com um cântaro de ouro (exceto no dia inicial da festividade, que era um sábado, quando se tirava água dum vaso de ouro no templo, ao qual tinha sido levado de Siloé no dia anterior). Ele controlava o tempo de modo a retornar de Siloé com a água justamente quando os sacerdotes no templo estavam prontos para colocar os pedaços do sacrifício no altar. Ao entrar no Pátio dos Sacerdotes pelo Portão das Águas do templo, ele era anunciado por um toque triplo das trombetas dos sacerdotes. A água era então derramada numa bacia que levava à base do altar, ao mesmo tempo em que se derramava vinho numa bacia. Daí, a música do templo acompanhava o canto de Halel (Salmos 113-118), durante o qual os adoradores agitavam suas folhas de palmeira em direção ao altar. Esta cerimônia talvez lembrasse aos celebrantes alegres as palavras proféticas de Isaías: "Com exultação haveis de tirar água dos mananciais de salvação." — Is 12:3.

Outra cerimônia um tanto similar era a de os sacerdotes, em cada um dos sete dias da festividade, desfilarem ao redor do altar, cantando: "Ai! Jeová, salva deveras, por favor! Ai! Jeová, concede deveras bom êxito, por favor!" (Sal 118:25) No sétimo dia, porém, davam esta volta sete vezes.

Segundo fontes rabínicas, havia também outra modalidade destacada desta festividade, a qual, como o de trazer água de Siloé, era realizada na época em que Jesus estava na terra. Esta cerimônia começava no fim do dia 15 de tisri, o primeiro dia da festividade, realmente no início do dia 16, o segundo dia da festividade, e era realizada por cinco noites consecutivas. Os preparativos eram feitos no Pátio das Mulheres. Havia no pátio quatro grandes candelabros de ouro, cada um com quatro tigelas de ouro. Quatro jovens de ascendência sacerdotal subiam escadas com grandes jarros de óleo, enchendo as 16 tigelas. A roupa velha dos sacerdotes era usada como mecha nas lâmpadas. Escritores judeus dizem que estas lâmpadas davam uma luz brilhante que podia ser vista a uma considerável distância, iluminando os pátios das casas em Jerusalém. Certos homens, inclusive alguns dos anciãos, dançavam com tochas chamejantes na mão e entoavam cânticos de louvor, acompanhados por instrumentos musicais.

Um interessante aspecto incidental é que Jeroboão, que rompeu com Roboão, filho de Salomão, e se tornou rei das dez tribos setentrionais, realizava (no oitavo mês, não no sétimo) uma imitação da Festividade das Barracas, evidentemente para manter as tribos afastadas de Jerusalém. Mas, naturalmente, os sacrifícios eram feitos aos bezerros de ouro que ele erigira contrário à ordem de Jeová. — 1Rs 12:31-33.

Jesus provavelmente aludiu ao significado espiritual da Festividade das Barracas e talvez à cerimônia com a água de Siloé, quando, "no último dia, o grande dia da festividade, Jesus estava em pé e clamava, dizendo: 'Se alguém tiver sede, venha a mim e beba. Quem depositar fé em mim, assim como disse a Escritura: "Do seu mais íntimo manarão correntes de água viva."'" (Jo 7:37, 38) Também, ele talvez aludisse à iluminação de Jerusalém pelas lâmpadas e tochas, na área do templo, por ocasião da festividade, quando um pouco mais tarde ele disse aos judeus: "Eu sou a luz do mundo. Quem me segue, de modo algum andará na escuridão, mas possuirá a luz da vida." (Jo 8:12) Pouco depois da sua conversa com os judeus, Jesus talvez relacionasse Siloé com a festividade e suas luzes, quando encontrou um homem cego de nascença. Depois de declarar aos seus discípulos: "Sou a luz do mundo", ele cuspiu no chão e fez barro com a saliva, pôs o barro sobre os olhos do homem e lhe disse: "Vai lavar-te no reservatório de água de Siloé." — Jo 9:1-7.

Acenar o povo com ramos de palmeira, nesta festividade, lembra-nos também as multidões que acenavam ramos de palmeira durante a entrada de Jesus em Jerusalém, pouco antes da sua morte, embora isto não ocorresse por ocasião da Festividade das Barracas, mas, antes da Páscoa. (Jo 12:12, 13) Novamente, o apóstolo João, que observou em visão 144.000 dos escravos de Deus, selados na testa, informa-nos: "Depois destas coisas eu vi, e, eis uma grande multidão, que nenhum homem podia contar, de todas as nações, e tribos, e povos, e línguas, em pé diante do trono e diante do Cordeiro, trajados de compridas vestes brancas; e havia palmas nas suas mãos. E gritavam com voz alta, dizendo: 'Devemos a salvação ao nosso Deus, que está sentado no trono, e ao Cordeiro.'" — Re 7:1-10.

A Festividade das Barracas, certamente, era uma conclusão apropriada da parte principal do ano agrícola e do ciclo de festividades do ano. Tudo relacionado com ela exalava alegria, abundantes bênçãos da mão de Jeová, revigoramento e vida.

FESTIVIDADE DAS SEMANAS. Veja PENTECOSTES.

FESTIVIDADE DE TOQUE DE TROMBETA. Esta festividade ocorria no primeiro dia (ou na lua nova) do sétimo mês, etanim (tisri). Para os judeus, era o começo do ano secular. Destacava-se da Festividade da Lua Nova nos outros 11 meses como mais importante. A ordem a respeito da Festividade de Toque de Trombeta declara adicionalmente que ela devia ser reservada como dia de santo congresso, em que não se podia fazer nenhuma sorte de obra laboriosa.

A festividade obtém seu nome da ordem: "Deve haver para vós um completo repouso, uma recordação ao toque de trombeta." "Deve mostrar-se para vós um dia de toque de trombeta." Neste dia apresentavam-se os sacrifícios de um novilho, um carneiro e sete cordeiros, sadios, de um ano, junto com uma oferta de cereais de flor de farinha, umedecida com azeite, bem como um cabritinho como oferta pelo pecado. Isto era em adição às contínuas ofertas diárias, bem como aos sacrifícios especialmente oferecidos nos dias de lua nova. — Le 23:24; Núm 29:1-6.

Esta festividade, naturalmente, era importante, não só porque o mês que ela iniciava era o começo de um novo ano agrícola e de trabalho, mas também porque o Dia da Expiação caía no dia 10 deste mês, e a Festividade das Barracas começava no dia 15. O término da maior parte do recolhimento das safras do ano findo ocorria neste mês. As safras recolhidas durante o mês incluíam uvas para vinho, que alegra o coração do homem, e azeitonas, as quais, entre outras coisas, proviam de alimento, bem como de azeite para iluminação e para ser usado em conexão com muitas ofertas de cereais. (Sal 104:15) Deveras, esta festividade marcava o começo de um mês de agradecimentos a Jeová.

FESTIVIDADE DO SÁBADO. Veja SÁBADO.

FESTIVIDADE DOS PÃES NÃO FERMENTADOS. Esta festividade começava em 15 de nisã, o dia depois da Páscoa, e continuava por sete dias, até o 21 de nisã, inclusive. (Veja PÁSCOA.) Seu nome deriva dos pães não fermentados (hebr.: mats·tsóhth), o único pão permitido durante os sete dias da festividade. A massa de pão não fermentada é trabalhada com água, mas sem fermento. Tem de ser preparada rapidamente, para impedir a fermentação.

O primeiro dia da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados era uma assembleia solene, também um sábado. No segundo dia, 16 de nisã, levava-se ao sacerdote um molho das primícias da colheita da cevada, a primeira safra a amadurecer na Palestina. Antes desta festividade, não se podia consumir nenhum cereal novo, nem pão ou grãos torrados da nova safra. O sacerdote oferecia essas primícias simbolicamente a Jeová por mover um molho de cereais para lá e para cá, ao passo que se oferecia um carneiro sadio, no seu primeiro ano, como oferta queimada, junto com uma oferta de cereais umedecidos com azeite e uma oferta de bebida. (Le 23:6-14) Não havia ordem para queimar parte do cereal ou sua farinha no altar, como os sacerdotes faziam mais tarde. Não havia apenas uma oferta pública ou nacional de primícias, mas também havia a provisão de que cada família e cada pessoa que tinha alguma propriedade em Israel oferecesse sacrifícios de agradecimento durante esta ocasião festiva. — Êx 23:19; De 26:1, 2; veja PRIMÍCIAS.

Significado. Comer pães não fermentados nessa época estava em harmonia com as instruções que Moisés recebeu de Jeová, conforme registradas em Êxodo 12:14-20, que incluem a injunção estrita, no versículo 19: "Por sete dias não se deve achar nenhuma massa lêveda nas vossas casas." Em Deuteronômio 16:3, os pães não fermentados são chamados de "pão de tribulação", e eram para os judeus um lembrete anual da sua partida apressada da terra do Egito (quando não tiveram tempo para levedar sua massa [Êx 12:34]). Lembravam-se assim da sua condição de tribulação e de servidão, da qual Israel havia sido liberto, assim como dissera o próprio Jeová, "para que te lembres do dia da tua saída da terra do Egito todos os dias da tua vida". A concretização da liberdade que então tinham como nação e seu reconhecimento de Jeová como seu Libertador estabeleciam uma base apropriada para a primeira das três grandes festividades anuais dos israelitas. — De 16:16.

Observâncias Pré-Exílicas. Há três relatos registrados nas Escrituras a respeito da celebração da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados após a entrada dos israelitas na Terra da Promessa, e antes do seu exílio babilônico. Mas, não se mencionarem outras observâncias não deve ser tomado como significando que não eram realizadas. Antes, no primeiro relato, há uma referência geral a todas as festividades e arranjos de Salomão para celebrá-las. — 2Cr 8:12, 13.

Nos outros dois casos, as circunstâncias eram notáveis. Um é o reavivamento da celebração da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados após um tempo de descaso. Este reavivamento ocorreu durante o primeiro ano do reinado do fiel Rei Ezequias. É de interesse notar que, neste caso, não houve tempo suficiente para preparar a festividade anual em 15 de nisã, porque o trabalho de limpeza e de reparação do templo durou até o 16 de nisã. Portanto, fez-se uso da Lei para celebrar a festividade durante o segundo mês. (2Cr 29:17; 30:13, 21, 22; Núm 9:10, 11) Foi uma ocasião tão alegre e resultou em tal reavivamento religioso, que a celebração de sete dias mostrou ser simplesmente curta demais, e assim se reservaram mais sete dias para ela. O Rei Ezequias e seus príncipes contribuíram generosamente, dando 2.000 novilhos e 17.000 ovelhas para suprir alimento para as multidões presentes. — 2Cr 30:23, 24.

A observância da festividade foi o começo duma grande campanha contra a religião falsa, e, em muitas cidades, esta foi realizada antes de os adoradores voltarem para casa. (2Cr 31:1) A celebração desta Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados resultou na bênção de Jeová, bem como na eliminação da adoração de demônios, e é um excelente exemplo dos efeitos benéficos da celebração destas festividades nos israelitas.

O último relato registrado da observância pré-exílica da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados foi a celebração durante o reinado do Rei Josias, quando ele fez um esforço corajoso de restabelecer a adoração pura de Jeová em Judá. — 2Cr 35:1-19.

Embora essas sejam as únicas observâncias especificamente mencionadas, antes de haver reis, os fiéis juízes e sacerdotes de Israel, sem dúvida, se preocupavam em celebrar as festividades. Mais tarde, tanto Davi como Salomão fizeram extensos arranjos para manter o sacerdócio em funcionamento correto, e outros reis de Judá devem ter cuidado de que as festividades fossem celebradas regularmente. A Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados foi também celebrada com bastante regularidade em tempos pós-exílicos.

Observância Pós-Exílica. Após a libertação dos judeus de Babilônia e seu retorno à Terra da Promessa, reconstruiu-se e completou-se o templo em Jerusalém sob o forte encorajamento dado pelos profetas de Jeová, Ageu e Zacarias. (Esd 5:1, 2) Em 515 AEC, a reconstruída casa de Jeová foi inaugurada com grande alegria e com todos os sacrifícios apropriados, pertinentes à Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados. O registro de Esdras 6:22 declara: "E continuaram a celebrar com alegria a festividade dos pães não fermentados por sete dias."

O livro de Malaquias mostra que, com o tempo, apesar do início zeloso para a restauração da verdadeira adoração, quando os exilados retornaram de Babilônia, os sacerdotes ficaram descuidados, orgulhosos e autojustos. O serviço no templo tornou-se uma farsa, embora as festividades fossem celebradas de modo formalístico. (Mal 1:6-8, 12-14; 2:1-3; 3:8-10) Jesus encontrou os escribas e os fariseus guardando escrupulosamente as minúcias da Lei, além das suas tradições acrescentadas. Eles observavam zelosamente as festividades, inclusive a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, mas Jesus condenou-os, pois, por causa da hipocrisia deles, haviam perdido de vista o verdadeiro significado destes excelentes arranjos feitos por Jeová para a bênção deles. — Mt 15:1-9; 23:23, 24; Lu 19:45, 46.

Significado Profético. Jesus Cristo forneceu a interpretação do significado profético do fermento, ou lêvedo, conforme registrada em Mateus 16:6, 11, 12, quando advertiu os seus discípulos: "Mantende os olhos abertos e vigiai-vos do fermento dos fariseus e dos saduceus." Quando seus discípulos raciocinaram incorretamente entre si sobre o que ele queria dizer, ele falou com clareza: "'Como é que não discernis que não vos falei de pães? Mas, vigiai-vos do fermento dos fariseus e dos saduceus.' Compreenderam então que ele dissera que se vigiassem . . . do ensino dos fariseus e dos saduceus." Lucas também relata que Jesus declarou especificamente em outra ocasião: "Vigiai-vos do fermento dos fariseus, que é a hipocrisia." — Lu 12:1.

O apóstolo Paulo dá um significado similar ao fermento em conexão com a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, ao descrever o proceder que os cristãos devem seguir. Em 1 Coríntios 5:6-8, ele dá o seguinte conselho aos seus irmãos cristãos: "Não sabeis que um pouco de fermento leveda a massa toda? Retirai o velho fermento, para que sejais massa nova, conforme estiverdes livres do levedo. Pois, deveras, Cristo, a nossa páscoa, já tem sido sacrificado. Consequentemente, guardemos a festividade, não com o velho fermento, nem com o fermento de maldade e iniquidade, mas com os pães não fermentados da sinceridade e da verdade."

Em 16 de nisã, o segundo dia da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, o sumo sacerdote movia em oferta para lá e para cá as primícias da colheita da cevada, que era a primeira safra do ano, ou a que se poderia chamar de primeira das primícias da terra. (Le 23:10, 11) É significativo que Jesus Cristo foi ressuscitado naquele mesmo dia, 16 de nisã do ano 33 EC. O apóstolo compara Cristo com outros ressuscitados, dizendo: "No entanto, agora Cristo tem sido levantado dentre os mortos, as primícias dos que adormeceram na morte. . . . Mas, cada um na sua própria categoria: Cristo, as primícias, depois os que pertencem a Cristo durante a sua presença." Cristo é também chamado de "primogênito entre muitos irmãos". — 1Co 15:20-23; Ro 8:29.

FESTO [do lat.: Festivo; Alegre]. Governador da província romana da Judeia depois de Félix ter sido chamado de volta a Roma. (At 24:27) O ano desta mudança de governadores não é conhecido com exatidão; as únicas fontes de informação são a Bíblia e Josefo, e nenhuma delas lança luz sobre a nomeação feita por Nero. Há duas escolas de críticos, uma argumentando a favor da chegada de Pórcio Festo à Judeia já em 54 EC, a outra, só em 61. Os historiadores tendem a favorecer um tempo entre 58 e 61 EC. O ano 58 EC, conforme apresentado pela Analytical Concordance to the Bible (Concordância Analítica da Bíblia, p. 342), de Young, parece ser a data mais provável da ascensão de Festo como governador da Judeia.

Três dias depois de Festo chegar a Cesareia, ele viajou a Jerusalém, evidentemente para se familiarizar com os problemas do povo que devia governar. Paulo estava em Cesareia, deixado ali como prisioneiro pela administração de Félix. Os principais sacerdotes e os principais homens dos judeus não perderam tempo para exigir que ele fosse trazido a Jerusalém, visto que esperavam pegá-lo em caminho, de emboscada, e matá-lo. Festo, em vez disso, decidiu realizar um novo julgamento para Paulo e ordenou que os acusadores comparecessem perante seu tribunal em Cesareia. Depois do "julgamento", Festo estava convencido da inocência de Paulo, e mais tarde confessou ao Rei Agripa II: "Eu percebi que ele não tinha cometido nada que merecesse a morte." (At 25:25) Anteriormente, "desejoso de ganhar o favor dos judeus", Festo perguntou a Paulo se ele iria voluntariamente a Jerusalém para o julgamento. (At 25:9) Paulo, porém, respondeu: "Nenhum homem me pode entregar a eles como favor. Apelo para César!" — At 25:11.

Festo confrontou-se assim com um novo problema. Explicando a Agripa que tinha de mandar este prisioneiro para Roma, mas não dispunha de acusações contra ele, Festo observou: "Pois me parece desarrazoado enviar um prisioneiro e não indicar também as acusações contra ele." (At 25:27) Agripa ofereceu-se para ouvir ele mesmo a Paulo, a fim de resolver este problema. Paulo, na sua defesa, fez um discurso tão eloquente e emocionante, que Festo se sentiu induzido a exclamar: "Estás ficando louco, Paulo! A grande erudição está-te levando à loucura!" (At 26:24) Paulo voltou-se então para Agripa com um forte apelo, provocando a observação de Agripa: "Em pouco tempo me persuadirias a tornar-me cristão." (At 26:28) Mais tarde, Agripa disse a Festo: "Este homem podia ter sido livrado, se não tivesse apelado para César." Esta decisão foi inteiramente providencial, porque o Senhor revelara de antemão a Paulo: "Tem coragem! . . . terás de dar também testemunho em Roma." — At 23:11; 26:32.

Em comparação com a opressiva administração de Félix, a de Festo é classificada como geralmente favorável. Ele suprimiu os bandidos terroristas conhecidos como os Assassinos, ou Sicarii (sicários; faquistas), e de outras maneiras tentou sustentar a lei romana. Uma determinação de Festo, porém, foi anulada quando apelada para Roma. Agripa construiu seu refeitório com vista para a área sagrada do templo, motivo pelo qual os judeus construíram um muro para obstruir-lhe a vista. Festo ordenou que o muro fosse retirado, por bloquear a vista dos soldados, mas, quando o caso foi apelado para Roma, permitiu-se que o muro ficasse de pé. Festo morreu no cargo, sendo substituído por Albino.

FIAÇÃO. Processo de estirar e torcer fibras vegetais ou animais, tais como linho, algodão, lã e pelos de cabra, em linha ou fio. Linhas torcidas eram usadas para tecelagem, costura, bordados e para fazer cordas.

Entre os hebreus e outros, usavam-se para este processo a roca e o fuso. Diz-se a respeito de uma esposa capaz: "Ela estendeu suas mãos à roca de fiar e suas próprias mãos seguram o fuso." (Pr 31:19) A roca era uma vara em que as fibras limpas e penteadas ou cardadas (Is 19:9) estavam frouxamente enroladas. Os métodos variavam, mas um modo era segurar a roca na mão esquerda. As fibras eram estiradas dela até certa extensão e presas ao fuso. Este era uma vara mais curta, com um gancho numa ponta, para prender as fibras, e uma polia (um disco de material pesado, tal como pedra) perto da outra ponta. Usando a mão direita, a fiandeira girava o fuso pendurado, retorcendo assim as fibras em fio. Este fio, a seguir, era enrolado em torno do eixo do fuso e preso. Daí, repetia-se a operação até que todas as fibras da roca se tivessem tornado um só fio comprido.

Tanto homens como mulheres do antigo Egito faziam a fiação, mas, entre os hebreus, a fiação parece ter sido feita primariamente por mulheres. As mulheres israelitas tinham o privilégio de fiar e de contribuir tecidos quando o tabernáculo estava para ser construído. — Êx 35:25, 26.

Jesus Cristo referiu-se à fiação quando exortou seus discípulos a não ficarem indevidamente ansiosos quanto a que haviam de vestir, mas a confiar em que Deus os vestiria. Jesus disse: "Notai bem como os lírios crescem; eles nem labutam nem fiam; mas, eu vos digo: Nem mesmo Salomão, em toda a sua glória, vestia-se como um destes." — Lu 12:27, 28; Mt 6:28-30.

FIANÇA. Garantia do cumprimento duma obrigação; penhor, garantia ou caução; alguém que se responsabiliza por outro. O salmista apelou para que Jeová agisse como seu "penhor", protegendo-o contra defraudadores. — Sal 119:122.

O método costumeiro de alguém se tornar fiador de outro continuou imutável por séculos. O patriarca Jó fez a seguinte referência a isso: "Por favor, coloca deveras meu penhor junto de ti. Quem mais apertará as mãos comigo em compromisso?" (Jó 17:3) Provérbios 17:18 ajuda em determinar o proceder seguido: "O homem falto de coração dá apertos de mão, prestando plena fiança diante do seu companheiro." Evidentemente, alguém se tornava fiador de outro quando, na presença de testemunhas, batia, segurava ou apertava a mão do credor da transação e prometia assumir as obrigações do devedor, caso este deixasse de fazer o pagamento. No Oriente, este ato de bater ou tocar as mãos significava a selagem de um trato ou de um pacto. (Pr 11:21) Evidentemente, foi desta maneira que Jeú confirmou a resposta afirmativa de Jonadabe à pergunta: "É teu coração reto para comigo assim como o meu próprio coração é para com o teu coração?" Pois ele disse a Jonadabe: "Se é, dá-me deveras a tua mão." — 2Rs 10:15.

Utilizando outros meios, Judá deu seu anel de chancela, seu cordão e sua vara como penhor a Tamar, até que lhe mandasse um cabritinho como pagamento de relações sexuais. (Gên 38:17-20) Rubem ofereceu fiança a Jacó por Benjamim, quando propôs levar este ao Egito, dizendo: "Meus próprios dois filhos podem ser mortos por ti se não to trouxer de volta." Jacó recusou isto. Mais tarde, Judá conseguiu oferecer-se como fiança por Benjamim: "Eu é que serei fiança por ele. Da minha mão poderás demandar a penalidade por ele." Quando parecia que Benjamim se tornaria escravo no Egito, Judá estava pronto para tomar o lugar dele como escravo, visto que era fiança para o rapaz. Esta foi a base legal para a sua súplica a José: "Pois o teu escravo tornou-se fiança pelo rapaz enquanto estiver longe de seu pai . . . De modo que agora, por favor, deixa teu escravo ficar em lugar do rapaz, como escravo do meu amo." — Gên 42:37, 38; 43:8, 9; 44:32, 33.

A Lei regulamentava de forma estrita os penhores dados como garantia pelo devedor. Com o aumento do comércio em Israel, também aumentou a prática de fianças em transações mercantis. Os provérbios advertiam que isto era uma prática perigosa, tola, especialmente quando alguém não podia fazê-lo sem o risco de perder coisas essenciais para a vida. — Pr 6:1-5; 11:15; 22:26, 27; veja PENHOR.

FICOL. Chefe do exército do rei filisteu Abimeleque. Ficol acompanhou Abimeleque quando concluíram pactos tanto com Abraão como com Isaque. (Gên 21:22, 32; 26:26, 31) Visto que estas duas reuniões ocorreram com um intervalo de mais de 75 anos, "Ficol" bem que pode ser um título ou um nome usado para quem quer que ocupasse este cargo, em vez de ser o nome de um só homem tanto tempo neste posto. Por motivos similares, é possível que o nome de seu rei também fosse título.

FÍGADO. Grande órgão glandular dos animais vertebrados e do homem, que desempenha um papel na digestão e na química do sangue; no homem, é a maior glândula. O termo hebraico para fígado (ka·védh) deriva duma raiz que significa "pesado". As Escrituras Hebraicas usam a palavra "fígado" mais frequentemente com respeito ao fígado de animais, preparados pelos israelitas como sacrifício. (Êx 29:22; Le 3:4, 10, 15; 4:9) O que se devia fazer fumegar sobre o altar era "a acrescência do fígado". (Êx 29:13) O Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário Sobre o Velho Testamento), de C. F. Keil e F. Delitzsch, descreve esta parte do fígado como "o retículo do fígado, ou retículo do estômago . . . , que começa na divisão entre os lobos direito e esquerdo do fígado, e se estende em um lado pelo estômago, e, do outro, até a região dos rins. . . . Este retículo menor é delicado, mas não tão gorduroso quanto o retículo maior; embora ainda constitua parte das porções gordurosas". (1973, Vol. I, O Terceiro Livro de Moisés, p. 300) No comentário de Rashi sobre Levítico 3:4, ela é definida como "a parede (membrana) protetora sobre o fígado". — Pentateuch With Targum Onkelos, Haphtaroth and Rashi's Commentary (Pentateuco com Targum Onkelos, Haftarot e o Comentário de Rashi), traduzido para o inglês por M. Rosenbaum e A. Silbermann.

O relato do Rei Salomão sobre o jovem inexperiente, que sucumbe aos engodos da mulher imoral, conclui: "De repente ele vai atrás dela, . . . até que uma flecha lhe fende o fígado, . . . e ele não sabia que envolvia a sua própria alma." (Pr 7:21-23) Esta é uma descrição bem apropriada, porque os médicos verificaram que, em estágios avançados da sífilis (assim como também se dá com muitas outras doenças), organismos bacterianos estragam o fígado. O organismo (gonococo) responsável pela gonorreia, outra doença sexualmente transmissível, em alguns casos também causa uma grave inflamação do fígado. Naturalmente, um grave dano causado ao fígado pode resultar em morte. O papel do fígado, vital para a vida, é reconhecido por ser usado figuradamente para retratar profunda tristeza. — La 2:11.

O Rei Nabucodonosor, de Babilônia, quando procurou orientação para as suas manobras militares, "examinou o fígado", como forma de adivinhação. — Ez 21:21; veja ADIVINHAÇÃO.

FIGELO. Homem do distrito da Ásia, que 'se desviou de' Paulo. — 2Ti 1:15; veja ÁSIA.

FIGO [hebr.: te'e·náh; gr.: sy·ké, sý·kon]. Junto com a oliveira e a videira, a figueira (Ficus carica) é uma das plantas mais destacadas da Bíblia, sendo mencionada em mais de 50 textos. (Jz 9:8-13; Hab 3:17) A figueira é nativa do SO da Ásia, de Israel, da Síria e do Egito, e é famosa por sua notável longevidade. Embora esta árvore também viceje de forma silvestre, para produzir bons frutos, ela precisa de cultivo. (Lu 13:6-9) É bastante adaptável a vários tipos de solo, crescendo bem até mesmo em solo rochoso. Pode atingir a altura de uns 9 m, com um tronco do diâmetro de uns 60 cm, e tem ramos que se espalham amplamente. Embora seja primariamente apreciada pelos seus frutos, é também muito prezada pela sua boa sombra. (Jo 1:48-50) As folhas são amplas, tendo até 20 cm ou mais de largura. A primeira menção da figueira é com respeito ao uso das suas folhas costuradas como cobertura para os lombos de Adão e Eva. (Gên 3:7) Em algumas partes do Oriente Médio, folhas de figueira ainda são costuradas e usadas para embrulhar frutas, e para outros fins. — Veja SICÔMORO.

Safras Temporã e Serôdia. Basicamente, há duas safras de figos produzidas anualmente pelas figueiras: os primeiros figos maduros, ou figos temporãos (hebr.: bik·ku·ráh), que amadurecem em junho ou no começo de julho (Is 28:4; Je 24:2; Os 9:10), e os figos serôdios, que crescem no lenho novo e constituem a safra principal, amadurecendo em geral a partir de agosto. Os figos temporãos podem ser facilmente sacudidos para caírem da árvore, quando maduros, e são apreciados pelo seu sabor delicado. — Na 3:12.

Por volta de fevereiro, os primeiros botões dos frutos surgem nos ramos da estação anterior, e eles precedem às folhas em cerca de dois meses, visto que as folhas só costumam aparecer no fim de abril ou em maio. (Mt 24:32) No Cântico de Salomão 2:13, mencionam-se os primeiros sinais do amadurecimento dos novos figos verdes (hebr.: pagh) em conexão com as videiras em flor, floração que começa por volta de abril. Portanto, na época em que a árvore está coberta de folhas, ela também deveria ter frutos. A figueira que Jesus Cristo amaldiçoou parece ter tido folhas anormalmente cedo, visto que então era o dia 10 de nisã do ano 33 EC. Sua aparência dava motivos para se esperar que tivesse também frutos precoces, próprios para consumo, e o registro em Marcos 11:12-14 indica que Jesus se chegou à figueira pensando nisso, embora 'não fosse a estação dos figos', quer dizer, a época para a colheita dos figos. Ter a árvore somente folhas mostrava que não ia produzir nenhuma safra, e, portanto, era enganosa na sua aparência. Jesus amaldiçoou-a como improdutiva, fazendo-a secar-se. — Veja Mt 7:19; 21:43; Lu 13:6-9.

Uso Como Alimento e Como Remédio. Os figos eram uma fonte básica de alimento nos tempos bíblicos e continuam a sê-lo em diversos países do Oriente Médio. Eram transformados em "tortas de figos prensados" (hebr.: deve·lím), convenientes para transporte. (1Sa 25:18; 30:12; 1Cr 12:40) Uma torta assim foi usada como cataplasma no furúnculo do Rei Ezequias, e tortas deste tipo ainda são usadas desta maneira hoje no Oriente Médio. — 2Rs 20:7.

Uso Figurado e Profético. A figueira e a videira são mencionadas juntas em muitos textos, e as palavras de Jesus em Lucas 13:6 mostram que as figueiras muitas vezes eram plantadas em vinhedos. (2Rs 18:31; Jl 2:22) A expressão 'sentar-se cada um debaixo da sua própria videira e figueira' simbolizava condições pacíficas, prósperas e seguras. — 1Rs 4:25; Miq 4:4; Za 3:10.

Em vista do destaque da figueira na vida das pessoas, é compreensível por que foi tantas vezes usada nas profecias. Por causa da sua importância como alimento para a nação, o total fracasso duma safra de figos seria calamitoso. De modo que a figueira recebeu menção especial quando se predisse a destruição ou ruína daquela terra. — Je 5:17; 8:13; Os 2:12; Jl 1:7, 12; Am 4:9; Hab 3:17.

A própria nação de Israel foi comparada por Jeová a duas espécies de figos. (Je 24:1-10) Jesus, para ilustrar que se poderia reconhecer os falsos profetas pelos maus frutos deles, citou a impossibilidade de se colherem "figos dos abrolhos". (Mt 7:15, 16; compare isso com Tg 3:12.) O fato de a figueira 'brotar folhas' em meados da estação da primavera foi usado por Jesus como indicador bem conhecido do tempo. (Mt 24:32-34) Por fim, a facilidade com que ventos fortes fazem cair ao chão 'figos verdes' (gr.: ó·lyn·thos) é usada pelo escritor de Revelação (Apocalipse) como símile. — Re 6:13.

FILACTÉRIO. Veja CAIXINHA COM TEXTOS.

FILADÉLFIA [Afeição Fraternal]. Cidade situada no O da Ásia Menor, onde havia uma congregação cristã, à qual se escreveu uma das sete cartas contidas em Revelação (Apocalipse). (Re 1:11; 3:7-13) A cidade de Filadélfia, na Lídia, encontrava-se num planalto colinoso ao S do rio Cogamis, a uns 45 km ao SE de Sardes e a 80 km ao NO de Laodiceia. Foi construída no segundo século AEC por Êumenes II, rei de Pérgamo, ou por seu irmão Átalo II (Filadelfo), do qual a cidade recebeu o nome. A cidade encontrava-se à cabeceira dum amplo vale que, passando por Sardes, levava até Esmirna (a moderna Izmir) na costa marítima. Havia estradas que a ligavam com a costa, com Pérgamo ao N e com Laodiceia ao SE. A cidade servia de porta para o coração da Frígia.

Filadélfia era o próspero centro dum setor vinícola, e sua deidade principal era Dioniso, deus do vinho. A região estava sujeita a repetidos terremotos, um dos quais destruiu Filadélfia em 17 EC. Com a ajuda financeira de Roma, a cidade foi reconstruída e adotou o nome Neocaesarea (Nova Cesareia), e, num período posterior, Flávia. O lugar é agora ocupado pela moderna Alasehir. A cidade antiga era um centro do qual se espalhou o helenismo na Ásia Menor.

Evidentemente, havia judeus ali, sendo que Revelação 3:9 menciona "os da sinagoga de Satanás, que se dizem judeus". Estes talvez agissem contra os cristãos fiéis na cidade, por tentar recobrar os cristãos que eram judeus por nascimento, ou por persuadi-los a reter ou a assumir certas práticas da Lei mosaica. A tentativa fracassou. Jesus elogiou os cristãos pela sua perseverança. Incentivou-os a 'persistir em apegar-se' ao que tinham. — Re 3:9-11.

Quanto à Filadélfia de Decápolis, veja RABÁ N.º 1.

FILÊMON [Amoroso]. Amo cristão de escravos, associado com a congregação em Colossos. Sua casa, nesta cidade da parte sudoeste da Ásia Menor, servia de local de reunião para a congregação ali. Filêmon mostrou-se fonte de revigoramento para concristãos, e exemplo de fé e de amor. O apóstolo Paulo considerou-o como amado colaborador. (Flm 1, 2, 5-7; compare Col 4:9 com Flm 10-12.) O desejo de Paulo, de se hospedar com Filêmon, reflete favoravelmente sobre a hospitalidade deste homem. — Flm 22; compare isso com At 16:14, 15.

Áfia e Arquipo parecem ter sido membros da família de Filêmon, visto que Paulo também se dirige a eles na sua carta a Filêmon. Áfia talvez fosse a esposa de Filêmon, e Arquipo pode ter sido filho dele. — Flm 2.

Parece que Filêmon tornou-se cristão pelos esforços de Paulo. (Flm 19) Todavia, visto que Paulo não pregara na própria Colossos (Col 2:1), Filêmon talvez chegasse a conhecer o cristianismo em resultado da atividade do apóstolo em Éfeso, por dois anos, quando "todos os que habitavam no distrito da Ásia [que abrangia Colossos] . . . ouviram a palavra do Senhor". — At 19:10.

Algum tempo antes de Filêmon receber a carta de Paulo, seu escravo Onésimo fugira dele. Este escravo fugitivo possivelmente até mesmo furtou dinheiro do seu amo para financiar a viagem a Roma, onde mais tarde conheceu Paulo e se tornou cristão. — Flm 10, 11, 18, 19; veja ESCRAVO.

FILÊMON, CARTA A. Carta escrita pelo apóstolo Paulo, de seu próprio punho, e dirigida principalmente a Filêmon. (Flm 1, 2, 19) Deve ter sido escrita algum tempo depois do início do primeiro encarceramento de Paulo em Roma (provavelmente c. 60-61 EC), porque o apóstolo tinha a esperança de ser "posto em liberdade". — V. 22; veja FILÊMON; ONÉSIMO.

O objetivo de o apóstolo escrever esta carta era animar Filêmon a bondosamente aceitar de volta seu escravo fugitivo, Onésimo. Em vez de Paulo usar sua autoridade apostólica para lhe ordenar isso, ele apelou à base do amor e da amizade pessoal. (Flm 8, 9, 17) Conhecendo Filêmon como homem de fé e amor, Paulo estava confiante de que receberia novamente seu escravo, anteriormente inútil, mas agora cristão, assim como receberia o próprio apóstolo. (Vv. 10, 11, 21) Isto é especialmente dig-

DESTAQUES DE FILÊMON

Carta que incentivava a que se mostrasse amor e misericórdia para com um escravo fugitivo que se tornara cristão.

Escrita por volta de 60-61 EC, enquanto Paulo era prisioneiro em Roma.

Elogiado Filêmon por seu amor e sua fé. (Vv 1-7)

Paulo chama Filêmon de amado e de colaborador.

Relatos sobre o amor e a fé de Filêmon induzem Paulo a agradecer a Deus e dão ao apóstolo muita alegria e consolo.

Paulo manda Onésimo de volta como "mais do que escravo". (Vv 8-25)

O encarcerado Paulo, à base do amor, apela a favor do escravo fugitivo Onésimo, que se tornou cristão pela associação com Paulo.

Visto que Onésimo é útil em ministrar-lhe, Paulo gostaria de retê-lo; o apóstolo, porém, o manda de volta, uma vez que não quer fazer nada sem o consentimento de Filêmon.

Paulo exorta Filêmon a acolher Onésimo como irmão, como se fosse o próprio apóstolo, e Paulo expressa confiança em Filêmon fazer ainda mais do que o pedido.

no de nota, visto que Filêmon tinha o direito legal de dar a Onésimo uma severa punição.

Além de nos fornecer um exemplo real, que ilustra a beleza da benignidade, do perdão e da misericórdia cristãos, a carta nos diz algo sobre os primitivos cristãos. Eles se reuniam em lares particulares, tratavam uns aos outros de "irmão" e "irmã" (Flm 1, 2, 20), oravam uns pelos outros (vv. 4, 22) e eram encorajados pela fé e pelo amor mostrados por concrentes (vv. 4-7).

FILETO [Amado; Digno de Ser Amado]. Apóstata do cristianismo, no primeiro século, mencionado por Paulo junto com Himeneu; Paulo descreve Fileto e Himeneu como falsos instrutores no que se refere à ressurreição, e como subvertedores da fé. — 2Ti 2:17, 18.

FILHA. Descendente do sexo feminino; no hebraico, bath, e no grego, thy·gá·ter. (Gên 5:4; Mt 14:6; At 21:9) O nascimento de filhas numa família nos tempos bíblicos não era um evento tão grande como a chegada de filhos; a posição delas era menos honrosa do que a dos meninos, e os nomes delas não foram tantas vezes registrados. (1Cr 2:34, 35) Todavia, a maioria dos pais amavam muito as filhas e protegiam os interesses delas. Quando pais pesarosos intercederam, Jesus curou a filha duma mulher fenícia, e levantou dentre os mortos a filha de Jairo. — Mt 15:22-28; Lu 8:41, 42, 49-56.

Na sociedade patriarcal, as filhas tinham certos direitos, certas responsabilidades e também certas limitações. Designavam-se-lhes diversas tarefas. As filhas de sacerdotes comiam da porção sacerdotal dos sacrifícios. (Gên 24:16, 19, 20; 29:6-9; Le 10:14) A filha era propriedade do pai até ele dá-la em casamento (Jos 15:16, 17; 1Sa 18:17, 19, 27), e, como tal, podia até mesmo ser dada em penhor ou vendida em escravidão, embora não a um estrangeiro. (Êx 21:7-10; Ne 5:2-5) Até ela se casar, seus votos estavam sujeitos à anulação pelo pai. (Núm 30:3-5) O pai não podia legalmente torná-la prostituta, e caso ela fosse violentada, ele podia cobrar indenização. (Êx 22:16, 17; Le 19:29; De 22:28, 29) Há casos em que os pais ofereciam suas filhas virgens a turbas depravadas, para proteger seus hóspedes. (Gên 19:6-8; Jz 19:22-24) As filhas às vezes recebiam uma herança junto com os seus irmãos, mas no caso das cinco filhas de Zelofeade, o qual faleceu sem deixar filhos varões, elas receberam a inteira herança de seus antepassados, sob a condição de que se casassem com filhos de Manassés, a fim de que a propriedade permanecesse na mesma tribo. (Núm 36:1-12; Jos 15:19; Jó 42:15) Quando uma filha era divorciada ou viúva, podia voltar à casa do pai. — Gên 38:11; Le 22:13.

"Filha" — trata-se sempre da descendente imediata?

O termo "filha" era aplicado a relações que não eram a progênie imediata da pessoa. Por exemplo, em certas circunstâncias, o termo referia-se a uma irmã (Gên 34:8, 17), uma filha adotiva (Est 2:7, 15), uma nora (Jz 12:9; Ru 1:11-13), uma neta (1Rs 15:2, 10, onde a palavra hebraica para filha, bath, é vertida por "neta" em Mo, NM; veja 2Cr 13:1, 2) e uma descendente. — Gên 27:46; Lu 1:5; 13:16.

Além de ser aplicado a estas parentas diretas, o termo "filha" era aplicado a mulheres em geral (Gên 6:2, 4; 30:13; Pr 31:29); a mulheres de determinado país, povo ou cidade (Gên 24:37; Jz 11:40; 21:21); e adoradoras de deuses falsos (Mal 2:11). Era usado de modo geral quando alguém em autoridade ou uma pessoa mais idosa se dirigia bondosamente a uma mulher mais jovem. (Ru 3:10, 11; Mr 5:34) Formas da palavra bath também são usadas para se referir a "ramos" duma árvore (Gên 49:22) e a "aldeias dependentes" duma cidade maior. (Núm 21:25; Jos 17:11; Je 49:2) O termo para "filha", nos seus muitos sentidos, ocorre mais de 600 vezes na Bíblia.

FILHO. A palavra hebraica ben e a grega hui·ós, que significam "filho", muitas vezes são usadas em sentido mais amplo do que apenas para designar o descendente masculino imediato da pessoa. "Filho" pode significar filho adotivo (Êx 2:10; Jo 1:45), descendente, tal como um neto ou bisneto (Êx 1:7; 2Cr 35:14; Je 35:16; Mt 12:23), ou genro. — Compare 1Cr 3:17 e Lu 3:27 (Sealtiel evidentemente era filho de Jeconias e genro de Néri); Lu 3:23, "José, filho de Eli", evidentemente o genro (nesta frase, hui·ós, "filho", não aparece no texto grego, mas é subentendido). — Veja CRIANÇA (FILHO), CRIANCINHAS.

Os homens muitas vezes eram identificados, ou diferenciados, pelo nome do pai ou pelo de um antepassado mais distante, como (Davi), "o filho de Jessé". (1Sa 22:7, 9) As palavras hebraica e aramaica ben e bar, "filho", frequentemente eram prefixadas ao nome do pai, dando ao filho um sobrenome, como Barjesus (que significa "Filho de Jesus"). (At 13:6) Algumas versões não traduzem o prefixo; outras o traduzem na maioria dos casos; outras fornecem a tradução na margem. Ou o prefixo talvez seja ligado ao nome por causa das circunstâncias que cercavam o nascimento do filho, como Ben-Ami, que significa "Filho do Meu Povo [isto é, dos meus parentes]", e não filho de estrangeiros; ou Ben-Oni, que significa "Filho do Meu Pesar", nome dado a Benjamim pela sua moribunda mãe Raquel. — Gên 19:38; 35:18.

Além disso, a palavra "filhos" frequentemente serve para fins descritivos, tais como: orientais (literalmente: "filhos do Oriente" [1Rs 4:30; Jó 1:3 n]); "ungidos" (literalmente: "filhos do óleo" [Za 4:14 n]); membros ("filhos") de classes ocupacionais, tais como "filhos dos profetas" (1Rs 20:35), ou: "membro ["filho"] dos misturadores de unguento" (Ne 3:8); exilados retornados ("filhos do Exílio") (Esd 10:7, 16 n); homens imprestáveis, patifes ("filhos de belial") (1Sa 2:12 n). Aqueles que adotam certa conduta, ou que manifestam certa característica, são designados por expressões tais como "filhos do Altíssimo", "filhos da luz e filhos do dia", "filhos do reino", "filhos do iníquo", "filho do Diabo", "filhos da desobediência". (Lu 6:35; 1Te 5:5; Mt 13:38; At 13:10; Ef 2:2) Assim também com o julgamento ou resultado correspondente à característica, tal como "objeto para a Geena" (literalmente: filho da Geena); "filho da destruição". (Mt 23:15; Jo 17:12; 2Te 2:3) Isaías, que profetizou o castigo de Deus sobre Israel, chamou a nação de "meus trilhados e filho da minha eira". — Is 21:10.

Os anjos, criados por Deus, são filhos de Deus. (Jó 1:6; 38:7) Adão, como criação de Deus, era filho de Deus. (Lu 3:38) Aqueles juízes e governantes de Israel, contra quem se dirigiu a palavra de Deus, eram chamados de "filhos do Altíssimo", sem dúvida, porque ocupavam um cargo em Israel como representantes do governo divino, embora fossem transgressores. (Sal 82:6) Aqueles que Deus escolhe para serem co-herdeiros do seu Filho Jesus Cristo são chamados de "filhos de Deus". — Ro 8:14-17.

Desejo de Ter Descendente Masculino. Nos tempos antigos, os casais desejavam fortemente um descendente masculino. (Gên 4:1, 25; 29:32-35) Conforme o expressou o salmista: "Filhos são uma herança da parte de Jeová . . . Feliz o varão vigoroso que encheu deles a sua aljava." (Sal 127:3-5) Havendo filho varão, a linhagem de descendência era garantida, o nome dos antepassados era preservado na posteridade e a propriedade hereditária de terra permanecia na família. (Núm 27:8) As mulheres israelitas desejavam ter filhos varões, talvez com a esperança de que um dos seus filhos mostrasse ser o "descendente [lit.: semente]" por meio de quem viriam as bênçãos de Deus para a humanidade, conforme prometido a Abraão. (Gên 22:18; 1Sa 1:5-11) No devido tempo, o anjo Gabriel anunciou a Maria, uma virgem da tribo de Judá, que ela seria "altamente favorecida", acrescentando: "Conceberás na tua madre e darás à luz um filho, e deves dar-lhe o nome de Jesus. Este será grande e será chamado Filho do Altíssimo; e Jeová Deus lhe dará o trono de Davi, seu pai." — Lu 1:28, 31, 32.

FILHO(S) DE DEUS.

A expressão "Filho de Deus" identifica primariamente a Cristo Jesus. Outros chamados de "filho(s) de Deus" incluem criaturas espirituais, inteligentes, produzidas por Deus; o homem Adão, antes de pecar; e os humanos com os quais Deus lidou à base duma relação pactuada.

"Filhos do Verdadeiro Deus." A primeira menção de "filhos do verdadeiro Deus" ocorre em Gênesis 6:2-4. Ali, esses filhos são mencionados como 'começando a notar as filhas dos homens, que elas eram bem-parecidas; e foram tomar para si esposas, a saber, todas as que escolheram', antes do Dilúvio global.

Muitos comentadores afirmam que estes 'filhos de Deus' eram também humanos, sendo na realidade homens da linhagem de Sete. Baseiam seu argumento no fato de que o piedoso Noé era da linhagem de Sete, ao passo que as outras linhagens descendentes de Adão, a de Caim e as de quaisquer outros filhos de Adão (Gên 5:3, 4), foram destruídas no Dilúvio. De modo que dizem que, tomarem "os filhos do verdadeiro Deus" por esposas "as filhas dos homens" significa que os setitas passaram a casar-se com as da linhagem do iníquo Caim.

Todavia, não há nada que mostre que Deus fizesse neste ponto alguma distinção assim entre as linhagens familiares. Falta evidência bíblica corroborante para apoiar o conceito de que aqui se trata de casamentos mistos entre as linhagens de Sete e de Caim, ou que esses casamentos fossem responsáveis pelo nascimento de "poderosos", mencionados no versículo 4 . É verdade que a expressão "filhos de homens [ou "da humanidade"]" (que aqueles que preferem o já mencionado conceito contrastariam com a expressão 'filhos de Deus') é frequentemente usada em sentido desfavorável, mas nem sempre. — Veja Sal 4:2; 57:4; Pr 8:22, 30, 31; Je 32:18, 19; Da 10:16.

Filhos angélicos de Deus. Por outro lado, há uma explicação que encontra corroboração nas Escrituras. A próxima ocorrência da expressão "filhos do verdadeiro Deus" está em Jó 1:6, e ali se refere obviamente a filhos espirituais de Deus, reunidos na presença Dele, entre eles comparecendo também Satanás, que estivera a "percorrer a terra". (Jó 1:7; veja também 2:1, 2.) Novamente, em Jó 38:4-7, "os filhos de Deus" que 'bradaram em aplauso' quando Deus 'lançou a pedra angular' da Terra, claramente eram filhos angélicos e não humanos descendentes de Adão (o qual nem mesmo ainda tinha sido criado). Igualmente, no Salmo 89:6, "os filhos de Deus" definitivamente são criaturas celestiais, não terrenas. — Veja DEUS (Termos Hebraicos).

A identificação dos "filhos do verdadeiro Deus", em Gênesis 6:2-4, com criaturas angélicas sofre objeção por parte daqueles que sustentam o já mencionado conceito, por dizerem que o contexto se relaciona inteiramente com iniquidade humana. Esta objeção não é válida, porém, visto que a intervenção errada de criaturas espirituais em assuntos humanos com toda a certeza podia contribuir para o aumento da iniquidade humana ou acelerá-la. Criaturas espirituais iníquas, durante o tempo em que Jesus esteve na terra, embora não se materializassem então em forma visível, foram responsáveis pela conduta humana extremamente errada. (Veja DEMÔNIO; POSSESSÃO DEMONÍACA.) A menção da intromissão nos assuntos humanos por parte de filhos angélicos de Deus podia razoavelmente aparecer no relato de Gênesis, exatamente porque explica em grau considerável a gravidade da situação que se desenvolvera na Terra antes do Dilúvio.

Isto é apoiado pelas referências do apóstolo Pedro aos "espíritos em prisão, os quais outrora tinham sido desobedientes, quando a paciência de Deus esperava nos dias de Noé" (1Pe 3:19, 20), e aos "anjos que pecaram", mencionados em conexão com o "mundo antigo" do tempo de Noé (2Pe 2:4, 5), bem como pela declaração de Judas a respeito dos "anjos que não conservaram a sua posição original, mas abandonaram a sua própria moradia correta". (Ju 6) Caso se negue que "os filhos do verdadeiro Deus", de Gênesis 6:2-4, sejam criaturas espirituais, então essas declarações feitas por escritores cristãos tornam-se enigmáticas, sem explicação de como ocorreu esta desobediência angélica ou sua relação real com o tempo de Noé.

Ocasionalmente, anjos definitivamente materializaram corpos humanos, até mesmo comendo e bebendo com homens. (Gên 18:1-22; 19:1-3) A declaração de Jesus, quanto a homens e mulheres ressuscitados não se casarem, nem serem dados em casamento, mas serem como os "anjos no céu", mostra que não existe casamento entre tais criaturas celestiais, nem se indica haver entre elas a distinção de sexo. (Mt 22:30) Mas isto não quer dizer que essas criaturas angélicas não podiam materializar formas humanas e entrar em relações conjugais com mulheres humanas. Deve-se notar que a referência de Judas a anjos não conservarem sua posição original e a abandonarem sua "própria moradia correta" (referindo-se aqui certamente a abandonarem o domínio espiritual) é logo seguida pela declaração: "Assim também Sodoma e Gomorra, e a cidades em volta delas, as quais, da mesma maneira como os precedentes, tendo cometido fornicação de modo excessivo e tendo ido após a carne para uso desnatural, são postas diante de nós como exemplo de aviso." (Ju 6, 7) De modo que o peso conjunto da evidência bíblica indica um desvio de anjos, a realização de atos contrários à sua natureza espiritual, ocorrendo nos dias de Noé. Portanto, não parece haver razão válida para se duvidar que os 'filhos de Deus', de Gênesis 6:2-4, eram filhos angélicos. — Veja NEFILINS.

O Primeiro Filho Humano e Seus Descendentes. Adão foi o primeiro humano "filho de Deus" por ter sido criado por Deus. (Gên 2:7; Lu 3:38) Quando foi condenado à morte como pecador deliberado e foi expulso do santuário de Deus no Éden, ele, na realidade, foi enjeitado por Deus e perdeu sua relação filial com o Pai celestial. — Gên 3:17-24.

Os descendentes dele têm nascido com tendências pecaminosas hereditárias. (Veja PECADO.) Visto que os descendentes de Adão nasceram de alguém rejeitado por Deus, eles não podiam reivindicar a relação de filhos de Deus só à base do nascimento. Isto é demonstrado pelas palavras do apóstolo João, em João 1:12, 13. Ele mostra que aqueles que aceitaram Cristo Jesus, exercendo fé no nome dele, receberam "autoridade para se tornarem filhos de Deus, porque . . . nasceram, não do sangue, nem da vontade carnal, nem da vontade do homem, mas de Deus". A condição de alguém ser filho de Deus, portanto, não é encarada como algo automaticamente recebido por todos os descendentes de Adão por ocasião do seu nascimento. Este e outros textos mostram que, desde a queda de Adão no pecado, requer-se algum reconhecimento especial da parte de Deus para homens serem designados como Seus "filhos". Isto é ilustrado nos Seus tratos com Israel.

"Israel É Meu Filho." Falando a Faraó, que se considerava um deus e filho do deus egípcio Rá, Jeová chamou Israel de "meu filho, meu primogênito", e exigiu do governante egípcio: "Manda embora meu filho, para que me sirva." (Êx 4:22, 23) De modo que a inteira nação de Israel foi encarada por Deus como seu "filho", por ser Seu povo escolhido, "uma propriedade especial dentre todos os povos". (De 14:1, 2) Não é somente por Jeová Deus ser a Fonte de toda a vida, mas mais especificamente por Ele, em harmonia com o pacto abraâmico, ter produzido este povo, que Ele é chamado de seu "Criador", seu "Formador" e seu "Pai", levando o Seu nome. (Veja Sal 95:6, 7; 100:3; Is 43:1-7, 15; 45:11, 12, 18, 19; 63:16.) Ele o 'ajudara mesmo desde o ventre', evidentemente referindo-se ao próprio começo do seu desenvolvimento como povo, e o 'formou' pelos seus tratos com ele e pelo pacto da Lei, dando forma às suas características e estrutura nacionais. (Is 44:1, 2, 21; compare isso com as expressões feitas por Deus a Jerusalém, em Ez 16:1-14; também as expressões de Paulo, em Gál 4:19 e 1Te 2:11, 12.) Jeová protegeu, carregou, corrigiu os do seu povo, e fez provisões para eles, assim como um pai faria para seu filho. (De 1:30, 31; 8:5-9; compare isso com Is 49:14, 15.) A nação, como "filho", devia ter servido para o louvor de seu Pai. (Is 43:21; Mal 1:6) Senão, Israel negaria a sua filiação (De 32:4-6, 18-20; Is 1:2, 3; 30:1, 2, 9), assim como alguns israelitas agiram de modo vergonhoso e foram chamados de "filhos de belial" (expressão hebraica literal vertida por "homens imprestáveis" em De 13:13 e em outros textos; compare isso com 2Co 6:15). Tornaram-se "filhos renegados". — Je 3:14, 22; compare isso com 4:22.

Era neste sentido nacional, e por causa da sua relação pactuada, que Deus lidava com os israelitas quais filhos. Isto se vê em que Deus, simultaneamente, se refere a si mesmo não só como 'Aquele que os fez', mas também como seu "Resgatador" e até mesmo como seu "dono marital", sendo que esta última expressão coloca a Israel na relação de esposa Dele. (Is 54:5, 6; compare isso com Is 63:8; Je 3:14.) Evidentemente, era pensando na sua relação pactuada e reconhecendo Deus como responsável pela formação da nação que os israelitas se dirigiam a Jeová como "nosso Pai". — Is 63:16-19; compare isso com Je 3:18-20; Os 1:10, 11.

A tribo de Efraim tornou-se a mais destacada do reino setentrional de dez tribos, seu nome muitas vezes representando aquele reino inteiro. Visto que Jeová decidiu que Efraim, em vez de Manassés, o verdadeiro primogênito de José, recebesse a bênção de filho primogênito de seu avô Jacó, Jeová chamou a tribo de Efraim corretamente de "meu primogênito". — Je 31:9, 20; Os 11:1-8, 12; compare isso com Gên 48:13-20.

'Filhos' israelitas individuais. Deus designou também certas pessoas em Israel como seus 'filhos', em sentido especial. O Salmo 2, atribuído a Davi, em Atos 4:24-26, pelo visto aplica-se inicialmente a ele, quando fala do "filho" de Deus. (Sal 2:1, 2, 7-12) O salmo cumpriu-se mais tarde em Cristo Jesus, conforme mostra o contexto em Atos. Visto que o contexto no salmo mostra que Deus falava, não a um bebê, mas a um homem adulto, ao dizer: "Tu és meu filho; hoje eu me tornei teu pai", segue-se que estar Davi em tal relação com Ele resultou da sua escolha especial por Deus para o reinado, e dos tratos paternais de Deus com ele. (Veja Sal 89:3, 19-27.) De modo similar, Jeová disse a respeito de Salomão, filho de Davi: "Eu mesmo me tornarei seu pai e ele mesmo se tornará meu filho." — 2Sa 7:12-14; 1Cr 22:10; 28:6.

Perda da filiação. Quando Jesus estava na Terra, os judeus ainda afirmavam que Deus era seu "Pai". Mas Jesus disse francamente a certos opositores que eles eram 'do pai deles, o Diabo', porque escutavam o Adversário de Deus, e faziam a vontade e as obras dele; por isso, mostravam que 'não eram de Deus'. (Jo 8:41, 44, 47) Isto mostra novamente que a filiação com Deus, por parte de qualquer dos descendentes de Adão, requer não a mera ascendência carnal, natural, mas primariamente a provisão de Deus, de uma relação espiritual com Ele, e que tal relação, por sua vez, requer que os "filhos" sejam fiéis a Deus por manifestar as qualidades Dele, por serem obedientes à Sua vontade e servirem fielmente aos Seus propósitos e interesses.

Filhos Cristãos de Deus. Conforme João 1:11, 12, torna evidente, apenas a alguns dentre a nação de Israel, àqueles que mostravam ter fé em Cristo Jesus, foi concedida a "autoridade para se tornarem filhos de Deus". O sacrifício resgatador de Cristo livrou este "restante" judaico (Ro 9:27; 11:5) do pacto da Lei, o qual, embora bom e perfeito, ainda assim os condenava como pecadores, como escravos do pecado; de modo que Cristo os libertou para que pudessem 'receber a adoção como filhos' e tornar-se herdeiros por meio de Deus. — Gál 4:1-7; compare isso com Gál 3:19-26.

Pessoas das nações, anteriormente "sem Deus no mundo" (Ef 2:12), também ficaram reconciliadas com Deus pela fé em Cristo e entraram na relação de filhos. — Ro 9:8, 25, 26; Gál 3:26-29.

Iguais a Israel, esses cristãos constituem um povo pactuado, introduzidos no "novo pacto" validado pela aplicação do sangue derramado de Cristo. (Lu 22:20; He 9:15) Todavia, Deus lida individualmente com os cristãos ao aceitá-los neste pacto. Por ouvirem as boas novas e exercerem fé, são chamados para ser co-herdeiros do Filho de Deus (Ro 8:17; He 3:1), são "declarados justos" por Deus à base da sua fé no resgate (Ro 5:1, 2), e assim são 'produzidos pela palavra da verdade' (Tg 1:18), 'nascendo de novo' como cristãos batizados, gerados ou produzidos pelo espírito de Deus quais filhos, destinados a usufruir a vida espiritual nos céus (Jo 3:3; 1Pe 1:3, 4). Receberam, não um espírito de escravidão, tal como resultou da transgressão de Adão, mas "um espírito de adoção, como filhos, espírito pelo qual [clamam]: 'Aba, Pai!' ", sendo o termo "Aba" uma forma íntima e carinhosa de se dirigir ao pai. (Ro 8:14-17; veja ABA; ADOÇÃO [Significado Cristão].) Graças à superior mediação e sacerdócio de Cristo, e à benignidade imerecida de Deus expressa por meio dele, a filiação desses cristãos gerados pelo espírito é uma relação mais íntima com Deus do que a que foi usufruída pelo Israel carnal. — He 4:14-16; 7:19-25; 12:18-24.

Conservar a filiação. Seu "novo nascimento" para esta esperança viva (1Pe 1:3) não garante por si só a conservação da sua filiação. Precisam ser "conduzidos pelo espírito de Deus", não pela sua carne pecaminosa, e precisam estar dispostos a sofrer assim como Cristo sofreu. (Ro 8:12-14, 17) Têm de ser "imitadores de Deus, como filhos amados" (Ef 5:1), refletindo Suas qualidades divinas de paz, amor, misericórdia, benignidade (Mt 5:9, 44, 45; Lu 6:35, 36), sendo "inculpes e inocentes" das coisas que caracterizam a "geração pervertida e deturpada" entre a qual vivem (Fil 2:15), purificando-se de práticas injustas (1Jo 3:1-4, 9, 10), sendo obedientes aos mandamentos de Deus e aceitando a Sua disciplina (1Jo 5:1-3; He 12:5-7).

Obtenção da plena adoção como filhos. Embora chamados para ser filhos de Deus, eles, enquanto na carne, apenas têm um "penhor daquilo que há de vir". (2Co 1:22; 5:1-5; Ef 1:5, 13, 14) É por isso que o apóstolo, embora falando de si mesmo e de seus concristãos como já sendo "filhos de Deus", não obstante podia dizer que "também nós mesmos, os que temos as primícias, a saber, o espírito, sim, nós mesmos gememos em nosso íntimo, ao passo que esperamos seriamente a adoção como filhos, seremos livrados de nossos corpos por meio de resgate". (Ro 8:14, 23) Assim, depois de vencerem o mundo pela fidelidade até a morte, eles recebem a plena realização da sua filiação por serem ressuscitados como filhos espirituais de Deus e "irmãos" do principal Filho de Deus, Cristo Jesus. — He 2:10-17; Re 21:7; compare isso com Re 2:7, 11, 26, 27; 3:12, 21.

Os que são filhos espirituais de Deus, tendo recebido esta chamada celestial, sabem que são tais, porque 'o próprio espírito de Deus dá testemunho com o espírito deles de que são filhos de Deus'. (Ro 8:16) Evidentemente, isto significa que o espírito deles age como força impelente na sua vida, induzindo-os a corresponder positivamente às expressões do espírito de Deus, por meio da Sua Palavra inspirada, em falar sobre essa esperança celestial, e também aos seus tratos com eles por meio deste espírito. Assim eles têm a garantia de que são deveras filhos espirituais e herdeiros de Deus.

Liberdade Gloriosa dos Filhos de Deus. O apóstolo fala da "glória que há de ser revelada em nós" e também da "expectativa ansiosa da criação . . . esperando a revelação dos filhos de Deus". (Ro 8:18, 19) Visto que a glória destes filhos é celestial, é evidente que tal "revelação" da sua glória tem de ser precedida pela sua ressurreição para a vida celestial. (Veja Ro 8:23.) Entretanto, 2 Tessalonicenses 1:6-10 indica que isto não é tudo o que está envolvido; fala da "revelação do Senhor Jesus" como trazendo a punição judicial sobre os julgados adversamente por Deus, fazendo-o "no tempo em que ele vem para ser glorificado em conexão com os seus santos". — Veja REVELAÇÃO.

Visto que Paulo diz que "a criação" espera esta revelação, e que ela então será "liberta da escravização à corrupção e terá a gloriosa liberdade dos filhos de Deus", é evidente que outros, além destes celestiais "filhos de Deus", derivam benefícios da revelação destes em glória. (Ro 8:19-23) O termo grego vertido por "criação" pode referir-se a qualquer criatura, humana ou animal, ou à criação em geral. Paulo a menciona aqui como estando em "expectativa ansiosa", como "esperando", como "sujeita à futilidade, [embora] não de sua própria vontade", como "liberta da escravização à corrupção [a fim de ter] a liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus", e como 'gemendo junta', assim como os "filhos" cristãos gemem no seu íntimo; todas estas expressões indicam conclusivamente a criação humana, a família humana, portanto, não a criação em geral, incluindo animais, vegetação e outras criações, tanto animadas como inanimadas. (Veja Col 1:23.) Portanto, isto deve significar que a revelação dos filhos de Deus, em glória, abre o caminho para outros da família humana entrarem na relação de verdadeiros filhos de Deus e usufruírem a liberdade que acompanha tal relação. — Veja DECLARAR JUSTO (Outros Justos); GRANDE MULTIDÃO.

Visto que Cristo Jesus é o predito a se tornar o "Pai Eterno" (Is 9:6) e visto que os "filhos de Deus", cristãos, se tornam seus "irmãos" (Ro 8:29), segue-se que deve haver outros da família humana, que obtêm vida por meio de Cristo Jesus e que são, não seus co-herdeiros, e reis e sacerdotes associados, mas seus súditos, sobre os quais ele reina. — Veja Mt 25:34-40; He 2:10-12; Re 5:9, 10; 7:9, 10, 14-17; 20:4-9; 21:1-4.

Pode-se observar, também, que Tiago (1:18) fala destes "filhos de Deus, gerados pelo espírito, como "certas primícias" das criaturas de Deus, expressão similar à usada a respeito dos "cento e quarenta e quatro mil" que são "comprados dentre a humanidade", conforme descritos em Revelação (Apocalipse) 14:1-4. "Primícias" subentende que outros frutos seguirão, e, portanto, a "criação", em Romanos 8:19-22, evidentemente se aplica a tais 'frutos posteriores' ou 'frutos secundários' da humanidade, os quais, pela fé em Cristo Jesus, obtêm por fim a filiação na família universal de Deus.

Ao falar do futuro "sistema de coisas" e da "ressurreição dos mortos" para a vida naquele sistema, Jesus disse que estes se tornam "filhos de Deus por serem filhos da ressurreição". — Lu 20:34-36.

À base de todas as informações precedentes, pode-se ver que a 'filiação' de humanos numa relação com Deus é encarada de diversos aspectos diferentes. Em cada caso, portanto, a filiação precisa ser considerada no contexto para se determinar o que abrange e a natureza exata da relação filial.

Cristo Jesus, Filho de Deus. O relato evangélico fornecido por João enfatiza em especial a existência pré-humana de Jesus como "a Palavra" e explica que "a Palavra se tornou carne e residiu entre nós, e observamos a sua glória, uma glória tal como a de um filho unigênito dum pai". (Jo 1:1-3, 14) Que esta filiação não começou com o seu nascimento humano é percebido nas declarações do próprio Jesus, como quando ele disse: "Eu falo das coisas que vi junto de meu Pai" (Jo 8:38, 42; compare isso com Jo 17:5, 24), bem como em outras declarações claras dos seus apóstolos inspirados. — Ro 8:3; Gál 4:4; 1Jo 4:9-11, 14.

"Unigênito." Alguns comentadores objetam à tradução da palavra grega mo·no·ge·nés por "unigênito". Salientam que a última parte da palavra (ge·nés) não deriva de gen·ná·o (gerar), mas de gé·nos (gênero), e que o termo, portanto, se refere ao 'único de uma classe ou de um gênero'. Assim, muitas traduções chamam Jesus de "Filho único" (BJ; CBC; MC) em vez de "filho unigênito" de Deus. (Jo 1:14; 3:16, 18; 1Jo 4:9) Todavia, embora os respectivos componentes não incluam o sentido verbal de nascer, o uso do termo definitivamente abrange a ideia de descendência ou nascimento, porque a palavra grega gé·nos significa "família; parentela; descendência; raça". É traduzido por "raça" em 1 Pedro 2:9. A Vulgata latina, de Jerônimo, verte mo·no·ge·nés por unigenitus, que significa "unigênito" ou "único". Esta relação do termo com nascimento ou descendência é reconhecida por numerosos lexicógrafos.

O Greek and English Lexicon of the New Testament (Léxico Grego e Inglês do Novo Testamento; 1885, p. 471), de Edward Robinson, dá como definição de mo·no·ge·nés: "único nascido, único gerado, i.e., filho único". O Greek-English Lexicon to the New Testament (Léxico Grego-Inglês para o Novo Testamento; 1956, p. 123), de W. Hickie também apresenta: "único gerado". (Veja também o Dicionário do Novo Testamento Grego, de William Carey Taylor, 1978, Ed. JUERP, p. 139.) O Theological Dictionary of the New Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento), editado por G. Kittel, declara: "O μονο- [mo·no-] não denota a fonte, mas a natureza da derivação. Portanto, μονογενής [mo·no·ge·nés] significa 'de ascendência única', i.e., sem irmãos ou irmãs. Isto nos fornece o sentido de unigênito. A ref. é a um filho único dos pais, primariamente em relação com eles. . . . Mas a palavra pode também ser usada de forma mais geral sem ref. à derivação, no sentido de 'único', 'sem paralelo', 'incomparável', embora não se deva confundir as ref. a uma classe ou espécie, ou à maneira." — Tradutor e editor, G. Bromiley, 1969, Vol. IV, p. 738.

Quanto ao uso do termo nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, ou "Novo Testamento", esta última obra (pp. 739-741) diz: "Significa 'unigênito'. . . . Em [João] 3:16, 18; 1 Jo 4:9; [João 1:18, a relação de Jesus não é apenas comparada à de um filho único com o seu pai. Ela é a relação do unigênito com o Pai. . . . Em Jo 1:14, 18; 3:16, 18; 1 Jo 4:9, μονογενής denota mais do que a exclusividade ou incomparabilidade de Jesus. Em todos estes versículos, Ele é expressamente chamado de o Filho, e Ele é considerado como tal em 1:14. Em Jo, μονογενής denota a origem de Jesus. Ele é μονογενής como o unigênito."

Em vista destas declarações e em vista da evidência clara das próprias Escrituras, não há motivo para se objetar às traduções que mostram que Jesus não é meramente o Filho único ou incomparável de Deus, mas é também seu "Filho unigênito", portanto, descendendo de Deus no sentido de ter sido produzido por Deus. Isto é confirmado pelas referências apostólicas a este Filho como "o primogênito de toda a criação" e como o "nascido [forma de gen·ná·o] de Deus" (Col 1:15; 1Jo 5:18), ao passo que o próprio Jesus declara que ele é "o princípio da criação de Deus". — Re 3:14.

Jesus é o "primogênito" de Deus (Col 1:15) como primeira criação de Deus, chamado de "a Palavra" (ou: "o Verbo") na sua existência pré-humana. (Jo 1:1) A palavra "princípio", em João 1:1, não se pode referir ao "princípio" de Deus, o Criador, porque ele é eterno, sem princípio. (Sal 90:2) Portanto, deve referir-se ao princípio da criação, quando a Palavra foi produzida por Deus como seu Filho primogênito. O termo "princípio" é usado de forma similar em diversos outros textos, para descrever o começo de um período, de uma carreira ou de um proceder, tal como o "princípio" da carreira cristã daqueles a quem João escreveu a sua primeira carta (1Jo 2:7; 3:11), o "princípio" do proceder rebelde de Satanás (1Jo 3:8) ou o "princípio" do desvio de Judas da justiça. (Jo 6:64; veja JUDAS, I N.º 4 [Tornou-se Corrupto].) Jesus é o "Filho unigênito" (Jo 3:16) no sentido de que é o único dos filhos de Deus, espirituais ou humanos, criado exclusivamente por Deus, porque todos os outros foram criados por meio de, ou "mediante", este Filho primogênito. — Col 1:16, 17; veja JESUS CRISTO (Existência Pré-Humana); UNIGÊNITO.

Gerado pelo espírito, retorno à filiação celestial. Jesus, naturalmente, continuou a ser Filho de Deus quando nasceu como humano, assim como havia sido na sua existência pré-humana. Seu nascimento não foi o resultado de concepção por meio do espermatozoide de algum varão humano, descendente de Adão, mas ocorreu pela ação do espírito santo de Deus. (Mt 1:20, 25; Lu 1:30-35; compare isso com Mt 22:42-45.) Jesus reconheceu sua filiação em relação com Deus, dizendo à idade de 12 anos aos seus pais terrestres: "Não sabíeis que eu tenho de estar na casa de meu Pai?" Eles não compreenderam o sentido disso, pensando talvez que com "Pai" ele se referia a Deus apenas no sentido em que o termo era usado pelos israelitas em geral, conforme já considerado. — Lu 2:48-50.

No entanto, cerca de 30 anos após o seu nascimento como humano, quando Jesus foi imerso por João, o Batizador, veio sobre ele o espírito de Deus e Deus falou, dizendo: "Tu és meu Filho, o amado; eu te tenho aprovado." (Lu 3:21-23; Mt 3:16, 17) Evidentemente, naquele momento, Jesus, o homem, 'nasceu de novo' como um Filho gerado por espírito, com a esperança de retornar à vida no céu, e ele foi ungido pelo espírito para ser o rei e sumo sacerdote designado de Deus. (Jo 3:3-6; compare isso com 17:4, 5; veja JESUS CRISTO [Seu Batismo].) Uma expressão similar foi feita por Deus por ocasião da transfiguração no monte, visão em que Jesus foi observado na glória do Reino. (Veja Mt 16:28 e 17:1-5.) Referente à ressurreição de Jesus dentre os mortos, Paulo aplicou parte do Salmo 2 a esta ocasião, citando as palavras de Deus: "Tu és meu Filho; hoje eu me tornei teu pai", e ele aplicou também palavras do pacto de Deus com Davi, a saber: "Eu mesmo me tornarei seu pai e ele mesmo se tornará meu filho." (Sal 2:7; 2Sa 7:14; At 13:33; He 1:5; compare isso com He 5:5.) Jesus, pela sua ressurreição dentre os mortos para a vida espiritual, "foi declarado Filho de Deus" (Ro 1:4), "foi declarado justo em espírito". — 1Ti 3:16.

Vê-se assim que, do mesmo modo que Davi, como homem adulto, podia 'tornar-se filho de Deus' em sentido especial, assim também Cristo Jesus 'se tornou Filho de Deus' de modo especial, por ocasião do seu batismo e da sua ressurreição, e, evidentemente, também por ocasião da sua entrada na plena glória do Reino.

Acusado falsamente de blasfêmia. Por Jesus chamar Deus de seu Pai, certos judeus opositores levantaram contra ele a acusação de blasfêmia, dizendo: "Tu, embora sejas um homem, te fazes um deus." (Jo 10:33) A maioria das traduções dizem aqui "Deus"; a tradução inglesa de Torrey coloca esta palavra com inicial minúscula, "deus", ao passo que a versão interlinear de The Emphatic Diaglott diz "um deus". A resposta do próprio Jesus dá apoio à tradução de "um deus", citando ele o Salmo 82:1-7. Conforme se pode ver, este texto não se refere a pessoas serem chamadas "Deus", mas sim "deuses" e "filhos do Altíssimo".

De acordo com o contexto, aqueles que Jeová chamou "deuses" e "filhos do Altíssimo", neste salmo, eram juízes israelitas, que haviam praticado a injustiça, tornando necessário que o próprio Jeová julgasse 'no meio de tais deuses'. (Sal 82:1-6, 8) Visto que Jeová aplicou esses termos a tais homens, Jesus certamente não era culpado de blasfêmia ao dizer: "Sou Filho de Deus." Ao passo que as obras desses "deuses" judiciais desmentiam serem eles "filhos do Altíssimo", as obras de Jesus coerentemente provaram que ele estava em união, em harmonioso acordo e relação com seu Pai. — Jo 10:34-38.

FILHO DO HOMEM. Trata-se mormente de uma tradução da expressão hebraica ben-'a·dhám. Em vez de se referir à pessoa de Adão, 'a·dhám é usado aqui em sentido genérico para "humanidade", de modo que a expressão ben-'a·dhám significa, em essência, "filho da humanidade, humano, filho terreno". (Sal 80:17; 146:3; Je 49:18, 33) Muitas vezes, emprega-se a frase em paralelo com outros termos hebraicos para "homem", a saber, 'ish, que significa "uma pessoa do sexo masculino" (veja Núm 23:19; Jó 35:8; Je 50:40) e 'enóhsh, "homem mortal". (Veja Sal 8:4; Is 51:12; 56:2.) No Salmo 144:3, o "filho do homem mortal" é ben-'enóhsh, ao passo que o equivalente aramaico (bar 'enásh) ocorre em Daniel 7:13.

Em grego, a expressão é hui·ós tou an·thró·pou, sendo que a última parte da frase representa a palavra genérica grega para homem (án·thro·pos). — Mt 16:27.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a ocorrência mais frequente desta expressão existe no livro de Ezequiel, onde Deus mais de 90 vezes se dirige ao profeta como "filho do homem". (Ez 2:1, 3, 6, 8) A designação usada assim evidentemente serve para enfatizar que o profeta simplesmente é terreno, destacando assim o contraste entre o porta-voz humano e a Fonte da sua mensagem, o Deus Altíssimo. A mesma designação é aplicada ao profeta Daniel, em Daniel 8:17.

Cristo Jesus, "o Filho do Homem". Nos relatos dos Evangelhos, esta expressão é encontrada quase 80 vezes, aplicando-se em cada caso a Jesus Cristo, sendo usada por ele com referência a si mesmo. (Mt 8:20; 9:6; 10:23) Fora dos relatos dos Evangelhos, ela ocorre em Atos 7:56; Hebreus 2:6 e Revelação (Apocalipse) 1:13; 14:14.

Aplicar Jesus esta expressão a si mesmo mostrava que o Filho de Deus era então deveras humano, tendo-se ‘tornado carne’ (Jo 1:14), tendo ‘procedido duma mulher’ por ter sido concebido pela virgem judia Maria e ter nascido dela. (Gál 4:4; Lu 1:34-36) De modo que não materializara simplesmente um corpo humano, assim como anjos anteriormente fizeram; não era uma encarnação, mas era realmente ‘filho da humanidade’ através da sua mãe humana. — Compare isso com 1Jo 4:2, 3; 2Jo 7; veja CARNE.

Por este motivo, o apóstolo Paulo podia aplicar o Salmo 8 como profético de Jesus Cristo. Paulo, na sua carta aos hebreus (2:5-9), cita os versículos que rezam: “Que é o homem mortal [’enóhsh] para que te lembres dele, e o filho do homem terreno [ben-’a·dhám] para que tomes conta dele? Também passaste a fazê-lo um pouco menor que os semelhantes a Deus [“um pouco menor que os anjos”, em Hebreus 2:7], e então o coroaste de glória e de esplendor. Tu o fazes dominar sobre os trabalhos das tuas mãos; puseste tudo debaixo de seus pés.” (Sal 8:4-6; compare isso com Sal 144:3.) Paulo mostra que, para cumprir este salmo profético, Jesus, de fato, foi feito “um pouco menor que os anjos”, tornando-se realmente um mortal “filho do homem terreno”, para que pudesse morrer como tal e assim “provasse a morte por todo homem”, sendo depois coroado de glória e esplendor pelo seu Pai, que o ressuscitou. — He 2:8, 9; compare isso com He 2:14; Fil 2:5-9.

Portanto, a designação “Filho do homem” serve também para identificar Jesus Cristo como o grande Parente da humanidade, tendo o poder de remila da servidão ao pecado e à morte, bem como para identificá-lo como o grande Vingador do sangue. — Le 25:48, 49; Núm 35:1-29; veja RESGATAR, RESGATADOR; RESGATE; VINGADOR DO SANGUE.

Assim, ser Jesus chamado de “Filho de Davi” (Mt 1:1; 9:27) enfatiza ser ele o herdeiro do pacto do Reino a ser cumprido na linhagem de Davi; ser ele chamado de “Filho do homem” traz à atenção ser ele da raça humana, em virtude do seu nascimento carnal; ser ele chamado de “Filho de Deus” salienta ser ele de origem divina, não descendendo do pecador Adão, nem herdando a imperfeição dele, mas tendo uma posição plenamente justa perante Deus. — Mt 16:13-17.

O que é “o sinal do Filho do homem”?

No entanto, evidentemente, há outro motivo principal para Jesus usar frequentemente a expressão “Filho do homem” como aplicando-se a ele mesmo. Este se relaciona com o cumprimento da profecia registrada em Daniel 7:13, 14. Daniel observou na visão “alguém semelhante a um filho de homem” chegar com as nuvens dos céus, obter acesso ao “Antigo de Dias” e receber “domínio, e dignidade, e um reino, para que todos os povos, grupos nacionais e línguas o servissem”, seu Reino sendo duradouro.

Visto que a interpretação angélica da visão de Daniel 7:18, 22 e 27 fala dos “santos do Supremo” como tomando posse deste Reino, muitos comentadores se esforçaram a mostrar que o “filho de homem”, aqui, é uma ‘personalidade coletiva’, quer dizer, ‘os santos de Deus em seu aspecto coletivo, considerados coletivamente como povo’, ‘o povo glorificado e ideal de Israel’. Este raciocínio, porém, mostra ser superficial à luz das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Deixa de considerar que Cristo Jesus, o Rei ungido de Deus, fez um ‘pacto para um reino’ com os seus seguidores, a fim de que pudessem compartilhar com ele o seu Reino, e que, embora devessem governar quais reis e sacerdotes, isto seria sob a chefia dele e por sua delegação de autoridade. (Lu 22:28-30; Re 5:9, 10; 20:4-6) Recebem assim autoridade de governar as nações apenas porque ele recebeu primeiro esta autoridade do Deus Soberano. — Re 2:26, 27; 3:21.

O entendimento correto se torna ainda mais evidente na resposta do próprio Jesus à indagação do sumo sacerdote, ao dizer: “Sou [o Cristo, o Filho de Deus]; e vós vereis o Filho do homem sentado à destra de poder e vindo com as nuvens do céu.” — Mr 14:61, 62; Mt 26:63, 64.

Portanto, a profecia da chegada do Filho do homem à presença do Antigo de Dias, Jeová Deus, claramente se aplica a uma pessoa, ao Messias, Jesus Cristo. A evidência indica que era entendida assim pelo povo judeu. Escritos rabínicos aplicavam a profecia ao Messias. (Soncino Books of the Bible [Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino], obra editada por A. Cohen, 1951, comentário sobre Da 7:13.) Sem dúvida, foi por quererem um cumprimento literal desta profecia que os fariseus e os saduceus pediram que Jesus “lhes mostrasse um sinal do céu”. (Mt 16:1; Mr 8:11) Depois de Jesus ter morrido como homem e ter sido ressuscitado para a vida espiritual, Estêvão teve uma visão na qual observou “o céu aberto” e viu “o Filho do homem em pé à direita de Deus”. (At 7:56) Isto mostra que Jesus Cristo, embora sacrificando sua natureza humana em resgate para a humanidade, retém corretamente a designação messiânica de “filho do homem” na sua posição celestial.

A primeira parte da declaração de Jesus ao sumo sacerdote, sobre a vinda do Filho do homem, falava dele como “sentado à destra de poder”. Trata-se evidentemente de uma alusão ao profético Salmo 110, tendo Jesus Cristo mostrado anteriormente que este salmo se aplicava a ele. (Mt 22:42-45) Este salmo, bem como a aplicação dele pelo apóstolo, em Hebreus 10:12, 13, revela que haveria um período de espera para Jesus Cristo, antes de seu Pai o enviar para 'subjugar no meio dos seus inimigos'. Portanto, parece que o cumprimento da profecia de Daniel 7:13, 14, não ocorre por ocasião da ressurreição e ascensão de Jesus ao céu, mas no tempo em que é autorizado por Deus para agir numa vigorosa expressão de sua autoridade régia. A 'chegada do Filho do homem ao Antigo de Dias', portanto, aparentemente corresponde em tempo à situação apresentada em Revelação 12:5-10, quando é dado à luz o simbólico filho varão e ele é arrebatado para o trono de Deus.

No entanto, em Mateus 24:30 e Lucas 21:27, Jesus profetizou sobre "o sinal do Filho do homem" logo depois de mencionar tipos de fenômenos celestiais que a Bíblia associa com o julgamento que Deus vai executar contra os maus. (Compare Mt 24:29 e Lu 21:25, 26 com Is 13:9, 10 e Jl 2:30, 31.) Visto que "todas as tribos da terra . . . verão o Filho do homem vir nas nuvens do céu, com poder e grande glória" e elas "se baterão então em lamento", fica claro que isso se refere a um tempo em que Jesus mostrará de modo sobrenatural o poder que tem como Rei. Essa demonstração de poder vai deixar aqueles que não obedecem a Deus cheios de medo.

Visões proféticas adicionais, em Revelação (17:12-14; 19:11-21), mostram o pleno exercício do poder régio pelo Rei messiânico sobre "povos, grupos nacionais e línguas" (Da 7:14), e, assim, sem dúvida, aquele que é "semelhante a um filho de homem", em Revelação 14:14, também representa a Jesus Cristo, assim como o descrito em Revelação 1:13.

A respeito de o 'Filho do homem vir em nuvens' e ser visto por "todo olho" (Mt 24:30; Re 1:7), veja NUVEM (Uso Ilustrativo); OLHO; PRESENÇA.

FILIPE [que significa: "Afeiçoado a Cavalos; Amador de Cavalos"].

1. Um dos primeiros discípulos dentre os 12 apóstolos de Jesus Cristo. Nos relatos dos Evangelhos de Mateus, Marcos e Lucas, Filipe é mencionado por nome apenas nas listas dos apóstolos. (Mt 10:3; Mr 3:18; Lu 6:14) Somente o relato de João fornece algumas informações detalhadas sobre ele.

Filipe era da cidade de Pedro e André, a saber, Betsaida, na margem N do mar da Galileia. Ao ouvir o convite de Jesus: "Sê meu seguidor", Filipe fez quase o mesmo que André no dia anterior. André havia procurado seu irmão Simão (Pedro) e o havia levado a Jesus, e Filipe fez isso agora com Natanael (Bartolomeu), dizendo: "Achamos aquele de quem escreveram Moisés, na Lei, e os Profetas: Jesus, filho de José, de Nazaré. . . . Vem e vê." (Jo 1:40, 41, 43-49) A declaração de que 'Jesus achou Filipe' talvez indique que já se conheciam até certo ponto, assim como as palavras de Filipe a Natanael, visto que Filipe mencionou o nome de Jesus, sua família e sua residência. Não se declara se havia outra relação entre Filipe e Natanael (Bartolomeu), fora da sua amizade, mas nas listas bíblicas costumam ser colocados juntos, sendo uma exceção Atos 1:13.

Por ocasião da entrada triunfal de Jesus em Jerusalém, cinco dias antes da Páscoa de 33 EC (Mr 11:7-11), alguns gregos queriam ver Jesus. Solicitaram a Filipe que os apresentasse, possivelmente atraídos ao apóstolo por causa do seu nome grego, ou talvez simplesmente por ser ele quem estava disponível para esta solicitação. De qualquer modo, Filipe parece não se ter considerado qualificado para atender a solicitação destes gregos (talvez prosélitos). Primeiro consultou André, com quem é mencionado em outro lugar (Jo 6:7, 8) e que talvez tivesse um relacionamento mais íntimo com Jesus. (Veja Mr 13:3.) Juntos apresentaram a petição, não os peticionários, a Jesus para a sua consideração. (Jo 12:20-22) Esta atitude circunspecta, um tanto cautelosa, se reflete na resposta de Filipe à pergunta de Jesus sobre alimentar as multidões e até na sua solicitação (feita depois das perguntas bastante francas de Pedro e Tomé), quando disse: "Mostra-nos o Pai, e isso chega para nós." (Jo 6:5-7; 13:36, 37; 14:5-9) Seu tato se contrasta com a maneira direta e brusca de Pedro, e, assim, os breves relatos envolvendo Filipe nos revelam algo sobre a variedade de personalidades encontrada entre os apóstolos escolhidos de Jesus.

Por causa da sua íntima associação com Natanael (Bartolomeu) e com os filhos de Zebedeu, Filipe talvez fosse um dos dois discípulos não identificados que se encontravam à margem do mar da Galileia quando o ressuscitado Jesus apareceu. — Jo 21:2.

2. Evangelizador e missionário do primeiro século. Filipe, junto com Estêvão, estava entre os sete "homens acreditados, cheios de espírito e de sabedoria", escolhidos para a imparcial distribuição diária de alimentos entre as viúvas cristãs de língua grega e hebraica em Jerusalém. (At 6:1-6) O relato sobre a atividade de Filipe (bem como a de Estêvão), depois de terminar este serviço especial, confirma a elevada qualidade espiritual dos homens que constituíam este escolhido grupo administrativo, porque Filipe fez uma obra similar à realizada mais tarde pelo apóstolo Paulo, embora de alcance mais limitado.

Quando a perseguição espalhou todos, exceto os apóstolos, que permaneceram em Jerusalém, Filipe foi a Samaria; proclamou ali as boas novas do Reino, e, com o poder milagroso do espírito santo, expulsou demônios, e curou paralíticos e coxos. Com muita alegria, multidões aceitaram a mensagem e foram batizadas, inclusive certo Simão, que havia praticado artes mágicas. (At 8:4-13) Assim, quando os apóstolos “ouviram que Samaria havia aceito a palavra de Deus, mandaram-lhes Pedro e João”, para que estes crentes batizados recebessem a dádiva gratuita do espírito santo. — At 8:14-17.

Filipe foi então levado pelo espírito de Jeová ao encontro do eunuco etíope na estrada de Gaza, e ali, em pouco tempo, este “homem de poder sob Candace, rainha dos etíopes”, depositou fé em Jesus e pediu que Filipe o batizasse. (At 8:26-38) Dali, Filipe seguiu caminho para Asdode e para Cesareia, ‘declarando as boas novas a todas as cidades’ no caminho. (At 8:39, 40) Estes breves relatos ilustram a obra dum “evangelizador”. — At 21:8.

Foi em Cesareia, encruzilhada internacional, uns 20 anos mais tarde, que Filipe ainda foi encontrado ativo no ministério, ainda conhecido por ter sido “um dos sete homens” designados pelos apóstolos. Conforme relata Lucas, quando ele e Paulo ficaram por um tempo na casa de Filipe, por volta do ano 56 EC, “este homem [Filipe] tinha quatro filhas, virgens, que profetizavam”. (At 21:8-10) Terem as quatro filhas idade suficiente para se empenhar em falar de modo profético pode significar que Filipe já era homem casado na época da sua atividade anterior.

3. Marido de Herodias e pai de Salomé. Ele morava em Roma quando sua esposa o abandonou adulteramente para se tornar esposa do meio-irmão dele, Herodes Ântipas. (Mt 14:3, 4; Mr 6:17, 18; Lu 3:19, 20) Filipe era filho de Herodes, o Grande, com sua terceira esposa, Mariane II, filha do sumo sacerdote Simão. Portanto, ele era meio judeu e meio idumeu. — Veja HERODES N.º 5.

4. Governante distrital da Itureia e de Traconítis, na época em que João, o Batizador, iniciou seu ministério, no “décimo quinto ano do reinado de Tibério César”, em 29 EC. (Lu 3:1-3) Filipe era filho de Herodes, o Grande, com Cleópatra, de Jerusalém, e, portanto, meio-irmão de Herodes Ântipas, de Arquelau e de Filipe N.º 3. — Veja HERODES N.º 6.

FILIPENSES, CARTA AOS. Livro das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, escrito pelo apóstolo Paulo à congregação na cidade de Filipos, na província da Macedônia, congregação que Paulo havia estabelecido por volta de 50 EC, no decorrer da sua segunda viagem missionária.

Quando e Onde Foi Escrita. A evidência interna da carta indica que foi escrita durante o primeiro encarceramento de Paulo em Roma. Nela ele fala de “toda a Guarda Pretoriana” como estando a

DESTAQUES DE FILIPENSES

Carta que reflete o vínculo especial de amor existente entre Paulo e os cristãos em Filipos.

Escrita por Paulo por volta de 60-61 EC, enquanto preso em Roma.

Amor de Paulo aos irmãos e seu apreço pela generosidade deles.

Paulo agradece a Deus a contribuição feita pelos filipenses para a promoção das boas novas. Em profundo afeto por eles, ora para que o amor deles aumente e que eles se certifiquem das coisas mais importantes. (1:3-11)

Paulo se preocupa com o bem-estar dos filipenses; espera enviar-lhes Timóteo, que ele recomenda muito; confia em que ele mesmo também os visite em breve. (2:19-24)

Para tranquilizar os irmãos a respeito de Epafrodito, a respeito de quem os filipenses souberam que estava muito doente, Paulo lhes envia este servo leal, que eles haviam designado para ministrar a Paulo. (2:25-30)

Embora Paulo seja autossuficiente em todas as circunstâncias, graças à força concedida a ele de cima, elogia muito os filipenses pela sua generosidade. (4:10-19)

Resultado do encarceramento de Paulo.

O encarceramento de Paulo resultou na promoção das boas novas; sua situação é bem conhecida entre a Guarda Pretoriana, e a maioria dos irmãos mostra mais coragem para falar destemidamente a palavra de Deus. (1:12-14)

Alguns pregam com boa motivação, outros com má motivação — de qualquer modo, Cristo está sendo propalado; quer Paulo viva, quer morra, magnificará a Cristo; mas ele acha que viverá para ministrar aos filipenses. (1:15-26)

Conselho edificante a respeito de atitudes e conduta.

Comportem-se da maneira digna das boas novas, não sendo amedrontados pelos inimigos; os oponentes serão destruídos, ao passo que os crentes obterão a salvação. (1:27-30)

Demonstrem a mesma atitude mental de Cristo por mostrar humildade e não procurar os próprios interesses. (2:1-11)

Como filhos imaculados, brilhem como iluminadores no meio duma geração pervertida e deturpada, ‘mantendo-se firmemente agarrados à palavra da vida’. (2:12-16)

Guardem-se dos que promovem a circuncisão; o cristão confia em Cristo, não na circuncisão carnal. (3:1-3)

Paulo tem a posição mais elevada no que se refere a qualificações carnais, mas, ele considera tudo isso como refugo, por causa “do valor superior do conhecimento de Cristo”; ele se empenha pelo prêmio e exorta outros a fazer o mesmo. (3:4-21)

Continuem a alegrar-se no Senhor; manifestem razoabilidade e confiem as ansiedades a Deus em oração; encham a mente com pensamentos sadios. (4:4-9) par da razão de ele estar em cadeias, e envia cumprimentos dos "da família de César". (Fil 1:13; 4:22) Considera-se geralmente que o primeiro encarceramento de Paulo em Roma ocorreu por volta de 59-61 EC. Ocorreram vários eventos entre a chegada de Paulo a Roma e a sua decisão de escrever aos filipenses. Epafrodito fizera a viagem desde Filipos, havia trabalhado para ajudar Paulo e havia ficado muito doente. Os filipenses, a uns 1.000 km de distância, tinham recebido notícia da sua doença. Agora, Epafrodito se recuperara e Paulo o enviava de volta com a carta. De modo que a carta foi escrita por volta de 60 ou 61 EC.

Fundo Histórico e Motivos da Escrita. A congregação filipense mostrara grande amor e consideração para com Paulo. Pouco depois de ele a visitar, a congregação lhe enviara generosamente provisões materiais durante a sua permanência de várias semanas na vizinha Tessalônica. (Fil 4:15, 16) Mais tarde, quando os irmãos em Jerusalém entraram num período de intensa perseguição e necessitavam de ajuda material, os cristãos em Filipos, eles mesmos muito pobres e passando por uma grande prova de aflição, não obstante haviam demonstrado prontidão para contribuir até mesmo além das suas possibilidades. Paulo apreciou tanto a excelente atitude deles, que os citou como exemplo para as demais congregações. (2Co 8:1-6) Eram também muito ativos e diligentes na pregação das boas novas, de modo que parece que não haviam tido contato com Paulo já por algum tempo. Mas então, quando ele passava necessidade na prisão, eles não só lhe mandaram dádivas materiais, de modo que Paulo tinha abundância, mas também mandaram seu enviado especial, Epafrodito, homem que lhes era valioso. Este irmão zeloso corajosamente prestou ajuda a Paulo, mesmo colocando em perigo a sua própria vida. Por conseguinte, Paulo o elogia muito perante a congregação. — Fil 2:25-30; 4:18.

Paulo expressa confiança, em harmonia com as orações deles, de ser liberto do encarceramento, e de poder visitá-los de novo. (Fil 1:19; 2:24) Sabe que, continuar ele vivo é ser útil para eles, embora aguarde ansiosamente o tempo em que Cristo o receberá junto de si. (Fil 1:21-25; compare isso com Jo 14:3.) No ínterim, espera enviar Timóteo, o qual, mais do que qualquer outro disponível, genuinamente tomará a peito os interesses deles. — Fil 2:19-23.

A carta transpira amor. Paulo nunca deixou de dar elogios quando apropriados, nem se refreou de dar a necessária repreensão, mas, neste caso, era preciso dar encorajamento. A congregação tinha opositores, "obreiros do dano", que queriam jactar-se de relações carnais e da circuncisão na carne, mas parece que os irmãos não ficaram seriamente afetados ou transtornados. (Fil 3:2) Assim, Paulo não precisou apresentar fortes argumentos, nem repreensão, como, por exemplo, nas suas cartas às congregações na Galácia e em Corinto. O único leve indício de correção era sua exortação à união por parte de Evódia e Síntique. Em toda a carta, ele incentiva a congregação filipense a continuar no seu excelente proceder — procurando maior discernimento e apegando-se firmemente à Palavra da vida, uma fé mais forte e a esperança do prêmio por vir.

Nesta carta são expressos muitos princípios excelentes que dão encorajamento a todos os cristãos. Alguns deles são:

Capítulo e versículo	Princípio
1:9, 10	Certifiquem-se das coisas mais importantes, para não fazer outros tropeçar por algum motivo.
1:15-18	Podemos alegrar-nos mesmo quando os inimigos da verdade falam contenciosamente sobre ela, porque isso só serve para propalar a verdade.
1:19	A oração dos servos de Deus é eficaz.
1:27, 28	A união e a coragem dos cristãos em face dos seus oponentes é prova da parte de Deus, de que ele livrará seus servos e destruirá seus inimigos.
2:5-11	A humildade traz enaltecimento da parte de Deus.
2:27	Pode-se agradecer a Deus sua misericórdia quando um dos seus servos fiéis se restabelece duma doença.
3:16	Ao ponto que o cristão tiver feito progresso, ele deve continuar a andar ordeiramente na mesma rotina, a fim de receber o prêmio.
3:20	Os cristãos devem olhar para o céu, onde existe sua cidadania, e não para relações terrestres.
4:6, 7	Não estejam ansiosos; em toda situação, apresentem suas petições a Deus, e ele dará uma paz que guardará seu coração e suas faculdades mentais.
4:8	Considerem em todas as ocasiões as coisas corretas e louváveis.

FILIPOS. Na época da segunda viagem missionária do apóstolo Paulo, esta cidade era "a cidade principal [ou: primeira] do distrito da Macedônia", embora, evidentemente, não fosse a capital. Ficava na parte oriental do distrito, na extremidade N do mar Egeu, não muito longe do distrito da Trácia. Paulo, chegando de barco de Trôade, desembarcou em Neápolis, cidade portuária de Filipos, e viajou uns 15 km para o NO, pela Via Egnatia, ou Via Egnácia, a grande estrada comercial e militar que levava da Ásia a Roma, a qual atravessava um passo nas montanhas, a uns 500 m acima do nível do mar, e descia para a planície filipense. — At 16:11, 12.

A cidade estava situada num morro que se elevava da planície, perto do rio Gangites. Ao S havia um extenso brejo. A acrópole de Filipos ficava numa grande formação rochosa na parte NE da cidade. Escavações das ruínas indicam que a Via Egnácia passava pelo meio da cidade e que ao lado dela havia um foro bastante grande. Anfípolis, para onde Paulo foi depois de partir de Filipos, evidentemente era a capital do distrito; distava uns 50 km ao SO de Filipos. De Anfípolis, Paulo foi aproximadamente 35 km para o SO, para Apolônia e dali por uns 45 km para Tessalônica, onde ficou umas três semanas, antes de se dirigir ao SO, passando por Bereia, a fim de tomar um barco para Atenas.

História. Filipos era originalmente chamada de Crênides (Krenides). Filipe II, da Macedônia (pai de Alexandre, o Grande), tomou a cidade dos trácios, por volta de meados do quarto século AEC e lhe deu o seu próprio nome. Havia na região ricas minas de ouro, e cunharam-se moedas de ouro em nome de Filipe. Por volta de 168 AEC, o cônsul romano Lúcio Emílio Paulo derrotou Perseu, último dos reis macedônios, e tomou Filipos e o território circundante. Em 146 AEC, toda a Macedônia foi formada em uma única província romana. A batalha em que Otaviano e Marco Antônio derrotaram os exércitos de Bruto e de Caio Cássio Longino, assassinos de Júlio César, ocorreu na planície de Filipos (em 42 AEC). Depois, em comemoração da sua grande vitória, Otaviano fez de Filipos uma "colônia" romana. (At 16:12) Alguns anos mais tarde, quando o senado romano constituiu Otaviano em César Augusto, este chamou a cidade de Colonia Augusta Julia Philippensis.

Sua designação a colônia romana concedeu à cidade isenção de impostos, junto com outros privilégios, possivelmente incluindo uma forma secundária de cidadania romana, aos seus habitantes. Portanto, os cidadãos sentiam maior apego e afeição por Roma do que seria o caso de outra forma. Isto talvez explique por que os amos da moça da qual o apóstolo Paulo exorcismou um demônio de adivinhação enfatizaram perante os magistrados a sua acusação contra Paulo e Silas por dizerem: 'Somos romanos.' (At 16:16-24) Os cristãos filipenses podiam também muito bem compreender a exortação que Paulo lhes escreveu mais tarde para 'procederem como cidadãos' dignos das boas novas do Cristo, e quando lhes lembrou que "nossa cidadania existe nos céus", porque a cidadania romana, mundana, seria muito prezada em Filipos, sendo mesmo algo de que se jactar. — Fil 1:27; 3:20, Int.

Visita de Paulo. Filipos teve o privilégio de ser a primeira cidade da Europa a ouvir Paulo pregar as boas novas, por volta de 50 EC, durante a sua segunda viagem missionária. Ele foi para lá em obediência a uma visão noturna, em Trôade, na Ásia Menor, na qual um homem macedônio instara com ele: "Passa à Macedônia e ajuda-nos." (At 16:8-10) Paulo e seus companheiros, evidentemente incluindo seu cronista Lucas, ficaram ali alguns dias, e, no sábado, foram "para fora do portão, para junto dum rio", onde, segundo Lucas, "pensávamos haver um lugar de oração". Alguns acham que não havia sinagoga em Filipos, por causa do caráter militar da cidade — que talvez se tivesse proibido aos judeus ali reunir-se dentro da cidade para adoração. De qualquer modo, Paulo falou às mulheres reunidas ali e encontrou uma, de nome Lídia, adoradora de Deus, que 'abriu amplamente o coração para prestar atenção às coisas faladas por Paulo'. Ela e os da sua casa foram batizados, e seu apreço e sua hospitalidade eram tão grandes, que 'ela simplesmente fez [Paulo e seus companheiros] ir' à casa dela e ficar ali. — At 16:11-15.

Mas então, depois de responder à convocação de ir à Macedônia, Paulo viu-se confrontado por perseguição nesta primeira cidade, esta vez não de fontes judias, como acontecera na Galácia. Os magistrados da cidade agiram com base nas acusações falsas feitas pelos donos da moça endemoninhada. Estes haviam perdido sua renda, porque ela não mais podia continuar com a prática da predição, da qual haviam derivado muito lucro. Paulo e Silas foram golpeados com varas, lançados na prisão e seus pés foram presos no tronco. — At 16:16-24.

No meio da noite, porém, enquanto eles, aos ouvidos dos outros presos, oravam e louvavam a Deus com cântico, ocorreu um milagre. Um terremoto rompeu os grilhões dos presos e abriu as portas. O carcereiro, sabendo que sofreria a pena de morte por perder os presos que lhe foram confiados, estava prestes a matar-se, quando Paulo clamou: "Não te faças dano, pois estamos todos aqui!" O carcereiro e os da sua casa escutaram então Paulo e Silas, cuidaram dos seus vergões e se tornaram crentes batizados. — At 16:25-34; FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 749.

Na manhã seguinte, talvez ouvindo falar da ocorrência milagrosa, os magistrados da cidade ordenaram ao carcereiro que soltasse Paulo. Paulo, porém, preocupava-se mais com vindicar, defender e estabelecer legalmente as boas novas, do que com a soltura imediata. Não ia permitir sua soltura secreta por "uma porta dos fundos", que visasse salvar as aparências dos magistrados. Chamou atenção para a sua própria cidadania romana e para o fato de que eles haviam espancado publicamente tanto a ele como a Silas, sem que tivessem sido condenados. Não! Tinham de reconhecer abertamente que eles, não os cristãos, haviam agido ilegalmente. Ao saberem que Paulo e Silas eram romanos, os magistrados ficaram com medo, e, vindo pessoalmente, "suplicaram-lhes", trouxeram-nos para fora e solicitaram-lhes que partissem da cidade. — At 16:35-40.

Não obstante, Paulo havia estabelecido uma excelente congregação em Filipos, que sempre lhe era muito achegada ao coração. O amor que tinham por ele se manifestava no cuidado ansioso e nas provisões feitas para ele, mesmo quando estava em outro lugar. (Fil 4:16) Paulo visitou novamente Filipos na sua terceira viagem missionária, e, possivelmente, uma terceira vez, após a sua soltura do seu primeiro encarceramento em Roma. — At 20:1, 2, 6; Fil 1:19; 2:24.

FILÍSTIA, FILISTEUS. A Filístia, abrangendo uma área desde um ponto perto de Jope, no N, para baixo até Gaza, no S, estendia-se uns 80 km ao longo do mar Mediterrâneo (Êx 23:31) e uns 24 km terra adentro. "O mar dos filisteus", evidentemente, refere-se à parte do Mediterrâneo ao longo da costa da Filístia. As dunas de areia ao longo do litoral penetram terra adentro por uma considerável distância, às vezes até 6 km. Fora disso, a região é fértil e tem cereais, olivais e árvores frutíferas.

Durante grande parte do período das Escrituras Hebraicas, os filisteus ocupavam a planície costeira e estavam entre os inimigos declarados de Israel. (Is 9:12; 11:14) Os filisteus, povo incircunciso (2Sa 1:20), politeísta (Jz 16:23; 2Rs 1:2; veja BAAL-ZEBUBE; DAGOM), consultavam supersticiosamente seus sacerdotes e adivinhos ao tomarem decisões. (1Sa 6:2; compare isso com Is 2:6.) E seus guerreiros, ao entrarem em batalha, carregavam ídolos de seus deuses. (2Sa 5:21) Na sua terra, conhecida como a Filístia (Êx 15:14; Sal 60:8; 87:4; 108:9; Is 14:29, 31), havia as cidades de Gaza, Ascalom, Asdode, Ecrom e Gate. Cada uma destas cidades, durante séculos, era governada por um senhor do eixo. — Jos 13:3; 1Sa 29:7; veja SENHORES DO EIXO.

História. A ilha de Creta (usualmente tida como Caftor), embora não necessariamente o lar original dos filisteus, foi o lugar de onde migraram para a costa de Canaã. (Je 47:4; Am 9:7; veja CAFTOR, CAFTORINS; CRETA, CRETENSES.) Não há certeza quando esta migração ocorreu. Todavia, já no tempo de Abraão e de seu filho Isaque, havia filisteus morando em Gerar, na parte meridional de Canaã. Eles tinham um rei, Abimeleque, e um exército sob o comando de certo Ficol. — Gên 20:1, 2; 21:32-34; 26:1-18; veja ABIMELEQUE N.º 1 e 2.

Alguns objetam às referências de Gênesis a filisteus morarem em Canaã, argumentando que os filisteus só se estabeleceram ali no século 12 AEC. Mas esta objeção não tem base sólida. O Novo Dicionário da Bíblia, editado por J. D. Douglas (em português por E. P. Shedd; 1966, p. 631), observa: "Visto que os filisteus não são nomeados em inscrições extrabíblicas senão já no século XII A.C., e que os remanescentes arqueológicos associados com eles não aparecem antes desse tempo, muitos comentadores condenam a menção aos mesmos no período patriarcal como algo anacrônico." Todavia, ao mostrar por que tal posição não é sólida, faz-se menção da evidência duma grande expansão do comércio no mar Egeu, remontando a cerca do 20.º século AEC. Salienta-se que não ser determinado grupo suficientemente proeminente para ser mencionado nas inscrições de outras nações não prova que o grupo não existia. A conclusão a que chega O Novo Dicionário da Bíblia é: "Não há motivo pelo qual pequenos grupos de filisteus não pudessem estar presentes entre os primitivos comerciantes da área do mar Egeu, não com bastante proeminência para serem notados pelos estados maiores."

Quando Israel partiu do Egito, em 1513 AEC, Jeová decidiu não guiar os israelitas pelo caminho da Filístia (a rota mais direta do Egito para a Terra da Promessa), para que não ficassem desanimados diante duma guerra iminente e para que não decidissem voltar ao Egito. (Êx 13:17) Os filisteus provavelmente não encarariam a aproximação de milhões de israelitas como mero trânsito internacional, que normalmente passava pela sua terra. Eles eram então um povo estabelecido, ao passo que a região do Sinai, para a qual Jeová encaminhou Israel, tinha na maior parte tribos nômades e muitas regiões despovoadas, nas quais Israel podia entrar sem provocar logo um conflito.

Na época em que o idoso Josué repartiu a terra ao O do Jordão, os territórios filisteus ainda não haviam sido tocados pela conquista. (Jos 13:2, 3) Mais tarde, porém, os homens de Judá de fato capturaram três das principais cidades filisteias, Gaza, Ascalom e Ecrom. Mas, esta foi apenas uma vitória parcial, porque Judá "não pôde desapossar os habitantes da baixada, porque tinham carros de guerra com foices de ferro". — Jz 1:18, 19.

No tempo dos juízes. Durante anos depois disso, a permanência dos filisteus e de outros povos em Canaã serviu para testar a obediência de Israel a Jeová. (Jz 3:3, 4) Vez após vez, eles falharam no teste por adotar a adoração falsa. Por isso, Jeová abandonava os israelitas aos seus inimigos, inclusive aos filisteus. (Jz 10:6-8) Mas, quando clamavam a ele por ajuda, ele misericordiosamente suscitava juízes para libertá-los. (Jz 2:18) Um destes juízes, Sangar, abateu 600 filisteus com apenas uma aguilhada de gado. (Jz 3:31) Anos mais tarde, conforme se predissera antes do seu nascimento, Sansão tomou "a dianteira em salvar Israel da mão dos filisteus". (Jz 13:1-5) Evidência da amplitude do controle dos filisteus no início do juizado de Sansão pode ser vista em que, para evitar problemas, os homens de Judá, em certa ocasião, até mesmo lhes entregaram Sansão. — Jz 15:9-14.

O profeta Samuel presenciou a opressão por parte dos filisteus e também participou em derrotá-los. Enquanto servia no tabernáculo em Silo, durante a parte final do juizado do sumo sacerdote Eli, os filisteus golpearam cerca de 4.000 israelitas na região de Afeque e de Ebenezer. Os israelitas mandaram então trazer a Arca sagrada ao campo de batalha, pensando que isto lhes daria a vitória. Os filisteus intensificaram seus esforços. Trinta mil israelitas foram mortos e a Arca foi capturada. (1Sa 4:1-11) Os filisteus levaram a Arca ao templo do seu deus Dagom em Asdode. A imagem deste deus caiu duas vezes com a face por terra. Na segunda vez, o próprio ídolo se quebrou. (1Sa 5:1-5) A Arca foi então passada de uma cidade filisteia para outra. Aonde quer que fosse, surgiam pânico e pestilência. (1Sa 5:6-12) Finalmente, sete meses depois da sua captura, a Arca foi devolvida a Israel. — 1Sa 6:1-21.

Uns 20 anos mais tarde (1Sa 7:2), os filisteus marcharam contra os israelitas, os quais, sob a direção de Samuel, se reuniram em Mispá para adoração. Desta vez, Jeová lançou os filisteus em confusão, habilitando seu povo a subjugá-los. Posteriormente, "as cidades que os filisteus haviam tomado de Israel voltavam a Israel, desde Ecrom até Gate". — 1Sa 7:5-14.

Do reinado de Saul até a subjugação por Davi. No entanto, isto não pôs fim às dificuldades de Israel com os filisteus. (1Sa 9:16; 14:47) Evidentemente, antes do reinado de Saul, eles haviam estabelecido guarnições no território de Israel. (Veja 1Sa 10:5; 13:1-3.) Os filisteus eram suficientemente fortes para proibir aos israelitas terem seus próprios ferreiros, mantendo-os assim desarmados. Isto também obrigava os israelitas a se dirigir a eles para mandar afiar seus implementos agrícolas. (1Sa 13:19-22) A situação era tão grave, que até mesmo hebreus tomavam o lado dos filisteus contra os companheiros israelitas. (1Sa 14:21) Todavia, com a ajuda de Jeová, a primeira grande campanha de Saul contra os filisteus resultou em Israel golpeá-los desde Micmás até Aijalom. — 1Sa 13:1-14:31; veja MICMÁS.

Mais tarde, ao se recuperarem desta derrota, os filisteus reuniram suas forças para lutar contra Israel. Os dois exércitos tomaram sua posição em lados opostos da baixada de Elá, em Judá. De manhã e à noitinha, durante 40 dias, o guerreiro Golias saía do acampamento filisteu, desafiando Israel a apresentar um homem para lutar com ele num combate individual. (1Sa 17:1-10, 16) Este desafio foi aceito pelo pastor Davi, o qual, com uma única pedra da sua funda, derrubou Golias e usou a espada do próprio Golias para matá-lo. (1Sa 17:48-51) Os israelitas foram então no encalço dos filisteus em fuga, abatendo-os até as cidades de Gate e de Ecrom. — 1Sa 17:52, 53.

Depois disso, Davi continuou a travar uma guerra bem-sucedida contra os filisteus. Quando voltava das batalhas, as mulheres, celebrando a vitória, diziam: "Saul golpeou os seus milhares, e Davi as suas dezenas de milhares." (1Sa 18:5-7; veja também 1Sa 18:25-27, 30; 19:8.) Isto fez com que Saul se tornasse ciumento de Davi, resultando finalmente em Davi ter de fugir para salvar a vida. Ele fugiu para a cidade filisteia de Gate. (1Sa 18:8, 9; 20:33; 21:10) Ali, os servos do Rei Aquis parecem ter procurado a morte de Davi. Mas, por disfarçar a sua sanidade, ele pôde deixar a cidade ileso. (1Sa 21:10-15) Algum tempo depois, embora ainda perseguido por Saul, Davi salvou a cidade de Queila, de Judá, das mãos de saqueadores filisteus. (1Sa 23:1-12) Uma posterior incursão dos filisteus em território israelita obrigou Saul a deixar temporariamente de perseguir Davi. — 1Sa 23:27, 28; 24:1, 2.

Por ser continuamente caçado por Saul, Davi decidiu novamente refugiar-se em território filisteu. Acolhido favoravelmente pelo Rei Aquis, de Gate, Davi recebeu a cidade de Ziclague. (1Sa 27:1-6) Um ou dois anos mais tarde, quando os filisteus se preparavam para lutar contra as forças de Saul, o Rei Aquis, crendo que Davi se tornara "mau cheiro entre o seu povo de Israel", convidou-o a ir com ele. Mas os outros senhores do eixo dos filisteus não confiavam em Davi, e às instâncias deles, ele e seus homens retornaram à Filístia. No combate subsequente contra Israel, os filisteus obtiveram uma vitória decisiva, e Saul e três dos seus filhos pereceram. — 1Sa 27:12; 28:1-5; 29:1-11; 31:1-13; 1Cr 10:1-10, 13; 12:19.

Quando Davi foi finalmente ungido rei sobre todo o Israel, os filisteus invadiram a baixada de Refaim (ao SO de Jerusalém), mas sofreram uma humilhante derrota. (2Sa 5:17-21; 1Cr 14:8-12) Uma posterior ofensiva dos filisteus também acabou em vitória para Israel. (2Sa 5:22-25; 1Cr 14:13-16) Durante o seu reinado, Davi travou muitas outras batalhas contra os filisteus e conseguiu subjugá-los. Em certa ocasião, porém, ele quase que perdeu a vida. — 2Sa 8:1; 21:15-22; 1Cr 18:1; 20:4-8.

Do reinado de Salomão em diante. Depois disso, durante anos seguidos, não há registro de guerra com os filisteus. O filho de Davi, Salomão, teve um reinado pacífico (1037-998 AEC), e seus domínios estendiam-se até a cidade filisteia de Gaza. — 1Rs 4:21-25; 2Cr 9:26.

Uns 20 anos depois de vir a existir o reino das dez tribos, os filisteus ocuparam Gibetom, uma cidade em Dã. Na tentativa de tomar a cidade, o Rei Nadabe, de Israel, foi morto por Baasa, que consequentemente começou a reinar. (Jos 19:40, 44; 1Rs 15:27, 28) Gibetom ainda estava sob controle dos filisteus uns 24 anos mais tarde, quando Onri, chefe do exército de Israel, acampou contra ela. — 1Rs 16:15-17.

No reinado de Jeosafá (936-c.911 AEC), os filisteus, pelo visto, estavam sujeitos a ele, porque lhe traziam presentes e tributo. (2Cr 17:11) Mas, durante o governo do seu filho Jeorão, os filisteus e os árabes invadiram Judá e levaram embora considerável despojo de Jerusalém. Levaram também cativos as esposas e os filhos de Jeorão — todos exceto o mais jovem, Jeoacaz. (2Cr 21:16, 17) Décadas mais tarde, o Rei Uzias, de Judá, guerreou com êxito contra os filisteus, capturando Gate, Jabné e Asdode. Até mesmo construiu cidades em território filisteu. (2Cr 26:6-8) Todavia, no reinado do neto de Uzias, Acaz, houve a captura de várias cidades israelitas pelos filisteus, que passaram a residir nelas, desde o Negebe até a fronteira setentrional do reino de Judá. (2Cr 28:18) O filho de Acaz, Ezequias, em cumprimento duma profecia transmitida por Isaías (14:28, 29), golpeou os filisteus até Gaza. — 2Rs 18:8.

Referências Proféticas. A profecia de Joel indicou que, por venderem "os filhos de Judá" e "os filhos de Jerusalém" aos "filhos dos gregos", os filisteus sofreriam tratamento igual. (Jl 3:4-8) Visto que as palavras do profeta Joel parecem ter sido registradas no nono século AEC, as derrotas sofridas pelos filisteus às mãos de Uzias (2Cr 26:6-8) e de Ezequias (2Rs 18:8) podem ter sido incluídas no cumprimento desta profecia.

No entanto, evidentemente, houve um cumprimento maior depois que os israelitas retornaram do exílio babilônico. O comentador C. F. Keil observa: "Alexandre, o Grande, e seus sucessores puseram em liberdade nas suas terras muitos dos prisioneiros de guerra judeus (veja a promessa do Rei Demétrio a Jônatas: 'Mandarei embora, em liberdade, aqueles de Judá que foram feitos prisioneiros e reduzidos à escravidão em nossa terra', Josefo, Ant. xiii 2, 3), e partes das terras dos filisteus e dos fenícios estavam por um tempo sob domínio judeu." (Commentary on the Old Testament [Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento], 1973, Vol. X, Joel, p. 224) (Veja Ob 19, 20.) Digno de nota, também, é o fato de que Alexandre, o Grande [ou: Magno], tomou a cidade filisteia de Gaza. Muitos dos habitantes foram mortos, e os sobreviventes foram vendidos como escravos. Diversas outras profecias também apontavam para a execução da vingança de Jeová nos filisteus. — Is 14:31; Je 25:9, 20; 47:1-7; Ez 25:15, 16; Am 1:6-8; Sof 2:5; Za 9:5-7; quanto a pormenores, veja ASCALOM; ASDODE; ECROM; GATE; GAZA N.º 1.

Em Ezequiel 16:27, "as filhas dos filisteus" são representadas como humilhadas por causa da conduta desenfreada de Jerusalém. (Ez 16:2) A razão disto parece ser que a infidelidade de Jerusalém a seu Deus, Jeová, não tinha paralelo, porque os filisteus e outros povos se apegavam à adoração dos seus deuses falsos. — Veja Je 2:10, 11.

FILÓLOGO [Afeiçoado a Palavras (Erudição)]. Cristão cumprimentado por Paulo na sua carta aos romanos. (Ro 16:15) O mesmo nome é encontrado em inscrições associadas com os da casa de César.

FILOSOFIA. A palavra grega fi·lo·so·fí·a significa, literalmente, "amor à sabedoria". No uso moderno, o termo se relaciona com os empenhos humanos de compreender e interpretar por raciocínio e especulação a totalidade da experiência humana, inclusive as causas e os princípios subjacentes à realidade.

As palavras gregas para "filosofia" e "filósofo" ocorrem, cada uma, apenas uma vez nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. (Col 2:8; At 17:18) Evidentemente, quando Paulo escreveu à congregação em Colossos, na Ásia Menor, alguns ali corriam perigo de ser afetados pela 'filosofia e vão engano, segundo a tradição de homens'. As filosofias gregas tinham então muito destaque. Mas o contexto de Colossenses 2:8 mostra que Paulo estava especialmente preocupado com os judaizantes, que tentavam trazer os cristãos de volta para a observância da Lei mosaica, com suas exigências de circuncisão, de dias festivos e da abstinência de certos alimentos. (Col 2:11, 16, 17) Paulo não se opunha ao conhecimento, pois orava para que os cristãos ficassem cheios dele. Mas, conforme mostrou, é preciso reconhecer o papel de Jesus Cristo na realização do propósito de Deus, para obter verdadeira sabedoria e conhecimento exato. (Col 1:9, 10; 2:2, 3) Os colossenses deviam acautelar-se para evitar que alguém, com argumentos persuasivos, os levasse como presa sua, por meio de raciocínios ou conceitos humanos. Tal filosofia seria parte das "coisas elementares [stoi·khei·a] do mundo", isto é, dos princípios ou componentes básicos e dos fatores motivadores do mundo, "e não segundo Cristo". — Col 2:4, 8.

Quando Paulo estava em Atenas, ele teve um confronto com 'os filósofos epicureus e estoicos'. (At 17:18) Eles chamaram o apóstolo de "paroleiro", usando a palavra grega sper·mo·ló·gos, que se aplica literalmente a uma ave que apanha sementes. A palavra também transmite a ideia de alguém que apanha migalhas de conhecimento e as repete sem ordem ou método. Esses filósofos desprezavam Paulo e sua mensagem. A filosofia epicureia era basicamente que a obtenção de prazer, especialmente de prazer mental, era o principal bem na vida (1Co 15:32); embora reconhecesse deuses, explicava-os como estando além da experiência e do interesse humanos. A filosofia dos estoicos enfatizava a sorte ou o destino natural; a pessoa devia ser muitíssimo virtuosa, mas esforçar-se a ser indiferente à dor ou ao prazer. Nem os epicureus, nem os estoicos, criam na ressurreição. Paulo, no seu discurso perante estes homens, salientou a relação e a responsabilidade da pessoa para com o Criador, e ligou isso com a ressurreição de Cristo e a "garantia" que isto fornecia aos homens. Para os gregos que buscavam "sabedoria", a mensagem a respeito de Cristo era "tolice". (1Co 1:22, 23), e quando Paulo mencionou a ressurreição, muitos dos seus ouvintes começaram a mofar, embora outros se tornassem crentes. — At 17:22-34.

Paulo, nas suas cartas inspiradas, enfatizou diversas vezes que a sabedoria e o falsamente chamado conhecimento do mundo são tolice para Deus e devem ser evitados pelos cristãos. — 1Co 1:18-31; 2:6-8, 13; 3:18-20; 1Ti 6:20.

FINEIAS.

1. Filho de Eleazar e neto de Arão. Sua mãe era filha de Putiel, e o nome de seu filho era Abisua. (Êx 6:25; 1Cr 6:4) Foi a rápida ação do jovem Fineias que fez cessar o flagelo da parte de Jeová, depois de 24.000 israelitas terem morrido nas planícies de Moabe, por causa de fornicação e por se apegarem a Baal de Peor. Quando avistou Zinri levar a midianita Cosbi para a tenda dele, traspassou ambos com uma lança, "a mulher, pelas suas partes genitais". Este zelo em "não tolerar nenhuma rivalidade" para com Jeová "veio a ser-lhe contado como justiça", e Deus fez um pacto, para o sacerdócio permanecer na linhagem dele "por tempo indefinido". — Núm 25:1-3, 6-15; Sal 106:30, 31.

Fineias, durante a sua vida, serviu em diversos cargos. Era representante sacerdotal no exército que executou a vingança de Jeová contra Midiã. (Núm 31:3, 6) Quando se pensou que três tribos estavam abandonando a adoração de Jeová, ele encabeçou o grupo de investigadores. (Jos 22:9-33) Era líder dos porteiros do tabernáculo. (1Cr 9:20) Depois do sepultamento de seu pai no Morro de Fineias, ele serviu no cargo de sumo sacerdote. (Jos 24:33; Jz 20:27, 28) Seu nome se destaca em diversas genealogias pós-exílicas. — 1Cr 6:4, 50; Esd 7:5; 8:2.

2. O mais jovem dos dois filhos "imprestáveis" do sacerdote Eli. (1Sa 1:3; 2:12) Enquanto serviam como sacerdotes, ele e seu irmão Hofni coabitavam com mulheres no santuário e "tratavam a oferta de Jeová com desrespeito". (1Sa 2:13-17, 22) Quando repreendidos levemente por seu pai, recusaram-se a escutar. Por causa da sua iniquidade, Deus proferiu julgamento contra eles. Este se cumpriu quando ambos foram mortos no mesmo dia em batalha com os filisteus. (1Sa 2:23-25, 34; 3:13; 4:11) A notícia sobre a captura da Arca e a morte do sogro e do marido foi demais para a esposa de Fineias. Ela sofreu um choque e morreu ao dar à luz Icabode. — 1Sa 4:17-21.

3. Levita, cujo filho Eleazar ajudou a inventariar os tesouros do templo no tempo de Esdras, em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:33, 34.

FLAUTA. Instrumento musical de sopro. Embora haja alguma disputa sobre qual o instrumento musical moderno que corresponde ao hebraico hha·líl e seu equivalente grego au·lós, muitas traduções modernas vertem estas palavras como "flauta", em harmonia com a identificação dada por lexicógrafos. (1Sa 10:5; 1Co 14:7, Al, BJ, BLH, NM) O radical hebraico, de que se crê que hha·líl derive, significa "traspassar" (Is 51:9; 53:5), e pode referir-se a um processo usado para fabricar uma flauta simples, a saber, de vazar o âmago dum pedaço de caniço, cana ou mesmo osso ou marfim, e então perfurá-lo com o devido espacejamento. Inscrições egípcias indicam que naquele país existia uma variedade de instrumentos do tipo da flauta. Um tipo era segurado numa posição oblíqua, encostando-se a boca na parte lateral do instrumento; eles desenvolveram também a flauta dupla, colocando-se a boca na extremidade dos dois tubos.

O termo grego au·lós parece ter sido usado também como designação geral, incluindo instrumentos de dois tipos: aqueles que usavam uma palheta na embocadura, bem como tubos simples de flauta. Hha·líl também pode ter-se tornado termo geral de todos os instrumentos de sopro, mas no hebraico moderno este nome é aplicado apenas à flauta, e a crença tradicional judaica é que o hha·líl das Escrituras era a flauta.

A flauta era um dos mais populares instrumentos musicais, sendo tocada em ocasiões alegres, tais como banquetes e casamentos (Is 5:12; 30:29; 1Rs 1:40), costume imitado pelas crianças em praças públicas. (Mt 11:16, 17) Era também tocada em ocasiões de tristeza. Os lamentadores profissionais frequentemente eram acompanhados por flautistas que tocavam melodias lamentosas. — Mt 9:23, 24. Veja também PÍFARO.

FLEGONTE. Veja FLÉGON.

FLORESTA. O termo hebraico para terreno arborizado é yá·ʽar, traduzido "floresta". (De 19:5; Jos 17:15; 1Sa 14:25) Antigamente, a terra da Palestina tinha uma abundância de florestas com árvores de muitos tipos. As referências bíblicas a florestas e bosques, e ao uso de madeira, tornam evidente que naquele tempo as árvores eram muito mais comuns do que atualmente, apesar dos esforços de reflorestamento nos últimos anos. (2Cr 27:4; Jz 9:48, 49) Isto também é confirmado pela descrição de animais selváticos, mostrando que as florestas podiam dar abrigo e habitação adequados para ursos (2Rs 2:23, 24), leões (1Sa 17:34; 1Cr 11:22) e outras formas de vida animal (Ez 34:25).

Mas o desflorestamento de grandes áreas tem ocorrido por causa da devastação das guerras, do extensivo uso de madeira, sem o esforço acompanhante de reflorestamento, e de descontrolado pastejo, em que os brotos das árvores novas têm sido consumidos por cabras e por outros animais. Denis Baly, no seu livro The Geography of the Bible (A Geografia da Bíblia; 1974, pp. 77, 115, 116), fala de séculos de descaso, o que tem resultado no desaparecimento de muitas florestas e na perda de até 2 m de solo fértil, deixando grande parte da terra rochosa e estéril.

Certas florestas são mencionadas especificamente na Bíblia. As florestas do Líbano, agora reduzidas a uns poucos pequenos bosques, eram notáveis pelas suas esplêndidas árvores (1Rs 5:2-10, 13-18; 2Rs 19:23), havendo grandes quantidades de cedros, juníperos, ciprestes e outras árvores. A "floresta de Efraim" (possivelmente a "floresta de Maanaim"), em que Absalão sofreu desastre, talvez ficasse ao L do rio Jordão, perto de Maanaim, e parece ter sido bastante densa. (2Sa 18:6 n., 8, 17) A "floresta de Herete" encontrava-se em Judá. (1Sa 22:5) Além disso, a região de Gileade era famosa pelas suas florestas e pelos seus balsameiros, ao passo que Basã, ao N, era conhecida pelas suas "árvores maciças", que evidentemente incluíam o carvalho. (Is 2:13; Za 11:2) Nos dias de Davi e de Salomão, cresciam abundantemente sicômoros na terra baixa da Sefelá. (1Rs 10:27; 1Cr 27:28; 2Cr 1:15; 9:27) O vale do Jordão possuía densas moitas de tamargueiras e de salgueiros, onde leões se ocultavam. — Je 12:5; Za 11:3.

Uso Simbólico. Assim como árvores são usadas para simbolizar pessoas e governantes individuais, assim a Bíblia usa florestas de forma simbólica para povos ou nações e seus governantes. A iniquidade do apóstata Judá era como uma chama que consumia seu povo (Is 9:18); a ira de Jeová consumiria o reino meridional (Judá) com uma chama inapagável. (Ez 20:46-48) Profecias similares são dadas contra nações pagãs, inimigas do povo de Deus. Os guerreiros assírios seriam cortados e dizimados como a árvores duma floresta. — Sal 83:14, 15; Je 46:22, 23; Is 10:19, 34.

FLUXO. Expressão bíblica aplicável a condições dos órgãos genitais dos homens e das mulheres. (Le 15:2, 19, 25; Núm 5:2, 3; 2Sa 3:29) No caso dos homens, referia-se a uma condição doentia, em que havia um fluxo do órgão genital ou em que o órgão estava obstruído por tal emissão. (Le 15:2, 3) Nenhum descendente masculino de Arão tinha permissão de comer "das coisas sagradas" enquanto impuro por causa dum fluxo. — Le 22:4.

O termo "fluxo" às vezes se aplicava à menstruação regular, normal, da mulher. (Le 15:19-24) Todavia, era também usado para se referir a um fluxo de sangue doentio, prolongado e assim anormal. (Le 15:25-30) Neste último caso, aplicou-se ao crônico "fluxo de sangue" de que uma mulher padeceu por 12 anos antes de ser curada por Jesus Cristo. — Mt 9:20-22.

Segundo a Lei, a pessoa que tivesse um fluxo era impura, tornava objetos e pessoas que ele ou ela tocava impuros, e assim por diante. Depois de ter cessado o fluxo doentio, a pessoa tomava certas medidas para ser purificada. — Le 15; veja LIMPO, LIMPEZA.

FOGO. Como acontece hoje, assim também, nos tempos bíblicos, o fogo desempenhava um papel importante na vida do homem. A refinação, a forjadura e a fundição de metais, a preparação de alimentos e o aquecimento das casas, bem como a oferta de sacrifícios e a queima de incenso estão entre as coisas especificamente mencionadas na Bíblia como exigindo o uso de fogo. Todavia, por causa da destrutividade do fogo descontrolado, ele é descrito como uma das quatro coisas que nunca dizem: "Basta!" (Pr 30:15, 16) Pelo mesmo motivo, Tiago comparou a língua usada de modo errado a um fogo. — Tg 3:5-8; compare isso com Pr 16:27.

O primeiro homem e a primeira mulher conheciam o fogo, porque Jeová, depois de expulsá-los do jardim do Éden, postou ao L do jardim "os querubins e a lâmina chamejante duma espada que se revolvia continuamente". (Gên 3:24) Caim e Abel talvez levassem suas ofertas a Jeová perante os querubins, e, embora não seja declarado diretamente nas Escrituras, provavelmente usaram fogo para apresentá-los, ou talvez esperassem que viesse fogo dos querubins para consumir os sacrifícios. (Gên 4:3, 4) Tubalcaim, ao forjar implementos de cobre e de ferro, deve ter empregado o calor de fogo intenso, especialmente visto que a fundição de ferro exige uma temperatura de 1.535°C. (Gên 4:22) Após o Dilúvio, coziam-se tijolos por "um processo de queima", embora alguns fossem apenas secados ao sol. (Gên 11:3) Em vista da dificuldade em acender um fogo, era evidentemente um costume frequente transferir o fogo de um lugar para outro. — Gên 22:6; Is 30:14.

Em Conexão com os Propósitos de Deus. O anjo de Jeová apareceu a Moisés numa chama de fogo, num espinheiro ardente que não era consumido pelo fogo. (Êx 3:2) Uma coluna de fogo à noite guiava os israelitas através do ermo, coluna que mais tarde pousava sobre o tabernáculo, indicando a presença de Jeová. (Êx 13:21; 40:38) A manifestação da glória de Jeová em fogo, quando se deu a Lei a Israel, fez com que o monte Sinai fumegasse. — Êx 19:18; 24:17.

Relacionado com o tabernáculo e o templo. O fogo figurava na adoração realizada no tabernáculo, e, mais tarde, no templo. Toda manhã, e entre as duas noitinhas, o sumo sacerdote tinha de queimar incenso no altar do incenso. (Êx 30:7, 8) A lei de Deus exigia que o fogo no altar da oferta queimada fosse mantido continuamente aceso. (Le 6:12, 13) O tradicional conceito judaico, de que o fogo no altar fora no início aceso milagrosamente por Deus, embora de ampla aceitação, na realidade não é apoiado pelas Escrituras. Segundo as instruções iniciais de Jeová a Moisés, os filhos de Arão deviam "pôr fogo sobre o altar e colocar a lenha em ordem sobre o fogo", antes de colocar o sacrifício no altar. (Le 1:7, 8) Foi depois da investidura do sacerdócio arônico, e, portanto, depois de se terem oferecido os sacrifícios da investidura, que fogo da parte de Jeová, provavelmente procedente da nuvem por cima do tabernáculo, consumiu a oferta que então havia sobre o altar. Em vista disso, o fogo milagroso manifestou-se, não em acender a lenha sobre o altar, mas em "consumir a oferta queimada e os pedaços gordos sobre o altar". O fogo que então continuava no altar, é claro, era provavelmente o resultado da mistura do fogo procedente de Deus com o fogo que já havia no altar. (Le 8:14-9:24) Do mesmo modo, fogo milagroso da parte de Jeová consumiu os sacrifícios logo depois da oração de Salomão na dedicação do templo. — 2Cr 7:1; veja também Jz 6:21; 1Rs 18:21-39; 1Cr 21:26, como outros exemplos do uso de fogo milagroso por Jeová, ao aceitar as ofertas de seus servos.

Provisões legais, e uso em execuções. A Lei mosaica proibia que se acendesse fogo no sábado. (Êx 35:3) Segundo a Lei, se um fogo ficasse descontrolado e causasse uma conflagração no campo de outro, aquele que acendeu o fogo tinha de dar compensação. (Êx 22:6) Vestes ou objetos de pele, nos quais se desenvolvesse e persistisse a praga da lepra, deviam ser queimados. (Le 13:53-58) No caso de certas violações da lei de Deus, as pessoas deviam ser apedrejadas até morrerem e então seus cadáveres deviam ser queimados em fogo. (Le 20:14; 21:9; Jos 7:15, 25) Quando uma cidade israelita se havia tornado apóstata, seus habitantes deviam ser abatidos com a espada, e a cidade e seu despojo deviam ser queimados. — De 13:12-16.

Na execução de operações de guerra contra os seus inimigos, os israelitas destinavam certas cidades ao fogo. (Núm 31:10; Jos 6:24; 11:11-13) Queimavam-se também as imagens entalhadas e os postes sagrados. (De 7:5, 25; 12:3) Quando tomavam despojos, os israelitas passavam os metais pelo fogo, na realidade esterilizando-os. — Núm 31:22, 23.

Em muitas ocasiões, Jeová usou fogo literal na execução de seus julgamentos em transgressores. (Núm 11:1; 16:35; 2Rs 1:10-12; Ju 7) Na destruição das apóstatas Judá e Jerusalém pelos babilônios, em 607 AEC, a ira de Jeová foi figurativamente derramada "como fogo". Esta expressão de ira foi acompanhada por fogo literal. (2Rs 25:9; La 2:3, 4) João, o Batizador, advertiu os líderes religiosos dos seus dias a respeito de um batismo com fogo, que sobreveio a Jerusalém em 70 EC, quando os exércitos romanos destruíram a cidade e incendiaram o templo. — Mt 3:7-12.

Usado por Opositores da Vontade de Deus. O fogo era também usado por opositores da vontade de Deus em ameaças, execuções cruéis e sacrifícios. Efraimitas irados ameaçaram Jefté: "Queimaremos a tua própria casa por cima de ti com fogo." De modo similar, os 30 padrinhos de casamento, filisteus, de Sansão ameaçaram queimar tanto a sua noiva como a casa do pai dela, se ela não conseguisse que Sansão lhe contasse a solução dum enigma e depois os avisasse disso. Depois de Sansão soltar 300 raposas com tochas acesas nos cereais em pé dos filisteus pagãos, os filisteus de fato queimaram a ela e seu pai com fogo. (Jz 12:1; 14:15; 15:4-6) Satanás, o Diabo, com a permissão de Deus, usou 'fogo dos céus' numa prova especial com Jó. — Jó 1:12, 16.

As nações que habitavam Canaã realmente queimavam seus filhos em fogo, como oferta aos seus deuses falsos. Embora Jeová lhes ordenasse especificamente não fazer isso, uma violação que exigia a pena de morte, israelitas apóstatas sacrificaram seus próprios filhos no vale de Hinom. (Le 20:2-5; De 12:31; 2Cr 28:1-3; Je 7:31; 19:5) No entanto, o fiel Rei Josias acabou com esta prática horrível por tornar Tofete, no vale de Hinom, impróprio para adoração. — 2Rs 23:10; veja MOLOQUE.

Uso Figurado. O fogo, ou expressões contendo a ideia de ardor, ou labaredas, são usados em sentido figurado associados com amor (Cân 8:6), paixão (Ro 1:27; 1Co 7:9), ira e julgamento (Sof 2:2; Mal 4:1), ou forte emoção (Lu 24:32; 2Co 11:29). Quando Jeremias queria refrear-se de falar a palavra de Jeová, ele achou isso impossível, porque se mostrou como um fogo aceso encerrado nos seus ossos. (Je 20:9) As Escrituras referem-se a Jeová como um fogo consumidor, por causa da sua limpeza, pureza e insistência em devoção exclusiva, bem como pelo fato de que aniquila os que se colocam em oposição a ele. (De 4:24; 9:3) Seu fervor e seu furor ardem como fogo, e sua "língua" e palavra são como um fogo. (Sal 79:5; 89:46; Is 30:27; Je 23:29) Além disso, Jeová faz de seus ministros angélicos um fogo devorador, e "a terra" será devorada pelo fogo do seu zelo. — Sal 104:1, 4; Sof 3:8; veja também Da 7:9, 10.

Teste, refinação, expurgo. "O mensageiro do pacto" é comparado ao fogo dum refinador, fogo usado para purificar ouro e prata. Portanto, o teste ardente ao qual Jeová submete "os filhos de Levi" por meio do mensageiro do pacto resulta na purificação deles. (Mal 3:1-3; veja REFINAÇÃO, REFINADOR.) Um teste por fogo também revela a qualidade do material, conforme salientado pelo apóstolo Paulo, quando enfatizou a importância de se construir sobre Jesus Cristo com materiais à prova de fogo. — 1Co 3:10-15.

Fogo e sal estavam associados com os sacrifícios oferecidos no templo. (Le 2:9, 13; Ez 43:24) O sal representava a isenção de corrupção e era símbolo de perseverante lealdade, conforme encontrado na expressão "pacto de sal". (2Cr 13:5) Então, o que simboliza o fogo?

O apóstolo Pedro refere-se a provações e sofrimentos como "fogo", que testa a qualidade da fé do cristão. (1Pe 1:6, 7) Mais adiante, ele compara o sofrimento pela justiça a um ardor, ao dizer a seus concristãos: "Não fiqueis intrigados com o ardor entre vós, que vos está acontecendo como provação, . . . [sois] partícipes dos sofrimentos do Cristo, para que vos alegreis e estejais também cheios de alegria durante a revelação de sua glória." (1Pe 4:12, 13) Que tal sofrimento pela justiça tem um efeito benéfico é indicado pelo apóstolo Paulo, ao dizer: "Tribulação produz perseverança." (Ro 5:3) Quem fielmente e com bom êxito passa por uma difícil provação 'ardente' se torna mais forte e mais sólido em resultado da sua perseverança. — At 14:22; Ro 12:12.

Destruição. Nos tempos bíblicos, o fogo era o mais cabal meio de destruição em uso. (Jos 6:24; De 13:16) Por isso, às vezes, Jesus usava o termo "fogo" de modo ilustrativo para indicar a destruição completa dos iníquos. (Mt 13:40-42, 49, 50; compare isso com Is 66:24; Mt 25:41.) Numa ocasião, Jesus advertiu seus discípulos para não deixarem que a mão, o pé ou o olho os fizessem tropeçar, de modo a serem lançados na Geena. Daí passou a dizer: "Cada um tem de ser salgado com fogo." Ele deve ter querido dizer que "cada um" que fizesse aquilo contra o que acabava de advertir seria salgado com o "fogo" da Geena, ou a destruição eterna. — Mr 9:43-49; veja GEENA.

Pedro escreveu que "os céus e a terra que agora existem estão sendo guardados para o fogo". Pelo contexto, e à luz de outros textos, torna-se evidente que não se trata dum fogo literal, mas significa a destruição eterna. Assim como o Dilúvio dos dias de Noé não destruiu os céus e a terra literais, mas apenas as pessoas ímpias, assim também a revelação de Jesus Cristo com seus anjos poderosos em fogo chamejante resultará na destruição permanente apenas dos ímpios e do iníquo sistema de coisas de que fazem parte. — 2Pe 3:5-7, 10-13; 2Te 1:6-10; compare isso com Is 66:15, 16, 22, 24.

Outros exemplos do uso de fogo para representar a destruição eterna são encontrados em Revelação (Apocalipse) e em Ezequiel. Ali somos informados de que "os dez chifres" e "a fera" se voltarão contra Babilônia, a Grande, e a queimarão no fogo. (Re 17:16, 17) O ataque de Gogue e suas hordas contra o povo de Deus suscitará a ira de Jeová, e choverá sobre eles fogo e enxofre. Os remanescentes implementos de guerra dos atacantes serão usados durante sete anos para acender fogo. (Ez 38:19, 22; 39:6, 9, 10) As nações que se tornarem rebeldes quando Satanás for solto no fim do Reinado Milenar de Cristo serão devoradas por fogo, e o Diabo e todos os não inscritos no livro da vida serão lançados no lago de fogo, que representa a segunda morte. — Re 20:7-10, 15; 21:8; veja HINOM, VALE DE; LAGO DE FOGO.

FOICE. Veja IMPLEMENTOS AGRÍCOLAS.

FOLE. Instrumento que pode ser alternadamente expandido e comprimido, primeiro enchendo-o de ar, através duma válvula, e depois expelindo o ar à força, através de um tubo de saída. Para dar aos fornos de fundição uma ventilação forçada, os foles são mais eficientes do que o mero abano ou as antiquadas canas ocas e tubos soprados, também usados para o mesmo fim. A construção dos foles era simples: Um saco montado numa armação ou base era preso a um tubo que dava para o forno de fundição, sendo o tubo talvez de ferro, ou uma cana com ponta de argila refratária. Foles manuais eram úteis para pequenas forjas; mas, para os grandes fornos de fundição, de altas temperaturas, empregavam-se foles duplos movidos pelos pés, um debaixo de cada pé do operador, que os comprimia alternadamente, primeiro com um pé, depois com o outro, puxando cada vez uma corda para reencher o fole comprimido. Para fornecer uma constante correnteza de ar a essas grandes fornalhas, dois homens operavam dois pares de foles. A palavra hebraica para fole é map·pú·ahh, que deriva da raiz na·fáhh, significando "soprar". (Gên 2:7) Este instrumento é apenas uma vez mencionado de forma específica nas Escrituras (Je 6:29), embora talvez se aluda a ele em Isaías 54:16 e Ezequiel 22:20, 21. Nestes textos, as referências são figurativas, e as ilustrações são tiradas dos métodos usados para a refinação de metais. — Veja REFINAÇÃO, REFINADOR.

FOLIA. Veja FESTANÇA.

FOME. Extrema escassez de alimentos; também, falta de se ouvir as palavras de Jeová, quer dizer, fome espiritual. (Am 8:11) A fome é uma das pragas que sobrevirão à simbólica Babilônia, a Grande. — Re 18:8.

Causas e Efeitos das Fomes. Secas, saraivadas destrutivas (Êx 9:23-25), pestilências, crestamento e bolor nas safras, bem como guerras, estavam entre as causas comuns de fome nos tempos bíblicos. (Am 4:7-10; Ag 2:17) Gafanhotos, às vezes em enormes enxames, eram especialmente devastadores para as safras. (Êx 10:15) Às vezes, o problema não era a falta de chuva, mas chuva na época errada, como durante a colheita do trigo ou da cevada. — Veja Le 26:4; 1Sa 12:17, 18.

A fome temporária é uma sensação natural, mas a fome prolongada, tal como a causada por uma escassez geral, é muito prejudicial para a saúde mental e física. Começa uma acentuada letargia, as emoções ficam embotadas e há apatia mental. A mente é dominada pelo anseio por comida. (Veja Êx 16:3.) Os padrões de moral entram em colapso. (Veja Is 8:21.) A própria inanição pode ter um efeito desumanizante, resultando em furtos, em assassinatos e até mesmo em canibalismo. A fome geral frequentemente é acompanhada por doenças e epidemias, por causa da condição enfraquecida dos afetados por ela. — Veja De 32:24.

Fomes na Antiguidade. A primeira fome realmente histórica é aquela que obrigou Abrão (Abraão) a deixar Canaã e passar a residir como forasteiro no Egito. (Gên 12:10) Nos dias de Isaque houve outra fome, mas Jeová lhe disse que não fosse ao Egito. (Gên 26:1, 2) A fome de sete anos que sobreveio ao Egito, enquanto José servia como primeiro-ministro e administrador de alimentos, evidentemente se estendia muito além das fronteiras do Egito, porque "vinham ao Egito pessoas de toda a terra para comprar [alimentos] de José". — Gên 41:54-57.

Embora as inscrições egípcias escrupulosamente evitem qualquer referência à estada de Israel no Egito, há antigos textos egípcios que descrevem períodos de fome por causa da insuficiente elevação do nível do rio Nilo. Um texto descreve um período de sete anos de pouca elevação do Nilo e a resultante fome. Segundo o relato, certas partes da terra foram concedidas ao sacerdócio quando houve alívio da fome. Embora se suscite a pergunta sobre se o documento é "uma falsificação sacerdotal de algum período posterior, justificando suas pretensões aos privilégios territoriais", pelo menos vemos refletida nisso a tradição de um período de sete anos magros. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 31.

Antes de Israel entrar na Terra da Promessa, Jeová, por meio de Moisés, assegurou-lhes que teriam abundância de alimentos, se continuassem a servi-Lo em fidelidade. (De 28:11, 12) Todavia, a fome seria um dos resultados temíveis que sobreviria a Israel por sua infidelidade. (De 28:23, 38-42) Uma fome nos dias dos juízes induziu o marido de Noemi, Elimeleque, de Belém, a residir com a família como forasteiro em Moabe. (Ru 1:1, 2) Nos dias de Davi, Jeová causou uma fome de três anos na terra de Israel por causa da culpa de sangue da casa de Saul em conexão com os gibeonitas. (2Sa 21:1-6) Uma seca de três anos e meio que resultou numa severa fome sobreveio ao infiel Israel em resposta à oração de Elias. (Tg 5:17; 1Rs 17) Além de fomes gerais nos dias de Eliseu, houve a fome produzida pelo cerco sírio de Samaria, durante o qual se relatou um caso de canibalismo. — 2Rs 4:38; 8:1; 6:24-29.

Embora os profetas de Deus advertissem que a apostasia resultaria em morte por fome, pestilência e espada, os infiéis, de Judá, preferiam antes escutar os seus profetas falsos, que lhes asseguravam que não haveria tal calamidade. (Je 14:11-18; Ez 5:12-17) No entanto, as palavras dos profetas de Deus mostraram-se verdadeiras. Durante o cerco movido pelos babilônios (609-607 AEC), a fome em Jerusalém foi tão severa, que mulheres cozinharam e comeram seus próprios filhos. — La 4:1-10; 5:10; 2Rs 25:1-3; Je 52:4-6; compare isso com De 28:51-53.

Jeová, por meio do profeta Joel, avisou Israel de antemão de uma tremenda praga de insetos, que devastaria o país e causaria uma severa fome, antes da vinda do "dia de Jeová". — Jl 1.

Séculos mais tarde, Jesus predisse escassez de alimentos como uma das características que marcariam a terminação "do sistema de coisas". (Mt 24:3, 7; compare isso com Re 6:5, 6.) Conforme anunciado de antemão por Ágabo, profeta cristão, ocorreu mesmo uma grande fome no tempo do Imperador Cláudio (41-54 EC). (At 11:28) Uns poucos anos antes, no ano 42 EC, uma severa fome atingira o Egito, onde moravam muitos judeus. E a Judá e Jerusalém sobreveio uma "grande necessidade" quando os exércitos romanos, sob o General Tito, sitiaram Jerusalém e finalmente a destruíram, em 70 EC. (Lu 21:23) Josefo relata as condições de terrível inanição na cidade, em que as pessoas recorreram a comer couro, grama e feno, e, em um caso, uma mãe até mesmo assou e comeu seu filho. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], VI, 193-213 [iii, 3, 4]) No entanto, quando Jesus predisse tal escassez de alimentos, ele indicou que pensava não só nos eventos que antecederiam à destruição de Jerusalém, mas também no que ocorreria quando chegasse o tempo para o Filho do homem retornar na glória do seu Reino. — Lu 21:11, 27, 31; compare isso com Re 6:5, 6.

Livres da Fome. Cristo Jesus garante que a oração dos servos fiéis, pedindo seu pão do dia, seria respondida por Deus, e que aqueles que colocassem o Reino de Deus em primeiro lugar seriam cuidados. (Mt 6:11, 33; compare isso com Sal 33:19; 37:19, 25.) Todavia, Jesus mostrou que, por causa de oposição e de perseguição, seus servos às vezes poderiam padecer fome. (Mt 25:35, 37, 40) O apóstolo Paulo, em especial, conta que padeceu muitas vezes tanto fome como sede, enquanto empenhado no ministério em circunstâncias difíceis. (1Co 4:11-13; 2Co 11:27; Fil 4:12) Todavia, ele expressou confiança em que a fome física nunca poderia separar os servos fiéis de Deus do poder sustentador do amor de Deus. — Ro 8:35, 38, 39; contraste isso com Lu 6:25.

Aqueles que têm uma correta fome e sede da justiça e da verdade sempre serão espiritualmente saciados. (Mt 5:6; Jo 6:35) Isto inclui os da "grande multidão" que têm esperança de sobreviver à "grande tribulação", e sobre os quais se escreveu que "não terão mais fome, nem terão mais sede". (Re 7:9, 13-17) E debaixo do domínio do Reino de Deus, virá a haver também abundância para saciar a fome física de toda a humanidade. — Sal 72:16; Is 25:6.

FONTE, MANANCIAL. Em geral, um abastecimento natural de água (Êx 15:27), em contraste com poços e cisternas, que usualmente eram escavados (Gên 26:15); também usada com referência à origem de algo que não é água. Dois termos hebraicos para "fonte; manancial" são 'á·yin (literalmente: olho) e o aparentado ma'·yán. O correspondente termo grego é pe·gé. Visto que os mananciais eram às vezes limpos e aprofundados, isto talvez explique por que "fonte" e "poço" às vezes são usados intercambiavelmente para o mesmo abastecimento de água. — Gên 16:7, 14; 24:11, 13; Jo 4:6, 12; veja CISTERNA; POÇO.

Moisés descreveu aos israelitas a Terra da Promessa como terra de "fontes e de águas de profundeza surgindo no vale plano e na região montanhosa". (De 8:7) Há abundância de mananciais na Palestina, havendo em média seis ou sete em aproximadamente cada 100 km². Visto que os montes de Judá e de Efraim são compostos principalmente de rocha porosa, as chuvas hibernais se infiltram prontamente a uma grande profundidade. As águas atingem finalmente uma camada impermeável, correm ao longo dela e então reaparecem como mananciais no lado ocidental do vale do Jordão e na margem ocidental do Mar Morto, algumas até fluindo subterraneamente para dentro do Mar Morto. Muitos dos mananciais que deságuam diretamente no Mar Morto e nas águas inferiores do Jordão têm uma temperatura elevada. Ao oeste da cordilheira, as águas emergem como mananciais na parte oriental das extensas terras baixas ao longo do litoral, embora parte da água passe subterraneamente para o Mediterrâneo. Outros mananciais, tais como os em volta de Jerusalém e de Hébron, irrompem no alto ou perto do cume dos planaltos da Palestina. Os numerosos mananciais resultantes das neves derretidas da cordilheira do Líbano e do monte Hermom fornecem as cabeceiras do Litani, do Jordão e dos rios de Damasco.

A importância dos mananciais, ou fontes, torna-se evidente na frequência de nomes de cidades, que começam com "En", que significa "manancial", "fonte". (Jos 15:62; 17:11; 1Rs 1:9; veja AIM.) Cidades e aldeias muitas vezes eram construídas perto de mananciais, visto que a maioria dos "rios" da Palestina são realmente vales de torrente, que secam nos meses de verão. Para fins defensivos, as cidades, em geral, eram construídas em lugares elevados, e, portanto, os mananciais ficavam frequentemente fora das muralhas da cidade, no vale embaixo. Isto tornava vitalmente importante que o suprimento de água fosse protegido. Construíam-se condutos para levar a água da sua fonte para dentro da cidade. O Rei Ezequias construiu tal conduto para levar a água de Giom para a Cidade de Davi. (2Rs 20:20; 2Cr 32:30) Em outros tempos, passagens ou túneis ocultos conduziam à fonte de água, assegurando um amplo suprimento de água para os habitantes da cidade, mesmo quando confrontados com um sítio. Por ocasião da invasão assíria de Judá, Ezequias tapou as fontes fora de Jerusalém, a fim de deixar os invasores sem um suprimento de água. — 2Cr 32:2-4; veja EZEQUIAS N.º 1 (Obras de Construção e de Engenharia); FORTIFICAÇÕES.

Uso Figurado. Jeová estabeleceu "as fontes da água de profundeza". (Pr 8:28; Gên 7:11) Ele é também identificado como a Fonte ou Origem da Vida, a Fonte de água viva e a Fonte de Israel. (Sal 36:9; Je 2:13; Sal 68:26) Seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, dá água que se torna no recebedor "uma fonte de água que borbulha para dar vida eterna". (Jo 4:14) Joel predisse profeticamente que, depois de as nações receberem o tratamento de lagar na baixada de Jeosafá, procederá da casa de Jeová um refrescante manancial. — Jl 3:12, 13, 18.

Destacando a importância do uso correto da língua, Tiago pergunta aos cristãos, os quais devem oferecer a água da vida: "Será que uma fonte faz brotar pela mesma abertura o que é doce e o que é amargo?" — Tg 3:11.

Jesus secou a "fonte de sangue" duma mulher que já por 12 anos padecia de um fluxo de sangue, curando-a. (Mr 5:25-29) "Fonte de água" é uma expressão que também é usada com referência a uma fonte de satisfação sexual. — Pr 5:18.

FONTE, PORTÃO DA. Veja PORTA, PORTÃO.

FONTE DA COBRA GRANDE. A expressão hebraica contém a ideia de uma fonte, um manancial ou poço dum monstro terrestre ou marinho, e é traduzida de forma variada como: "fonte do dragão" (Al, CBC); "Poço da Serpente" (AT); "fonte da serpente" (Ro); "Fonte da Cobra Grande" (NM). A Septuaginta grega, porém, reza "Fonte das Figueiras".

Esta fonte de água estava situada ao longo da rota que Neemias seguiu na sua primeira inspeção das muralhas derrocadas de Jerusalém. (Ne 2:12, 13) Visto que este nome não ocorre de novo nas Escrituras, a fonte ou o poço, caso seja mencionado em outro lugar, deve ter outro nome. En-Rogel costuma ser sugerido como nome alternativo. Isto é bem possível, pois, embora En-Rogel se encontre a uma considerável distância pelo vale do Cédron abaixo, o relato simplesmente diz que Neemias passou "defronte da Fonte", e isto pode significar que passou pelo canto da muralha que dava para En-Rogel, e à vista da fonte, mas ainda a certa distância dela. — Veja EN-ROGEL.

FONTE DE JACÓ. "Poço" ou "fonte" onde Jesus Cristo, enquanto descansava, conversou com uma mulher samaritana. (Jo 4:5-30) É considerado como Bir Ya'qub (Be'er Ya'aqov), situado a uns 2,5 km ao SE da atual Nablus, não muito longe de Tell Balata, o lugar de Siquém. A fonte de Jacó é um poço fundo, cujo nível de água nunca chega à superfície. Medições feitas no século 19 indicam que a profundidade do poço é de cerca de 23 m. Tem a largura aproximada de 2,5 m, embora se estreite no alto. Visto que o poço costuma estar seco de cerca do fim de maio até as chuvas outonais, alguns argumentam que sua água procede da chuva e de infiltração. Outros, porém, acreditam que o poço é também alimentado por um manancial e que por isso pode também ser chamado de fonte.

A Bíblia não declara diretamente que Jacó escavou este poço. No entanto, ela indica realmente que Jacó tinha propriedade nesta vizinhança. (Gên 33:18-20; Jos 24:32; Jo 4:5) E a mulher samaritana disse a Jesus que "Jacó . . . nos deu o poço e . . . bebeu dele junto com os seus filhos e seu gado". (Jo 4:12) Assim, Jacó provavelmente o escavou ou o mandou escavar, talvez para prover sua grande casa e seus rebanhos de água, evitando assim dificuldades com os seus vizinhos, os quais, sem dúvida, já estavam de posse das outras fontes de água na região. Ou talvez necessitasse de um suprimento melhor e mais constante de água, quando outros poços na região se secaram.

FORMIGA [hebr.: nema·láh]. Inseto pequeno, mas extremamente numeroso e difundido, que vive em colônias, e se destaca na Bíblia por sua laboriosidade e sabedoria instintiva. (Pr 6:6-8; 30:24, 25) Calcula-se que haja mais de 10.000 variedades de formigas, sendo esses insetos encontrados em todas as partes da terra, com exceção das regiões polares.

"Um Povo." As formigas são chamadas de "um povo" (hebr.: 'am), em Provérbios 30:25; do mesmo modo que Joel se referiu aos gafanhotos como "uma nação" (Jl 1:6), e esta expressão é bem apropriada para estas criaturas pequeninhas. Ao passo que algumas colônias de formigas talvez tenham apenas umas poucas dezenas de formigas, outras possuem enormes populações, que ascendem a centenas de milhares. Embora, em geral, de tamanho moderado, o ninho ou a área cheia de túneis pode aumentar até atingir quase meio hectare. Dentro de cada colônia, há três castas básicas: a rainha ou rainhas, os machos e as operárias (fêmeas não desenvolvidas sexualmente). Todavia, conforme declara o provérbio, a formiga 'não tem comandante, nem oficial ou governante'. (Pr 6:7) A rainha não é tal em sentido governamental, e pode mais apropriadamente ser chamada de formiga-mãe, porque a sua função essencial é pôr ovos. Ao passo que a rainha pode viver até 15 anos, os machos só vivem o suficiente para a fecundação e en-tão morrem. As formigas operárias, cuja vida pode chegar aos seis anos, têm diversas tarefas a cumprir, tais como procurar e ajuntar alimentos para a colônia, alimentar a rainha, atuar como amas-secas das larvas, limpar o ninho, escavar novas câmaras, segundo as necessidades de expansão, e defender o ninho. As operárias podem ter tamanho e proporções diferentes, até numa mesma colônia, as maiores, em alguns casos, atuando como soldados, em caso de invasão do ninho. Todavia, apesar da divisão bastante precisa do trabalho (o qual, em algumas colônias, é organizado segundo a idade das operárias, e em outras segundo o tamanho) e da organização relativamente complexa existente, não há sinal de algum oficial superior, ou capataz.

'Sabedoria Instintiva.' A 'sabedoria' das formigas não é produto de raciocínio inteligente, mas resulta dos instintos com que foram dotadas pelo seu Criador. A Bíblia menciona a formiga como 'preparando seu alimento no verão e recolhendo seus alimentos na colheita'. (Pr 6:8) Uma das variedades mais comuns de formiga encontrada na Palestina, a formiga colhedeira ou ceifeira (Messor semirufus), armazena grandes suprimentos de cereais na primavera e no verão, e faz uso deles nas estações, inclusive no inverno, em que é difícil obter alimento. Esta formiga costuma ser encontrada perto de eiras, onde há abundância de sementes e de grãos. Quando a chuva faz que a umidade atinja as sementes armazenadas, as formigas colhedeiras levam depois os grãos para fora, ao sol, a fim de secarem. Sabe-se até mesmo que ela arranca a parte germinal da semente, para que não brote enquanto armazenada. As colônias de formigas colhedeiras tornam-se evidentes pelos caminhos bem batidos, bem como pelas cascas de sementes deixadas fora da entrada do formigueiro.

Características Exemplares. Assim, um breve exame da formiga dá força à exortação: "Vai ter com a formiga, ó preguiçoso; vê os seus caminhos e torna-te sábio." (Pr 6:6) As formigas não só são notáveis pela sua preparação instintiva para o futuro, mas também pela sua persistência e determinação, muitas vezes carregando ou tenazmente arrastando objetos que têm duas ou mais vezes o seu peso, fazendo todo o possível para cumprir sua tarefa específica e negando-se a desistir, mesmo que caiam, deslizem ou rolem algum íngreme precipício abaixo. Sendo notavelmente cooperadoras, mantêm seus ninhos bem limpos e mostram preocupação com outras operárias, às vezes ajudando formigas feridas ou esgotadas a retornar ao ninho.

FORNALHA, FORNO. Estrutura destinada principalmente a (1) fundir minério, (2) derreter metais já antes fundidos para moldá-los em peças ou para aquecê-los para serem forjados, e (3) cozer louça e outros objetos de cerâmica. Nos tempos bíblicos, as fornalhas eram construídas de tijolo ou de pedra. Fornalhas circulares de cobre, que se creem datarem do período dos juízes, foram encontradas em Tell Qasileh, nos arrabaldes setentrionais de Tel Aviv-Yafo e em Tell Jemmeh (Tel Gamma), ao S de Gaza. Estas fornalhas estavam equipadas com grandes condutos de tijolos de barro, destinados a levar o ar à câmara de queima. Colocavam-se cadinhos de argila com cobre sobre lajotas de pedra, as quais eram postas em cima das cinzas do fogo dentro da fornalha.

Os três fiéis companheiros hebreus de Daniel foram lançados por Nabucodonosor numa fornalha ardente, por se negarem a se curvar diante da imagem de ouro erigida pelo rei. (Da 3) O registro não declara se era uma fornalha especial construída para este fim ou se era uma fornalha normalmente usada para outra finalidade comum.

O termo "forno" também se aplica ao "forno" usado para cozer pão. — Os 7:4; Le 2:4.

Figuradamente, o Egito, que confinou Israel num jugo duro de escravidão, é comparado a um forno de fundição de ferro. (De 4:20) Também, o derramamento da ira de Deus sobre a casa de Israel é assemelhado à fundição de metal num forno de fundição. (Ez 22:18-22) Quanto a outros usos da palavra para fins comparativos ou ilustrativos, veja Provérbios 17:3; 27:21; Salmo 12:6 ("forno de fundição"). — Veja FORNO; FORNO DE CALCINAÇÃO; REFINAÇÃO, REFINADOR.

FORNICAÇÃO. Relações sexuais ilícitas fora do vínculo marital, bíblico. O verbo hebraico za·náh e suas formas aparentadas transmitem a ideia de libertinagem sexual, relações sexuais imorais, fornicação ou prostituição. (Gên 38:24; Êx 34:16; Os 1:2; Le 19:29) A palavra grega traduzida por "fornicação" é por·nei·a. A respeito do significado de por·nei·a, B. F. Westcott diz no seu livro Saint Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians (A Epístola de São Paulo aos Efésios; 1906, p. 76): "Este é o termo geral para todas as relações sexuais ilícitas, (I) adultério: Os. ii. 2, 4 (LXX); Mat. v. 32; xix. 9; (2) casamento ilícito, I Cor. v. I; (3) fornicação, o sentido comum, como aqui [Ef 5:3]." O Léxico do Novo Testamento Grego/Português, de F. Wilbur Gingrich (revisado por Frederick W. Danker; tradução de Júlio P. T. Zabatiero; 1986, p. 172) define por·nei·a como "incastidade, prostituição, fornicação, de vários tipos de relação sexual ilícita". Entende-se que porneia envolve o uso crassamente imoral do(s) órgão(s) genital(is) de pelo menos um humano; também, tem de ter havido dois ou mais entes (inclusive outro humano concordante ou um animal), quer do mesmo sexo, quer do sexo oposto. (Ju 7) O ato ilícito dum estuprador é fornicação, mas, naturalmente, isto não constitui a pessoa estuprada em fornicador.

Quando Deus realizou o primeiro casamento humano, ele disse: "Por isso é que o homem deixará seu pai e sua mãe, e tem de se apegar à sua esposa, e eles têm de tornar-se uma só carne." (Gên 2:24) O padrão aqui estabelecido para o homem e a mulher era a monogamia, e excluíam-se as relações sexuais promíscuas. Tampouco se previa o divórcio e um novo casamento com outra pessoa. — Veja DIVÓRCIO.

Na sociedade patriarcal, os servos fiéis de Deus odiavam a fornicação, quer entre pessoas solteiras, quer entre pessoas noivas ou casadas, e ela era considerada como pecado contra Deus. — Gên 34:1, 2, 6, 7, 31; 38:24-26; 39:7-9.

Sob a Lei. Sob a Lei mosaica, o homem que cometesse fornicação com uma moça que não era noiva tinha de se casar com ela e pagar ao pai dela o preço de compra de noiva (50 siclos de prata; US$ 110), e não se podia divorciar dela em todos os seus dias. Mesmo que o pai se negasse a dar-lhe a moça em casamento, o homem tinha de pagar ao pai o preço de compra. (Êx 22:16, 17; De 22:28, 29) No entanto, se a moça era noiva, o homem tinha de ser apedrejado até morrer. Se a moça havia gritado quando foi atacada, ela não era punida, mas se a moça noiva não havia gritado (indicando assim consentimento), ela também devia ser morta. — De 22:23-27.

A santidade do casamento era enfatizada pela lei que punia com a morte a moça que se casasse sob a falsa pretensão de ser virgem, tendo cometido fornicação em segredo. Se o marido a acusasse falsamente de tal crime, considerava-se isso como lançando grande vitupério sobre a casa do pai dela. O homem tinha de ser 'disciplinado' pelos juízes por sua ação caluniosa, talvez por espancamento, e tinha de ser multado em 100 siclos de prata (US$ 220), entregando-se então o dinheiro ao pai. (De 22:13-21) A prostituição da filha dum sacerdote desonrava o cargo sacerdotal dele. Ela tinha de ser morta e depois queimada como algo detestável. (Le 21:9; veja também Le 19:29.) A fornicação entre pessoas casadas (adultério) era uma violação do sétimo mandamento e acarretava para ambos a pena de morte. — Êx 20:14; De 5:18; 22:22.

Quando um homem havia cometido fornicação com a serva de outro homem, sem ela ser uma moça remida ou libertada, tinha de haver punição, mas eles não deviam ser mortos. (Le 19:20-22) Isto se dava, evidentemente, porque a mulher ainda não era livre e no pleno controle das suas ações, assim como se daria com uma moça livre que era noiva. O preço de redenção ainda não tinha sido pago, ou pelo menos não plenamente, e ela ainda era serva de seu amo.

Quando Balaão, o profeta mercenário, não conseguiu lançar sobre Israel uma maldição por meio de adivinhação, ele achou um meio de fazer os israelitas incorrer no desagrado de Deus, por apelar para um desejo errado de relações sexuais. Por meio das mulheres de Moabe, ele seduziu os israelitas a praticarem a imunda adoração fálica de Baal de Peor, por causa da qual morreram 24.000 dos filhos de Israel. — Núm 25:1-9; 1Co 10:8 (provavelmente 1.000 cabeças do povo foram mortos e pendurados em estacas [Núm 25:4] e os demais foram destruídos pela espada ou pela praga).

Proibida aos Cristãos. Jesus Cristo restabeleceu a original norma de Deus, de monogamia (Mt 5:32; 19:9), e mostrou quão iníqua era a fornicação, por classificá-la junto com assassínio, ladroagem, raciocínios iníquos, falso testemunho e blasfêmia. Salientou que estes procedem de dentro do homem, do seu coração, e o aviltam. (Mt 15:19, 20; Mr 7:21-23) Mais tarde, o corpo governante da congregação cristã, composta dos apóstolos e de anciãos de Jerusalém, escreveu aos cristãos por volta de 49 EC, advertindo-os contra a fornicação, e classificando-a junto com a idolatria e com comer sangue. — At 15:20, 29; 21:25.

O apóstolo Paulo indica que a fornicação é uma das obras da carne, oposta aos frutos do espírito de Deus, e avisa que a prática de obras carnais impedirá que a pessoa herde o Reino. (Gál 5:19-21) Aconselha que o cristão amorteça seu corpo "com respeito a fornicação". (Col 3:5) De fato, ele avisa que ela não devia nem mesmo ser um tópico de conversa entre os cristãos, os quais devem ser santos. De modo similar, os israelitas não deviam mencionar os nomes de deuses falsos — não sendo o caso que deixassem de avisar seus filhos sobre esses deuses, mas não os mencionariam com estima. — Ef 5:3; Êx 23:13.

A fornicação é um delito pelo qual a pessoa pode ser expulsa (desassociada) da congregação cristã. (1Co 5:9-13; He 12:15, 16) O apóstolo explica que o cristão que comete fornicação peca contra o seu próprio corpo, usando seus membros reprodutivos para fins perversos. Fica espiritualmente muito afetado de modo adverso, avilta a congregação de Deus e se expõe ao perigo de doenças mortíferas, sexualmente transmissíveis. (1Co 6:18, 19) Usurpa os direitos de seus irmãos cristãos (1Te 4:3-7) por (1) introduzir na congregação impureza e vergonhosa tolice, com vitupério (He 12:15, 16), (2) privar a pessoa com quem comete fornicação duma posição moralmente limpa, e, se esta for solteira, de ser pura ao contrair núpcias, (3) privar sua própria família duma reputação moralmente limpa, bem como (4) prejudicar os pais, o marido, ou o noivo ou a noiva da pessoa com quem comete fornicação. Não desconsidera o homem, cujas leis talvez tolerem a fornicação, mas a Deus, que exigirá punição pelo pecado que cometeu. — 1Te 4:8.

Uso Simbólico. Jeová Deus falou da nação de Israel, que estava numa relação pactuada com ele, como "uma esposa". (Is 54:5, 6) Quando a nação se tornou infiel a ele, não fazendo caso dele e se voltando para outras nações, tais como o Egito e a Assíria em busca de ajuda, e entrando em alianças com elas, Israel era como uma esposa infiel, adúltera, prostituta, que promiscuamente se entrega à fornicação. (Ez 16:15, 25-29) Do mesmo modo, se cristãos, em relação dedicada a Deus, ou professando tal relação, forem infiéis por se empenharem em adoração falsa ou por serem amigos do mundo, eles são chamados de adúlteras. — Tg 4:4.

A respeito do sentido simbólico de por·nei·a em certos textos, diz F. Zorell (Lexicon Graecum Novi Testamenti [Léxico Grego do Novo Testamento], Paris, 1961, col. 1106): "Apostasia da verdadeira fé, cometida quer inteira quer parcialmente, desertar do único Deus verdadeiro Jahve para deuses estrangeiros [4Rs 9:22 9:22; Je 3:2, 9; Os 6:10 etc.; porque a união de Deus com o seu povo era considerada como uma espécie de matrimônio espiritual]: Re 14:8; 17:2, 4; 18:3; 19:2." — Os colchetes são dele; 4Rs, na Septuaginta grega, corresponde a 2Rs no texto massorético.

Babilônia, a Grande, descrita no livro bíblico de Revelação (Apocalipse) como meretriz, é símbolo de algo religioso. Suas diversas seitas, "cristãs" e pagãs, têm afirmado ser organizações de adoração verdadeira. Mas ela se consorcia com os governantes deste mundo em busca de poder e de lucro material, e é com ela que "os reis da terra cometeram fornicação". Seu proceder impuro e aviltado de fornicação tem sido detestável aos olhos de Deus, e tem causado muito derramamento de sangue e angústia na Terra. (Re 17:1-6; 18:3) Por causa do seu proceder, ela sofrerá o julgamento de Deus contra os que praticam a fornicação, a saber, a destruição. — Re 17:16; 18:8, 9.

FORNO. Câmara aquecida para cozer ou assar alimentos. Os hebreus e outros usavam diversos tipos de forno. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 952.

Fornos de tamanho considerável, consistindo em um buraco redondo no chão, têm sido usados no Oriente Médio até os tempos atuais, tendo alguns deles até 1,5 ou 1,8 m de profundidade e quase 1 m de diâmetro. Num forno deste tamanho, era possível assar uma ovelha inteira por suspendê-la sobre pedras quentes ou brasas.

O forno tigelão era usado nos dias bíblicos e provavelmente era similar ao usado por camponeses palestinos nos tempos atuais. Consiste num tigelão de argila colocado invertido sobre pequenas pedras, sobre as quais se colocou o pão. O tigelão é aquecido por se queimar combustível sobre ele e em volta dele, e assim se coze o pão.

Todo lar hebreu provavelmente tinha um portátil forno de jarra, do tipo ainda usado na Palestina. Era uma grande jarra de barro, de uns 90 cm de altura, com uma abertura no alto e bojuda embaixo. Para aquecê-lo, queimava-se dentro dela um combustível, tal como lenha ou capim, removendo-se as cinzas por uma abertura provida para este fim. Fechava-se o topo, e, quando a jarra já estava bastante quente, colocava-se a massa em volta dela por dentro ou por fora. O pão cozido assim era pouco espesso.

Os arqueólogos desenterraram um grande número de fornos de cova. Eram evidentemente desenvolvimentos posteriores do forno de jarra. Este tipo, parcialmente dentro do chão e parcialmente acima dele, era feito de argila e todo rebocado. Afunilava-se no topo, e o combustível era queimado dentro dele. Monumentos e pinturas mostram que os egípcios colocavam a massa sobre estes fornos. Os hebreus que empregavam este tipo talvez usassem raminhos ou capim secos. (Veja Mt 6:30.) Neste forno podia-se também assar carne.

É de interesse notar que os fornos agora usados pelos camponeses na Palestina diferem pouco daqueles encontrados em ruínas antigas ou dos retratados em relevos e pinturas assírios e egípcios. Na antiga Caldeia, os fornos ficavam nos pátios dos lares, e hoje podem ser encontrados em pequenas casas de forno no pátio das moradias particulares, embora talvez haja também fornos agrupados em alguma parte da aldeia. Ainda se usam grandes fornos públicos.

Fornos domésticos eram comuns entre os israelitas e os egípcios na terra do Egito. Assim, na segunda praga, as rãs subiram até mesmo nos fornos e nas amassadeiras deles. — Êx 8:3.

"A Torre dos Fornos", em Jerusalém, foi reparada sob a direção de Neemias, durante a restauração das muralhas da cidade. (Ne 3:11; 12:38) A origem deste nome é incerta, mas foi sugerido que a torre foi chamada assim porque padeiros comerciais tinham seus fornos na vizinhança dela.

Uso Ilustrativo. O forno é usado na expressão que denota uma escassez, em Levítico 26:26, que reza: "Quando eu [Jeová] vos tiver quebrado os varais em que se penduram os pães de forma anular, então é que dez mulheres cozerão vosso pão em apenas um forno e darão vosso pão de volta pelo peso; e tereis de comer, mas não vos fartareis." Em condições normais, toda mulher precisaria de um forno para a sua tarefa diária de cozer. No entanto, Levítico 26:26 apontava para um tempo em que haveria tão pouco alimento disponível, que um só forno bastaria para cuidar de toda a cozedura feita por dez mulheres. E Oseias 7:4-7 compara os israelitas adúlteros a um forno de padeiro, aparentemente, por causa dos desejos iníquos que ardiam dentro deles.

FORNO DE CALCINAÇÃO. Câmara de aquecimento projetada para o processamento de diversos materiais. Os fornos de calcinação dos tempos antigos eram usados para cozer tijolos e cerâmica, e para processar cal. Dessemelhante do sentido moderno do termo "forno de calcinação", a palavra hebraica kiv·shán não abrange estruturas classificadas como fornos. — Veja FORNO.

Em vista do progresso feito em tempos pré-diluvianos no forjamento de implementos de cobre e de ferro (Gên 4:22), é provável que fornos de calcinação tenham sido desenvolvidos já cedo na história do homem. Embora não sejam mencionados diretamente, há evidência do seu uso nos dias de Ninrode. Quando estava prestes a construir a cidade de Babel e sua torre, na terra de Sinear, o povo pós-diluviano disse: "Vamos! Façamos tijolos e cozamo-los por um processo de queima." (Gên 11:3) Antigas ruínas babilônicas revelam o uso de tijolos cozidos em fornos de calcinação desde tempos antigos. Esses tijolos duráveis eram usados nas construções mais importantes para paredes revestidas e para áreas pavimentadas. Algumas casas escavadas em Ur (antiga residência de Abraão), tinham o nível inferior construído com tijolos queimados, ao passo que o segundo pavimento evidentemente era de adobe. Esses tijolos secados ao sol, embora não tão duráveis como os queimados em fornos de calcinação, eram baratos, fáceis de fabricar e satisfatórios em climas secos. — Veja TIJOLO.

Os fornos egípcios para cerâmica eram como chaminés cônicas, com um defletor perfurado entre o buraco do fogo embaixo e a câmara de cozimento em cima. Nesta câmara se colocava a cerâmica antes da ignição do combustível. O aquecimento correto do forno era segredo comercial dos oleiros egípcios, e exigia perícia para conseguir as qualidades desejadas nos produtos acabados. A corrente criada pelo ar que ascendia da lareira passando pelo fumeiro puxava o fogo através das perfurações do defletor e permitia que circulasse em torno da cerâmica antes de sair pelo alto da chaminé.

Em preparação para o sexto golpe contra o Egito e seu orgulhoso Faraó, Jeová ordenou a Moisés e Arão: "Tomai para vós ambas as mãos cheias de cinza dum forno de calcinação, e Moisés tem de atirá-la para os céus, à vista de Faraó." Seguindo estas instruções, "tomaram a cinza dum forno de calcinação e se postaram diante de Faraó, e Moisés atirou-a para os céus, e ela se tornou em furúnculos com bolhas, rebentando em homem e animal". — Êx 9:8-10.

Fornos de calcinação, ou fornalhas, palestinos, descobertos em Megido, de uns 2,5 por 3 m, têm forma de U. Neste tipo, a lareira se encontra na curva da câmara. Evidentemente, a corrente de ar que entrava por baixo da porta da lareira impelia as chamas através das duas câmaras de cozimento e pelos dois fumeiros situados no fundo do forno.

Caieiras. Na antiga Palestina usavam-se caieiras, ou fornos de cal, por causa da abundância de calcário. Mais recentemente, naquela terra, construíram-se tais fornos de calcinação em encostas de colinas, constituindo a colina parte da parede dos fundos. Essas caieiras eram construídas com pedras rústicas, sem argamassa, enchendo-se o espaço entre elas com barro, mas deixando-se um grande fumeiro aberto no alto. Depois de se encher corretamente o interior com pedras calcárias trituradas, fazia-se com gravetos um fogo quente na lareira à base do forno. A forte corrente de ar que entrava por um túnel na base da caieira levava as chamas para cima, através do calcário, aquecendo-o até ele se transformar em cal. Este processo, normalmente, durava vários dias. — Veja CAL.

A primeira referência bíblica direta a um forno de calcinação ocorre em Gênesis 19:28. Usa-se ali a fumaça grossa e preta dum forno de calcinação para descrever a cena que Abraão viu quando olhou para baixo, para as cidades de Sodoma e Gomorra em chamas, e todo o Distrito, e observou que "subia fumaça grossa da terra, como a fumaça grossa dum forno de calcinação".

Quando os israelitas se reuniram ao sopé do monte Sinai para 'o encontro com o verdadeiro Deus', o espetáculo espantoso perante os seus olhos incluía o monte Sinai fumegar em toda a volta, "devido ao fato de Jeová ter descido sobre ele em fogo; e sua fumaça ascendia como a fumaça dum forno de calcinação e todo o monte tremia muitíssimo". — Êx 19:17, 18.

A maneira de 2 Samuel 12:31 ser traduzido na versão Almeida, edição revista e corrigida, faz parecer que Davi obrigou os amonitas cativos a "passar por forno de tijolos", mas o sentido do texto hebraico, pela correção de uma só letra, parece ser o de que ele "fez que servissem na fabricação de tijolos". — NM; BLH; CBC.

FORTIFICAÇÕES. O termo hebraico para "fortificação" tem o sentido básico de uma praça inexpugnável, inacessível. (Veja Za 11:2 n.) As fortificações duma cidade eram caras e difíceis, e exigiam uma adequada força de defesa, de modo que nem todas as cidades eram fortificadas. As cidades maiores usualmente eram muradas; as localidades menores na mesma região, conhecidas como aldeias dependentes, não tinham muros. (Jos 15:45, 47; 17:11) Os habitantes destas localidades podiam fugir para a cidade murada no caso da invasão por um inimigo. As cidades fortificadas serviam assim de refúgio para o povo daquela região. As cidades também eram fortificadas quando se encontravam num ponto estratégico, para proteger estradas, fontes de água, rotas para bases de suprimentos e linhas de comunicação.

A força e a altura das fortificações de muitas cidades na Terra da Promessa eram tais, que os espias infiéis, enviados por Moisés para espiar Canaã, relataram que "as cidades fortificadas são muito grandes" e "fortificadas até os céus". Do seu ponto de vista sem fé, as cidades pareciam inexpugnáveis. — Núm 13:28; De 1:28.

As cidades nas terras bíblicas, em geral, abrangiam uma área de apenas poucos hectares. Algumas, porém, eram bem maiores. As capitais do Egito, da Assíria, da Babilônia, da Pérsia e de Roma eram excepcionalmente grandes. Babilônia era uma das mais bem defendidas cidades dos tempos bíblicos. Ela não só tinha muralhas extraordinariamente fortes, mas estava situada junto a um rio que constituía um excelente fosso defensivo, bem como um suprimento de água. Babilônia achava que podia reter seus cativos para sempre. (Is 14:16, 17) Mas a cidade foi tomada numa só noite pela estratégia de Ciro, o persa, que desviou o Eufrates, para que as forças dele pudessem entrar na cidade através dos portões na muralha ao longo do cais. — Da 5:30.

Três fatores essenciais eram necessários para uma cidade fortificada: (1) muralhas para atuar como barreira para o inimigo, (2) armas com que as forças defensoras pudessem retaliar para repelir os atacantes, e (3) um adequado suprimento de água. Alimentos podiam ser estocados em tempos de paz; mas um suprimento constante e acessível de água era essencial para que a cidade pudesse suportar um sítio prolongado.

Fossos e Escarpas. Algumas cidades eram cercadas por um fosso cheio de água, especialmente quando havia por perto um rio ou lago. Babilônia, junto ao Eufrates, era um exemplo notável, assim como também Nô-Amom (Tebas) junto aos canais do Nilo. (Na 3:8) Onde não havia por perto nenhum corpo de água, frequentemente se construía um fosso seco. Jerusalém foi reconstruída com fosso. — Da 9:25.

Erguendo-se ao lado do fosso havia uma "escarpa", construída com terra retirada na escavação do fosso. (2Sa 20:15) Esta escarpa, às vezes, era revestida com pedras e formava uma ladeira, ou inclinação, elevando-se até a muralha construída no alto da escarpa. O fosso descoberto pelos arqueólogos nas defesas ocidentais da cidade de Hazor tinha 80 m de largura no alto, 40 metros de largura no fundo, e uma profundidade de cerca de 15 m. A escarpa que se erguia do fosso tinha mais 15 m de altura. Isto fazia com que a escarpa tivesse quase 30 m de altura, medidos desde o fundo do fosso. Por cima dela havia a muralha da cidade. — Veja Sal 122:7.

Naturalmente, era muito difícil subir esta escarpa, especialmente com aríetes, motivo pelo qual os atacantes construíam uma rampa, ou um "aterro de sítio", pelo qual os aríetes eram locomovidos. (2Sa 20:15; veja ARÍETE.) O fosso era tão largo, que diminuía em muito o potencial de fogo dos arqueiros do exército atacante, e atirar desde o fundo do fosso pouco adiantava. Por outro lado, os construtores de rampas para os seus aríetes estavam sob constante fogo desde as muralhas da cidade, sujeitos a chuvas de flechas, pedras e às vezes tições incendiários. Naturalmente, nem todas as cidades tinham fossos ou escarpas alcantiladas, sendo que algumas delas baseavam sua defesa inteiramente em muralhas verticais.

As Muralhas. Depois do fosso e da escarpa, a muralha era a próxima particularidade das defesas. Algumas muralhas e torres ofereciam posições fortificadas aos soldados, e recintos para armazenagem, bem como escadas no alto. A muralha era de pedras grandes, tijolos e terra. Algumas das pedras eram enormes. As mais antigas muralhas eram na maior parte de pedra sem argamassa. Mais tarde, frequentemente se usava argamassa entre as pedras. A argamassa era feita pisoteando o barro e misturando-o com água, como na fabricação de tijolos. De outro modo, ela racharia e enfraqueceria a muralha defensiva. — Veja Ez 13:9-16; Na 3:14.

O sistema de muralhas muitas vezes consistia numa alta muralha interna e uma muralha externa mais baixa. Às vezes se construía um fosso seco entre estas muralhas. Ao longo da muralha externa havia bastiões, redondos ou quadrados. Estes tinham ameias, para que os arqueiros pudessem atirar por elas e ao mesmo tempo ter alguma proteção contra as flechas e os fundibulários do inimigo. Os bastiões sobressaíam à muralha, para que os arqueiros não só pudessem dominar a área na frente deles, mas também atirar para a direita e para a esquerda nos flancos das forças inimigas que talvez tentassem escalar ou brechar a muralha.

A muralha interna era mais forte e mais grossa. Depois da invenção dos aríetes pesados, especialmente os usados pelos assírios, construíram-se muralhas muito mais fortes e grossas para resistir às devastações deste instrumento. Encontrou-se uma muralha de pedra em Tell en-Nasbeh (Mispá?), cuja largura média era de 4 m, e calcula-se que ela tinha 12 m de altura. O alto da muralha tinha ameias, assim como quase todas as muralhas de cidades.

Torres e Portões. Construíam-se torres nas muralhas internas (em adição aos bastiões ou torres nas muralhas externas). Elas eram mais altas do que a muralha, sobrelevando-se à muralha às vezes até em 3 m. Estavam equipadas com ameias no alto e às vezes com aberturas abaixo das ameias, para a conveniência dos arqueiros e dos lançadores de pedras. Sobressaírem as torres à muralha e nunca estarem mais afastadas uma da outra do que dois tiros de flecha, mas usualmente estando mais perto umas das outras, habilitava os defensores ter sob domínio toda a área ao longo da muralha. Também, uma sacada no alto da torre tinha aberturas no chão, para que os tiros dos arqueiros, as pedras e tições incendiários pudessem ser dirigidos diretamente para baixo sobre os invasores ali. Estas torres são muitas vezes mencionadas nas Escrituras. (Ne 3:1; Je 31:38; Za 14:10) As torres serviam também de postos para vigias, os quais podiam ver à distância a aproximação do inimigo. — Is 21:8, 9.

A cidadela costumava ser construída no ponto mais alto duma cidade. Tinha uma torre fortificada e suas próprias muralhas, menos maciças do que as muralhas em torno da cidade. A cidadela era o último baluarte de refúgio e resistência. Quando os soldados do inimigo brechavam as muralhas da cidade, eles tinham de lutar pelas ruas da cidade para chegar à torre. Em Tebes havia uma torre assim, que Abimeleque atacou depois de capturar a cidade, e da qual uma mulher lhe quebrou o crânio por jogar-lhe na cabeça uma mó superior. — Jz 9:50-54.

Além dessas torres de cidade, construíam-se outras torres (hebr.: migh·dál; plural: migh·da·lím) em lugares isolados. Estas eram construídas como "postos policiais", para proteger poços ou outras fontes de água, estradas, fronteiras, linhas de comunicação ou de suprimentos. O Rei Uzias, de Judá, é famoso por ter construído torres em Jerusalém, bem como no ermo; pelo visto, estas foram erigidas para proteger as cisternas que ele construiu para dar de beber ao seu gado. (2Cr 26:9, 10) Diversas destas torres foram encontradas no Negebe.

As partes mais fracas das defesas duma cidade eram seus portões; portanto, os portões eram os pontos mais ferozmente defendidos das muralhas. Só se construíam portões suficientes para a entrada e a saída dos habitantes da cidade em tempos de paz. Os portões eram feitos de madeira ou de madeira e metal, sendo às vezes revestidos de metal para resistir ao fogo. Nas escavações arqueológicas, frequentemente se encontram portões chamuscados, indicando que se usara fogo na tentativa de queimá-los. — Veja PORTA, PORTÃO.

Alguns dos reis de Judá, famosos pela sua construção de fortificações, eram Salomão, que construiu "cidades fortificadas com muralhas, portas e tranca"; Asa, que erigiu cidades com "muralhas ao redor, bem como torres, portas duplas e trancas"; e Uzias, que construiu "torres no ermo" e "máquinas de guerra" em Jerusalém. — 2Cr 8:3-5; 14:2, 6, 7; 26:9-15.

Fortificações do Exército Sitiante. Ocasionalmente, o exército sitiante construía fortificações próprias em torno do seu acampamento. Isto protegia o acampamento contra incursões dos sitiados ou contra ataques de aliados externos da cidade. Estes acampamentos fortificados talvez fossem circulares ou ovais, e cercados por uma muralha, a qual frequentemente tinha ameias e torres ameadas. Para fazer estas fortificações, eles cortavam árvores, às vezes num raio de quilômetros ao redor da cidade. A lei de Jeová ordenava aos israelitas não cortarem árvores frutíferas para este fim. — De 20:19, 20.

Fortificações de Estacas Pontiagudas. Ao predizer a destruição de Jerusalém, Jesus Cristo indicou que os inimigos dela construiriam ao seu redor "uma fortificação de estacas pontiagudas", ou uma "paliçada". (Lu 19:43, Int) O historiador Josefo confirma o cumprimento exato desta profecia. Tito argumentou a favor da construção duma fortificação para impedir que os judeus saíssem da cidade, para forçá-los a render-se, ou, se isso não acontecesse, para tornar mais fácil tomar a cidade por causa da resultante fome. Seus argumentos prevaleceram, e o exército foi organizado para empreender este projeto. As legiões e as divisões inferiores do exército competiam entre si para terminar a tarefa; individualmente, os homens se sentiam incentivados pelo desejo de agradar aos seus superiores. Com o fim de providenciar os materiais para a construção desta fortificação, a zona rural em torno de Jerusalém foi despojada de árvores num raio de uns 16 km. O que é de espantar é que, segundo Josefo, a fortificação de mais de 7 km de extensão foi completada em apenas três dias, um empreendimento que normalmente levaria alguns meses. Fora do muro desta fortificação, construíram-se 13 lugares para guarnições, e a circunferência total deles era de cerca de 2 km. — The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), V, 491-511; 523 (xii, 1, 2, 4).

Descobertas Arqueológicas. Levando avante as operações de construção de seu pai Davi, o Rei Salomão se destacou pelas suas obras de construção. Além de edificar o magnífico templo de Jeová em Jerusalém, ele reforçou as muralhas de Jerusalém e construiu extensas fortificações em Hazor, Megido e Gezer. Os arqueólogos se guiaram na sua escavação destas fortificações pela declaração da Bíblia em 1 Reis 9:15: "Ora, este é o relato sobre os recrutados para trabalho forçado, que o Rei Salomão recrutou para construir a casa de Jeová, e a sua própria casa, e o Aterro, e a muralha de Jerusalém, e Hazor, e Megido, e Gezer." Verificaram que os portões destas três cidades mencionadas por último foram todos construídos segundo um único plano, cada um tendo a largura de 17 m, com uma entrada flanqueada em ambos os lados por torres quadradas e que dava para um vestíbulo de 20 m de comprimento, com três câmaras em cada lado. Eram de certo modo similares à descrição dos portões do templo da visão de Ezequiel. — Ez 40:5-16.

Logo acima das muralhas construídas por Salomão, em Megido e em Hazor, outras muralhas foram construídas, possivelmente por Acabe. Estas eram de construção mais grossa e mais forte, sem dúvida por causa dos aríetes pesados dos assírios, em uso naquele período posterior.

O manancial de água de Megido era uma fonte numa caverna natural ao sopé ocidental da elevação em que a cidade foi construída. Para levar a água à cidade, perfuraram um poço vertical de 30 m de fundura, dos quais 22 m através de rocha sólida; isto os levou ao nível da fonte. Deste nível, perfuraram um túnel horizontal com uma leve ascensão, por uns 67 m, até a fonte. A leve inclinação desde a fonte até o fundo do poço escavado permitia que a água fluísse para dentro da cidade pela força da gravidade. A fonte era fechada por fora por uma parede grossa.

Perícia ainda maior de engenharia foi necessária quando Ezequias fechou o curso de água fluindo de Giom e cortou um canal de uns 533 m para levar água a Jerusalém, habilitando assim a cidade a resistir a um longo sítio. — 2Cr 32:30.

Frequentemente, construíam-se dentro da cidade cisternas, tanto públicas como individuais, para suprir a cidade de água em tempos de sítio. No monumento (que se encontra agora no Louvre de Paris) erigido em Díbon, em Moabe, por Mesa, o rei de Moabe, encontramos a seguinte inscrição: "Construí também seus portões, e construí suas torres, e construí a casa do rei, e fiz ambos os seus reservatórios de água dentro da cidade. E não havia nenhuma cisterna dentro da cidade, mesmo na acrópole, de modo que eu disse a todo o povo: 'Faça cada um de vós uma cisterna para si mesmo na sua casa.'"

Usos Simbólicos. Visto que as torres no ermo eram os lugares mais seguros de refúgio num raio de quilômetros ao redor, podemos ver quão apropriado é Provérbios 18:10: "O nome de Jeová é uma torre forte. O justo corre para dentro dela e recebe proteção." As expressões do Salmo 48 também são significativas: "Nas . . . torres de habitação [de Sião], o próprio Deus ficou conhecido como altura protetora. Marchai ao redor de Sião e rodeai-a, contai suas torres. Fixai os vossos corações na sua escarpa. Inspecionai suas torres de habitação, a fim de que o passais narrar à geração futura." (Compare isso com He 12:22.) Isto seria especialmente significativo para os judeus que olhariam para cima, para o grande baluarte de Jerusalém, a qual, com suas poderosas muralhas defensivas, estava situada numa elevação maior do que quase qualquer outra grande capital da história humana. Por meio do profeta Zacarias, Jeová chama a si mesmo de "muralha de fogo ao redor" de Jerusalém. Isto dá ao seu povo uma animadora garantia de que, embora muralhas de pedra possam ser derrubadas, o próprio Jeová é realmente a defesa dos seus servos. — Sal 48:3, 11-13; Za 2:4, 5.

FORTUNATO [do lat.: Afortunado; Próspero]. Um dos membros maduros da congregação em Corinto, o qual, junto com Estéfanas e Acaico, visitaram Paulo em Éfeso. (1Co 16:8, 17, 18) Talvez fosse destes homens que Paulo soube das condições perturbadoras sobre as quais escreveu, e eles possivelmente foram os que entregaram a primeira carta canônica de Paulo aos coríntios. — 1Co 1:11; 5:1; 11:18.

FRATERNIDADE. Veja ASSOCIAÇÃO.

FRAUDE. Uso intencional de engano, embuste ou deturpação da verdade, com o fim de induzir outro a ceder alguma coisa valiosa que lhe pertence ou a desistir dum direito legal. O termo hebraico traduzido "defraudar" ('a·sháq; Le 6:2) tem o sentido básico de usar mal a força, o poder ou a autoridade que se tem em prejuízo de outros. Assim, é também traduzido 'oprimir'. (Ec 4:1; Is 52:4) O verbo grego a·po·ste·ré·o significa "privar; defraudar; espoliar". (1Co 7:5; Mr 10:19; 1Ti 6:5) O substantivo grego é dó·los ("fraude"; Mr 7:22; At 13:10).

A fraude, conforme considerada na Bíblia, em geral é associada com relações comerciais. Transações comerciais desonestas são proibidas pela lei de Deus. Os israelitas deviam transacionar honestamente uns com os outros. O trabalhador contratado era especificamente protegido pela Lei. (Le 19:13; De 24:14; compare isso com Tg 5:4.) Jesus Cristo incluiu a injunção contra a fraude entre os "mandamentos" de Deus. (Mr 10:19) Sob o pacto da Lei, quando um homem defraudou seu colega, e mais tarde se arrependeu e trouxe o caso à tona, confessando-o, exigia-se que devolvesse o pleno montante mais um quinto adicional à pessoa prejudicada, bem como que oferecesse uma oferta pela culpa a Jeová. — Le 6:1-7.

Formas falsas de religião são igualmente consideradas fraudulentas pelas Escrituras. A forte denúncia de Elimas, o feiticeiro, por Paulo, resultou em Elimas ser atacado de cegueira, por causa da fraude e da vilania que ele praticava por "torcer os caminhos direitos de Jeová". (At 13:8-11) Paulo corrigiu também em Corinto os cristãos que levavam um ao outro perante tribunais, declarando que eles estavam prejudicando e defraudando seus irmãos por recorrerem a tribunais perante homens injustos e não perante os santos na congregação. Deviam antes deixar-se defraudar do que levar estes assuntos perante homens do mundo. — 1Co 6:1-8.

A Bíblia frequentemente adverte contra fraudes e práticas fraudulentas, e as denuncia, salientando também que Deus julgará os defraudadores e livrará seu povo de tais. — Sal 62:10; 72:4; 103:6; Pr 14:31; 22:16; 28:16; Miq 2:1, 2; Mal 3:5.

FREIO. Parte do aparelho com que o cavalo é governado e domado, composto do cabresto, do freio e das rédeas, havendo frequentemente ainda outros apetrechos. No hebraico é mé·thegh (2Rs 19:28) e ré·sen (Jó 30:11), sendo em grego kha·li·nós. — Tg 3:3.

"Freio", em geral, é usado na Bíblia em sentido figurado ou como ilustração. O salmista diz: "Não vos façais iguais ao cavalo e ao mulo sem entendimento, cuja fogosidade é preciso reprimir por meio de freio ou cabresto, antes de se chegarem a ti." (Sal 32:9) Os homens não deviam ser como os animais irracionais, incapazes de se dirigir corretamente. Todavia, assim como os animais irracionais requerem correção por meio de chicote e de freio, a vara é útil para ser usada numa pessoa estúpida. — Pr 26:3.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse), "a videira da terra" é lançada num lagar e pisada cabalmente pelas patas ferradas de cavalos, chegando o sangue "até à altura dos freios dos cavalos, a uma distância de mil e seiscentos estádios [296 km]". (Re 14:18-20) Uma profundidade tão grande de sangue abrangendo tal distância representa o alcance tremendo da destruição causada pelos anjos e reflete o fato de que o lagar é bastante grande para apanhar todos e não permitir que nenhum daqueles que constituem a simbólica "videira da terra" escape na época da plenitude da sua culpa.

Jeová disse ao Rei Senaqueribe da Assíria: "Hei de pôr meu gancho no teu nariz e meu freio entre os teus lábios, e deveras te conduzirei de volta pelo caminho por onde vieste." (2Rs 19:28; Is 37:29) Senaqueribe, não voluntariamente, mas pela mão de Jeová, foi obrigado a abandonar o sítio de Jerusalém e retornar a Nínive, onde mais tarde foi assassinado por seus próprios filhos. (2Rs 19:32-37; Is 37:33-38) Pôr Jeová um freio entre as mandíbulas de povos inimigos indica virem eles sob o tipo de controle completo obtido sobre animais por meio dum freio. — Is 30:28.

Jó, lamentando a sua condição lastimável de doença e de zombaria, diz a respeito dos seus perseguidores: "Por minha causa deixaram solto o freio." (Jó 30:11) Os inimigos de Jó avançaram a plena velocidade, desenfreados, em total desrespeito e sem constrangimento, dando vazão à sua hostilidade a ele.

Tiago, meio-irmão de Jesus, dá conselho sobre o uso correto da língua, comparando o controle dela a um freio. Quando alguém tem autodomínio por aplicar princípios bíblicos, e assim consegue controlar a sua língua, ele pode controlar todo o seu corpo. (Tg 3:2, 3) Pôr um freio à própria língua é necessário para aquele que professa ser adorador de Deus, senão a sua forma de adoração será fútil. — Tg 1:26.

FREIXO. Nome duma árvore (hebr.: tidh·hár) que ocorre duas vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas, em Isaías 41:19 e 60:13. No primeiro texto, é incluído entre árvores tais como o junípero e o cipreste, que hão de florescer na planície desértica sob as preditas condições paradísicas, e no último texto é incluído entre as mesmas árvores como parte da "glória do Líbano". A identificação desta árvore é conjectural, mas há evidência que favorece o freixo. — Veja Theologische Literaturzeitung (Jornal Literário Teológico), Leipzig, 1926, p. 216.

Duas variedades de freixo, Fraxinus ornus e Fraxinus oxycarpa, são encontradas ao longo dos rios e correntes nos montes do Líbano e na extremidade superior da Palestina, embora não na Palestina em geral. Esta árvore se habilita a ser parte da "glória do Líbano", porque é uma árvore grande, que atinge 15 m de altura. Tem uma folhagem verde-clara e raminhos acinzentados. Embora botanicamente seja da mesma família da oliveira, o freixo difere da oliveira por perder suas folhas no outono.

FRÍGIA. País ou região no centro da Ásia Menor. As fronteiras geográficas da Frígia flutuavam grandemente no decorrer dos anos, de modo que é difícil definir a região abrangida, a menos que se refira a um período específico. No primeiro século, a “Frígia” era uma região interiorana das províncias romanas da Galácia e da Ásia, abrangendo o planalto ao N da cordilheira do Tauro, desde o rio Hális, no L, até os vales superiores dos rios Hermo e Meandro ao O. O apóstolo Paulo percorreu partes da Frígia pelo menos em duas das suas viagens. — At 16:6; 18:23; 19:1.

Acredita-se comumente que os frígios migraram da Trácia perto do fim do segundo milênio AEC e obtiveram o controle de grande parte da Ásia Menor central e ocidental, ao N dos montes Tauro, desde o rio Hális até o mar Egeu. A evidência arqueológica indica que sua capital era Górdio e que o Rei Midas foi um dos seus governantes de destaque. Um aspecto digno de nota da religião do povo da primitiva Frígia era a adoração de uma deusa-mãe (Reia Cibele).

A parte ocidental da Frígia passou para o controle dos reis atálidas de Pérgamo. Este reino tornou-se a província romana da Ásia, mas a parte SE frequentemente é chamada de Frígia Asiática. (Veja Ásia.) O rei da Galácia governava a parte mais oriental da Frígia, e esta veio a constituir uma parte da província romana da Galácia. Esta parte oriental às vezes é chamada de Frígia Gálata; encontrava-se ao N da Pisídia e ao NO da Licaônia. Dependendo do ponto de vista do escritor e do período envolvido, Antioquia e Icônio poderiam ser chamadas de cidades frígias, embora muitas vezes se relacione Antioquia com a Pisídia, e Icônio com a Licaônia. — At 13:14; veja Antioquia N.º 2; Icônio.

A população da Frígia incluía muitos judeus, tendo sido a presença deles incentivada pelos governantes selêucidas da Síria. De acordo com Josefo, Antíoco III (238-187 AEC) trasladou “duas mil famílias judias, com seus bens móveis, da Mesopotâmia e da Babilônia” para a Lídia e a Frígia, a fim de estabilizar as condições entre o povo sedicioso ali. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XII, 149 [iii, 4]) E, evidentemente, sob os romanos, os judeus continuaram a ser numerosos na Ásia Menor. Em Pentecostes de 33 EC, havia em Jerusalém judeus do “distrito da Ásia, e Frígia, e Panfília”. — At 2:9, 10.

Na sua segunda viagem missionária, Paulo e seus companheiros, passando para o NO através da Cilícia e da Licaônia, “passaram pela Frígia e pelo país da Galácia, porque estavam proibidos pelo espírito santo de falar a palavra dentro do distrito da Ásia”. (At 15:41; 16:1-6) De modo que entraram na parte oriental da Frígia antiga (que no tempo de Paulo era a Frígia Gálata), mas, em vez de continuarem para o O, através da província da Ásia (contendo a Frígia Asiática), foram para o N, em direção à província da Bitínia e depois para o O, para Trôade.

A terceira viagem de Paulo levou-o através da Frígia Gálata e da Frígia Asiática. Ele partiu de Antioquia na Pisídia e “foi de lugar em lugar através do país da Galácia e da Frígia”. (At 18:23) O relato diz também que ele “passava pelas regiões interiores e desceu a Éfeso”, na costa do Egeu. (At 19:1) Parece que não tomou a estrada principal para Éfeso, descendo o vale do rio Lico e passando pelas cidades frígias de Laodiceia, Colossos e Hierápolis (Col 2:1; 4:13), mas, em vez disso, seguiu uma rota mais direta um pouco ao N. — Veja Colossos.

FRONTAL. Faixa usada na testa.

Embora se mandasse aos israelitas que ‘atassem a lei de Deus em sua mão como sinal’ e que a tivessem como ‘frontal entre os seus olhos’, isto, evidentemente, não se referia ao porte literal de textos das Escrituras. (De 6:6-8; 11:18) Na verdade, foram instruídos a usar uma franja literal nas suas vestes como lembrete dos mandamentos de Deus. (Núm 15:38-40) No entanto, a evidência de que o “sinal” e o “frontal” deviam ser figurativos pode ser visto nas instruções de Deus aos israelitas a respeito da comemoração da sua libertação por Ele. Esta comemoração também devia servir “de sinal na tua mão e de recordação entre os teus olhos”, e “de frontal entre os teus olhos”. — Êx 13:9, 14-16.

Em que sentido deviam os israelitas ter a lei de Deus como frontal entre os olhos?

Parece que Jeová queria dizer que a Lei devia ser mantida tão nitidamente em vista e tão cuidadosamente acatada como se estivesse escrita numa tabuinha entre os olhos deles, e como se fosse um sinal nas suas mãos, de modo que, aonde quer que olhassem e o que quer que fizessem, não deixariam de ter a Lei diante de si. Todavia, os judeus, algum tempo depois do seu retorno de Babilônia, desenvolveram uma religião formalística baseada em tradições de homens (Mt 15:3, 9), na qual deram a esta lei uma aplicação literal. Usavam tiras de pergaminho, nas quais se escreviam quatro passagens das Escrituras, a saber, Êxodo 13:1-10, 11-16; Deuteronômio 6:4-9; 11:13-21. Pelo menos em tempos posteriores, o pergaminho era enrolado em pequenas caixinhas de couro de bezerro e preso à testa e ao braço esquerdo. Os varões judeus usavam-nas durante a oração matinal, exceto em dias festivos e no sábado.

Jesus Cristo condenou a hipocrisia dos escribas e dos fariseus, os quais, a fim de impressionar outros com a sua justiça, ampliavam as caixinhas com textos que usavam como proteção. (Mt 23:2, 5) A palavra grega fy·la·kté·ri·on, “filactério”, que se aplica a tais caixinhas com textos, significa primariamente um posto avançado, uma fortificação ou uma proteção. Por isso, eram usadas como proteção, amuleto ou feitiço.

Todavia, a Bíblia aconselha que a coisa a resguardar não é uma aparência bela e pia, mas sim o coração. (Mt 23:27, 28; Pr 4:23) Ela destaca que aquilo que beneficia grandemente a pessoa não é o uso no corpo de textos bíblicos escritos, mas resguardar a sabedoria prática e o raciocínio, e adquirir compreensão. — Pr 3:21, 22; 4:7-9.

FRONTEIRA. Veja TERMO.

FUMAÇA. Mistura visível, fuliginosa, de partículas de carbono e de gases, resultante da queima de matérias orgânicas; também, vapor ou nuvem semelhante à fumaça. Além da menção de fumaça literal (hebr.: 'a·shán; gr.: ka·pnós), em numerosos casos, há diversos usos figurados da palavra, e há um significado figurado atribuído à aparência da própria fumaça.

A Presença de Jeová, e Sua Ira. Jeová manifestava a sua presença por uma nuvem de "fumaça", às vezes acompanhada por fogo. (Êx 19:18; 20:18; Is 4:5) Ele simbolizava assim a sua presença nos templos visionários observados pelo profeta Isaías e pelo apóstolo João. — Is 6:1-6; Re 15:8; veja NUVEM.

A fumaça também é associada com a ira ardente de Jeová. (De 29:20) Por outro lado, dizia-se que aqueles, em Israel, que se haviam desviado para a adoração de deuses falsos eram "fumaça" nas narinas de Deus, indicando que provocavam a grande ira dele. — Is 65:5.

Aviso ou Portento. Na guerra, usavam-se sinais de fumaça para transmitir mensagens entre cidades ou divisões de um exército. (Jz 20:38-40) Era também evidência de que algo estava sendo destruído por fogo, como, por exemplo, a fumaça que subia duma cidade distante. (Gên 19:28; Jos 8:20, 21) Ou podia metaforicamente referir-se a um exército em caminho para realizar uma destruição, o que muitas vezes incluía incendiar as cidades conquistadas. — Is 14:31.

Por conseguinte, uma coluna ou nuvem ascendente de fumaça passou a ser usada simbolicamente como sinal de aviso, portento de uma vindoura calamidade ou de destruição. (Re 9:2-4; compare isso com Jl 2:30, 31; At 2:19, 20; Re 9:17, 18.) O salmista diz a respeito dos iníquos: "Terão de chegar ao seu fim em fumaça." (Sal 37:20) A fumaça simbolizava também a evidência de destruição. (Re 18:9, 18) Fumaça que continua ascendendo "por tempo indefinido", portanto, evidentemente é uma expressão que indica aniquilamento total e eterno, como na profecia de Isaías contra Edom: "Sua fumaça continuará a ascender por tempo indefinido." (Is 34:5, 10) Edom, como nação, foi eliminada e continua desolado até hoje, e a evidência deste fato permanece no relato bíblico e nos registros da história secular. De modo similar, a destruição eterna de Babilônia, a Grande, é predita em Revelação (Apocalipse) 18:8, e um julgamento igual é feito contra aqueles que adoram "a fera" e sua imagem, em Revelação 14:9-11.

Outros Usos Ilustrativos. Do modo como a fumaça normalmente se dissipa e desaparece depressa, assim às vezes denota figurativamente aquilo que é transitório. É usada com referência a: inimigos de Deus (Sal 68:2), idólatras (Os 13:3) e a vida abreviada do atribulado (Sal 102:3).

"Como o vinagre para os dentes e como a fumaça para os olhos, assim é o preguiçoso para os que o enviam", diz o provérbio. Do modo como a fumaça faz com que os olhos ardam e doam, assim aquele que emprega um preguiçoso prejudica seus próprios objetivos. — Pr 10:26.

O salmista, esperando que Jeová o consolasse, disse: "Tornei-me como um odre na fumaça." (Sal 119:83) Odres, tais como os usados no Oriente Médio, pendurados na parede quando não em uso, ficavam ressequidos e enrugados por causa da fumaça na casa. Assim o salmista se tornara nas mãos daqueles que o perseguiam.

Jeová, ao descrever suas criações a Jó, traz à atenção o leviatã, dizendo: "Das suas narinas sai fumaça, igual a uma fornalha acesa com juncos." (Jó 41:20) Muitos peritos bíblicos creem que Deus se referiu aqui ao crocodilo, o qual, quando sai da água, exala um espesso vapor fumegante com som trovejante.

Fumaça Sacrificial. Outra palavra hebraica, qa·tár, tem referência a fazer fumaça sacrificial, quer de incenso, quer de outro sacrifício sobre o altar. (1Cr 6:49; Je 44:15) Esta fumaça sacrificial era encarada como cheiro agradável que ascendia para Aquele a quem era oferecida. — Gên 8:20, 21; Le 26:31; Ef 5:2.

FUNDA. Veja ARMAS, ARMADURA; FUNDIBULÁRIO.

FUNDIBULÁRIO. Alguém que lança projetis com uma funda. A funda era em geral uma correia relativamente curta, que era dobrada e girada com rapidez. Com ela se propelia com grande velocidade um míssil, tal como uma pedra, ao se soltar uma extremidade da correia.

Nos tempos primitivos, os fundibulários eram uma parte importante duma força militar. A tribo de Benjamim tinha 700 homens seletos, dos quais cada um "podia atirar com a funda pedras num cabelo, e não errava". (Jz 20:15, 16) Os Targuns dizem que os queretitas e os peletitas entre os guerreiros de Davi eram fundibulários hábeis. Os fundibulários eram uma parte importante da força militar do Rei Uzias. (2Cr 26:13, 14) Senaqueribe empregava um corpo de fundibulários no exército assírio, conforme atestado em monumentos. As forças combatentes dos egípcios, dos sírios, dos persas, dos sicilianos e de outros também tinham divisões similares. No exército romano, havia fundibulários na auxilia. Mesmo ainda no primeiro século EC, Josefo relata que fundibulários judeus usavam sua perícia contra as forças romanas. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XVII, 259 (x, 2); The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), II, 422, 423 (xvii, 5); IV, 14, 15 (i, 3).

Nos antigos exércitos, os fundibulários usualmente constituíam apenas uma divisão de soldados de infantaria. Os arqueiros, como complemento dos fundibulários, e um número menor de lanceiros, completavam a infantaria. Quando convocados para iniciar o combate ou para impedir o avanço do inimigo, os fundibulários avançavam da retaguarda da tropa através de corredores entre os soldados. Em outras ocasiões, atiravam da retaguarda, sobre a cabeça dos lanceiros. Os fundibulários eram combatentes especialmente eficazes no ataque a cidades muradas. Seus mísseis, lançados desde o chão, podiam atingir o inimigo nas muralhas ou atingir alvos dentro da cidade. (2Rs 3:25) Quando se desenvolveram máquinas de sítio e torres de ataque, os fundibulários se aproveitavam das posições elevadas das suas plataformas.

Uma vantagem do fundibulário sobre o espadachim ou lanceiro de armadura era sua eficácia à distância. Afirma-se que sua margem de eficácia chegava a 122 m com pedras, e até mais com bolinhas de chumbo.

O Uso da Funda por Davi. Exigia muito tempo e treinamento para se tornar fundibulário hábil e experiente. Rapazes pastores, que cuidavam dos rebanhos e os protegiam contra animais predadores, desenvolviam a necessária habilidade. O jovem pastor Davi sentiu-se muito melhor equipado com a sua funda do que com a pesada armadura de Saul. Mas, sem dúvida, não poderia ter enfrentado Golias sem fé em Jeová e sem a força Dele. O resultado da luta não dependia da superioridade de armas ou da habilidade, mas de Jeová, que apoiou Davi. Conforme Davi clamou para Golias: "Eu chego a ti com o nome de Jeová dos exércitos, . . . de quem escarneceste. . . . E toda esta congregação saberá que não é nem com espada nem com lança que Jeová salva, porque a Jeová pertence a batalha." Foi uma pedra da funda de Davi, sem dúvida guiada e dotada de força especial por Jeová, que penetrou na testa de Golias, abatendo-o, de modo que Davi pôde 'entregá-lo definitivamente à morte' com a própria espada de Golias. — 1Sa 17:38-51.

FURÚNCULO. Em geral, o furúnculo é uma inchação localizada e dolorosa da pele, não resultante duma ferida anterior, mas duma infecção causada por bactérias que invadem folículos pilosos ou glândulas sudoríparas ou sebáceas; em hebraico, shehhín. Começando com uma pequena inchação vermelha, o furúnculo por fim expele pus, e, subsequentemente, seu carnicão duro. Às vezes, surgem vários furúnculos na região afetada. O "carbúnculo" é mais perigoso do que o furúnculo, abrange uma região maior, às vezes produz dor mais intensa e pode vir acompanhado por sintomas tais como dor de cabeça, febre e prostração. Às vezes é fatal.

Na época do sexto golpe aplicado por Jeová ao Egito, os egípcios e seus animais foram atacados por dolorosos "furúnculos com bolhas". (Êx 9:8-11) Estes talvez fossem graves erupções na pele, cheias de pus, e tais pústulas com bolhas possivelmente abrangiam uma grande região. Todavia, a breve descrição bíblica torna impossível uma identificação definitiva com um específico padecimento da atualidade.

Os israelitas foram avisados de que as consequências da desobediência a Deus incluiriam ele atingi-los com "o furúnculo do Egito". Disse-se adicionalmente: "Jeová te golpeará com um furúnculo maligno [hebr.: bish·hhín ra'] em ambos os joelhos e em ambas as pernas, de que não poderás ser curado, desde a sola do teu pé até o alto da tua cabeça." — De 28:15, 27, 35.

A Lei indicava que um furúnculo curado poderia ser o lugar em que se desenvolveria uma erupção ou mancha leprosa. Em alguns casos, os sintomas eram tais, que a vítima era imediatamente declarada impura e leprosa; em outros, impunha-se uma quarentena de sete dias. Se depois se descobria que a condição não se espalhara, era identificada apenas como "inflamação do furúnculo", e o sacerdote declarava a pessoa limpa. — Le 13:18-23.

Satanás golpeou Jó "com um furúnculo maligno [hebr.: bish·hhín ra'], desde a sola de seu pé até o alto da sua cabeça". (Jó 2:7) Não há certeza da designação médica da doença de que Jó padecia. Jó, em agonia, raspava-se com um caco. (Jó 2:8) Sua carne ficou revestida de gusanos, sua pele formava crostas (Jó 7:5), seu hálito tornou-se nojento (Jó 19:17), ele ficou roído de dores, e sua pele ficou preta e caiu (Jó 30:17, 30).

O Rei Ezequias de Judá foi afligido por um furúnculo e ele "ficou doente até à morte". À sugestão de Isaías, aplicou-se ao furúnculo uma torta de figos secos, prensados, como cataplasma, após o que Ezequias aos poucos reviveu. (2Rs 20:1, 7; Is 38:1, 21) Não obstante, seu restabelecimento não se devia apenas a um processo natural de cura, mas à cura por Jeová. — 2Rs 20:5.

G

GAÃ. Filho de Naor, irmão de Abraão, com sua concubina Reumá. — Gên 22:23, 24.

GAAL [possivelmente: Abominável; Abominado]. Filho de Ebede que, junto com seus irmãos, foi a Siquém e granjeou a confiança dos proprietários de terras ali. (Jz 9:26) Estes proprietários de terras tinham anteriormente fortalecido a mão de Abimeleque para matar os filhos de Jerubaal (Gideão) e depois o tinham feito rei sobre eles. (Jz 9:1-6) Pelo visto, Abimeleque constituiu Zebul em príncipe residente de Siquém, ao passo que ele mesmo morava em Arumá. Com o tempo, desenvolveu-se um espírito mau entre Abimeleque e os proprietários de terras de Siquém. Assim, Gaal e seus irmãos incitaram então a cidade a revoltar-se contra Abimeleque. Quando Zebul soube disso, avisou imediatamente Abimeleque, com uma recomendação sobre como lidar com a situação que surgia. Gaal e os com ele foram derrotados na batalha resultante com o Rei Abimeleque e eles fugiram de volta para a cidade. Por fim, Zebul expulsou Gaal e seus irmãos de Siquém. — Jz 9:22-41.

GAAR. Chefe de uma família de netineus, sendo que alguns dos seus descendentes retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 47; Ne 7:49.

GAÁS [possivelmente: Abalo; Abalado]. Nome dum morro na região montanhosa de Efraim, ao S de Timnate-Heres (ou Timnate-Sera). (Jos 24:30; Jz 2:9) Os vales de torrente de Gaás, mencionados em 2 Samuel 23:30 e 1 Crônicas 11:32, evidentemente se referem a ravinas na vizinhança deste morro.

GABAI. Cabeça dum distrito jurisdicional benjamita, cujo nome aparece numa lista dos moradores de Jerusalém nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 11:3, 7, 8.

GABATÁ. Veja PAVIMENTO DE PEDRA.

GABRIEL [Um Vigoroso de Deus]. Único santo anjo, além de Miguel, mencionado por nome na Bíblia; único anjo materializado que deu seu nome. Gabriel apareceu duas vezes a Daniel: primeiro, perto do rio Ulai, "no terceiro ano do reinado de Belsazar", para explicar a visão de Daniel, do bode e do carneiro (Da 8:1, 15-26); e segundo, "no primeiro ano de Dario", o medo, para transmitir a profecia a respeito das "setenta semanas". (Da 9:1, 20-27) Gabriel levou ao sacerdote Zacarias as boas novas de que ele e sua idosa esposa Elisabete teriam um filho, João (o Batizador). (Lu 1:11-20) A Maria, moça virgem, noiva de José, Gabriel declarou: "Bom dia, altamente favorecida, Jeová está contigo." Disse-lhe então que ela daria à luz um filho, Jesus — ele "será chamado Filho do Altíssimo; e Jeová Deus lhe dará o trono de Davi, seu pai, . . . e não haverá fim do seu reino". — Lu 1:26-38.

Pelo registro bíblico, sabe-se que Gabriel é uma criatura angélica de alta categoria, em íntima associação com a corte celestial, um "que está a postos logo diante de Deus"; que ele era um "enviado" por

Deus para transmitir mensagens especiais a servos de Jeová aqui na terra (Lu 1:19, 26); e que sua forma pessoal visionada ou materializada era, no verdadeiro sentido do seu nome, "alguém da aparência de um varão vigoroso". — Da 8:15.

GADARENOS [De (Pertencentes a) Gadara]. Nome aplicado aos habitantes duma região onde Cristo Jesus expulsou demônios de dois homens. Segundo o que é reputado como a melhor evidência de manuscritos disponível, Mateus originalmente usou "país dos gadarenos", ao passo que Marcos e Lucas, relatando este acontecimento, empregaram "país dos gerasenos". — Mt 8:28; Mr 5:1; Lu 8:26.

Mostram-se ambos os países situados no "outro lado", isto é, a margem L do mar da Galileia. A designação "país dos gadarenos" possivelmente se aplicava ao distrito que se estendia da cidade de Gadara (a atual Umm Qeis), situada a uns 10 km ao SE do mar da Galileia. Moedas de Gadara frequentemente retratam um barco, sugerindo que seu território talvez se estendesse até o mar da Galileia, e, por isso, podia ter incluído pelo menos uma parte do "país dos gerasenos", ao L daquele corpo de água. Alguns relacionam o "país dos gerasenos" com a região em torno de Kursi, a cidade que Orígenes e Eusébio identificaram como Gergesa. Ela fica na costa L do mar da Galileia, a uns 20 km ao N de Gadara. Essa localização é a que se encaixa melhor com os detalhes geográficos do relato. Outros relacionam o "país dos gerasenos" com o grande distrito cujo centro era a cidade de Gerasa (Jarash), a uns 55 km ao SSE do mar da Galileia, e sugerem que se estendia para o L daquele lago e abrangia o "país dos gadarenos". De qualquer modo, o relato de Mateus de modo algum estaria em conflito com o de Marcos e com o de Lucas.

Perto duma cidade anônima, no país dos gadarenos, Jesus Cristo se encontrou com dois homens possessos de demônios, extraordinariamente ferozes. Estes moravam entre os túmulos, isto é, os túmulos escavados em rocha ou cavernas naturais usadas como tais. Jesus, ao expulsar os demônios, permitiu-lhes apossar-se duma grande manada de porcos, que subsequentemente se precipitou por um despenhadeiro e se afogou no mar da Galileia. Isto perturbou tanto os habitantes locais, que instaram com Jesus para que saísse daquela região. — Mt 8:28-34.

Ao passo que Mateus menciona dois homens, Marcos (5:2) e Lucas (8:27) centralizam a atenção apenas em um, sem dúvida porque o caso dele se destacava mais. Ele possivelmente era o mais violento e havia sofrido por mais tempo sob controle demoníaco do que o outro homem; no entanto, depois, talvez só ele quisesse acompanhar o Filho de Deus. Jesus não lho permitiu, orientando-o em vez disso a tornar conhecido o que Deus tinha feito em seu favor.

Isto difere das instruções costumeiras de Jesus, de não divulgar os seus milagres. Em vez de procurar publicidade ostentosa e fazer com que as pessoas chegassem a conclusões à base de relatos sensacionalistas, pelo visto, Jesus queria que os outros decidissem à base de evidência sólida que ele, de fato, era o Cristo. Isto cumpriu também as palavras proféticas faladas por meio de Isaías: "Não altercará, nem gritará, nem ouvirá alguém a sua voz nas ruas largas." (Mt 12:15-21; Is 42:1-4) No entanto, a exceção no caso do anterior endemoninhado era apropriada. Ele podia dar testemunho entre pessoas com as quais o Filho de Deus teria apenas contato limitado, especialmente visto que se pediu a Jesus que ele partisse. A presença do homem constituiria testemunho a respeito do poder de Jesus, de fazer o bem, neutralizando qualquer relato desfavorável que talvez fosse divulgado por causa da perda da manada de porcos. — Mr 5:1-20; Lu 8:26-39; veja PORCO.

GADE [Boa Sorte].

1. Filho de Jacó com a serva de Leia, Zilpa, a qual deu à luz também o irmão mais novo de Gade, Aser. Por ocasião do nascimento dele em Padã-Arã, por volta de 1770 AEC, Leia exclamou: "Com boa sorte!"; daí o nome Gade. (Gên 30:9-13; 35:26) Gade acompanhou seus irmãos em duas viagens ao Egito, para obter cereais de José. (Gên 42:3; 43:15) Tinha cerca de 42 anos de idade quando ele e sua família se mudaram para o Egito, junto com seu pai Jacó, em 1728 AEC. (Gên 46:6, 7, 16) Dezessete anos mais tarde, quando Jacó estava à morte, este abençoou seus 12 filhos, dizendo a respeito de Gade: "Quanto a Gade, uma guerrilha o acometerá, mas ele acometerá a retaguarda." — Gên 49:1, 2, 19.

2. Tribo descendente dos sete filhos varões de Gade. Os guerreiros desta tribo somaram 45.650 no segundo ano após o Êxodo do Egito. (Gên 46:16; Núm 1:1-3, 24, 25) Gade achava-se na divisão de três tribos junto com Rubem e Simeão. Seu acampamento ficava ao S do tabernáculo. (Núm 2:10-16) Em marcha, a divisão de Judá era a primeira, seguida pelos levitas das famílias de Gérson e de Merari, que carregavam o tabernáculo, e depois deles vinha a divisão de que Gade fazia parte. Eliasafe, filho de Deuel, era maioral do seu exército. (Núm 10:14-20) No fim da peregrinação pelo ermo, os combatentes de Gade eram apenas 40.500, um decréscimo de 5.150. — Núm 26:15-18.

Território. Os homens da tribo de Gade seguiram a ocupação dos seus antepassados como criadores de gado. (Gên 46:32) Por este motivo, solicitaram como seu quinhão de território a região pastoril ao L do Jordão. Moisés anuiu por designar este território a Gade, a Rubem e à metade da tribo de Manassés, que também tinham muito gado. Todavia, Moisés estipulou como condição que estas tribos ajudassem as outras em subjugar o território ao O do Jordão. Elas concordaram prontamente com isso, e depois de construir redis de pedra para o seu gado e cidades para os seus pequeninos, supriram sua quota de combatentes, a fim de cruzarem o Jordão para a conquista da terra. (Núm 32:1-36; Jos 4:12, 13) O território de Gade havia sido ocupado pelos amorreus, derrotados pelos israelitas sob a liderança de Moisés. — Núm 32:33; De 2:31-36; 3:8-20.

O país ocupado por Gade abrangia as baixadas ao longo da maior parte da margem oriental do rio Jordão, para o S quase até o Mar Morto, e para o N até perto do mar de Quinerete. O território de Gade abrangia também os planaltos mais elevados, inclusive o vale da torrente do Jaboque. Portanto, grande parte de Gileade estava no quinhão de Gade. (De 3:12, 13) Gade se limitava ao N com Manassés e ao S com Rubem. — Jos 13:24-28.

Depois da conquista da terra, Josué deu aos de Gade uma parte do despojo e mandou-os de volta. Gade juntou-se então a Rubem e Manassés na construção dum grande altar junto ao Jordão. As outras tribos ficaram alarmadas com isso, mas foram acalmadas quando se explicou que o altar fora construído em testemunho de que eles, assim como as tribos ao O do Jordão, se empenhariam exclusivamente na adoração de Jeová. O altar devia dar garantia de que não havia divisão entre as tribos ao L e ao O do Jordão. — Jos 22:1-34.

Todas estas coisas estavam em harmonia com a bênção de Jacó sobre Gade: "Quanto a Gade, uma guerrilha o acometerá, mas ele acometerá a retaguarda." (Gên 49:19) A tribo não tinha medo de ter um dos lados (o L) da sua fronteira exposta a guerrilhas. Não escolheram viver nos planaltos orientais apenas para se eximir de lutar pela terra de Canaã. As palavras de despedida de Jacó a Gade eram como uma ordem para revidar com confiança o ataque das guerrilhas que os atacassem e que violassem suas fronteiras. Além disso, os gaditas faziam incursões contra os incursores, pondo-os em fuga, e depois os gaditas perseguiam a retaguarda deles.

Moisés também falou das boas qualidades de Gade quando disse: "Bendito é aquele que alarga as fronteiras de Gade. Tem de residir como leão, e tem de dilacerar o braço, sim, o alto da cabeça. E selecionará para si a primeira parte, pois ali se reserva o lote dum legislador. E os cabeças do povo se ajuntarão. Ele certamente executará a justiça de Jeová e suas decisões judiciais para com Israel." — De 33:20, 21.

Ramote de Gileade, no território de Gade, era uma das cidades de refúgio designadas por Moisés. (De 4:41-43) Outras cidades levitas no seu território eram Maanaim, Hésbon e Jázer. (Jos 21:38, 39) A cidade de Díbon, onde foi encontrada a famosa Pedra Moabita, em 1868 EC, foi uma das diversas cidades reconstruídas pelos gaditas quando tomaram posse do território. — Núm 32:1-5, 34, 35.

Gade Apoiou Davi. Quando Davi se achava restrito por causa de Saul, diversos cabeças de exército, dos filhos de Gade, cruzaram o rio Jordão na enchente, a fim de se passar para o lado dele em Ziclague, em Judá. São descritos como "homens poderosos, valentes, homens do exército, para a guerra, prontos com o escudo grande e a lança, cujas faces eram faces de leões, e eles eram iguais às gazelas nos montes em velocidade. . . . O mínimo era igual a cem e o maior igual a mil". (1Cr 12:1, 8-15) Na sua luta com os agarenos e os aliados deles, disse-se a seu respeito (bem como de Rubem e Manassés): "Clamaram a Deus por socorro na guerra e ele se deixou suplicar a seu favor por confiarem nele." Em resultado disso, caiu nas suas mãos um enorme número de cativos e muito gado. — 1Cr 5:18-22.

Seguiu Jeroboão. Na divisão do reino, a tribo de Gade apoiou a facção setentrional sob Jeroboão. Anos mais tarde, nos dias de Jeú, quando "Jeová principiou a cortar Israel pedaço por pedaço", Gade, na sua posição exposta na fronteira oriental, tornou-se parte do campo de batalha entre o reino setentrional de Israel e a Síria. (2Rs 10:32, 33) Por fim, Tiglate-Pileser III, rei da Assíria, invadiu Gade e levou cativos os seus habitantes. Isto permitiu que os amonitas se apossassem deste território. — 2Rs 15:29; 1Cr 5:26; Je 49:1.

Na visão profética de Ezequiel, a respeito da divisão daquela terra, o quinhão designado a Gade se acha no extremo S. (Ez 48:27, 28) Na lista das tribos de Israel, no capítulo 7 de Revelação (Apocalipse), Gade é mencionado em terceiro lugar.

3. Profeta e visionário. Quando Davi morava no "lugar inacessível", na caverna de Adulão, fugindo de Saul, Gade o aconselhou a voltar a Judá. (1Sa 22:1-5) Quando Davi, presunçosamente, fez um censo perto do fim do seu reinado, Jeová, por meio de Gade, apresentou a Davi três alternativas de punição. Mais tarde, Gade aconselhou Davi a construir um altar para Jeová na eira de Araúna (Ornã). (2Sa 24:10-19; 1Cr 21:9-19) Gade foi parcialmente responsável pela organização dos músicos para o santuário. (2Cr 29:25) Atribui-se geralmente a Natã e a Gade a conclusão de Primeiro Samuel e a escrita de todo o Segundo Samuel. — 1Cr 29:29.

GADI [duma raiz que significa "boa sorte"]. Dois nomes hebraicos de grafia diferente, transliterados em português do mesmo modo.

1. Pai do Rei Menaém, de Israel. — 2Rs 15:14, 17.

2. Filho de Susi, da tribo de Manassés; um dos 12 maiorais que Moisés enviou do ermo de Parã para espiar a terra de Canaã. — Núm 13:2, 3, 11.

GADIEL [Boa Sorte [da parte] de Deus]. Filho de Sodi, da tribo de Zebulão; um dos 12 maiorais enviados por Moisés do ermo de Parã para espiar a terra de Canaã. — Núm 13:2, 3, 10.

GADITAS. Veja GADE N.º 2.

GAFANHOTO. Qualquer um dentre uma variedade de insetos dos acridídeos ou dos locustídeos de antenas curtas, especialmente os que migram em grandes nuvens. Dentre as diversas palavras hebraicas traduzidas "gafanhoto", 'ar·béh aparece mais frequentemente e é entendida como se referindo ao gafanhoto (locusta) migratório, o inseto no estágio alado, plenamente desenvolvido. (Le 11:22 n.) A palavra hebraica yé·leq refere-se ao gafanhoto rastejante, sem asas, isto é, ao que está num estágio imaturo de desenvolvimento. (Sal 105:34 n.; Jl 1:4) O termo hebraico sol·'ám refere-se ao gafanhoto comestível. (Le 11:22) A nuvem de gafanhotos é chamada pelo termo hebraico goh·vai. (Am 7:1) A palavra grega a·krís é traduzida 'gafanhoto'. — Mt 3:4; Re 9:7; veja GAFANHOTO COMUM.

O gafanhoto tem 5 cm ou mais de comprimento. É dotado de dois pares de asas, quatro pernas para andar e duas, mais longas, com coxas largas, para saltar. As largas asas traseiras, transparentes, quando não em uso, ficam dobradas sob as grossas asas dianteiras, pergamináceas. Graças às pernas traseiras, o inseto pode saltar uma distância muito superior ao comprimento do seu corpo. (Veja Jó 39:20.) Nas Escrituras, o gafanhoto é às vezes usado para representar uma quantidade inumerável. — Jz 6:5; 7:12; Je 46:23; Na 3:15, 17.

Alimento "Puro". A Lei classificava os gafanhotos como alimento puro. (Le 11:21, 22) João, o Batizador, de fato, subsistia à base de gafanhotos e mel. (Mt 3:4) Diz-se que esses insetos têm um sabor parecido ao do camarão ou do caranguejo, e são ricos em proteínas; o gafanhoto-do-deserto, segundo uma análise feita em Jerusalém, consiste em 75 por cento de proteína. Quando são usados como alimento pelos árabes hoje, eles são preparados de várias formas, como assados, cozidos, fritos ou secos. Normalmente, as pernas e as asas são removidas.

Pragas de Gafanhotos. Em tempos bíblicos, uma praga de gafanhotos era uma grave calamidade, e, ocasionalmente, uma expressão do julgamento de Jeová, como a oitava praga sobre o antigo Egito. (Êx 10:4-6, 12-19; De 28:38; 1Rs 8:37; 2Cr 6:28; Sal 78:46; 105:34) Os gafanhotos, trazidos pelo vento, surgem de repente, mas o som da sua chegada, comparado nas Escrituras ao som de carros e de um fogo que consome restolho (Jl 1:4; 2:5, 25), pode ser ouvido, segundo se diz, à distância de uns 10 km. Seu voo depende mormente do vento, o qual, quando favorável, habilita-os a cobrir muitos quilômetros. Nuvens de gafanhotos têm sido vistas por pessoas no mar até mesmo a mais de 1.600 km da terra. Ventos desfavoráveis, porém, podem lançá-los na água, onde morrem. (Êx 10:13, 19) O efeito de uma grande nuvem de gafanhotos em voo (numa altitude de mais de 1.500 m) é comparável a uma nuvem que veda a luz do sol. — Jl 2:10.

Em proporção, os gafanhotos consomem 60 a 100 vezes mais do que os humanos.

Uma invasão de gafanhotos pode transformar uma terra dum estado paradísico num de ermo, porque eles têm um apetite voraz. (Jl 2:3) Um único gafanhoto migratório consome num dia o equivalente ao peso do seu corpo; em proporção, isto é 60 a 100 vezes mais do que um humano consome. Devoram não só tudo o que é verde, mas também linho, lã, seda e couro, nem mesmo poupando o verniz na mobília, quando penetram nas casas. O consumo diário de alimento duma grande nuvem tem sido calculado como equivalente ao de um milhão e meio de homens.

Uma nuvem de gafanhotos avança como uma bem organizada e disciplinada força combatente, mas sem rei ou líder, o que atesta a sua sabedoria instintiva. (Pr 30:24, 27) Embora muitos pereçam, o ataque prossegue. Fogos acesos para impedir seu avanço têm sido extinguidos pelos corpos dos gafanhotos mortos. Valas cheias de água de nada servem para impedir seu avanço, porque estas também se enchem com os corpos dos mortos. (Jl 2:7-9) "Não se conhece nenhum inimigo natural que possa impedir sua devastadora migração", escreveu um professor de Zoologia. — A revista The New York Times Magazine, "A Guerra dos Gafanhotos", 22 de maio de 1960, p. 96.

Descrevendo pragas de gafanhotos em tempos mais recentes, Grzimek's Animal Life Encyclopedia (Enciclopédia da Vida Animal, de Grzimek; 1975, Vol. 2, pp. 109, 110) relata: "Diversas espécies de gafanhotos de esporão na garganta causam pragas mesmo hoje na África e em outras partes do mundo. Seu ocasional aumento a enormes números e amplas migrações causaram grandes estragos às safras de alimentos em tempos recentes. Em 1873-1875, na Europa, e em 1874-1877, nos EUA, as deflagrações foram extremamente severas. . . . Em 1955, uma nuvem de gafanhotos migratórios de 250 km de comprimento e 20 km de largura atacou o S do Marrocos. Novamente, em 1961/62, houve ali uma praga que não pôde ser combatida com eficiência . . . Em resultado disso, em cinco dias, os gafanhotos haviam causado danos que chegaram a mais de um bilhão de francos, numa área de mais de 5000 quilômetros quadrados. . . . Nos cinco dias, os gafanhotos migratórios consumiram 7000 t de laranjas, o equivalente a 60.000 kg por hora. Isto é mais do que o consumo anual da França inteira."

Uso Figurado. A pesquisa indica que a duração de vida do gafanhoto é entre quatro e seis meses. Portanto, diz-se apropriadamente que os gafanhotos simbólicos de Revelação (Apocalipse) 9:5 atormentam os homens por cinco meses, ou o que normalmente seria a plena duração da sua vida.

Ao descrever os militares da Assíria, Naum 3:16 menciona o gafanhoto como despindo-se da sua pele. O gafanhoto sofre cinco metamorfoses até chegar ao tamanho adulto. Em Naum 3:17, os vigilantes e os oficiais de recrutamento assírios são comparados aos gafanhotos que acampam em redis de pedra num dia frio, mas fogem quando o sol começa a raiar. A alusão aqui talvez seja ao fato de que o tempo frio torna os insetos hirtos, induzindo-os a se esconderem nas fendas de paredes, até que sejam aquecidos pelos raios do sol, após o que saem voando. Relata-se que os gafanhotos só conseguem voar depois de seu corpo atingir cerca de 21°C. Veja também BARATA; LAGARTA.

GAFANHOTO COMUM [hebr.: hha·gháv]. Não há certeza do inseto ou insetos designados pelo termo hebraico hha·gháv. Todavia, visto que se menciona o estágio plenamente desenvolvido, alado, do gafanhoto (hebr.: 'ar·béh) junto com o hha·gháv, em Levítico 11:22 (como alimento puro), hha·gháv pode referir-se a um saltador, em vez de a um voador. — Veja NM n.

A designação de "gafanhoto" é aplicada a qualquer um dos numerosos insetos saltadores da família dos acridídeos (inclusive o gafanhoto [locusta] migratório e os gafanhotos de antenas curtas) e dos tetigonioídeos (inclusive os gafanhotos [saltões] com antenas longas).

Além de ser alistado como inseto puro para alimento e das referências à sua destrutividade para a vegetação (2Cr 7:13), o gafanhoto aparece nas Escrituras em contextos ilustrativos. Os infiéis espias israelitas relataram que, em tamanho, eram como gafanhotos em comparação com os habitantes de Canaã. (Núm 13:33) Homens, especialmente os opostos a Deus, são como gafanhotos do ponto de vista de Jeová e em relação à Sua grandeza. (Is 40:22) Ao retratar as dificuldades da velhice, o congregante empregou a figura de retórica do gafanhoto que se arrasta, retratando assim a pessoa idosa como figura encurvada e rígida com os braços estendidos um pouco para trás. — Ec 12:5; veja GAFANHOTO.

GAIO [duma raiz que significa "terra"].

1. Macedônio que acompanhou o apóstolo Paulo na sua terceira viagem missionária e que, junto com Aristarco, foi levado à força ao teatro em Éfeso, durante o distúrbio instigado pelo prateiro Demétrio. — At 19:29.

2. Cristão de Derbe, na Ásia Menor, que é alistado com mais seis como acompanhando o apóstolo Paulo na sua última viagem missionária. Gaio e estes outros evidentemente se separaram de Paulo e foram então para Trôade, na costa O da Ásia Menor, onde ficaram à espera dele. (At 20:4, 5) Este Gaio pode ser o mesmo que o N.º 1, visto que Aristarco também é mencionado no relato. Neste caso, isto provavelmente significa que Gaio era macedônio de nascença (ou ascendência), mas estivera morando em Derbe.

3. Cristão de Corinto, batizado pessoalmente por Paulo. Quando Paulo escreveu a sua carta aos romanos, parece que este Gaio era seu anfitrião, bem como da congregação. Isto indicaria que as reuniões da congregação coríntia eram realizadas no lar de Gaio. — 1Co 1:14; Ro 16:23.

4. Cristão a quem o apóstolo João escreveu a sua terceira carta inspirada e a quem elogiou por estar andando na verdade, e, com respeito à sua hospitalidade, por seu trabalho fiel e por seu amor. — 3Jo 1, 3-6.

GAIOLA, JAULA. Clausura usada para encerrar pássaros ou outros animais. (Je 5:27; compare isso com Am 8:1, 2, onde a mesma palavra hebraica, kelúv, é traduzida "cesto".) O profeta Ezequiel, evidentemente, aludiu ao Rei Zedequias, de Judá, sob a figura dum leão encerrado numa jaula (hebr.: su·ghár) e transportado até o rei de Babilônia. — Ez 19:9; compare isso com Ez 12:13; 17:20; 2Rs 25:5-7.

GAITA DE FOLES. Embora a palavra aramaica sum·pon·yáh, que ocorre em Daniel 3:5, 10, 15, tenha sido traduzida "saltério" (instrumento de cordas) (MC) e "sinfonia" (So, VB), traduções modernas da Bíblia geralmente vertem a expressão por "gaita de foles". O Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento), de Koehler e Baumgartner, apresenta o sentido de "gaita de foles". — Leiden, 1958, p. 1103.

Sum·pon·yáh talvez se parecesse às simples gaitas de foles orientais da atualidade. O necessário saco hermético é feito de couro de cabrito, sem os pés, a cauda e a cabeça, mas, muitas vezes, ainda revestido de pelos. Para enchê-lo de ar, insere-se neste fole um tubo, e também tubos que se parecem a flautas, feitos de junco e das pontas de chifres de vaca.

GAIVOTA [hebr.: shá·hhaf]. Uma das aves de rapina ou necrófagas que eram proibidas como alimento, segundo a lei de Deus dada aos israelitas. — Le 11:13, 16; De 14:12, 15.

Embora a versão Almeida, edição revista e corrigida, traduza o nome hebraico desta ave como "cuco", esta tradução, em geral, tem sido abandonada em favor de gaivota. (Veja CUCO.) Alguns lexicógrafos entendem que o nome deriva duma raiz que significa "ser fino, delgado ou magro", o que talvez descreva a gaivota do ponto de vista da sua aparência esmerada e a relativa estreiteza do corpo, em comparação com as asas longas, pontiagudas. Outros acham que o nome hebraico shá·hhaf é uma imitação do grito estridente feito por esta ave geralmente barulhenta. As versões mais antigas (LXX, Vg) também entendiam que se refere à gaivota marinha. O termo hebraico shá·hhaf pode ser entendido como termo genérico aplicado a uma ave marinha palmípede parecida à gaivota. Este grupo inclui as gaivotas verdadeiras, as andorinhas-do-mar, os talha-mares e as gaivotas-rapineiras.

As gaivotas, membros da família dos Larídeos, em geral são poderosos voadores, e, além de nadarem bem, repousam e até dormem sobre a água. A gaivota bate as asas alternadamente, ascende voando, rodopia e plana para baixo, a fim de apanhar alimento em forma de peixe, inseto e praticamente qualquer espécie de carniça e refugo (servindo assim como valioso lixeiro em portos e baías). A gaivota-argêntea leva mexilhões e outros moluscos para o ar e então os deixa cair sobre rochas, para rebentá-los e assim poder consumir seu conteúdo. Apesar do seu voraz apetite por carniça, a gaivota tem hábitos excepcionalmente limpos.

Diversas variedades de gaivotas, inclusive a gaivota-argêntea (Larus argentatus) e tipos diferentes de gaivota-de-cabeça-negra (Larus ridibundus), são encontradas na Palestina ao longo da costa do Mediterrâneo e em torno do mar da Galileia. Têm usualmente cor branca, embora o dorso e a parte de cima das asas possam ser cinza-pérola. O bico é forte e levemente curvo. Vivem usualmente em colônias, nidificando em beiradas de penhascos ou ao longo das costas. Variando em tamanho desde o dum pombo até uns 76 cm de comprimento, a envergadura das asas pode ser de até 1,5 m. A gaivota, ave irrequieta e aparentemente incansável, consegue continuar voando mesmo em ventos tempestuosos. Suas abundantes e sobrepostas penas, tendo sido contadas até 6.544 numa única gaivota grande, mantêm o corpo aquecido e seco durante prolongados períodos de descanso na água.

A andorinha-do-mar, membro da família dos Esternídeos, também é abundante no litoral da Palestina. Tem um corpo mais esbelto do que a gaivota, não é necrófaga, e tem cauda bifurcada e longas asas afiladas, mais estreitas do que as da gaivota. A maioria das andorinhas-do-mar são brancas, embora, em geral, tenham o topo da cabeça negro ou cinzento. Alimentando-se principalmente de peixes pequenos, a andorinha-do-mar paira sobre a água e então mergulha nela rapidamente com seu longo, reto e estreito bico apontado para baixo, para pegar sua presa. A andorinha-do-mar é a ave migradora de voo de maior distância dentre todas as aves, sendo que a andorinha-do-mar-ártica (Sterna paradisaea) cobre anualmente até 35.400 km. Algumas andorinhas-do-mar, porém, preferem as águas costeiras das regiões mais quentes. Seu voo rápido, muito gracioso, granjeou-lhes o nome de andorinhas-do-mar.

Igual ao falcão e ao íbis, a gaivota era considerada ave sagrada no antigo Egito.

GALÁCIA. Província romana que ocupava a parte central do que agora é conhecido como a Ásia Menor. Era limitada por outras províncias romanas — em parte pela Capadócia, ao L, pela Bitínia e Ponto, ao N, pela Ásia, ao O, e pela Panfília, ao S. (1Pe 1:1) Esta região planaltina central achava-se entre os montes Tauro, ao S, e os montes da Paflagônia, ao N. Na sua parte norte-central havia a cidade de Ancira, agora chamada Ancara, capital da Turquia. E através desta região passava o curso médio do rio Hális (o atual Kizil Irmak) e a parte superior do rio Sangarius (Sakarya), que desembocavam no Mar Negro. A história desta região (de mais de 400 anos, a partir do terceiro século AEC) mostra que houve muitas mudanças nas fronteiras e nas afiliações políticas desta região estratégica.

Parece que, por volta de 278-277 AEC, grande número de um povo indo-europeu, conhecido como celtas, ou gálicos (gauleses), da Gália, que os gregos chamavam de Ga·lá·tai (daí o nome desta região), atravessou o Bósforo e se estabeleceu ali. Trouxeram consigo suas esposas e seus filhos, e evidentemente evitavam casar-se com o povo já existente ali, perpetuando assim suas características raciais durante séculos. Seu último rei, Amintas, morreu em 25 AEC, e foi durante o seu reinado como títere do Império Romano, e posteriormente, que a região denominada Galácia foi ampliada para incluir partes da Licaônia, da Pisídia, da Paflagônia, de Ponto e da Frígia. Foi então esta Galácia ampliada que o apóstolo Paulo e outros cristãos evangelizadores visitaram no primeiro século EC e na qual encontraram pessoas ansiosas de serem organizadas em congregações cristãs. — At 18:23; 1Co 16:1.

Tanto Paulo como Pedro dirigiram cartas às congregações cristãs situadas na província da Galácia. (Gál 1:1, 2; 1Pe 1:1) Não se declara se estas congregações eram as estabelecidas por Paulo e Barnabé. Naquele giro através da Galácia, Paulo e Barnabé visitaram cidades gálatas tais como a Antioquia da Pisídia, Icônio, Listra e Derbe (At 13:14, 51; 14:1, 5, 6), e quando retornaram aos irmãos na Antioquia da Síria, relataram como nestes e em outros lugares Deus "abrira às nações a porta da fé". (At 14:27) Uma experiência que tiveram em Listra foi bem incomum. Paulo havia curado um homem aleijado, que nunca na vida andara, e, de repente, as multidões começaram a clamar na sua língua licaônica nativa: "Os deuses tornaram-se iguais a humanos e desceram a nós!" Chamaram a Barnabé de Zeus e pensaram que Paulo fosse Hermes. Foi quase além das possibilidades de Paulo e Barnabé impedir que as multidões agitadas lhes oferecessem sacrifícios como se fossem deuses. — At 14:8-18.

As sementes do cristianismo, lançadas entre os gálatas, produziram bons frutos. Foi dentre eles que procederam discípulos tais como Timóteo e Gaio. (At 16:1; 20:4) Paulo deu instruções às congregações gálatas sobre a maneira de reservarem contribuições para os pobres e necessitados do Senhor. — 1Co 16:1, 2; Gál 2:10.

GALAL [Rolante; Rolado Para Longe].

1. Levita que retornou do exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 9:14, 15.

2. Levita chamado de "filho de Jedutum". — 1Cr 9:14, 16; Ne 11:17.

GÁLATAS, CARTA AOS. Carta inspirada escrita em grego, por Paulo, apóstolo, "às congregações da Galácia". — Gál 1:1, 2.

Escritor. A sentença inicial menciona Paulo como escritor deste livro. (Gál 1:1) Também, seu nome é novamente usado no texto, e ele fala de si mesmo na primeira pessoa. (5:2) Parte desta carta, em forma de autobiografia, trata da conversão de Paulo e de algumas das suas outras experiências. As referências ao seu padecimento na carne (4:13, 15) estão em harmonia com as expressões aparentemente relacionadas com este padecimento em outros livros bíblicos. (2Co 12:7; At 23:1-5) As outras cartas de Paulo usualmente eram escritas por um secretário, mas esta, diz ele, foi escrita pela sua "própria mão". (Gál 6:11) Nos seus outros escritos, quase sem exceção, ele envia cumprimentos de si mesmo e daqueles que estão com ele, mas não faz isso nesta carta. Se o escritor da carta aos gálatas tivesse sido um impostor, ele provavelmente teria mencionado um secretário e teria enviado alguns cumprimentos, assim como Paulo usualmente fazia. Portanto, a maneira de escrever e seu estilo honesto garantem a autenticidade desta carta. Uma falsificação não poderia ser razoavelmente feita assim.

A carta usualmente não é contestada como sendo de Paulo, exceto por aqueles que tentam desacreditar ser Paulo o escritor de todas as cartas comumente atribuídas a ele. Entre as evidências fora da Bíblia que apoiam ser Paulo o escritor, há a citação que Irineu (c. 180 EC) faz de Gálatas e atribui a Paulo.

A Quem É Dirigida. A questão de quais as congregações que estavam incluídas na saudação inicial "às congregações da Galácia" (Gál 1:2), por muito tempo tem sido disputada. Em apoio da afirmação de que estas eram congregações anônimas na parte setentrional da província da Galácia, argumenta-se que os que moravam naquela região eram etnicamente gálatas, ao passo que os do S não o eram. Todavia, Paulo, nos seus escritos, usualmente usa nomes oficiais romanos para as províncias, e a província da Galácia, no seu tempo, incluía as cidades licaônicas meridionais de Icônio, Listra e Derbe, bem como a cidade de Antioquia da Pisídia. Paulo havia organizado congregações cristãs em todas estas cidades na sua primeira viagem evangelizadora, acompanhado por Barnabé. Que a carta se dirigia às congregações nas cidades de Icônio, Listra e Derbe, e na Antioquia da Pisídia, se harmoniza com o modo em que a carta menciona Barnabé, como evidentemente conhecido daqueles a quem Paulo escrevia. (2:1, 9, 13) Em parte alguma das Escrituras há alguma indicação de que Barnabé fosse conhecido aos cristãos na parte setentrional da Galácia ou que Paulo sequer fizera viagens através daquele território.

A exclamação de Paulo: "Ó insensatos gálatas", de modo algum é evidência de que ele pensasse apenas em certo povo étnico, que se originara exclusivamente da raça gálica na parte setentrional da Galácia. (Gál 3:1) Antes, Paulo estava repreendendo alguns nas congregações ali por se deixarem influenciar por um elemento de judaizantes entre eles, judeus que tentavam confirmar a sua própria justiça por meio do arranjo mosaico, em vez de pela 'justiça devido à fé' fornecida pelo novo pacto. (2:15–3:14; 4:9, 10) Em sentido racial, as "congregações da Galácia" (1:2), às quais Paulo escreveu, eram uma mistura de judeus e não judeus, estes últimos sendo tanto prosélitos circuncisos como gentios incircuncisos, e, sem dúvida, alguns deles eram de origem céltica. (At 13:14, 43; 16:1; Gál 5:2) Em conjunto, eram chamados de cristãos gálatas porque a região em que moravam era chamada de Galácia. Todo o teor da carta é que Paulo escrevia àqueles que conhecia bem na parte meridional desta província romana, não a totalmente desconhecidos, no setor setentrional, o qual ele evidentemente nunca visitou.

Tempo da Escrita. O período abrangido por este livro é de duração indeterminada, mas o tempo da escrita tem sido fixado aproximadamente entre 50 e 52 EC. Gálatas 4:13 dá a entender que Paulo fez pelo menos duas visitas aos gálatas antes de escrever a carta. Os capítulos 13 e 14 de Atos dos Apóstolos descrevem uma visita de Paulo e Barnabé às cidades gálatas meridionais, ocorrida por volta de 47 a 48 EC. Daí, depois da conferência a respeito da circuncisão, em Jerusalém, por volta de 49 EC, Paulo, junto com Silas, voltou a Derbe e a Listra, na Galácia, e a outras cidades em que Paulo e Barnabé haviam 'publicado a palavra de Jeová' (At 15:36–16:1) na primeira viagem. Evidentemente, foi depois disso, enquanto Paulo estava em outro lugar na sua segunda viagem missionária, ou então na sua sede, a Antioquia da Síria, que ele recebeu informações que o induziram a escrever "às congregações da Galácia".

Se foi durante a sua estada de um ano e meio em Corinto (At 18:1, 11) que Paulo escreveu esta carta, então a escrita ocorreu provavelmente entre o outono (setentrional) de 50 e a primavera de 52 EC, o mesmo período geral em que escreveu as suas cartas canônicas aos tessalonicenses.

Se a escrita foi feita durante a sua breve parada em Éfeso, ou depois de voltar a Antioquia da Síria, e de ter "passado ali algum tempo" (At 18:22, 23), teria sido por volta de 52 EC. No entanto, é improvável que Éfeso fosse o lugar da escrita, tanto

DESTAQUES DE GÁLATAS

Carta que enfatiza o apreço pela liberdade que os verdadeiros cristãos têm por meio de Jesus Cristo.

Foi escrita um ano ou talvez vários anos depois de os gálatas terem sido informados sobre a decisão do corpo governante, de que não se requer a circuncisão dos cristãos.

Paulo defende seu apostolado.

O apostolado de Paulo não era de origem humana, mas por designação de Jesus Cristo e do Pai; ele não consultou os apóstolos em Jerusalém antes de começar a declarar as boas novas; só três anos depois visitou brevemente a Cefas e a Tiago. (1:1, 13-24)

As boas novas que proclamava não foram recebidas da parte de homens, mas por revelação da parte de Jesus Cristo. (1:10-12)

Por causa duma revelação, Paulo, com Barnabé e Tito, foi a Jerusalém para tratar da questão da circuncisão; não aprendeu nada de novo de Tiago, Pedro e João, mas estes reconheceram que ele havia recebido poderes para um apostolado para com as nações. (2:1-10)

Em Antioquia, quando Pedro erroneamente se separou dos crentes não judeus, temendo certos irmãos visitantes de Jerusalém, Paulo o repreendeu. (2:11-14)

A pessoa é declarada justa somente pela fé em Cristo, não por obras da lei.

Se alguém pudesse ser declarado justo por obras da lei, a morte de Cristo não teria sido necessária. (2:15-21)

Os gálatas receberam o espírito de Deus por terem aceito com fé as boas novas, não devido a obras da lei. (3:1-5)

Verdadeiros filhos de Abraão são aqueles que têm fé igual à dele. (3:6-9, 26-29)

Visto que aqueles que procuram mostrar-se justos por obras da Lei não conseguem guardá-la perfeitamente, eles estão sob maldição. (3:10-14)

A Lei não invalidou a promessa associada com o pacto abraâmico, mas ela serviu para tornar manifestas as transgressões e atuou como tutor, conduzindo a Cristo. (3:15-25)

Manter-se firme na liberdade cristã.

Jesus Cristo, pela sua morte, libertou os que estavam debaixo de lei, tornando possível que se tornassem filhos de Deus. (4:1-7)

Retornar ao arranjo da observância de dias, meses, épocas e anos significaria retornar à escravidão e a uma posição semelhante à de Ismael, filho da serva Agar; ele, com sua mãe, foi despedido da casa de Abraão. (4:8-31)

Já que foram libertos do pecado e não mais estavam sob obrigação à Lei, deviam resistir a todos os que desejassem induzi-los a aceitar um jugo de escravidão. (1:6-9; 5:1-12; 6:12-16)

Não abusem da liberdade, mas cedam à influência do espírito de Deus, manifestando os frutos desse na vida e evitando as obras da carne. (5:13-26)

Reajustem num espírito de brandura a todo aquele que dá um passo em falso; mas todos, individualmente, têm a obrigação de levar sua própria carga de responsabilidade. (6:1-5)

porque Paulo ficou pouco tempo ali como porque se ele tivesse estado tão perto quando soube do desvio na Galácia, era de esperar que tivesse pessoalmente visitado os irmãos, ou então explicado na sua carta por que não lhe era possível visitá-los naquela ocasião.

O que a sua carta diz a respeito de os gálatas serem "removidos tão depressa Daquele que [os] chamou" (Gál 1:6) talvez indique que a escrita da carta foi feita logo depois de Paulo ter visitado os gálatas. Mas, mesmo que a escrita só tivesse sido feita em 52 EC, em Antioquia da Síria, ainda teria sido relativamente cedo para tal desvio ocorrer.

Canonicidade. Evidência primitiva da canonicidade do livro é encontrada no Fragmento Muratoriano e nos escritos de Irineu, de Clemente de Alexandria, de Tertuliano e de Orígenes. Estes homens mencionam-no por nome, junto com a maioria ou com todos os outros 26 livros das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. É mencionado por nome no cânon abreviado de Marcião e até mesmo aludido por Celso, que era inimigo do cristianismo. Todas as importantes listas de livros no cânon das Escrituras inspiradas, pelo menos até o tempo do Terceiro Concílio de Cartago, em 397 EC, incluíam o livro de Gálatas. Nós o temos hoje preservado, junto com mais oito das cartas inspiradas de Paulo, no Papiro Chester Beatty N.º 2 (P^{46}), um manuscrito atribuído a cerca de 200 EC. Isto fornece prova de que os primitivos cristãos aceitavam o livro de Gálatas como uma das cartas de Paulo. Outros manuscritos antigos, tais como o Sinaítico, o Alexandrino, o Vaticano N.º 1209, o Códice Efraimi rescrito e o Códice Claromontano, bem como a Pesito siríaca, igualmente incluem o livro de Gálatas. Também, ele se harmoniza inteiramente com os outros escritos de Paulo e com o restante das Escrituras, que frequentemente cita.

Circunstâncias Relacionadas com a Carta. A carta reflete muitas características do povo da Galácia, no tempo de Paulo. Os celtas gálicos, procedentes do N, haviam invadido aquela região no terceiro século AEC, e, portanto, era forte a influência céltica no país. Os celtas (ou gauleses) eram considerados um povo feroz, bárbaro, tendo-se dito que ofereciam seus prisioneiros de guerra como sacrifícios humanos. Têm sido também descritos na literatura romana como muito emotivos, supersticiosos, dados a muitos ritos, e esta tendência religiosa provavelmente influía para se manterem longe de uma forma de adoração tão desprovida de ritos como o cristianismo.

Mesmo assim, as congregações na Galácia talvez incluíssem muitos que anteriormente tinham sido assim como pagãos, bem como muitos conversos do judaísmo, que não se livraram totalmente da observância escrupulosa das cerimônias e outras obrigações da Lei mosaica. A natureza volúvel, inconstante, atribuída aos gálatas de origem céltica explica como, em certa época, alguns nas congregações gálatas eram zelosos pela verdade de Deus, e pouco depois se tornaram presa fácil de oponentes da verdade, os quais insistiam na observância meticulosa da Lei, bem como na circuncisão e em outros requisitos da Lei como necessários para a salvação.

Os judaizantes, como poderiam ser chamados tais inimigos da verdade, pelo visto mantinham a questão da circuncisão acesa, mesmo depois de os apóstolos e outros anciãos em Jerusalém terem tratado do assunto. Talvez, também, alguns dos cristãos gálatas sucumbissem às baixas normas de moral da população, conforme se pode inferir da mensagem da carta a partir do capítulo 5, versículo 13, até o fim dela. De qualquer modo, quando o apóstolo soube do desvio deles, sentiu-se induzido a escrever esta carta de conselho franco e de forte encorajamento. É evidente que seu objetivo imediato ao escrever era confirmar seu apostolado, refutar os ensinos falsos dos judaizantes e fortalecer os irmãos nas congregações gálatas.

Os judaizantes eram astutos e insinceros. (At 15:1; Gál 2:4) Afirmando representar a congregação de Jerusalém, estes falsos instrutores se opunham a Paulo e desacreditavam a posição dele como apóstolo. Queriam que os cristãos fossem circuncidados, não nos melhores interesses dos gálatas, mas para que os judaizantes pudessem criar uma aparência que granjearia a aprovação dos judeus e os impediria de se oporem tão violentamente. Os judaizantes não queriam sofrer perseguição por causa de Cristo. — Gál 6:12, 13.

Para atingirem seu objetivo, afirmavam que Paulo recebera sua comissão de segunda mão, que lhe fora dada apenas por alguns homens de destaque na congregação cristã — não do próprio Cristo Jesus. (Gál 1:11, 12, 15-20) Queriam que os gálatas os seguissem (4:17), e para anular a influência de Paulo, primeiro tinham de apresentá-lo como não sendo apóstolo. Aparentemente, eles afirmavam que Paulo, quando achava conveniente, pregava a circuncisão. (1:10; 5:11) Tentavam fazer uma espécie de fusão de religião entre o cristianismo e o judaísmo, não negando diretamente a Cristo, mas argumentando que a circuncisão seria de proveito para os gálatas, que os faria progredir no cristianismo, e que, além disso, com ela seriam filhos de Abraão, a quem originalmente foi dado o pacto da circuncisão. — 3:7.

Paulo refutou cabalmente as alegações desses falsos cristãos e edificou os irmãos gálatas, para que pudessem manter-se firmes em Cristo. É animador notar que as congregações gálatas permaneceram fiéis a Cristo e se mantiveram como colunas da verdade. O apóstolo Paulo visitou-as na sua terceira viagem missionária (At 18:23) e o apóstolo Pedro dirigiu sua primeira carta aos gálatas, entre outros. — 1Pe 1:1.

GÁLBANO. Goma-resina amarelada ou acastanhada, extraída de certas plantas asiáticas da mesma família da cenoura, e da salsa. Não há certeza da espécie exata de planta que fornecia o gálbano usado pelos israelitas.

O líquido leitoso, que ao endurecer se torna gálbano, exsuda de forma natural do caule da planta ou o fluxo é induzido por meio duma incisão. O gálbano era antigamente um ingrediente do incenso especificado para uso exclusivo no santuário. (Êx 30:34-38) Diz-se que, quando queimado sozinho, produz um cheiro desagradável, mas que, quando combinado com outras substâncias aromáticas, o gálbano aumenta a fragrância delas e a torna mais duradoura.

GALEEDE [Montão de Testemunho]. O lugar na região montanhosa de Gileade, ao L do Jordão, onde os patriarcas Jacó e Labão celebraram um pacto. (Gên 31:43-48) O nome posterior desta região, "Gileade", provavelmente foi derivado de "Galeede", nome originalmente dado ao local onde este evento ocorreu por volta de 1761 AEC.

Obedecendo à orientação divina, e sem dar aviso, Jacó deixou Padã-Arã e o serviço de Labão, que tanto era seu tio como seu sogro. (Gên 28:2) Jacó, com todos os seus pertences, com suas esposas e seus filhos, cruzou o rio Eufrates e se dirigiu para a terra de Canaã. Depois de três dias, Labão, acompanhado por seus "irmãos", foi no encalço dele, numa distância de sete dias de jornada, finalmente alcançando a caravana de Jacó nos montes de Gileade, ao N do vale da torrente do Jaboque. — Gên 31:17-25.

Resolvendo pacificamente os pontos disputados, Jacó e Labão concluíram um pacto entre si. Neste respeito, Jacó erigiu uma coluna de pedra e mandou que seus "irmãos" erguessem um montão de pedras, talvez na forma duma mesa, sobre a qual se comeu a refeição pactual. Daí, Labão deu a este lugar o nome deste montão, em aramaico (sírio) "Jegar-Saaduta", mas Jacó o chamou de "Galeede", o equivalente hebraico. Labão disse: "Este montão [hebr.: gal] é hoje testemunha [hebr.: 'edh] entre mim e ti." (Gên 31:44-48) O montão de pedras (e a coluna de pedra) serviam de testemunho para todos os que passassem por ali. Era como diz o versículo 49 : "A Torre de Vigia [hebr.: mits·páh]", atestando que Jacó e Labão tinham concordado em preservar a paz entre suas respectivas famílias e dentro delas. (Gên 31:50-53) Em ocasiões posteriores, usavam-se pedras de forma similar como testemunhas silenciosas. — Jos 4:4-7; 24:25-27.

GALERA. Embarcação longa e estreita, de baixo bordo, movida a uma ou mais fileiras de remos e usada principalmente na guerra naval.

Isaías representa os habitantes de Jerusalém como dizendo: "Ali o Majestoso, Jeová, será para nós um lugar de rios, de canais largos. Nele não andará nenhuma frota de galeras [literalmente: frota de navios a remo] e nenhum navio majestoso passará por ele. Porque Jeová é o nosso Juiz, Jeová é o nosso Legislador, Jeová é o nosso Rei; ele mesmo nos salvará." (Is 33:21, 22) Jerusalém não tinha grandes rios ou canais como defesa contra ataques. Todavia, assim como rios e canais protegiam cidades tais como Babilônia e Nô-Amom (Na 3:8), assim Jeová protegeria Jerusalém. Esses "rios" de salvação, de Deus, seriam tão poderosos, que potentes forças inimigas, simbolizadas por uma frota de galeras hostis ou por um majestoso navio, seriam destroçadas nessas poderosas "águas", se viessem contra Jerusalém. Jeová assegurou assim, de modo figurativo, a segurança dela com a defesa que ele mesmo, governando-a como Rei, lhe proveria para a sua salvação.

GALGO [hebr.: zar·zír moth·ná·yim]. Cão muito rápido, de vista aguda, dotado de focinho pontudo, com esguio corpo aerodinâmico, e com pernas longas e fortes. No entanto, há uma considerável incerteza a respeito do que é designado pela expressão hebraica, a qual significa literalmente "o [animal] cingido nos quadris (lombos)". Diversas traduções da Bíblia, em Provérbios 30:31, usam "galgo" no texto principal, mas outras, nas notas de rodapé, dizem "cavalo de guerra" e "galo" como versões alternativas (AS, CBC, NM, Ro; veja o texto de Al, Tr, VB.) A tradução "galo" (ALA, BJ, IBB, MC, PIB, So) tem o apoio da Septuaginta grega e da Vulgata latina. No entanto, "galgo" é a tradução apropriada, porque se encaixa na descrição de um animal que procede bem nas suas "passadas". (Pr 30:29) O galgo tem sido cronometrado a uma velocidade de cerca de 64 km/h. Também, a esbelteza das regiões lombares do galgo, como se o animal estivesse "cingido nos quadris", se harmoniza com o que é considerado ser o significado literal da designação hebraica.

GALILEIA [Região; Circuito [duma raiz que significa "rolar; rolar para longe"]], GALILEU. A primeira menção da Galileia, na Bíblia, identifica-a como distrito na região montanhosa de Naftali, onde ficava a cidade de refúgio de Quedes. (Jos 20:7) Se não antes, então pelo menos na época de Isaías, a Galileia incluía o território de Zebulão.

Talvez muitos não israelitas vivessem na Galileia; daí a expressão "Galileia das nações". (Is 9:1) Alguns peritos acham que as 20 cidades da Galileia, que o Rei Salomão ofereceu a Hirão, o rei de Tiro, provavelmente eram habitadas por pagãos. (1Rs 9:10-13; veja CABUL N.º 2.) O rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III conquistou a Galileia durante o reinado do rei Peca, de Israel (no oitavo século AEC). — 2Rs 15:29.

Fronteiras. (MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 738) Com o passar dos anos, os limites territoriais da Galileia não permaneceram constantes. Sua maior extensão parece ter sido a de cerca de 100 por 50 km, abrangendo os antigos territórios das tribos de Aser, Issacar, Naftali e Zebulão. No entanto, no tempo do ministério terrestre de Jesus Cristo, a Galileia, enquanto estava sob a jurisdição de Herodes Ântipas (Lu 3:1), estendia-se apenas uns 40 km de L a O, e uns 60 km de N a S.

Ao S ficava Samaria, estendendo-se a fronteira meridional da Galileia desde o sopé do monte Carmelo, pelo vale de Jezreel, (Esdrelom) em direção a Citópolis (Bete-Seã), e daí até o Jordão. Segundo Josefo, o rio Jordão, junto com o mar da Galileia e o lago Hula (ou Hulé; agora na maior parte drenado), constituíam a fronteira oriental, mas pode ter havido áreas em que a fronteira não era tão precisa. O território de Tiro, estendendo-se até abaixo da antiga cidade de Quedes (Kedasa, Cydasa), limitava a Galileia ao N. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], III, 35-40 [iii, 1]; II, 459 [xviii, 1]; IV, 104, 105 [ii, 3]) Ao O ficava o território de Ptolemaida (Aco ou Acre) e o monte Carmelo.

Esta província setentrional romana da Palestina, ao O do Jordão, estava adicionalmente dividida em Galileia Superior e Inferior. A fronteira entre as duas Galileias estendia-se desde Tiberíades, na margem O do mar da Galileia, até um ponto na vizinhança de Ptolemaida. — The Jewish War, III, 35 (iii, 1).

Características Geográficas. No primeiro século EC, antes da guerra com Roma, a Galileia era densamente povoada e usufruía grande prosperidade. Junto ao mar da Galileia havia uma próspera indústria de pesca. Outras atividades incluíam a tecelagem, a cantaria, a construção de navios e a olaria. Josefo, historiador judeu, afirmava que havia 204 cidades e localidades na Galileia, tendo a menor delas mais de 15.000 habitantes. Se este testemunho não for exagero, conforme muitos acreditam que seja, então significa que a Galileia tinha uma população de uns três milhões de habitantes. — The Life (A Vida), 235 (45); The Jewish War, III, 43 (iii, 2).

A Galileia era abençoada com uma abundância de fontes e um solo fértil. De modo que a ocupação principal dos galileus parece ter sido a agricultura. Atualmente, cultivam-se ali muitas espécies diferentes de hortaliças, bem como trigo, cevada, figo, painço, índigo, oliveiras, arroz, cana-de-açúcar, laranja, pera e damasco. Antigamente, a Galileia era bem arborizada. Entre as variedades de árvores ainda encontradas ali estão o cedro, o cipreste, o abeto, o carvalho, o oleandro, a palmeira, o pinheiro, o sicômoro e a nogueira.

Tanto o clima como os aspectos geográficos da Galileia são marcados por grandes contrastes. Os planaltos são frescos, a costa marítima usufrui uma temperatura amena e o vale do Jordão é quente. A altitude da Galileia Inferior fica uns 210 m abaixo do nível do mar perto do mar da Galileia, e atinge seu ponto mais alto no monte Tabor, numa elevação de 562 m. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 334) Todavia, as colinas e os montes da Galileia Superior variam de altitude entre 460 m e 1.208 m.

O Povo da Galileia. Como grupo, os judeus da Galileia diferiam daqueles da Judeia. Segundo o testemunho de rabinos dos tempos antigos, os galileus davam valor à reputação, ao passo que os da Judeia davam mais ênfase ao dinheiro do que a um bom nome. Os galileus, em geral, não eram tão insistentes nas tradições como os da Judeia. No Talmude (Megillah 75*a*), os primeiros, de fato, são acusados de negligenciar a tradição. Neste respeito, pode-se notar que os fariseus e os escribas, de Jerusalém, não da Galileia, eram os que objetavam a que os discípulos de Jesus não observavam a tradicional lavagem de mãos. — Mr 7:1, 5.

Visto que o Sinédrio e o templo ficavam em Jerusalém, sem dúvida, a maior concentração de instrutores da Lei se encontrava ali; daí o provérbio judaico: "Se quiser riquezas, vá para o norte [para a Galileia], se quiser sabedoria, vá para o sul [para a Judeia]." Mas, isto não significa que os galileus eram muito ignorantes. Em todas as cidades e aldeias da Galileia havia instrutores da Lei, bem como sinagogas. Estas últimas, de fato, eram centros educativos. (Lu 5:17) Todavia, os principais sacerdotes e os fariseus em Jerusalém evidentemente consideravam-se superiores aos galileus comuns e os encaravam como ignorantes da Lei. Por exemplo, quando Nicodemos falou em defesa de Jesus Cristo, os fariseus retrucaram: "Será que tu também és da Galileia? Pesquisa e vê que nenhum profeta há de ser levantado da Galileia." (Jo 7:45-52) Desconsideraram assim o cumprimento da profecia de Isaías a respeito da pregação do Messias. — Is 9:1, 2; Mt 4:13-17.

Alguns atribuem o distintivo sotaque galileu a influências estrangeiras. Não era nada incomum serem os galileus facilmente reconhecidos pela sua fala (Mt 26:73), especialmente visto que a região de Samaria separava a Galileia da Judeia. Mesmo hoje, em muitas partes da terra, as pessoas são facilmente identificadas pelo seu sotaque regional. Igualmente, entre as tribos de Israel, havia diferenças de pronúncia em séculos anteriores. Um exemplo destacado disso é a incapacidade de os efraimitas, nos dias de Jefté, pronunciarem corretamente a senha "Xibolete". — Jz 12:5, 6.

O ministério de Jesus na Galileia. A Galileia foi cenário de muitos eventos notáveis na vida terrestre de Jesus. As cidades galileias de Betsaida, Cafarnaum, Caná, Corazim, Naim e Nazaré, bem como as regiões de Magadã, são mencionadas especificamente em conexão com a atividade dele. (Mt 11:20-23; 15:39; Lu 4:16; 7:11; Jo 2:11; veja BETSAIDA.) Jesus passou a maior parte da sua vida terrestre na cidade galileia de Nazaré. (Mt 2:21-23; Lu 2:51, 52) Numa festa de casamento em Caná, ele realizou seu primeiro milagre por transformar água no melhor dos vinhos. (Jo 2:1-11) Depois da prisão de João, o Batizador, Jesus retirou-se da Judeia para a Galileia e começou a proclamar: "Arrependei-vos, pois o reino dos céus se tem aproximado." (Mt 4:12-17) Ao passo que Jesus percorria a Galileia, ensinava nas diversas sinagogas. Com o tempo, chegou à sua cidade, Nazaré, onde, num sábado, leu a sua comissão no capítulo 61 de Isaías. Embora os presentes na sinagoga no começo ficassem favoravelmente impressionados, quando Jesus os comparou aos israelitas dos dias dos profetas Elias e Eliseu, os presentes na sinagoga ficaram irados, e estavam prontos para matá-lo. — Lu 4:14-30.

Depois, Jesus foi para Cafarnaum, "uma cidade da Galileia", e fixou-se ali. Evidentemente, perto de Cafarnaum, ele chamou André, Pedro, Tiago e João para serem pescadores de homens. (Lu 4:31; Mt 4:13-22) Acompanhado por estes quatro discípulos, Jesus iniciou uma importante viagem de pregação na Galileia. No desempenho das suas atividades de ensinar e de realizar obras poderosas, Jesus chamou Mateus da coletoria em Cafarnaum para ser seu seguidor. (Mt 4:23-25; 9:1-9) Mais tarde, num monte perto de Cafarnaum, ele escolheu os 12 apóstolos. Todos eles, com a possível exceção de Judas Iscariotes, eram galileus. Também, perto de Cafarnaum, Jesus proferiu o Sermão do Monte. (Lu 6:12-49; 7:1) Na cidade galileia de Naim, ele ressuscitou o filho único duma viúva. (Lu 7:11-17) Numa posterior viagem de pregação, Jesus revisitou Nazaré, mas foi novamente rejeitado. (Mt 13:54-58) Em Cafarnaum, por volta da época da Páscoa de 32 EC, durante o que parece ter sido sua última cobertura intensiva do território galileu, muitos discípulos, tropeçando por causa das palavras de Jesus a respeito de 'comer a sua carne e beber o seu sangue', abandonaram o Filho de Deus. — Jo 6:22-71.

Embora os Evangelhos sinópticos tratem principalmente do ministério de Jesus na Galileia, o Filho de Deus não desconsiderou a Judeia, conforme alguns concluíram erroneamente. É digno de nota que o interesse inicial dos galileus em Jesus foi suscitado por aquilo que o viram fazer em Jerusalém. (Jo 4:45) Todavia, provavelmente reservou-se mais espaço para a atividade de Jesus na Galileia, porque os galileus o aceitaram mais prontamente do que os da Judeia. Isto é confirmado pelo fato de que os primeiros discípulos a receberem o espírito santo de Deus eram galileus, uns 120 deles. (At 1:15; 2:1-7) O controle e a influência dos líderes religiosos judeus não devem ter sido tão fortes entre os galileus como entre os da Judeia. (Veja Lu 11:52; Jo 7:47-52; 12:42, 43.) Alguns sugerem que a multidão que clamava pela morte de Jesus era principalmente daqueles da Judeia (Mt 27:20-23), ao passo que aqueles que antes haviam aclamado Jesus como rei talvez tenham sido primariamente galileus. (Mt 21:6-11) A presença de muitos galileus e de outros que não eram da Judeia, durante o período da Páscoa, talvez contribuísse também para o medo dos líderes de Jerusalém, de se apoderarem de Jesus em plena luz do dia, 'para que não surgisse um alvoroço'. — Mt 26:3-5.

GALILEIA, MAR DA.

Lago interiorano de água doce na Palestina setentrional, que também tem sido chamado de mar de Quinerete (Núm 34:11), lago de Genesaré (Lu 5:1) e mar de Tiberíades (Jo 6:1). (A palavra grega traduzida por "mar" também pode significar "lago".) — MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 740; FOTOS, Vol. 1, p. 336, e Vol. 2, p. 740.

Tamanho e Topografia da Região. O mar da Galileia encontra-se em média 210 m abaixo do nível do mar Mediterrâneo e faz parte do vale de abatimento tectônico do Jordão. A maior profundidade da sua água é de cerca de 48 m. De N a S, esta massa de água tem o comprimento aproximado de 21 km, com uma largura máxima de uns 12 km. Dependendo da estação, as águas cristalinas do mar da Galileia variam de cor, desde o verde até o azul, e a temperatura média da água oscila entre 14°C em fevereiro e 30°C em agosto. Este lago é alimentado primariamente pelo rio Jordão.

O leito do mar da Galileia assemelha-se a uma enorme bacia. Das suas margens do lado L ascendem íngremes montes de calcário, recobertos de lava, atingindo a altitude de uns 610 m. Mas, ao O, os montes se elevam menos abruptamente. O mar da Galileia é praticamente cercado por colinas e montes, exceto pelas planícies que beiram o Jordão, isto é, os pontos onde o rio penetra no lago na extremidade N e onde reassume seu curso no SO. A região ao N é ocupada por uma massa de grandes rochedos de basalto. Não muito ao S da cidade de Tiberíades, na margem ocidental, existem fontes quentes de enxofre, há muito famosas por suas propriedades medicinais. Uma das sete fontes existentes ali tem a temperatura de 58°C.

Clima. O clima quente ao redor do mar da Galileia propicia o crescimento de plantas tropicais, inclusive lótus, palmeiras e anileiras. Cágados, tartarugas, lagostins e pulgas-do-mar são encontrados nas margens do lago. Há abundância de aves e de peixes. No século 19, o naturalista H. B. Tristram observou: "A densidade dos cardumes de peixes no mar da Galileia mal pode ser compreendida por aqueles que não os presenciaram. Frequentemente, esses cardumes abrangem um acre ou mais de superfície, e os peixes, ao passo que avançam vagarosamente em massa, ficam tão apertados, com suas barbatanas dorsais mal sobressaindo ao nível da água, que a certa distância se tem a impressão dum violento aguaceiro abatendo-se sobre a superfície." — The Natural History of the Bible (A História Natural da Bíblia), 1889, p. 285.

Temporais repentinos, tais como os que Jesus Cristo e seus discípulos enfrentaram, não são incomuns. (Mt 8:24; 14:24) Por causa da baixa altitude do mar da Galileia, a temperatura do ar é muito mais quente ali do que nos planaltos e nos montes circundantes. Isto resulta em perturbações atmosféricas. Também, fortes ventos descem pelo vale do Jordão procedentes do monte Hermom, de cume nevado, que fica não muito longe ao N.

No primeiro século EC, as margens deste lago eram bastante povoadas. Mas, hoje, dentre as nove cidades mencionadas por Josefo como estando junto ao mar da Galileia, apenas resta Tiberíades.

O Ministério de Jesus Nesta Região. Este corpo de água figurou de forma destacada no ministério terrestre de Jesus. O Filho de Deus falou diversas vezes dum barco a grandes multidões reunidas na sua ampla e pedregosa margem. (Mr 3:9; 4:1; Lu 5:1-3) Numa dessas ocasiões, ele fez com que alguns dos seus discípulos tivessem uma pesca milagrosa, e chamou Pedro, André, Tiago e João para serem "pescadores de homens". (Mt 4:18-22; Lu 5:4-11) Nas redondezas do mar da Galileia, Jesus realizou muitas obras poderosas. Curou os doentes, expulsou demônios (Mr 3:7-12), acalmou o vento e o mar (Mr 4:35-41), e andou sobre a água (Jo 6:16-21); certa vez, alimentou milagrosamente mais de 5.000 pessoas, e em outra ocasião alimentou mais de 4.000, toda vez apenas com alguns pães e vários peixes. (Mt 14:14-21; 15:29, 34-38) Com razão, Jesus condenou três cidades naquela região, Corazim, Betsaida e Cafarnaum, por permanecerem insensíveis, apesar das muitas obras poderosas presenciadas por seus habitantes. — Mt 11:20-24.

Após a sua ressurreição dentre os mortos, Jesus apareceu a alguns dos seus discípulos junto ao mar da Galileia, e fez com que tivessem outra pesca milagrosa. Enfatizou então a importância de alimentarem Suas ovelhas. — Jo 21:1, 4-19.

GALIM [Montões]. Cidade de Palti, a quem Saul deu sua filha Mical por esposa, depois de Davi ter sido banido. (1Sa 25:44) Possivelmente, trata-se da mesma Galim, cujos habitantes, séculos mais tarde, clamaram em lamento por causa da aproximação do exército assírio sob Senaqueribe. (Is 10:24, 30) Alguns peritos situam Galim em Khirbet Kakul (Horvat Kaʽkul), a uns 4,5 km ao NNE do monte do Templo.

GALINHA [gr.: ór·nis]. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, não há nenhuma referência aparente à galinha doméstica (Gallus domesticus), mas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, Jesus Cristo referiu-se à galinha como ajuntando os pintinhos debaixo das asas protetoras, na símile a respeito do seu desejo de ajuntar a Jerusalém insensível. (Mt 23:37; Lu 13:34) A palavra grega usada aqui (ór·nis) é genérica, e, portanto, pode referir-se a qualquer ave, selvática ou doméstica. Mas, no grego ático, usualmente significava galinha, visto que esta era a mais comum e útil das aves domésticas. A referência de Jesus a um filho que pede ao pai um ovo (Lu 11:11, 12) indica que a galinha doméstica naquele tempo era comum na Palestina. (Veja GALO.) Da palavra grega ór·nis (genitivo: ór·ni·thos) deriva a palavra "ornitologia", o ramo da Zoologia que trata das aves.

Certas leis rabínicas proibiam o consumo de ovos postos no sábado, visto que se sustentava que isto envolvia trabalho por parte da galinha; alguns, porém, permitiam o consumo dos ovos, se a galinha era de abate, e não poedeira. (Talmude Babilônico, Bezah 2*a*, b) No entanto, a Bíblia não contém nenhuma regra assim.

GÁLIO. Procônsul da Acaia, em cujo tribunal os judeus acusaram Paulo de conduzir homens a outra persuasão na adoração de Deus. Gálio negou provimento ao caso à base de este não envolver a violação da lei romana. A multidão passou então a espancar Sóstenes, o presidente da sinagoga, mas Gálio tampouco se incomodou com isso. — At 18:12-17.

Segundo fontes seculares, Gálio nasceu em Córdova, na Espanha, por volta do começo do primeiro século EC. Era filho de Sêneca, o retórico, e irmão mais velho de Sêneca, o filósofo. O nome original de Gálio era Lúcio Aneu Novato. Mas, ao ser adotado por Lúcio Júnio Gálio, o retórico, ele assumiu o nome de seu adotante.

Uma inscrição de Delfos ajuda a datar o termo de Gálio como procônsul da Acaia. (At 18:12) Por ser apenas fragmentário, o texto da inscrição teve de ser reconstituído, mas contém definitivamente o nome de "[Lúcio Jú]nio Gálio, . . . procônsul". Os historiadores, em geral, concordam que o texto é uma carta do Imperador Cláudio César, e que o número 26 encontrado nele se refere a Cláudio ter recebido a aclamação imperial pela 26.ª vez. (Foi Cláudio quem restabeleceu a Acaia na posição de província separada, responsável perante o senado, e ela, por isso, tinha um procônsul.) É provável que esta carta tenha sido escrita na primeira metade de 52 EC, porque outras inscrições indicam que Cláudio foi aclamado como imperador pela 27.ª vez antes de 1.º de agosto de 52 EC. Uma inscrição cariana e outra inscrição no aqueduto chamado de Aqua Claudia, em Roma, colocam a 26.ª e a 27.ª aclamação imperial no ano do seu 12.° período como tribuno. Este 12.º período como tribuno correspondeu a 25 de janeiro de 52 EC até 24 de janeiro de 53 EC. O proconsulado de Gálio na Acaia (cargo que usualmente durava um ano, começando no início do verão), portanto, parece ter-se estendido desde o verão de 51 EC até o verão de 52 EC, embora alguns peritos prefiram 52-53 EC.

Parte duma inscrição com o nome de Gálio* (ΓΑΛΛΙΩΝ).

GALO [gr.: a·lé·ktor]. Macho da galinha doméstica. Devido à ampla domesticação da galinha (Gallus domesticus), a figura garbosa do galo em geral é uma vista familiar. Tem plumagem de um colorido vivo, longas penas de cauda recurvadas e uma flexível crista carnosa, vermelha, na cabeça, com duas carúnculas similares pendentes abaixo do bico, junto ao pescoço.

O galo não é mencionado nas Escrituras Hebraicas e aparece nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs apenas em conexão com o seu canto. (Veja GALO, CANTO DO.) A mais frequente menção se relaciona com a profecia de Jesus a respeito de Pedro negá-lo, cumprida na noite antes da morte de Jesus e relatada por todos os quatro escritores dos Evangelhos. — Mt 26:34, 74, 75; Mr 14:30, 72; Lu 22:34, 60, 61; Jo 13:38; 18:27.

Embora a Míxena judaica (Bava Kamma 7:7) contenha uma proibição contra os judeus criarem aves domésticas, por causa da probabilidade de estas causarem aviltamento cerimonial, fontes rabínicas indicam que eram criadas tanto pelos judeus como pelos romanos. Um selo de ônix, com a figura de um galo, foi encontrado perto de Mispá, e ele contém a inscrição "pertence a Jaazanias, servo do rei". Se este Jaazanias (Jezanias), conforme alguns sugerem, for o mencionado em 2 Reis 25:23 e Jeremias 40:8, isto indicaria que criar galos, em Israel, remonta ao sétimo século AEC. A figura de um galo também foi encontrada num caco de uma panela numa escavação na antiga Gibeão.

Tanto a galinha, com seus pintinhos, como o ovo são usados por Jesus nas suas ilustrações, indicando que a ave doméstica era bem conhecida por seus ouvintes. — Mt 23:37; Lu 11:12; 13:34; veja GALINHA.

GALO, CANTO DO. Este era o nome dado à terceira vigília, segundo a divisão grega e romana. (Mr 13:35) Correspondia ao tempo entre cerca da meia-noite e aproximadamente as três horas da madrugada.

Há certa discussão sobre o assunto do canto do galo (gr.: a·le·kto·ro·fo·ní·a), devido à referência de Jesus a ele em conexão com a sua predição, de que Pedro o negaria três vezes. (Mt 26:34, 74, 75; Mr 14:30, 72; Lu 22:34; Jo 13:38) À base de declarações feitas na Míxena judaica (Bava Kamma 7:7), alguns argumentam que não se criavam galos em Jerusalém, visto que causavam impureza cerimonial por ciscarem o solo. Dizem que o canto do galo mencionado por Jesus na realidade se referia ao gallicinium romano, um sinal de hora, que se diz ter sido dado com cornetas pela guarda romana, postada nos baluartes da Torre de Antônia, em Jerusalém, e que era tocado no fim da terceira vigília da noite.

Todavia, referências talmúdicas judaicas indicam que naquele tempo se criavam galos em Jerusalém. (Por exemplo, veja A Míxena, Eduyyot 6:1.) Uma indicação adicional é que Jesus, ao lamentar a cidade de Jerusalém, escolheu a símile da 'galinha que ajunta seus pintinhos debaixo de suas asas', para expressar seu desejo para com a cidade. (Mt 23:37) Sua escolha de ilustrações sempre era tal que pudessem ser prontamente entendidas pelos seus ouvintes. Portanto, na sua declaração a Pedro, não parece haver nenhum bom motivo para se presumir que Jesus se referisse a outra coisa, senão ao literal canto do galo.

Outros apontam uma aparente contradição nos quatro relatos, visto que Mateus, Lucas e João mencionam apenas um canto de galo, ao passo que Marcos cita Jesus como dizendo: "Deveras, eu te digo: Hoje, sim, esta noite, antes de o galo cantar duas vezes, até mesmo tu me terás repudiado três vezes." Ele repetiu esta declaração ao relatar o que aconteceu mais tarde. — Mr 14:30, 72.

Evidentemente, em vez de ser uma contradição, a questão é que um escritor fornece um relato mais pormenorizado do que os outros. O incidente envolve Pedro, e visto que Marcos era seu companheiro chegado, durante algum tempo, e, sem dúvida, escreveu seu relato evangélico com a ajuda de Pedro, ou à base do testemunho dele, é razoável que o relato de Marcos seja mais pormenorizado. (Em outras ocasiões, Mateus forneceu a descrição mais pormenorizada de certos eventos, conforme se vê numa comparação de Mt 8:28 com Mr 5:2 e Lu 8:27, e de Mt 20:30 com Mr 10:46 e Lu 18:35.) Assim, ao passo que Marcos citou a declaração de Jesus, a respeito de o galo cantar duas vezes, os outros três escritores mencionaram apenas o segundo e último canto, que induziu Pedro a se entregar ao choro; mas com isto não negaram ter havido um anterior canto do galo.

Concorda-se, em geral, que o canto do galo há muito tem sido e ainda é um indicador de hora nas terras ao L do Mediterrâneo, e que há um canto adiantado do galo por volta da meia-noite, e outro mais tarde, perto do amanhecer, ao passo que alguns indicam um canto adicional entre estes dois. O Commentary (Comentário) de Clarke diz a respeito de João 13:38: "Os judeus, e algumas outras nações, dividiam os cantos do galo em a primeira, a segunda e a terceira vezes." Embora talvez não seja possível atribuir atualmente horários específicos a esses periódicos cantos do galo, basta saber que existiam, e que, antes de o galo cantar duas vezes, ocorrerem as três negações de Pedro.

GAMA. Veja CORÇA.

GAMALIEL [possivelmente: Recompensa (Tratamento Devido da Parte) de Deus].

1. Filho de Pedazur, da tribo de Manassés, e maioral da sua tribo. (Núm 1:10, 16) Gamaliel era um dos 12 maiorais designados por Jeová para ajudar Moisés e Arão na contagem dos filhos de Israel, dos de 20 anos de idade para cima, para o exército. (Núm 1:1-4, 10) Ele era o encarregado do exército da sua tribo, que fazia parte da divisão de três tribos do acampamento de Efraim. (Núm 2:18, 20; 10:23) Depois de erguido o tabernáculo, os maiorais fizeram suas oferendas, as quais, segundo orientação de Jeová, deviam ser usadas para a execução do serviço da tenda de reunião. Gamaliel também apresentou uma oferenda no oitavo dia para a inauguração do altar. — Núm 7:1-5, 10, 11, 54-59.

2. Membro do Sinédrio, fariseu e instrutor da Lei, a cujos pés o apóstolo Paulo havia sido instruído segundo o rigor da Lei ancestral. (At 5:34; 22:3) Considera-se, em geral, que este Gamaliel é Gamaliel, o Velho. Gamaliel, o Velho, era muito estimado, sendo o primeiro a quem se concedeu o título de "Rabban". Este título honorífico era ainda mais elevado do que o de "Rabi". A respeito dele diz a Míxena (Sotah 9:15): "Quando morreu o Rabban Gamaliel, o Velho, cessou a glória da Lei, e morreram a pureza e a abstinência." (Segundo traduzido para o inglês por H. Danby.) Evidentemente, Gamaliel tinha mente aberta e não nutria conceitos fanáticos, conforme se reflete no conselho que deu na ocasião em que Pedro e os outros apóstolos foram trazidos perante o Sinédrio. Por citar exemplos do passado, Gamaliel ilustrou a sabedoria de não se interferir na obra dos apóstolos, e então acrescentou: "Se este desígnio ou esta obra for de homens, será derrubada; mas, se for de Deus, não podereis derrubá-los . . . podereis talvez ser realmente achados como lutadores contra Deus." — At 5:34-39.

GAMUL [possivelmente: Alguém Desmamado (ou: Alguém que Recebe o Tratamento Devido)]. Sacerdote arônico, no tempo de Davi, que foi escolhido por sortes para atuar como chefe da 22.ª turma sacerdotal em conexão com o serviço no santuário. — 1Cr 24:1-3, 5, 17.

GANÂNCIA. Desejo descomedido ou voraz. Tanto o verbo hebraico hha·mádh como o verbo grego e·pi·thy·mé·o significam "desejo". (Sal 68:16; Mt 13:17) Às vezes, estas palavras, segundo o contexto, podem transmitir a ideia dum desejo mau, egoísta. (Êx 20:17; Ro 7:7) A palavra grega ple·o·ne·xí·a significa literalmente "desejo de ter mais" e é usada na Bíblia para denotar "ganância" e "cobiça". — Ef 4:19; 5:3, n.; Col 3:5.

A ganância pode manifestar-se no amor ao dinheiro, no desejo de poder ou lucro, ou na voracidade por alimento e bebida, sexo ou outras coisas materiais. As Escrituras advertem os cristãos contra esta característica degradante e ordenam que eles evitem associar-se com alguém que se chama "irmão" cristão e que pratica a ganância. (1Co 5:9-11) Os gananciosos são classificados junto com fornicadores, idólatras, adúlteros, homens mantidos para propósitos desnaturais, ladrões, beberrões, injuriadores e extorsores, e, de fato, os gananciosos, em geral, praticam algumas destas coisas. Quem não se desviar da sua ganância, não herdará o Reino de Deus. — 1Co 6:9, 10.

Ao condenar conversa tola e piadas obscenas, o apóstolo Paulo ordena que a fornicação e a impure-za, ou ganância, "não sejam nem mesmo mencionadas entre vós". Isto pode significar não somente que tais práticas não devem existir entre os cristãos, mas também que nem mesmo devem ser assunto de conversa destinada a satisfazer a carne. — Ef 5:3; compare isso com Fil 4:8.

Manifesta-se em Ações. A ganância se manifestará em algum ato patente que revelará o desejo errado ou descomedido da pessoa. O escritor bíblico Tiago nos diz que o desejo errado, quando se torna fértil, dá à luz o pecado. (Tg 1:14, 15) O ganancioso, portanto, pode ser identificado pelas suas ações. O apóstolo Paulo declara que ser ganancioso significa ser idólatra. (Ef 5:5) Tal pessoa, no seu desejo ganancioso, transforma a coisa desejada em seu deus, colocando-a acima do serviço e da adoração do Criador. — Ro 1:24, 25.

Aparta de Deus. Os cristãos saíram dum mundo cheio de todas as formas de má conduta. Paulo salienta que essas coisas não somente são realizadas, mas também são buscadas com ganância, avidamente. Aqueles que praticam tais coisas estão "apartados da vida que pertence a Deus". Os que se tornam cristãos verificam que Cristo, seu Exemplo, estava livre de tais coisas, e, por isso, eles têm de transformar a mente, revestindo-se da nova personalidade cristã. (Ef 4:17-24; Ro 12:2) Ao mesmo tempo, vivem no meio de pessoas gananciosas do mundo e têm de ter cuidado de manter a pureza como iluminadores no mundo. — 1Co 5:9, 10; Fil 2:14, 15.

A avidez de ganho desonesto desqualificaria o homem de ser servo ministerial na congregação cristã. (1Ti 3:8) Visto que tais homens devem apresentar-se à congregação como exemplos, segue-se que este princípio se aplica a todos os membros da congregação. (1Pe 5:2, 3) Vê-se que isto é verdade especialmente à luz da declaração de Paulo, no sentido de que pessoas gananciosas não herdarão o Reino. — Ef 5:5.

Cobiça. Quando a ganância tem por objetivo conseguir aquilo que pertence a outro, ela se torna cobiça. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, usa-se a mesma palavra grega para "ganância" e "cobiça". Jesus Cristo declarou que a cobiça avilta o homem (Mr 7:20-23) e advertiu contra ela. Acompanhou este aviso com a ilustração do rico cobiçoso que, ao morrer, não mais tirava proveito ou tinha controle da sua riqueza, e também estava na condição lastimável de não ser "rico para com Deus". (Lu 12:15-21) Os cristãos são informados de que sua vida "tem sido escondida com o Cristo" e que, portanto, têm de amortecer os membros do seu corpo com respeito à cobiça, ao desejo nocivo e a toda a impureza. — Col 3:3, 5.

GANCHO, COLCHETE. Peça curva, ou de ângulo agudo, de metal ou de outra substância, às vezes com farpa.

Ganchos ou colchetes de ouro eram usados no tabernáculo para unir as duas grandes seções da cobertura de linho bordado, e colchetes de cobre para as duas seções de cobertura de pelos de cabra. (Êx 26:1, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11; 36:13, 18; 39:33) A cortina entre o Santo e o Santíssimo foi suspensa de colchetes, evidentemente de ouro (Êx 26:31-33), assim como também o reposteiro da entrada do tabernáculo. — Êx 26:36, 37.

Os pescadores da antiguidade usavam anzóis. (Hab 1:14, 15; Is 19:1, 6-8; Mt 17:24-27) Ganchos de açougueiro são mencionados na Bíblia. (Am 4:2) Ganchos, possivelmente espinhos, eram também usados para conduzir animais, especialmente animais selvagens. — Ez 19:3, 4, 6, 9 n.

Cativos humanos às vezes eram conduzidos por meio de ganchos nos lábios, no nariz ou na língua. Uma representação pictórica assíria mostra o rei segurando três cativos por cordas presas a ganchos nos lábios deles, ao passo que ele cega um deles com uma lança. Portanto, o Rei Senaqueribe, da Assíria, podia entender quando Jeová lhe falou de modo figurativo por intermédio do profeta Isaías: "Hei de pôr meu gancho no teu nariz e meu freio entre os teus lábios, e deveras te conduzirei de volta pelo caminho por onde vieste." — 2Rs 19:20, 21, 28; Is 37:29.

Jeová falou figurativamente ao Faraó do Egito, em quem Israel havia tolamente confiado para prover apoio contra Babilônia: "Eu vou pôr ganchos nas tuas queixadas . . . E vou fazer-te subir do meio dos teus canais do Nilo . . . E vou abandonar-te ao ermo . . . E todos os habitantes do Egito terão de saber que eu sou Jeová, visto que eles, como apoio, mostraram ser um caniço para a casa de Israel." (Ez 29:1-7) A linguagem era apropriada; o historiador Heródoto (II, 70) declarou que os egípcios usavam um gancho para capturar o crocodilo e tirá-lo da água. Jeová predisse também que poria ganchos nas maxilas de "Gogue da terra de Magogue" e o faria sair para o ataque final contra o povo de Deus e para a sua própria execução. — Ez 38:1-4; 39:1-4.

GANGRENA. Necrose dos tecidos em uma parte do organismo, tal como um dedo do pé ou o próprio pé, em resultado da obstrução da circulação do sangue. Na gangrena seca, em que as artérias ficam bloqueadas ou obstruídas (como, por exemplo, na arteriosclerose), a parte afetada fica preta e seca, e perde toda a sensibilidade. A gangrena úmida costuma afetar vasos sanguíneos bem pequenos — capilares e veias pequenas. Na gangrena gasosa, as bactérias presentes no tecido necrosado ou necrosante podem formar bolhas sob a pele, resultando num rápido desprendimento de tecidos. Visto que usualmente há bactérias associadas com a gangrena, a infecção resultante frequentemente provoca a rápida difusão da necrose de células. Quando as bactérias se espalham para a corrente sanguínea, a condição se torna ainda mais crítica, resultando na morte, a menos que se administre prontamente o tratamento adequado.

O apóstolo Paulo usa a palavra de modo figurativo a respeito do ensino de doutrinas falsas e de "falatórios vãos que violam o que é santo". Ele destaca o perigo que tal conversa representa para a congregação inteira, dizendo: "Porque passarão a impiedade cada vez maior e a palavra deles se espalhará como gangrena." Ele cita então exemplos: "Himeneu e Fileto são desses. Estes mesmos se desviaram da verdade, dizendo que a ressurreição já ocorreu; e estão subvertendo a fé que alguns têm." (2Ti 2:16-18) Em vista do anterior simbolismo usado por Paulo, retratando a congregação como um corpo com muitos membros — pés, mãos, e assim por diante (1Co 12) — seu uso figurado da gangrena, com o perigo que constitui para o corpo humano, dá forte ênfase à importância de se eliminarem da congregação cristã as doutrinas falsas e a conversa ímpia.

Garça; uma ave que, segundo a Lei, não devia ser consumida pelos israelitas.

GARÇA [hebr.: 'ana·fáh]. Ave que não devia ser consumida, segundo a Lei mosaica. (Le 11:13, 19; De 14:12, 18) Alguns acham que o nome hebraico deriva duma raiz que significa "respirar forte", ou, possivelmente, "bufar", como quando irado. Outros sugerem que o nome está mais relacionado com a palavra hebraica para "nariz" ('af), talvez como descrição do bico da ave. Visto que a Bíblia diz "a garça segundo a sua espécie" ("as diferentes [diversas] espécies de garça", BJ), o nome hebraico pode muito bem incluir as diversas variedades dentro da família das garças (cientificamente chamadas de Ardeídeos), tais como a garça propriamente, a garça-branca (egreta) e o abetouro. Todas essas aves têm longo bico afiado e algumas são famosas pelo incomum som estrepitoso que produzem quando perturbadas ou excitadas.

As aves da família da garça são basicamente pernaltas que frequentam brejos, pântanos, rios interioranos e lagos. Têm um longo pescoço delgado e pernas compridas, nuas e extraordinariamente finas, com dedos longos, inclusive um dedo grande virado para trás. Caminham na água com passo majestoso, à procura de rãs, siris ou pequenos répteis; ou ficam estáticas, pacientemente esperando que peixes pequenos venham ao seu alcance, quando com uma rápida investida do longo pescoço da ave o bico pontiagudo espeta o peixe. Suas grandes asas as sustentam num voo majestoso, bastante vagaroso, com as pernas esticadas para trás, mas com o pescoço longo encolhido para trás, diferindo assim do grou e do íbis, que voam com o pescoço e as pernas estendidas.

Na Palestina há diversas variedades de garças: a comum ou garça-cinzenta (Ardea cinerea), a garça (Ardea goliath) e a garça-vermelha (Ardea purpurea). Elas têm até 1,5 m de comprimento e são encontradas em volta do mar da Galileia, ao longo das margens do Jordão e do Quisom, em regiões de brejo e ao longo da costa marítima.

A garça-branca está entre as aves mais graciosas e belas da família das garças, frequentemente tendo plumagem completamente branca. Tendo um comprimento de 50-90 cm, a garça-branca é comum na Palestina. A garça-boieira (Bubulcus ibis) é frequentemente encontrada junto ao gado no pasto, alimentando-se dos insetos disponíveis.

O abetouro, uma variedade mais forte e mais acastanhada de garça, também é encontrado nas regiões pantanosas da Palestina. Tendo um comprimento de uns 75 cm, o abetouro eurásico (Botaurus stellaris) caracteriza-se pela plumagem listrada de preto, fulvo e branco; as partes de baixo são fulvas com tiras castanhas, e as pernas são verde-amareladas. Esta combinação de cores harmoniza-se bem com os juncos dos brejos que habita, e, quando em perigo, a ave se posta imóvel com pescoço e bico apontando para cima. Isto, junto com as listras verticais, faz com que se mescle perfeitamente com o ambiente, em camuflagem eficaz. Outra variedade encontrada na Palestina é o garçote (Ixobrychus minutus). O abetouro também é famoso pelo profundo som retumbante ou resfolegante que produz ao expelir o ar da goela, ao mesmo tempo retorcendo violentamente a cabeça e o pescoço.

GAREBE [Sarnento].

1. Um dos poderosos de Davi, itrita da tribo de Judá. — 2Sa 23:8, 38; 1Cr 2:4, 5, 18, 19, 50, 53; 11:26, 40.

2. Morro mencionado numa profecia de restauração escrita por Jeremias (31:39), evidentemente indicando os limites ocidentais da cidade reconstruída de Jerusalém. Desconhece-se sua localização exata.

GARGANTA. Veja PESCOÇO.

GARMITA [De (Pertencente a) Gerem (Osso)]. Esta designação está vinculada com Queila, nome que aparece numa lista dos descendentes de Judá. — 1Cr 4:19.

GÁTÃO. Quarto filho mencionado de Elifaz, primogênito de Esaú. Gátão tornou-se um dos xeques dos filhos de Esaú. — Gên 36:10, 11, 15, 16; 1Cr 1:36.

GATE [Lagar de Vinho]. Cidade dos senhores do eixo dos filisteus. (1Sa 6:17, 18) Visto que ficava ao L da planície da Filístia, Gate se destacava no domínio alternado da região pelos israelitas e pelos filisteus. Gate era o lugar de nascimento de Golias e de outros guerreiros gigantes, e era ocupado pelos anaquins na época em que Israel cruzou o Jordão para a Terra da Promessa. (Jos 11:22; 1Sa 17:4; 2Sa 21:15-22; 1Cr 20:4-8) Os moradores de Gate eram chamados de geteus. — Jos 13:3.

A conquista da Terra da Promessa por Josué não incluiu o território ocupado pelos filisteus. Esta devia ser realizada mais tarde. Não obstante, quando Jeová mandou que Josué designasse o território às tribos, a parte designada a Judá incluía o território em que Gate estava situada. — Jos 13:2, 3; 15:1, 5, 12.

Em épocas não especificadas, tanto os efraimitas como os benjamitas tinham escaramuças com os geteus, conforme as genealogias indicam incidentalmente. — 1Cr 7:20, 21; 8:13.

Nos dias de Samuel, a capturada Arca do Pacto foi levada a Gate, com consequências desastrosas para os habitantes da cidade. (1Sa 5:8, 9) Pouco depois, Israel subjugou os filisteus, e certas cidades que os filisteus haviam tomado de Israel "voltavam a Israel, desde Ecrom até Gate". (1Sa 7:14) Posteriormente, quando Davi matou o gigante geteu Golias, Israel perseguiu os filisteus até Ecrom e Gate. — 1Sa 17:23, 48-53.

Depois disso, quando Davi se viu obrigado a fugir de Saul, ele se refugiou em Gate. Quando os servos de Aquis, rei de Gate, começaram a dizer: "Não é este Davi, rei do país?", Davi ficou com medo e fingiu-se louco, a fim de poder escapar. (1Sa 21:10-15) Davi compôs dois salmos que recordam esta experiência em Gate. (Sal 34:cab.; 56:cab.) Na próxima visita de Davi a Gate, ele não foi como fugitivo solitário, mas como líder de 600 guerreiros e suas famílias. Sem dúvida, ansioso de assegurar o apoio de Davi contra Saul, Aquis concedeu a ele e aos seus homens asilo na cidade de Ziclague, até que Saul foi morto 16 meses mais tarde, após o que Davi se mudou para Hébron. (1Sa 27:2-28:2; 29:1-11; 2Sa 1:1; 2:1-3) Na sua endecha por Saul e Jonatã, Davi mencionou que a notícia a respeito da morte de Saul causaria alegria e júbilo nas cidades filisteias de Gate e de Ascalom. — 2Sa 1:20.

Durante o reinado de Davi, Gate e suas aldeias dependentes passaram para mãos israelitas. (1Cr 18:1) Alguns homens de Gate tornaram-se apoiadores leais de Davi, e quando Davi fugiu de Absalão, havia 600 geteus entre os que o acompanhavam. (2Sa 15:18) Mas, durante o domínio de Salomão, Aquis ainda é mencionado como rei de Gate. (1Rs 2:39-41) Evidentemente, Aquis era príncipe vassalo, e não rei no sentido costumeiro. (Veja SENHORES DO EIXO.) Roboão, sucessor de Salomão, reconstruiu e fortificou Gate. — 2Cr 11:5-8.

O Rei Hazael, da Síria, tomou Gate do Rei Jeoás, de Judá, algum tempo depois do 23.º ano de Jeoás (876 AEC). (2Rs 12:6, 17) Os filisteus, mais tarde, devem ter recuperado o controle da cidade, porque Uzias a recapturou na sua campanha contra eles. (2Cr 26:3, 6) Os profetas Amós, e, posteriormente, Miqueias, mencionam Gate como cidade estrangeira. (Am 6:2; Miq 1:10) Após a jactância do rei assírio Sargão, de tê-la conquistado, pouco depois de 740 AEC, não há mais nenhuma referência histórica a Gate, e a posterior menção de cidades filisteias não a inclui. — Sof 2:4; Je 25:17, 20; Za 9:5, 6.

Desconhece-se a localização exata de Gate. Embora se tenham proposto diversos lugares, o resultado das escavações arqueológicas na maioria destes sítios não se enquadra na descrição histórica da cidade de Gate. Alguns peritos preferem agora Tell es-Safi (Tel Zafit), 18,5 km ao ESE de Asdode. Yohanan Aharoni declara: "Visto que não sobra nenhum tel [colina] adequado nesta região mais meridional, devemos reconsiderar uma proposta anterior, de equacionar Gate com Tell es-Safi. Este é um sítio grande e notável, com uma cidade mais baixa, contemporânea, espalhada ao sopé, na qual se descobriu uma abundância de cerâmica filisteia. Sua posição, no lugar em que o uádi es-Sant (o vale de Elá) penetra na Sefelá ocidental, corresponde muito bem ao relato da vitória de Davi sobre Golias, o geteu. A luta deles ocorreu mais para o leste, entre Socó e Azeca (1 Sam. 17.1), e os israelitas perseguiram depois os filisteus 'até Gate . . . e até os portões de Ecrom, de modo que os filisteus feridos caíram no caminho desde Saaraim até Gate e Ecrom' (v. 52)." — The Land of the Bible (A Terra da Bíblia), traduzido para o inglês e editado por A. Rainey, 1979, p. 271.

GATE-HÉFER [Lagar de Vinho de Héfer (Cavar)]. Cidade fronteiriça de Zebulão (Jos 19:10, 13) e lugar de origem do profeta Jonas. (2Rs 14:25) Costuma ser identificada com Khirbet ez-Zurra' (Tel Gat Hefer), uns 4 km ao NNE de Nazaré e logo ao O de Meshhed (Mashhad), lugar tradicional do túmulo de Jonas. Explorações de superfície feitas em Khirbet ez-Zurra' parecem corroborar as declarações bíblicas, de que o lugar estava ocupado em ambos os períodos dos relatos mencionados.

GATE-RIMOM [Lagar de Vinho Junto à Romãzeira].

1. Cidade de Dã (Jos 19:40, 41, 45) designada aos levitas coatitas. (Jos 21:20, 23, 24) Primeiro Crônicas 6:66-70 parece constituir Gate-Rimom em cidade efraimita. Todavia, à base do relato paralelo em Josué 21:23, 24, hebraístas acreditam que, por erro de escriba, uma parte do texto foi acidentalmente omitida e perdida. De modo que sugerem que se insira o seguinte (correspondendo a Jos 21:23) antes de 1 Crônicas 6:69: "E da tribo de Dã: Elteque e seus pastios, Gibetom e seus pastios . . ." Esta pode ter sido a versão original. Todavia, não se deve desperceber a possibilidade de que Gate-Rimom era uma cidade danita encravada no território de Efraim.

Gate-Rimom costuma ser identificada com Tell Jerisheh (Tel Gerisa), a uns 8 km ao NE da moderna Tel Aviv-Yafo.

2. Cidade de Manassés, dada aos levitas coatitas. (Jos 21:20, 25) Visto que o relato similar em 1 Crônicas 6:70 diz "Bileão", muitos peritos acreditam que este último nome ocorria originalmente em lugar de Gate-Rimom, em Josué 21:25. — Veja IBLEÃO.

GAZA.

1. Antiga cidade alistada na mais primitiva descrição das fronteiras cananeias. (Gên 10:19) Além de cerca de 20 referências bíblicas a Gaza, antigos registros e inscrições egípcios de Ramsés II, Tutmés III e Seti I, mencionam a cidade. Gaza era aparentemente a cidade mais sudoeste designada à tribo de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 47; Jz 6:3, 4) Seus habitantes chamavam-se gazitas. — Jos 13:3; Jz 16:2.

Alguns identificariam Gaza com Tell el-'Ajul (Tel Bet 'Eglayim), mas as escavações arqueológicas feitas ali não confirmam isso. Em geral, a antiga cidade é ligada à moderna Gaza (Ghazzeh; 'Azza), situada a uns 80 km ao OSO de Jerusalém. Embora separada do Mediterrâneo por uns 5 km de ondulantes dunas de areia, Gaza está situada numa região bem regada, conhecida por seus olivais, árvores frutíferas e sicômoros, videiras e cereais. A agricultura provavelmente contribuía para a prosperidade da antiga Gaza. Mas a sua importância provinha mormente da localização na estrada principal que ligava o Egito à Palestina. Isto tornava Gaza um "portão" tanto para caravanas como para trânsito militar.

Ocupada pelos Filisteus. Algum tempo antes do Êxodo de Israel do Egito, em 1513 AEC, os caftorins camitas (Gên 10:6, 13, 14) desapossaram os "avins, que moravam em povoados até Gaza". (De 2:23) Quando os israelitas entraram na Terra da Promessa, a própria Gaza era uma cidade filisteia, e seus habitantes incluíam alguns dos anaquins. Embora as operações de guerra de Israel, sob Josué, se estendessem até Gaza, parece que a cidade não foi tomada. Continuou sendo uma cidade filisteia, e alguns dos anaquins continuaram a morar ali. (Jos 10:41; 11:22; 13:2, 3) Designada a Judá, Gaza foi depois conquistada por esta tribo, mas os de Judá não retiveram o controle sobre esta cidade. (Jos 15:20, 47; Jz 1:18) Nos dias de Sansão, Gaza era novamente uma cidade fortificada dos filisteus, com uma "casa", usada para a adoração de Dagom, que podia acomodar cerca de 3.000 pessoas, ou mais, no terraço.

Em certa ocasião, enquanto Sansão estava em Gaza, ele "se levantou à meia-noite e foi segurar as portas do portão da cidade e as duas ombreiras, e arrancou-as junto com a tranca, e as pôs sobre os seus ombros e foi carregá-las para cima ao cume do monte que está defronte de [que enfrenta] Hé-bron". (Jz 16:1-3) Hébron ficava a uns 60 km de Gaza. A localização exata do monte que enfrentava Hébron é incerta. Carregar Sansão o portão e as ombreiras a qualquer distância, e ainda mais monte acima, era claramente uma manifestação de poder milagroso tornado possível unicamente pelo espírito de Jeová.

Mais tarde, Sansão causou o colapso da já mencionada casa de adoração de Dagom, o que resultou na sua própria morte e na dos filisteus reunidos ali. — Jz 16:21-30.

Parece que Gaza continuou a ser uma cidade filisteia durante todo o período dos juízes (1Sa 6:17) e durante o governo dos reis de Israel. O Rei Salomão exerceu domínio até Gaza, no SO, mas, evidentemente, os filisteus ainda se encontravam ali. — 1Rs 4:21, 24.

Sob Domínio Assírio e Babilônico. Perto do fim do nono século AEC, Jeová, por meio do seu profeta Amós, declarou que ele enviaria "um fogo" sobre as muralhas de Gaza, em retribuição a ter tomado os exilados para entregá-los aos edomitas. (Am 1:6, 7) Embora os "exilados" não sejam especificamente identificados como hebreus, a alusão provavelmente é aos cativos tomados pelos filisteus em incursões contra Judá. — Veja 2Cr 21:16, 17; Jl 3:4-6.

Não muito tempo depois disso, por volta de meados do oitavo século AEC, Gaza começou a sofrer o "fogo" da guerra. Segundo anais assírios, Tiglate-Pileser III conquistou Gaza, mas o rei dela, Hanon, fugiu para o Egito. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 283) Parece que Hanon pôde logo voltar a Gaza, porque Sargão II alega ter derrotado tanto a ele como o exército egípcio sob Sib'e, aliado dele. Sargão II alega ter pessoalmente capturado Hanon e o levado embora em grilhões. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 285.

Daquela época em diante, em geral, Gaza parece ter sido leal à Assíria. Portanto, pode ser que golpear o Rei Ezequias os filisteus até Gaza tenha sido uma fase da revolta dele contra a Assíria. (2Rs 18:1, 7, 8) Depois desta revolta, o Rei Senaqueribe lançou sua campanha contra Judá, e, segundo os seus anais, entregou as cidades capturadas de Judá a Mitinti, rei de Asdode, Padi, rei de Ecrom (que ficara encarcerado em Jerusalém), e Silibel, rei de Gaza. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, pp. 287, 288.

No tempo de Jeremias, o exército egípcio golpeou Gaza. (Je 47:1) Antes deste evento, a declaração de Jeová contra os filisteus indicava que os aguardava uma calamidade procedente do N: "A calvície tem de chegar a Gaza." (Je 47:2-5; veja também Je 25:17, 20) Conforme sugerido por outras passagens de Jeremias (1:14; 46:20), as "águas desde o norte", mencionadas em Jeremias 47:2, evidentemente indicam os exércitos babilônicos. O Rei Nabucodonosor, de Babilônia, de fato, obteve controle sobre esta região (2Rs 24:1, 7), e o rei de Gaza é mencionado em inscrições babilônicas. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 308) Consequentemente, as palavras "antes de Faraó passar a golpear Gaza" (Je 47:1) parecem simplesmente identificar o tempo em que a declaração de Jeová a respeito dos filisteus foi feita a Jeremias. Elas não estariam necessariamente relacionadas de forma direta com a vindoura expressão de julgamento "desde o norte", considerada depois disso.

Destruída. O profeta Sofonias, contemporâneo de Jeremias, soou um aviso similar para Gaza, da parte de Jeová: "Tornar-se-á uma cidade abandonada." (Sof 2:4) E a profecia de Zacarias, registrada depois da queda de Babilônia, apontava para calamidades futuras: "[Gaza] também sentirá dores muito severas." (Za 9:5) A história confirma o cumprimento das calamidades preditas. Na última metade do quarto século AEC, Alexandre, o Grande, depois de um sítio de cinco meses (dois meses, segundo Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XI, 325 [viii, 4]), tomou Gaza. Muitos dos habitantes foram mortos e os sobreviventes foram vendidos como escravos. Mais de 200 anos depois, o judeu Alexandre Janeu, depois de um sítio de um ano, devastou a cidade completamente. — Jewish Antiquities, XIII, 364 (xiii, 3).

Embora Gabínio, governador romano da Síria, ordenasse a reconstrução de Gaza, isto provavelmente foi feito em outro lugar. (Jewish Antiquities, XIV, 87, 88 [v, 3]) Alguns peritos acham que a palavra grega é·re·mos ([lugar] desolado]), em Atos 8:26, se refere à antiga Gaza abandonada (por exemplo, Al [AT; CBC; Fi] reza: "Gaza, que está deserta"). Outros entendem que é·re·mos se refere à estrada que levava à cidade, daí a versão: "Esta é a estrada do deserto." — NM; compare isso com BMD, JB, PIB.

2. Cidade com aldeias dependentes, situada no território de Efraim. (1Cr 7:28) Desconhece-se a sua localização exata. Gaza talvez seja um lugar na vizinhança da antiga Ai, se não for esta mesma cidade. A leitura "Ayyah", encontrada em numerosas traduções da Bíblia, tem o apoio de muitos manuscritos hebraicos. Todavia, há também evidência em apoio de "Gaza" em outros manuscritos hebraicos, bem como nos Targuns.

GAZÃO [possivelmente: Lagarta [isto é: um cortador]]. Antepassado de alguns netineus que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 48; Ne 7:46, 51.

GAZELA [hebr.: tseví; tsevi·yáh (fêmea de gazela); tsa·vá'; tseva·'áh (fêmea de gazela); gr.: dor·kás]. Qualquer dentre uma variedade de antílopes pequenos, rápidos e graciosos. A Gazella dorcas, encontrada na Arábia, no Egito, na Palestina e na Síria, provavelmente era conhecida aos antigos hebreus. Este animal tem cerca de 1 m de comprimento e uma altura de uns 60 cm no garrote. Tanto o macho como a fêmea tem chifres anelados, em forma de lira, que podem atingir até 30 cm de comprimento. A coloração geral desta gazela é areia-pálida, com listras escuras e claras no focinho, e com as partes inferiores e traseiras brancas. O pelo é curto e liso. Outra variedade de gazela com que os israelitas talvez estivessem familiarizados é a Gazella arabica, que é um pouco maior, mais escura, e de cor castanho-clara. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 955.

As Escrituras fazem alusão à velocidade da gazela, a qual é classificada entre os mamíferos mais velozes. (Cân 2:17; 8:14) A ligeireza de Asael, irmão de Joabe, e de certos gaditas, foi comparada à da gazela. (2Sa 2:18; 1Cr 12:8) Predisse-se que a queda de Babilônia faria com que seus apoiadores e dependentes estrangeiros fugissem como uma gazela para as suas respectivas terras. (Is 13:14) Esta criatura é também citada como exemplo de pronta ação para evitar ser enlaçada. — Pr 6:5.

Provavelmente com referência à sua beleza e graça, a gazela figura em certas descrições vívidas em O Cântico de Salomão (2:9; 4:5; 7:3). A gazela é também mencionada no juramento sob o qual a sulamita pôs as filhas de Jerusalém, na realidade compelindo-as por tudo o que é belo e gracioso. — Cân 2:7; 3:5.

Pelos termos da Lei dada por meio de Moisés, a gazela podia ser usada como alimento. (De 12:15, 22; 14:4, 5; 15:22) Constituía uma das carnes regularmente fornecidas para a mesa suntuosa de Salomão. — 1Rs 4:22, 23.

GAZEZ [Tosquiador]. Primeiro Crônicas 2:46 diz que Efá, concubina de Calebe, deu à luz Harã, Moza e Gazez, e depois declara que Harã "tornou-se pai de Gazez". Portanto, pode ter havido dois homens chamados Gazez: (1) um filho de Calebe, e (2) um neto de Calebe. Mas, se a expressão: "Quanto a Harã, tornou-se pai de Gazez", for um simples esclarecimento identificando o Gazez mencionado inicialmente, não como filho de Calebe, mas como seu neto, então significaria que havia apenas um Gazez, a saber, o filho de Harã e neto de Calebe.

GAZITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Gaza]. Habitantes de Gaza, palavra aplicada aos filisteus nas duas vezes que ocorre. — Jos 13:2, 3; Jz 16:1, 2; veja GAZA N.º 1.

GEADA. Camada branco-prateada de cristais de gelo formada por condensação direta em temperaturas abaixo de zero graus. Os cristais de gelo são compridos e têm forma de agulha; usualmente são perpendiculares aos objetos em que ocorrem e são mais abundantes nas beiradas. A umidade na atmosfera congela sem passar pelo estado líquido, condensando-se em árvores, plantas e outros objetos, usualmente à noite. É frequentemente encontrada nas janelas.

Jeová fala a Jó sobre a "geada do céu", sem dúvida, porque é produzida pela condensação proveniente da atmosfera. (Jó 38:29) O salmista diz a respeito de Jeová: "Dispersa a geada como cinzas." (Sal 147:16) Jeová produz a geada com a mesma facilidade que o homem espalha cinzas com a mão. Ela cobre ou reveste coisas tais como árvores, grama e casas com uma camada como se cinzas tivessem sido espalhadas sobre elas pela mão invisível de Jeová.

O maná provido por Jeová para os israelitas, durante os 40 anos de peregrinação deles no ermo, é descrito assim em Êxodo 16:14: "A camada de orvalho se evaporava e eis que havia na superfície do ermo uma coisa miúda, flocosa, miúda como a geada sobre a terra."

GEAZI. Ajudante do profeta Eliseu.

Quando Eliseu ficou imaginando o que se poderia fazer a favor duma hospitaleira mulher sunamita, foi Geazi quem trouxe à atenção do seu amo que ela não tinha filhos e que o marido dela era idoso. Assim, Eliseu disse a ela que seria recompensada com um filho. Anos mais tarde, o menino milagrosamente concedido ficou doente e morreu. Nisso a sunamita foi cavalgando para se encontrar com Eliseu, no monte Carmelo, e agarrou os pés dele. Ao ver isso, Geazi tentou empurrá-la, mas foi admoestado para deixá-la em paz. Depois de ela terminar de falar, Eliseu mandou imediatamente Geazi à sua frente até o menino, ao passo que Eliseu e a mulher o seguiram. Enquanto estavam em caminho para lá, Geazi veio ao encontro deles, trazendo a notícia de que, embora tivesse colocado o bastão de Eliseu sobre a face do menino, "o rapazinho não acordou". No entanto, pouco depois de chegar, Eliseu ressuscitou o filho da sunamita. — 2Rs 4:12-37.

Posteriormente, por causa duma fome de sete anos a sobrevir, Eliseu recomendou que a sunamita e sua família fixassem residência como forasteiros onde quer que lhes fosse possível. Depois da fome, ela retornou da Filístia para Israel e se chegou ao rei com a solicitação de que lhe fossem devolvidos sua casa e seu campo. Aconteceu que, na mesma ocasião, Geazi estava contando ao rei como Eliseu havia ressuscitado o filho desta mulher. Ao ouvir o relato sobre isso da própria sunamita, o rei mandou que tudo fosse devolvido a ela, inclusive tudo o que seu campo havia produzido durante a sua ausência. — 2Rs 8:1-6.

A avidez de lucro egoísta veio a causar a queda de Geazi. Isto se deu com relação à cura de Naamã, o sírio. Embora Eliseu tivesse recusado aceitar um presente de Naamã pela cura da sua lepra (2Rs 5:14-16), Geazi cobiçava um presente e raciocinou que era somente correto recebê-lo. Por isso, correu atrás de Naamã, e, em nome de Eliseu, pediu um talento de prata (no valor de US$ 6.606) e duas mudas de roupa, sob o pretexto de que se destinavam a dois jovens dos filhos dos profetas que teriam chegado da região montanhosa de Efraim. Naamã, de bom grado, não lhe deu apenas um, mas sim dois talentos de prata, bem como as duas mudas de roupa, e mandou que dois ajudantes seus carregassem o presente para Geazi. Em Ofel, Geazi tirou o presente das mãos dos ajudantes, despediu-os, depositou o presente na sua casa, e então se apresentou de mãos vazias a Eliseu, até mesmo negando que tivesse ido a algum lugar, quando perguntado: "Donde vieste, Geazi?" Em resultado disso, Geazi foi atacado de lepra. De modo que a sua ganância, conjugada com o seu logro, custou a Geazi o privilégio de continuar a servir como ajudante de Eliseu, além de trazer a lepra sobre si mesmo e sua prole. — 2Rs 5:20-27.

GEBA [Morro; Colina]. Cidade de Benjamim dada aos coatitas; uma das 13 cidades sacerdotais. (Jos 18:21, 24; 21:17, 19; 1Cr 6:54, 60) Parece que Geba estava situada junto à fronteira setentrional do reino de Judá, daí a expressão "desde Geba até Berseba". (2Rs 23:8) A antiga cidade costuma ser identificada com a aldeia de Jabaʽ, a quase 9 km ao NNE do monte do Templo em Jerusalém. Um vale fundo separa este lugar da localização sugerida da antiga Micmás. No vale há dois morros de encostas íngremes, rochosas. Estes talvez correspondam aos 'rochedos em forma de dente', Bozez e Sené, um "enfrentando Micmás" e o outro "enfrentando Geba". — 1Sa 14:4, 5.

Geba era uma das cidades que figuraram na campanha do Rei Saul contra os filisteus. Evidentemente, seguindo a orientação de seu pai Saul, Jonatã golpeou a "guarnição" filisteia em Geba. (1Sa 13:3, 4) Em retaliação, os filisteus reuniram uma poderosa força em Micmás, o que induziu muitos israelitas, temerosos, a esconder-se, alguns até mesmo fugindo para o outro lado do Jordão. (1Sa 13:5-7) Mais tarde, Jonatã seguiu de Geba até o posto avançado dos filisteus, sem dúvida situado à beira do "desfiladeiro de Micmás". Andando de quatro, Jonatã subiu a passagem íngreme até o posto avançado, e, com a cooperação do seu escudeiro, abateu uns 20 filisteus. — 1Sa 14:6-14; compare isso com 1Sa 13:16, 23.

Anos mais tarde, Asa fortificou Geba com pedras e madeira de Ramá. (1Rs 15:22; 2Cr 16:6) Numa época não especificada na Bíblia, certos habitantes de Geba foram levados ao exílio em Manaate. (1Cr 8:6) O exército assírio, sob Senaqueribe, em caminho para Jerusalém, evidentemente passou por Geba. (Is 10:24, 28-32) Entre os judeus que voltaram do exílio babilônico havia 'filhos de Geba'; a própria cidade também foi reocupada após o retorno. (Esd 2:1, 26; Ne 7:6, 30; 11:31; 12:29) Aludindo à exaltação da reconstruída Jerusalém, o profeta Zacarias falou de a terra colinosa e montanhosa entre Geba e Rimom se tornar rebaixada como o Arabá. — Za 14:10; veja GIBEÁ N.º 2.

GEBAL [possivelmente: Território; Limite], GEBALITAS.

1. Gebal, cidade fenícia na costa do Mediterrâneo, é identificada com a atual Jebeil, a uns 28 km ao NNE de Beirute. Os historiadores acham que Gebal, a Biblos dos gregos, seja uma das cidades mais antigas do Oriente Médio. — Veja Jos 13:5 n.

Jeová incluiu "a terra dos gebalitas" nas regiões ainda a serem tomadas por Israel nos dias de Josué. (Jos 13:1-5) Os críticos se têm aproveitado disso para classificá-lo de incoerência, visto que a cidade de Gebal estava bem ao N de Israel (c. 100 km ao N de Dã) e aparentemente nunca veio a estar sob domínio israelita. Certos peritos sugeriram que o texto hebraico talvez esteja danificado neste versículo e acham que o relato rezava antigamente "a terra adjacente ao Líbano", ou 'até o limite dos gebalitas'. Todavia, deve-se também observar que as promessas de Jeová, em Josué 13:2-7, eram condicionais. De modo que Israel, por causa da sua própria desobediência, talvez nunca tomasse posse de Gebal. — Veja Jos 23:12, 13.

Gebalitas ajudaram Salomão, no século 11 AEC, na preparação dos materiais para a construção do templo. (1Rs 5:18) Jeová alista os "homens idosos de Gebal" entre os que ajudaram a sustentar o poder e a glória comerciais de Tiro. — Ez 27:9.

2. Uma Gebal diferente é alistada junto com Amom e Amaleque no Salmo 83:7, e assim, aparentemente, ficava ao S ou ao L do Mar Morto. Embora se desconheça a sua localização exata, alguns peritos a situam na vizinhança de Petra, a uns 100 km ao NNE do golfo de ʽAqaba.

GEBER [Varão Vigoroso]. Um dos 12 prepostos de Salomão, que tinham a responsabilidade de prover o rei e sua casa de alimentos durante um mês do ano. Geber é identificado como filho de Uri, e é provável que seu filho também servisse como preposto. — 1Rs 4:7, 13, 19.

GEBIM [Valas]. Os habitantes deste lugar procuraram abrigo contra o avanço do exército assírio, quando este investia contra Sião, evidentemente nos dias de Ezequias. (Is 10:24, 31; compare isso com os caps. 36, 37.) Desconhece-se a sua localização exata.

GECO [hebr.: 'ana·qáh; sema·míth]. Lagartixa pequena de corpo usualmente atarracado, com diminutas escamas que lhe cobrem o corpo. Tem olhos relativamente grandes, parecidos aos do gato, e os dedos das patas do geco são comparativamente largos. Os gecos, encontrados em climas quentes, vivem nas florestas, entre rochas, em árvores e às vezes em habitações humanas. Na Palestina, encontram-se seis espécies destas lagartixas noturnas.

O "geco" de palmuras (Hemidactylus turcicus), de Levítico 11:29, 30, é alistado como "impuro" para os israelitas. Em Provérbios 30:28, "o geco de muro" (hebr.: sema·míth) é mencionado como pegando "com as suas próprias mãos" e penetrando no palácio do rei. A respeito dos dedos das patas do geco, diz The International Wildlife Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia Internacional da Vida Selvagem): "Elas dispõem de numerosos ganchos microscópicos que se prendem às mais leves irregularidades, até mesmo às na superfície do vidro, e, assim, o geco pode aderir a todas as superfícies, exceto as do mais alto polimento. Os ganchos são voltados para trás e para baixo, e, para retirá-los, é preciso erguer o dedo, a partir da ponta. Em resultado disso, o geco que sobe numa árvore ou numa parede, ou corre ao longo dum teto, precisa enrolar e desenrolar os dedos a cada passo, com uma velocidade maior do que o olho consegue acompanhar. Alguns dos ganchos são tão pequenos, que é preciso um microscópio de elevada potência para vê-los; todavia, um único dedo provido de vários destes ganchos incrivelmente pequenos consegue suportar um peso diversas vezes superior ao do corpo do geco." — Editada por M. e R. Burton, 1969, Vol. 7, pp. 856, 857.

GEDALIAS [Jeová É Grande].

1. Cantor levita que, no tempo de Davi, foi designado por sortes para ficar encarregado do segundo dos 24 grupos de serviço de 12 músicos cada um. — 1Cr 25:3, 9, 31.

2. Avô do profeta Sofonias e possivelmente descendente do Rei Ezequias. — Sof 1:1.

3. Filho de Pasur; um dos príncipes em Jerusalém, que acusaram Jeremias perante o Rei Zedequias, de enfraquecer os homens combatentes e todo o povo, e que insistiram em que Jeremias fosse morto por causa disso. Esses príncipes, recebendo do rei carta branca, lançaram Jeremias numa cisterna lamacenta. — Je 38:1-6.

4. "Filho de Aicão, filho de Safã." Após a destruição de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, o Rei Nabucodonosor designou Gedalias como governador dos judeus que foram deixados na terra de Judá. Gedalias estabeleceu residência em Mispá, e o profeta Jeremias passou a morar ali. Daí, os chefes militares de Judá, que escaparam de ser capturados, sabendo que Gedalias havia sido designado governador, vieram com seus homens a ele em Mispá. Gedalias assegurou-lhes, sob juramento, que lhes iria bem, desde que continuassem a servir o rei de Babilônia, e ele os incentivou a recolher vinho, azeite e frutas de verão. Até mesmo os judeus dispersos em Moabe, Amom, Edom e outros lugares continuavam a vir a Gedalias.

Tudo isso, evidentemente, não era do agrado de Baalis, rei de Amom, que conseguiu obter a cooperação de Ismael numa trama para assassinar o governador Gedalias. Sabendo disso, Joanã e outros chefes das forças militares aconselharam o governador a respeito disso, mas este não acreditou neles. Joanã até mesmo se chegou a Gedalias em particular e se ofereceu a frustrar a trama por matar Ismael. Mas, Gedalias não quis saber disso, pensando que se caluniava a Ismael. De modo que, quando Ismael, junto com outros dez homens, veio a Mispá, Gedalias não tomou nenhuma precaução. Passou a comer com eles; e enquanto comiam, Ismael e os homens com ele se levantaram e mataram Gedalias, bem como todos os judeus e caldeus que estavam com Gedalias. — 2Rs 25:22-25; Je 39:14; 40:5-41:3.

5. Um dos sacerdotes, no tempo de Esdras, que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras e que prometeram despedi-las. — Esd 10:18, 19.

GEDER [Muro de Pedra]. Cidade de Canaã; seu rei foi um dos 31 conquistados por Josué. (Jos 12:13) Josué 12:7, 8, mostra que ela se encontrava do lado O do Jordão, e sua menção junto com Debir talvez a situe na região da Sefelá. Talvez ela seja a Bete-Gader de 1 Crônicas 2:51. Mas a sua localização exata é incerta. No tempo de Davi, um homem chamado Baal-Hanã, o gederita, estava encarregado dos olivais e dos sicômoros de Davi na Sefelá, e pensa-se que ele talvez procedesse ou de Geder ou de Gedera. — 1Cr 27:28.

GEDERA [Redil de Pedra].

1. Cidade na Sefelá, designada a Judá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 36) Gedera costuma ser identificada com Jedireh (Gedera), a uns 22 km ao ONO do lugar sugerido de Estaol. Alguns dos habitantes desta cidade eram famosos pela sua cerâmica. — 1Cr 4:23.

2. Evidentemente, é o nome dum lugar no território de Benjamim, lar de "Jozabade, o gederatita". (1Cr 12:1, 2, 4) Alguns geógrafos provisoriamente a identificam com Judeira, a cerca de 1,5 km ao NE de Gibeão.

GEDERATITA [De (Pertencente a) Gedera]. Cognome dado a Jozabade, guerreiro benjamita, ambidestro, associado com Davi, e que aparentemente o identifica como de Gedera, de Benjamim. — 1Cr 12:1-4; veja GEDERA N.º 2.

GEDERITA [De (Pertencente a) Geder]. Termo aplicado a Baal-Hanã (1Cr 27:28) e que se acredita derivar do nome da sua cidade natal, quer Geder (Jos 12:13), quer Gedera. — Jos 15:36.

GEDEROTAIM. Nome que significa "Dois Redis de Pedra". Aparece mencionado entre as cidades de Judá na Sefelá, mas sua localização é hoje desconhecida. (Jos 15:20, 33, 36) A Septuaginta grega, em vez de dizer Gederotaim, reza "e seus apriscos", isto é, 'os apriscos' do lugar mencionado antes, Gedera. Esta versão reduziria o total das cidades na lista de 15 para as 14 mencionadas. (Jos 15:33-36) Visto que tal expressão seria incomum em listas assim, alguns sugerem que o texto poderia ser vertido "Gedera ou Gederotaim", em vez de "Gedera e Gederotaim".

GEDEROTE [Redis de Pedra]. Cidade na Sefelá, designada a Judá (Jos 15:20, 33, 41), e um dos lugares tomados pelos filisteus durante o reinado do Rei Acaz (761-746 AEC). (2Cr 28:18, 19) Alguns geógrafos situam Gederote em Qatra, aldeia abandonada numa elevação dentro da atual Gedera, a uns 13 km ao ENE de Asdode, embora outros digam que isto é muito ao O para estar na Sefelá.

GEDOR [Muro de Pedra].

1. Filho de Jeiel, da cidade de Gibeão. Membro da tribo de Benjamim, e tio-avô do Rei Saul. — 1Cr 8:29-31; 9:35-39.

2. Filho de Penuel, da tribo de Judá. Também pode ser o nome de uma cidade. — 1Cr 4:4.

3. Filho de Jerede, também da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 4:18.

4. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:48, 58) É identificada com Khirbet Jedur, a uns 12 km ao N de Hébron. Talvez seja também mencionada em 1 Crônicas 4:18. A menção, no mesmo versículo, de Soco e Zanoa, que aparecem em outros lugares como nomes de cidades, é considerada por alguns como indicando que Gedor provavelmente também era uma cidade, da qual Jerede era fundador, ou "pai".

5. Cidade mencionada em conexão com atividades dos simeonitas. (1Cr 4:24, 39) A Septuaginta grega diz "Gerar". — Veja GERAR.

6. Lugar em Benjamim. (1Cr 12:1, 2, 7) Uma localização sugerida é Khirbet el-Gudeira, a uns 16 km ao NO de Jerusalém.

GEENA. [forma gr. do hebr.: Geh Hin·nóm, "Vale de Hinom"]. Este nome aparece 12 vezes nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, e embora muitos tradutores tomem a liberdade de verter a palavra por "inferno", diversas traduções modernas transliteram a palavra grega gé·en·na. — Mt 5:22, BJ; BMD; CBC; LEB; MC; NM; PIB; So; TEB.

O estreito e fundo Vale de Hinom, mais tarde conhecido por este nome grego, ficava ao S e SO da antiga Jerusalém, e é o atual uádi er-Rababi (Ge Ben Hinnom). (Jos 15:8; 18:16; Je 19:2, 6; veja HINOM, VALE DE.) Os reis Acaz e Manassés, de Judá, empenhavam-se ali em adoração idólatra, a qual incluía fazer sacrifícios humanos por fogo a Baal. (2Cr 28:1, 3; 33:1, 6; Je 7:31, 32; 32:35) Mais tarde, a fim de impedir tal atividade ali no futuro, o fiel Rei Josias mandou poluir este lugar de adoração idólatra, especialmente a parte chamada Tofete. — 2Rs 23:10.

Não É Símbolo de Tormento Eterno. Jesus Cristo associou o fogo com a Geena (Mt 5:22; 18:9; Mr 9:47, 48), assim como fez o discípulo Tiago, único escritor bíblico, além de Mateus, Marcos e Lucas, a usar esta palavra. (Tg 3:6) Alguns comentadores se empenham em relacionar esta característica de fogo na Geena com a queima de sacrifícios humanos, realizada anteriormente ao reinado de Josias, e, nesta base, sustentam que a Geena foi usada por Jesus como símbolo de tormento eterno. No entanto, visto que Jeová Deus expressou repugnância a tal prática, dizendo que era "coisa que eu não havia ordenado e que não me havia subido ao coração" (Je 7:31; 32:35), parece bem improvável que o Filho de Deus, ao considerar o julgamento divino, transformasse tal prática idólatra em base para o sentido simbólico da Geena. Pode-se notar que Deus decretou profeticamente que o Vale de Hinom serviria de lugar para a eliminação em massa de cadáveres, em vez de para a tortura de vítimas vivas. (Je 7:32, 33; 19:2, 6, 7, 10, 11) De modo que a referência à "baixada dos cadáveres e das cinzas gordurosas", em Jeremias 31:40, é em geral aceita como se referindo ao Vale de Hinom, e um portão conhecido como "o Portão dos Montes de Cinzas" evidentemente dava para a extremidade oriental do vale, na sua juntura com a ravina do Cédron. — Ne 3:13, 14.

Portanto, a evidência bíblica a respeito da Geena em geral é paralela ao conceito tradicional de fontes rabínicas e outras. Este conceito sustenta que o Vale de Hinom era usado como lugar para a eliminação do lixo da cidade de Jerusalém. (Em Mt 5:30, Ph verte gé·en·na como "montão de lixo".) O comentador judeu David Kimhi (1160?-1235?), no seu comentário sobre o Salmo 27:13, dá a seguinte informação histórica a respeito de "Gehinnom": "E é um lugar no terreno adjacente a Jerusalém, e é um lugar repugnante, e eles lançam ali coisas impuras e cadáveres. Havia ali também um fogo contínuo para queimar as coisas impuras e os ossos dos cadáveres. Por isso, o julgamento dos iníquos é parabolicamente chamado de Gehinnom."

Símbolo da Destruição Completa. É evidente que Jesus usou a Geena como representativa da destruição total resultante do julgamento adverso por parte de Deus, não sendo assim possível uma ressurreição para a vida como alma. (Mt 10:28; Lu 12:4, 5) Os escribas e os fariseus, como classe iníqua, foram denunciados como 'objetos para a Geena'. (Mt 23:13-15, 33) Para evitar tal destruição, os seguidores de Jesus deviam livrar-se de tudo o que causasse tropeço espiritual, sendo o 'decepamento da mão ou do pé' e o 'arrancar do olho' uma representação figurativa do amortecimento destes membros do corpo quanto ao pecado. — Mt 18:9; Mr 9:43-47; Col 3:5; compare isso com Mt 5:27-30.

Pelo visto, Jesus também aludiu a Isaías 66:24 ao descrever a Geena como lugar "onde o seu gusano não morre e o fogo não se extingue". (Mr 9:47, 48) Que este quadro figurativo não é de tortura, mas, antes, de destruição completa, é evidente no fato de que o texto de Isaías não trata de pessoas vivas, mas de "cadáveres dos homens que transgrediram" contra Deus. Conforme a evidência disponível indica, se o Vale de Hinom era um lugar da eliminação do lixo e de cadáveres, então o fogo, talvez aumentado em intensidade pelo acréscimo de enxofre (veja Is 30:33), seria o único meio adequado para eliminar tal refugo. Onde o fogo não alcançava, proliferariam vermes, ou gusanos, consumindo tudo o que não fora destruído pelo fogo. Nesta base, as palavras de Jesus significariam que o efeito destrutivo do julgamento adverso de Deus não cessaria até se ter alcançado a destruição total.

Uso Figurado. O uso da palavra "Geena" pelo discípulo Tiago mostra que a língua indisciplinada já por si só é um mundo de injustiça e que toda a vida da pessoa pode ser afetada por palavras ardentes que aviltam o corpo de quem fala. A língua de tal, "cheia de veneno mortífero", e evidenciando assim uma condição má do coração, pode resultar em ser aquele que a usa sentenciado por Deus para ir para a simbólica Geena. — Tg 3:6, 8; compare isso com Mt 12:37; Sal 5:9; 140:3; Ro 3:13.

O uso bíblico de Geena como símbolo corresponde ao do "lago de fogo" no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse). — Re 20:14, 15; veja LAGO DE FOGO.

GE-HARASIM [Vale dos Artesãos (Artífices)]. Vale cujo nome deriva da comunidade de artesãos que moravam ali. (1Cr 4:14) A comunidade teve por "pai" a Joabe, ou foi fundada por ele, embora, evidentemente, não o Joabe do tempo de Davi. Após o exílio babilônico, foi povoada por benjamitas. (Ne 11:31, 35) Alguns geógrafos situam-na provisoriamente no uádi esh-Shellal, um amplo vale situado a uns poucos quilômetros ao SE de Tel Aviv-Yafo; outros preferem identificá-lo com Sarafand el-Kharab, ao SO do primeiro mencionado.

GELILOTE [Regiões; Circuitos; duma raiz que significa "rolar; rolar para longe"]. Lugar alistado em conexão com o termo de Benjamim. (Jos 18:17) A localização de Gelilote, descrita como "defronte da subida de Adumim", combina com a de Gilgal (Jos 15:7), motivo pelo qual alguns peritos consideram este nome como variante do da Gilgal, perto de Jericó. Outros sugerem que Gelilote é um lugar ou uma pequena região na vizinhança de Tal'at ed-Damm (Ma'ale Adummim) no uádi el Qilt, ao SO de Jericó. — Veja ADUMIM; GILGAL N.º 1.

GELO. Água em estado sólido, produzido pelo congelamento. Tanto Eliú como Jeová Deus trouxeram à atenção de Jó a maravilha do gelo, dizendo o Todo-Poderoso: "Do ventre de quem sai realmente o gelo . . .? As próprias águas ficam escondidas como que por uma pedra, e a própria superfície da água de profundeza se torna compacta." (Jó 36:1; 37:10; 38:1, 29, 30) A formação de gelo, conforme aqui mencionada, só é possível por causa de uma propriedade muitíssimo incomum da água. À medida que a água nos lagos e nos mares esfria, ela se torna mais pesada. A água mais leve, mais quente, é deslocada pela água mais pesada e ascende à superfície. Mas, quando a água como um todo atinge cerca de 4° C, este processo se inverte. A água se torna mais leve ao passo que se aproxima do ponto de congelamento e forma uma camada acima da água mais quente embaixo. Esta camada superior se transforma então em gelo, "se torna compacta". O gelo, sendo mais leve do que a água, mantém as águas abaixo dele "escondidas como que por uma pedra", protegendo assim a vida marinha. Se não fosse este fenômeno, grande parte da água dos lagos e até mesmo dos oceanos se transformaria com o tempo em gelo maciço, tornando assim a terra inóspita para a vida.

O salmista diz que Jeová "lança seu gelo como bocados". Isto, evidentemente, se refere à saraiva ou ao granizo. — Sal 147:17; veja SARAIVA.

O termo hebraico para "gelo" (qé·rahh) é também usado para se referir a uma temperatura de congelamento ou abaixo dela, bem como à "geada". — Je 36:30.

GELOSIA. Grade de fasquias ou sarrafos cruzados de madeira, geralmente usada para cobrir uma janela. No Oriente Médio, já por séculos, têm sido comuns as janelas com gelosias. Elas servem para manter as casas frescas por impedir os raios diretos do sol, ao passo que permitem a ventilação, e também têm contribuído favoravelmente para a aparência geral dos prédios. Algumas casas, nos tempos bíblicos, tinham janelas no andar térreo, que davam para um pátio interno, e outras davam para a rua. Estas últimas costumavam em geral estar situadas bem alto na parede ou na câmara do terraço, e tinham gelosias.

Quem estivesse na casa podia olhar para fora pela gelosia da janela e ver o que acontecia lá fora, sem ser visto pelos do outro lado. No cântico de Débora e de Baraque, a mãe do morto Sísera é representada como olhando futilmente pela janela e ansiando ver seu filho "pela gelosia". (Jz 5:1, 28) Foi pela gelosia duma janela que um observador pôde ver um "moço falto de coração" entrar em contato com uma prostituta. (Pr 7:6-13) Também, em O Cântico de Salomão (2:9), faz-se referência a 'espreitar pelas janelas, espiar pelas rótulas' da gelosia.

Algumas gelosias nas janelas evidentemente possuíam dobradiças para poderem ser abertas ou fechadas. As janelas do quarto de terraço de Daniel, através das quais ele podia ser visto orar a Jeová três vezes por dia, talvez tivessem gelosias que podiam ser abertas ou fechadas. — Da 6:10.

GEMALI [possivelmente: Desmamado (ou: Que Recebe o Tratamento Devido); ou: Dono de Camelos]. Danita, cujo filho Amiel representou a sua tribo como um dos espias enviados a Canaã. — Núm 13:12, 16.

GEMARIAS [Jeová Aperfeiçoou (Completou)].

1. "Filho de Safã, o copista"; um dos príncipes durante o reinado de Jeoiaquim (628-618 AEC). Gemarias tinha seu próprio refeitório no pátio superior do templo, e foi ali que Baruque leu em voz alta as palavras do livro ditado a ele pelo profeta Jeremias. Micaías, filho de Gemarias, ouviu a leitura inicial do livro e relatou então as palavras de Jeová aos príncipes, os quais, por sua vez, mandaram buscar Baruque, a fim de que lesse o livro para eles. Ao ouvirem as palavras do livro, aconselharam Baruque e Jeremias a se esconderem. Mais tarde, quando o livro foi lido ao Rei Jeoiaquim, Gemarias foi um dos príncipes que instaram com o rei para que não queimasse o rolo. — Je 36:10-25.

Recentemente, encontrou-se em Jerusalém um pedaço de argila que havia estado preso a um documento e tinha sido estampado com um selo. A inscrição nele rezava: "Pertencente a Gemarias [hebr.: Gemar·yá·hu], filho de Safã." Diz-se que esta bula é de aproximadamente o sétimo século AEC, e se presume que seu proprietário seja o Gemarias mencionado no capítulo 36 de Jeremias.

2. "Filho de Hilquias, que Zedequias, rei de Judá, enviou a Babilônia, a Nabucodonosor." Nesta ocasião, Jeremias enviou uma carta, pela mão de Gemarias e de Elasá aos judeus exilados, que haviam sido levados a Babilônia junto com Joaquim (Jeconias) em 617 AEC. — Je 29:1-3.

GENEALOGIA. Registro das linhagens e dos parentescos da família humana. Jeová Deus é o grande Genealogista ou Mantenedor dos registros de criação, começos, nascimentos e descendência. Ele é o "Pai, a quem toda família no céu e na terra deve o seu nome". (Ef 3:14, 15) Sua Palavra, a Bíblia, contém um registro exato das genealogias que desempenharam um papel importante no Seu propósito.

O homem tem o desejo inato de conhecer seus ascendentes e de manter vivo o nome da sua família. Muitas nações antigas mantiveram extensos registros genealógicos, especialmente das linhagens de seus sacerdotes e reis. Os egípcios mantiveram tais registros, assim como também os árabes. Encontraram-se tabuinhas cuneiformes de genealogias de reis da Babilônia e da Assíria. Exemplos mais recentes são as listas genealógicas dos gregos, dos celtas, dos saxões e dos romanos.

O verbo hebraico para registrar a descendência legítima é ya·hhás, traduzido por 'ser registrado genealogicamente' (1Cr 5:17); o substantivo aparentado é yá·hhas, traduzido por "registro genealógico". (Ne 7:5) O termo grego ge·ne·a·lo·gí·a ocorre em 1 Timóteo 1:4 e em Tito 3:9, com referência a linhagens ou "genealogias" pessoais.

O apóstolo Mateus abre seu relato evangélico com a introdução: "O livro da história [ge·né·se·os, forma de gé·ne·sis] de Jesus Cristo, filho de Davi, filho de Abraão." (Mt 1:1) A palavra grega gé·ne·sis significa literalmente "ascendência; origem". Este termo grego é usado pela Septuaginta para traduzir o hebraico toh·le·dhóhth, que tem o mesmo sentido básico, e, evidentemente, denota "história" nas suas numerosas ocorrências no livro de Gênesis. — Veja Gên 2:4 n.

Naturalmente, Mateus fornece mais do que apenas uma genealogia de Cristo. Ele prossegue relatando a história do nascimento humano, do ministério, da morte e da ressurreição de Jesus. Este costume não era incomum naquele tempo, porque as mais antigas histórias gregas tinham estrutura genealógica. Naqueles tempos antigos, a história girava em torno das pessoas contidas na genealogia ou apresentadas por ela. De modo que a genealogia era uma parte importante da história, em muitos casos constituindo a introdução dela. — Veja 1Cr 1-9.

Por ocasião do julgamento no Éden, Deus fez a promessa a respeito do Descendente, ou Semente, da "mulher", que havia de esmagar a cabeça da Serpente. (Gên 3:15) Isto talvez tenha dado margem à ideia de a Semente ter ascendência humana, embora fosse só quando Abraão foi informado de que sua Semente seria o meio de abençoar todas as nações que se declarou especificamente que a linhagem da Semente seguiria um rumo terrestre. (Gên 22:17, 18) Isto tornou de máxima importância a genealogia da linhagem da família de Abraão. A Bíblia é o registro exclusivo não só da origem de Abraão, mas também de todas as nações descendentes de Sem, Cã e Jafé, filhos de Noé. — Gên 10:32.

Conforme comenta E. J. Hamlin em The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete), a tabela das nações em Gênesis é "exclusiva na literatura antiga. . . . Tal preocupação com a história não pode ser encontrada em nenhuma outra literatura sagrada do mundo". — Editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 3, p. 515.

Objetivo dos Registros Genealógicos. Além da inclinação natural do homem, de manter um registro de nascimentos e de parentescos, a genealogia era importante para a cronologia, em especial na parte mais antiga da história da humanidade. No entanto, além disso, por causa das promessas, das profecias e dos tratos de Deus, tornou-se essencial haver um registro de certas linhagens.

Após o Dilúvio, a bênção dada por Noé indicava que os descendentes de Sem seriam divinamente favorecidos. (Gên 9:26, 27) Mais tarde, Deus revelou a Abraão que aquilo que seria chamado de seu "descendente [lit.: semente]" viria através de Isaque. (Gên 17:19; Ro 9:7) Portanto, tornou-se óbvio que a identificação desta Semente exigiria um registro genealógico meticuloso. Assim, no decorrer do tempo, a linhagem de Judá, a tribo à qual foi prometida a liderança (Gên 49:10), e especialmente a família de Davi, a linhagem real, seria meticulosamente registrada. (2Sa 7:12-16) Este registro forneceria a genealogia do Messias, a Semente (ou: Descendente), a linhagem de extraordinária importância. — Jo 7:42.

A segunda mais cuidadosamente guardada genealogia era a da tribo de Levi, com ênfase especial na família sacerdotal de Arão. — Êx 28:1-3; Núm 3:5-10.

Adicionalmente, sob a Lei, os registros genealógicos eram essenciais para se determinar os parentescos tribais para a divisão do país e os parentescos familiares para as heranças individuais de terra. Serviam o objetivo necessário de identificar o parente mais próximo como o go·'él, o habilitado para o casamento de cunhado (De 25:5, 6), para resgatar seu parente (Le 25:47-49) e como vingador de sangue no assassino (Núm 35:19). Também, o pacto da Lei proibia casamentos em certos graus de consanguinidade ou afinidade, o que exigia conhecimento dos parentescos genealógicos. — Le 18:6-18.

A forma estrita com que os israelitas se apegavam a estas genealogias é ilustrada na situação que surgiu após o retorno de Babilônia, quando alguns, supostamente de ascendência sacerdotal, não puderam encontrar seu registro. Zorobabel mandou que não comessem das coisas santíssimas fornecidas para o sacerdócio, até que pudessem comprovar publicamente a sua genealogia. (Ne 7:63-65) O registro das pessoas incluía os netineus, porque eles, embora não fossem israelitas, eram oficialmente um grupo devotado ao serviço no templo. — Ne 7:46-56.

Quanto à cronologia, na maioria dos casos, as listas genealógicas de modo algum objetivam fornecer dados completos. Não obstante, muitas vezes são de ajuda na cronologia para a verificação de certos pontos dela ou para suprir pormenores importantes. Nem podem as listas genealógicas usualmente ser consideradas como indicadores do crescimento da população, porque, em muitos casos, certos elos intermediários são omitidos quando não são necessários para a respectiva genealogia. E, visto que as genealogias usualmente não contêm os nomes de mulheres, não estão alistados os nomes das esposas e das concubinas que um homem talvez tivesse; igualmente, nem todos os seus filhos com estas esposas talvez sejam mencionados; mesmo alguns dos filhos da esposa primária podem ocasionalmente estar omitidos.

Desde Adão Até o Dilúvio. A Bíblia oferece evidência da existência de listas de parentescos familiares desde o início do homem. Por ocasião do nascimento de Sete, filho de Adão, Eva disse: "Deus designou outro descendente [lit.: semente] em lugar de Abel, visto que Caim o matou." (Gên 4:25) Representantes da linhagem iniciada por Sete sobreviveram ao Dilúvio. — Gên 5:3-29, 32; 8:18; 1Pe 3:19, 20.

Desde o Dilúvio Até Abraão. A linhagem de Sem, filho de Noé, que recebeu a bênção de Noé, produziu Abrão (Abraão), o "amigo de Jeová". (Tg 2:23) Esta genealogia, junto com a antediluviana já mencionada, constitui o único meio de se determinar a cronologia da história do homem até Abraão. Na lista antediluviana, o registro passa pela linhagem de Sete, e na lista pós-diluviana, passa por Sem. Especifica coerentemente o tempo desde o nascimento de certo homem até o nascimento do seu filho. (Gên 11:10-24, 32; 12:4) Não existem outras extensas listas genealógicas que abranjam este período histórico — o que indica que estas listas têm o objetivo duplo de prover genealogia e cronologia. Em alguns outros casos, a colocação de eventos específicos na corrente do tempo é conseguida por meio de informações genealógicas. — Veja CRONOLOGIA (Desde 2370 AEC até o pacto com Abraão).

Desde Abraão Até Cristo. Abraão e Sara, pela intervenção do próprio Deus, tiveram um filho, Isaque, por meio de quem havia de vir o prometido "descendente [semente]". (Gên 21:1-7; He 11:11, 12) De Jacó (Israel), filho de Isaque, descenderam as originais 12 tribos. (Gên 35:22-26; Núm 1:20-50) Judá havia de ser a tribo régia, restringindo-se isso mais tarde para a família de Davi. Os descendentes de Levi tornaram-se a tribo sacerdotal, ficando o próprio sacerdócio restrito à linhagem de Arão. Para comprovar seu direito legal ao trono, Jesus Cristo, o Rei, tinha de ser identificado como da família de Davi e da linhagem de Judá. Mas, visto que o seu sacerdócio, por juramento de Deus, era à maneira de Melquisedeque, não exigia ascendência levítica. — Sal 110:1, 4; He 7:11-14.

Outras Importantes Listas Genealógicas. Além da linhagem descendente de Adão até Jesus Cristo e as extensas genealogias dos 12 filhos de Jacó, há registros genealógicos dos primórdios dos povos aparentados com Israel. Estes incluem os irmãos de Abraão (Gên 11:27-29; 22:20-24); os filhos de Ismael (Gên 25:13-18); Moabe e Amom, que eram os filhos de Ló, sobrinho de Abraão (Gên 19:33-38); os filhos de Abraão com Quetura, dos quais descenderam Midiã e outras tribos (Gên 25:1-4); e a posteridade de Esaú (Edom) (Gên 36:1-19, 40-43).

Estas nações são importantes por causa do seu parentesco com Israel, o povo escolhido de Deus. Tanto Isaque como Jacó tomaram esposas da família do irmão de Abraão. (Gên 22:20-23; 24:4, 67; 28:1-4; 29:21-28) Deus designou territórios às nações de Moabe, Amom e Edom, que confinavam com Israel, e Israel foi informado a não usurpar a herança de terras desses povos, nem interferir neles. — De 2:4, 5, 9, 19.

Arquivos Oficiais. Parece que, em Israel, além dos registros mantidos pelas próprias famílias, guardavam-se registros nacionais de genealogias. Em Gênesis, capítulo 46, encontramos a lista dos nascidos na família de Jacó até o tempo da entrada de Jacó no Egito, e, evidentemente, até a sua morte. Em Êxodo 6:14-25, aparece uma genealogia primariamente dos descendentes de Levi, e, pelo visto, copiada de um registro anterior. O primeiro recenseamento nacional foi feito no ermo de Sinai, em 1512 AEC, no segundo ano depois da sua partida do Egito, ocasião em que se reconheceu sua ascendência "quanto às suas famílias na casa de seus pais". (Núm 1:1, 18; veja também Núm 3.) O único outro recenseamento nacional divinamente autorizado de Israel, de que há registro antes do exílio, é aquele feito uns 39 anos depois, nas planícies de Moabe. — Núm 26.

À parte das genealogias registradas nos escritos de Moisés, há listas tais como as feitas por outros cronistas oficiais, inclusive por Samuel, que foi o escritor de Juízes, de Rute e de parte de Primeiro Samuel; Esdras, que escreveu Primeiro e Segundo Crônicas, e o livro de Esdras; e Neemias, escritor do livro que leva o seu nome. Há também evidência dentro destes escritos a respeito de outros genealogistas: Ido (2Cr 12:15) e Zorobabel, que evidentemente providenciou que se fizessem listas genealógicas dos israelitas repatriados. (Esd 2) Durante o reinado do justo Rei Jotão, houve um alistamento genealógico das tribos de Israel que moravam na terra de Gileade. — 1Cr 5:1-17.

Essas genealogias foram cuidadosamente preservadas até o começo da Era Comum. Isto é provado pelo fato de que cada família de Israel podia voltar para a cidade da casa de seu pai, a fim de ser registrada em acatamento do decreto de César Augusto, pouco antes do nascimento de Jesus. (Lu 2:1-5) Também, Zacarias, pai de João, o Batizador, é indicado como fazendo parte da turma sacerdotal de Abias, e Elisabete, mãe de João, como uma das filhas de Arão. (Lu 1:5) Menciona-se que Ana, a profetisa, era "da tribo de Aser". (Lu 2:36) E, naturalmente, as listas extensas dos antepassados de Jesus, em Mateus, capítulo 1, e Lucas, capítulo 3, tornam claro que tais registros eram guardados em arquivos públicos, disponíveis para consulta.

O historiador Josefo dá testemunho da existência de registros genealógicos oficiais, judaicos, ao dizer: "Minha família não é de pouca monta, pois sua ascendência remonta até antepassados sacerdotais. . . . No entanto, meus antepassados não somente eram sacerdotes, mas pertenciam à primeira das vinte e quatro turmas — uma distinção especial — e ao mais distinto dos seus clãs constituintes." Daí, depois de salientar que sua mãe descendia de

Asamoneus, ele conclui: "Com tal ascendência, que cito conforme a encontro registrada nos registros públicos, posso ficar alheio aos pretensos detratores da minha família." — The Life (A Vida), 1, 2, 6, (1).

As genealogias oficiais dos judeus foram destruídas, não pelo Rei Herodes, o Grande, conforme sustentava Africano, no começo do terceiro século, mas evidentemente pelos romanos, por ocasião da destruição de Jerusalém, em 70 EC. (Against Apion [Contra Apião], de F. Josefo, I, 30-38 [7]; The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], II, 426-428 [xvii, 6]; VI, 354 [vi, 3]) Desde aquele tempo, os judeus não conseguem comprovar sua ascendência, nem mesmo nas duas linhagens mais importantes, a de Davi e a de Levi.

Identificação dos Parentescos. Na determinação dos parentescos, frequentemente é necessário verificar o contexto ou fazer um confronto de listas paralelas ou de textos de partes diferentes da Bíblia. Por exemplo, "filho" pode na realidade significar neto, ou apenas descendente. (Mt 1:1) Novamente, uma lista de nomes pode parecer ser o registro de irmãos, filhos do mesmo homem. Um exame mais detido e a comparação com outros textos, porém, pode mostrar que é o registro duma linhagem genealógica, dando os nomes de alguns filhos, e também de alguns netos ou descendentes posteriores. Gênesis 46:21, evidentemente, alista tanto os filhos como os netos de Benjamim como "filhos", conforme se pode ver na comparação com Números 26:38-40.

A mesma situação é encontrada até nas genealogias de algumas das famílias principais. Por exemplo, 1 Crônicas 6:22-24 alista dez "filhos de Coate". Mas, no versículo 18 , e em Êxodo 6:18, encontramos apenas quatro filhos atribuídos a Coate. E o exame do contexto mostra que a lista dos "filhos de Coate", em 1 Crônicas 6:22-24, é na realidade parte duma genealogia de famílias da linhagem de Coate, que tinham membros representativos presentes para serem designados por Davi para certos deveres no templo.

Inversamente, "pai" pode significar "avô" ou mesmo predecessor real. (Da 5:11, 18) Em muitos textos, tais como Deuteronômio 26:5; 1 Reis 15:11, 24; e 2 Reis 15:38, a palavra hebraica 'av (pai) é também usada no sentido de "ancestral" ou "antepassado". De modo similar, as palavras hebraicas 'em (mãe) e bath (filha) são às vezes usadas respectivamente para "avó" e para "neta". — 1Rs 15:10, 13.

Cidades, e nomes no plural. Em algumas listas talvez se diga que determinado homem é o "pai" de certa cidade, como em 1 Crônicas 2:50-54, onde, por exemplo, Salma é chamado de "pai de Belém", e Sobal, de "pai de Quiriate-Jearim". Evidentemente, as cidades de Belém e de Quiriate-Jearim ou foram fundadas por estes homens, ou foram povoadas pelos descendentes deles. A mesma lista reza adicionalmente: "Os filhos de Salma foram Belém e os netofatitas, Atrote-Bete-Joabe e metade dos manaatitas, os zoritas". (1Cr 2:54) Aqui, netofatitas, manaatitas e zoritas evidentemente eram famílias.

Em Gênesis 10:13, 14, os nomes dos descendentes de Mizraim têm o que parecem ser formas plurais. Sugeriu-se que eles representam os nomes de famílias ou de tribos, em vez de pessoas. Todavia, deve-se ter em mente que outros nomes, na forma dual, tais como Efraim, Apaim, Diblaim e também o já mencionado Mizraim, filho de Cã, se referem, cada um, a uma pessoa. — Gên 41:52; 1Cr 2:30, 31; Os 1:3.

Listas abreviadas. Com frequência, os escritores bíblicos abreviam muito uma lista genealógica, evidentemente mencionando apenas chefes de família das casas de maior destaque, personagens importantes ou pessoas mais importantes para a história em consideração. Às vezes, tudo o que o cronista queria mostrar era que determinada pessoa descendia de certo antepassado remoto; de modo que podia deixar fora muitos nomes intermediários.

Um exemplo de tal condensação é encontrado na cronologia do próprio Esdras. (Esd 7:1-5) Ele registra sua ascendência de Arão, o sumo sacerdote, mas numa lista paralela, em 1 Crônicas 6:3-14, aparecem diversos nomes nos versículos 7 a 10 que não constam em Esdras 7:3. É provável que Esdras fez isso para evitar uma repetição desnecessária e para abreviar a longa lista de nomes. Ainda assim, a lista era perfeitamente adequada para provar ter ascendência sacerdotal. Esdras disse que ele era "filho" de Seraías, significando que era seu descendente, porque deve ter sido bisneto de Seraías, ou possivelmente seu trineto. Seraías era sumo sacerdote e foi morto por Nabucodonosor por ocasião do exílio para Babilônia (607 AEC), sendo seu filho Jeozadaque levado ao exílio. (2Rs 25:18-21; 1Cr 6:14, 15) Josué (Jesua), o sumo sacerdote, que retornou 70 anos mais tarde com Zorobabel, era neto de Seraías. (Esd 5:2; Ag 1:1) Esdras viajou a Jerusalém 69 anos depois disso, o que tornaria impossível ser Esdras filho direto de Seraías e irmão de Jeozadaque.

Outra coisa que aprendemos por comparar genealogias neste caso é que Esdras, embora descendesse de Arão através de Seraías, evidentemente não era daquela linhagem de Seraías em que o cargo de sumo sacerdote era hereditário, a saber, de Jeozadaque. A linhagem de sumo sacerdote, de Seraías, passava por Josué (Jesua), Joiaquim e Eliasibe, sendo este último sumo sacerdote durante a governança de Neemias. Portanto, Esdras alcançou seu objetivo com a sua genealogia abreviada, fornecendo apenas nomes suficientes para provar sua posição na linhagem de Arão. — Ne 3:1; 12:10.

Alguns Motivos de Haver Variações nas Listas. O filho que tivesse morrido sem prole frequentemente não era mencionado; em alguns casos, o homem pode ter tido uma filha, mas não um filho, e a herança talvez fosse transmitida através da filha que, ao se casar, passava a estar sob outro chefe de família na mesma tribo. (Núm 36:7, 8) Ocasionalmente, a genealogia podia incluir uma família de menor destaque sob outro chefe de família, de modo que tal família menor não está alistada. Portanto, não ter filhos, a transmissão da herança através de mulheres, talvez a adoção, ou não se estabelecer uma casa ancestral separada fizeram com que alguns nomes fossem omitidos das listas genealógicas, ao passo que novas casas formadas talvez acrescentassem novos nomes às listas. Portanto, é óbvio que os nomes numa genealogia posterior possivelmente diferissem em muitos pontos dos constantes numa lista anterior.

Vários chefes de família podem constar no que parece ser uma lista de irmãos, mas que na realidade pode incluir sobrinhos, como quando, no caso da "adoção" dos filhos de José, Jacó disse: "Efraim e Manassés tornar-se-ão meus, iguais a Rubem e Simeão." (Gên 48:5) Portanto, mais tarde, Efraim e Manassés são contados ao lado dos seus tios como cabeças tribais. — Núm 2:18-21; Jos 17:17.

Neemias, capítulo 10, apresenta vários nomes dos que atestaram, com selo, um "arranjo fidedigno" para cumprir os mandamentos de Deus. (Ne 9:38) Nestas listas, os nomes indicados não são necessariamente os das pessoas que entraram nos acordos, mas podem referir-se às casas envolvidas, mencionando-se o cabeça ancestral. (Veja Esd 10:16.) Isto talvez seja indicado por muitos dos nomes alistados serem os mesmos que os alistados como retornando de Babilônia 80 anos antes, com Zorobabel. Assim, embora os presentes, em alguns casos, possam ter tido o mesmo nome que o cabeça ancestral, eles talvez fossem apenas representantes das casas ancestrais alistadas por esses nomes.

Repetição de nomes. Bem frequentemente repete-se o mesmo nome numa mesma lista genealógica. O uso do mesmo nome para um descendente posterior, sem dúvida, era um método que facilitava a esta pessoa identificar sua linhagem, embora, naturalmente, às vezes houvesse pessoas do mesmo nome em linhagens de outras famílias. Alguns dos muitos casos de tal recorrência de nomes na mesma linhagem ancestral são: Zadoque (1Cr 6:8, 12), Azarias (1Cr 6:9, 13, 14) e Elcana. — 1Cr 6:34-36.

Em diversos casos, os nomes que aparecem em listas paralelas diferem. Isto talvez se deva a que certas pessoas tinham mais de um nome, como, por exemplo, Jacó, que também era chamado "Israel". (Gên 32:28) Por outro lado, também, talvez houvesse uma ligeira alteração na grafia do nome, o que ocasionalmente dava até mesmo um significado diferente ao nome. Alguns exemplos disso são: Abrão (que significa "Pai É Enaltecido (Exaltado)") e Abraão (que significa "Pai Duma Multidão)"), Sarai (possivelmente: "Contenciosa") e Sara ("Princesa"). Eliú, antepassado do profeta Samuel, parece também ter sido chamado Eliabe e Eliel. — 1Sa 1:1; 1Cr 6:27, 34.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, empregavam-se às vezes cognomes, como no caso de Simão Pedro, que era chamado Cefas, nome que provém do equivalente aramaico do grego para Pedro (Lu 6:14; Jo 1:42); havia também João Marcos. (At 12:12) Talvez se desse à pessoa determinado nome por causa de alguma característica. Simão, "o Cananita", (também chamado de "zeloso"), distingue este apóstolo do apóstolo Simão Pedro. (Mt 10:4; Lu 6:15) Em alguns casos, faz-se a diferenciação por expressões tais como "Tiago, filho de Alfeu", distinguindo-o de Tiago, filho de Zebedeu e irmão de João, o apóstolo. (Mt 10:2, 3) Talvez se acrescentasse a cidade, o distrito ou o país de que a pessoa era originária, como no caso de José de Arimateia, e Judas, o galileu. (Mr 15:43; At 5:37) Acredita-se que Judas Iscariotes signifique Judas, "Homem de Queriote". (Mt 10:4) Os mesmos métodos foram empregados nas Escrituras Hebraicas. (Gên 25:20; 1Sa 17:4, 58) Talvez se fornecesse o nome do irmão da pessoa para esclarecer a identidade desta. (Jo 1:40) Mulheres com o mesmo nome eram similarmente diferenciadas por se mencionar também o nome do pai, da mãe, de irmão, irmã, marido ou filho. — Gên 11:29; 28:9; 36:39; Jo 19:25; At 1:14; 12:12.

Tanto nas Escrituras Hebraicas como nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, talvez se usasse o nome de família ou o título, determinando-se a identificação da pessoa pelo seu nome individual, ou então pelo tempo e pelo evento histórico com que a pessoa era associada. Por exemplo, Abimeleque, evidentemente, ou era o nome pessoal, ou então o título de três reis filisteus, comparável ao uso de "Faraó" entre os egípcios. (Gên 20:2; 26:26; 40:2; Êx 1:22; 3:10) O Abimeleque ou o Faraó em consideração, portanto, seria identificado pelo tempo e pelas circunstâncias. Herodes era nome de família; César era nome de família que se tornou título. Quando alguém se referia a um dos Herodes (e havia perigo de ambiguidade) podia indicar a pessoa pretendida por usar apenas seu nome pessoal, tal como Agripa, ou por combinar o nome pessoal ou o título adicional com Herodes, tal como Herodes Ântipas, Herodes Agripa — e similarmente no caso dos césares, como César Augusto, Tibério César. — Lu 2:1; 3:1; At 25:13.

Nomes de Mulheres. Mulheres eram mencionadas ocasionalmente nos registros genealógicos, quando havia um motivo histórico para isso. Em Gênesis 11:29, 30, menciona-se Sarai (Sara), evidentemente pelo motivo de que a prometida Semente viria por meio dela, não por meio de outra mulher de Abraão. É possível que Milca foi mencionada na mesma passagem por ser a avó de Rebeca, esposa de Isaque, mostrando assim que a linhagem de Rebeca provinha de parentes de Abraão, visto que Isaque não devia ter esposa procedente das outras nações. (Gên 22:20-23; 24:2-4) Em Gênesis 25:1, apresenta-se o nome de Quetura, esposa posterior de Abraão. Isto mostra que Abraão se casou de novo, após o falecimento de Sara, e que sua faculdade procriativa ainda estava ativa mais de 40 anos depois da sua milagrosa renovação por Jeová. (Ro 4:19; Gên 24:67; 25:20) Revela também a relação de parentesco de Midiã e de outras tribos árabes com Israel.

Mencionam-se Leia, Raquel e as concubinas de Jacó, junto com os filhos que elas deram à luz. (Gên 35:21-26) Isto nos ajuda a entender os tratos posteriores de Deus com estes filhos. Por motivos similares, encontramos nos registros genealógicos os nomes de outras mulheres. Seus nomes talvez fossem incluídos quando se transmitia uma herança por meio delas. (Núm 26:33) Naturalmente, Tamar, Raabe e Rute se destacam. Em cada caso, há algo notável na maneira em que estas mulheres passaram a figurar na ascendência do Messias, Jesus Cristo. (Gên 38; Ru 1:3-5; 4:13-15; Mt 1:1-5) Entre outros casos da menção de mulheres nas listas genealógicas encontram-se 1 Crônicas 2:35, 48, 49; 3:1-3, 5.

Genealogia e Gerações. Em algumas genealogias, encontramos os nomes dum homem e de seus descendentes alistados até os trinetos. De um ponto de vista, estes poderiam ser contados como quatro ou cinco gerações. No entanto, o homem mencionado primeiro talvez chegasse a ver todas estas gerações de descendentes. Assim, do seu ponto de vista, uma "geração" podia significar o período desde o seu próprio nascimento até a sua morte, ou até o descendente mais remoto que o homem chegasse a ver. Caso se refira a este tipo de "geração", então, naturalmente, envolveria um período muito mais longo do que no caso do anterior ponto de vista mencionado.

Para ilustrar: Adão viveu 930 anos, tendo filhos e filhas. Durante este tempo, ele viu pelo menos oito gerações de seus descendentes. No entanto, seu próprio período de vida era coincidente em parte com o de Lameque, pai de Noé, ou estava vinculado com o dele. Assim, deste ponto de vista, o Dilúvio ocorreu na terceira geração da história humana. — Gên 5:3-32.

Encontramos na Bíblia alguns casos deste último método de cálculo. Jeová prometeu a Abraão que a sua semente (ou descendência) se tornaria residente forasteiro numa terra que não era dela, e que voltaria a Canaã "na quarta geração". (Gên 15:13, 16) O recenseamento registrado em Números, capítulos 1-3, indica que deve ter havido muitas gerações de pai a filho durante sua estada de 215 anos no Egito, sendo o total dos homens de 20 anos para cima, pouco depois do Êxodo, 603.550 (além dos da tribo de Levi). Mas as 'quatro gerações' de Gênesis 15:16, contadas desde o tempo da entrada no Egito até o Êxodo, poderiam ser calculadas como segue: (1) Levi, (2) Coate, (3) Anrão, (4) Moisés. (Êx 6:16, 18, 20) Estas pessoas viveram em média bem mais de cem anos. Cada uma destas quatro "gerações" viu assim numerosos descendentes, possivelmente até trinetos ou mais, concedendo-se 20 ou às vezes 30 anos do pai até o nascimento do seu primeiro filho. Isto explicaria como 'quatro gerações' podiam presenciar o surgimento de uma população tão grande até o tempo do Êxodo. — Veja ÊXODO.

Outro problema para os peritos bíblicos refere-se ao mesmo recenseamento. Em Números 3:27-28, declara-se que quatro famílias descenderam de Coate, sendo o total, na época do Êxodo, o elevado número de 8.600 homens (8.300, em alguns MSS da LXX) de um mês de idade para cima. Assim, pareceria que Moisés, nesta época, tinha milhares de irmãos, primos e sobrinhos. Alguns concluíram disso que Moisés não era filho de Anrão, filho de Coate, mas de outro Anrão, tendo decorrido várias gerações entre eles, a fim de conceder tempo suficiente para o desenvolvimento de uma população masculina tão grande em apenas quatro famílias coatitas até o tempo do Êxodo dos israelitas do Egito.

Mas o problema pode ser resolvido de duas maneiras. Primeiro, nem todos os filhos dum homem eram sempre mencionados, conforme já ilustrado. Portanto, é possível que os quatro filhos mencionados de Coate tiveram mais filhos do que os especificamente alistados. Segundo, embora Levi, Coate, Anrão e Moisés representem quatro gerações do ponto de vista de seus quatro períodos de vida, cada um deles podia ter visto diversas gerações durante a sua vida. Assim, mesmo que em cada caso concedamos 60 anos entre o nascimento de Levi e de Coate, entre o de Coate e Anrão, e entre o de Anrão e Moisés, muitas gerações podem ter nascido dentro de cada período de 60 anos. Moisés pode ter visto sobrinhos-trinetos e possivelmente até os filhos deles, até a época do Êxodo. Por isso, o total de 8.600 (ou, possivelmente, 8.300) não exigiria outro Anrão entre Anrão, filho de Coate, e Moisés.

Surge uma questão relacionada com a ascendência da Semente prometida, o Messias, na genealogia de Nasom, que era maioral da tribo de Judá após o Êxodo. Em Rute 4:20-22, Jessé é o quinto elo de Nasom a Davi. O período desde o Êxodo até Davi é de aproximadamente 400 anos. Isto significaria que a idade média de cada um destes antepassados de Davi possivelmente era de 100 anos (assim como a de Abraão) na época do nascimento do seu filho. Isto não seria impossível, e talvez tenha ocorrido. Estes filhos, alistados no livro de Rute, não precisavam ser os primogênitos, assim como Davi não foi o primogênito, mas o mais jovem dos vários filhos varões de Jessé. Também, Jeová pode ter dado à linhagem da Semente esta trajetória quase milagrosa, para que se pudesse ver, em retrospectiva, que em tudo isso fora Ele quem dirigira os assuntos da Semente prometida, assim como Ele fizera definitivamente nos casos de Isaque e de Jacó.

Novamente, pode ter acontecido que houve omissões intencionais de nomes nesta parte de 400 anos da genealogia messiânica, registrada também em 1 Crônicas 2:11-15; Mateus 1:4-6 e Lucas 3:31, 32. Mas, o fato de que todas as listas concordam nesta parte da genealogia pode significar que não se omitiram nomes. Não obstante, mesmo que os cronistas que compilaram estas listas omitissem certos nomes não considerados importantes ou necessários para o seu objetivo, isso não constituiria problema, porque presumir o acréscimo de diversas gerações intermediárias não violaria outras declarações ou a cronologia da Bíblia.

A Genealogia Bíblica É Fidedigna. O estudante cuidadoso e sincero da genealogia bíblica não acusará os cronistas bíblicos de descuido, inexatidão ou exagero, no afã de glorificar a sua nação, uma tribo ou uma pessoa. Deve-se ter em mente que os que incluíram genealogias nos seus escritos (por exemplo, Esdras e Neemias) recorreram ao arquivo nacional e obtiveram sua matéria das fontes oficiais que lhes estavam disponíveis. (Veja CRÔNICAS, OS LIVROS DAS.) Encontraram ali as informações que preenchiam suas necessidades. Usaram estas listas para provar satisfatoriamente a todos o que era necessário provar naquele tempo. Evidentemente, suas listas genealógicas foram plenamente aceitas por aqueles que viviam naquele tempo, que tinham acesso aos fatos e aos registros. Por conseguinte, temos de reconhecer a situação com a qual lidavam. Esdras e Neemias lidavam com esses assuntos em tempos de reorganização, e as genealogias que compilaram eram essenciais para o funcionamento de coisas vitais para a existência da nação.

[1] Com Natã, Lucas começa a alistar a genealogia através da linhagem materna de Jesus, ao passo que Mateus prossegue com a linhagem paterna.

[2] Zorobabel, evidentemente, era filho do próprio Pedaías e filho legal de Sealtiel, por casamento de cunhado; ou foi criado por Sealtiel após a morte de seu pai, Pedaías, e foi reconhecido legalmente como filho de Sealtiel. — 1Cr 3:17-19; Esd 3:2; Lu 3:27.

[3] Sealtiel, filho de Jeconias, possivelmente era genro de Néri. — 1Cr 3:17; Lu 3:27.

[4] As linhagens se encontram em Sealtiel e Zorobabel, separando-se depois. Esta separação pode ter acontecido por meio de dois descendentes diferentes de Zorobabel, ou por Resa ou Abiúde terem sido genros.

Tais listas genealógicas forçosamente variavam de um período para outro; novos nomes eram acrescentados e outros omitidos; frequentemente, apenas os mais importantes chefes de família eram mencionados nas listas que tratavam do passado mais remoto. Em alguns casos, nomes menos importantes talvez aparecessem em certas listas, por terem sido de interesse naquela época. As fontes empregadas em alguns casos possivelmente tenham fornecido apenas listas parciais. Algumas partes talvez faltassem, ou o próprio cronista pode ter omitido partes porque não eram necessárias para os seus objetivos. E não são necessárias para os nossos objetivos hoje.

Em alguns casos, talvez se introduzissem no texto erros de copista, especialmente na grafia de nomes. Mas estes não constituem problemas que influam significativamente nas linhagens necessárias para o nosso entendimento da Bíblia; nem afetam os fundamentos do cristianismo.

Um exame cuidadoso da Bíblia eliminará a ideia falsa, às vezes apresentada, de que as genealogias antigas nos capítulos 5 e 11 de Gênesis, e em outros livros bíblicos, contêm nomes imaginários ou fictícios, para acomodar alguma trama do cronista. Esses cronistas eram servos dedicados de Jeová, não nacionalistas; preocupavam-se com o nome de Jeová e os tratos dele com o Seu povo. Além disso, não apenas escritores bíblicos mencionaram muitas dessas pessoas como reais, mas Jesus Cristo também o fez. (Is 54:9; Ez 14:14, 20; Mt 24:38; Jo 8:56; Ro 5:14; 1Co 15:22, 45; 1Ti 2:13, 14; He 11:4, 5, 7, 31; Tg 2:25; Ju 14) Refutar todo este testemunho significaria acusar o Deus da verdade de mentir, ou de necessitar de algum artifício ou expediente para promover a crença na sua Palavra. Significaria também negar a inspiração da Bíblia.

Conforme declara o apóstolo: “Toda a Escritura é inspirada por Deus e proveitosa para ensinar, para repreender, para endireitar as coisas, para disciplinar em justiça, a fim de que o homem de Deus seja plenamente competente, completamente equipado para toda boa obra.” (2Ti 3:16, 17) Portanto, podemos confiar plenamente nas genealogias registradas na Bíblia. Elas forneceram estatísticas vitais não só para o tempo em que foram escritas, mas também para nós hoje. Por meio delas, temos plena garantia genealógica de que Jesus Cristo é a prometida, há muito aguardada, Semente de Abraão. Somos grandemente ajudados a determinar a cronologia que remonta até Adão, algo que não se encontra em nenhuma outra fonte. Sabemos que Deus “fez de um só homem toda nação dos homens, para morarem sobre a superfície inteira da terra”. (At 17:26) Vemos, deveras, que, “quando o Altíssimo deu às nações uma herança, quando separou uns dos outros os filhos de Adão, passou a fixar o termo dos povos com respeito ao número dos filhos de Israel" (De 32:8), e entendemos como as nações são aparentadas.

Por conhecer a origem da humanidade, que Adão era originalmente "filho de Deus", e que todos descendemos de Adão (Lu 3:38), podemos entender claramente a declaração: "Assim como por intermédio de um só homem entrou o pecado no mundo, e a morte por intermédio do pecado, e assim a morte se espalhou a todos os homens, porque todos tinham pecado." (Ro 5:12) Também, este conhecimento torna compreensível de que modo Jesus Cristo pode ser "o último Adão" e o "Pai Eterno", e como pode ser que, "assim como em Adão todos morrem, assim também em Cristo todos serão vivificados". (Is 9:6; 1Co 15:22, 45) Podemos entender melhor o propósito de Deus, de fazer homens obedientes retornar à relação de "filhos de Deus". (Ro 8:20, 21) Observamos que a benevolência de Jeová é expressa para com aqueles que o amam e que guardam os Seus mandamentos, "até mil gerações". (De 7:9) Observamos a sua veracidade qual Deus que cumpre seus pactos, e sua cuidadosa preservação dum registro histórico, em que podemos com segurança basear nossa fé. A genealogia, bem como outros aspectos da Bíblia, provam que Deus é o grande Registrador e Preservador da história. — Veja GENEALOGIA DE JESUS CRISTO.

Conselho de Paulo a Respeito de Genealogias. O apóstolo Paulo, escrevendo por volta de 61-64 EC, disse a Timóteo que não prestasse atenção a "histórias falsas e a genealogias, que acabam em nada, mas que fornecem mais questões para pesquisa do que uma dispensação de algo por Deus em conexão com a fé". (1Ti 1:4) A força deste aviso é melhor avaliada quando sabemos os extremos a que os judeus posteriormente iam na pesquisa de genealogias e quão minuciosamente investigavam qualquer possível discrepância. O Talmude Babilônico (Pesahim 62*b*) faz a declaração de que "entre 'Azel' e 'Azel' [1 Crônicas 8:38-9:44, um trecho genealógico da Bíblia], eles estavam carregados com quatrocentos camelos de interpretações exegéticas!" — Hebrew-English Edition of the Babylonian Talmud (Edição Hebraico-Inglês do Talmude Babilônico), traduzido por H. Freedman, Londres, 1967.

Não tinha sentido empenhar-se em estudar e em discutir tais assuntos, e ainda mais na época em que Paulo escreveu a Timóteo. Não era mais vital manter registros genealógicos para provar a linhagem da pessoa, visto que Deus não reconhecia mais nenhuma diferença entre judeus e gentios na congregação cristã. (Gál 3:28) E os registros genealógicos já tinham confirmado a ascendência de Cristo através da linhagem de Davi. Também, não demoraria muito, depois de Paulo escrever esta admoestação, até Jerusalém ser destruída, e junto com ela, os registros judaicos. Deus não os preservou. Por conseguinte, Paulo estava ansioso que Timóteo e as congregações não fossem desviados para gastar tempo em pesquisas e em controvérsias a respeito de assuntos da linhagem pessoal, que nada contribuíam para a fé cristã. A genealogia fornecida pela Bíblia é suficiente para provar o Messiado de Cristo, que é a questão genealógica de importância primária para os cristãos. As outras genealogias bíblicas constituem testemunho da autenticidade do registro bíblico, manifestando claramente que ela é um relato genuinamente histórico.

GENEALOGIA DE JESUS CRISTO. No primeiro capítulo de Mateus encontramos a genealogia de Jesus a partir de Abraão. Em Lucas, capítulo 3, encontra-se uma genealogia que remonta a "Adão, filho de Deus". A genealogia de Jesus é a única fornecida nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Parte desta genealogia aparece em 1 Crônicas, capítulos 1 a 3, desde Adão, passando por Salomão e Zorobabel. Os livros de Gênesis e de Rute, em conjunto, fornecem a linhagem de Adão a Davi.

As últimas três listas (Gênesis/Rute, 1 Crônicas e Lucas) concordam plenamente desde Adão até Arpaxade (Arfaxade), com pequenas diferenças quanto a certos nomes, tais como Quenã, que é "Cainã", em Lucas 3:37. As listas de Crônicas e de Gênesis/Rute concordam até Davi, encontrando-se no relato de Lucas outro "Cainã" entre Arfaxade e Selá. — Lu 3:35, 36.

Desde Salomão até Zorobabel, o registro de Crônicas e Mateus concordam de modo geral, sendo que Mateus omite alguns nomes. Estas diferenças, e as diferenças no relato de Lucas, desde Davi até Jesus, serão consideradas mais adiante.

Debaixo de GENEALOGIA, mostramos que, além de muitos registros familiares, particulares, os judeus mantinham registros públicos de genealogias, e que cronistas tais como Esdras tinham acesso a eles, ao compilarem suas listas; também, que existiam registros públicos no primeiro século, evidentemente até 70 EC. A questão de o Messias descender de Abraão, através de Davi, era para eles de importância primária. De modo que podemos confiar em que tanto Mateus como Lucas consultaram estas tabelas genealógicas.

Confiabilidade das Genealogias nos Evangelhos. Surge a questão: Por que omite Mateus alguns nomes contidos nas listas de outros cronistas? Em primeiro lugar, para se provar uma genealogia, não é necessário dar o nome de cada elo na linhagem. Por exemplo, Esdras, para provar sua linhagem sacerdotal, em Esdras 7:1-5, omitiu diversos nomes constantes na lista da linhagem sacerdotal em 1 Crônicas 6:1-15. Obviamente, não era essencial dar o nome de todos estes antepassados para satisfazer os judeus quanto à linhagem sacerdotal dele. Algo similar ocorre com Mateus: Sem dúvida, ele usou o registro público e copiou dele, se não todos os nomes, pelo menos os necessários para provar que Jesus descendia de Abraão e de Davi. Ele tinha também acesso às Escrituras Hebraicas, que podia consultar junto com os registros públicos oficiais. — Compare Ru 4:12, 18-22, com Mt 1:3-6.

As listas tanto de Mateus como de Lucas eram de nomes publicamente reconhecidos como autênticos pelos judeus daqueles tempos. Os escribas e os fariseus, bem como os saduceus, eram ferrenhos inimigos do cristianismo, e eles se valeriam de qualquer argumento possível para desacreditar Jesus, mas é digno de nota que nunca questionaram estas genealogias. Se a genealogia de Jesus, apresentada quer por Mateus, quer por Lucas, estivesse errada, que oportunidade isso teria sido para estes oponentes provarem isto na ocasião! Pois, até 70 EC, eles evidentemente tinham livre acesso aos registros genealógicos públicos e às Escrituras.

O mesmo se dá com os inimigos pagãos do cristianismo, no primeiro século, muitos dos quais, assim como aqueles judeus, sendo homens eruditos, teriam indicado prontamente qualquer evidência de que estas listas de Mateus e de Lucas não eram autênticas e eram contraditórias. Mas não há registro de que estes primitivos inimigos pagãos atacassem os cristãos nesta base.

Também, tanto Mateus como Lucas alcançaram seu objetivo, e isso era tudo o que era necessário. Para provar que Jesus descendia de Abraão e de Davi, não era necessário criar uma nova genealogia. Tudo o que tinham de fazer era copiar tabelas públicas que a nação aceitava plenamente com respeito à linhagem de Davi e do sacerdócio, e todos os outros assuntos que exigiam prova da linhagem da pessoa. (Veja Lu 1:5; 2:3-5; Ro 11:1.) Mesmo que houvesse omissões nestas tabelas, isso não detrairia daquilo que esses escritores de Evangelhos pretenderam e realmente conseguiram fazer, a saber, apresentar prova legal e publicamente reconhecida da genealogia de Jesus, o Messias.

Problemas na Genealogia de Jesus Registrada por Mateus. Mateus divide a genealogia de Abraão a Jesus em três seções de 14 gerações cada uma. (Mt 1:17) Esta divisão pode ter sido feita como ajuda para a memória. No entanto, ao contarmos os nomes, verificamos que totalizam 41, em vez de 42. Uma sugestão a respeito de como podem ser contados é a seguinte: Contar os nomes de Abraão até Davi, 14 nomes; usar então Davi como nome inicial do segundo grupo de 14, tendo Josias por último; finalmente, encabeçar a terceira série de 14 nomes com Jeconias (Joaquim) e terminá-la com Jesus. Note que Mateus repete o nome de Davi como o último dos primeiros 14 nomes e como o primeiro dos próximos 14. Daí, ele repete a expressão "deportação para Babilônia", que ele relaciona com Josias e seus filhos. — Mt 1:17.

Conforme já declarado, Mateus pode ter copiado sua lista de forma exata do registro público que ele usou, ou pode ter propositadamente omitido alguns elos, pretendendo ajudar a memória. No entanto, uma sugestão a respeito da omissão aqui de três reis da linhagem de Davi, entre Jeorão e Uzias (Azarias), é que Jeorão se casou com a iníqua Atalia, filha de Jezabel, da casa de Acabe, introduzindo assim esta estirpe condenada por Deus na linhagem dos reis de Judá. (1Rs 21:20-26; 2Rs 8:25-27) Após mencionar Jeorão como primeiro na aliança iníqua, Mateus omite os nomes dos próximos três reis até a quarta geração, Acazias, Jeoás e Amazias, os frutos desta aliança. — Compare Mt 1:8 com 1Cr 3:10-12.

Mateus indica que Zorobabel era filho de Sealtiel (Mt 1:12), e isto coincide com outras referências. (Esd 3:2; Ne 12:1; Ag 1:14; Lu 3:27) No entanto, em 1 Crônicas 3:19, Zorobabel é chamado de filho de Pedaías. Evidentemente, Zorobabel era filho do próprio Pedaías e filho legal de Sealtiel, em razão de casamento de cunhado; ou, possivelmente, depois de falecer Pedaías, pai de Zorobabel, este foi criado por Sealtiel como seu próprio filho e por isso passou a ser reconhecido legalmente como filho de Sealtiel.

Um Problema na Genealogia de Jesus Registrada por Lucas. Cópias manuscritas disponíveis de Lucas alistam um segundo "Cainã" entre Arfaxade (Arpaxade) e Selá. (Lu 3:35, 36; compare isso com Gên 10:24; 11:12; 1Cr 1:18, 24.) A maioria dos peritos considera isso como erro de copista. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, não se encontra "Cainã" nesta posição relativa nas listas genealógicas nos textos hebraico e samaritano, nem em qualquer dos Targuns ou das versões exceto na Septuaginta grega. E não parece que se encontrava mesmo nas primitivas cópias da Septuaginta, porque Josefo, que usualmente seguia a Septuaginta, alista a seguir Seles (Selá) como filho de Arfaxades (Arpaxade). (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 146 [vi, 4]) Os antigos escritores Irineu, Africano, Eusé-bio e Jerônimo rejeitam o segundo "Cainã" como interpolação nas cópias do relato de Lucas. — Veja CAINÃ N.º 2.

Por que diferem as genealogias de Jesus Cristo conforme apresentadas por Mateus e por Lucas?

A diferença entre quase todos os nomes na genealogia de Jesus registrada por Lucas em comparação com a apresentada por Mateus é prontamente resolvida pelo fato de que Lucas traçou a linhagem de Jesus através de Natã, filho de Davi, em vez de através de Salomão, conforme fez Mateus. (Lu 3:31; Mt 1:6, 7) Lucas, evidentemente, segue os antepassados de Maria, mostrando assim ter sido Jesus descendente natural de Davi, ao passo que Mateus mostra o direito legal de Jesus ao trono de Davi, por ele descender de Salomão através de José, que era legalmente o pai de Jesus. Tanto Mateus como Lucas indicam que José não era o pai verdadeiro de Jesus, mas apenas seu pai adotivo, que lhe concedeu o direito legal. Mateus se afasta do estilo usado em toda a sua genealogia quando chega a Jesus, dizendo: "Jacó tornou-se pai de José, marido de Maria, da qual nasceu Jesus, que é chamado Cristo." (Mt 1:16) Note que ele não diz que 'José tornou-se pai de Jesus', mas que ele era "marido de Maria, da qual nasceu Jesus". Lucas é ainda mais incisivo quando, depois de primeiro mostrar que Jesus na realidade era o Filho de Deus por intermédio de Maria (Lu 1:32-35), ele diz: "Jesus . . . sendo, como era a opinião, filho de José, filho de Eli." — Lu 3:23.

Visto que Jesus não era filho do próprio José, mas era o Filho de Deus, a genealogia de Jesus, por Lucas, provaria que ele era, por nascimento humano, filho de Davi, por meio da sua mãe, Maria. Sobre as genealogias de Jesus, apresentadas por Mateus e por Lucas, Frederic Louis Godet escreveu: "Este estudo detalhado do texto nos leva assim a admitir — 1. Que o registro genealógico de Lucas é o de Eli, avô de Jesus; 2. Que, visto esta filiação de Jesus com Eli ser expressamente oposta à Sua filiação com José, o documento que ele preservou para nós, no conceito dele, não pode ser nada mais do que a genealogia de Jesus através de Maria. Mas, por que não menciona Lucas a Maria, e por que passa logo de Jesus para o Seu avô? Sentimentos antigos não condiziam com a menção da mãe como elo genealógico. Entre os gregos, o homem era filho do seu pai, não da sua mãe; e entre os judeus, o adágio era: 'Genus matris non vocatur genus ["O descendente da mãe não é chamado descendente (dela)"]' ('Baba bathra', 110, a)." — Commentary on Luke (Comentário sobre Lucas), 1981, p. 129.

Na realidade, cada genealogia (a tabela de Mateus e a de Lucas) mostra sua ascendência de Davi, através de Salomão e através de Natã. (Mt 1:6; Lu 3:31) Ao examinarmos as listas de Mateus e de Lucas, verificamos que, depois de divergirem em Salomão e Natã, elas incidem outra vez em duas pessoas, Sealtiel e Zorobabel. Isto pode ser explicado da seguinte forma: Sealtiel era filho de Jeconias; talvez por casamento com a filha de Néri, ele se tornou genro de Néri, sendo assim chamado "filho de Néri". É também possível que Néri não tivesse filhos, de modo que Sealtiel foi contado como seu "filho" também por este motivo. Zorobabel, que provavelmente era mesmo filho de Pedaías, foi legalmente considerado como filho de Sealtiel, conforme já antes explicado. — Veja Mt 1:12; Lu 3:27; 1Cr 3:17-19.

Daí, os relatos indicam que Zorobabel teve dois filhos, Resa e Abiúde, as linhagens separando-se de novo neste ponto. (Estes talvez não fossem realmente filhos, mas sim descendentes, ou, pelo menos um, talvez genro. Veja 1Cr 3:19.) (Lu 3:27; Mt 1:13) As genealogias de Jesus, tanto por Mateus como por Lucas, divergem aqui daquela encontrada em 1 Crônicas, capítulo 3. Isto talvez se deva a que diversos nomes foram propositalmente omitidos por Mateus e possivelmente também por Lucas. Mas, deve-se ter em mente o fato de que essas diferenças nas listas genealógicas de Mateus e de Lucas bem provavelmente são as já presentes nos registros genealógicos então em uso e plenamente aceitos pelos judeus, e não eram mudanças feitas por Mateus e por Lucas.

Portanto, podemos concluir que as duas listas, de Mateus e de Lucas, conjugam as duas verdades, a saber: (1) que Jesus era realmente o Filho de Deus e o herdeiro natural do Reino pelo nascimento milagroso por meio da virgem Maria, da linhagem de Davi, e (2) que Jesus era também o herdeiro legal na linhagem masculina descendente de Davi e de Salomão, por meio do seu pai adotivo, José. (Lu 1:32, 35; Ro 1:1-4) Se houvesse alguma acusação por parte de judeus hostis, de que o nascimento de Jesus era ilegítimo, o fato de que José, apercebido das circunstâncias, casou-se com Maria e deu-lhe a proteção do seu bom nome e da sua linhagem real, refutaria tal calúnia.

GENEROSIDADE. Trata-se daquela disposição nobre, acalentadora, de abençoar outros por dar livremente de mão aberta, sem parcimoniosidade. A palavra hebraica na·dhív, traduzida "generoso" em Isaías 32:8, é também traduzida "disposto" e 'nobre'. (Sal 51:12; Núm 21:18, n.) O substantivo grego ha·pló·tes ("generosidade" [2Co 8:2; 9:11]; "liberalidade" [Ro 12:8]; "sinceridade" [Ef 6:5]) tem o sentido básico de "simplicidade". (2Co 11:3, Int)

O próprio Jeová é a personificação da generosidade, Aquele que, "segundo a sua vontade", supre plenamente todas as necessidades das suas criaturas obedientes. (1Jo 5:14; Fil 4:19) Toda boa dádiva e todo presente perfeito vêm dele, inclusive uma dádiva tão intangível como a sabedoria. — Tg 1:5, 17.

Moisés instou com seus coisraelitas a que cultivassem esta qualidade divina da generosidade, mesmo ao fazerem um empréstimo sob fiança. "Não deves endurecer teu coração, nem fechar a mão para com o teu irmão pobre. Pois deves abrir generosamente tua mão para com ele . . . Deves terminantemente dar-lhe e teu coração não deve ser mesquinho ao lhe dares . . . É por isso que te ordeno, dizendo: 'Deves abrir generosamente tua mão para com teu irmão atribulado e pobre no teu país.' " — De 15:7-11.

O provérbio diz: "Far-se-á que a própria alma generosa [literalmente: a alma com uma dádiva de bênção] engorde [prospere], e aquele que rega liberalmente os outros também será regado liberalmente." (Pr 11:25) Jesus Cristo expressou isso do seguinte modo: "Há mais felicidade em dar do que há em receber." (At 20:35) Novamente, ele disse: "Praticai o dar, e dar-vos-ão. Derramarão em vosso regaço uma medida excelente, recalcada, sacudida e transbordante. Pois, com a medida com que medis, medirão a vós em troca." — Lu 6:38.

Na Congregação Cristã. O apóstolo Paulo também declarou esta verdade proverbial ainda de outra maneira: "Quem semear parcimoniosamente, ceifará também parcimoniosamente; e quem semear generosamente, ceifará também generosamente." Sendo assim, o apóstolo raciocina: "Faça cada um conforme tem resolvido no seu coração, não de modo ressentido, nem sob compulsão, pois Deus ama o dador animado." (2Co 9:6, 7) Paulo prossegue, indicando o grande exemplo de generosidade de Jeová, não só em suprir abundantemente semente ao semeador e pão para comer, mas também enriquecendo os irmãos coríntios "para toda sorte de generosidade", a fim de que eles fossem generosos para com outros. Paulo declara que tais gestos de generosidade resultam em "expressões de agradecimentos a Deus". — 2Co 9:8-13.

Paulo, exortando à mesma generosidade piedosa, escreveu aos Romanos (12:8): "Aquele que distribui, faça-o com liberalidade." Ele escreveu aos Hebreus (13:16): "Além disso, não vos esqueçais de fazer o bem e de partilhar as coisas com outros, porque Deus se agrada bem de tais sacrifícios." As congregações na Macedônia eram exemplos notáveis de quem dá generosamente. Terem elas alegremente até mesmo ido "além da sua capacidade real", contribuindo da sua pobreza, fez "abundar as riquezas de sua generosidade". — 2Co 8:1-4.

Note-se que estes textos sobre a generosidade e a liberalidade não estão em conflito, nem em desequilíbrio com outros que condenam os ingratos, os indolentes e os preguiçosos. Por exemplo, o preguiçoso que não quer lavrar em tempo frio não merece nada quando mendiga na época da colheita; quem se nega a trabalhar não tem direito à generosidade dos outros. (Pr 20:4; 2Te 3:10) Não se deviam colocar viúvas na lista para receber ajuda, a menos que estivessem qualificadas para isso. (1Ti 5:9, 10) As contribuições feitas pelas congregações em toda a Galácia, Macedônia e Acaia não se destinavam aos necessitados entre adoradores pagãos em geral, mas aos "santos" que passavam necessidade. — 1Co 16:1; 2Co 9:1, 2.

GENESARÉ.

1. Pequena planície, um tanto triangular, beirando a margem NO do mar da Galileia e tendo uns 5 por 2,5 km de extensão. Nesta região, Jesus Cristo realizou curas milagrosas. (Mt 14:34-36; Mr 6:53-56; FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 739) Segundo o historiador judeu Josefo, esta planície era uma região linda, frutífera e bem regada, na qual cresciam nogueiras, palmeiras e oliveiras, e onde havia figos e uvas disponíveis durante dez meses do ano. — The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), III, 516-521 (x, 8).

2. "Lago de Genesaré" era outro nome do mar da Galileia. (Lu 5:1) Alguns peritos acreditam que Genesaré é provavelmente a forma grega do anterior nome hebraico, Quinerete. — Núm 34:11; veja GALILEIA, MAR DA.

GÊNESIS, LIVRO DE.

Primeiro livro do Pentateuco (palavra grega para "cinco rolos" ou "volume quíntuplo"). "Gênesis" (que significa "Origem; Nascimento") é o nome dado pela Septuaginta grega ao primeiro destes livros, ao passo que seu título hebraico Bere'·shíth (No Princípio) é tirado da primeira palavra na sua sentença inicial.

Quando e Onde Foi Escrito. O livro de Gênesis, evidentemente, fazia parte do único escrito original (a Tora), e foi possivelmente terminado por Moisés no ermo de Sinai, no ano 1513 AEC. Depois de Gênesis 1:1, 2 (concernente à criação dos céus e da Terra), o livro, evidentemente, abrange milhares de anos envolvidos na preparação da Terra para ser habitada pelos humanos (veja CRIAÇÃO; DIA), e depois abrange o período desde a criação do homem até o ano 1657 AEC, em que José faleceu. — Veja CRONOLOGIA (Desde a Criação Humana Até o Presente).

Escritor. Hoje em dia, em geral, rejeita-se a objeção antigamente levantada por alguns cépticos, de que a escrita não era conhecida nos dias de Moisés. No seu livro New Discoveries in Babylonia About Genesis (Novas Descobertas em Babilônia sobre Gênesis; 1949, p. 35), P. J. Wiseman salienta que a pesquisa arqueológica fornece ampla prova de que "a arte da escrita começou nos tempos mais primitivos da história conhecida do homem". Virtualmente todos os peritos modernos reconhecem a existência da escrita muito antes do tempo de Moisés (no segundo milênio AEC). Expressões tais como a encontrada em Êxodo 17:14: "Escreve isto como recordação no livro", corroboram que a escrita era comum nos dias de Moisés. Adão deve ter tido a capacidade de inventar uma forma de escrita, visto que Deus dera a ele, o homem perfeito, uma linguagem com a habilidade de manejá-la perfeitamente. Apesar disso, nada na Bíblia prova que ele tenha feito isso. — Gên 2:19, 23.

Donde obteve Moisés as informações que incluiu em Gênesis?

Todas as informações contidas no livro de Gênesis se relacionam com eventos que ocorreram antes do nascimento de Moisés. Podem ter sido recebidas diretamente por revelação divina. É óbvio que alguém, quer Moisés, quer outro antes dele, teve de obter desta forma as informações sobre os acontecimentos anteriores à criação do homem. (Gên 1:1-27; 2:7, 8) Estas informações, bem como os pormenores restantes, porém, podem ter sido transmitidas a Moisés por meio de tradição oral. Por causa da longevidade dos homens daquele período, as informações podem ter sido transmitidas por Adão a Moisés através de apenas cinco elos humanos, a saber, Metusalém, Sem, Isaque, Levi e Anrão. Uma terceira possibilidade é que Moisés obteve grande parte das informações relativas a Gênesis de escritos ou documentos já existentes. Já no século 18, o erudito holandês Campegius Vitringa sustentava este conceito baseando sua conclusão nas frequentes ocorrências, em Gênesis (dez vezes), da expressão (em KJ; Tr) "estas são as gerações de", e uma vez "este é o livro das gerações de". (Gên 2:4; 5:1; 6:9; 10:1; 11:10, 27; 25:12, 19; 36:1, 9; 37:2) Nesta expressão, a palavra hebraica para "gerações" é toh·le·dhóhth, melhor traduzida por "histórias" ou "origens". Por exemplo, "gerações dos céus e da terra" dificilmente se enquadraria aqui, ao passo que "história dos céus e da terra" tem sentido. (Gên 2:4) Em harmonia com isso, a versão alemã Elberfelder, a francesa Crampon e a espanhola Bover-Cantera são versões que usam o termo "história", assim como faz a Tradução do Novo Mundo. Não há dúvida de que, assim como os homens estão hoje interessados num registro histórico exato, assim também estiveram desde o começo.

Apesar de não ter provas bíblicas, Vitringa e outros entenderam que a palavra toh·le·dhóhth em Gênesis se referia a um documento histórico escrito já existente, que Moisés tinha em seu poder e em que ele se baseou para obter a maior parte das informações registradas em Gênesis. Eles acreditavam que as pessoas mencionadas em conexão direta com essas 'histórias' (Adão, Noé, os filhos de Noé, Sem, Tera, Ismael, Isaque, Esaú e Jacó) ou eram os escritores, ou eram os donos originais destes documentos escritos. Naturalmente, isto ainda deixa sem explicação como todos estes documentos vieram a estar no poder de Moisés. Também deixa sem explicação por que documentos obtidos de homens que não se distinguiram como adoradores fiéis de Jeová (tais como Ismael e Esaú) devessem ser a fonte de muitas das informações usadas. É inteiramente possível que a expressão: "Esta é a história de", seja simplesmente uma frase introdutória que serve convenientemente para separar as diversas seções da longa história geral. Compare isso com o uso duma expressão similar por Mateus, na introdução do seu Evangelho. — Mt 1:1; veja ESCRITA.

Portanto, não se pode chegar a nenhuma conclusão definitiva sobre a fonte direta da qual Moisés obteve as informações que registrou. Antes, em vez de ter sido apenas por um dos métodos considerados, as informações podem ter sido recebidas por meio de todos os três, parte através de revelação direta, parte por transmissão oral e parte através de registros escritos. O ponto importante é que Jeová Deus guiou o profeta Moisés, de modo que este escreveu sob inspiração divina. — 2Pe 1:21.

A matéria destinava-se a servir de guia inspirado para gerações futuras. Devia ser lida frequentemente para o povo (De 31:10-12; 2Rs 23:2, 3; Ne 8:2, 3, 18), e os reis de Israel deviam obter suas instruções dela. — De 17:18, 19.

A "Teoria Documentária" de Críticos. Uma teoria apresentada por alguns críticos da Bíblia é que Gênesis não é obra de um só escritor ou compilador, a saber, Moisés, mas, antes, representa a obra de diversos escritores, alguns dos quais viveram muito depois do tempo de Moisés. À base de supostas diferenças no estilo e no emprego de palavras, apresentaram a chamada teoria documentária. Segundo esta teoria, havia três fontes, as quais chamam de "J" (javista [jeovista]), "E" (eloísta) e "P" (Priest Codex [Código Sacerdotal]). Por causa da dupla menção de certos eventos ou por causa da similaridade de relatos em partes diferentes de Gênesis, alguns acrescentariam ainda outras fontes à lista, indo ao ponto de dissecar o livro de Gênesis, afirmando que havia até 14 fontes independentes. Sustentam que estas diversas fontes ou escritores tinham conceitos e teologias diferentes, mas que Gênesis, como produto amalgamado destas fontes, não obstante, constitui um todo. Eles recorrem a muitos absurdos em apoio das suas teorias, alguns dos quais se poderiam mencionar aqui.

A base original da teoria documentária era o uso de títulos diferentes para Deus; os críticos afirmam que isto indica escritores diferentes. A irracionalidade de tal conceito, porém, pode ser vista em que, em apenas uma pequena parte de Gênesis, encontramos os seguintes títulos: "Deus Altíssimo" ('El 'El·yóhn, Gên 14:18); "Produtor do céu e da terra" (14:19); "Soberano Senhor" ('Adho·nai, 15:2); "Deus de vista" (16:13); "Deus Todo-Poderoso" ('El Shad·dai, 17:1); "Deus" ('Elo·hím, 17:3); "verdadeiro Deus" (ha·'Elo·hím, 17:18); "o Juiz de toda a terra" (18:25). Tentar usar isso como base para atribuir cada uma destas seções a um escritor diferente produz insuperáveis dificuldades e se torna absurdo. Antes, a verdade é que os títulos diferentes aplicados a Deus, em Gênesis, são usados por causa do seu significado, revelando Jeová nos seus diferentes atributos, nas suas diversas obras e nos seus tratos com o seu povo.

Outros exemplos são: Por causa do uso da palavra ba·rá', "criou", diz-se que Gênesis 1:1 foi escrito pela fonte chamada "P". No entanto, encontramos a mesma palavra em Gênesis 6:7, na fonte que supostamente é "J". Diz-se que aparecer a expressão "terra de Canaã" em diversos textos (entre eles Gên 12:5; 13:12a; 16:3; 17:8) é peculiaridade do escritor conhecido como "P", e, por isso, esses críticos sustentam que estas passagens foram escritas por "P". Mas, nos capítulos 42, 44, 47 e 50, encontramos a mesma expressão nos escritos atribuídos pelos mesmos críticos a "J" e "E". Assim, ao passo que os críticos afirmam que suas teorias são necessárias para explicar as supostas incoerências em Gênesis, um exame mostra que as próprias teorias estão cheias de incoerências.

Se a matéria atribuída a cada fonte teorética for retirada trecho por trecho, e sentença por sentença, do relato de Gênesis e depois reajuntada, o resultado será uma série de relatos ilógicos e incoerentes. Se fôssemos crer que estas diversas fontes foram usadas e depois ajuntadas por um compilador posterior, seríamos obrigados a aceitar que estes relatos incoerentes, antes de serem amalgamados, foram aceitos como históricos e usados por séculos pela nação de Israel. Mas, qual o escritor, especialmente um historiador, que chegaria a fazer tais narrativas desconexas, e se ele as fizesse, que nação as aceitaria como história do seu povo?

O que ilustra a irracionalidade dos que promovem a "teoria da documentação" é a seguinte declaração do egiptólogo K. A. Kitchen: "No criticismo do Pentateuco há muito tempo se tornou costumeiro dividir o total em documentos ou 'mãos' separadas. . . . Porém, a prática do criticismo do Antigo Testamento de atribuir essas características a diferentes 'mãos' ou documentos torna-se um manifesto absurdo quando aplicados a outros antigos escritos orientais que exibem fenômenos precisamente iguais." Ele cita então o exemplo de uma biografia egípcia, a qual, usando-se os métodos teoréticos empregados pelos críticos de Gênesis, poderia ser atribuída a "mãos" diferentes, mas que a evidência mostra ser uma obra que "foi concebida, composta, escrita e inscrita dentro de meses, semanas, ou talvez até menos. Não pode haver 'mãos' por detrás de seu estilo, o qual meramente varia com os assuntos em foco e com a questão de um tratamento apropriado." (O Novo Dicionário da Bíblia, editado por J. Douglas, 1966, p. 477, Edições Vida Nova) A fraqueza das teorias dos críticos realmente reforça a evidência de que apenas um homem, Moisés, registrou o relato interligado, coerente, encontrado em Gênesis conforme foi inspirado por Deus.

O Caráter Histórico de Gênesis. Gênesis é a única fonte conhecida dos humanos que fornece uma história lógica e coerente de coisas que remontam ao começo. Sem a sua história factual sobre o primeiro homem e a primeira mulher, só nos restariam as histórias fantasiosas ou as explicações alegóricas sobre o início do homem, encontradas nos relatos de criação de nações pagãs. A comparação do livro de Gênesis com os relatos pagãos sobre a criação demonstra claramente a superioridade do relato bíblico.

Assim, o principal mito babilônico diz que o deus Marduque, o principal deus de Babilônia, matou a deusa Tiamat, depois tomou o corpo dela e "dividiu-a em duas partes, como um marisco: Metade dela ele afixou e colocou no teto como céu". Assim vieram a existir a Terra e o céu. Quanto à criação da vida humana, este mito declara que os deuses capturaram o deus Quingu e "impuseram-lhe sua culpa e seccionaram seus (vasos) de sangue. De seu sangue moldaram a humanidade". (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por James Pritchard, 1974, pp. 67, 68) Os mitos egípcios sobre a criação também envolvem as atividades de diversos deuses, mas discordam quanto ao deus de que cidade (o de Mênfis ou o de Tebas) concebeu a criação. Um mito egípcio relata que o deus-sol Rá criou a humanidade das lágrimas dele. Os mitos gregos são comparáveis aos babilônicos. Antigos registros chineses são na maioria calendários e cálculos cronológicos, ou registros de mero interesse local ou temporário.

Nenhuma de tais fontes antigas nos fornece a história, a genealogia e a cronologia oferecidas pelo livro de Gênesis. Os escritos das nações antigas, em geral, mostram incerteza e confusão quanto a quem eram os fundadores da sua nação. A maneira específica e detalhada com que a primitiva história de Israel é apresentada é nitidamente diferente. Na realidade, não esperaríamos outra coisa, em vista do propósito de Deus para com o seu povo. A Bíblia nos diz que a nação de Israel foi governada diretamente por Deus, e que ele lidou com os antepassados dela, especialmente Abraão, Isaque e Jacó. Usou então Moisés de modo bem especial, dando a Israel por meio dele a Lei que os

DESTAQUES DE GÊNESIS

Registro da criação e preparação da Terra, por Deus, para ser habitada pelos humanos, do papel da humanidade no propósito de Deus e dos tratos de Deus com homens de fé, durante uns 2.300 anos dos primórdios da história humana.

Abrange o período desde o começo da criação física até a morte de José no Egito (1657 AEC).

Criação de céus e Terra físicos, e a preparação da Terra para ser habitada pelos humanos. (1:1–2:25)

Pecado e morte penetram no mundo; predito um "descendente [lit.: semente]" como libertador. (3:1–5:5)

- Serpente engana mulher; esta e Adão comem do fruto proibido.
- Sentenciados serpente, mulher e Adão; o descendente (semente) da mulher esmagará a serpente.
- Caim, primogênito de Adão e Eva, assassina seu irmão Abel.
- Em cumprimento do julgamento de Deus, Adão morre aos 930 anos de idade.

Anjos e homens iníquos arruínam a Terra; Deus traz Dilúvio global. (5:6–11:9)

- Noé nasce na linhagem de Sete, filho de Adão; nos seus dias, anjos desobedientes casam-se com mulheres e geram os nefilins, que se entregam à violência.
- Jeová decreta a destruição por meio dum dilúvio, mas manda Noé construir uma arca para a preservação da sua família e de espécies básicas de animais.
- As águas do Dilúvio predominam na Terra inteira; todos os humanos, criaturas voadoras e animais terrestres fora da arca perecem.
- Após o Dilúvio, Jeová proíbe o consumo de sangue, autoriza a pena de morte para o assassínio e estabelece o pacto do arco-íris, prometendo nunca mais trazer um dilúvio.
- Durante a segunda geração nascida após o Dilúvio, pessoas começam a construir uma torre, desafiando o propósito de Deus, de que se espalhassem; Jeová confunde-lhes a língua, dispersando-as.

Os tratos de Jeová com Abraão. (11:10–25:26)

- Abrão, descendente de Sem, parte de Ur em obediência à chamada de Deus.
- Em Canaã, promete-se a Abrão que seu descendente, ou semente, receberá aquela terra.
- Ló separa-se de seu tio Abrão, estabelece-se perto de Sodoma, é capturado e depois é liberto por Abrão; Melquisedeque abençoa Abrão.
- Abrão toma Agar como concubina, e ela dá à luz Ismael.
- Jeová muda o nome de Abrão para Abraão, e o de Sarai para Sara; estabelece-se o pacto da circuncisão.
- O anjo de Jeová informa Abraão que Sara terá um filho — Isaque.
- Informado sobre o julgamento de Sodoma, Abraão roga pelos justos.
- Anjos instam com Ló e sua família a deixarem Sodoma; a esposa de Ló perece por desobediência.
- Nasce Isaque; a caçoada de Ismael quando Isaque é desmamado resulta em Ismael ser mandado embora.
- Em obediência a Jeová, Abraão tenta sacrificar Isaque; e recebe garantia a respeito das promessas do pacto.
- Após a morte de Sara, Abraão providencia uma esposa para Isaque.
- Rebeca, esposa de Isaque, dá à luz Esaú e Jacó.

Jacó (Israel) e seus 12 filhos; vão ao Egito para preservar a vida. (25:27–50:26)

- Depois de Jacó comprar de Esaú o direito de primogenitura por uma refeição, e, mais tarde, às instâncias de Rebeca, procurar obter a bênção que Isaque pretendia dar a Esaú, ele parte para Padã-Arã, buscando esposa.
- Labão, irmão de Rebeca, engana Jacó fazendo-o casar-se com Leia; daí, Jacó casa-se com Raquel; com Leia e Raquel, e as duas servas delas, Jacó tem 11 filhos e uma filha, Diná, antes de partir com a família de Padã-Arã.
- Jacó luta com anjo, e tem deslocado a junta da coxa; agarra-se desesperadamente ao anjo, a fim de receber uma bênção, e seu nome é mudado para Israel.
- Após um encontro pacífico com Esaú, Jacó mora em Sucote, e depois em Siquém, onde Diná é violentada.
- Raquel morre ao dar à luz o 12.º filho de Jacó, Benjamim.
- Odiando José, primogênito de Raquel, seus meios-irmãos o vendem; ele se torna escravo de Potifar, no Egito.
- Encarcerado sob acusações falsas, José passa por situações que trazem à atenção de Faraó sua capacidade de interpretar sonhos.
- José interpreta sonhos de Faraó a respeito duma fome e é constituído em segundo governante do Egito.
- Fome em Canaã obriga filhos de Jacó a ir ao Egito em busca de alimentos; com o tempo, José se revela aos seus meios-irmãos.
- Jacó e família mudam-se para o Egito; José cuida deles.
- Jacó morre no Egito depois de proferir bênçãos proféticas sobre Efraim e Manassés, filhos de José, e sobre seus próprios 12 filhos.

constituiu em nação. A história de Israel existe em forma registrada não apenas em benefício de Israel, mas também em proveito de todos os que querem aprender os modos e tratos do verdadeiro Deus, e servi-lo.

Em resposta aos que rejeitariam muitas partes de Gênesis como fábulas e folclore, Wilhelm Möller diz: "Não acho que se pode tornar plausível que, em qualquer raça, as fábulas e os mitos viessem, no decorrer do tempo, a serem aceitos cada vez mais como fatos reais, de modo que devêssemos agora, quiçá, estar dispostos a aceitar como fatos históricos as lendas do Poema dos Nibelungos ou do Chapeuzinho Vermelho. Mas isto, segundo os críticos, deve ter acontecido com Israel." (The International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia [A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional], editada por J. Orr, 1960, Vol. II, p. 1209) Ele passa a indicar que os profetas aceitaram os relatos sobre a destruição de Sodoma e Gomorra como corretos (Is 1:9; Am 4:11) e que aceitaram Abraão, Isaque, Jacó e José como pessoas reais. (Is 29:22; Miq 7:20) Não somente isso, mas, nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, Abraão é mencionado em muitos lugares, até mesmo por Jesus Cristo, em Mateus 22:32, em conexão com o argumento sobre a ressurreição. Se Abraão, Isaque e Jacó não tivessem vivido realmente, Jesus teria usado outra ilustração. — Mt 22:31-33.

Valor do Livro. Gênesis nos diz como o Universo veio a existir. De modo simples, descreve as maravilhas da criação, sem que ofusquem o objetivo principal do livro. É assim dessemelhante das histórias pagãs sobre a criação, que tornam estas maravilhas a coisa principal, e que recorrem a absurdos e a inverdades óbvias para enfatizá-las. Gênesis fala sobre a obra da criação, e mostra o propósito de Deus em criar o homem, a relação do homem com Deus e a relação do homem com os animais. Fornece-nos a razão da morte e das dificuldades sofridas pela humanidade, e a esperança de libertação. Salienta que todos os humanos descendem de um só homem, Adão, o qual pecou e perdeu a vida para a sua posteridade; habilita-nos assim a compreender como o sacrifício resgatador de um só homem, Jesus Cristo, pôde expiar os pecados da humanidade. Gênesis habilita-nos a entender como a questão da legitimidade da soberania de Deus foi suscitada pela serpente simbólica, Satanás, o Diabo. Oferece-nos a esperança segura da destruição de Satanás e do alívio para a humanidade. Narra a origem de Babilônia e assim de toda a religião falsa na terra pós-diluviana, ajudando deste modo a identificar Babilônia, a Grande, no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse). — Veja BABILÔNIA, A GRANDE.

Jesus disse que aquele que serve a Deus tem de adorá-Lo com espírito e verdade. (Jo 4:24) O relato de Gênesis apresenta a verdade dos primórdios do homem e dos tratos de Deus com ele. Visto que tudo o que está registrado em Gênesis é verdade, não mito, podemos saber a verdade sobre a história do homem. Podemos ver que, até o tempo do Dilúvio, os homens certamente sabiam a verdade a respeito do que o relato bíblico diz sobre o Éden, porque havia ali o jardim e os querubins com a espada chamejante à sua entrada. (Gên 3:24) Mas, aqueles que queriam seguir o caminho dos seus próprios desejos desconsideraram os fatos que havia diante deles. Noé, porém, serviu a Deus segundo o modo em que o homem fora originalmente criado para servi-lo, segundo a história verdadeira. Embora Ninrode, depois do Dilúvio, iniciasse uma rebelião contra Deus, na Torre de Babel, os patriarcas descendentes da linhagem de Sem continuaram a apegar-se ao verdadeiro modo de vida. Quando chegou o tempo de Deus para organizar Israel como nação e dar-lhe a Lei, isto não era para estes algo completamente desconhecido, como uma mudança revolucionária no seu modo de vida. Não, porque na sociedade patriarcal eles já haviam feito muitas das coisas encontradas na Lei. Conforme declara a Cyclopædia (Ciclopédia; 1881, Vol. III, p. 782) de M'Clintock e Strong: "Esta teocracia não pode ter penetrado na história sem eventos preparatórios. Os fatos que levaram à introdução da teocracia acham-se contidos nos relatos de Gênesis."

Isto, por sua vez, preparou o caminho para o Messias e a introdução do cristianismo. Quando Jesus Cristo chegou, aqueles que haviam vivido segundo a Lei da melhor forma possível logo puderam identificá-lo. Ele não apareceu de forma súbita, anunciando-se como o grande salvador e líder, sem nenhuma base ou credenciais históricas. A base que havia sido fornecida de Gênesis em diante habilitou os sinceros a reconhecê-lo e a segui-lo. Portanto, era possível estabelecer uma forte organização de cristãos judeus como núcleo, preparada para levar uma convincente mensagem evangélica às nações. Os antepassados das nações pagãs as haviam desviado da verdade. Estavam 'apartadas do estado de Israel e eram estranhas aos pactos da promessa, e não tinham esperança e estavam sem Deus no mundo'. (Ef 2:12) Por conseguinte, tinham de aprender os princípios de Deus desde o início, antes de poderem tornar-se cristãos.

Portanto, Gênesis fornece uma base valiosa para o entendimento de todos os outros livros da Bíblia e é essencial para o cristianismo. Delineia o tema da Bíblia, a saber, a vindicação da soberania de Jeová e o derradeiro cumprimento do seu propósito para com a Terra, por meio do seu Reino sob o prometido Descendente, ou Semente. Gênesis, além da primeira profecia básica, em Gênesis 3:15, contém muitas outras profecias, das quais um grande número já se cumpriu desde que o relato foi redigido.

GENTIOS. Veja NAÇÕES.

GENTIOS, TEMPOS DOS. Veja TEMPOS DESIGNADOS DAS NAÇÕES.

GENUBATE. Filho de Hadade, príncipe edomita. Quando Joabe, chefe do exército, ocupou Edom durante o reinado de Davi, Hadade fugiu para o Egito. Ali ele obteve o favor de Faraó, cuja cunhada lhe foi dada como esposa. Com ela, Hadade gerou Genubate, que foi criado junto com os filhos de Faraó. — 1Rs 11:14-20.

GERA, I [possivelmente: Residente Forasteiro].

1. Filho de Bela, primogênito de Benjamim. (1Cr 8:1, 3) A designação "filhos", em Gênesis 46:21, onde Gera está alistado, aparentemente inclui netos.

2. Evidentemente, outro descendente de Bela, o benjamita; possivelmente, é o mesmo Gera mencionado em 1 Crônicas 8:7. — 1Cr 8:5.

3. Pai de Eúde, juiz benjamita. — Jz 3:15.

4. Pai de Simei, o benjamita, que invocou o mal sobre Davi. — 2Sa 16:5; 19:16, 18; 1Rs 2:8.

GERA, II. Trata-se de um peso correspondente a $\frac{1}{20}$ siclo e equivalente a 0,57 g. — Êx 30:13; Le 27:25; Núm 3:47; 18:16; Ez 45:12.

GERAÇÃO. O termo geração costuma referir-se a todas as pessoas nascidas mais ou menos no mesmo período. (Êx 1:6; Mt 11:16) Associa-se com isso o sentido de "contemporâneos". Em Gênesis 6:9, declara-se a respeito de Noé: "Mostrou-se sem defeito entre os seus contemporâneos [literalmente: gerações]." Quando usada com referência a parentescos, geração pode referir-se a um grupo de descendentes, tais como filhos e filhas, ou netos e netas. — Jó 42:16.

O termo pode ser usado como medida de tempo com referência a eras passadas ou futuras. As gerações da humanidade descendentes do pecador Adão têm sido transitórias, em contraste com a terra, que permanece para sempre. (Ec 1:4; Sal 104:5) Mas as expressões "inúmeras gerações" e "mil gerações" referem-se a algo que existe por tempo indefinido. (1Cr 16:15; Is 51:8) A ordem dada aos judeus, de que a celebração da Páscoa devia ser observada "nas vossas gerações", denotava uma realização contínua até um tempo então ainda indefinido. (Êx 12:14) Deus declarou a Moisés que seu nome Jeová era como recordação "por tempo indefinido", "por geração após geração", o que subentende para sempre. (Êx 3:15) O apóstolo Paulo nos diz que se deve dar glória a Deus "por todas as gerações, para todo o sempre". — Ef 3:21.

Geração pode significar uma classe de pessoas, isto é, as caracterizadas por certas qualidades ou condições. A Bíblia fala sobre "a geração do justo" (Sal 14:5; 24:6; 112:2) e sobre uma "geração pervertida e deturpada", "uma geração de perversidade". (De 32:5, 20; Pr 30:11-14) Jesus Cristo, quando na Terra, falou similarmente sobre o povo da nação judaica daqueles dias, e o apóstolo Paulo aplicou tais termos ao mundo dos seus dias, em geral, o qual estava apartado de Deus. — Mt 12:39; 16:4; 17:17; Mr 8:38; Fil 2:14, 15.

Uma palavra hebraica para "geração" é dohr, que corresponde à aramaica dar. (Da 4:3, 34) Dohr deriva da raiz verbal que significa "empilhar num círculo" ou "andar em volta" (Ez 24:5; Sal 84:10) e assim tem o subjacente sentido básico de "círculo". A palavra aparentada dur significa "bola". (Is 22:18) A equivalente grega é ge·ne·á, derivada duma raiz que significa "nascer".

Outra palavra hebraica, toh·le·dhóhth, é ocasionalmente traduzida "gerações" ou "genealogia" (Núm 3:1; Ru 4:18), também "descendentes" ou "famílias" (1Cr 5:7; 7:2, 4, 9) e "história" ou "origens". — Gên 2:4; 5:1; 6:9; veja Al, BJ, CBC, MC, So e outras traduções.

Duração. Quando o termo "geração" é usado com referência a pessoas que vivem em determinada época, não se pode especificar a duração exata dela, exceto que o prazo dela estaria dentro de limites razoáveis. Estes limites seriam determinados pela duração da vida das pessoas da respectiva época ou população. A vida das dez gerações de Adão a Noé tinha em média a duração de mais de 850 anos cada uma. (Gên 5:5-31; 9:29) Mas, depois de Noé, a duração da vida do homem diminuiu abruptamente. Por exemplo, Abraão viveu apenas 175 anos. (Gên 25:7) Atualmente, bem similar ao que ocorria no tempo de Moisés, as pessoas que vivem em condições favoráveis talvez atinjam a idade de 70 ou 80 anos. Moisés escreveu: "Os dias dos nossos anos são em si mesmos setenta anos; e se por motivo de potência especial são oitenta anos, mesmo assim a sua insistência é em desgraça e em coisas prejudiciais; pois tem de passar depressa, e lá saímos voando." (Sal 90:10) Uns poucos talvez vivam mais tempo, mas Moisés declarou a regra geral. O próprio Moisés, que viveu 120 anos, era exceção, assim como eram seu irmão Arão (123 anos), Josué (110 anos) e alguns outros, cuja força e vitalidade eram incomuns. — De 34:7; Núm 33:39; Jos 24:29.

"Esta Geração" das Profecias de Cristo. Quando a profecia bíblica fala sobre "esta geração", é necessário tomar em consideração o contexto para determinar o que se quer dizer com geração. Jesus Cristo, ao denunciar os líderes religiosos judeus, concluiu por dizer: "Deveras, eu vos digo: Todas essas coisas virão sobre esta geração." A história relata que, cerca de 37 anos depois (em 70 EC), aquela geração contemporânea presenciou pessoalmente a destruição de Jerusalém, conforme predita. — Mt 23:36.

Mais tarde, naquele mesmo dia, Jesus usou de novo praticamente as mesmas palavras, dizendo: "Deveras, eu vos digo que esta geração de modo algum passará até que todas estas coisas ocorram." (Mt 24:34) Neste caso, Jesus estava respondendo a uma pergunta a respeito da desolação de Jerusalém e do seu templo, bem como a respeito do sinal da sua presença e da terminação do sistema de coisas. Sendo assim, o que ele disse sobre "esta geração" pelo visto tinha uma aplicação ao que aconteceu no período até 70 EC. Mas Jesus também estava usando a palavra "geração" para fazer referência aos que, de algum modo, estariam relacionados aos eventos futuros que aconteceriam durante a sua presença. — Mt 24.

GERAR. Lugar perto de Gaza, mencionado no mais antigo registro dos termos do território cananeu. (Gên 10:19) No passado, Gerar costumava ser relacionado com Tell Jemmeh (Tel Gamma), a uns 12 km ao S da atual Gaza. Mas, presentemente, é identificado por muitos geógrafos com Tell Abu Hureirah (Tel Haror), situado nos contrafortes dos montes da Judeia, a uns 19 km ao SE da atual Gaza. Encontraram-se ali muitos fragmentos de cerâmica atribuídos ao tempo dos patriarcas. Abraão e, mais tarde, Isaque, residiram por um tempo como forasteiros em Gerar e tiveram tratos com o seu rei, Abimeleque (possivelmente dois governantes diferentes que levavam este mesmo nome ou título oficial). — Gên 20:1-18; 21:22-34; 26:1-31; veja ABIMELEQUE N.º 1 e 2.

Depois de Jeová ter causado a derrota do impressionante exército de Zerá, o etíope, as forças do Rei Asa perseguiram o inimigo em fuga até Gerar. A seguir, os homens de Judá golpearam e saquearam "todas as cidades ao redor de Gerar" (provavelmente por elas terem sido aliadas dos etíopes); "até mesmo as tendas com o gado, de modo que levaram cativos a rebanhos em grande número, bem como camelos". — 2Cr 14:8-15.

Alguns peritos sugerem alterar 1 Crônicas 4:39, 40, para rezar "Gerar" (assim como faz a LXX), em vez de "Gedor". Esta passagem relaciona Gedor com uma região originalmente habitada por camitas, e que tinha boas pastagens, e esta descrição se enquadraria nas referências bíblicas à região ao redor de Gerar.

GERAR, VALE DA TORRENTE DE. Em anos recentes, sugeriu-se que o vale da torrente de Gerar corresponde ao uádi esh-Shariʽah (Nahal Gerar), que passa a uns 500 m ao S do Tell Abu Hureirah (Tel Haror), provável sítio do antigo Gerar. A região geral em torno do vale da torrente de Gerar era ideal para a vida pastoril. Pelo visto, encontrava-se prontamente água por se escavarem poços no leito da torrente. (Gên 26:17-19) O patriarca Abraão temporariamente residiu como forasteiro nesta região. (Gên 20:1, 2) Mais tarde, numa época de fome, Isaque retornou a esta região. Ali ele se dedicou à agricultura, e criou rebanhos e manadas. (Gên 26:1, 6, 12-14) No próprio vale de torrente, os servos de Isaque cavaram dois poços, que resultaram em altercações com os cobiçosos pastores de Gerar. — Gên 26:17-22.

GERASENOS [De (Pertencentes a) Gerasa]. No "país dos gerasenos", do qual pelo menos uma parte ficava ao L do mar da Galileia, Jesus Cristo curou dois homens endemoninhados. (Mr 5:1-20; Lu 8:26-39; compare isso com Mt 8:28-34.) Desconhecem-se hoje os limites exatos desta região, e a identificação é incerta. Alguns peritos relacionam essa região com a área na margem L do mar da Galileia em torno de Kursi, o local identificado por Orígenes e Eusébio como Gergesa. É somente nesse local que existem penhascos perto da costa. Outros sugerem que o "país dos gerasenos" seja o grande distrito que se estende da cidade de Gerasa (Jarash). — Veja GADARENOS.

GERBO [hebr.: ʽakh·bár]. A palavra hebraica ʽakh·bár, diversamente traduzida "camundongo", "rato", "gerbo" e "roedor saltador", é entendida por muitos peritos como possivelmente abrangendo todas as variedades de ratos, camundongos e animais aparentados, tais como o gerbo. Todavia, o léxico hebraico e aramaico de Koehler e Baumgartner apresenta o significado do termo hebraico como "gerbo".

O gerbo é um roedor saltante que se parece um pouco com um canguru em miniatura, e ainda é encontrado nas partes áridas do Oriente Médio. O gerbo-do-deserto (Jaculus jaculus) tem um corpo de 10 a 15 cm de comprimento e pesa de 50 a 70 g. Tem orelhas e olhos grandes. Os membros dianteiros são curtos, mas os dois membros traseiros têm cerca de dois terços do comprimento da cabeça e do corpo juntos. A cauda é a parte mais comprida do animal e termina num tufo de pelos. Este animal noturno prefere terras desérticas, passando o dia quente na sua toca subterrânea, mas saindo durante a noite mais fresca, à procura de alimento.

Embora os árabes que habitam o deserto Sírio usem o gerbo como alimento, para os israelitas era legalmente impuro. (Le 11:29) Mas, parece que israelitas apóstatas não faziam caso desta proibição na Lei. — Is 66:17 n.

Os gerbos destroem cereais e outras safras. Durante o tempo em que a Arca sagrada estava no território dos filisteus, a divinamente enviada praga de gerbos causou a ruína do país. — 1Sa 6:4, 5, 11, 18.

GERIZIM, MONTE. O monte Gerizim, conhecido agora como Jebel et Tur (Har Gerizim), junto com o monte Ebal, ao NE, está situado no coração do distrito de Samaria. Defrontados um com o outro, estes montes são os mais destacados nesta região e guardam um significativo passo E-O. Entre os dois montes há um vale fértil, o vale de Siquém, no qual se encontra a atual Nablus. Siquém, cidade forte e importante de Canaã, antes de os israelitas entrarem na Terra da Promessa, ficava na extremidade oriental do vale, cerca de 1,5 km ao SE de Nablus. A localização estratégica dos montes Gerizim e Ebal deu-lhes importância militar e política, sendo a região também de importância religiosa. — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 331.

O cume do monte Gerizim eleva-se a mais de 850 m acima do mar Mediterrâneo. Embora aproximadamente 60 m mais baixo do que o monte Ebal, Gerizim oferece uma vista excelente do território ao redor. De cima dele se pode ver ao N o cume nevado do monte Hermom, ao L, o vale fértil do Jordão, ao S, os montes no território de Efraim, e ao O, a planície de Sarom e o Mediterrâneo azul.

Abrão (Abraão) certa vez acampou "perto das árvores grandes de Moré", entre os montes Gerizim e Ebal, e ali ele recebeu a seguinte promessa de Jeová: "Vou dar esta terra à tua descendência." (Gên 12:6, 7) Jacó também acampou nesta vizinhança. — Gên 33:18.

Em harmonia com as instruções dadas por Moisés, as tribos de Israel reuniram-se junto aos montes Gerizim e Ebal, sob a direção de Josué, pouco depois de terem conquistado Ai. Ali, o povo ouviu a leitura das bênçãos que receberia se obedecesse a Jeová, e as maldições que o aguardava se desobedecesse. As tribos de Simeão, Levi, Judá, Issacar, José e Benjamim ficaram em pé defronte do monte Gerizim. Os levitas e a Arca do Pacto ficaram em pé no vale, e as outras seis tribos, defronte do monte Ebal. (De 11:29, 30; 27:11-13; Jos 8:28-35) Pelo visto, as tribos paradas defronte do monte Gerizim responderam às bênçãos lidas na direção delas, ao passo que as outras tribos responderam às maldições lidas na direção do monte Ebal. Embora se tenha sugerido que as bênçãos foram lidas em direção ao monte Gerizim, por causa da sua maior beleza e fertilidade, em contraste com o rochoso e na maior parte estéril monte Ebal, a Bíblia não fornece nenhuma informação sobre este assunto. A Lei foi lida "em voz alta diante de toda a congregação de Israel, com as mulheres e os pequeninos, e os residentes forasteiros que andavam no seu meio". (Jos 8:35) Esta vasta multidão podia ouvir as palavras de posições situadas defronte de qualquer dos dois montes. Isto provavelmente se devia, pelo menos em parte, à excelente acústica desta área. — Veja EBAL, MONTE.

Nos dias dos juízes de Israel, Jotão, filho de Gideão, dirigiu-se aos proprietários de terras de Siquém, estando em pé "no cume do monte Gerizim". (Jz 9:7) Até mesmo hoje, uma saliência a meio caminho montanha acima é chamada de púlpito de Jotão, mas este é apenas um lugar tradicional.

Templo Samaritano. Um templo samaritano, rivalizando com aquele de Jerusalém, foi construído no monte Gerizim, talvez no quarto século AEC, e ele foi destruído em 128 AEC. Segundo a tradição, foi desolado por João Hircano. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XI, 310, 311, 324 [viii, 2, 4]; XIII, 254-256 [ix, 1]; The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], I, 63 [ii, 6]) Os samaritanos, mesmo até os tempos atuais, têm celebrado no monte Gerizim festividades tais como a Páscoa, no lugar que acreditam ser o sítio do templo antigo. Foi evidentemente com referência ao monte Gerizim que a mulher samaritana disse a Jesus Cristo: “Nossos antepassados adoravam neste monte; mas vós dizeis que o lugar onde as pessoas devem adorar é em Jerusalém.” — Jo 4:5, 19, 20.

Conforme retratado em moedas antigas, descobertas em Nablus, havia antigamente um templo de Zeus na parte NE do monte Gerizim, com um acesso que se calcula ter tido 1.500 degraus. No quinto século EC construiu-se uma igreja no cume do monte, e outra foi construída pelo imperador bizantino Justiniano. Sugere-se que as ruínas que se encontram agora ali sejam do tempo de Justiniano.

GERSOM [Um Residente Forasteiro Ali].

1. Primeiro filho alistado de Levi, filho de Jacó. Era pai de Libni e Simei. (1Cr 6:16, 17, 20, 43, 62, 71) É também chamado Gérson. — Gên 46:11; Êx 6:16, 17; Núm 3:17, 18; 1Cr 6:1; 23:6.

2. Filho primogênito de Moisés com Zípora; nascido em Midiã. (Êx 2:21, 22; 1Cr 23:14-16) Jetro, sogro de Moisés, veio a Moisés no ermo, trazendo consigo a esposa de Moisés, Zípora, e os dois filhos deles, Gersom e Eliézer. (Êx 18:2-4) O serviço sacerdotal de Jonatã, descendente de Gersom, a favor dos danitas, era ilegal, porque, embora ele fosse levita, não era da família de Arão. — Jz 18:30.

3. Cabeça da família paterna de Fineias, que acompanhou Esdras desde Babilônia. — Esd 8:1, 2.

GÉRSON [Um Residente Forasteiro Ali]. Primeiro alistado dos três filhos de Levi. Os descendentes de Gérson eram chamados gersonitas e “filhos de Gérson”. (Êx 6:16; Núm 3:17, 21; 7:7; 26:57; Jos 21:6, 27; 1Cr 6:1; 23:6) Ele é também chamado Gersom. (1Cr 6:16, 17, 20, 43, 62, 71; 15:7) Os filhos de Gérson eram Libni (evidentemente chamado Ladã em 1Cr 23:7; 26:21) e Simei. — Êx 6:17; Núm 3:18; 1Cr 6:17, 20. Veja também GERSOM.

GERSONITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Gérson]. Descendentes de Gérson, ou Gersom — o primeiro mencionado dos três filhos de Levi — por meio de seus dois filhos, Libni e Simei. (1Cr 6:1, 16, 17) Os gersonitas constituíam uma das três grandes divisões de levitas. No primeiro recenseamento no ermo, somaram 7.500 varões de um mês de idade para cima. Os de 30 a 50 anos, que serviam no tabernáculo, somaram 2.630 varões. (Núm 3:21, 22; 4:38-41) O serviço dos gersonitas no ermo incluía cuidar do tabernáculo (a tenda de reunião), de suas diversas coberturas, do reposteiro da entrada do tabernáculo, dos cortinados do pátio, do reposteiro da entrada do pátio e dos cordões de tenda. (Núm 3:23-26; 4:21-28; Êx 26:1, 7, 14, 36; 27:9, 16) No acampamento no ermo, seu lugar estava no lado O do tabernáculo. Atrás deles, a certa distância do tabernáculo, acampava a divisão de três tribos de Efraim. (Núm 3:23; 2:18) Quando os maiorais de Israel apresentaram 6 carroças cobertas e 12 touros para o serviço do tabernáculo, Moisés deu 2 carroças e 4 touros aos filhos de Gérson. (Núm 7:1-7) Quando o acampamento se mudava, os gersonitas marchavam com os meraritas entre a divisão de três tribos de Judá, na dianteira, e a divisão de três tribos de Rubem. — Núm 10:14-20.

Aquinhoaram-se aos gersonitas 13 cidades com seus pastios, nos territórios de Manassés, Issacar, Aser e Naftali. Quedes, na Galileia, e Golã, em Basã, que lhes foram aquinhoadas, eram duas das seis cidades de refúgio da nação. (Jos 21:27-33) Quando Davi reorganizou os levitas, a responsabilidade relacionada com o canto e o tesouro eram deveres atribuídos a alguns dos gersonitas. (1Cr 6:31, 32, 39-43; 23:4-11; 26:21, 22) Havia gersonitas entre os levitas que se empenharam na limpeza do templo, nos dias do Rei Ezequias. — 2Cr 29:12-17.

GESÃ. Terceiro filho mencionado de Jadai, da tribo de Judá. Gesã é alistado entre os descendentes de Calebe. — 1Cr 2:47.

GESÉM [possivelmente: Aguaceiro; Chuvarada]. Um árabe que, junto com Sambalá e Tobias, se opôs a Neemias na reconstrução da muralha de Jerusalém. Estes inimigos primeiro caçoaram de Neemias e de seus colaboradores. (Ne 2:19) Depois conspiraram e tramaram contra Neemias, mas em vão. (Ne 6:1-4) Por fim, Sambalá enviou a Neemias uma carta, citando a acusação de Gesém, de que Neemias e os judeus tramavam rebelar-se e que Neemias se estava tornando rei para eles. Estes inimigos fracassaram também nisso. (Ne 6:5-7) Citar Sambalá a Gesém nesta carta parece indicar que este era homem influente. Pode-se notar que se relata que as relações entre a corte persa e as tribos árabes eram boas depois da invasão do Egito pela Pérsia.

Uma forma dialetal de Gesém, o nome Gashm, é mencionado numa inscrição encontrada na antiga Dedã, na parte setentrional da Arábia. O nome Gesém aparece numa inscrição aramaica numa tigela de prata encontrada no Egito. O texto reza: “O-que Qainu bar Gesem [Gesém], rei de Qedar, trouxe-em-oferta à [deusa] han-’Ilat.” — Journal of Near Eastern Studies (Revista de Estudos do Oriente Próximo), 1956, Vol. XV, p. 2.

GESTOS. Veja ATITUDES, POSTURAS E GESTOS.

GESUR.

1. Reino arameu, fronteira com a região de Argobe, de Basã, ao L do rio Jordão. Seu vizinho setentrional era Maacate (Maacá). Embora as primeiras conquistas de Israel se estendessem até Gesur, esta região não foi tomada. (De 3:14; Jos 12:1, 4, 5; 13:13) Foi a Gesur, domínio de seu avô materno, Talmai, que Absalão fugiu depois de assassinar seu meio-irmão Amnom. Continuou ali em banimento por três anos, até que foi trazido de volta a Jerusalém por Joabe. (2Sa 3:2, 3; 13:28-38; 14:23; 15:8) Num período posterior, Gesur e a Síria anexaram muitas cidades israelitas ao L do Jordão. — 1Cr 2:23.

2. Domínio dos gesuritas na Palestina meridional, perto do território filisteu. (Jos 13:2; 1Sa 27:7-11) Com referência a esta região, não se emprega especificamente a forma "Gesur".

GESURITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Gesur].

1. Os habitantes de Gesur, território ao L do Jordão. — De 3:14; Jos 12:4, 5; 13:11, 13.

2. Povo da Palestina meridional, que morava na vizinhança do território filisteu. (Jos 13:2) Enquanto estava banido pelo Rei Saul, Davi fazia incursões aos gesuritas e outros povos que moravam naquela região geral. — 1Sa 27:7-11.

GÉTER. Descendente de Arã, filho de Sem. (Gên 10:22, 23; 1Cr 1:17) Nada se sabe ao certo sobre os descendentes de Géter.

GETEU [De (Pertencente a) Gate]. Termo frequentemente aplicado ao habitante ou natural da cidade filisteia de Gate. (Jos 13:2, 3) O gigante Golias era geteu. (2Sa 21:19; 1Cr 20:5) Geteus, inclusive Itai (chamado de "estrangeiro" e "exilado" do seu lugar), continuaram fielmente com Davi durante a sua fuga, por ocasião da rebelião de Absalão. — 2Sa 15:13, 18-22; 18:2; veja GATE; ITAI, II N.º 1.

O termo "geteu", porém, é também aplicado a Obede-Edom, em cujo lar ficou temporariamente a Arca do Pacto. (2Sa 6:10, 11; 1Cr 13:13) Alguns peritos acreditam que ele também era da Gate filisteia. No entanto, parece mais provável que Obede-Edom era levita, e talvez fosse chamado de geteu por ser da cidade levita de Gate-Rimom. — Jos 21:20, 23, 24; veja OBEDE-EDOM N.º 1.

GETSÊMANI [Lagar de Azeite]. Provavelmente um olival equipado com um lagar para espremer azeite das azeitonas. Getsêmani encontrava-se ao L de Jerusalém, do outro lado do vale do Cédron (Jo 18:1), no monte das Oliveiras ou perto dele. (Lu 22:39) Jesus Cristo reuniu-se ali muitas vezes com seus discípulos. (Jo 18:2) Na noite da Páscoa de 33 EC, ele, junto com seus discípulos fiéis, retirou-se para este jardim a fim de orar. Achado e traído por Judas Iscariotes, Jesus foi preso ali por uma turba armada. — Mt 26:36-56; Mr 14:32-52; Lu 22:39-53; Jo 18:1-12.

Não se pode determinar a localização exata do jardim de Getsêmani, porque (segundo o testemunho de Josefo) todas as árvores ao redor de Jerusalém foram cortadas durante o sítio romano em 70 EC. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], VI, 5-8 [i, 1]) Uma tradição identifica Getsêmani com o jardim cercado pelos franciscanos em 1848. Tem cerca de 46 por 43 m e se encontra ao sopé do monte das Oliveiras, na bifurcação da estrada na sua encosta ocidental. Neste jardim se encontram oito oliveiras seculares.

O lugar tradicional de Getsêmani visto do monte do Templo.

GEZER [Pedaço; Parte]. Cidade real no interior da planície costeira da Palestina. Gezer é mencionada pela primeira vez quando seu rei tentou sem sucesso salvar Laquis do exército israelita sob Josué. (Jos 10:33; 12:7, 8, 12) Gezer foi designada aos efraimitas como lugar fronteiriço (Jos 16:3; 1Cr 7:28), mas eles não desapossaram inteiramente os habitantes cananeus. (Jos 16:10; Jz 1:29) Gezer foi também designada aos coatitas como cidade levita. — Jos 21:20, 21; 1Cr 6:66, 67.

Esta cidade estava associada com os filisteus, no tempo de Davi, na ocasião em que ele quebrantou o poder deles "desde Geba até Gezer". (2Sa 5:25; 1Cr 14:16) Também, Sibecai, husatita, distinguiu-se durante a derrota dos filisteus em Gezer, por golpear Sipai, descendente dos refains. (1Cr 20:4) O Faraó do Egito veio mais tarde contra Gezer por algum motivo não declarado. Depois de incendiar a cidade e matar sua população cananeia, ele a deu como dote à esposa de Salomão. Salomão reconstruiu e possivelmente fortificou a cidade. — 1Rs 9:15-17.

Gezer é também frequentemente mencionada nos registros seculares. Nas paredes do templo em Karnak, Tutmés III registrou a captura de Gezer. A cidade tem depois um papel de destaque nas Tabuinhas de Amarna, sendo mencionada por nome pelo menos nove vezes. O Faraó Mernepta gabou-se na sua estela de ter 'capturado Gezer'.

Os peritos acham que a antiga Gezer é a atual Tell Jezer (Abu Susheh; Tel Gezer), situada a meio caminho entre Jerusalém e Tel Aviv-Yafo (Jope). Ficava assim perto de outra grande estrada que por milênios tem ligado o Egito à Mesopotâmia para fins comerciais e militares. A posição elevada de Tell Jezer numa serra da Sefelá permitia-lhe dominar o uso de ambas estas estradas.

As escavações arqueológicas começaram neste tel no começo do século 20. Desde então, tem-se tornado um dos sítios mais cabalmente escavados e explorados na Palestina. Entre os achados ali encontram-se a "porta salomônica e a parede da casamata", construídas sobre uma camada de escombros duma destruição que alguns conjecturam terem sido o resultado do incêndio de Gezer por Faraó. Sua arquitetura é considerada tão similar à encontrada em estruturas em Hazor e em Megido, que indica que as três foram construídas segundo a mesma planta. Camadas anteriores mostram uma abundância de cerâmica filisteia. Talvez o achado mais famoso procedente de Tell Gezer, porém, seja o "calendário" de Gezer, uma placa contendo o que parece ser um exercício de memória dum escolar. Mostrou ser valioso por informar os pesquisadores hodiernos sobre as estações agrícolas do antigo Israel e por fornecer um vislumbre da escrita e língua hebraica nos dias de Salomão.

GIA [Irromper; Jorrar]. Lugar perto do "morro de Amá", mencionado na descrição da perseguição movida por Joabe e Abisai a Abner. (2Sa 2:24) O contexto sugere a alguns que Gia ficava ao L de Gibeão, no território de Benjamim. Certos peritos propuseram outros lugares, baseados em emendas do texto, mas a localização exata de Gia permanece desconhecida. — Veja AMÁ.

GIBAR [Superior; Poderoso; Sobrepujante]. Possivelmente trata-se do nome dum cabeça de família, do qual 95 "filhos" (descendentes) retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 20) Todavia, na passagem paralela em Neemias 7:25, alista-se Gibeão em vez de Gibar. Portanto, "os filhos de Gibar [Gibeão], noventa e cinco", pode referir-se aos anteriores habitantes de Gibeão, visto que outros nomes de lugares aparecem em Esdras 2:21-34, por exemplo, "os filhos de Belém".

GIBEÁ [Morro; Colina].

1. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:1, 48, 57) Alguns peritos a relacionam com a atual El Jab'a, a uns 12 km ao OSO de Belém. Outros, porém, acreditam que a antiga Gibeá se encontrava em outra parte na região ao SE de Hébron, visto que está alistada entre outras cidades naquela região geral. (Jos 15:55-57) Esta cidade (ou a N.º 2) talvez tenha sido o lugar de origem de Maacá (Micaia), mãe do rei de Judá, Abijão (Abias). — 2Cr 13:1, 2; 1Rs 15:1, 2.
